It seems somewhat doubtful whether the plaintiff in error is in a position to raise the question of the invalidity of the ordinance because of the alleged arbitrary power of the mayor to grant or refuse it. He made no application for a license, and of course the mayor has not refused it. Non constat that he would have refused it if application had been made by the plaintiff in error. Whether the discretion of the mayor is arbitrary or not would seem to be unimportant to the plaintiff in error so long as he made no application for the exercise of that discretion in his favor and was not refused a license.

But, assuming that the question may be raised by him, we think the ordinance in question does not violate the Fourteenth Amendment, either in regard to the clause requiring due process of law, or in that providing for the equal protection of the laws.

The case principally relied upon by the plaintiff in error is that of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064, relating to the regulation of laundries in the city of San Francisco. The ordinance in question in that case was held to be illegal and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, because, with reference to the subject upon which it touched, it conferred upon the municipal authorities arbitrary power, at their will and without regard to discretion in the legal sense of the term, to give or withhold consent as to persons or places for carrying on a laundry, with reference to the competency of the persons applying or the propriety of the place selected. It was also held that there was a clear and intentional discrimination made against the Chinese in the operation of the ordinance, which discrimination was founded upon the difference of race, and was wholly arbitrary and unjust. It appeared that both petitioners, who were engaged in the laundry business, were Chinese, and had complied with every requisite deemed by the law, or by the public officers charged with its administration, necessary for the protection of neighboring property from fire or as son other than discrimination against the Chinese, refused to grant the licenses to the petitioners and to some 200 other Chinese subjects, while granting them to eighty people who were not such subjects and were working under precisely the same conditions. Such an ordinance, so executed, was held void by this court. Speaking in that case of the general right to grant licenses in regard to occupations or trades, Mr. Justice Matthews, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"The ordinance, therefore, also differs from the not unusual case, where discretion is lodged by law in public officers or bodies to grant or withhold licenses to keep taverns or places for the sale of spirituous liquors, and the like, when one of the conditions is that the applicant shall be a fit person for the exercise of the privilege, because in such cases the fact of fitness is submitted to the judgment of the officer, and calls for the exercise of a discretion of a judicial nature."

The ordinance in question here does not grant to the mayor arbitrary power such as is described in the above-mentioned laundry case, but the provision is similar to that mentioned in the foregoing extract from the opinion in that case. In the case at bar, the license is to be issued if the mayor is satisfied that the person applying is of good character and reputation and a suitable person to be intrusted with the sale of cigarettes, provided such applicant will file a bond as stated in the ordinance, as a security that he will faithfully observe and obey the laws of the state and the ordinances of the city with reference to cigarettes. The mayor is bound to grant a license to every person fulfilling these conditions, and thus the fact of fitness is submitted to the judgment of the officer, and it calls for the exercise of a discretion of a judicial nature by him. There is no proof nor charge in the record that there has been any discrimination against individuals applying for a license or any abuse of discretion on the part of the mayor. Whether dealing in and selling cigarettes is that kind of a business which ought to be licensed is, we think, considering the character of the article to be sold, a question for the state, and, through it, for the city to determine for itself, and that an ordinance providing, *reasonable conditions upon the performance of which a license may be granted to sell such article does not violate any provision of the Federal Constitution.

Regulations respecting the pursuit of a lawful trade or business are of very frequent occurrence in the various cities of the country, and what such regulations shall be and to what particular trade, business, or occupation they shall apply are questions for the state to determine, and their determination comes within the proper exercise of the police power by the state, and unless the regulations are so utterly unreasonable and extravagant in their nature and purpose that the property and personal rights of the citizen are unnecessarily, and in a manner wholly arbitrary, interfered with or destroyed without due process of law, they do not extend beyond the power of the state to pass, and they form no subject for Federal interference.

As stated in Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. ed. 620, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 13, "the possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject to such reasonable conditions as may be deemed by the governing authority of the country essential to the safety, health, peace, good order, and morals of the community."

Whether there is or is not a delegation of power by the common council to the mayor is not in this case a Federal question.

We have no doubt that the ordinance, so far as the objection above considered is concerned, was clearly within the power of the state to authorize, and must be obeyed accordingly.

The other objection made to the validity of the ordinance is that the amount of the license fee ($100) is an improper and illegal interference with the rights of the citizen, and is therefore a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The amount of the fee is fixed by the common council for the privilege of doing business, and the text of the ordinance and the amount of the fee therein named would seem to indicate that it is both a means adopted for the easier regulation of the business and a tax in the nature of an excise imposed upon the privilege of doing it. In either case the state has power to make the exaction, and its exercise by the city under state authority violates no provision of the Federal Constitution.

[189] *The supreme court of Illinois has held that the city was authorized by the state law to impose the license fee.

In speaking of a license to do business, it was said in Royall v. Virginia, 116 U. S. 572, 579, 29 L. ed. 735, 737, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510, 513: "The payment required as a preliminary to the license is in the nature and form of a tax, and is a due to the state which it may demand and exact from every one of its citizens who either will or must follow some business avocation within its limits, to the pursuit of which the assessment is made a condition precedent. It is an occupation tax, for which the license is merely a receipt, and not an authority, except in that sense, because it is laid and collected as revenue, and not merely as incident to the general police power of the state, which, under certain circumstances and conditions, regulates certain employments with a view to the public health, comfort, and convenience."

It is not a valid objection to the ordinance that it partakes of both the character of a regulation and also that of an excise or privilege tax. The business is more easily subjected to the operation of the power to regulate where a license is imposed for following the same, while the revenue obtained on account of the license is none the less legal because the ordinance which authorized it fulfills the two functions, one a regulating and the other a revenue function. So long as the state law authorizes both regulation and taxation, it is enough, and the enforcement of the ordinance violates no provision of the Federal Constitution.

There is no error in the record, and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Illinois is affirmed.

*OHIO OIL COMPANY Plff. in Err., [190]
v.

STATE OF INDIANA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 190-212.)

Constitutional law—taking private property without compensation—statute against waste of oil and gas.

1. The restriction on the waste of gas and oil by owners of land, made by Ind. Acts 1893, p. 300, which provides that it shall be unlawful to permit the flow of gas or oil from a well to escape into the open air, without being confined within the well or proper pipes or other safe receptacle, for more than two days

NOTE.—Property in petroleum oil or gas.

The nature of property in mineral oil or gas, including the question of the right to drill through coal of another owner and the nature of the interest in oil and gas leases, has been exhaustively discussed in a note to Williamson v. Jones (W. Va.) 25 L. R. A. 222. From the cases there cited it may be laid down as the general rule that the property of the owner of lands, in gas and oil, is not absolute until actually within his grasp and brought to the surface, but that, subject to the limitation not to make such use or waste of the product as will be injurious to the health of others, his power as owner to reduce to possession all or every part of the deposits without violating the rights of other surface owners is absolute until the legislature shall, in the interest of the public as consumers, restrict or regulate it by statute. These principles have been upheld in the more recent cases in which the rights of the owners of land to oil and gas under the surface have been considered.

Petroleum oil is a mineral, and while it is in the earth it forms a part of the realty; but when it reaches a well and is produced on the surface it becomes personal property, and belongs to the owner of the well. Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co. 57 Ohio St. 317, 39 L. R. A. 765, 49 N. E. 399.

Petroleum oil is a mineral within a reservation by deed of "all mines, minerals and metals in and under the land." Murray v. Alfred, 100 Tenn. 100, 39 L. R. A. 249, 43 S. W. 355.

Petroleum oil in its place in the land is a part of the land itself. Williamson v. Jones, 43 W. Va. 562, 38 L. R. A. 694, 27 S. E. 411.

Petroleum oil as it is found in the cavities of after gas or oil shall have been struck in the well, does not take the private property of the owners of the land without adequate compensation, and therefore without due process of law, since the owner of the surface has no property right in the gas or oil until he has actually reduced it to possession, or, if he has any property right therein, it is a right in common with the coequal right of other land owners to take from the common source of supply, and therefore subject to the legislative power to prevent a destruction of the common property by one of the common owners.

2. The doctrine that a land owner, although entitled to bore wells for natural gas and oil, has no title to those substances as owner until they are actually reduced by him to possession, is settled as a rule of property in the state of Indiana.

[No. 84.]

Argued December 18, 19, 1899. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana to review a decision affirming a judgment sustaining a statute prohibiting the waste of natural gas and oil. Affirmed.

See same case below, 150 Ind. 698, 50 N. E. 1125.

the rock is part of the realty, and embraced in the comprehensive idea which the law attaches to the word "land." Wilson v. Youst, 43 W. Va. 826, sub nom. Wilson v. Hughes, 39 L. R. A. 292, 28 S. E. 781.

Petroleum is to be regarded as real estate while it remains in situ, and consequently the interest of a lessee in an oil lease cannot be taxed as personal property. Carter v. Tyler County Ct. 45 W. Va. 806, 43 L. R. A. 725, 32 S. E. 216.

"Petroleum gas and oil are substances of a peculiar character . . . They belong to the owner of the land and are part of it so long as they are on it or in it or subject to his control, but when they escape, and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone. If an adjoining owner drills his own land, and taps a deposit of oil or gas extending under his neighbor's field so that it comes into his well, it becomes his property." Brown v. Spliman, 155 U. S. 669, 39 L. ed. 305, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247.

Whether petroleum percolates through the rock, or exists in pools and deposits, it forms a part of that tract of real estate in which it lies for the time being, but when it leaves one tract of land and enters another it becomes part of the realty of the latter so that the owner of the former loses all right to the oil while it remains away from his land. Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co. 57 Ohio St. 317, 39 L. R. A. 765, 49 N. E. 399.

Neither a landowner nor one acquiring oil rights in his lands has a right of action because of the drilling and operation of wells upon adjoining property, which draw the oil from his lands; but his remedy is to drill wells along and near the division line, so as to prevent the passage of such oil. Ibid.

And an owner of oil wells may use a gas pump in operating them, although by its powerful suction the production of his neighbor's

*Statement by Mr. Justice White: [190]

The title, preamble, and first section of a law enacted in 1893 by the state of Indiana (Acts 1893, p. 300) are as follows:

"An Act Concerning the Sinking, Safety, Maintenance, Use, and Operation of Natural Gas and Oil Wells, Prescribing Penalties and Declaring an Emergency.

"Whereas, great danger to life and injury to persons and property is liable to result from the improper, unsafe, and negligent sinking, maintenance, use, and operation of natural gas and oil wells; therefore,

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Indiana, That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation having possession or control of any natural gas or oil well, whether as a contractor, owner, lessee, agent, or manager, to allow or permit the flow of gas or oil from any such well to escape into the open air without being confined within *such well or [191] proper pipes or other safe receptacle, for a longer period than two (2) days next after gas or oil shall have been struck in such well. And thereafter all such gas or oil shall be safely and securely confined in such well, pipes, or other safe and proper receptacles."

wells is decreased, since the property of the owner of lands in oil and gas is not absolute, until it is actually within his grasp and brought to the surface. Jones v. Forest Oil Co. 194 Pa. 379, 48 L. R. A. 748, 44 Atl. 1074.

But the wasteful use of gas by burning it for illuminating purposes in flambeau lights may be restrained by statute. Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294, 49 N. E. 1a.

In declaring constitutional a statute making it unlawful to waste natural gas by permitting its escape into the open air for more than two days after gas or oil has been struck, the Indiana supreme court denies that in quoting in its previous decisions from Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724, it has adopted as law so much of the quotation as reads: "They [the water, gas, and oil] belong to the owner of the land and are part of it so long as they are on or in it and are subject to his control; but when they escape, and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone." State v. Ohio Oil Co. 150 Ind. 21, 47 L. R. A. 627, 49 N. E. 809. The court held that the title to natural gas does not vest in any private owner until it is reduced to actual possession, and that therefore, the constitutional provision in question was not an unwarranted interference with private property. But the constitutionality of such a statute may be upheld without deciding that an owner of land has no property right in gas or oil until it is reduced to possession, under the rule laid down in the principal case, that if such a right exists it is one in common with the coequal right of other landowners to take from the common source of supply, and is therefore subject to the legislative power to prevent the destruction of the common property by one of the common owners.

The remaining sections of the law in question are printed in the margin.†

[192] *The issue which this record presents, on the subject of the law just referred to, is this: Did the enforcement of the first section of the statute produce as to the persons whose obedience to its commands were coerced by injunction, a taking of private property without adequate compensation; that is, did the execution of the statute amount to a denial of due process of law contrary to the provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States?

The controversy was thus initiated: The state of Indiana, through its attorney general, filed a complaint in the circuit court of the county of Madison in the state of Indiana, against the Ohio Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Ohio, but authorized to carry on its business in the state of Indiana, as it had complied with the regulations enacted by that state as to foreign corporations doing business therein. The cause of complaint was thus stated:

"Plaintiff says that for many years heretofore there has *existed, underlying the coun-[193] ties of Madison, Grant, Howard, Delaware, Blackford, Tipton, Hamilton, Wells, and other counties of the state of Indiana, a large subterranean deposit of natural gas, occupying a reservoir of large extent, with well-defined boundaries, and utilized for fuel and light by the people of those counties and many other counties and cities of Indiana, including Indianapolis, Fort Wayne, Richmond, Logansport, Anderson, Muncie, Marion, Kokomo, and others of the most populous cities of said state, to which cities said gas is conducted, after being brought to the surface of the earth, through pipes and conduits, by means of which many hundreds of thousands of the people of the state of Indiana are now, and have been for more than ten years last past, continuously supplied with gas for light and fuel; that said natural gas underlying the counties aforesaid and †Sec. 2. Whenever any well shall have been sunk for the purpose of obtaining natural gas or oil or exploring for the same, and shall be abandoned or cease to be operated for utilizing the flow of gas or oil therefrom, it shall be the duty of any person, firm, or corporation having the custody or control of such well at the time of such abandonment or cessation of use, and also of the owner or owners of the land wherein such well is situated, to properly and securely stop and plug the same as follows: If such well has not been "shot" there shall be placed in the bottom of the hole thereof a plug of well-seasoned pine wood, the diameter of which shall be within $\frac{1}{2}$ inch as great as the hole of such well, to extend at least 3 feet above the salt-water level, where salt water has been struck; where no salt water has been struck, such plug shall extend at least 3 feet from the bottom of the well. In both cases such wooden plugs shall be thoroughly rammed down and made tight by the use of drilling tools. After such ramming and tightening the hole of such well shall be filled on top of such plug with finely broken stone or sand, which shall be well rammed to a point at least 4 feet above the Trenton limestone, or any other gas or oil bearing rock; on top of this stone or sand there shall be placed another wooden plug at least 5 feet long with the diameter as aforesaid, which shall be thoroughly rammed and tightened. In case such well shall have been "shot," the bottom of the hole thereof shall be filled with a proper and sufficient mixture of sand, stone, and dry cement, so as to form a concrete up to a point at least 8 feet above the top of the gas or oil bearing rock or rocks, and on top of this filling shall be placed a wooden plug at least 6 feet long, with diameter as aforesaid, which shall be properly rammed as aforesaid. The casing from the well shall then be pulled or withdrawn therefrom, and immediately thereafter a cast-iron ball 8 inches in diameter shall be dropped in the well and securely rammed in to the shale by the driller or owner of the well, after which not less than 1 cubic yard of sand pumping or drilling taken from the well shall be put on top of said iron ball.

Sec. 3. Any person or corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall be liable to a penalty of $200 for each and every such violation, and to the further penalty of $200 for each ten days during which such violation shall continue; and all such penalties shall be recoverable in a civil action or actions, in the name of the state of Indiana, for the use of the county in which such well shall be located, together with reasonable attorney's fees and costs of suit.
177 U. S.

Sec. 4. Whenever any person or corporation in possession or control of any well in which natural gas or oil has been found shall fail to comply with the provisions of this act, any person or corporation lawfully in possession of lands situate adjacent to or in the vicinity or neighborhood of such well may enter upon the lands upon which such well is situate, and take possession of such well from which gas or oil is allowed to escape in violation of the provisions of § 1 of this act, and pack and tube such well, and shut in and secure the flow of gas or oil, and maintain a civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction in this state against the owner, lessee, agent, or manager of said well, and each of them jointly and severally, to recover the cost and expense of such tubing and packing, together with attorneys' fees and costs of suit. This shall be in addition to the penalties provided by § 3 of this act.

Sec. 5. Whenever any person or corporation shall abandon or cease to operate any natural gas or oil well, and shall fail to comply with the provisions of § 2 of this act, any person or corporation lawfully in possession of lands adjacent to or in the vicinity or neighborhood of such well may enter upon the lands upon which such well is situate, and take possession of such well, and plug and fill the same in the manner provided by § 2 of this act, and may maintain a civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction of this state against the person, persons, or corporation so failing, jointly and severally, to recover the costs and expenses of such plugging and filling, together with attorneys' fees and costs of suit. This shall be in addition to the penalties provided by § 3 of this act.

other portions of the state is contained in and percolates freely through a stratum of rock known as Trenton rock, comprising a vast reservoir in which the gas is confined under great pressure, and from which it escapes, when it is permitted to do so, with great force.

"The fuel supplied by the natural gas thus obtained is the cheapest and best known to civilization, and the value of the natural-gas deposit to the state and to its citizens is many millions of dollars; that since the discovery of said gas deposit in 1886 immense sums of money have come into the state and have been invested in large manufacturing interests, and other vast sums of money belonging to the people of the state of Indiana have been invested in similar enterprises, causing a great increase in the population, principally in the territory underlying which said gas is found. Many cities in and adjacent to the gas territory, including those named, are wholly dependent for fuel upon natural gas, and for that reason the people of the state of Indiana have become and are interested in the protection and continued preservation of the natural gas supply; that many millions of dollars invested in manufacturing and other properties in and near said gas territory are wholly dependent for their continued preservation and for the permanent value of their property upon said natural gas supply; that their location and establishment in said gas territory was due [194]*to the presence of natural gas underlying the same, without which such enterprises could not operate at a profit, and that in the event the supply of gas should be exhausted in said territory many of such manufacturing enterprises, in which thousands of the citizens of Indiana find employment at remunerative wages, will be compelled to stop operation.

"That their employees will be thereby thrown out of employment, and many of them, being dependent upon their labor for support, may and will become charges upon the state and its several municipal subdivisions; that the property of said manufacturing enterprises and the vast investments depending upon them and related to them will become worthless and the owners will be driven to remove to other parts of the country, taking away from Indiana great wealth now interested in said enterprises as aforesaid.

"That in the cities named and in all the territory known as the 'gas belt' the inhabitants have for years used practically no other fuel than natural gas; that their houses have, in many instances, been constructed with a view to the use of such fuel, and will have to be differently equipped before other kinds of fuel can be used; that the cost of natural gas as fuel to the people of the 'gas belt,' who number several hundreds of thousands, is very much less than that of any other fuel that has ever been or can be procured by them, and that to the other inhabitants of the state using said natural gas it has become and is a source of great convenience, comfort, and increased happiness, because of its cheapness, convenience, and cleanliness as fuel.

"That many small villages in and near the gas territory have within a few years become flourishing and opulent cities.

"That the state's wealth and its revenues derived from taxation on account of such increased population and the various interests that have been fostered and supported by natural gas have been greatly increased, and will, in the event natural gas gives out, be correspondingly curtailed.

"That the state of Indiana, relying upon the permanent supply of natural gas, has at great expense equipped many of its public institutions, including the state house, the Central and *other hospitals for the insane,[195] the asylums for the blind and deaf and dumb, the institution for the care of orphans of American soldiers, and other public institutions owned and maintained by the state of Indiana and its various municipal subdivisions, together with the courthouses in many counties, and a vast number of public schools, for the use of natural gas as a fuel, by which the cost of maintaining the public buildings and institutions above named has been materially lessened and the comfort and happiness of their inmates and occupants immensely increased.

"That the supply of natural gas underlying the territory aforesaid is so placed in such Trenton rock that the diminution or consumption of said gas taken from said reservoir affects and reduces correspondingly the common supply.

"That if the gas supply is husbanded and protected it will last for many years and continue to furnish the various cities named with abundant fuel, and the population, wealth, and other material interests of the state will continue to be benefited and enhanced, and the comfort, happiness, and enjoyment of the people of the state greatly increased.

"That underlying a portion of said natural gas territory and at the same levels, occupying the interstices—said Trenton rock in common with said gas, are large quantities of petroleum oil; and that, because of the volatile character of said gas and the pressure under which it is confined in said Trenton rock when said reservoir is tapped by wells drilled into the same from the surface of the earth, said gas and oil will and do escape into the open air in great volumes, unless securely confined in tanks or other proper receptacles.

"That on or about the 25th day of May, 1897, said defendant, the Ohio Oil Company, drilled, near the city of Alexandria, in said Madison county, a number of wells into said gas and oil bearing rock, producing natural gas and petroleum as aforesaid in large quantities, which wells are known by the name of the land owner upon whose land they are situated, which name and the description of said wells are as follows, to wit."

The complaint then enumerated five gas and oil wells which *had been opened and [196] were being operated by the defendant for extracting oil, and averred as follows:

"That instead of securely anchoring said wells and each of them when so drilled, so as to confine within the same or within tanks or pipes or other safe receptacles the natural gas produced therefrom within two days after said wells were respectively completed and gas and oil were struck therein, the said defendants, ever since the completion of said wells, all of which have been completed for periods varying from four to nine months, have unlawfully permitted the gas produced therein to flow and escape into the open air, whereby many millions of cubic feet of natural gas have been greatly diminished, and the property of its citizens in and near said gas territory dependent upon the continued supply of said natural gas for fuel, as aforesaid, has been greatly damaged and decreased in value.

"That the defendants and each of them avow their purpose to permit said gas to escape continuously and indefinitely hereafter from such wells, and refuse to make any effort to confine the same, but declare their purpose to drill other wells in said gas territory and permit the gas therefrom to flow and escape into the open air, and that if said gas continues to flow from said wells the supply of natural gas upon which the citizens of said state depend, as aforesaid, will be greatly diminished; that the pressure of said gas, as found in said Trenton rock, will be greatly diminished, and that by the diminution of said pressure water will accumulate in said rock stratum and ultimately entirely displace and overcome said gas supply.

"Plaintiff therefore says that, because of the wrongful acts of defendants above described, heretofore committed and now continuing, its property and that of its citizens has been and will continue to be essentially interfered with, and the comfortable enjoyment of the lives of its citizens greatly interrupted."

Averring the irreparable injury to result from allowing the wells to continue to flow, as stated, the inadequacy of the enforcement of the penalties provided in the statute to meet the evil complained of, and the fact that a multiplicity of suits would be engendered if the writ of injunction prayed for was not issued, the bill charged—

[197] *—"That the value of the gas wasted by permitting said several wells to remain open each day is of great value, and that, in addition to the value of the same, the whole gas territory or field is greatly damaged by permitting said wells to remain open, in that what is known as 'back pressure,' resulting from the confinement of said gas, is in a great measure relieved and destroyed when said gas is liberated in the manner aforesaid, and that said back pressure is necessary throughout said field in order to prevent the flow of water into said rock stratum and the consequent displacement of the gas therein contained; that, for the protection of said gas supply from the invasion of salt water, it is necessary that in the use of gas from wells drilled into said reservoir only a fraction of the entire volume of said wells should be used, to the end that the back pressure shall be maintained at as high a pressure as possible, and that any other or freer method of using said gas has a tendency to expose the same to danger of salt water, as aforesaid."

177 U. S.

The prayer was as follows:

"And plaintiff therefore prays that a temporary order issue forthwith from this court prohibiting, restraining, and enjoining said defendant, its agents, servants, and employees, from further suffering or permitting the natural gas produced in said wells or any of them, or any part thereof, to longer escape therefrom, and that said defendant be ordered, directed, and commanded forthwith to securely confine the same either by anchoring each of said wells or by confining the gas produced therefrom in tanks, pipes, or other proper receptacles, and that failing or refusing so to do the sheriff of Madison county be ordered and directed forthwith to procure necessary materials and labor, and thereby anchor, secure, and confine the natural gas produced from said wells and each of them, and that the expense of so doing be taxed as part of the costs of this suit.

"And the plaintiff further prays that upon the final hearing of this cause said defendant company, its officers, servants, agents, and employees, be perpetually enjoined and prohibited from further suffering said gas to escape, and that they be forever thereafter commanded to confine said gas safely and securely in pipes, tanks, or other proper receptacles, and for all proper relief."

*The temporary injunction issued as prayed for. The defendant appeared and demurred to the complaint as not stating a cause of action. This was overruled. The defendant then answered as follows: [198]

"The defendant, further answering, says that before and at the commencement of this action it had in good faith been and then was engaged in the business of producing oil by drilling therefor in the earth and rock below in said county of Madison, and that in the carrying on of said business it has expended many thousands of dollars in the leasing of territory, the purchase of machinery and equipment thereof, and for the drilling of a number of wells and for pipes and pipe lines, all of which it then owned and still owns.

"The defendant admits that it drilled the well complained of herein, but says that said well was so drilled in good faith solely for the purpose of raising and producing oil, the defendant not being engaged in the business of producing or transporting natural gas in said county and having there no plant for that purpose, and such gas in such case being of no value to defendant, and there being reasonable grounds to believe that oil existed in said territory in sufficiently paying quantities to be utilized.

"That said well complained of was not drilled in or near any village, town, or city, but, on the contrary, was drilled in the country and remote from any dwelling, and the same, as so constructed and operated, is not dangerous to life or property.

"That said well was so drilled and completed, oil was found therein in paying quantities, and the defendant proceeded to and did save and utilize the same, paying to the land owner the stipulated royalties therefor, and so operated the same with knowledge, approbation, and consent of such land owner, and was so operating the same solely as an oil well and in entire good faith at the time of the commencement of this action; all of which was so done under and by virtue of a lease to defendant by the owner of said land granted before the commencement of this suit, under which lease defendant owns all the gas and oil in said well and under said land, and said well is of great value as an oil well.

[199] "That in said well and in the same strata of rock whence such *oil was produced there were also found at said time quantities of natural gas, which by its own pressure escaped through said pipes and into the open air, said pipes being the same as the ones through which said oil was produced and saved, and in so saving such oil defendant utilized such gas as power, force, and agency to raise said oil from the rock-bearing strata below the surface of the ground, such being the usual, natural, and ordinary method of raising and saving oil in such cases.

"And the defendant further says that no machinery or process of any kind has ever by the highest skill been devised or known to the world whereby in such a case the oil in such well can be produced and saved, unless at the same time such natural gas as may be in such well is suffered to escape, and the defendant charges the fact to be, therefore, that if such gas shall be shut into such well in such case that it will be impossible to raise or produce oil in any such well, and thereby defendant's said business, together with its said plant, property, and profits, will be entirely destroyed and the people of said county and state will be deprived of the use and profits of such oil, which is vastly of more value than natural gas in said well; and the defendant says it so operated said well with the highest skill, with the most improved machinery and appliances known to the world, and with employees of the highest skill, and that no more gas was suffered to escape from such well than was consistent with the due operation of said well with the highest skill.

"The defendant further alleges that for many months before the completion of said well it was openly and publicly engaged in acquiring territory, in equipping said plant, in constructing such oil lines, and in incurring the liabilities and paying the money therefor, as hereinbefore alleged, all with the knowledge and acquiescence of the plaintiff and with no notice or knowledge whatever to or on the part of defendant that it would not be allowed to operate such well or wells until after the said money had been so expended and after said well had been so completed.

"That in the territory where said well complained of is situated there are a number of paying oil wells, owned and operated by various persons and corporations, and said field, when *properly developed, may reasonably be expected to be a large one for the production of oil, which will be and is of great value to the people of said county." [200]

Referring to the law of Indiana, the context of which has already been stated, the answer contained this averment:

"This defendant further alleges that said act of the general assembly of the state of Indiana, as above set out, violates the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States in this, that it deprives the defendant and others of liberty and property without due process of law, and denies to defendant and others the equal protection of the laws."

The state demurred to the answer as not alleging facts sufficient to constitute a defense. This demurrer was sustained. The defendant refusing to answer further, a decree granting a permanent injunction was entered. An appeal having been prosecuted to the supreme court of the state of Indiana, in that court the decree of the trial court was in all respects affirmed. 150 Ind. 698, 50 N. E. 1125. This writ of error was thereupon allowed.

Messrs. M. F. Elliott and George Shirts argued the cause and, with Messrs. Stephenson, Shirts, & Fertig filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Oil and gas in place are part of the realty, and belong to the owner of the land in which they are contained.

Stoughton's Appeal, 88 Pa. 198; Funk v. Haldeman, 53 Pa. 229; Gill v. Weston, 110 Pa. 312, 1 Atl. 921; Brown v. Beecher, 120 Pa. 590, 15 Atl. 608; Wettengel v. Gormley, 160 Pa. 559, 28 Atl. 934; Blakley v. Marshall, 174 Pa. 425, 34 Atl. 564; Chicago & A. Oil & Min. Co. v. United States Petroleum Co. 57 Pa. 83; Bryan, Law of Petroleum and Natural Gas, p. 24; Kelley v. Ohio Oil Co. 57 Ohio St. 317, 39 L. R. A. 765, 49 N. E. 399; Hughes v. United Pipe Lines, 119 N. Y. 423, 23 N. E. 1042; Williamson v. Jones, 39 W. Va. 231, 25 L. R. A. 222, 19 S. E. 436; Wilson v. Youst, 43 W. Va. 826, sub nom. Wilson v. Hughes, 39 L. R. A. 292, 28 S. E. 781; South Penn. Oil Co. v. McIntire, 44 W. Va. 296, 28 S. E. 922; Barker v. Dale, 3 Pittsb. 190, Fed. Cas. No. 988; Brown v. Spilman, 155 U. S. 665, 39 L. ed. 304, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 245.

The prohibition against depriving any person of property without due process of law extends to all acts of the state, whether through its legislative, executive, or judicial authorities.

Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 45, 38 L. ed. 901, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

An act which deprives a person of the beneficial use of his property deprives him of his property without due process of law.

Re Furman Street, 17 Wend. 658; Re Wall-street, 17 Barb. 639; Gilman v. Tucker, 128 N. Y. 190, 13 L. R. A. 304, 28 N. E. 1040; 177 U. S.

Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 598, 33 L. ed. 1029, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593.

The police power of a state cannot invade the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States.

People v. Jackson & M. Pl. Road Co. 9 Mich. 285; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 661, 29 L. ed. 520, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 447, 29 L. ed. 692, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454.

The determination as to what is the proper exercise of the police power by the legislature is subject to the supervision of the courts.

Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 210, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343; Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188, 47 N. E. 302; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; People v. Arensberg, 103 N. Y. 399, 57 Am. Rep. 741, 8 N. E. 736; Forster v. Scott, 136 N. Y. 577, 18 L. R. A. 543, 32 N. E. 976.

Under the guise of police power the legislature cannot invade the rights of persons and property; and a statute, the ostensible object of which is to secure the public welfare or safety, must appear to be adapted to that end.

Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343; Calder v. Bull, 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 306, 307, 309.

Whenever the legislature passes an act which transcends the limit of the police power, it is the duty of the judiciary to pronounce it invalid, and nullify the attempt to invade the people's rights.

People ex rel. Nechamcus v. Warden of City Prison, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718, 39 N. E. 686; Health Department of New York v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710, 39 N. E. 833; Tiedeman, Limitation of Police Powers, § 121d, p. 397, § 122, p. 423.

Messrs. C. C. Shirley and William L. Taylor argued the cause, and, with Mr. Merrill Moores filed a brief for defendant in error:

Natural gas, as a subject of property, is analogous to animals wild by nature, in that, while in its natural state and before it has been reduced to possession and control, it is the property of the state in its sovereign capacity.

Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 130 Pa. 232, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724; People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 131 Ind. 277, 16 L. R. A. 443, 31 N. E. 59; Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294, 49 N. E. 14.

As a mineral feræ naturæ, the state may regulate its production and prohibit its waste, practically without limit; and in so doing the legislatures of the states are not restricted by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, or by the constitutional guaranties in favor of private property, contained in the fundamental law of the states.

177 U. S.

Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 555, 12 L. R. A. 652, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 613, 28 N. E. 76; Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294, 49 N. E. 14; Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. DeWitt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724; Gentile v. State, 29 Ind. 415; Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 22 L. R. A. 439, 35 N. E. 454; State v. Rodman, 58 Minn. 393, 59 N. W. 1098.

The right of legislatures of the states to regulate the use and prohibit the waste or destruction of property extends, not only to that class in which the state, as sovereign, has a qualified ownership, but includes every species of property in the preservation and use of which the public has an interest, either because of its nature, or because the public health, the public safety, the public morals, or the general public welfare in any respect is involved.

Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438; Com. v. Tewksbury, 11 Met. 55; State v. Schlemmer, 42 La. Ann. 1166, 10 L. R. A. 135, 8 So. 307; Cooley, Const. Lim. *pp. 88-89; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 745; Davis v. State, 68 Ala. 58, 44 Am. Rep. 128; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 142, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Hedderich v. State, 101 Ind. 564, 51 Am. Rep. 768; Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 558, 12 L. R. A. 652, 28 N. E. 76; State v. Peel Splint Coal Co. 36 W. Va. 830, 17 L. R. A. 385, 15 S. E. 1000; Health Department of New York v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710, 39 N. E. 833; Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 2 L. R. A. 81, 19 N. E. 390; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; State ex rel. Clark v. Haworth, 122 Ind. 462, 7 L. R. A. 240, 23 N. E. 946; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Com. v. Gilbert, 160 Mass. 157, 22 L. R. A. 439, 35 N. E. 454; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Dow v. Beidelman, 125 U. S. 680, 31 L. ed. 841, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 56, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1028; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. ed. 97; Giozza v. Tiernan, 148 U. S. 657, 37 L. ed. 599, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721; Gray v. Connecticut, 159 U. S. 74, 40 L. ed. 80, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 590, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Atty. Gen. v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. 133 Mass. 361; United States v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 243, 59 U. S. App. 377, 88 Fed. Rep. 664, 32 C. C. A. 84; Hague v. Wheeler, 157 Pa. 324, 22 L. R. A. 141, 27 Atl. 714.

A natural-gas deposit is analogous to a surface stream or lake, any obstruction or diversion of which, even in the absence of statutory prohibition, is the subject of an action by anyone who is injured thereby.

Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 528, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Haldeman v. Bruckhart, 45 Pa.

514, 84 Am. Dec. 511; Saddler v. Lee, 66 Ga. 45, 42 Am. Rep. 62; Cross v. Kitts, 69 Cal. 217, 58 Am. Rep. 558, 10 Pac. 409; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 424; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Peterson, 14 Ind. 112, 77 Am. Dec. 60; Greencastle v. Hazelett, 23 Ind. 186; Collins v. Chartiers Valley Gas Co. 131 Pa. 143, 6 L. R. A. 280, 18 Atl. 1012; People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351, 48 Am. Dec. 339; People v. Truckee Lumber Co. 116 Cal. 397, 39 L. R. A. 581, 48 Pac. 374; Com. v. Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. 24 Pa. 159, 62 Am. Dec. 372; Atty. Gen. v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. 133 Mass. 361; Coosaw Min. Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 566, 36 L. ed. 543, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689; United States v. North Bloomfield Gravel Min. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 243, 59 U. S. App. 377, 88 Fed. Rep. 664, 32 C. C. A. 84.

Extraordinary emergencies in many cases call for extraordinary remedies.

Columbian Athletic Club v. State ex rel. McMahan, 143 Ind. 102, 28 L. R. A. 727, 40 N. E. 914.

[200] *Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The assignments of error all in substance are resolvable into one proposition, which is, that the enforcement of the provisions of the Indiana statute as against the plaintiff in error constituted a taking of private property without adequate compensation, and therefore amounted to a denial of due process of law in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

When this proposition is analyzed by the light of the facts which are admitted on the record, it becomes apparent that the foundation upon which it must rest involves two contentions which are in conflict one with the other; in other words, the argument by which alone it is possible to sustain the claim [201] becomes, *when truly comprehended, self-destructive. Thus, it is apparent, from the admitted facts, that the oil and gas are commingled and contained in a natural reservoir which lies beneath an extensive area of country, and that as thus situated the gas and oil are capable of flowing from place to place, and are hence susceptible of being drawn off by wells from any point, provided they penetrate into the reservoir. It is also undoubted that such wells, when bored from many points in the superincumbent surface of the earth, are apt to reach the reservoir beneath. From this it must necessarily come to pass that the entire volume of gas and oil is in some measure liable to be decreased by the act of anyone who, within the superficial area, bores wells from the surface and strikes the reservoir containing the oil and gas. And hence, of course, it is certain, if there can be no authority exerted by law to prevent the waste of the entire supply of gas and oil, or either, that the power which exists in everyone who has the right to bore from the surface and tap the reservoir involves in its ultimate conception, the unrestrained license to waste the entire contents of the reservoir by allowing the gas to be drawn off and to be dispersed in the atmospheric air, and by permitting the oil to flow without use or benefit to anyone. These things being lawful, as they must be if the acts stated cannot be controlled by law, it follows that no particular individual having a right to make borings can complain, and thus the entire product of oil and gas can be destroyed by any one of the surface owners. The proposition, then, which denies the power in the state to regulate by law the manner in which the gas and oil may be appropriated, and thus prevent their destruction, of necessity involves the assertion that there can be no right of ownership in and to the oil and gas before the same have been actually appropriated by being brought into the possession of some particular person. But it cannot be that property as to a specified thing vests in one who has no right to prevent any other person from taking or destroying the object which is asserted to be the subject of the right of property. The whole contention, therefore, comes to this: That property has been taken without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, because of the fact that the thing taken *was [202] not property, and could not, therefore, be brought within the guaranties ordained for the protection of property.

The confusion of thought which permeates the entire argument is two fold: First, an entire misconception of the nature of the right of the surface owner to the gas and oil as they are contained in their natural reservoir, and this gives rise to a misconception as to the scope of the legislative authority to regulate the appropriation and use thereof. Second, a confounding, by treating as identical, things which are essentially separate; that is, the right of the owner of land to bore into the bosom of the earth, and thereby seek to reduce the gas and oil to possession, and his ownership after the result of the borings has reached fruition to the extent of oil and gas by himself actually extracted and appropriated. In other words, the fallacy arises from considering that the means which the owner of land has a right to use to obtain a result is in legal effect the same as the result which may be reached. We will develop the misunderstanding which is involved in the matters just stated.

No time need be spent in restating the general common-law rule that the ownership in fee of the surface of the earth carries with it the right to the minerals beneath, and the consequent privilege of mining to extract them. And we need not, therefore, pause to consider the scope of the legislative authority to regulate the exercise of mining rights and to direct the methods of their enjoyment so as to prevent the infringement by one miner of the rights of others. Del Monte Min. & Mill. Co. v. Last Chance Min. & Mill. Co. 171 U. S. 60, 43 L. ed. 74, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 895. The question here arising does not require a consideration of the matters just referred to, but it is this: Does the peculiar character of the substances, oil and gas, which are here involved, the manner in which they are held in their natural reservoirs, the method by which and the time when they may be reduced to actual possession or become the property of a particular person, cause them to be exceptions to the general principles applicable to other mineral deposits, and hence subject them to different rules? True it is that oil and gas, like other minerals, are situated beneath the surface of the earth, but except for this one point of similarity, in many other respects they greatly differ. They have no fixed situs

[203]*under a particular portion of the earth's surface within the area where they obtain. They have the power, as it were, of self-transmission. No one owner of the surface of the earth, within the area beneath which the gas and oil move can exercise his right to extract from the common reservoir, in which the supply is held, without, to an extent, diminishing the source of supply as to which all other owners of the surface must exercise their rights. The waste by one owner, caused by a reckless enjoyment of his right of striking the reservoir, at once, therefore, operates upon the other surface owners. Besides, whilst oil and gas are different in character they are yet one, because they are unitedly held in the place of deposit. In Brown v. Spilman, 155 U. S. 665, 669, 670, 39 L. ed. 304, 305, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 245, 247, these distinctive features of deposits of gas and oil were remarked upon. The court said:

"Petroleum gas and oil are substances of a peculiar character, and decisions in ordinary cases of mining for coal, and other minerals which have a fixed situs, cannot be applied to contracts concerning them without some qualifications. They belong to the owner of the land, and are a part of it, so long as they are on it or in it, or subject to his control, but when they escape and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone. If an adjoining owner drills his own land and taps a deposit of oil or gas, extending under his neighbor's field, so that it comes into his well, it becomes his property. Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 142, 147; Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724.

In Westmoreland & C. Natural Gas Co. v. De Witt, 130 Pa. 235, 5 L. R. A. 731, 18 Atl. 724, the supreme court of Pennsylvania considered the character of ownership in natural gas and oil as these substances existed beneath the surface of the earth. The court said:

"The learned master says gas is a mineral, and while in situ is part of the land, and therefore possession of the land is possession of the gas. But this deduction must be made with some qualifications. Gas, it is true, is a mineral; but it is a mineral with peculiar attributes, which require the application of precedents arising out of ordinary mineral rights, with much more *careful consideration of the principles involved than of the mere decisions. Water, also, is a mineral, but the decisions in ordinary cases of mining rights, etc., have never been held as unqualified precedents in regard to flowing or even to percolating waters. Water and oil, and still more strongly gas, may be classed by themselves, if the analogy be not too fanciful, as minerals feræ naturæ. In common with animals, and unlike other minerals, they have the power and the tendency to escape without the volition of the owner. Their 'fugitive and wandering existence within the limits of a particular tract is uncertain,' as said by Chief Justice Agnew in Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 147, 148, . . . They belong to the owner of the land, and are a part of it, so long as they are on or in it, and are subject to his control; but when they escape and go into other land, or come under another's control, the title of the former owner is gone. Possession of the land, therefore, is not necessarily possession of the gas."

[204]177 U. S.

In Hague v. Wheeler, 157 Pa. 324, 22 L. R. A. 141, 27 Atl. 714, the question involved in the cause was the right of a land owner who had a gas well on his own land to complain of the escape of gas from a well situated on the land of another. After advertising to the rule embodied in the maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas, and after referring to the exceptional nature of the right to acquire ownership in natural gas and oil, it was decided that the complainant was not entitled to relief. The court said (157 Pa. 340, 341, 22 L. R. A. 147, 148, 27 Atl. 719, 720):

"Now, it is doubtless true that the public has a sufficient interest in the preservation of oil and gas from waste to justify legislation upon this subject. Something has been done in this direction already by the acts regulating the plugging of abandoned wells. . . . In the disposition he may make of it [private property] he is subject to two limitations. He must not disregard his obligations to the public. He must not disregard his neighbor's rights. If he uses his product in such a manner as to violate any rule of public policy, or any positive provision of the written law, he brings himself within the reach of the courts. If the use he makes of his own, or its waste, is injurious to the property or the health of others, such use or waste may be restrained, or damages recovered therefor; but, *subject to [205] these limitations, his power as an owner is absolute until the legislature shall, in the interest of the public, as consumers, restrict and regulate it by statute."

Again, in Jones v. Forest Oil Co. (January, 1900), 194 Pa. 379, 44 Atl. 1074, the same subject was once more considered. The complaint was filed by one land owner having a gas well on his land, to enjoin the owner of adjoining property from using in a gas well thereon a pump which was asserted to have such power that its operation would draw away the oil and gas from the well of the complainant to that of the defendant. Reviewing the cases to which we have just referred, and after quoting the language of Chief Justice Agnew, in Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 142, 147, wherein, as we have seen, oil and gas were by analogy classed as "minerals feræ naturæ," the court decided:

"From these cases we conclude that the property of the owner of lands in oil and gas is not absolute until it is actually in his grasp and brought to the surface."

Again applying the consequences of the doctrine just stated, the court declared:

"If possession of the land is not necessarily possession of the oil and gas, is there any reason why an oil and gas operator should not be permitted to adopt any and all appliances known to the trade to make the production of his wells as large as possible?"

A brief examination of the Indiana decisions on the subject of oil and natural gas, and the right to acquire ownership thereto will make it apparent that from the peculiar nature of these substances courts of that state have announced the same rule as that recognized by this court in Brown v. Spilman, 155 U. S. 665, 669, 670, 39 L. ed. 304, 305, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 245, and which has been applied by the supreme court of the state of Pennsylvania. In State ex rel. Corwin v. Indiana & O. Oil, Gas, & Min. Co. 120 Ind. 575, 6 L. R. A. 579, 22 N. E. 778, a law of the state of Indiana which made it unlawful for any person to conduct natural gas beyond the state, and imposing penalties for so doing, was assailed as unconstitutional because repugnant to the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States. The court held the statute to be void for the asserted [206] cause. The "property in natural gas when reduced to actual possession was decided to be like any other property, and therefore the subject of commerce, and within the protection of the Constitution of the United States. In Jamieson v. Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. 128 Ind. 555, 12 L. R. A. 652, 28 N. E. 76, a law of that state which prohibited the transportation of natural gas through pipes at a greater pressure than 300 pounds per square inch, or otherwise than by its natural flow, was attacked, not only on the ground of its interference with the right of property which sprang into existence with the possession of the gas, but because also the act in question was a regulation of interstate commerce. Both contentions were decided to be without merit, substantially on the ground that the dangerous nature of the product, its susceptibility to explosion, and the consequent hazard to life and property which might arise from its movement through pipes, made the act of transmitting a fit subject for police regulation. In the course of its opinion the court said:

"The local character of such a substance as natural gas is, we repeat, marked and peculiar. It is a natural product, and its source is in the soil or rocks of the earth. It is as strikingly local as coal or petroleum; and yet no one has ever questioned the power of a state to enact laws governing mining. . . . It is so essentially local that only local regulation can be effective or appropriate. It is found in very few localities, and the character of locality is impressed upon it more clearly and strongly than upon almost any other natural product in the world."

Again, said the court:

"The local and peculiar character of natural gas makes it almost impossible that it should be the subject of general national regulation. . . . Upon this point we affirm that natural gas is characteristically and peculiarly a local product; that its production is confined to a limited territory; that because of its local characteristics and peculiarities it is a proper subject for state legislation, and cannot, so far as regards local protection, be made the subject of general legislation by Congress."

In People's Gas Co. v. Tyner, 131 Ind. 277, 281, 16 L. R. A. 443, 31 N. E. 59, *the contro-[207] versy was this: A lotowner in a town filed a bill for an injunction to prevent a neighboring lotowner from using nitroglycerine "to shoot" a gas well on his property. The court refused the injunction. In the course of the opinion it was said:

"It has been settled in this state that natural gas, when brought to the surface of the earth and placed in pipes for transportation, is property, and may be the subject of interstate commerce. State v. Indiana & O. Oil, Gas, & Min. Co. 120 Ind. 575, 6 L. R. A. 579, 22 N. E. 778. Water, petroleum, oil, and gas are generally classed by themselves as minerals possessing in some degree a kindred nature."

After quoting authorities relating to subterranean currents of water, and treating gas and oil before being reduced to possession as of a kindred nature, the court said:

"Like water it is not the subject of property except while in actual occupancy, and a grant of either water or oil is not a grant of the soil or of anything for which ejectment will lie."

The case of Brown v. Vandergrift, 80 Pa. 142, from which we have previously quoted, was then referred to, and the analogies between oil and gas and animals feræ naturæ were approved and adopted. In Townsend v. State, 147 Ind. 624, 37 L. R. A. 294, 49 N. E. 14, the constitutionality of a statute forbidding the burning of natural gas in flambeau lights was attacked because it was asserted to violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and various provisions of the Constitution of the state of Indiana. The court held that the statute was not amenable to the assaults made upon it. In a full opinion reviewing the nature of the ownership in oil and natural gas, the power of the state to regulate and control their use and waste in the interest of all those within the gas field and of the public at large was elaborately considered. Reviewing its own previous adjudications, which we have cited, and those of the supreme court of the state of Pennsylvania, to which we have also referred, it was decided that the owners of the surface of the land within the gas field, whilst they had the exclusive right on their land to sink wells for the purpose of extracting the oil and gas, had no right of property therein *until by the [208] actual drawing of the oil and gas to the surface of the earth they had reduced these substances to physical possession. It was further held that in consequence of the nature of the deposits, of their transmissibility, of their interdependence, of the rights of all and of the public at large, the state could lawfully exercise the power to regulate the right of the surface owners among themselves to seek to obtain possession, and to prevent the waste of the products in which all the surface owners within the area wherein the gas and oil were deposited, as well as the public, had an interest, because in the preservation of these substances the well-being and prosperity of the entire community was largely involved. And it was upon the opinion announced in that case that the court rested its decree in the case now under review.

Without pausing to weigh the reasoning of the opinions of the Indiana court in order to ascertain whether they in every respect harmonize, it is apparent that the cases in question, in accord with the rule of general law, settle the rule of property in the state of Indiana to be as follows: Although in virtue of his proprietorship the owner of the surface may bore wells for the purpose of extracting natural gas and oil until these substances are actually reduced by him to possession, he has no title whatever to them as owner. That is, he has the exclusive right on his own land to seek to acquire them, but they do not become his property until the effort has resulted in dominion and control by actual possession. It is also clear from the Indiana cases cited that, in the absence of regulation by law, every owner of the surface within a gas field may prosecute his efforts and may reduce to possession all or every part, if possible, of the deposits, without violating the rights of the other surface owners.

[209] If the analogy between animals feræ naturæ and mineral deposits of oil and gas, stated by the Pennsylvania court and adopted by the Indiana court, instead of simply establishing a similarity of relation, proved the identity of the two things, there would be an end of the case. This follows because things which are feræ naturæ belong to the "negative community;" in other words, are public things subject to the absolute control *of the state, which, although it allows them to be reduced to possession, may at its will not only regulate, but wholly forbid, their future taking. Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 525, 40 L. ed. 793, 795, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600. But whilst there is an analogy between animals feræ naturæ and the moving deposits of oil and natural gas, there is no identity between them. Thus, the owner of land has the exclusive right on his property to reduce the game there found to possession, just as the owner of the soil has the exclusive right to reduce to possession the deposits of natural gas and oil found beneath the surface of his land. The owner of the soil cannot follow game when it passes from his property; so, also, the owner may not follow the natural gas when it shifts from beneath his own to the property of someone else within the gas field. It being true as to both animals feræ naturæ and gas and oil, therefore, that whilst the right to appropriate and become the owner exists, proprietorship does not take being until the particular subjects of the right become property by being reduced to actual possession. The identity, however, is for many reasons wanting. In things feræ naturæ all are endowed with the power of seeking to reduce a portion of the public property to the domain of private ownership by reducing them to possession. In the case of natural gas and oil no such right exists in the public. It is vested only in the owners in fee of the surface of the earth within the area of the gas field. This difference points at once to the distinction between the power which the law-maker may exercise as to the two. In the one, as the public are the owners, every one may be absolutely prevented from seeking to reduce to possession. No divesting of private property under such a condition can be conceived, because the public are the owners, and the enacting by the state of a law as to the public ownership is but the discharge of the governmental trust resting in the state as to property of that character. Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 525, 40 L. ed. 793, 795, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600. On the other hand, as to gas and oil the surface proprietors within the gas field all have the right to reduce to possession the gas and oil beneath. They could not be absolutely deprived of this right which belongs to them without a taking of private property. But there is a coequal right in them all to take from a common source of supply the two substances which in the nature of things are united, though separate. It follows from the essence of their right and from the situation of the things as to which it can be exerted, that the use by one of his power to seek to convert a part of the common fund to actual possession may result in an undue proportion being attributed to one of the possessors of the right to the detriment of the others, or by waste by one or more to the annihilation of the rights of the remainder. Hence it is that the legislative power, from the peculiar nature of the right and the objects upon which it is to be exerted, can be manifested for the purpose of protecting all the collective owners, by securing a just distribution, to arise from the enjoyment, by them, of their privilege to reduce to possession, and to reach the like end by preventing waste. This necessarily implied legislative authority is borne out by the analogy suggested by things feræ naturæ, which it is unquestioned the legislature has the authority to forbid all from taking, in order to protect them from undue destruction, so that the right of the common owners, the public, to reduce to possession, may be ultimately efficaciously enjoyed. Viewed, then, as a statute to protect or to prevent the waste of the common property of the surface owners, the law of the state of Indiana which is here attacked because it is asserted that it divested private property without due compensation, in substance, is a statute pro-protecting private property and preventing it from being taken by one of the common owners without regard to the enjoyment of the others. Indeed, the entire argument upon which the attack on the statute must depend involves a dilemma, which is this: If the right of the collective owners of the surface to take from the common fund, and thus reduce a portion of it to possession, does not create a property interest in the common fund, then the statute does not provide for the taking of private property without compensation. If, on the other hand, there be, as a consequence of the right of the surface owners to reduce to possession, a right of property in them in and to the substances contained in the common reservoir of supply, then, as a necessary result of the right of property, its indivisible quality, and the peculiar position of the things to which it relates, there must arise the legislative power to protect the right of property from destruction. To illustrate by another form of statement the argument is this: There is property in the surface owners in the gas and oil held in the natural reservoir. Their right to take cannot be regulated without divesting them of their property without adequate compensation, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, and this although it be that if regulation cannot be exerted one property owner may deprive all the others of their rights, since his act in so doing will be damnum absque injuria. This is but to say that one common owner may divest all the others of their rights without wrongdoing, but the lawmaking power cannot protect all the owners in their enjoyment without violating the Constitution of the United States.

These considerations are sufficient to dispose of the case. But as there are several contentions which seem to have been considered, in argument, as resting on different premises, though such in reason is not the case, we briefly notice them separately: First. It is argued that as the gas, before being allowed to disperse in the air, serves the purpose of forcing up the oil, therefore it is not wasted, hence is not subject to regulation. Second. That the answer averred that the defendant was so situated as not to be able to use or dispose of the gas which comes to the surface with the oil; from which it follows that the gas must either be stored or dispersed in the air. Now, the answer further asserted that when the gas is stored and not used, the back pressure, on the best-known pump, would, if not arresting its movement, at least greatly diminish its capacity. Hence it is said the law by making it unlawful to allow the gas to escape made it practically impossible to profitably extract the oil. That is, as the oil could not be taken at a profit by one who made no use of the gas, therefore he must be allowed to waste the gas into the atmosphere, and thus destroy the interest of the other common owners in the reservoir of gas. These contentions but state in a different form the matters already disposed of. They really go, not to the power to make the regulations, but to their wisdom. But with the lawful discretion of the legislature of the state we may not interfere.

In view of the fact that regulations of natural deposits of oil and gas and the right of the owner to take them as an incident of title in fee to the surface of the earth, as said by the supreme court of Indiana, is ultimately but a regulation of real property, and they must hence be treated as relating to the preservation and protection of rights of an essentially local character. Considering this fact and the peculiar situation of the substances, as well as the character of the rights of the surface owners, we cannot say that the statute amounts to a taking of private property, when it is but a regulation by the state of Indiana of a subject which especially comes within its lawful authority.

Affirmed.

OHIO OIL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF INDIANA for the Use of MADISON COUNTY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 212, 213.)

[No. 83.]

See same case below, 150 Ind. 694, 49 N. E. 1107.

*Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant below was sued for the sum of certain penalties imposed by law for allowing gas to escape into the atmospheric air from an oil and gas well. The statute by which the penalties were imposed is the one we have considered and passed on in an opinion this day delivered in Ohio Oil Co. v. Indiana, No. 84 of this term (177 U. S. 190, ante, 729, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576). The defendant demurred to the complaint, and when the demurrer was overruled answered. The answer alleged that the statute imposing the penalties was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, on the same grounds which we have to-day disposed of in the case referred to. From a judgment awarding the penalties, which was affirmed by the supreme court of the state of Indiana, this writ of error is prosecuted. For the reasons given in case No. 84, the judgment is affirmed.

OHIO OIL COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF INDIANA for the Use of MADISON COUNTY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 213.)

[No. 85.]

See same case below, 150 Ind. 698, 50 N. E. 1124.

*Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion of the court:

The supreme court of the state of Indiana affirmed a judgment of the trial court, awarding the sum of certain penalties incurred by violating a statute of the state of Indiana which came under our review in case No. 84 (177 U. S. 190, ante, 729, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576), this day disposed of. The opinion in that case is conclusive of every question here arising, and for the reasons given in case No. 84, the judgment is affirmed.
177 U. S.

[214]*ELIZABETH S. OVERBY et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

FANNIE H. GORDON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 214-229.)

Appeal—amount in dispute on will contest—adjudication of domicil in grant of administration—effect in other jurisdictions.

1. The amount of the estate which passes by a will, if that is held valid, constitutes the matter in dispute on a contest of the will, without regard to the amount of the interest of any one of the contestants, within the meaning of the act of Congress of February 9, 1893 (27 Stat. at L. 436), requiring the matter in dispute on appeal from a judgment of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia to exceed the sum of $5,000.
2. An adjudication of the fact of the domicil of a deceased person, made in the grant of letters of administration, has no probative force upon the question of domicil in a contest in a court outside the state, in proceedings for the administration of assets within that jurisdiction, where the adjudication was made without any contest inter partes, but in a proceeding in rem on an application under Ga. Code 1895, §§ 3393, 3394, under which the statutory notice is given by publication, and is not directed against named individuals, and does not have for its object the obtaining of specific relief against anyone, but is general, and for the purpose of warning all persons of the proposal to determine the question of appointing a legal representative.
3. A dismissal of proceedings for administration upon property in the District of Columbia, by a court of that District which has obtained jurisdiction, is not required by the act of Congress (24 Stat. at L. 431) authorizing administrators appointed in any state to maintain suit or recover claims in that District, where a party to the proceedings in the District while they are pending and undecided goes to a state and obtains letters of administration on an assertion that the decedent was domiciled in that state.

[No. 168.]

Argued March 5, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a judgment affirming the probate of a will. Affirmed.

See same case below, 13 App. D. C. 392.

NOTE.—As to the amount necessary to give the United States Supreme Court jurisdiction—see note to Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 256.

177 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

The proceedings under review originated in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, by the filing in that court, on January 23, 1896, of a petition on behalf of Mrs. Gordon, the appellee herein. The object of the petition was to obtain the probate, as the last will and testament of Hugh A. Haralson, of a paper purporting to have been executed by Haralson, a copy of which is set out in the margin hereof, † and to obtain *a grant of let- [215] ters of administration thereon with the will annexed. It was averred that Haralson, at the time of his death and for several years prior thereto, had been a resident of the District of Columbia, and that he died on August 23, 1895, in the county of De Kalb, state of Georgia, possessed of personal property of the value of about $10,000 all of which, except an insignificant part thereof, was at the time in the District of Columbia. It was further averred that Haralson left surviving, as next of kin, three sisters, and four children of a deceased sister, and that all child next of kin, except the eldest sister (Elizabeth S. Overby), resided in the state of Georgia. Subsequently, on March 6, 1896, a caveat was filed, purporting in the body thereof to be on behalf of all the next of kin of the decedent other than Mrs. Gordon, but not signed by Mrs. Overby, contesting the validity of the alleged will and the claim that the deceased was at the time of his death a resident of the District of Columbia, and averring that at the time of his death Haralson was a citizen and resident of the state of Georgia.

On April 10, 1896, issues were framed upon the matters put at issue by the caveat, and were ordered to be tried by the court, sitting as a circuit court, and a jury. The questions presented for decision were as follows:

"1. Was the said deceased at the time of his death a resident of the District of Columbia?

"2. Was the said deceased at the time of his death a citizen and resident of the state of Georgia?

"3. Was the said deceased at the time of the making of the paper writing purporting to be his last will and testament a resident of the District of Columbia?

"4. Was the said deceased at the time of the making of the paper writing purporting to be his last will and testament a citizen and resident of the state of Georgia?

"5. At the time of his death did any con-

† Savannah, Ga., August 14, 1895.

It is my will and desire that after my death the interest on my bonds be for the sole use and benefit of my sister Mrs. Fannie Gordon, and that after her death the interest on my bonds be for the sole use and benefit of her daughter and my niece Carrie Lewis Gordon.

It is my will and desire that none of my securities be sold or the investment changed until they mature.

If Carrie Gordon should have no children at her death, these securities, with the residue of my estate, to be divided to my heirs at law.

Hugh Haralson.

Witness: Chas. A. Macatee.

[216]siderable part of "the personal estate of the said deceased lie within the District of Columbia?"

A trial of these issues, however, was not had until February, 1898. At said trial the caveators were represented by attorneys. From a bill of exceptions contained in the record before us it appears that Mrs. Gordon introduced evidence tending to show that both at the date of the testamentary paper in controversy and at the time of his death Haralson was a resident of the District of Columbia. Mrs. Gordon rested her case after the following admissions were made by counsel for caveators:

1. That at his death Haralson had on deposit in two banking institutions in the District of Columbia money and securities approximating $9,000 in amount and value, which was the entire estate of the decedent, with the exception of about $200 found outside of said District; and

2. That said assets within the District of Columbia had been removed therefrom by Logan Bleckley (one of the caveators), claiming to act as administrator of the estate of said decedent, under grant of letters issued in May, 1896, by a court of the state of Georgia, pursuant to proceedings initiated in said court on April 6, 1896.

It is recited in the bill of exceptions that "to sustain the issues on their part joined," the caveators offered in evidence a certified transcript of record from the De Kalb court of ordinary, De Kalb county, in the state of Georgia. This record showed the appointment in May, 1896, of Logan Bleckley as administrator.

It is further recited in the bill of exceptions that the transcript referred to was offered as tending to show that the decedent had died a resident of De Kalb county, Georgia, intestate, "and that Mrs. Gordon was thereby estopped to deny that fact." The trial court, however, refused to admit the record in evidence, and an exception was duly taken to such refusal. The jury answered "Yes" to the first, third, and fifth questions submitted to them, and "No" to the second and fourth questions, thus sustaining the contentions of Mrs. Gordon. The answers were certified to the orphans' court, and thereupon an order was entered admitting the will "to probate and record as the last will and testament of the decedent, and letters of administration cum testamento annexo were decreed to issue to Hugh H. Gordon, a son of the petitioner. An appeal was thereupon taken by the caveators to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia. That court affirmed the order of the lower court (Mr. Chief Justice Alvey dissenting), [13 App. D. C. 392], and a writ of error was then sued out from this court.

Mr. Samuel F. Phillips argued the cause and, with Mr. Frederic D. McKenney, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

All of the next of kin but one caveator are residents of Georgia, and therefore are bound by its statutory provisions for constructive service of process. The judgment against the caveatee in conformity with that statute and the findings must be deemed to have been rendered with jurisdiction as to her.

Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 670, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; Knowles v. Logansport Gaslight & Coke Co. 19 Wall. 58, 22 L. ed. 70; Wharton, Conflict of Laws, § 708; Story, Conflict of Laws, p. 809, Bigelow's note b; 2 Black, Judgments, § 836; Biesenthall v. Williams, 1 Duv. 329, 85 Am. Dec. 629.

The fact that the finding was made in a suit commenced pending the one in which such finding is invoked is no objection to its introduction in evidence.

1 Chitty, Pl. 689 note n; 2 Black, Judgments, § 791; Emery v. Fowler, 39 Me. 326, 63 Am. Dec. 627.

The finding is not limited in its operation to the state of Georgia because the order to which this finding was incident was limited by the bounds of that state.

Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156, 62 Am. Dec. 152; Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 346, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 538, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269.

A right, question, or fact distinctly put in issue, and directly determined by a court of competent jurisdiction as a ground of recovery, cannot be disputed in a subsequent suit between the same parties or their privies.

Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 42 L. ed. 355, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18.

A finding in a state probate court, upon an application for administration inter partes, will estop the same parties in a subsequent proceeding concerning the same general matter before a United States court.

Caujolle v. Ferrie, 13 Wall. 465, 20 L. ed. 507; Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 175, 18 L. ed. 186.

Mcssrs. Charles Cowles Tucker and Henry E. Davis argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The interests of the several plaintiffs in error in the premises are separate, and the writ of error should be accordingly dismissed.

Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U. S. 264, 29 L. ed. 377, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 1083, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1066; Clay v. Field, 138 U. S. 464, 34 L. ed. 1044, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419.

The supreme court of the District of Columbia holding a special term for orphans' court business, having first taken cognizance of this cause, had the exclusive right to entertain and exercise such jurisdiction to its final determination.

Re Chetwood, 165 U. S. 443, 41 L. ed. 782, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385; State ex rel. Rhodes, 48 La. Ann. 1363, 20 So. 894; Craig v. Hoge, 95 Va. 275, 28 S. E. 317; Ober v. Gallagher, 93 U. S. 199, 23 L. ed. 829; Merrill v. Lake, 16 Ohio, 373, 47 Am. Dec. 377; Booth v. Ableman, 16 Wis. 460, 84 Am. Dec. 711; Ex parte Bushnell, 8 Ohio St. 599; Clepper v. State, 4 Tex. 242; Story, Equity, 64k; Slyhoof v. Flitcraft, 1 Ashm. 171; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 15 L. ed. 1028; Peck v.

Jenness, 7 How. 612, 12 L. ed. 841; Smith v. McIver, 9 Wheat. 532, 6 L. ed. 152; Peale v. Phipps, 14 How. 368, 14 L. ed. 459; Shelby v. Bacon, 10 How. 56, 13 L. ed. 326.

Plaintiffs in error, having appeared in the cause and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court, perpetrated a fraud, both upon that court and the Georgia court, in subsequently raising in the latter court the precise question which was pending undetermined in the former, and thereby violated the rule of comity between judicial tribunals.

Barkdull v. Herwig, 30 La. Ann. 618; Ex parte Bushnell, 8 Ohio St. 599; Taylor v. Fort Wayne, 47 Ind. 274; Powers v. Springfield, 116 Mass. 84; Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 624, 12 L. ed. 846; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 596, 15 L. ed. 1032; Riesner v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 89 Tex. 656, 33 L. R. A. 171, 36 S. W. 53; Zimmerman v. Sorelle, 49 U. S. App. 387, 80 Fed. Rep. 417, 25 C. C. A. 518; Wackerle v. People ex rel. Wackerle, 168 Ill. 250, 48 N. E. 123, Reversing 65 Ill. App. 423; Jenkins v. Simms, 45 Md. 532; Brooks v. Delaplaine, 1 Md. Ch. 351.

[217] *Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

Counsel for defendant in error urge in their brief an objection to the jurisdiction of this court, which we shall first consider and dispose of.

It is claimed that the writ of error should be dismissed "because the interests of the plaintiffs in error in respect of the judgment of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, to which said writ of error was directed, are several, and the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, as to no one of the said plaintiffs in error, exceeds the sum or value of $5,000."

By act of February 9, 1893 (27 Stat. at L. 436, chap. 74), this court was authorized, among other things, to review a final judgment or decree of the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in any case where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000. What, therefore, was the matter in dispute in this controversy? The answer manifestly is that it was whether an estate valued at more than $9,000 should pass in the mode provided in an alleged last will and testament, which, in effect, excluded the next of kin of the decedent from the enjoyment of the principal that instrument would have been the matter in dispute. The matter in dispute necessarily must be the same as to the unsuccessful next of kin who are prosecuting this writ of error, and the amount of whose several interests in the estate of the decedent was not a question litigated below. The case is analogous in principle to that of Shields v. Thomas, 17 How. 3, 15 L. ed. 93. In that case it was held that where the representatives of a deceased intestate recovered a judgment against an administrator for an amount in excess of the sum necessary to confer jurisdiction to review, and such recovery was had under the same title and for a common and undivided interest, this court had jurisdiction, although the amount decreed to be distributed to each representative was less than the jurisdictional sum. In the case at bar, the contestants below sought, not an allotment to them of their interests, if any, in the estate, but an adjudication that the alleged last will and testament possessed no validity, and that contention was advanced by virtue of a claim of common title in the next of kin of the decedent to the corpus of the estate, such title, if any, being derived from the law of the alleged domicile of the deceased. In this aspect, the amount of the estate was the matter in dispute. New Orleans P. R. Co. v. Parker, 143 U. S. 42, 51, 52, 36 L. ed. 66, 68, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364, and cases there cited. There is therefore no merit in the objection to the exercise of jurisdiction.

[218] of the *estate, or in the mode provided by the law of the domicile of the decedent for the transmission of an intestate estate. On the one hand was Mrs. Gordon, a sister of the deceased, and representing the interests under the alleged last will, asserting the validity of that document, and opposed to her were the plaintiffs in error, some of the next of kin of the deceased, interested in establishing his intestacy. Had the trial court admitted in evidence the transcript of record from the De Kalb court, and given it the conclusive force contended for, it would seem beyond question that as to those interested in upholding the validity of the alleged will, the value of the estate affected by 177 U. S.

Coming, then, to the merits of the controversy, we find presented for our consideration the single question, Was the grant of letters of administration by the court of ordinary of De Kalb *county, Georgia, com-[219] petent evidence upon the issue tried in the supreme court of the District of Columbia respecting the domicile of the decedent at the time of his death?

In determining this question it is important to keep in mind the following facts:

At the time when the proceedings before the De Kalb court were instituted (April, 1896), the estate of the deceased, with but a trifling exception, was within the District of Columbia. Not only this, but, upon the ground that the domicile of Haralson at his death was the District of Columbia, the jurisdiction of a competent court of the District had been invoked as early as January 23, 1896, for the probate of an alleged last will and testament of Haralson and for the grant of letters of administration cum testamento annexo; and on March 6, 1896, the next of kin, other than the proponent of the alleged will, had filed a caveat in said court of the District of Columbia contesting the application for probate and grant of letters. Four days before the certification of issues framed by reason of such contest, to be tried before a jury, the caveators before the supreme court of the District of Columbia initiated the proceedings before the De Kalb county court. It was upon the hearing had in the supreme court of the District of Columbia upon the issues certified on April 10, 1896, that the adjudication of the De Kalb county court was offered in evidence upon the issue in respect to the domicile of the decedent at his death.

The transcript of record exhibiting such adjudication consists of (1) An unverified petition of Logan Bleckley, as one of the next of kin and heirs at law of Hugh A. Haralson, asking that letters of administration be granted upon the estate of said deceased, upon the ground that he was a resident of the county of De Kalb at his death, and had died intestate, "leaving an estate, undivided, of real and personal property of the probable value of $10,000;" (2) consents of certain of the next of kin to the appointment of Bleckley; (3) the order of appointment; and, (4) the oath of office of the administrator, in which is embodied an averment that the decedent died intestate, so far as affiant knew or believed.

[220] By § 3393 of the Georgia Code of 1895 an application *for grant of letters of administration was required to be made to the ordinary of the county of the residence of the deceased, if a resident of the state, and if not a resident, then in some county where the estate or a portion thereof was situated.

The next section, prescribing the notice to be given of an application, reads as follows:

"Sec. 3394 (2503). The citation. The ordinary must issue a citation, giving notice of the application to all concerned, in the gazette in which the county advertisements are usually published, once a week for four weeks, and at the first regular term after the expiration of that time the application should be heard or regularly continued."

The order of appointment is recited to have been made at the May term, 1896. It reads as follows:

"The petition of Logan Bleckley for letters of administration on the estate of Hugh A. Haralson, deceased, having been duly filed, and it appearing that citation therein was issued and published according to law, requiring all concerned to appear at this term and show cause, if any they could, why said letters should not be granted; and it also appearing that said deceased died a resident of said county intestate, and that said applicant is a citizen of this state and lawfully qualified for said administration, and no objection being offered thereto,—it is therefore ordered by the court that the said Logan Bleckley be, and he is hereby, appointed administrator on the estate of said deceased, and that letters issue to him as such, upon his giving bond, with approved security, in the sum of twenty thousand dollars, and taking and subscribing the oath as provided by law."

As said by this court in Veatch v. Rice, 131 U. S. 293, 33 L. ed. 163, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730, courts of ordinary in Georgia are courts of record, having exclusive and general jurisdiction over the estates of decedents, and no question has been raised as to the observance of the requirements of the statutes of Georgia in the proceedings which culminated in the appointment of the Georgia administrator.

The transcript referred to, however, undoubtedly only justifies the inference that none other than the statutory notice by publication was given, and that no contest was had in respect to the grant of letters.

*Jurisdiction is the right to hear and de-[221] cide, and it must be exercised, speaking in a broad sense, in one of two modes—either in rem or in personam.

It will be observed that the statutory notice above referred to was not required to be directed against named individuals, nor had it for its object the obtaining of specific relief against anyone, but it was to be general, and its purpose was to warn all persons that it was proposed by the court of ordinary to determine whether a legal representative should be appointed to administer the property of the deceased within the state of Georgia. The notice and proceeding was obviously intended to have no greater force or efficacy against persons resident in the state of Georgia than against individuals who might be resident without the state. It results that the proceedings referred to were not intended to constitute, and did not amount to, an action in personam. This results from the fact that they were devoid of the elements essential to an action in personam; and, if not proceedings purely in rem, they possessed so much of the characteristics thereof as not to warrant the allowance of greater efficacy than is accorded to a proceeding of that nature.

An essential characteristic, however, of a proceeding in rem is that there must be a res or subject-matter upon which the court is to exercise its jurisdiction. In cases purely in rem, as in admiralty and revenue cases for the condemnation or forfeiture of specific property, a preliminary seizure of the property is necessary to the power of the court to adjudicate at all. In other cases, where the proceedings are in form in personam, but the court is unable to acquire jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, by actual or constructive service of process, the action may proceed, as one in rem against the property of which a preliminary seizure or its equivalent has been made; or, jurisdiction may be exercised without such preliminary seizure, where the relief sought is an adjudication respecting the title to or validity of alleged liens upon real estate situate within the jurisdiction of the court. Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 398, ante, 520, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 410. To the class of cases where the proceedings are in form in rem may be added those connected with the grant of letters either testamentary or of administration.

*From the record of the proceedings in-[222] stituted in the De Kalb county court it is apparent that the ultimate purpose was to adjudicate upon and decree distribution of the estate of the deceased, the appointment of an administrator being a mere preliminary step in the management and control by the court of assets of the estate. The question of domicile would seem to have been important only as establishing the particular court of ordinary which was vested with jurisdiction to administer the assets within the state of Georgia. The subject-matter or res, upon which the power of the court was to be exercised, was, therefore, the estate of the decedent.

The sovereignty of the state of Georgia and the jurisdiction of its courts, however, did not extend to and embrace property not situated within the territorial jurisdiction of the state. To quote the language of Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in Rose v. Himely, 4 Cranch, 277, 2 L. ed. 619:

"It is repugnant to every idea of a proceeding in rem to act against a thing which is not in the power of the sovereign under whose authority the court proceeds; and no nation will admit that its property should be absolutely changed, while remaining in its own possession, by a sentence which is entirely ex parte."

As said also in Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 722, 24 L. ed. 568:

"Except as restrained and limited by . . . [the Constitution, the several states of the Union] possess and exercise the authority of independent states, and . . . [two well-established] principles of public law . . . [respecting the jurisdiction of an independent state over persons and property] are applicable to them. One of these principles is, that every state possesses exclusive jurisdiction and sovereignty over persons and property within its territory. . . .

"The other principle of public law referred to follows from the one mentioned; that is, that no state can exercise direct jurisdiction and authority over persons or property without its territory. Story, Conf. Laws, chap. 2; Wheat. Int. Law, pt. 2, chap. 2. The several states are of equal dignity and authority, and the independence of one implies the exclusion of power from all others. And so it is laid down by jurists, as an elementary principle, that the laws of one state [123] have no operation outside *of its territory, except so far as is allowed by comity; and that no tribunal established by it can extend its process beyond that territory so as to subject either persons or property to its decisions. 'Any exertion of authority of this sort beyond this limit,' says Story, 'is a mere nullity and incapable of binding such persons or property in any other tribunals.' Story, Conf. Laws, § 539."

Now, it is undeniable that the sovereignty of the state of Georgia and the jurisdiction of its courts at the time of the adjudication by the De Kalb county court, by the grant of letters of administration on the estate of Haralson, did not extend to or embrace the assets of the decedent situated within the territorial jurisdiction of the District of Columbia, and, viewed as a step in a proceeding in rem relating to property within the jurisdiction of the court, the adjudication of a grant of letters would have no binding probative force in contests respecting property lying outside of the territorial dominion of the state of Georgia. The decision in Robertson v. Pickrell, 109 U. S. 608, 27 L. ed. 1049, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407, and in the cases there relied upon, furnish illustrations of this principle. Thus, in the case just named, 177 U. S.

it was held that the act of Congress declaring the force and efficacy which the records and judicial proceedings of one state should have in the courts of another state did not require that they should have any greater force and effect in another state than in the state where such records and judicial proceedings originated and were had; that the probate of a will in one state by a proceeding not adversary in character, merely established its sufficiency to pass all property which could be transferred in that state by a valid instrument of that kind, and the validity of the will in that state; and that such probate did not conduce to establish the facts upon which the probate proceeded, in proceedings respecting real property, situated in another state, except as permitted by the laws of such other state.

The reasoning upon which we base the conclusion that the transcript of record of the grant of letters by the De Kalb county court was not entitled to probative force in the courts of another state in a controversy over the administration of assets not within the territorial jurisdiction of the state of Georgia, *at the time the grant of letters was [224] made, finds support in the opinion delivered by Lord Blackburn in Concha v. Concha, L. R. 11 App. Cas. p. 541, a case referred to in terms of approval in Thormann v. Frame, 176 U. S. 350, ante, 500, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446, where was involved a controversy in some of its features analogous to that presented in the case at bar. The facts in the Concha Case were as follows:

After contest between a daughter of a decedent and the executors named in a document which purported to be a last will and testament, the paper was admitted to probate by a judge of a probate court in London, and he expressly decided, upon an issue framed in a contest between the daughter and executors as to the domicile of the decedent, in favor of the domicile being in England, and not in Chili, as was claimed by the daughter. In a subsequent action before the court of chancery for distribution of the assets, the daughter again sought to litigate the question as to the domicile of her father, and her right to do so was finally adjudicated by the House of Lords. The executors, or those who had succeeded them in the management of the administration suit, attempted to avail of the decree of the probate court as conclusive upon the question of domicile, first, as a proceeding in rem, which operated an estoppel against all the world; and, second, as a proceeding inter partes, operative as res judicata, by reason of the actual contest made by the daughter. The decree of the probate court, however, was held not conclusive in rem as to the domicile, because the finding as to domicile was not necessary to the decree of the judge of probate, nor conclusive inter partes, as the pending controversy was substantially between the daughter and the residuary legatee, and as the latter could not be bound by an adjudication upon a question not necessary to be litigated in the probate court, and as estoppels must be mutual, the daughter could not be bound. This decision of the House of Lords, it will be borne in mind, was as to the effect to be given in one judicial tribunal in England to the decision of another court of the same country. In the course of his opinion, Lord Blackburn (who perhaps had in mind doubts intimated in the court of appeals [L. R. 29 Ch. Div. p. 276] as to whether the findings on which a judgment in rem is based, are in all cases conclusive against the world) said (p. 562):

[225] *—"What he [the probate judge] did decide was (and to that extent I think the decision was conclusive on everybody), that there was an executor who was entitled to have probate in England for the purpose of getting in and taking the property which was in England, and to that he was entitled if there was a will which made that executor a good executor according to the law of England; but I do not think that Sir Cresswell Cresswell had any power to say that the testator was or was not really a domiciled Englishman. If he had been a domiciled American or domiciled in any other country, I do not think that a decision of the judge of our probate court, saying: 'I find him to be a domiciled Englishman, and, therefore, on that account grant probate,' would be at all conclusive upon the court of another country to oblige them to admit that he was a domiciled Englishman, when in fact he was not; or, putting it the converse way, that if a Chilian court had chosen to say that some very wealthy man was a domiciled Chilian, and had therefore granted probate, the law of nations would require that to conclude any person from saying in this country that he was not so."

Again, after referring to the fact that upon the executor proposing to prove the will, a caveat was entered upon which it was said the probate judge entered into an inquiry whether or not the testator was domiciled in England, and found that he was, Lord Blackburn observed (p. 564):

"It is said that upon the caveat in the suit an order was drawn up, which may perhaps not mean that, but which does look extremely as if the registrar entered the judgment that the judge did find it. I cannot think that if he had done that it would have bound everybody universally as being a judgment in rem. I have instanced a sort of illustration of it. Supposing he had done so, and supposing that he was wrong, and the fact was that the testator had not been really domiciled in England, but had been domiciled, say, in the United States, in New York we will suppose, could it possibly have been said that the court of New York (which undoubtedly would have the same general law of nations as we have, following the law of the domicile to distribute the property) would have respected the decision of the judge

[226] ordinary, it establishing that this *will was proved conclusively as being enough to make this person executor and the representative in England to obtain the English property—could it have been said that the judge ordinary having erroneously found that the testator was domiciled in England

when in fact he was a domiciled citizen of the United States, it was to conclude them and conclude everybody to the fact that he was a domiciled Englishman until a foreigner had come to the court of this country to obtain a reversal? I cannot think so. If that was so, how could it as a matter in rem be decisive as regards the reason upon which the judge of the probate court had gone? I cannot think that it would be."

In Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 175, 18 L. ed. 186, and a continuation of the same action under the title of Kearney v. Denn, 15 Wall. 51, 21 L. ed. 41, the sole question at issue in the action (ejectment) was the validity of an asserted marriage. At the trial the defendant offered in evidence, as a conclusive estoppel against all the lessors of the plaintiff and as prima facie evidence to support the issue on his part, a transcript from the records of the orphans' court of Prince George's county, Maryland, and proposed to read therefrom the verdict of the jury and the order of the orphans' court thereon on certain issues sent from the orphans' court to the circuit court of said county. These issues had been framed upon a contest, initiated in the orphans' court, by one of the lessors of the plaintiff who resisted an application of Blackburn for the grant to him of letters of administration on the estate of a certain intestate, such lessor asserting that he was nearest of kin to the intestate, and that letters should be granted to him. The verdict in the contest was against the validity of the claimed marriage. On the trial in the action in ejectment the jury found in favor of the fact of marriage. This court—the trial judge in the action in ejectment having excluded the transcript referred to—held that the decree upon the contest was competent evidence and operated an estoppel as against the lessor of the plaintiff who was a party to the contest, but that the adjudication did not affect the other lessors, who were not parties to such contest. Obviously, the decision proceeded upon the assumption that, as the orphans' court possessed no general jurisdiction over the real *estate of a decedent, its action upon the ap-[227] plication for grant of letters, regarded as a proceeding in rem, possessed no probative force in contests over such property. This, of course, in no wise impugned the principle that all parties to a contest, in proceedings in a probate court preliminary to and during the course of administration upon the estate of the decedent, upon a matter within the jurisdiction of the court, are concluded in every other court by the decision rendered, as to the facts upon which such decision necessarily proceeded. Caujolle v. Ferrie, 13 Wall. 465, 20 L. ed. 507. And see Butterfield v. Smith, 101 U. S. 570, 25 L. ed. 868.

We are of the opinion that the De Kalb county court possessed the power to determine the question of domicile of the decedent for the purpose of conclusively adjudicating the validity within the state of Georgia of a grant of letters of administration, but that it did not possess the power to conclusively bind all the world as to the fact of domicile, by a mere finding of such fact in a proceeding in rem. In other words, proceedings which were substantially ex parte cannot be allowed to have greater efficacy than would a solemn contest inter partes, which would have estopped only actual parties to such contest as to facts which had been or might have been litigated in such contest.

Our conclusion being that the adjudication of the fact of domicile in Georgia made in the grant of letters by the De Kalb county court, and which was not made in a contest inter partes, was of no probative force upon the question of domicile in a contest in a court of the District of Columbia in the course of proceedings for the administration of assets within said District, it results that the supreme court of the District did not err in excluding the transcript in question whether tendered as evidence conducing to establish or as conclusively fixing the domicile of the deceased. And this conclusion is not affected in the least by the circumstance that on the trial of the issue as to domicile had in the supreme court of the District of Columbia it was claimed that the assets within the District of Columbia at the time of the filing of the caveat by the next of kin had been surreptitiously removed from the District of Columbia by one of the caveators. *The trial court properly declined to rule that delivery of such assets operated to protect those who made the surrender, as against an administrator appointed within the District, subsequent, it is true, to such delivery, but as the result of proceedings for the appointment of an administrator which were pending in a proper court of the District at the time of the delivery and when the person in whose name the Georgia letters were issued was a party to the proceedings previously instituted and then pending in the District. Nor was the trial court required to determine that upon proper application to the Georgia court the administrator appointed by the court would not be ordered to deliver up the assets removed by him from the District.

Allusion has been made to an act of Congress (24 Stat. at L. 431, chap. 281) which makes it lawful for any person or persons to whom letters testamentary or of administration may be granted by proper authority, in any of the United States or the territories thereof, to maintain any suit or action and to prosecute and recover any claim in the District of Columbia, in the same manner as if the letters testamentary or of administration had been granted to such person or persons by the proper authority in the said District. We do not construe that statute, however, as having any relation to a case of the kind we are now considering. In other words, the statute cannot in reason be interpreted as directing that where a proper court of the District of Columbia had obtained jurisdiction by proceedings commenced before it for administration upon property within the District, it should be obliged to dismiss such proceedings because one who was a party before it chose, whilst issues in such proceedings were pending and undecided, to go to a state and there make application for letters of administration, basing such application upon the asserted fact that the deceased had been domiciled in such state.

177 U. S.

Whilst it may be conceded that, in consequence of the statute, as a general rule, a debtor residing in the District of Columbia, of a deceased person, may be protected in making payment to an administrator appointed in another jurisdiction, the asserted domicile of the deceased (Wilkins v. Ellett, 108 U. S. 256, 27 L. ed. 718, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641), this does not make it necessary for us to decide that the payment *or delivery of the assets in the District of Columbia, which was made to the Georgia administrator after the commencement of proceedings for the administration of the assets within the District of Columbia, based upon the ground of the domicile of the deceased having been in said District, was lawful. To determine this question would involve a consideration of other provisions of the statute, and as to whether the person making the payment was or was not to be charged with notice of the then pending proceedings in the supreme court of the District, which, of course, were matter of public record. The question, however, is not before us for review, and we do not, therefore, express an opinion in regard thereto.

Further, in the light of the decision of the supreme court of Georgia in the case of Thomas v. Morrisett, 76 Ga. 384, and an analogous decision by the supreme court of errors of Connecticut, in Willett's Appeal, 50 Conn. 330, it would seem altogether probable that the De Kalb county court, upon application made to it, will order its appointee to surrender to the administrator appointed in the District of Columbia the assets which were by the former removed from the District during the pendency therein of the proceedings for administration.

Finding no error in the record, the judgment of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brown concurs in the result.

*LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

A. L. SCHMIDT, in His Own Behalf and as Trustee for the Bondholders of the Northern Division of the Cumberland & Ohio Railroad Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 230-239.)

Constitutional law—due process of law—bringing in defendant after judgment—order to show cause as due process of law.

NOTE.—As to what constitutes due process of law—see notes to Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; Wilson v. North Carolina ex rel. Caldwell, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865; People v. O'Brien (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 258; Kuntz v. Sumption (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 655; Re Gannon (R. I.) 5 L. R. A. 359; Ulman v. Baltimore (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 224; and Gilman v. Tucker (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 304.

1. The rendition of a judgment against one who was not served with process in the action or named as a party until after the original judgment was rendered, but was brought in subsequent thereto by an order to show cause, and condemned to pay the judgment, was not in violation of the provision as to due process of law in U. S. Const. 14th Amend., where such party had voluntarily appeared in the cause and actively conducted the defense.
2. The mere fact that a proceeding to hold a party liable to a judgment is by rule to show cause does not conflict with due process under U. S. Const. 14th Amend., for forms of procedure in the state courts are not controlled by that amendment, provided the fundamental rights secured by the amendment are not denied.
3. One who actually appeared and made a defense in an action to which he was not technically a party cannot contend that, when he was brought in by rule to show cause after the judgment was rendered, and was condemned to pay it, he was denied due process of law because all right to defend had been cut off by the previous judgment, if he offered no defense which the court did not entertain.

[No. 178.]

Argued March 12, 13, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review a decision affirming a judgment against one who was not originally a party to the cause, but was brought in by order to show cause and condemned to pay the judgment. Affirmed.

See same case below, 99 Ky. 148, 35 S. W. 135, 36 S. W. 168.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

The three corporations directly or indirectly involved in this controversy are the Northern Division of the Cumberland & Ohio Railroad Company, the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company, and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company. In order to abbreviate we shall refer to them respectively as the Cumberland & Ohio, the Cincinnati & Lexington, and the Louisville & Nashville.

On July 2, 1879, the Cumberland & Ohio mortgaged its road to secure its certain negotiable bonds.

On July 28, 1879, the Cumberland & Ohio leased its road for thirty years to the Cincinnati & Lexington. The lease provided that if the earnings of the Cumberland & Ohio proved inadequate to pay the interest on the bonds secured by the mortgage above referred to, the lessee, the Cincinnati & Lexington, *would "supply the deficiency so far as it may be done by appropriating the net earnings, or so much as may be needed, on its own lines, which may accrue by reason of business coming to it from or over said first party's line." The lease provided that the lessee, the Cincinnati & Lexington, should not assign the contract without the consent of the lessor, the Cumberland & Ohio. Contemporaneously with the execution of the lease, and in order to secure the carrying out of the stipulation providing for the application of certain stated earnings of the Cincinnati & Lexington to the payment of the interest on the bonds of the Cumberland & Ohio, the former corporation executed a mortgage in favor of the bondholders of the Cumberland & Ohio, hypothecating the net earnings on the Cincinnati & Lexington arising from business coming from the leased line. Although the Cumberland & Ohio did not abandon its corporate life, and preserved its formal existence, all its railroad and appurtenances as a result of the lease passed from its own to the control of the Cincinnati & Lexington.

In November, 1881, the Cincinnati & Lexington conveyed all its property to the Louisville & Nashville, and made to the latter an assignment of the lease of the property of the Cumberland & Ohio. Despite the fact that the assignment of the lease was not approved by the original lessor, the Cumberland & Ohio, as provided in the lease, the Louisville & Nashville took control of both the roads of the Cincinnati & Lexington and Cumberland & Ohio, and operated the same, reaping all the revenues of every kind arising therefrom. In 1885, default having supervened in the payment of the interest on the bonds of the Cumberland & Ohio, issued and secured as above stated, the trustee under the mortgage commenced proceedings against the Cincinnati & Lexington to enforce the mortgage on net earnings derived from business of the Cumberland & Ohio. It is not denied that at the time the action was commenced the fact of the transfer of the property of the Cincinnati & Lexington and the assignment of the lease of the Cumberland & Ohio to the Louisville & Nashville was known to the trustee. However, the Cincinnati & Lexington was the only party made defendant. The relief *sought was a discovery of [232] the amount of net earnings derived from business coming from the Cumberland & Ohio, and a decree for the amount, when ascertained, for the benefit of the mortgage bondholders. A most protracted and hotly contested lawsuit ensued. The question of earnings coming to the Cincinnati & Lexington from business over the Cumberland & Ohio was thoroughly explored by reports, expert examination of books, testimony, etc., resulting in what is denominated by counsel for the plaintiff in error in their brief as a "wilderness of figures." At last a final decree was entered fixing the earnings which under the contract were attributable to the mortgage creditors of the Cumberland & Ohio, at the sum of $53,565.62, which the defendant was ordered to pay into court, with interest, by a day stated. The sum not having been paid, a rule was taken on the defendant to compel performance, and in response it was answered:

"That in 1881 it sold and conveyed, for a consideration paid at the time, all its property, rights, privileges, and franchises except the mere franchise to exist, and that it distributed the proceeds of such sale among its various stockholders, and since said time it has had no property, assets, or funds of any kind with which to comply with the order of this court, and it is therefore unable to pay said sum, or any other sum, for the simple reason that it has no property or assets with which to do it."

The sale referred to in this answer being that which had been made by the Cincinnati & Lexington of all its property, including the assignment of the lease held by it from the Cumberland & Ohio to the Louisville & Nashville. In reply to a rule taken on the defendant to report the amount of net earnings which had accrued subsequent to the period embraced by the decree for $53,565.62, the defendant said:

"States and shows to this court that it has not made any net earnings, or earnings of any kind, since the date aforesaid, on business coming to it from or over the Cumberland & Ohio road, nor has it made earnings of any kind, since it does not own any railroad or property of any character whatever, and has not since the date aforesaid."

[233] *Thereupon the plaintiff sought leave by an amended and supplemental petition to make the Louisville & Nashville a party defendant to the cause. Among others the following averments were contained in the petition:

"Plaintiffs state that prior thereto the said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company had purchased and acquired, and at the time of said conveyance held, the capital stock of the said Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company, and, as such stockholder, took and appropriated, and has ever since enjoyed, the whole purchase price of the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company and all its said properties.

"Plaintiffs state that after the execution of said deed of November 1, 1881, said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company took possession of all the property of the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company aforesaid and of the property leased, as aforesaid, to said company, including the Northern Division of the Cumberland & Ohio Railroad Company aforesaid, and began to operate, and has ever since operated, said railroads and properties, and taken and appropriated to its own use the earnings thereof.

"Plaintiffs state that at all times since November 1, 1881, said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, subject to and in accordance with the provisions of said lease and mortgage and by virtue thereof, has operated the said Northern Division of the Cumberland & Ohio Railroad and the said Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway and properties, and has made all the earnings mentioned and proved in the reports of the several commissioners in this case, and ascertained and adjudged in the several judgments of this court, and finally adjudged in the opinion and judgment of the court of appeals herein, all of which said earnings were spoken of by witnesses and by the courts aforesaid in said reports and judgments respectively as the earnings of the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company.

"Plaintiffs further state that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at the time of its aforesaid purchase of the railroad and properties of the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railroad Company actually knew all the provisions of the *lease, mortgages, and contracts set up in the original petition in this suit, and actually applied net earnings accruing from said operation of said properties therein referred to, in accordance with said lease, mortgages, and contracts, from the time of its said purchase until the 1st day of April, 1883, and knew at all times, including the time during which this action has been pending, that it had operated said railroad and all the other property of said Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company and of the Northern Division of the Cumberland & Ohio Railroad Company, and that it had received all the earnings which were made by said properties, and understood and recognized that the earnings mentioned in the petition referred to the earnings made in the operation of the railroad and properties of the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company and the Northern Division of the Cumberland & Ohio Railroad Company, and filed the answer in this case in the name of the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company, and filed all other papers which were filed herein on behalf of the defense, and itself employed counsel in this case to make defense in the name of the Louisville, Cincinnati, & Lexington Railway Company, and introduced all the witnesses who were introduced on behalf of the defense of this action, and has been in court defending this action, and has controlled the defense thereof continuously from the time the summons on the original petition was served in this case on Milton H. Smith, who was its president, on the — day of —, 1885, and from the time the said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company caused the answer to said petition to be filed herein on the — day of —, 1886."

The leave to file was denied on the ground that it was too late to do so after judgment. This order, refusing to allow the amendment, was affirmed by the court of appeals of the state of Kentucky. That court, however, in its opinion intimated that the amendment was not necessary if the averments of the supplemental and amended petition were true, and that under the facts the Louisville & Nashville might be proceeded against by rule to show cause. 99 Ky. 148, 35 S. W. 135, 36 S. W. 168. Following the path thus pointed out by the court of appeals, a rule in the lower *court was applied for to compel the Louisville & Nashville to pay the amount of the judgment. The court considered the suggestion which had been made, in the opinion of the court of appeals, as not binding on it, and hence declined to allow the rule on the ground that the Louisville & Nashville, not having been named as a defendant in the proceeding, could not be by rule condemned to pay the judgment. The court of appeals reversed the order of the trial court, and directed the rule to issue as prayed for. The court in effect held that as the affidavit by which the rule was supported in substance charged that the Louisville & Nashville prior to and during the entire suit had operated the roads from which the revenues accrued which were in controversy, and that that corporation had in substance volunteered in the cause to defend the same in the name of the technical defendant; had carried on the defense through its own counsel; had paid all the expenses of the litigation, the officers of the corporation which was technically a defendant being the officers of the Louisville & Nashville,—therefore the Louisville & Nashville had had under the laws of Kentucky due notice of the suit, and ample opportunity to defend, in fact had actually carried on the defense, and could hence be condemned by rule to pay the judgment. The trial court thereupon entertained and issued the rule, which was served on the Louisville & Nashville. That corporation, for answer to the rule, said, among other things:

First. "That it is not a party to this suit. It has not been named in any pleading in the case as a party, and there is no averment made in any pleading in the case against this respondent, or that is applicable to this respondent, and no judgment or order has ever been entered in this case against this respondent, and no process has ever issued against or ever been served on this respondent."

Second. "There has never been a time from the institution of this suit up to this time when this respondent could, with propriety, have filed an answer setting up its defenses against the alleged claim of the plaintiff, and to require it now to pay into court upon this rule the amount stated in the rule, or any other amount, would be to deprive this [236] respondent of its property *without due process of law, contrary to the Constitution of the United States in such cases made and provided."

The answer then pleaded a set-off to the amount of $16,524.37, which it was claimed the Louisville & Nashville should be allowed if it was held bound to pay the judgment. The conclusion of the answer was as follows: "Wherefore, having fully responded, this respondent prays that the rule herein be discharged." The court, having expressed in a careful opinion its view that the Louisville & Nashville could not be condemned, by rule, because it had not been a technical party to the record, nevertheless, considering itself bound by the action of the court of appeals, made the rule absolute, and entered a decree against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, condemning it to pay the judgment, subject to the set-off which had been pleaded in the answer to the rule, and this judgment was affirmed by the court of appeals of the state of Kentucky as a delay case. By an allowance of a writ of error the cause is now here for review.

Messrs. Helm Bruce and James P. Helm argued the cause and, with Mr. H. W. Bruce, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. John G. Simrall and Edmund F. Trabue argued the cause and, with Messrs. Temple Bodley, John C. Doolan, James S. Pirtle, and Benjamin F. Washer filed a brief for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice White, after making the [236] foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

It is no longer open to contention that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States does not control mere forms of procedure in state courts or regulate practice therein. All its requirements are complied with, provided, in the proceedings which are claimed not to have been due process of law, the person condemned has had sufficient notice and adequate opportunity has been afforded him to defend. Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 40 L. ed. 467, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435.

*The claim of the plaintiff in error (the [237] Louisville & Nashville) is that the decree rendered against it did not constitute due process of law, first, because it had no notice of the suit, it not having been summoned as a party defendant; and, second, that as it was not made a nominal party defendant and served with process as such, it had no adequate opportunity to make defense. In support of the second contention various provisions of the Kentucky law have been referred to in the argument, from which it is deduced that the Louisville & Nashville would have been without right in the proceeding brought, not against it, but against the Cincinnati & Lexington, to make defenses which may have appertained and been relevant to the Louisville & Nashville, and might not have related to the Cincinnati & Lexington, the party defendant on the record. But the answer to these contentions is that the necessary effect of the opinion and decree of the court of last resort of Kentucky is to hold, first, as a matter of fact, that, although not a technical defendant, the Louisville & Nashville became voluntarily, in the name of the Cincinnati & Lexington, the real, although not the nominal, defendant in the cause, and during the long years of this protracted litigation was in legal effect an actor in the courts of Kentucky seeking, by every possible means, to defeat the claim of the plaintiff. The conclusions of fact found by the court of last resort of Kentucky are not subject to re-examination by this court. Clearly, also, the inevitable result of the conclusion of the court of appeals of Kentucky is that it was the duty of the Louisville & Nashville, having come in voluntarily in the cause to defend its interest, under the name of the technical defendant, if it had defenses which were personal to itself, to have made such an appearance on its own behalf as to enable it to make them, and that the statutes of Kentucky not only authorized this course, but obliged the Louisville & Nashville to have followed it. Accepting, as we do, the interpretation placed by the courts of last resort of Kentucky on the law of that state, the contention of the plaintiff in error is at once demonstrated to be without merit. Besides the conclusiveness of what we have just said, there is another view which is equally decisive. The record shows no offer of any defense whatever, by *the Louisville & Nashville, which was refused by the courts below. On the contrary, every defense made is shown to have been entertained, fully considered, and to have been ultimately decided. The argument then reduces itself to this: That one who has voluntarily appeared in a cause and actively conducted the defense is to be held to have been denied, by the courts of the state, the right to make a defense which was never presented. Moreover, even if we put out of view altogether all the proceedings had in the original cause during the many years when the suit was pending, and confine our attention solely to the events which took place after the application for the rule to show cause, on the Louisville & Nashville, the same conclusion is rendered necessary. It is undoubted that the Louisville & Nashville was made a party defendant to the rule in the most technical sense, and was actually served. It made answer and asserted its set-off. The mere fact that the proceeding to hold it liable was by rule does not conflict with due process under the Fourteenth Amendment, for, as we have seen, forms of procedure in the state courts are not controlled by the Fourteenth Amendment, provided the fundamental rights secured by the amendment are not denied. But, it is argued, whilst it is true the effort by rule to enforce responsibility for the judgment did not violate the Fourteenth Amendment, and service of the rule was adequate notice, yet no opportunity to defend was afforded, because all right to defend had been cut off by the previous judgment. In effect it is asserted the rule summoned the corporation to show cause why it should not pay a judgment to which, under the previous decree, there was no right on its part to make any defense whatever. In other words, it is said the right to proceed by rule was upheld by the Kentucky court because the Louisville & Nashville was bound by the judgment and therefore the rule rested on an assumption which precluded the setting up of any defense to it. But the answer to this argument is plain. Although the Louisville & Nashville appeared in response to the rule, pleaded its set-off and declared that its answer constituted a full response, no defense personal to itself of any other character, except the set-off, was pleaded or suggested in any form whatever. The argument, therefore, *asks us to say that the Louisville & Nashville in the proceeding in which it was duly served, and to which it responded, and as to which it had its day in court, was deprived of defenses which it never asserted, and that due process of law was not administered to it because it was unheard in respect to matters concerning which it made no claim. But this court cannot be called upon to conjecture that defenses existed which were not made, and to decide that proceedings in a state court have denied due process of law because defenses were denied, when they were not presented. And especially must that be so where the court of last resort of the state, on review of all the proceedings, has held that full opportunity to make every defense was afforded. True it is that in Rees v. Watertown, 19 Wall. 107, 123, 22 L. ed. 72, 77, it was said: "Whether in fact the individual has a defense to the debt, or by way of exemption, or is without defense, is not important. To assume that he has none, and therefore that he is entitled to no day in court, is to assume against him the very point he may wish to contest." But this truism was stated with reference to a case where it was argued that a condemnation without notice could be justified on the assumption that if notice had been given no defense could have been made. Manifestly, the principle can have no application to a case where there was notice, and the presumption which we are asked to invoke is that although no defenses were pressed they may have possibly existed.

[238]

[239]

177 U. S.

Affirmed.

*THE ALBERT DUMOIS.

[240]

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 240-259.)

Libel for collision—rules of navigation—rules in force on Mississippi below New Orleans—vessels meeting end on or nearly so—mistake in turning to starboard—failure to stop and reverse—faulty construction of vessel—running short-handed and without lookout—evidence of value—interest on valuation—division of damages—balance to vessel totally lost—deduction for damages to intervening claimants—lien for loss of life.

1. The navigation of the Mississippi below New Orleans was subject in January, 1897, to the original rules and regulations of the act of Congress of 1864, reproduced in U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4233.
2. The supervising inspectors' rules applicable to the Mississippi below New Orleans are those for the Atlantic and Pacific inland wa-

NOTE.—As to collision rules—see notes to Williamson v. Barrett, 14 L. ed. U. S. 68; The Abbotsford v. Johnson, 25 L. ed. U. S. 168; The Niagara, 28 C. C. A. 532; The Mount Hope, 29 C. C. A. 368.

As to rules of navigation—see note to The Umbra, 41 L. ed. U. S. 1053.

As to measure of damages for collision—see notes to Smith v. Condry, 11 L. ed. U. S. 35; Williamson v. Barrett, 14 L. ed. U. S. 68.

As to limited liability acts—see note to Lawton v. Comer (D. C. S. D. Ga.) 7 L. R. A. 155.

As to conclusiveness of testimony of experts—see note to Hull v. St. Louis (Mo.) 42 L. R. A. 753.

As to interest on sum allowed as damages—see Wilson v. Troy (N. Y.) 18 L. R. A. 449, and note.

Right to interest upon damages sustained in collision.

The owner of a ship which causes a collision without his special fault is liable for interest from the time of the collision, beyond the value of his ship, appurtenances, and freight, to which his liability is limited by Stat. 53 Geo.

ters, notwithstanding the title thereof excepts "rivers emptying into the Gulf of Mexico," since rule 9 of those pilot rules and rule 14 of the pilot rules for western rivers both contain a clause stating that "the line dividing jurisdiction between the pilot rules on western rivers and harbors, rivers, and inland waters at New Orleans shall be the lower limits of the city," and it cannot be supposed that the river below that point was intended to be exempt altogether from the jurisdiction of the supervising inspectors.

8. A vessel coming up a river at a speed of about 9 miles an hour and from 200 to 500 feet from the east bank, which sees directly ahead and about half a mile away the white and colored lights of a descending steamer, cannot be justified for violating rule 18 by putting the wheel to starboard and signaling an intent to pass starboard to starboard, by reason of her own proximity to the east bank and a cluster of white lights belonging to a tug and two luggers inside of the approaching vessel, and in fact moored to the east bank, on the theory that this was a special circumstance within the meaning of rule 24, rendering a departure from rule 18 necessary to avoid immediate danger, since, if there was any danger at all, it was not an immediate one or one which could not have been provided against by easing her engine and slackening her speed.
4. A vessel cannot be excused from stopping and reversing when required by the rules of navigation, merely because her own construction is so faulty that she cannot stop in time to prevent collision.

5. The fact that a vessel was short-handed and running without a proper lookout, though not decisive of a fault contributing to a collision, may be taken into consideration as bearing upon the probabilities of the case and raising a presumption against her.

6. A steamer which fails to stop and reverse when meeting another steamer end on or nearly so, which commits the fault of starboarding, is guilty of a contributory fault for failing to observe rule 21, which requires her to stop when risk of collision is involved as well as the 3d rule of the supervising inspectors to the same effect.

7. The fact that the owner of a vessel had at the time of a collision concluded a sale of one half the vessel for a certain sum is better evidence of her actual value than the conflicting opinions of experts.

8. The allowance of interest in admiralty cases is discretionary, and not reviewable on appeal by the Supreme Court of the United States, except in a very clear case.

9. The amount awarded to the owner of a vessel which was totally lost in a collision, when both vessels were in fault and proceedings had been taken by the owners of both for limitation of liability, is subject to a deduction of one half of the amount payable for the loss of the life of passengers in the collision, although no recovery could have been had on libels filed against such owner because of the total loss of his vessel and her freight and the extinguishment of his personal liability.

10. A lien or privilege upon a vessel for the loss of life of a passenger is not created by

III. chap. 159, § 1. The Dundee, 2 Hagg. Adm. 137.

In African S. S. Co. v. Swanzy, 25 L. J. Ch. N. S. 870, it was held that interest could not be allowed on the limited liability of the owners as fixed by Stat. 17 & 18 Vict. chap. 104, § 514, as the act contained no provision therefor.

But in Nixon v. Roberts, 4 L. T. N. S. 679, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 844, it was held that interest should be allowed under this act from the time when freight would become due if any were earned, and, if not, from the time of the collision.

And interest was allowed under the same act as amended by Stat. 25 & 26 Vict. chap. 63, § 54, limiting the liability of the owner to £8 per ton of the ship, goods, and merchandise. The Northumbria, 21 L. T. N. S. 681; Straker v. Hartland, 11 L. T. N. S. 622, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 122; Smith v. Kirby, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 131.

It should be allowed if payment is delayed. The Amalia, 34 L. J. Adm. N. S. 21, 8 L. T. N. S. 805.

Interest is allowed in cases tried in the admiralty division, or removed there by consent from the Queen's bench division, on the value of the property lost by reason of a collision or loss of a vessel at sea. The Baron Aberdare, 59 L. T. N. S. 251, 36 Week. Rep. 616.

Interest is allowable from the time of collision on one half the damages for which a vessel is liable under an agreement of compromise made eleven years after. The Kong Magnus [1891] Prob. 223.

While interest might properly be allowed on the value of a pilot boat lost by reason of a collision, it cannot be awarded against the stipulators beyond the sum in which they have bound themselves. The Wanata, 95 U. S. 600, sub nom. The Wanata v. Avery, 24 L. ed. 461.

In The Manitoba, 122 U. S. 97, sub nom. Beatty v. Hanna, 30 L. ed. 1095, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep.

1158, the value of a vessel lost by a collision was more than the bond given, and interest was not allowed on that account.

Interest on the value of a vessel destroyed in a collision cannot be allowed against stipulators who have bound themselves only in a sum equal to the value of the vessel. The Ann Caroline, 2 Wall. 538, sub nom. The Ann Caroline v. Wells, 17 L. ed. 833.

Interest may be allowed or not, in the discretion of the court, on the value of strippings saved from a ship which sinks after causing a collision. The Scotland, 118 U. S. 507, sub. nom. Dyer v. National Steam Nav. Co. 30 L. ed. 153, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1174.

In the Vaughan & Telegraph, 14 Wall. 258, sub nom. The Telegraph v. Gordon, 20 L. ed. 807, interest was allowed without question on the value of the cargo of a canal boat sunk in a collision through the negligence of the steamer conducting it, with another steamer meeting it.

Interest was held to be allowable in The Joshua Barker, Abb. Adm. 215, on the value of a cargo of flour which, after being sunk at the wharf, was raised and sold without communication with the owners, though they were easily accessible.

And interest was allowed on the value of a cargo of barley lost by collision with the canal boat carrying it on the Hudson river. The Mary J. Vaughan, 2 Ben. 47, Fed. Cas. No. 9,217.

In Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. 101, 14 L. ed. 68, the jury were instructed to allow as damages to a steamboat from a collision, the use of her during the time necessary to make repairs, and were told that they were not bound to give interest, but were to give such sum in damages as they should deem just and equitable. On appeal to the Supreme Court, it was held that nothing could be allowed for loss of use of the vessel, but that full damages for the La. Civ. Code, art. 3237, subd. 12, providing a privilege for loss or damage caused to person or property by negligent management of the vessel, as this was not intended to apply to actions for damages resulting in death.

11. Valid claims may be asserted under a limited-liability act for damages on account of the loss of life of passengers in a collision, although there may be no lien or privilege upon the vessel given therefor by local law.

[Nos. 139, 272.]

Argued January 31, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review a decision reversing a decree of the District Court in case of a collision between the Argo, owned by Oscar M. Springer, and the Albert Dumois, owned by Anders Jakobsen in which Marie B. Bourgeois de Blesine and Genevieve Kepingler Hester claimed damages for the death of passengers on the Argo. Affirmed.

See same case below, 59 U. S. App. 108, sub nom. Jakobsen v. Springer, 87 Fed. Rep. 948, 31 C. C. A. 315.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

241] *This was a libel in admiralty filed by Oscar M. Springer, owner of the steamer Argo, a small vessel of 48 tons burthen, against the steamship Albert Dumois, to recover damages sustained by a collision between these two vessels in the early morning of January 28, 1897, in the Mississippi river, about 80 miles below the city of New Orleans. An intervening libel was also filed against the Dumois by the crew of the Argo, to recover the value of their clothing lost by the collision.

Upon the seizure of the Dumois, one Anders Jakobsen, of Christiana, Norway, appeared as claimant and owner, and on February 3, 1897, filed a petition for a limitation of liability, in which he also denied any negligence on behalf of the Dumois. Upon the same day, Marie B. Bourgeois de Blesine, mother of Faure de Blesine, a passenger on board the Argo, filed a libel in personam against Jakobsen, claiming damages for the death of her son through the negligence of the Dumois. Her suit was thereupon consolidated with that of Springer, and treated as a petition against the stipulation given for the release of the steamer under the proceedings for a limitation of liability. Upon the appraisalment of the Albert Dumois at the sum of $30,000, and pending freight at the sum of $1,333.75, and the filing of a stipulation to pay these sums into court, an or-injury at the time and place of its occurrence, with legal interest, was the proper measure of damages.

In The North Star, 44 Fed. Rep. 492, the allowance of interest in case of a collision was held to be in the discretion of the court, and its allowance would not be disturbed where both parties were nearly equally in fault, and there was manifest discrepancy in the testimony of the party against whom it is awarded.

But on appeal the appellate court, differing with the conclusions of the district judge, which had induced him not to disturb the report of the commission upon that point, modified the decree by excluding the interest there allowed. The North Star, 22 U. S. App. 242, 62 Fed. Rep. 71, 10 C. C. A. 262. The court said: "It is well settled in this country that the question whether interest shall be allowed by the court of first instance or by the appellate court in admiralty, on the amount of damages awarded in a collision case, is one in the discretion of the court."

And while interest on the cost of repairs from the collision is usually allowed, it is a matter of discretion; and where the vessel is materially improved, and there is doubt whether the entire bill for repairs should be allowed, it will be refused. The Alaska, 44 Fed. Rep. 498.

In Whitehall Transp. Co. v. New Jersey S. B. Co. 51 N. Y. 369, the owners of a canal boat injured by a collision were held to be entitled to interest on the cost of repairs.

And in Mailler v. Express Propeller Line, 61 N. Y. 312, interest was allowed on the cost of repairs and the rental value of a sloop injured by a collision.

Interest on sums actually paid for materials and repairs prior to the filing of the libel is allowable as part of the damages for collision. The Natchez, 41 U. S. App. 708, 78 Fed. Rep. 183, 24 C. C. A. 49.

Interest may be allowed on the value of a sloop and its cargo, sunk by a steamer's colliding with it while drifting with the tide without sufficient wind to give it steerage way. Parrott v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 46 N. Y. 361.

But interest will not be allowed on an award of damages in a collision case, to a steamer guilty of gross recklessness in porting near the point of meeting another steamer in a fog and crossing her bow, where the latter is guilty only of excessive speed and failure to stop at the proper time. The North Star, 22 U. S. App. 242, 62 Fed. Rep. 71, 10 C. C. A. 262.

The jury may allow interest on the damage done to a vessel by a collision. Fitch v. Livingston, 4 Sandf. 492.

Interest is properly allowed on the damages sustained by a vessel in a collision. The Bulgaria, 83 Fed. Rep. 312.

Interest in the nature of and intended as damages may be allowed upon the sum awarded as damages for detention, which were specifically and sufficiently proved. The Natchez, 41 U. S. App. 708, 78 Fed. Rep. 183, 24 C. C. A. 49.

Interest on the value of the injury received by a vessel in a collision, from the time when it was inflicted, may be recovered as necessary to make full compensation, where payment has been withheld. The Illinois, 84 Fed. Rep. 697.

But in Ormsby v. Johnson, 1 B. Mon. 80, it was held that interest could not be allowed on the damage done to a flat boat and its cargo, run into and sunk by a steamboat.

In Fowler v. Davenport, 21 Tex. 626, it was held to be erroneous to allow interest on the value of cotton intrusted to a boat for transportation, which was damaged by reason of the boat's being run into by a raft.

Interest from the time of the collision cannot be added to the appraised value of the vessel at fault, in proceedings to limit the liability of the owners; but the owners are entitled to a discharge on surrendering the vessel or paying her value into court, although they should provide for the payment of interest on her value until such time as the money is paid if they prefer to give bond instead of making present payment. The Battier, 58 Fed. Rep. 704.

der was issued enjoining further proceedings against the steamship and her owner, and directing all persons claiming damages by reason of the collision to appear before a commissioner and make proof thereof.

[242] On May 5, 1897, Genevieve Keplinger Hester, widow of Harrison P. Hester, a passenger on the Argo, and natural tutrix of his minor child, filed an intervening petition under the limited liability proceedings, claiming damages for the death of her husband, and alleging that the same was caused solely through the fault of the Dumois.

Thereafter, on December 16, 1897, Springer, as the owner of the Argo, filed a surrender of his vessel and pending charter money to the intervening claimants against the Dumois, and prayed for relief under the limited liability act.

The case of the Argo as set forth in her libel and answer to the petition of the owner of the Dumois for a limitation of liability was this: On January 27, 1897, at 7 o'clock in the evening, the Argo started from the port of New Orleans on a trip to the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi river. Upon the following morning, about 12.40 A. M., while proceeding down the middle of the river, at or near Oyster Bayou, the master noticed the white and red lights of a steamer coming up stream about 500 feet from the east bank, and immediately gave a signal of one blast of his whistle, signifying that he would turn to starboard and pass on the port side of the approaching steamer, to which the latter responded with two blasts of her whistle, and began crossing the river, shutting out her red and showing her green light. Thereupon the Argo promptly responded with one blast of her whistle, still claiming her right to pass on the port side of the approaching steamer, and put her helm hard-a-port to clear the Dumois, as she had the right to do, and as in the judgment of her master it was best for her to do. Whereupon the Dumois continued her course across the river and blew a danger signal of three blasts of her whistle, but too late to avoid a collision, the Argo striking the Dumois while she was crossing the Argo's bow about 8 feet abaft her stem, causing the Argo to fill with water and sink about four minutes thereafter, whereby she was totally lost and two of her passengers were drowned.

[243] The case of the Dumois was that, while proceeding up the Mississippi river about half-past twelve at night, on a voyage from Port Limon, Costa Rica, to New Orleans, with her full complement of officers and seamen, she had reached a point in the Mississippi river about 80 miles below the city of New Orleans, and was proceeding up the river as close to the east bank as it was safe for her to do, at a moderate speed of about 9 pass the Argo to the left, starboard to starboard, and at the same time her wheel was put to starboard. In answer, the Argo wrongfully responded to the signal with one blast of her whistle. Thereupon the pilot of the Dumois, fearing that the Argo had misunderstood his signal, immediately repeated it, and at once caused three or more short blasts of her whistle to be given in quick succession, to indicate danger, and at the same time stopped and backed her engines; but the Argo neglected to stop and back, and kept her course and speed until her pilot saw the green or starboard light of the Dumois, when he attempted to pass her by putting his wheel hard-a-port, which brought the Argo in collision with the steamship, striking her at right angles on the starboard side, about 10 feet abaft the stem, from which collision the Argo sank and became a total loss.

Upon a hearing upon pleadings and proofs the district court announced in an oral opinion its conclusion that the collision was caused solely by the fault of the Dumois, and awarded the libellant Springer $11,000 for the loss of the Argo; to Mrs. Hester, $5,000; to Mrs. de Blesine, $2,500, and to the crew of the Argo the respective sums claimed by them.

From this decree the owner of the Dumois appealed to the circuit court of appeals, assigning in substance as error that the collision was caused through the sole fault of the Argo, and that the amount awarded was excessive. An appeal was also taken by Springer, claiming that the amount awarded him as the value of the Argo was too small; but no appeal was taken by the intervening libellants.

The circuit court of appeals reversed the decree of the district court, holding that both vessels were in fault for the collision, and that as between the owners of the steamships the damages should be divided. It further increased the allowance of damages to Springer to $15,000 and assessed those sustained by the Dumois at $185. It was [244] further decreed that Springer recover $7,500 of the Dumois and her bondsmen, subject to a credit of one half of the damages of the Dumois, and one half of the amounts decreed in favor of Mrs. Hester and Mrs. de Blesine, leaving a balance due upon this decree in favor of Springer of $3,657.50, for which he was awarded execution. 59 U. S. App. 108, sub nom. Jakobsen v. Springer, 87 Fed. Rep. 948, 31 C. C. A. 315. Both parties filed petitions for rehearing, which were denied.

Whereupon both parties applied for and were granted writs of certiorari from this court.

Mr. Richard De Gray argued the cause and filed a brief for Springer:

No contribution can be claimed as between joint wrongdoers.

Addison, Torts, 1891 ed. p. 21.

Actual perceived danger alone demands the duty of slackening speed.

The Free State, 91 U. S. 200, sub nom. Ludwig v. The Free State, 23 L. ed. 299.

The burden of proof lies on the party alleging that he is justified in a departure from the rules of navigation in order to avoid immediate danger.

The Agra, L. R. 1 P. C. 501; The General Lee, Ir. Rep. 3 Eq. 155.

When a vessel has committed a positive breach of statute she must show, not only that probably her fault did not contribute to the disaster, but that it could not have done so.

The Pennsylvania, 19 Wall. 126, sub nom. The Pennsylvania v. Troop, 22 L. ed. 148; Richelieu & O. Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co. 136 U. S. 408, 34 L. ed. 398, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934; The Britannia, 153 U. S. 143, sub nom. The Britannia v. Cleugh, 38 L. ed. 665, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 795; The Victory & The Plymothian, 168 U. S. 428, 42 L. ed. 530, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 149; The Maggie J. Smith, 123 U. S. 349, sub nom. The Maggie J. Smith v. Walker, 31 L. ed. 175, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159.

Mr. Timothy E. Tarsney also argued the cause and filed a brief for Springer:

There is no lien arising from death caused by negligence, which can be asserted under the general admiralty law.

The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

No lien or privilege upon the offending thing, which is necessary to give a court of admiralty jurisdiction to proceed in rem, is created by the Louisiana statute providing for survival of the right of action for an act of negligence in case of death.

The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, sub nom. Barton v. Brown, 36 L. ed. 727, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949.

The owners of both steamers having brought themselves within the limitations of the liability act, no sum can be awarded beyond the value of the vessel in the condition she is in after the collision.

Place v. Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. 118 U. S. 468, 30 L. ed. 134, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1150; The Scotland, 105 U. S. 24, sub nom. National Steam Nav. Co. v. Dyer, 26 L. ed. 1001; The Great Western, 118 U. S. 520, sub nom. Thommessen v. Whitwill, 30 L. ed. 156, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1172.

The rule is well settled that steamers approaching each other from opposite directions are respectively bound to port their helms, and pass each other on the larboard side.

New York & B. Transp. Co. v. Philadelphia & S. Steam Nav. Co. 22 How. 461, 16 L. ed. 397; The Niagara, 3 Blatchf. 37, Fed. Cas. No. 10,220; Barrett v. Williamson, 4 McLean, 589, Fed. Cas. No. 1,051; Williamson v. Barrett, 13 How. 101, 14 L. ed. 68.

It is not enough for the party who departs from this rule to show that they would have gone clear if each had kept its course. He must also show that the other party ought to have perceived there was no probable chance of a collision by so doing.

Wheeler v. The Eastern State, 2 Curt. C. C. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 17,494.

Where one of two approaching steamers observes the rule that she is to port helm, 177 U. S.

the burden lies on the other that departed from the rule to make out a justification.

The Washington, 3 Blatchf. 276, Fed. Cas. No. 17,220.

If the collision occurs from such other vessel not having kept her course, the obligation rests on the latter to show sufficient excuse in the particular case for the departure from the rule.

The Corsica, 9 Wall. 630, sub nom. The Corsica v. Schuyler, 19 L. ed. 804; The Chesapeake, 5 Blatchf. 411, Fed. Cas. No. 2,643.

Where to avoid a collision between two vessels propelled by steam, one going with and the other against the tide, it is conceded that one should stop, it is the duty of the vessel proceeding against the tide to do so, as her movements can be controlled with less difficulty than those of the other vessel.

The Galatea, 92 U. S. 439, sub nom. Robert v. The Galatea, 23 L. ed. 727.

A steamer which is bound to keep out of the way of another approaching so as to involve a risk of collision has no right to attempt to pass to the left, unless there is an imperative necessity for it.

The E. H. Coffin, 16 Blatchf. 421, Fed. Cas. No. 4,310.

The preferred steamer will not be held in fault for maintaining her course and speed so long as it is possible for the other to avoid her by porting,—at least in the absence of some distinct indication that she is about to fail in her duty.

Hutchinson v. The Northfield, 154 U. S. 629, 24 L. ed. 680, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1184; The Britannia, 153 U. S. 130, sub nom. The Britannia v. Cleugh, 38 L. ed. 660, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 795; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 467, 40 L. ed. 774, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 516.

Mr. Wilhelmus Mynderse argued the cause and filed a brief for Jakobsen:

When one vessel is found grossly in fault, the court will not examine critically to see whether the other has exercised the highest degree of skill and management.

The Elizabeth Jones, 112 U. S. 514, sub nom. Jones v. Slauson, 28 L. ed. 812, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; The Maggie J. Smith, 123 U. S. 349, sub nom. The Maggie J. Smith v. Walker, 31 L. ed. 175, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159; The Victory & The Plymothian, 168 U. S. 410, 42 L. ed. 519, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 149.

To secure the benefit of limitation of liability a surrender is essential, not merely of the physical wreck, but also of all the rights of action which were directly representative of the ship and freight.

O'Brien v. Miller, 168 U. S. 287, 42 L. ed. 469, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140.

The owners of the Albert Dumois and of the Argo both instituted their respective proceedings for limitation of liability within the period of prescription, and therefore during the life of the liens. Thereafter the claims of Mrs. Blesine and Mrs. Hester were maintainable only in such proceedings, and were enforceable only against the security given therein.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4285; Admiralty Rules, 54-58; Norwich & N. Y. Transp. Co. v. Wright, 13 Wall. 123, 20 L. ed. 591; Provi- dence & N. Y. S. S. Co. v. Hill Mfg. Co. 109 U. S. 598, 27 L. ed. 1045, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379, 617; Butler v. Boston & S. S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612.

The claims filed by them respectively were proper claims to file in limited liability proceedings.

The Catskill, 95 Fed. Rep. 700.

If the Albert Dumois was partly in fault for the collision, then the decree against the bond given for that vessel in favor of Mrs. Blesine and Mrs. Hester, respectively, was correct. And, upon the assumption that both vessels were in fault, the decree was correct in offsetting against the allowance to the owner of the Argo one half of all damages sustained by the Albert Dumois physically, or paid by her stipulators.

The North Star, 106 U. S. 17, sub nom. Reynolds v. Vanderbilt, 27 L. ed. 91, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 43 L. ed. 801, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491.

Messrs. John D. Rouse and William Grant also filed a brief for Jakobsen:

No steamer has the right to navigate at such rate that it is impossible for her to prevent damage, taking all precautions the moment she sees danger to be possible.

The Syracuse, 9 Wall. 672, sub nom. Hancock v. The Syracuse, 19 L. ed. 783; Newton v. Stebbins, 10 How. 606, 13 L. ed. 559; McCready v. Goldsmith, 18 How. 89, 15 L. ed. 288; The New York v. Rea, 18 How. 223, 15 L. ed. 359; The State of Alabama, 17 Fed. Rep. 847; The Pennsylvania, 19 Wall. 125, sub nom. The Pennsylvania v. Troop, 22 L. ed. 148.

Not even flagrant fault on the part of one vessel will authorize the other to run her down, or excuse the other from adopting every proper measure to prevent an accident.

The America, 92 U. S. 432, 23 L. ed. 724.

The allowance of interest on damages in cases of this character is not a matter of right, but rests in the discretion of the lower court.

The Scotland, 118 U. S. 518, sub nom. Dyer v. National Steam Nav. Co. 30 L. ed. 155, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1174.

Messrs. George Denègre, J. P. Blair and Walter D. Denègre filed a brief for Mrs. Hester.

[244] *Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

This collision occurred in January, 1897, in the Mississippi river, about 80 miles below New Orleans, and the steamers in their signals and manœuvres were governed by the original rules and regulations of the act of 1864, reproduced in Rev. Stat. § 4233. A brief review of the numerous acts subsequent thereto upon the same subject will show that the act of 1864 continued in force upon the Mississippi river at the time of this collision.

1. The original act, now known as Rev. Stat. § 4233, was adopted from the British Orders in Council of 1863, was made of general application "in the navigation of vessels of the navy and of the mercantile marine of the United States," and was supplemented by §§ 4412 and 4413, giving the board of supervising inspectors power to "establish such regulations to be *observed by all[245] steam vessels in passing each other as they shall from time to time deem necessary for safety."

This Code remained in force substantially unaffected by legislation until March 3, 1885, when the "Revised International Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea" were adopted by act of Congress (23 Stat. at L. 438, chap. 354), and made applicable to "the navigation of all public and private vessels of the United States upon the high seas and in all coast waters of the United States, except such as are otherwise provided for." By section 2 all laws inconsistent with these rules were repealed, "except as to the navigation of such vessels within the harbors, lakes, and inland waters of the United States." As to such waters the original Code of 1864 remained in force, explained and supplemented by the rules of the supervising inspectors. The Delaware, 161 U. S. 459, 463, 40 L. ed. 771, 772, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 516; The New York, 175 U. S. 187, 193, ante, 126, 128, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, 69.

On August 19, 1890, Congress adopted a new Code "to be followed by all public and private vessels of the United States upon the high seas and in all waters connected therewith, navigable by seagoing vessels" (26 Stat. at L. 320, chap. 802), article 30 of which declared that "nothing in these rules shall interfere with the operation of a special rule duly made by local authority, relative to the navigation of any harbor, river, or inland waters." The 2d section repealed all inconsistent laws, and the 3d section provided that the act should take effect at a time to be fixed by the President by proclamation issued for that purpose. This act was amended by act of May 28, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 82, chap. 83), providing certain lights for small vessels. By another act of June 10, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 381, chap. 401), amending the law with regard to signals, it was declared in the 2d section that the original act as amended should "take effect at a subsequent time to be fixed by the President by proclamation," although another act approved February 23, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 680, chap. 127), had already provided that it should take effect at a time to be fixed by the President. The President at first declared that the act should take effect March 1, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 1250), which date was subsequently postponed by another proclamation (28 Stat. at L. 1259). *By[246] still another proclamation of December 31, 1896 (29 Stat. at L. 885), it was declared that the act of August 19, 1890, as subsequently amended, should take effect July 1, 1897.

Meantime, however, and on February 8, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 645, chap. 64), Congress passed another Code to be "followed in the navigation of all public and private vessels of the United States, upon the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters, as far east as Montreal," to take effect March 1, 1895. This act repealed the act of 1864

so far as it applied to the Great Lakes and their connecting waters. All this legislation, however, left the harbors, rivers, and other inland waters of the United States unaffected either by the acts of 1885, 1890, or 1895; and to make the intention of Congress more certain in this particular, on February 19, 1895 (28 Stat. at L. 672, chap. 102), Congress enacted that the original provisions of §§ 4233, 4412, and 4413 of the Revised Statutes, and regulations of the supervising inspectors pursuant thereto, shall be followed on the harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, and the provisions of said sections were declared special rules duly made by local authority relative to the navigation of such waters, as provided for in article 30 of the act of August 19, 1890, above quoted. Section 4 provided that the words "inland waters" should not be held to include the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters as far east as Montreal, and that the act should not, in any respect, affect the act of February 8, 1895.

Finally, on June 7, 1897 (30 Stat. at L. 96, chap. 4), Congress adopted a set of regulations to be "followed by all vessels navigating all harbors, rivers, and inland waters of the United States, except the Great Lakes and their connecting and tributary waters, as far east as Montreal and the Red River of the north and rivers emptying into the Gulf of Mexico, and their tributaries." This act, as well as that of August 19, 1890, adopting regulations for preventing collisions at sea, was amended February 19, 1900, so far as it related to lights on steam pilot vessels; but as this act of 1897 was approved June 7, to take effect four months thereafter, it is unnecessary to consider to what waters it is applicable. It certainly has no bearing [247] upon this collision, which took place *January 28, 1897, and is cited merely as a part of the history of Congressional action upon the general subject.

The effect of all this legislation was at the time of the collision, and perhaps is still, to leave the rivers emptying into the Gulf of Mexico subject to the provisions of the original act, Rev. Stat. § 4233.

2. If the legislation of Congress in this connection be somewhat complicated, the result is at least clear that the navigation of the Mississippi was subject to the original rules and regulations of Revised Statutes, § 4233; but the rules of the supervising inspectors, supplementary thereto, are ambiguous, and in one respect quite difficult of interpretation. There are three sets of these rules: 1. Pilot rules for Atlantic and Pacific inland waters; 2. pilot rules for western rivers; 3. pilot rules for the Great Lakes and their connecting tributary waters as far east as Montreal. The third may be left out of consideration in this case.

The pilot rules for western rivers are entitled, "Rules and Regulations for the Government of Pilots of Steamers Navigating the Red River of the North and Rivers Whose Waters Flow into the Gulf of Mexico, and their Tributaries." There can be no doubt whatever that these rules apply to the Mis-issippi and its tributaries, and there could be no doubt that it applied to the river below New Orleans, were it not for rule 14, which declares that "the line dividing jurisdiction between the pilot rules on western rivers and harbors, rivers, and inland waters at New Orleans, shall be the lower limits of the city." This should evidently be construed as if it read: "The line dividing jurisdiction between the pilot rules on western rivers and the pilot rules on harbors, rivers, and inland waters at New Orleans shall be the lower limits of the city." This excludes the Mississippi below New Orleans, and indicates that some other rules are applicable.

But on referring to the pilot rules for the Atlantic and Pacific coast inland waters, we find them entitled, "Rules and Regulations for the Government of Pilots of Steamers Navigating Harbors, Rivers, and Inland Waters (except the Great Lakes, the Red River of the North, and *Rivers Emptying into the Gulf of Mexico and their Tributaries), [248] when Meeting or Approaching Each Other, Whether by Day or Night, and as Soon as Fully Within Sound of the Steam Whistle." Rule 9 of these pilot rules contains the same provisions as rule 14 of the pilot rules for western rivers, namely, that the line dividing jurisdiction between pilot rules on western rivers and harbors and inland waters at New Orleans shall be the lower limits of the city. There could be no doubt whatever that the intention was to divide the jurisdiction as to the Mississippi river between the rules applicable to western rivers and the rules for Atlantic and Pacific coast inland waters, were it not for the fact that in the entitling of these latter rules rivers emptying into the Gulf of Mexico are excepted. But we are of opinion that these words were intended as a general exception of the waters covered by the pilot rules for western rivers, and that they were not intended to apply to the Mississippi below New Orleans, in view of the provision of both sets of rules that the pilot rules for western rivers should cease to be applicable at the lower limits of that city. As New Orleans is practically the head of navigation for foreign trade, it was perfectly reasonable that the supervising inspectors should apply to the lower Mississippi the rules and regulations adopted for the harbors, rivers, and inland waters navigated by vessels engaged in foreign trade, while they still left the regulations provided for western rivers to remain applicable to the Mississippi above New Orleans, where the commerce is almost altogether domestic in its character. The only alternative of this proposition is to hold that the supervising inspectors intended to exempt from their jurisdiction altogether the waters of the Mississippi below New Orleans, some 150 miles in length,—a supposition so improbable that it must be rejected at once. We hold, therefore, that the Atlantic and Pacific coast rules apply to these waters.

Such being the rules and regulations applicable to this case, we are remitted to the inquiry how far they were obeyed and how far disregarded by the vessels concerned in this collision. The night was clear and starlight, the river substantially straight at this point, and about half a mile wide, with no obstruction or other special circumstances, under rule 24, rendering a departure [249]*from the general rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger. In short, the conditions were all favorable to safety, and the collision could not have occurred without egregious fault on the part of one or both vessels. In endeavoring to locate this fault we are at liberty to consider the movements of each vessel from its own standpoint, and, without attempting to reconcile the conflicting statements of the two crews or to settle disputed questions of fact, to inquire upon the showing made by each whether that vessel was guilty of fault contributing to the collision.

3. As to the Albert Dumois: She was a Norwegian vessel, 210 feet long, drawing 17 feet of water, and was bound up the river to New Orleans. While proceeding up the east side of the river at a speed of about 9 miles an hour, and from 250 to 500 feet from the east bank, she made directly ahead, and at a probable distance of about half a mile, the white and colored lights of the Argo coming down the river. Her theory of the case was, and the entire testimony of her watch showed, that the Argo was approaching her "end on, or nearly end on," within the meaning of rule 18, which declares that "if two vessels under steam are meeting end on, or nearly end on, so as to involve risk of collision, the helms of both shall be put to port, so that each may pass on the port side of the other." Notwithstanding this, however, the wheel of the Dumois was put to starboard, and a signal of two whistles blown to the Argo, manifesting an intention on the part of the Dumois to sheer out into the river and pass the Argo starboard to starboard. Her excuse for doing this was her own proximity to the east bank and a cluster of white lights belonging to a tug and two luggers inside of the Argo, and in fact moored to the east bank of the river.

We cannot, however, accept this as a "special circumstance" within the meaning of rule 24 rendering a departure from rule 18 necessary "to avoid immediate danger," since if there were any danger at all it was not an immediate one, or one which could not have been provided against by easing the engines of the Dumois and slackening her speed. Exceptions to the general rules of navigation are admitted with reluctance on [250]*the part of the courts, and only when an adherence to such rules must almost necessarily result in a collision—such, for instance, as a manifestly wrong maneuver on the part of an approaching vessel. Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 699, 37 L. ed. 1218, 1227, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264; The Britannia, 153 U. S. 130, sub nom. The Britannia, v. Cleugh, 38 L. ed. 660, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 795; The Test, 5 Notes of Cases, 276; The Superior, 6 Notes of Cases, 607; The Khedive, L. R. 5 App. Cas. 876; The Benares, L. R. 9 Prob. Div. 16; Marsden, Collisions, 480. As was said in The John Buddle, 5 Notes of Cases, 387: "All rules are framed for the benefit of ships navigating the seas, and, no doubt, circumstances will arise in which it would be perfect folly to attempt to carry into execution every rule, howsoever wisely framed. It is, at the same time, of the greatest possible importance to adhere as closely as possible to established rules, and never to allow a deviation from them unless the circumstances which are alleged to have rendered such a deviation necessary are most distinctly approved and established; otherwise, vessels would always be in doubt and doing wrong."

The case of The Concordia, L. R. 1 Adm. & Eccl. 93, resembles much the instant case in this particular. That was a collision between two steam vessels meeting nearly end on in the river Thames. Defendants alleged that the helm of their vessel was put to starboard to avoid a barge. It was held that the burden of proof that a departure from the rule, which required both steamers to port, was necessary in order to avoid immediate danger, rested upon the defendants, and that, in the absence of sufficient evidence to show what became of the barge, the defendants had failed in their proof, and were therefore in fault for the collision, the result of not porting their helm. See also The Agra, L. R. 1 P. C. 501.

Manifestly the Argo had a right to rely upon the Dumois pursuing the usual course of putting her helm to port, and her failure to do so was likely to raise a doubt on the part of the Argo as to her own duty, and to bring about the collision it was designed to avoid. If, as insisted by the crew of the Argo, the Dumois was nearer to the east bank than the descending steamer, and exhibited to the latter her white and red lights only, the fault of the Dumois in starboarding and crossing the course of the Argo becomes still more manifest. The fact put forward by the [251] pilot of the Dumois, that the Argo seemed so close to the luggers that she appeared to be one of them (although contradicted by the testimony of the libellant that the Argo was in the middle of the river) was one which undoubtedly called for caution on the part of the Dumois, but it did not involve an immediate danger which justified a departure from the general rule.

4. The Argo, a vessel of 48 tons burthen, 101 feet in length, and drawing 6 feet of water, had been chartered by some representatives of the press to meet, at the mouth of the river, a congressional committee sent to inspect the jetties and to report the proceedings of the committee. According to her inspection certificate the Argo should have had one pilot, one engineer, and a crew of five men, but as they were in great haste to get away, Messrs. Hester, Lindauer, and Blesine, newspaper correspondents, all of whom were said to be familiar with the management of water craft, agreed to enroll themselves as part of the crew, and if necessary to lend a hand. Their assistance does not seem to have been of any great value, as they all "turned in" immediately upon coming on board. The Argo left New Orleans about 7 o'clock in the evening, having on board a master, who also served as pilot, an engineer, a fireman, one deck hand, and a steward.

who also served as cook, besides the newspaper correspondents. She took her course down the river at a speed of about 20 miles an hour, and at the time of making the lights of the Dumois was either in the middle of the river or between that and the east bank. There was conflict of evidence upon her exact location, but in the view we have taken of the case it does not become necessary to determine this with accuracy. Her testimony indicates that she made the white and red lights of the Dumois upon her port bow, and blew her a signal of one whistle; that the Dumois responded with a signal of two whistles, starboarded her helm, shut in her red and exhibited her green light, and took her course across the path of the Argo. The Argo again blew her a signal of one whistle, to which the Dumois again responded with two, followed it with a danger signal, and the Argo, still maintaining her great speed, put [252] her wheel hard-a-port, struck the *Dumois upon her starboard bow, and was herself almost immediately sunk by the force of the impact.

The master of the Argo excuses his failure to stop and reverse, which it was his duty to do as soon as he saw the wrong maneuver of the Dumois, by the fact that the starboarding of the Dumois put him in a position in which he was obliged to decide instantly what ought to be done; that, in the exercise of his best judgment, he determined to put his helm hard-a-port, and endeavor to cross the bows of the Dumois; and that, if he made a mistake in this particular, it was an error in extremis, for which the Argo is not responsible. The argument is undoubtedly entitled to great weight, but we think the real error was not committed in extremis. The theory of the Argo is that she was coming down the middle of the river, and that she made the Dumois on her port bow, exhibiting a red light. She was running herself at 20 miles an hour, with the added force of the current. The Dumois was running against the current at the rate of 9 miles an hour. That the Dumois must have starboarded and shown her green light some time before the Argo ported is evident from the place of the collision, which was to the westward of the middle of the river, and, upon the theory of the Argo, was near the westerly bank. As the Dumois was within 500 feet of the easterly bank when she starboarded,—the river at that point being about 2,500 feet wide,—she must have run under her starboard helm about a quarter of a mile before reaching the point of collision. Now, if the Argo had promptly ported as soon as she heard the cross-signal or observed the starboarding of the Dumois, she would inevitably have passed the point of intersection before the Dumois reached it. The fault of the Argo was not in the hard-a-port order when the collision was inevitable, but in failing to stop and reverse at once as soon as she noticed the starboarding of the Dumois. The testimony from the Dumois indicates that she blew her first whistle and starboarded as soon as the Argo's lights were seen, and that if the Argo had starboarded and reversed, the collision would not have occurred. The truth seems to be that the Argo did not port when giving her first signal, but waited for some time, and then put her helm hard-a-port, but too late to be of any avail.

*The testimony indicates that the Argo is [253] chargeable with an infraction of the 3d rule of the supervising inspectors in failing to stop and reverse after receiving the cross-signals from the Dumois. This rule requires that "if, when steamers are approaching each other, the pilot of either vessel fails to understand the course or intention of the other, whether from signals being given or answered erroneously, or from other causes, the pilot so in doubt shall immediately signify the same by giving several short and repeated blasts of the steam whistle; and if the vessels shall have approached within half a mile of each other, both shall be immediately slowed to a speed barely sufficient for steerage way until the proper signals are given, answered, and understood, or until the vessels shall have passed each other. Vessels approaching each other from opposite directions are forbidden to use what has become technically known among pilots as 'cross-signals,'—that is, answering one whistle with two, and two whistles with one. In all cases, and under all circumstances, a pilot receiving either of the whistle signals provided in rules, which for any reason he deems injudicious to comply with, instead of answering with a cross-signal, must at once observe the provisions of this rule."

The master also seeks to excuse himself by alleging that the Argo was so constructed that her headway could not have been stopped in time to be of any service. This may be true, and yet the Dumois should not be held responsible for the faulty construction of the Argo in this particular. While a steamer may be so built as to attain the utmost possible speed, she ought also to be provided with such means of stopping or changing her course as are commensurate with her great speed; and the very fact of her being so fast and apparently uncontrollable is an additional reason for the greater caution in her navigation. Her increase of speed should have been obtained with as little increase of risk to other vessels as was possible, and if any precautions in that direction were neglected, it was a fault for which she alone ought to be called upon to respond. This court has repeatedly held the fault, and even the gross fault of one vessel, does not absolve the other from the use of such precautions as good judgment and accomplished seamanship require. *The Maria Martin, 12 [254] Wall. 31, sub nom. Martin v. Northern Transp. Co. 20 L. ed. 251; The America, 92 U. S. 432, sub nom. The America v. Camden & O. R. Transp. Co. 23 L. ed. 724; The Lucille, 15 Wall. 679, sub nom. The Lucille v. Respass, 21 L. ed. 248; The Sunnyside, 91 U. S. 208, sub nom. Miner v. The Sunnyside, 23 L. ed. 302.

But counsel for the Argo also insists that, as the two vessels, from the moment the Argo ported and the Dumois starboarded, were upon crossing courses, the 19th rule, which declares that "the vessel which has the other on her own starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other," applied, and that the Dumois should have ported, and the Argo was bound, under the case of The Britannia, 153 U. S. 130, sub nom. The Britannia v. Cleugh, 38 L. ed. 660, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 795, to keep her course and speed. We are reluctant, however, to say that, where two vessels are meeting end on, or nearly end on, under the 18th rule, the faulty movement of starboarding by one absolves the other from the obligation of rule 21, which requires that "every steam vessel, when approaching another vessel, so as to involve risk of collision, shall slacken her speed, or, if necessary, stop and reverse."

In the case of the Britannia, the decision of the court that, of two crossing steamers, the preferred vessel should have kept her course and speed, was put upon the ground that the course of the Britannia, the obligated vessel, was precisely what might have been anticipated, and did not warrant the Beaconsfield, the preferred vessel, in disregarding the injunctions of the 23d rule, which required her to keep her course. It was intimated that a different conclusion might have been reached if it had appeared that the Britannia was herself violating a rule of navigation. Now, as it appears from the testimony of the Argo's crew that they not only heard the signal of two whistles from the Dumois, but saw her turn under her starboard wheel, and exhibit her green light when she should have ported, they were at once apprised of the fact that she was violating a rule of navigation, and that prompt action was required to avoid a collision.

The fact that the Argo was short-handed and was also running without a proper lookout, though not decisive of a fault contributing to the collision, may be taken into consideration as bearing upon the probabilities of the case, and raising a presumption against her.

[255] We are of opinion that the Dumois was primarily in fault *for this collision, in starboarding instead of porting when she first sighted the Argo; and while the case with respect to the Argo is by no means free from doubt, the majority of the court are also of opinion that the Argo was in fault for failing to observe the 21st rule, which required her to stop when risk of collision was involved, as well as the 3d rule of the supervising inspectors to the same effect.

5. There was no error in fixing the value of the Argo at the sum of $15,000, an increase of $4,000 over the amount fixed by the district court. The evidence of her builders was that she originally cost $18,000, and that, if she had been kept in good repair, she would have been worth two thirds of that amount at the time of the collision. There was also testimony to the effect that her owner had, at the time of the collision, concluded a sale of one half the Argo for $7,500, and that it was to have been delivered and the money paid for this moiety on the day following that upon which she was lost, and upon her return to the city. This is better evidence of her actual value than the conflicting opinions of experts more or less friendly to the owner, who put her value at from $8,500 to $30,000. As the district court and the circuit court of appeals agreed that her value did not exceed $15,000, we should be unwilling to increase that amount unless upon clear proof of inadvertence or mistake.

There was no error in refusing to allow interest upon her valuation. The allowance of interest in admiralty cases is discretionary, and not reviewable in this court except in a very clear case. The Scotland, 118 U. S. 507, 518, sub nom. Dyer v. National Steam Nav. Co. 30 L. ed. 153, 155, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1174.

6. In the assessment of damages an important question arose as to whether a moiety of the amounts awarded to Mrs. Blesine and Mrs. Hester should be deducted from the amount recoverable by the owners of the Argo. The libel of Mrs. Blesine was filed against Jakobsen as owner of the Dumois, and process of attachment prayed against his goods and chattels, credits and effects. This libel, subsequently consolidated with that of Springer, was treated as a petition against the bond given for the release of the steamer under the proceedings for a limited liability. A similar petition was filed by Mrs. Hester. In the *following December, [256] Springer, the libellant and owner of the Argo, surrendered to the claimants and interveners his vessel and the freight. These intervening libels, as well as that of the seamen, proceeded as one suit, and in the decree of the circuit court of appeals Mrs. Blesine was awarded $2,500 and Mrs. Hester $5,000, one half of which was deducted from the amount awarded to Springer.

Admitting that if these intervening libels had been filed against Springer as owner of the Argo, nothing could have been recovered of him by reason of the total loss of the Argo and her freight and the consequent extinguishment of personal liability on the part of the owner, does it follow that the Dumois is not entitled to deduct from the amount awarded to the Argo; or, in other words, to recover of the Argo one half of the amount payable to these libellants, in view of the fact that the Argo was also in fault? We think this question is practically answered by prior decisions of this court.

The case of The North Star, 106 U. S. 17, sub nom. Reynolds v. Vanderbilt, 27 L. ed. 91, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41, arose from the mutual fault of two steamers, in which one, the Ella Warley, was totally lost. The court awarded the owners of the Ella Warley so much of their damage as exceeded one half of the aggregate damage sustained by both vessels. The owners of the Warley contended that, as she was a total loss, her owners were not liable at all, and that they were entitled to one half of their damages in full, without deduction for the half of the damage sustained by the North Star, the other vessel. We held, however, that the admiralty rule, that where both vessels are in fault they must bear the damage equally, applied, and that the one suffering least should be decreed to pay to the other the amount necessary to make them equal, namely, one half of the difference between the respective losses sustained, and that when this resulting liability of one party to the other has been ascertained, then, and not before, was the proper time to apply the rule of limited responsibility, if the party decreed to pay is entitled to it. "It will enable him to avoid payment pro tanto of the balance found against him."

[257] "The contrary view," said the court, "is based on the idea that, theoretically (supposing both vessels in fault), the owners of the one are liable to *the owners of the other for one half of the damage sustained by the latter; and, vice versa, that the owners of the latter are liable to those of the former for one half of the damage sustained by her. This, it seems to us, is not a true account of the legal relations of the parties. . . . These authorities conclusively show that according to the general maritime law, in cases of collision occurring by the fault of both parties, the entire damage to both ships is added together in one common mass and equally divided between them, and thereupon arises a liability of one party to pay to the other such sum as is necessary to equalize the burden. This is the rule of mutual liability between the parties."

In The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 43 L. ed. 801, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491, which was also a collision occasioned by the mutual fault of a steamer and a schooner, followed by a total loss of the latter, the survivor was permitted to deduct from one half of the damages recovered for the loss of the vessel one half of the value of the cargo of the latter, notwithstanding the total loss of the schooner, and the fact that under the Harter act she would not have been liable to the owner of the cargo for negligence in navigation. We held in that case that the sunken vessel was not entitled to the benefit of any statute tending to lessen its liability to the other vessel, or to an increase of the burden of such other vessel, until the amount of such liability had been fixed upon the principle of an equal division of damages.

The case under consideration is distinguishable from this only in the fact that intervening libels are for loss of life, for which no lien is given upon the vessel, in the absence of a local law to that effect, while in the case of the Chattahoochee the libel sought to recover for the loss of the cargo, for which a lien was given by the law maritime upon the vessels in fault.

Assuming for the present that the question of lien is material, we are next to inquire whether such lien is given by the local law of Louisiana. We are cited in this connection to two articles of the Civil Code, the first of which, article 2315, as amended in 1884, declares that "every act whatever of man that causes damage to another obliges him by whose fault it happened to repair it; the [258] right of this action shall survive, in *case of death, in favor of the minor children or widow of the deceased, or either of them, and in default of these, in favor of the surviving father and mother, or either of them, for the 177 U. S.

space of one year from the death. The survivors above mentioned may also recover the damages sustained by them by the death of the parent, or child, or husband, or wife, as the case may be."

It was held by us in The Corsair, 145 U. S. 335, sub nom. Barton v. Brown, 36 L. ed. 727, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949, a case arising out of a collision which also took place on the lower Mississippi, that this local law did not give a lien or privilege upon the vessel, and that nothing more was contemplated by it than an ordinary action according to the course of the law as administered in Louisiana.

Our attention is also called by the owners of the Dumois to subdivision 12 of article 3237 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "Where any loss or damage has been caused to the person or property of any individual by any carelessness, neglect, or want of skill in the direction or management of any steamboat, barge, flatboat, water craft, or raft, the party injured shall have a privilege to rank after the privileges above specified." No reliance was placed upon this article in the case of the Corsair, probably because it was thought to refer only to losses or damages to persons still living, and that an action would lie in favor of the party injured. Certainly, if this article had been supposed to give a remedy for damages occasioned by death, to the representatives of the deceased person, it would never have escaped the attention of the astute counsel who participated in that case.

The question whether "damage done by any ship," jurisdiction over which was given to the High Court of Admiralty in England, included actions brought by the personal representatives of seamen or passengers killed in a collision, has been the subject of many and conflicting judicial opinions in the English courts, a summary of which may be found in The Corsair, 145 U. S. 345, sub nom. Barton v. Brown, 36 L. ed. 730, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 949; and was finally settled against the jurisdiction by the House of Lords in the case of Seward v. The Vera Cruz, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 59.

In this country the law is so well settled that by the common *law no civil action lies [259] for an injury resulting in death, that we need only refer to the case of Mobile L. Ins. Co. v. Brame, 95 U. S. 754, 24 L. ed. 580, and to the same doctrine applied in admiralty in the case of The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, sub nom. The Harrisburg v. Rickards, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140. The object of article 3237 was not to extend the cases in which damages might be recovered to such as resulted in death, but merely to provide that, in cases of damages to person or property, where such damage was occasioned by negligence in the management of any water craft, the party injured should have a privilege or lien upon such craft. We deem it entirely clear that the article was not intended to apply to cases brought by the representatives of a deceased person for damages resulting in death.

But it does not necessarily follow that because there is no lien there can be no deduction of a moiety of these damages from the sum awarded to the Argo. Neither the case of the North Star nor that of the Chattahoochee is put upon the ground of a lien, since in both cases the vessel against which the deductions were made was totally lost by the collision, and in the Chattahoochee the provisions of the Harter act would have exonerated her, even if no total loss had occurred. But no extended discussion of this is necessary, since the question is settled by the case of Butler v. Boston & S. S. Co. 130 U. S. 527, 32 L. ed. 1017, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 612, in which it was unanimously held that the limited-liability act applied to cases of personal injury and death, as well as to those of loss of, or injury to, property. This was an independent libel in personam against the steamship company to recover damages for death, and the company pleaded in defense certain proceedings in a case of limited liability instituted by it and then pending. There was a statute of Massachusetts relied upon, which gave a personal remedy, but no lien upon the vessel. The loss occurred within the jurisdiction of the state. The single question presented was whether the limited-liability act applied to damages for personal injury and loss of life, and thus deprived those entitled to damages of the right to entertain suit for recovery, provided the ship owner had taken appropriate proceedings to limit his liability. The court, after a careful examination of the law of limited liability of ship owners, had no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that it covered the case of injuries to persons, as well as that of injury to goods and merchandise, and that these proceedings were a good defense to the libel.

It follows that the claims of the intervening libellants, Mrs. Blesine and Mrs. Hester, were valid claims under the limited-liability act, notwithstanding that there was no lien under the local law, and that there was no error in deducting a moiety of these claims from the amount awarded Springer.

Upon the whole case we are of opinion that the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals was right, and it is therefore, as to both cases, affirmed.

The CHIEF JUSTICE and Mr. Justice Peckham dissented.

SUPREME LODGE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JOSEPHINE R. WITHERS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 260-276.)

Insurance in benevolent society—forfeiture for delay in payment of dues—secretary's failure to transmit dues received—secretary as agent of order, and not of member.

The failure of the secretary of a local, subordinate branch or section of the Knights of Pythias, to transmit to the general board of control, within the time specified by the general laws of said order, moneys paid to him in due time by a member, will not be ground for forfeiture of the policy of such member, since the secretary's negligence is not chargeable to the member, but is that of an agent of the order, notwithstanding a provision in the general laws of the order to the effect that he is to be regarded as the agent of the member, and not of the order, where the general laws also require the member to pay dues to such secretary only, and provide that the secretary shall transmit immediately after the 10th of each month all moneys collected by him, and that the local branch shall be responsible to the board of control for all such moneys collected by the secretary.

NOTE.—As to when an insurance agent is the agent of the assured—see note to Michigan Pipe Co. v. Michigan F. & M. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 20 L. R. A. 277.

762

[No. 170.]

Argued March 6, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action on a certificate or policy of insurance. Affirmed.

See same case below, 59 U. S. App. 177, 89 Fed. Rep. 160, 32 C. C. A. 182.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

*This was an action originally begun in [261] the circuit court of Hale county, Alabama, by Josephine R. Withers, to recover of the defendant the amount of a certain certificate or policy of insurance upon the life of her husband.

The case was removed to the circuit court of the United States for the middle district of Alabama, upon the petition of the defendant and upon the ground that the Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias was a corporation organized by act of Congress, and hence that the controversy arose under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The case was submitted to a jury upon an agreed statement of facts, and the court instructed a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, the amount of the policy, with interest, upon which verdict a judgment was entered for $3,392.54. The case was taken by writ of error to the circuit court of appeals, which affirmed the judgment. 59 U. S. App. 177, 89 Fed. Rep. 160, 32 C. C. A. 182. Whereupon the defendant sued out a writ of error from this court.

The facts, so far as they are material, are stated in the opinion of the court.

Mr. Aldis B. Browne argued the cause for plaintiff in error and, with Messrs. Alex. Britton and H. H. Field, filed a brief on the question of jurisdiction.

Messrs. Thomas G. and Chas. P. Jones and Mr. H. H. Field filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A member of a fraternal association is bound by and presumed to know the provisions of the constitution and by-laws of the association, and these enter into and form a part of the contract.

Bacon, Ben. Soc. & Life Ins. §§ 69, 74, 81;

177 U. S.

Niblack, Ben. Soc. 2d ed. §§ 18, 136; 5 Thomp. Corp. § 5987; 5 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 100; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1059, 1081-3.

Such member is bound by, and presumed to take notice of, all by-laws enacted by the society after his admission, where, as in this case, the application and certificate so provide.

Bacon, Ben. Soc. & Life Ins. §§ 185, 188; Niblack, Ben. Soc. 2d ed. §§ 25-27, 137; Korn v. Mutual Assur. Soc. 6 Cranch, 192, 3 L. ed. 195; 7 Cranch, 396, 3 L. ed. 383; Pain v. Société St. Jean Baptiste, 172 Mass. 319, 52 N. E. 502; May v. New York Safety Reserve Fund Soc. 14 Daly, 389; Supreme Commandery K. of the G. R. v. Ainsworth, 71 Ala. 436, 46 Am. Rep. 332; Borgards v. Farmers' Mut. Ins. Co. 79 Mich. 440, 44 N. W. 856; Hughes v. Wisconsin Odd Fellows' Mut. L. Ins. Co. 98 Wis. 292, 73 N. W. 1015; Bowie v. Grand Lodge of Legion of the West, 99 Cal. 392, 34 Pac. 103; Masonic Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Severson, 71 Conn. 719, 43 Atl. 192; Supreme Council A. L. of H. v. Adams, 68 N. H. 236, 44 Atl. 380; Fullenwider v. Supreme Council of the R. L. 180 Ill. 621, 54 N. E. 485.

These rules have been applied in the following cases against this defendant, involving similar contracts:

Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Knight, 117 Ind. 489, 3 L. R. A. 409, 20 N. E. 479; Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. La Malta, 95 Tenn. 157, 30 L. R. A. 838, 31 S. W. 493; Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Kutscher, 179 Ill. 340, 53 N. E. 620; Supreme Lodge, K. of P. v. Trebbe, 179 Ill. 348, 53 N. E. 730; Daughtry v. Knights of Pythias, 48 La. Ann. 1203, 20 So. 712; Dornes v. Supreme Lodge K. of P. 75 Miss. 466, 23 So. 191; Lloyd v. Supreme Lodge K. of P. 98 Fed. Rep. 66, 38 C. C. A. 654.

The provision that officers of sections are the agents of the members, and shall in no wise be considered as the agents or the representatives of the board of control of the endowment rank or of the supreme lodge, was valid and binding upon the deceased under his contract of membership.

Susquehanna Ins. Co. v. Perrine, 7 Watts & S. 348; Peet v. Great Camp of K. of M. of the World, 83 Mich. 92, 47 N. W. 119; Grand Lodge of A. O. of U. W. v. King, 10 Ind. App. 639, 38 N. E. 352; Sovereign Camp, Woodmen of the World v. Rothschild, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 463, 40 S. W. 553; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; Maier v. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. 47 U. S. App. 329, 78 Fed. Rep. 566, 24 C. C. A. 239; United States L. Ins. Co. v. Smith, 92 Fed. Rep. 503, 34 C. C. A. 506; Hubbard v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 80 Fed. Rep. 681; Bernard v. United L. Ins. Asso. 14 App. Div. 142, 43 N. Y. Supp. 527; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451; McCoy v. Roman Catholic Mut. Ins. Co. 152 Mass. 272, 25 N. E. 289; Quinlan v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 133 N. Y. 356, 31 N. E. 31.

177 U. S.

Mr. Edward De Graffenreid argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The fraud or mistake of a knavish or blundering agent, within the scope of his powers, will not enable the company to avoid a policy to the injury of assured, who innocently became a party to it, although a stipulation in the policy provides that such agent shall be deemed the agent of the insured.

Whiteside v. Supreme Conclave Improved O. of H. 82 Fed. Rep. 275; Knights of Pythias of the World v. Bridges, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 196, 39 S. W. 333; Bacon, Ben. Soc. & Ins. § 426, and authorities cited.

There is no magic in mere words to change the real into the unreal. A device of words cannot be imposed upon a court in place of an actuality of fact.

Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 153; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 13 Wall. 235, 20 L. ed. 623.

By-laws enacted subsequent to the issuance of a policy must be reasonable, or they are void.

Allnutt v. Subsidiary High Court of U. S. A. O. of F. 62 Mich. 110, 28 N. W. 802; People ex rel. Quien v. Theatrical Mechanical Asso. 8 N. Y. Supp. 675; Erd v. Bavarian Nat. Aid & Relief Asso. 67 Mich. 233, 34 N. W. 555; Brady v. Coachman's Benev. Asso. 39 N. Y. S. R. 181, 14 N. Y. Supp. 272.

*Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion-[261] ion of the court:

The Supreme Lodge Knights of Pythias is a fraternal and benevolent society, incorporated by an act of Congress of *June 29, 1894[262] (28 Stat. at L. 96, chap. 119), as the successor of a former corporation of the same name, organized under an act approved May 5, 1870. The beneficial or insurance branch of the order is known as the endowment rank, which is composed of those members of the order who have taken out benefit certificates. Such members are admitted into local subordinate branches known as sections. The members of each section elect their own president and secretary. The endowment rank is governed by a board of control whose officers are a president and secretary, and whose place of business is in Chicago. The endowment rank is governed by a constitution and general laws enacted by the Supreme Lodge, and by rules and regulations adopted by the board of control and approved by the Supreme Lodge.

On January 1, 1883, Robert W. Withers made application for membership in the endowment rank, and in that application made the following statement: "I hereby agree that I will punctually pay all dues and assessments to which I may become liable, and that I will be governed, and this contract shall be controlled, by all the laws, rules, and regulations of the order governing this rank, now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted, or submit to the penalties therein contained." His application was accepted, and, after receiving a certificate under the first act of incorporation which he voluntarily surrendered, he received the certificate upon which this action is brought. This certificate recited the original application for membership dated January 1, 1883, the surrender of the former certificate and the application for transfer to the fourth class, which were "made a part of this contract, . . . and in consideration of the payment heretofore to the said endowment rank of all monthly payments, as required, and the full compliance with all the laws governing this right, now in force or that may hereafter be enacted, and shall be in good standing under said laws, the sum of $3,000 will be paid by the Supreme Lodge, etc., to Josephine R. Withers, wife, . . . upon due notice and proof of death and good standing in the rank at the time of his death, . . . and it is understood and agreed that any violation of the within-mentioned conditions or other *requirements of the laws in force governing this right shall render this certificate and all claims null and void, and the said Supreme Lodge shall not be liable for the above sum or any part thereof."

[263]

Withers was a member of section 432, at Greensboro, Alabama, of which one Chadwick was secretary. By the laws of the endowment rank Withers was required to pay $4.90 monthly in accordance with his age and the amount of his endowment.

In January, 1894, defendant adopted and promulgated the following general laws:

"Sec. 4. Monthly payments and dues of members holding certificates of endowment shall be due and payable to the secretary of section without notice, on the first day of each and every month; and a failure to make such payment on or before the 10th day of each month shall cause, from and after such date, a forfeiture of the certificate of endowment and all right, title, and interest such member or his beneficiaries may have in and to the same, and membership shall cease absolutely. In case of such forfeiture, membership may be regained by making application in the form prescribed for new applicants, the payment of required membership fee and surrender of the forfeited certificate. If approved by the medical examiner-in-chief and accepted by the board of control, a new certificate shall be issued, and the rating shall hereafter be at the age of nearest birthday to the date of the last application."

"Sec. 6. The secretary of the section shall forward to the board of control the monthly payments and dues collected immediately after the 10th day of each and every month.

"If such payment and dues are not received by the board of control on or before the last day of the same month the section so failing to pay, and all members thereof, shall stand suspended from membership in the Endowment Rank; and their certificates and all right, title, and interest therein shall be forfeited. Notice of such suspension shall be forthwith mailed by the secretary of the board of control to the president and secretary of such section.

[264]"Provided, that the section whose membership has forfeited *their endowment, and whose warrant has been suspended, shall regain all right as a section, and any surviving members thereof (not less than five) shall regain full rights and privileges held previous to such forfeiture, if within thirty days from suspension of warrant said section shall pay to the board of control the amount of all monthly payments, assessments, and dues accrued upon said members.

764

"Sec. 10. Sections of Endowment Ranks shall be responsible and liable to the board of control for all moneys collected by the secretary or other officers from the members for monthly payments, assessments, or dues not paid over to the board within the time and manner prescribed by law. Officers of sections are the agents of members, and shall in no wise be considered as the agents of the representatives of the board of control or of the Endowment Rank or of the Supreme Lodge."

For over twelve years Withers made his monthly payments as required by law to the secretary of the section, and the money was regularly remitted to the board of control at Chicago. His last payment was made prior to October 10, 1895, as required by section 4, for the dues of that month. As there were a large number of members in the section, and as their dues were not all collected until the latter part of the month, the secretary of the section did not send the money to the board of control until October 31, when he mailed to the secretary of that board a check covering all the amounts due by all the members of the section for that month. The letter did not leave the postoffice until the next day, and was received by the board of control November 4. No notice was ever mailed by the board of control to Withers notifying him of his suspension; but on November 1st, as required by section 6, the secretary of the board of control mailed to Mr. Chadwick, the secretary of the section at Greensboro, a notice of the suspension of all members thereof, with an intimation that the members of the section might regain their rights under certain conditions therein named. No notice was mailed to the president of the section. In view of the technical character of the defense, it is worthy of mention that the board of control did not strictly comply with its own regulation in this particular.

*Upon receiving the remittance, and on [265] November 4, the secretary of the board of control mailed the following postal card to the secretary of the section:

Office Board of Control,
Chicago, November 4, 1895.

Received of Section No. 432 one hundred and thirteen 30-100 dollars in payment of monthly payments and dues for October, 1895, on condition that all members for whom above payment is made were living at date of this receipt.

H. B. Stolte,
Secretary Board of Control.

The insured was suddenly taken ill and died of an attack of cholera morbus on November 1, 1895. Proofs of death were waived by the defendant, which, however, refused to pay the amount of the certificate.

177 U. S.

It is hardly necessary to say that the defense in this case is an extremely technical one, and does not commend itself to the average sense of justice. It ought to be made out with literal exactness. It is admitted that Withers for twelve years paid all his dues promptly to the secretary of the section as required by section 4 of the general laws, and that the failure of the board of control to receive them on or before the last day of the month was the fault of the secretary, and not of the insured. The whole defense rests upon the final clause of section 10, declaring that "officers of sections are the agents of the members and shall in no wise be considered as the agents of the representatives of the board of control of the Endowment Rank or of the Supreme Lodge." It appears to have been the habit of the secretary, Mr. Chadwick, not to remit each payment as it was made, but to allow all the dues of each month to collect in his hands and to remit them together by a check covering the whole amount, about the close of the month. In this connection he makes the following statement: "It had never been the custom of my office for me to send the money off by the twentieth of the month" (although section 6 required him to forward it immediately after the tenth). "I usually sent the money off about the last days of the month. For the previous year I had mailed to the secretary of the board of control the dues of the section as follows: October 27, 1894, November 28, 1894, December 29, 1894, January 29, 1895, February 27, 1895, March 30, 1895, April 29, 1895, June 29, 1895, July 31, 1895, *August 29, 1895, September 28, 1895, October 28, 1895, October 31, 1895—all of which sums were accepted by the board of control."

[266]

The position now taken by the defendant, that in receiving the money from the insured members, and remitting the same to the board of control, the secretary of the section was the agent of the insured, and not of the board of control, is inconsistent with the requirement of section 4, which makes it obligatory upon policy holders to pay their monthly dues to the secretary of the section, and to him only, as well as with the provision of section 10, that "sections of Endowment Rank shall be responsible and liable to the board of control for all moneys collected by the secretary, or other officers, from the members for monthly payments, assessments, or dues not paid over to the board within the time and manner prescribed by law." The question at once suggests itself, To whom does the money belong when paid to the secretary of the section? If to the insured, it was within his power to reclaim it at any time before it was remitted. If to the board of control, it was the duty of the secretary of the section to remit it. Why, too, should the board of control attempt to deal with it at all beyond requiring it to be paid them by a certain day? Section 10 is a complete answer since that makes the sections responsible to the board of control from the moment the money is collected, and section 6 makes it the duty of the secretary to remit it at once.

177 U. S.

There seems to have been an attempt on the part of the defendant to invest Mr. Chadwick with the power and authority of an agent, and at the same time to repudiate his agency. But the refusal to acknowledge him as agent does not make him the less so, if the principal assume to control his conduct. It is as if a creditor should instruct his debtor to pay his claim to a third person, and at the same time declare that such third person was not his agent to receive the money. It would scarcely be contended, however, that such payment would not be a good discharge of the debt, though the third person never accounted to the creditor; much less, that it would not be a good payment as of a certain day, though the *re-[267]mittance, through the fault of the person receiving it, did not reach the creditor until the following day.

The position of the secretary must be determined by his actual power and authority, and not by the name which the defendant chooses to give him. To invest him with the duties of an agent, and to deny his agency, is a mere juggling with words. Defendant cannot thus play fast and loose with its own subordinates. Upon its theory the policy holders had absolutely no protection. They were bound to make their monthly payments to the secretary of the section, who was bound to remit them to the board of control; but they could not compel him to remit, and were thus completely at his mercy. If he chose to play into the hands of the company, it was possible for him, by delaying his remittance until after the end of the month, to cause a suspension of every certificate within his jurisdiction; and in case such remittance was not made within thirty days from such suspension (sec. 6) apparently to make it necessary under section 4 for each policy holder to regain his membership by making a new application, surrendering his forfeited certificate, making payment of the required membership fee, undergoing a new medical examination, and paying a premium determined by his age at the date of the last application. In other words, by the failure of the secretary, over whom he had no control, to remit within thirty days, every member of the section might lose his rights under his certificate and stand in the position of one making a new application, with a forfeiture of all premiums previously paid. The new certificate would, of course, be refused if his health in the meantime had deteriorated, and the examining physician refused to approve his application. This would enable the company at its will to relieve itself of the burdens of undesirable risks by refusing certificates of membership to all whose health had become impaired since the original certificate was taken out, though such certificate-holder may have been personally prompt in making his monthly payments.

It could not thus clothe the secretaries of the sections with the powers of agents by authorizing them to receive monthly payments and instructing them to account for and remit them to *the Supreme Lodge at Chicago, and in the same breath deny that they were agents at all. The very definition of an agent, given by Bouvier, as "one who undertakes to transact some business, or manage some affair, for another, by the authority and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it" presupposes that the acts done by the agent shall be done in the interest of the principal, and that he shall receive his instructions from him. In this case the agent received his instructions from the Supreme Lodge, and his actions were, at least, as much for the convenience of the lodge as for that of the insured. If the Supreme Lodge intrusted Chadwick with a certain authority, it stands in no position to deny that he was its agent within the scope of that authority.

The reports are by no means barren of cases turning upon the proper construction of this so-called "agency clause," under which the defendant seeks to shift its responsibility upon the insured for the neglect of Chadwick to remit on the proper day. In some jurisdictions it is held to be practically void and of no effect; in others, it is looked upon as a species of wild animal, lying in wait and ready to spring upon the unwary policy holder, and in all, it is eyed with suspicion and construed with great strictness. We think it should not be given effect when manifestly contrary to the facts of the case, or opposed to the interests of justice. Wherever the agency clause is inconsistent with the other clauses of the policy, conferring power and authority upon the agent, he is treated as the agent of the company rather than of the policy holder. The object of the clause in most cases is to transfer the responsibility for his acts from the party to whom it properly belongs, to one who generally has no knowledge of its existence. It is usually introduced into policies in connection with the application, and for the purpose of making the agent of the company the agent of the party making the application, with respect to the statements therein contained.

It was formerly held in New York (Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47, 20 Am. Rep. 451, and Alexander v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 464, 23 Am. Rep. 76), that, where the insured had contracted that the person who had procured the insurance should be deemed his agent, he must abide [269] by his agreement; and where *such person had, through fault or mistake, misstated in the application to the company the declarations of the assured, the latter must suffer for the error or wrong; but in a subsequent case (Whited v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 330), this doctrine was held to be limited to such acts as the agent performed in connection with the original application, and that in a renewal of the policy such party was treated as the agent of the defendant, for whose acts it was bound; and that it was within his power to make a valid waiver of the conditions of the policy. Said the court in its opinion: "That he was the agent of the defendant it would be fatuous to deny; were it not for a clause in the policy" (the agency clause) "upon which the defendant builds. . . . But if the insured is to be now bound as having thus contracted, there must be mutuality in the contract. No man can serve two masters. If the procurer of the insurance is to be deemed the agent of the insured . . . he may not be taken into the service of the insurer as its agent also; or if he is so taken, the insurer must be bound by his acts and words, when he stands in its place and moves and speaks as one having authority from it; and pro hac vice, at least, he does then rightfully put off his agency for the insured and put on that for the insurer. . . . Nor will it hold the plaintiff so strictly to the contract he made as to permit the defendant to ignore it and take his agent as its agent, and yet make him suffer for all the shortcomings of that person while acting between them and while under authority from the defendant to act for it." So in Sprague v. Holland Purchase Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 128, the insured signed a blank form of application, which was filled up by the company's agent without any knowledge or dictation of the insured. There were false statements therein, occasioned by the mistake or inadvertence of the agent. The policy contained the agency clause, as well as the condition that the application must be made out by the defendant's authorized agent, and it was held, using the language of the court in the Whited Case, that the latter clause "swallowed down" the former, and that there was no warranty binding upon the plaintiff.

766

In Patridge v. Commercial F. Ins. Co. 17 Hun, 95, it was said of the agency clause: "This is a provision which deserves *the con-[270] demnation of courts, whenever it is relied upon to work out a fraud, as it is in this case. The policy might as well say that the president of the company should be deemed the president of the assured. . . . Such a clause is no part of a contract. It is an attempt to reverse the law of agency, and to declare that a party is not bound by his agent's acts. Whether one is an agent of another is a question of mixed law and fact, depending on the authority given expressly or impliedly. And when a contract is, in fact, made through the agent of a party, the acts of that agent in that respect are binding on his principal."

In Nassau v. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. 109 Pa. 509, under a by-law providing that "in all cases the person forwarding applications shall be deemed the agent of the applicant," it was held, under the circumstances of the case, that the agent of the company soliciting insurance was not the agent of the applicant, and that such by-law was not binding upon him. Although the insured is supposed to know at his peril the conditions of the policy, that will not bind him to a provision which is not true, and one which the company had no right to insert therein. "We do not assent," said the court,

177 U. S.

"to the proposition that the offer" (that the agent made his own valuation of the property) "was incompetent, because Laubach was the agent of the assured in filling up the application and forwarding it to the company. He was not the agent of the assured. The latter had not employed him for any purpose. He was the agent of the defendant company, and as such called upon the assured and solicited a policy, and having obtained his consent proceeded to fill up the application for him to sign. As to all these preliminary matters the person soliciting the insurance is the agent of the company." The court, speaking of the agency clause, observed: "This court, in the case above cited [Columbia Ins. Co. v. Cooper, 50 Pa. 331], characterized a somewhat similar provision as a 'cunning condition.' The court might have gone further and designated it as a dishonest condition. It was the assertion of a falsehood, and an attempt to put that falsehood into the mouth of the assured. It formed no part of the contract of insurance. That contract consists of the application and the policy issued in pursuance thereof. In point of fact the assured does not see the policy until after it is executed and delivered to him. In many instances it is laid away by him and never read, especially as to the elaborate conditions in fine print. Grant that it is his duty to read it, his neglect to do so can bind him only for what the company had a right to insert therein. He was not bound to suppose that the company would falsely assert, either by direct language in the policy or by reference to a by-law, that a man was his agent who had never been his agent, but who was, on the contrary, the agent of the company. Notwithstanding this was a mutual company, the assured did not become a member thereof until after the insurance was effected. Hence, a by-law of the company of which he had no knowledge, and by which he was not bound, could not affect him in matters occurring before the granting of the policy. . . . And even a by-law of a mutual company, which declares that black is white, does not necessarily make it so." Similar cases are those of Eilenberger v. Protective Mut. F. Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 464; Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cusick, 109 Pa. 157; and Kister v. Lebanon Mut. Ins. Co. 128 Pa. 553, 5 L. R. A. 646, 18 Atl. 447.

The case of Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Ward, 90 Ill. 545, resembles the case under consideration. In that case it was held that, where the assured contracts with one as the agent of the insurer, believing him to be such, and does not employ such supposed agent to act for him in obtaining insurance, such person has no power to act for or bind the insured, though the policy may provide that the person procuring the insurance shall be deemed the agent of the insured, and not of the company. Plaintiff paid the premium to the person with whom she contracted for the insurance, and of whom she obtained the policy. It was held that such person, assuming to be the agent of the company, the payment was binding upon the company, whether he paid the money over or not. In that case the person to whom the money was paid was not in reality an agent of the company, although plaintiff believed him to be such, but only a street insurance broker, who represented himself to be the agent of the company. Said the court: "Under such circumstances who should bear the loss arising from the fraud committed by the street broker? Should it fall upon the plaintiff, who was 'an innocent party in the transaction, or should it fall upon the company, who alone enabled Pusehman to successfully consummate the contract of insurance by placing in his hands the policy for delivery? The street broker was not the agent of the plaintiff for any purpose. If the evidence be true, he had no authority to act for her or bind her in any manner whatever by what he might do in the premises, and while he may not have been, in fact, the agent of the company, still the company, by placing the policy in the hands of the street broker for delivery, is estopped from claiming that the payment made to him upon delivery of the policy is not binding upon the company.'" [272]

In Indiana it is also held that a recital in the policy that the broker obtaining an insurance is the agent of the insured is not conclusive upon that subject. Indiana Ins. Co. v. Hartwell, 100 Ind. 566. In North British & M. Ins. Co. v. Crutchfield, 108 Ind. 518, 9 N. E. 458, the agency clause was held to be absolutely void as applied to a local agent, upon whose counter signature the validity of the policy, by its terms, was made to depend.

In Boetcher v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 47 Iowa, 253, it was held that, if the assured had the right to believe the soliciting agent was the agent of the company, the insertion of a clause in the policy providing that he was the agent of the assured constituted a fraud upon the latter, of which the company could not take advantage.

Speaking of the agency clause in Continental Ins. Co. v. Pearce, 39 Kan. 396, 18 Pac. 291, it is said: "This is but a form of words to attempt to create on paper an agency which in fact never existed. It is an attempt of the company, not to restrict the powers of its own agent, but an effort to do away with that relation altogether by mere words, and to make him in the same manner the agent of the assured, when, in fact, such relation never existed. . . . We do not believe the entire nature and order of this well-established relation can be so completely subverted by this ingenious device of words. The real fact, as it existed, cannot be hidden in this manner; much less can it be destroyed and something that did not in reality exist be placed in its stead. The substance is superior to the mere drapery of words with which one party wishes to bring into existence and clothe an 'unreal authority.'" See also Kausal v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Asso. 31 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 776, 16 N. W. 430, in which the act of an insurance agent in making out an incorrect application was held chargeable to the insurer, and not to the insured, notwithstanding the insertion of an agency clause in the policy.

In Planters' Ins. Co. v. Myers, 55 Miss. 479, 30 Am. Rep. 521, an agency clause in a policy of insurance was held to be void, as involving a legal contradiction. The applicant made truthful answers to certain interrogatories propounded by the agent, who stated certain things that were not true. They were held not to be binding upon the insured. Speaking of the agency clause, it is said: "The verbiage of this condition is not candid; it seems to have been used with studied design to obscure the real purpose. It is a snare, set in an obscure place, well calculated to escape notice. It is not written or printed on the face of the policy. It is not so much as alluded to in the application; nor is the agent in his printed instructions enjoined to inform those with whom he treats of it. . . . Its inevitable effect is to greatly weaken the indemnity on which the assured rely. It is inconsistent with the acts and conduct of the insurance companies in sending abroad all over the land their agents and representatives to canvass for risks. It is an effort by covenant to get the benefits and profits which these agents bring them, and at the same time repudiate the relation they sustain to them; and to set up that relationship with the assured, and that, too, without their knowledge and consent. It is not a limitation or restriction of power, but the dissolution of the relationship with themselves and the establishment of it between other parties."

[274] The case of Schunck v. Gegenseitiger Wittwen und Waisen Fond, 44 Wis. 369, is almost precisely like the instant case. The constitution of the defendant corporation, whose governing body or directory was elected by the several "groves" (corresponding to the sections in this case) of the United Ancient Order of Druids, declared that every member whose assessment was not paid by his grove to the directory within thirty days after demand made forfeited his claim to have a certain sum in the nature of life insurance paid to his widow, or heirs, *after his death. It was held that, in view of all the provisions of such constitution, the benevolent object of the corporation, and the fact that the several groves are, at least, as much its agents to collect and pay over the dues of their members, as they are agents of the latter, in case of a member whose dues have been fully paid to his grove at the time of his death, the amount of insurance might be recovered, notwithstanding a default of the grove in paying over such dues to the defendant.

The agency clause was also once before this court in the case of Grace v. American C. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 278, 27 L. ed. 932, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, in which a clause in the policy that the person procuring the insurance to be taken should be deemed the agent of the assured and not of the company, was held to import nothing more than that the person obtaining the insurance was to be deemed the agent of the insured in the matters immediately connected with the procurement of the policy, and that, where his employment did not extend beyond the procurement of the insurance, his agency ceased upon the execution of the policy, and subsequent notice to him of its termination by the company was not notice to the insured.

In the following cases the officers of the subordinate lodge, or conclave, were treated as the agents of the Supreme Conclave in the matter of granting extensions of time for the payment of assessments: Whiteside v. Supreme Conclave I. O. of H. 82 Fed. Rep. 275; Knights of Pythias of the World v. Bridges, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 196, 39 S. W. 333.

In the case under consideration it may be immaterial, except as bearing upon the equities of the case, that the agency clause was introduced into the general laws of the order in January, 1894, eleven years after the first certificate was issued to the assured, and nearly nine years after the certificate was issued upon which suit was brought. There is no evidence that it was ever called to Withers's attention, or that he had actual knowledge of it. If he were bound at all, it could only be by the stipulation in his original application, and by the terms of his certificate that "he would be bound by the rules and regulations of the order, now in force or that may hereafter be enacted." All that is required of him is a full compliance with such laws, and there is not the slightest evidence that he failed *personally [275] in any particular to comply with any laws of the order, present or future. The only failure was that of the secretary of the section, who, to say the least, was as much the agent of the order as he was of Withers, although the latter is sought to be charged with his dereliction by a clause inserted in the general laws, long after the certificate was issued. The decisive consideration is this: Chadwick was the agent of the defendant, and of the defendant only, after the receipt of the money from Withers. Under section 10 he then became responsible for it to the board of control. In rendering his monthly accounts and paying over the money he acted solely for the defendant. From the time he paid the money to Chadwick the insured had no control over him, and was not interested in its disposition. Unless we are to hold the insured responsible for a default of this agent, which he could not possibly prevent, we are bound to say that his payment to this agent discharged his full obligation to the defendant. That it should have the power of declaring that the default of Chadwick, by so much as one day (and it did not exceed four days in this case), to pay over this money, should cause a forfeiture of every certificate within his jurisdiction, is a practical injustice too gross to be tolerated.

Without indorsing everything that is said in the cases above cited, we should be running counter to an overwhelming weight of authority were we to hold that the agency clause should be given full effect regardless of other clauses in the certificate or the by-laws, indicative of an intention to make the officers of subordinate lodges agents of the supreme or central authority. We should rather seek to avoid, as far as possible, any injustice arising from a too literal interpretation, and only give the clause such effect as is consistent with the other by-laws and with the manifest equities of the case. We are therefore of opinion that in this case the secretary of the section was in reality the agent of the Supreme Lodge from the time he received the monthly payments, and that the insured was not responsible for his failure to remit immediately after the tenth of the month.

[276] We have not overlooked in this connection the case of *Campbell v. Supreme Lodge K. of P. of the World, 168 Mass. 397, 47 N. E. 109 in which a different conclusion was reached, upon a similar state of facts. In that case plaintiff put his right to recover upon the theory that the mailing of the remittance was a compliance with the requirement of section 6 that such payments and dues should be received on or before the last day of the month. This position was held by the court to be untenable. It was said that the money must have been actually received at the office of the board of control before the end of the month. The question of agency was not considered, and the trend of the argument is so different that the case cannot be considered an authority upon the propositions here discussed. The cases of Peet v. Great Camp of K. of M. of the World, 83 Mich. 92, 47 N. W. 119, and McClure v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. 41 App. Div. 131, 59 N. Y. Supp. 764, are not in point.

The judgments of the Circuit Court and of the Court of Appeals were right, and they are therefore affirmed.

JOHN W. ARNOLD, Plff. in Err.,

v.

LEWIS HATCH.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 276-281.)

Ownership of property levied upon—title to personal property on farm—effect of contract to manage farm and return or replace personalty.

A contract between the owner of a farm and his son, by which the latter is given the management of the farm, farm implements, and live stock, with full liberty to sell and dispose of them, replace old stock and implements with new, and appropriate the net proceeds to himself, and is charged with the duty to make all repairs, pay all taxes and other expenses, replace all implements as they are worn out, and keep up all live stock, and is given as his own the net profits, but without fixing any purchase price or providing for payment by the son for the property, while either party is at liberty to terminate the arrangement at any time, upon which the son is required to turn back the farm with its implements, stock, and other personalty of the same kind and amount as was on the farm when he took charge of it, and in as good condition as when he took them; and the fact that the personal property on the farm is assessed in the name of the son,—do not give him title to such personalty so as to subject it to levy on execution against him.

[No. 183.]

Argued March 14, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment for a claimant of property levied upon as that of another person. Affirmed.

See same case below, 60 U. S. App. 659, 89 Fed. Rep. 1013, 32 C. C. A. 602.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

This was an intervening petition by the defendant in error, *Lewis Hatch, filed in the [277] district court for the northern district of Illinois, in the case of Joseph G. Heim, Receiver, v. Frank W. Hatch, praying for the release by the marshal and a return to petitioner of a large amount of cattle and other farm property alleged to belong to him, and levied upon by the marshal as the property of Frank W. Hatch.

The cause originated in an action begun in the district court for the northern district of Illinois, by Joseph G. Heim, as receiver of the First National Bank of Southbend, Washington, against Frank W. Hatch, to enforce against the defendant an individual liability as a stockholder of the bank, which had become insolvent. Defendant having made default, a judgment was rendered against him in the sum of $4,351.09 and costs, for which an execution was issued and levied upon the cattle and other farm property in dispute. Whereupon Lewis Hatch, the father of Frank W. Hatch, filed this petition, to which the plaintiff in error, John W. Arnold, marshal for the northern district of Illinois, made answer, denying the petitioner's ownership of the property, and admitting his levy upon it as the property of Frank W. Hatch.

The case came on for trial before a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the petitioner, upon which judgment was entered. On writ of error from the circuit court of appeals this judgment was affirmed. 60 U. S. App. 659, 89 Fed. Rep. 1013, 32 C. C. A. 602. Whereupon plaintiff in error, Arnold, sued out a writ of error from this court.

Mr. Kenesaw M. Landis argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. George A. Dupuy argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

*Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion [277] of the court:

This case presents the frequent question of the title and ownership of personal property levied upon as the property of an execution debtor, and claimed by another party. The undisputed facts are that, in 1883, the petitioner, Lewis Hatch, who then and for about twenty-five years prior thereto, had resided *upon and worked a large farm in Mc-

Henry county, Illinois, made a contract with his son, Frank W. Hatch, a young man just out of school, under which it was agreed that the latter should undertake the management of the farm, farm implements, and live stock, make all repairs, pay all taxes and other expenses, replace all implements as they were worn out, keep up all live stock, and have as his own the net profits. It was further stipulated that each party should be at liberty to terminate the arrangement at any time, and that the son should turn back to his father the farm with its implements, stock, and other personalty, of the same kind and amount as was on the farm when the father retired, and in as good condition as when he took them.

As all questions connected with the veracity of witnesses, the bona fides of this arrangement, and its exact terms, are forestalled by the verdict of the jury, we are bound to consider the case as if the arrangement had been reduced to writing, and such writing were the only evidence bearing upon the subject. As the only testimony in the case was that of the father and the son, and as their statements were entirely harmonious, we are simply to inquire as to the correctness of the charge of the court to the jury, that, if they believed the arrangement was substantially such as was stated by the petitioner and his son, it did not have the effect in law to vest the title to any of the property or proceeds of the farm in Frank W. Hatch, although he may have had power to sell the same to others without any further authority from his father. There was evidence showing, not only that the son assumed the entire management of the farm, but that he was at full liberty to sell and dispose of its products, to replace old stock and implements with new, and to appropriate the net proceeds to himself; and that his only obligation was to return the property on demand, or substituted property of the same kind and amount, whenever either party should see fit to terminate the arrangement.

[279] We do not know that it is necessary to fix an exact definition to the relations between these parties, or to determine whether the law of master and servant, landlord and tenant, or bailor and bailee governed the transaction. The main object is to *ascertain the intent of the parties with respect to the ownership of the property. There is no doubt that the title to the farm remained in the father, who continued to occupy the homestead, and provided accommodations for certain of the farm hands; that the arrangement was made with his son soon after he left school, and apparently for the purpose of starting him in business. He was then unmarried, and lived in the same house with his father, who furnished the board of the hired men until after the son was married, when, after living some time with his wife in the homestead, he built at his own expense a small house for his own use about 20 or 30 rods distant from that of his father, although some of the hired men still lodged with the latter. In 1887 the son, Frank W.

Hatch, gave up the arrangement, moved with his family to Texas, and settled there with the intention of making it his home. Upon going there he left all the stock upon the farm just as he had received it from his father. He subsequently became dissatisfied, and returned to his father's farm under the same arrangement. He continued under this arrangement until 1892, when he went to the state of Washington for the purpose of locating there; invested in real estate and apparently in bank stock, in which he appears to have been unfortunate. Again returning to Illinois, he resumed the management of the farm.

It further appeared from the tax schedules of personal property in that school district, that the property in question was assessed in the name of Frank W. Hatch. While this testimony was doubtless entitled to consideration, the jury evidently did not give it great weight, as it was part of the agreement between the father and son that the latter should pay the taxes.

There was also evidence that, in the spring of 1897, the son sold to his father for $1,000 a quantity of wool produced on the farm; but as it was also a part of the agreement that the son should have the product of the farm there was nothing inconsistent with it in this sale of the wool.

It is very evident from this testimony that no sale of the farm property was intended. There was no purchase price agreed upon, no time fixed for the payment; and the reservation that the arrangement might be terminated the day after it was made, *as well as [280] that it might indefinitely continue, is wholly inconsistent with the theory of a sale. Indeed, the only *indiciu*m of a sale is the provision that the identical property received need not be returned, but that other property of a similar kind might be substituted. Plaintiff in error relies in this connection upon a line of cases which hold that, where a man turns over personal property to another, under an arrangement by which the latter is not obliged to restore the specific articles of property, but is at liberty to deliver other property of the same kind and value, the receiver becomes the owner of the property; as, where wheat is delivered to an elevator with the understanding that the obligation to return it shall be discharged by the delivery of other like wheat (Story, Bailments, § 439; Lonergan v. Stewart, 55 Ill. 49; Bretz v. Diehl, 117 Pa. 589, 11 Atl. 893; Smith v. Clark, 21 Wend. 83, 34 Am. Dec. 213; Johnston v. Browne, 37 Iowa, 200), although even then a usage to return substituted property may turn the transaction into a bailment. Erwin v. Clark, 13 Mich. 10. But these authorities have no application to the case under consideration. Here there was no provision for a substituted property beyond that required by the nature of the property delivered. The arrangement was to be indefinite in its continuance. The property was mostly animals which would necessarily die, be sold, or slaughtered in a few years, and a gradual substitution of their progeny or other similar cattle and a renewal of worn-out implements was all that was contemplated. The stipulation that this might be done was a mere incident of the main agreement by which the property was to be returned in like good order and condition as received.

The son was undoubtedly intrusted with extensive powers, but no greater than the management of a large farm would necessarily require. The father had become an old man, and naturally wished to rid himself of the responsibility, even of supervision, and to put his son upon the footing of an independent farmer. It is possible that he contemplated leaving the property to his son upon his death; but it was clearly his intention to reserve the power of revoking the arrangement in case it did not prove satisfactory to him. As the father remained in possession of the farm, there was nothing in the mere fact that he *intrusted his son with the management that was necessarily calculated to mislead creditors into the belief that the latter was the owner of the property. Apparently the receiver was unable to produce evidence manifestly inconsistent with the agreement as sworn to by both father and son, and their testimony authorized the jury to find the ownership of the property to be in the former.

Similar agreements have been sustained as against creditors in a number of cases. Chatard v. O'Donovan, 80 Ind. 20, 41 Am. Rep. 782; Wilber v. Sisson, 53 Barb. 259; Bowman v. Bradley, 151 Pa. 351, 17 L. R. A. 213, 24 Atl. 1062; Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 221, 19 Am. Rep. 158; Haywood v. Miller, 3 Hill, 90; Brown v. Scott, 7 Vt. 60; Peters v. Smith, 42 Ill. 422; State v. Curtis, 20 N. C. (4 Dev. & B. L.) 226.

There was no error in the judgment of the court of appeals, and it is therefore affirmed.

THOMAS W. HYDE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

BISHOP IRON COMPANY et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 281-290.)

Public lands—application to enter land partly for benefit of others.

A single application to enter 160 acres of land by a person who has made a contract to divide a quarter thereof, when obtained, with another person, in violation of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2262, cannot be sustained as to any part of the land, but is invalid even as to the part which he had not agreed to divide.

[No. 126.]

Argued January 29, 30, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota to review a decision affirming a judgment in an action of ejectment. Affirmed.

See same case below, 72 Minn. 16, 74 N. W. 1016.

177 U. S.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

On April 3, 1895, the Bishop Iron Company, one of the defendants in error, filed in the district court of the eleventh judicial district of Minnesota, in and for the county of St. Louis, its complaint in ejectment, alleging that it was the absolute owner in fee simple and entitled to the immediate possession of the undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ of the following described land, situate in the county of St. Louis, to wit: The N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ *of section 30, township 63 north, range 11 [282] west of the fourth principal meridian, and that it was the lessee of the remaining undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ of said land under a lease in writing from and executed by the owners in fee simple of said remaining undivided $\frac{1}{2}$, by the terms of which lease plaintiff was entitled to the immediate, sole, and exclusive possession of said undivided $\frac{1}{2}$; that the defendant, the present plaintiff in error, on January 1, 1895, wrongfully and unlawfully entered into and took possession of said tract, and had ever since kept possession thereof. The prayer of the complainant was for possession, for costs and disbursements. The defendant answered and filed a cross petition, and on his application certain parties were made defendants to that cross petition. He subsequently filed an amended answer and cross petition.

In the latter these facts are alleged: That ever since August 20, 1884, the petitioner has been in the actual, open, and exclusive possession of the tract in controversy; that at the time of his taking possession it was unoccupied and unsurveyed land of the United States; that prior to July 20, 1885, the lands in that district were duly surveyed and an approved plat thereof filed in the land office at Duluth, Minn., that being the land office of the district in which those lands are situated; that on July 20, 1885, he duly offered to the local land office and made application to file his declaratory statement for said tract and lots 5 and 6 and the S.E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 30, and tendered the fees required by law to be paid on said application and filing; that he was informed by the local land officers that they would reject such application unless limited to the tract in controversy; that he then and there notified said local land officers that his house and the land he cultivated was upon and within said tract, and that he desired and intended to claim the same as a pre-emption, whether or not he was successful in a contest which he had in reference to the other tracts in the application; that he was told by them that if he was a settler in good faith his rights would be protected; that on the same day, but without his knowledge, the register made this indorsement upon the application:

"Land Office, Duluth, Minn., July 20th, 1885. The within *application to file D. S. [283] on the within described land is refused as to the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ and lots 5 and 6 of Sec. 30, T. 63. R. 11 W. for the reason that the date of settlement alleged herein does not antedate the unadjusted location of Sioux half-breed scrip No. 19 E, in the name of Orile Moreau, filed for location June 16, 1883. Said unadjusted scrip location having withdrawn said land from settlement under the pre-emption law subsequent to said date of filing of said scrip, to wit, June 16, 1883, you are allowed thirty days for appeal, and are advised that if you fail to do so within that time this decision will be final."

That said officers retained said application, and also indorsed it as follows: "Filed Aug. 20, 1885;" that ignorant of this last indorsement, and within the proper time, after July 20, 1885, he formally appealed from the action of the local land office to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which appeal was duly transmitted to that office on August 20, 1885; that thereafter, and on October 15, 1885, one Joseph H. Sharp, claiming to be the attorney in fact of James H. Warren, located the tract in controversy in the name of the said Warren, filing in support of said location certain Chippewa Indian scrip; that petitioner was ignorant of this location and filing until April 10, 1886, and then he made application in the local land office to contest said selection and location, and this application was also transmitted by the local land officers to the General Land Office at Washington.

The cross petition further alleged that on June 16, 1883, and before the surveys had been made of these lands, Orille Moreau, by her attorney in fact, located Sioux half-breed scrip Nos. 19 D and 19 E on lands therein described by metes and bounds, which locations, after the surveys, were adjusted by the local land officers in the name of the locator, as follows: Scrip No. 19 D upon lots 3, 5, and 6 and the S.E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 30, and No. 19 E upon lots 1 and 2 and the S.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N.E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the N.W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S.E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of said section 30; that on October 9, 1884, petitioner instituted a contest in the local land office against the said location of scrip No. 19 D, and on October 19, 1884, Angus McDonald a like contest against [284] the *location of said scrip No. 19 E; that on the hearing of this latter contest the following testimony was received:

Testimony of S. F. White.

S. F. White, being duly sworn upon oath, deposes and says: I am one of the attorneys for the contestant; I have made careful search through my safe and among all my papers for the contract of security given me by the contestants in these cases to secure me for advances and legal services, and I am unable to find it. I supposed until about two or three days before the day set for hearing that it was in the files of the case in my office, but I have looked through that and could not find it, and have made a careful search through my safe and among all my papers where I thought it could be, and have continued that search at various times up to this morning, when I made a last final search through my safe and have been unable to find it and have no idea where it is.

Testimony of Mr. Hyde.

Q. Did you have any contract with Mr.

White in writing or otherwise by which he was to receive any compensation or interest in the land?

A. Yes, there was a contract.

Q. Where is it?

A. I don't know.

Q. When and where did you see it last?

A. I have not seen it since it was drawn by Mr. White.

Q. What did it contain?

A. It contained when I prove up on the land I was to secure him on a one-half interest.

Q. Who witnessed the contract?

A. Powers, McDonald, and myself and Mr. White were together; that is all I recollect. I can't say whether Powers witnessed it or not. The last I knew of the contract Mr. White had it. Mr. Powers was not included in the contract with McDonald and myself and White.

Mr. McDonald's Testimony.

Mr. White has furnished me the supplies to keep me on the *claim. I am making the [285] improvements for myself. I don't know of anyone being interested in the claim except myself. Judge White has no interest in it. There is an understanding that he is to have an interest in it if we succeed in this trial. He is to have a half interest. I know R. D. Mallett; he has no interest in the claim, he is not going to have any.

The arrangement with Hyde is the same as mine. White is to have half if we succeed in this. James H. Powers is also to have an interest in it if we succeed. I don't know how much he is to get. I agreed to give him an interest if we succeeded in getting the land. Mr. Hyde went after Powers to come and testify in the case. I never had any talk with Mallett about the claim. Mr. White is paying the expenses of the claim with the understanding that he is to have a half of it if we secure it.

Redirect:

Q. The half interest you speak of Mr. White is to have was to be a deed of or security upon a half of the land for advances and services?

A. It was a security.

Q. This interest you have spoken of as to Mr. Powers and which you say you cannot fix the amount of, what was that? Was it not simply that he was to be paid for his time and services, and there was no telling how much he would have to put in it?

A. He was to be paid for his time; that is all I mean by an interest he was to have.

Cross-examination:

I am to let him have an interest in the land when I get it to pay him for his time and services. The contract I have with Mr. White for this one half is in writing.

Q. When you get this land is it not the understanding between you and Mr. White that you are to deed him an undivided one-half interest in it?

A. No, sir; we never mentioned a deed.

Q. What do you mean then by saying that White was to have a half interest?

A. To secure him for advances.

[286] Q. *Then, if it was to secure him for advances made, how can you give him a half interest unless you deed him one half?

A. I could not very well.

Q. Then your understanding is you are to deed him one half interest in it?

A. No; that is not my understanding.

Q. Really you do not know anything about it, do you?

A. I know my own transaction about it, but I don't know White's.

—that no further or other evidence was taken on either of said hearings relative to the said contract with the said White; and that by agreement this testimony offered in the McDonald case was to be considered in determining the validity of both locations, to wit, that of No. 19 D as well as that of No. 19 E. The cross petition then stated that such testimony was improperly admitted; that it was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial because not bearing upon the question of the validity of these scrip locations; that the local land officers upon the termination of the hearing found the scrip locations valid, and both the petitioner and McDonald appealed therefrom to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that the Commissioner reversed the decision of the local land officers and held the scrip locations invalid; and from his decision an appeal was taken by the locator to the Secretary of the Interior, who, on February 18, 1889, affirmed the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but erroneously and contrary to law held that said lands were open to entry by the first legal applicant. The cross petition then proceeded to show that for five succeeding years proceedings were continued in the land department at Washington and before the local land office at Duluth, in which repeated hearings and contests were had in reference to the validity of these scrip locations, and also of the location made by Warren of Chippewa scrip on the tract in controversy, the outcome of which was a final decision that Warren's application to enter this land with the Chippewa Indian scrip was valid and entitled to priority, and on the strength of that a patent was issued to him, and from him the plaintiff obtained its title.

[287] *Demurrers were interposed to the amended cross petition, which were sustained. On appeal to the supreme court of the state this ruling on the demurrers was on July 24, 1896, affirmed. 66 Minn. 24, 68 N. W. 95. Thereafter, in the district court, a reply was filed to the amended answer. The case came on for hearing on pleadings and proofs at the November term, 1896. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were made by the trial court, and judgment entered for the plaintiff, which judgment was thereafter, on April 22, 1898, affirmed by the supreme court (72 Minn. 16, 74 N. W. 1016), and reverse which judgment this writ of error was sued out.

177 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

Messrs. John Brennan and L. A. Pradt argued the cause, and Messrs. Arthur L. Sanborn and Louis K. Luse filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. James K. Redington argued the cause and, with Messrs. Frank B. Kellogg and J. H. Chandler filed a brief for defendants in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion [287] of the court:

The testimony is not preserved in the record, and no question can arise upon the findings of fact, for they are simply to the effect that the plaintiff had the legal title to an undivided $\frac{1}{2}$ and the leasehold right from the legal holders of the remaining $\frac{1}{2}$, and that the defendant was in possession without any color of title or right to the lands, so that the only questions which can be considered are those which arise upon the demurrers to the amended cross petition.

Upon the facts disclosed in that cross petition we remark that as the contest in reference to this tract was pending before the land department for nine years and carried on with exceeding vigor, as shown by the record of the frequent motions, applications, and so forth on the part of the respective parties, it would seem impossible to believe that the department was not fully advised of the facts respecting the locations and entries. We are not called upon to determine *whether every step in this protracted controversy was carried on with technical accuracy in the matter of procedure, and it may be, as counsel contend, that upon some of the motions and in some of the contests testimony was received which was not pertinent to that particular phase of the controversy, but it is quite evident that in one form or another, on some motion or another, in some stage of the proceedings, all the facts and claims of either party were fully presented, considered, and determined by the department. This is not a case on error, in which the regularity of every step taken in the land department is to be considered and determined, and upon that inquiry judgment entered, affirming or reversing its decision, but it is an independent suit in the courts in which the inquiry is whether the parties to the proceedings in the land department had full and proper notice of those proceedings, whether the department heard the claims and evidence offered by each party, and then whether upon the facts as found by it there was any error in matter of law in its decision. It may be remarked in passing that there is no allegation of corruption or perjury, or any of the grounds upon which sometimes a court of equity will set aside the conclusion of another tribunal, even where the proceedings are regular in form. And, as it is evident from the showing made in the cross petition that both parties were often and fully heard and no limitation placed upon their right to offer testimony, we must accept as conclusive the findings of fact made by the department, and inquire simply whether the law was properly adjudged.

Coming now to the merits of the controversy, the defendant, the cross petitioner, made a single application to enter 160 acres, one quarter of which is the tract in controversy. There were not two separate applications, one to enter the 40 and another the remaining 120 acres, and it cannot now be treated as though there were two. If the applicant was guilty of any violation of law such violation vitiated the proceeding in toto. This is not like Cornelius v. Kessel, 128 U. S. 457, 32 L. ed. 482, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122, in which an entry of two tracts was sought, one of which was not at the disposal of the United States by reason of its being within a swamp-land grant to the state, and [289] it was held that the validity of the *entry as to the other was not affected thereby. In that case there was no wrong on the part of the entryman. He had acted in good faith, had not attempted any fraud, or to do anything in disregard of the mandates of the statutes, either in letter or spirit, and obviously the land department erred in canceling the entire entry by reason of its covering land not subject to disposal. Here there was a distinct violation of law on the part of the entryman, and one which vitiated the application as a whole. The Revised Statutes, § 2262, require a pre-emption applicant to make affidavit "that he has not directly or indirectly made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the government of the United States should inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself," and also provide that "if any person taking such oath swears falsely in the premises, he shall forfeit the money which he may have paid for such land, and all right and title to the same." It was this statute which the land department found the applicant had violated, in that he was seeking to enter a portion of the land, not solely for his own benefit, but also in part for the benefit of others. It would be a gross perversion of the spirit of this statute to permit a party who has made a single application to enter a tract of land to ignore its unity after it has been proved that he has made a contract in defiance of the statute in reference to half the land, and have it divided into two separate and independent applications, and then his application sustained and his title confirmed as to that part of the land in respect to which he had made no contract. Such a construction would enable an applicant without any risk to speculate on the chances of escaping detection in his effort to violate the statute and thwart the purposes of Congress in the disposal of public lands.

No one can read the testimony which was offered before the land officers without perceiving that there was sufficient in it to justify a finding that the applicant had made a contract in direct violation of the statutory provisions. It is true he himself testified that he was to secure Mr. White "on a one-half interest," but the contract itself was not produced, having in some way disappeared, and McDonald, who was a party to it * (for it was a joint contract between [290] White, the applicant, and McDonald), testified that Mr. White, paying expenses, did so under an agreement that he was to have half of the land. We do not stop to inquire whether an agreement to give a mortgage for money advanced comes within the letter or spirit of the statute, for there was enough in the testimony to justify the conclusion of the department that it was a contract to divide the land when obtained, and it is not the province of the courts to review such finding of fact.

These are the only questions which we deem of importance, and, finding no error in the record, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Minnesota is affirmed.

MORRIS KEIM, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 290-296.)

Executive departments—discharge of clerk—review by court.

1. The action of the Secretary of the Interior in discharging a clerk in his department for incompetency is not subject to review in the courts, either by mandamus to reinstate the clerk, or by compelling payment of salary although he had not been removed, in the absence of any specific provision therefor by act of Congress.
2. The preference of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors for appointments to civil offices under the act of Congress of August 15, 1876, § 3 (19 Stat. at L. 169), and the civil service act of 1883, § 7 (22 Stat. at L. 406), is limited to cases in which such persons are "equally qualified," and does not authorize the appointment of incompetent or inefficient clerks.

[No. 57.]

Submitted March 5, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

APPEAL from the Court of Claims to review a decree dismissing a petition for salary of a clerk who had been discharged. Affirmed.

See same case below, 33 Ct. Cl. 174.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

*This case comes on appeal from a decree [290] of the court of claims dismissing appellant's petition. 33 Ct. Cl. 174. The findings of that court show that petitioner was on April 17, 1865, honorably discharged from the military service of the United States by reason of disability resulting from injuries received in such service. He passed the civil service examination, and on May 7, 1888, was appointed to a clerkship in the Post Office Department. On March 16, 1893, at his own

NOTE.—As to the right to remove officers summarily—see Trainor v. Wayne County Auditors (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. 95, and note.

[291] request and on the certificate of the civil service commission, he was transferred *to the Department of the Interior, and assigned to a clerkship in class 1 in the Pension Bureau, with a salary of $1,200 per year. On March 1, 1894, his salary was reduced to $1 000 per annum, at which salary he continued to serve to July 31, 1894, when he was discharged, and has not since been permitted to perform the duties of his clerkship, although ready and willing to do so. The discharge by the Secretary of the Interior was made upon this recommendation from the Commissioner of Pensions: "The discharge of Mr. Morris Keim was recommended because of his rating as inefficient. No other charges are made against him. William Lochren, Commissioner." The fourth and sixth findings are as follows:

"IV. At the time of his said discharge the requirements of the public service in said Pension Bureau demanded the retention of a clerk in plaintiff's place; the Secretary of the Interior, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Pensions, retained at the time of plaintiff's discharge, and now retains, other clerks of the same division who have received since plaintiff's discharge, and are now receiving, the same salary, to wit, $1,000 per annum (one receiving $1,200 per annum), who have not been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and who are not shown to this court, except as in these findings set forth, to have possessed at the time of plaintiff's discharge better or inferior business capacity for the proper discharge of the duties of their said offices than the qualifications for the said duties possessed by plaintiff at that time. On or about the day plaintiff received notice of his discharge additional clerks were appointed to duties in the same division in which he served in said bureau, who never rendered any military or naval service. It does not appear that any of these clerks were regarded or reported as inefficient by any superior officer; nor does it appear that those so retained or those thereafter appointed possessed better, or equal, or inferior qualifications for the discharge of the duties of their respective offices than those possessed therefor by the plaintiff."

"VI. There is no evidence that the plaintiff made any effort to secure other employment, or that he has, or has not, been employed at any kind of work from and after [292] his said discharge *July, 1894. Nor is there evidence as to the difference in amount between his salary while in the government service and any moneys he might have earned or could have reasonably earned or has earned in other ways since his said discharge."

The petitioner requested additional findings, of which the only portions material to this inquiry are in the latter part of finding 3, that "he was formally discharged from said service, without any fault of his own, and without just cause, and has not since said last-named date been permitted to discharge the duties of said clerkship, although he has at all times, since said last-named date, stood ready and willing to discharge the duties thereof." And finding 5: "That petitioner was at the time of his so-called discharge an efficient clerk, and discharged his duties faithfully and efficiently, and at the time of his said discharge he possessed and now possesses the necessary business capacity for the proper discharge of the duties of said clerkship."
177 U. S.

These findings the court declined to make, "deeming said requested findings, if true, to be irrelevant to the issue presented."

Mr. John C. Chaney submitted the cause for appellant.

Assistant Attorney General Boyd submitted the cause for appellee.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court: [292]

Upon these facts we are asked to decide whether the courts may supervise the action of the head of a department in discharging one of the clerks therein.

It has been repeatedly adjudged that the courts have no general supervising power over the proceedings and action of the various administrative departments of government. Thus, in Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. 497, 515, 10 L. ed. 559, 568, in which was presented the question of the right of the circuit court of the District of Columbia to issue a writ of mandamus to the Secretary of the Navy to perform an executive act not merely ministerial, but *involving the exercise of judgment, it was said by Chief Justice Taney: [293]

"The court could not entertain an appeal from the decision of one of the secretaries, nor revise his judgment in any case where the law authorized him to exercise discretion or judgment. Nor can it by mandamus act directly upon the officer and guide and control his judgment or discretion in the matters committed to his care in the ordinary discharge of his official duties. . . . The interference of the courts with the performance of the ordinary duties of the executive departments of the government would be productive of nothing but mischief; and we are quite satisfied that such a power was never intended to be given to them."

The same proposition was reaffirmed in United States ex rel. Dunlap v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 32 L. ed. 354, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 12, in an elaborate opinion by Mr. Justice Bradley. See also United States ex rel. Redfield v. Windom, 137 U. S. 636, 34 L. ed. 811, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 197; United States ex rel. Boynton v. Blaine, 139 U. S. 306, 35 L. ed. 183, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 607. In United States ex rel. McBride v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 396, 26 L. ed. 167, 171, it was said by Mr. Justice Miller:

"Congress has also enacted a system of laws by which rights to these lands may be acquired and the title of the government conveyed to the citizen. This court has with a strong hand upheld the doctrine that, so long as the legal title to these lands remained in the United States and the proceedings for acquiring it were as yet in fieri, the courts would not interfere to control the exercise of the power thus vested in that tribunal. To that doctrine we still adhere."

The appointment to an official position in the government, even if it be simply a clerical position, is not a mere ministerial act, but one involving the exercise of judgment. The appointing power must determine the fitness of the applicant; whether or not he is the proper one to discharge the duties of the position. Therefore it is one of those acts over which the courts have no general supervising power.

[294] In the absence of specific provision to the contrary, the power of removal from office is incident to the power of appointment. "It cannot for a moment be admitted that it was the intention of the Constitution that those offices which are denominated *inferior offices should be held during life. And if removable at pleasure, by whom is such removal to be made? In the absence of all constitutional provision or statutory regulation it would seem to be a sound and necessary rule to consider the power of removal as incident to the power of appointment." Re Hennen, 13 Pet. 230, 259, 10 L. ed. 138, 152; Parsons v. United States, 167 U. S. 324, 42 L. ed. 185, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 880. Unless, therefore, there be some specific provision to the contrary, the action of the Secretary of the Interior in removing the petitioner from office on account of inefficiency is beyond review in the courts either by mandamus to reinstate him or by compelling payment of salary as though he had not been removed.

The Revised Statutes, § 1754, provides:

"Persons honorably discharged from the military or naval service by reason of disability resulting from wounds or sickness incurred in the line of duty shall be preferred for appointments to civil offices, provided they are found to possess the business capacity necessary for the proper discharge of the duties of such offices."

But this does not avail the petitioner. He was preferred for appointment and held under that appointment for years. There was no disregard of that section either in letter or spirit; no evasion of its obligations. He was not appointed on one day and discharged on the next, but after his first appointment continued in service until it was found that he was inefficient.

Section 3 of the act of August 15, 1876 (19 Stat. at L. 169, chap. 287) is:

"That whenever, in the judgment of the head of any department, the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class, or by a female clerk, it shall be lawful for him to diminish the number of clerks of the higher grade and increase the number of the clerks of the lower grade within the limit of the total appropriation for such clerical service: Provided, That in making any reduction of force in any of the executive departments, the head of such department shall retain those persons who may be equally qualified who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors."

776

*In section 7 of the civil service act of 1883 [295] (22 Stat. at L. 406, chap. 27) is this proviso:

"But nothing herein contained shall be construed to take from those honorably discharged from the military or naval service any preference conferred by the seventeen hundred and fifty-fourth section of the Revised Statutes, nor to take from the President any authority not inconsistent with this act conferred by the seventeen hundred and fifty-third section of said statutes."

But these sections do not contemplate the retention in office of a clerk who is inefficient, nor attempt to transfer the power of determining the question of efficiency from the heads of departments to the courts. The proviso in section 3 of the act of August 15, 1876, expressly limits the preference to those "equally qualified."

No thoughtful person questions the obligations which the nation is under to those who have done faithful service in its army or navy. Congress has generously provided for the discharge of those obligations in a system of pensions more munificent than has ever before been known in the history of the world. But it would be an insult to the intelligence of Congress to suppose that it contemplated any degradation of the civil service by the appointment to or continuance in office of incompetent or inefficient clerks simply because they had been honorably discharged from the military or naval service. The preference, and it is only a preference, is to be exercised as between those "equally qualified," and this petitioner was discharged because of inefficiency. That, it may be said, does not imply misconduct but simply neglect, but a neglected duty often works as much against the interests of the government as a duty wrongfully performed, and the government has a right to demand and expect of its employees, not merely competency, but fidelity and attention to the duties of their positions.

Nowhere in these statutory provisions is there anything to indicate that the duty of passing, in the first instance, upon the qualifications of the applicants, or, later, upon the competency or efficiency of those who have been tested in the service, was taken away from the administrative officers and transferred to the courts. Indeed, it may well be doubted whether that is a *duty [296] which is strictly judicial in its nature. It would seem strange that one having passed a civil service examination could challenge the rating made by the commission, and ask the courts to review such rating, thus transferring from the commission, charged with the duty of examination, to the courts a function which is, at least, more administrative than judicial; and, if courts should not be called upon to supervise the results of a civil service examination, equally inappropriate would be an investigation into the actual work done by the various clerks, a comparison of one with another as to competency, attention to duty, etc. These are matters peculiarly within the province of those who are in charge of and superintending the departments; and, until Congress by some special and direct legislation makes provision to the contrary, we are clear that they must be settled by those administrative officers.

177 U. S.

We see no error in the conclusions of the Court of Claims, and its decree is affirmed.

CONSOLIDATED CANAL COMPANY.

Appt.

v.

MESA CANAL COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 296-305.)

Water power on irrigating canal—injury by dam on lower section—rights under contract.

The rights of one who has created a water power by lawfully raising one section of an irrigating canal, in the process of enlarging it under a contract with the owner entitling him to enlarge that section and have the use of the increased flow of water thereby caused, but making no provision for the creation of any water power in so doing, while it expressly provides that it shall not in any way interfere with the rights, titles, interests, or privileges of the owner of the canal, except as therein provided, are not infringed by a dam which the owner of the canal makes in the lower section thereof, raising the water therein so high that it destroys the water power, when this is done by him for the purpose of enabling him to irrigate therefrom lands to which the water could not be conducted from the canal without thus raising the level of the water therein.

[No. 200.]

Submitted March 15, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decision of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona affirming a decree in favor of the defendant in a suit to restrain the maintenance of a dam in an irrigating canal. Affirmed.

See same case below, 53 Pac. 575.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

This case comes on appeal from a decision of the supreme court of the territory of [297] Arizona (53 Pac. 575), affirming *a decree of the district court of Maricopa county in favor of the defendant in a suit brought by the appellant to restrain the defendant from maintaining in its canal a dam in such a way as to impede the flow of water in appellant's canal, or to destroy a certain water power claimed by appellant.

The facts, as shown by the findings and statement prepared by the supreme court, are as follows: The appellee was the owner of the Mesa canal. On January 10, 1891, it made a contract with A. J. Chandler, who subsequently transferred his rights thereunder to the appellant. The material portions of the contract are as follows:

"This article of agreement, made and entered into this 10th day of January, A. D. 1891, by and between the Mesa Canal Company, a corporation duly organized and legally existing under and by virtue of the laws of the territory of Arizona, having its principal office and place of business at Mesa city in the county of Maricopa and territory of Arizona, party of the first part, and A. J. Chandler, of the city of Phoenix, in the county and territory aforesaid, party of the second part, witnesseth:

"That, whereas, the said party of the first part is an irrigating corporation, and as such is now the owner operating the Mesa canal in said county and territory;

"And, whereas, said party of the second part desires to increase the size and capacity of said canal between the point in Salt river where the water is now taken out, or by consent of the directors of the Mesa Canal Company may hereafter be taken out, and a point in said Mesa canal known as 'Ayers' head gate,' so as to increase the flow of water through said portions of said canal as aforesaid, and for the purpose of the party of the second part, his associates and assigns, obtaining water thereby through said canal, and in order to have the said canal increased in size, dimensions, and capacity, without cost or expense to said party of the first part, and without in any way interfering with the rights, titles, interests, or privileges of said party of the first part in and to said canal and the water flowing through said canal, except as hereinafter provided.

"Now, therefore, the Mesa Canal Com-[298] pany, party of the first part, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to it in hand paid by the party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and for the further consideration and purposes herein contained and expressed, does for itself and for its successors or assigns hereby grant unto the said A. J. Chandler, his associates, heirs, or assigns, forever, the following rights and privileges upon the terms and conditions herein expressed, viz.:

"That the said A. J. Chandler, his associates, heirs, or assigns, shall have the right and privilege of entering upon any and all of the following portions of said Mesa canal at any time prior to the first day of March, A. D. 1891, for the purpose of widening and enlarging and increasing the size and capacity of said Mesa canal between the point in Salt river where the water is now or may hereafter be taken out for said canal, and a point on said canal known as 'Ayers' head gate' and enlarge and increase the size and dimensions of the main dam and head gates at the point of commencement of said canal in Salt river, and enlarge and increase the size and capacity of said Mesa canal so that the same when so enlarged and increased in size shall have a carrying capacity in addition to its present carrying capacity not exceeding forty thousand inches of water, miners' measurement, nor less than tenthousand inches of water, miners' measurement, and said enlargement shall be fully made and completed by the thirtieth day of December, A. D. 1891. The present carrying capacity of said Mesa canal for the purpose of this agreement shall be seven thousand inches, miners' measurement.

"All the cost and expense of enlarging and increasing the size of said dam, head gate, and canal as aforesaid shall be borne and paid by the party of the second part, his associates, heirs, or assigns, forever. And said enlargement shall be made without in any way interfering with any of the rights, titles, interests, or privileges of said party of the first part in and to the said canal and the water flowing through said canal, except as hereinafter provided.

[299] "The party of the first part hereby reserves the right to further *enlarge said portion of the Mesa canal whenever they deem it necessary to do so, provided such enlargement shall not interfere with or lessen the rights or privileges herein granted to the party of the second part, his associates, or assigns.

"Said party of the second part, his associates, or assigns, shall, in enlarging said main dam, head gates, and canal as aforesaid, in all respects enlarge said dam, head gates, and canal in a good, substantial, and workmanshiplike manner, according to the most approved methods of constructing and building irrigating canals.

"All suits, liabilities, costs, expenses, or judgments, and all damages or loss incurred or sustained by the party of the first part caused by said enlargement, shall be borne by the party of the second part, his associates or assigns forever, and all suits or proceedings against the party of the first part by reason of said enlargement to be defended at the expense of the party of the second part.

"It is expressly understood and agreed by the parties hereto, their successors, or assigns, that at all times when there is an abundance of water in Salt river liable to appropriation and flowage through said canal when so enlarged, then and at all such times the said party of the first part shall have the right to use from said canal in addition to the amount hereinbefore specified as the capacity of said canal two thousand inches of water, miners' measurement.

"The management and control of the canal between the point known as 'Ayers' head gate' to and including the dam in Salt river, when so enlarged as aforesaid, shall be in the party of the second part, his heirs, associates, or assigns. Provided, that the party of the second part, his heirs, associates, or assigns, shall, before he or they are entitled to receive or use any water through said canal, first deliver to the party of the first part, their heirs, or assigns, at the point in said Mesa canal known as 'Ayers' head gate,' and shall continue to deliver the seven thousand inches of water, miners' measurement, above expressed as the carrying capacity of said Mesa canal, or such portion thereof as may be apportioned to said Mesa canal by decree of any court. Provided, the stockholders who are now using or may *hereaft-[300] er use water above the 'Ayers' head gate' shall have their water delivered to them as at present above the 'Ayers' head gate' aforesaid, or said stockholders shall have their water delivered to them at the 'Ayers' head gate' with the other stockholders, as they may demand. Provided, further, that the water shall be delivered to the party of the first part after the completion of said canal as aforesaid for a period of five years, without cost to the party of the first part, their successors or assigns, and thereafter for a sum not exceeding three dollars per share per year forever, to be paid for in the same manner as they now pay for the same.

778

"Provided, further, that if the said party of the second part, his associates, heirs, or assigns, shall neglect to deliver water as agreed herein, or shall fail to carry out any of the terms of this agreement, and shall be notified by the directors of the Mesa Canal Company of such failure or neglect to carry out the terms of this agreement, and shall still neglect to carry out the terms of this agreement for a period of ten days thereafter, or in such case as a break in the canal, head gates, and dam, whereby the water is turned out for a period of five days, then and at all such times it is hereby agreed by the party of the second part, his heirs, associates, or assigns, that the directors of the Mesa Canal Company shall have the right and power to take full charge and control of said enlarged portion of said Mesa canal without process of law, and the same shall become the property of the Mesa Canal Company and shall so remain until the party of the second part, his associates, heirs, or assigns, shall fully comply with the term and requirements of this agreement, and then shall revert back to the party of the second part, his associates, heirs, or assigns, and shall be and remain in the party of the second part, his associates, heirs, or assigns, so long as the terms of this agreement shall be by them complied with.

"This agreement shall not give or convey to the party of the second part, his associates, heirs, or assigns, any title or ownership in or to the capital stock of said Mesa Canal Company, but shall only convey such privileges and rights as are herein mentioned."

*The appellant, as the transferee from [301] Chandler, enlarged and reconstructed the Mesa canal down to a place called the "Division Gates," which point had by mutual consent been substituted for Ayers' head gate as the point of division of the waters, and delivery by the appellant to the appellee of the water to which the latter was entitled. In thus enlarging and reconstructing the canal the appellant raised the grade thereof for the purpose of carrying the water at a higher elevation, thereby enabling the canal to cover more and other lands, and at the point where the division gates were located the elevation was about five feet above the grade of the canal before reconstruction, and by the construction of those gates at the point the appellant delivering the water to the appellee secured a fall of five feet in the water thus delivered.

177 U.S.

Other findings were as follows:

"After appellant had delivered the water in the manner aforesaid for some years, the appellee built a dam in its canal a short distance below the division gates, that raised the water and caused it to flow through a lateral ditch, which enabled the appellee to irrigate some lands on which it had not been able to place water through its canal from its former elevation. The effect of this raise in the water was to reduce the fall at the division gates.

"After appellee had built its dam and backed up the water, as aforesaid, appellant had constructed a water wheel and a mill for grinding grain to be driven thereby, and had erected them at the division gates, so that the wheel was turned by the water as it fell from the division gate into the Mesa canal, a distance of about 5 feet. Afterwards appellant increased the height of the dam that it had formerly built to such an extent that it raised the surface of the water and backed the same up against the division gate in such manner as to destroy $3\frac{1}{2}$ feet of the 5 feet fall and totally destroyed the water power.

[302] "The water raised by the dam and the water affording the water power thus destroyed is the 7,000 inches of water which appellant is obligated by the terms of the agreement aforesaid *to first deliver to the appellee before said appellant is entitled to receive or use any water through said canal.

"A further result of the erection of the water in appellee's canal below the division gates was to very slightly, if at all, impede the flow of water in appellant's canal above the division gates and thereby detract very slightly from the carrying capacity of appellant's canal.

"The cost of the reconstruction of the canal from Ayers' head gate to the division gates exceeded $10,000, and the water power created at the fall was equal to about 40 horse power."

Mr. John D. Pope submitted the cause for appellant.

Messrs. C. M. Frazier, R. C. Garland, and W. W. Wright, Jr., submitted the cause for appellee.

[302] *Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

While the title to any portion of the Mesa canal may not have been changed by this contract, yet for convenience we shall speak of that portion thereof under the control of the appellant as its canal, and of the balance as the appellee's canal.

In view of the finding of the supreme court we need not stop to consider any question in respect to the influence of the dam placed by appellee upon the flow of water in appellant's canal, and this notwithstanding the fact that in the trial of the case much of the testimony, pro and con, was in reference to that matter. We are concluded as to the question of fact by the finding, and it is familiar law that injunction will not issue to enforce a right that is doubtful, or to restrain an act the injurious consequences of which are merely trifling. Parker v. Winnipiscogee Lake Cotton & Woollen Co. 2 Black, 545, 552, 17 L. ed. 333, 337.

We pass, therefore, to the only substantial question, which is whether the dam built by appellee, having the effect as it did of raising the flow of water in its canal so as to destroy the water power obtained by appellant through the construction of its canal, was an infringement of the rights secured to appellant by the contract of January 10, 191. The appellant seems to be of the opinion that by that contract it had a right to raise its canal to such an elevation as it saw fit, while the appellee had no such liberty. We search the contract in vain for any express stipulation to that effect. If the appellant had a right to raise the grade of its canal 5 feet, we see nothing to forbid the appellee to raise its grade to the same height. There is no reference in the contract to water power. Obviously the only matter then contemplated was a supply of water for irrigation purposes. The appellee is styled "an irrigating corporation, and as such . . . operating the Mesa canal." The expressed purpose of appellant was "obtaining water thereby through said canal." The water power was evidently an afterthought, suggested by the condition of things when the appellant had finished the reconstruction of its canal. The appellant must point to some stipulation in the contract which the action of the appellee has broken, for the entire right given by it to the appellant is declared to be "without in any way interfering with the rights, titles, interests, or privileges of said party of the first part in and to said canal and the water flowing through said canal, except as hereinafter provided."

No right passed to the appellant except that which was expressly named. All other rights, titles, interests, or privileges were retained by the appellee. The appellant was to deliver the 7,000 inches of water out of the enlarged canal, and the appellee was to receive and pay therefor. The appellant was to increase the carrying capacity of the canal not less than 10,000 nor more than 40,000 inches, and this surplus water it had a right to use. But the appellee reserved the right if it saw fit at any time to still further enlarge the carrying capacity of the canal, and the only limitation in respect to such enlargement was that it should not "interfere with or lessen the rights" granted to the appellant. What were those rights? Obviously the right to take and use the surplus over 7,000 inches of water flowing through the canal, as enlarged by appellant.

It may be that neither party to this contract could change the grade of its canal so as to compel the other to make a like *change of grade. Thus, when the appellant, in the first instance, enlarged and reconstructed its canal, it raised the grade 5 feet. If it had seen fit to lower the grade 5 feet, instead of raising it, doubtless, in order to fulfil its contract of delivery, it would have had to provide some pumping arrangements, and could not have demanded that the appellee lower its grade 5 feet in order to receive the water. And so it may be that the appellee could not now raise its grade 10 feet and then demand that the appellant either raise its grade 5 feet more or put in pumping works to insure the delivery of the water. But as to any action which does not interfere with the delivery of water by the appellant to the appellee, there is nothing in the contract to restrain at least the appellee from doing as it pleases with its canal.

It does not appear that the appellee was acting maliciously and for the mere sake of injuring the appellant. On the contrary, its purpose as disclosed was to irrigate lands which it had not theretofore been able to irrigate from its former elevation, and we know of no reason why it had not a right to do so. It made no stipulation as to the lands which it should irrigate. It had the same right which it had before the contract of enlarging or reducing the number of acres reached by the flow of its water. It does not appear that the lands which it was seeking to irrigate by raising the elevation in the upper part of its canal could have been reached in any other way, and it was not bound to desist from any enlargement of its own business for the mere benefit of the appellant or to enable the latter to enjoy something which was not conveyed to it by the terms of the contract.

We need not stop to inquire what are the rights of separate appropriators of water in the absence of a contract. We are dealing with those which grow out of this contract, bearing in mind that all rights are reserved to the appellee which are not in terms granted to the appellant. If 7,000 inches of water was more than sufficient to supply the territory which it was then irrigating, there is nothing which forbade the appellee to enlarge that area, and in order to enable it to reach that larger area it might make any [305] change in the construction of its canal—at least any change which did not interfere with the free delivery of the water by the appellant.

We see no error in the decision of the Supreme Court of Arizona, and its judgment is affirmed.

UNITED STATES, Petitioner,
v.

JOSEPH S. HARRIS, Edward M. Paxson, and John Lowber Welsh, Receivers of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 305-310.)

Receivers—liability under statutes regulating carriers of live stock.

NOTE.—As to statutory duties of carriers of live stock with reference to care of stock during transportation—see Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. American Exch. Bank (Va.) 44 L. R. A. 449, and note Railroad receivers are not liable to an action for penalties under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 4386-4389, for failure to comply with the regulations as to transportation of live stock by "any company, owner, or custodian of such animals," since receivers are plainly not within the letter of the statute and not necessarily within its purpose or spirit, and therefore, as the statute is penal, it cannot be construed to extend to them.

780

[No. 169.]

Argued March 5, 6, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment in favor of defendants in an action against railroad receivers for penalties. Affirmed.

See same case below, 57 U. S. App. 259, 85 Fed. Rep. 533, 29 C. C. A. 327.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

*This was a suit brought in November, [305] 1895, in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, by the United States against Joseph S. Harris, Edward M. Paxson, and John Lowber Welsh, receivers of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Company, to recover a penalty in the sum of $500 for an alleged violation of §§ 4386, 4387, 4388, and 4389 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

There was a verdict in favor of the United States, but afterwards, on a question reserved at the trial, judgment was entered in favor of the defendants non obstante veredicto. 78 Fed. Rep. 290. Thereupon a writ of error was sued out from the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit, and on March 14, 1898, the judgment of the district court was affirmed. 57 U. S. App. 259, 85 Fed. Rep. 533, 29 C. C. A. 327. The cause was then brought to this court on a writ of certiorari.

Solicitor General John K. Richards argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner.

Mr. John G. Lamb argued the cause and filed a brief for respondents.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion [306] of the court:

This was an action to recover penalties for an alleged violation of the laws of the United States relating to the transportation of live stock; and the question involved is whether the defendants, who were in charge and control of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad as receivers, appointed by the circuit court of the United States, were liable in such an action.

The act under which this suit was brought was passed March 3, 1873, and was entitled "An Act to Prevent Cruelty to Animals while in Transit by Railroad or Other Means of Transportation within the United States."

177 U.S.

It appears in the Revised Statutes as §§ 4386, 4387, 4388, and 4389, as follows:

"Sec. 4386. No railroad company within the United States whose road forms any part of a line of road over which cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals are conveyed from one state to another, or the owners or masters of steam, sailing, or other vessels carrying or transporting cattle, sheep, swine, or other animals from one state to another, shall confine the same in cars, boats, or vessels of any description for a longer period than twenty-eight consecutive hours, without unloading the same for rest, water, and feeding for a period of at least five consecutive hours, unless prevented from so unloading by storm or other accidental causes. In estimating such confinement the time during which the animals have been confined without such rest on connecting roads from which they are received shall be included, it being the intent of this section to prohibit their continuous confinement beyond the period of twenty-eight hours, except upon contingencies hereinbefore stated.

"Sec. 4387. Animals so unloaded shall be properly fed and watered during such rest by the owner or person having the custody thereof, or in case of his default in so doing, then by the railroad company or owners or masters of boats or vessels transporting the same at the expense of the owner or person in custody thereof; and such company, owners, or masters shall in such case have a lien upon such animals for food, care, [307] and *custody furnished, and shall not be liable for any detention of such animals.

"Sec. 4388. Any company, owner, or custodian of such animals who knowingly and willingly fails to comply with the provisions of the two preceding sections, shall, for every such failure, be liable for and forfeit and pay a penalty of not less than $100 nor more than $500. But when animals are carried in cars, boats, or other vessels in which they can and do have proper food, water, space, and opportunity to rest, the provisions in regard to their being unloaded shall not apply.

"Sec. 4389. The penalty created by the preceding sections shall be recovered by civil action in the name of the United States, in the circuit or district court of the United States, holden within the district where the violation may have been committed, or the person or corporation resides or carries on its business; and it shall be the duty of all United States marshals, their deputies and subordinates, to prosecute all violations which come to their notice or knowledge."

The contention on behalf of the government is that, by the words "any company," used in § 4388, Congress intended to embrace all common carriers, whether by rail or water, upon whom the duty was imposed by § 4386 of unloading and feeding the animals; that the word "company" is used in a popular sense as signifying the person or persons, the association or corporation, carrying on the business of a common carrier by rail or water; that, as shown by its title, the act in question was a humane one, designed to prevent cruelty to animals while in course of interstate transit; that the regulations were to be complied with whenever animals were transported by rail or boat from one state or another; and that whoever had charge of the railroad or the boat had to see that these wholesome and humane regulations were obeyed, or had to pay the penalty for violating them.

To strengthen the argument that Congress intended to include even receivers when managing a railroad under an appointment by a court, the government's counsel calls attention *to the provisions of the 2d and [308] 3d sections of the act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 436, chap. 866), reading as follows:

"Sec. 2. That whenever in any cause pending in any court of the United States there shall be a receiver or manager in possession of any property such receiver or manager shall manage and operate such property according to the requirements of the valid laws of the state in which such property shall be situated, in the same manner that the owner or possessor thereof would be bound to do if in possession thereof. Any receiver or manager who shall wilfully violate the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding three thousand dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

"Sec. 3. That every receiver or manager of any property appointed by any court of the United States may be sued in respect of any act or transaction of his in carrying on the business connected with such property, without the previous leave of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed; but such suit shall be subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court in which such receiver or manager was appointed, so far as the same shall be necessary to the ends of justice."

It is claimed that the effect of such legislation is to place receivers upon the same plane with railway companies as respects their liability to be sued for acts done while operating a railroad.

Upon the whole, the proposition of the government's counsel is that the words "any company, owner, or custodian of such animals," used in § 4388, are intended to cover all those who can possibly violate the preceding two sections; that the words "every company" must, therefore, be held to include a railroad company, whether a person, a partnership or a corporation, and whether acting individually, or through officers or receivers.

It may be conceded that it was the intention of Congress to subject receivers of railroad companies, appointed such by courts of the United States, to the valid laws and regulations of the states and of the United States, whose object is to promote the safety, comfort, and convenience of the traveling public. But *we are not now concerned with [309] the general intention of Congress, but with its special intention, manifested in the enactments under which this suit was brought. Was it the purpose of Congress when prescribing a penalty for any company, owner, or custodian of animals who knowingly and willingly fails to comply with the directions of the statute, to include receivers? Can we fairly bring receivers within the penal clause by reasoning from a supposed or an apparent motive in Congress in passing the act?

It was the view of the courts below that receivers were plainly not within the letter of the statute, and not necessarily within its purpose or spirit; and an attentive examination has brought us to the same conclusion.

It must be admitted that, in order to hold the receivers, they must be regarded as included in the word "company." Only by a strained and artificial construction, based chiefly upon a consideration of the mischief which the legislature sought to remedy, can receivers be brought within the terms of the law. But can such a kind of construction be resorted to in enforcing a penal statute? Giving all proper force to the contention of the counsel of the government, that there has been some relaxation on the part of the courts in applying the rule of strict construction to such statutes, it still remains that the intention of a penal statute must be found in the language actually used, interpreted according to its fair and obvious meaning. It is not permitted to courts, in this class of cases, to attribute inadvertence or oversight to the legislature when enumerating the classes of persons who are subjected to a penal enactment, nor to depart from the settled meaning of words or phrases in order to bring persons not named or distinctly described within the supposed purpose of the statute.

It may well be that Congress, in omitting to expressly include receivers in these sections, intended to leave them subject to the control and direction of the courts, whose officers they are. It does not, therefore, follow that the statute in question would be without operation where railroads are in the hands of receivers. The owners and custodians of the stock would still remain subject to the punishment prescribed.

[310] *We cannot better close this discussion than by quoting the language of Chief Justice Marshall, in the case of United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 76, 5 L. ed. 37:

"The rule that penal laws are to be construed strictly is perhaps not much less old than construction itself. It is founded on the tenderness of the law for the rights of individuals, and on the plain principle that the power of punishment is vested in the legislative, and not in the judicial, department. It is the legislature, not the court, which is to define a crime and ordain its punishment. It is said that, notwithstanding this rule, the intention of the lawmaker must govern in the construction of penal as well as other statutes. . . . But this is not a new independent rule which subverts the old. It is a modification of the ancient maxim, and amounts to this, that though penal laws are to be construed strictly, they are not to be construed so strictly as to defeat the obvious intention of the legislature. The maxim is not to be so applied as to narrow the words of the statute to the exclusion of cases which those words, in their ordinary acceptance, or in that sense in which the legislature has obviously used them, would comprehend. The intention of the legislature is to be collected from the words they employ. Where there is no ambiguity in the words there is no room for construction. The case must be a strong one indeed which would justify a court in departing from the plain meaning of words,—especially in a penal act, in search of an intention which the words themselves did not suggest. To determine that a case is within the intention of a statute its language must authorize us to say so. It would be dangerous, indeed, to carry the principle that a case which is within the reason or mischief of a statute is within its provisions, so far as to punish a crime not enumerated in the statute because it is of equal atrocity, or of a kindred character with those which are enumerated. If this principle has ever been recognized in expounding criminal law, it has been in cases of considerable irritation, which it would be unsafe to consider as precedents forming a general rule for other cases." See likewise Sarlls v. United States, 152 U. S. 570, 38 L. ed. 556, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 720.

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals is affirmed.

*CREDITS COMMUTATION COMPANY[311]
and Combination Bridge Company, Appts.,

v.

UNITED STATES et al. (No. 233.)

CREDITS COMMUTATION COMPANY et al., Appts.,

v.

F. GORDON DEXTER and Oliver Ames, 2d. Trustees, et al. (No. 234.)

CREDITS COMMUTATION COMPANY
et al.

v.

OLIVER AMES, 2d, and Samuel Carr, Executors, et al. (No. 235.)

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 311-317.)

Appeal—from denial of intervention—adjudication against intervenor's claim.

A statement in an order denying leave to in-

NOTE.—As to what is "final decree" or judgment of state or other court from which appeal lies—see note to Gibbons v. Ogden, 5 L. ed. U. S. 302.

As to what decrees are final—see note to Brush Electric Co. v. Electric Improv. Co. 2 C. C. A. 379.

As to orders, judgments, and decrees reviewable in the circuit court of appeals—see note to Salmon v. Mills, 13 C. C. A. 374.

tervene, that leave is denied, "not as matter of discretion, but because said petitions do not state facts sufficient to show that the petitioners, or either of them, have a legal right to intervene," does not amount to an adjudication against the rights asserted in the petitions as if upon demurrer thereto, but the denial is only an exercise of usual discretion in passing upon the right of intervention, which is not a final decision for the purpose of appeal.

[Nos. 233, 234, & 235.]

Submitted February 26, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

A PPEALS from orders of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit denying petitions for leave to intervene. Affirmed.

See same case below, 62 U. S. App. 728, 91 Fed. Rep. 570, 34 C. C. A. 12.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

[311] *On October 9, 1893, Oliver Ames, 2d, and Samuel Carr, executors of Frederick L. Ames, deceased, and Peter B. Wyckoff and Edwin F. Atkins, filed in the circuit court of the United States for the eighth circuit a bill of complaint against the Union Pacific Railway Company and a number of other companies in which the Union Pacific Railway Company had interests, praying for the appointment of receivers, the enforcement of certain alleged liens, and the administration of the properties of the Union Pacific Railway Company. On October 13, 1893, S. H. H. Clark, Oliver W. Mink, Ellery Anderson were appointed receivers, and on November 13, 1893, upon petition of the Attorney General of the United States, John W. Doane and Frederick R. Coudert were appointed additional receivers.

On January 21, 1895, a bill of complaint was filed in the said circuit court by F. Gordon Dexter and Oliver Ames, 2d, as trustees of the first mortgage of the Union Pacific Railway Company, to foreclose that mortgage.

[312] At the May term, 1897, the United States filed, in a circuit court of the United States for the eighth judicial circuit, a bill of complaint against the Union Pacific Railway Company, and against S. H. H. Clark, Oliver W. Mink, Ellery Anderson, John W. Doane, and Frederick R. Coudert, who had theretofore, on October 13, 1893, in the suit brought in said court by Oliver Ames, Samuel Carr, and others against the said Union Pacific *Railway Company, been appointed receivers therefor, and against F. Gordon Dexter and Oliver Ames, as trustees, the Union Trust Company of New York, as trustee, J. Pierpont Morgan and Edwin F. Atkins, trustees, the Central Trust Company of New York, as trustee. The object of this bill was to secure a decree of foreclosure of the subsidy lien of the United States upon the property of the Union Pacific Railway Company between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and a point 5 miles west of Ogden, Utah.

On April 28, 1897, the Credits Commutation Company, a corporation of the state of Iowa filed a petition in each of said three 177 U. S.

cases, praying for leave to intervene therein as a party, and to be heard to assert certain alleged rights and interests. On May 22, 1897, the Combination Bridge Company, a corporation of the state of Iowa, also filed petitions in said cases for leave to intervene therein for the same reasons set forth at length in the petitions of the Credits Commutation Company. On May 24, 1897, after hearing the counsel of the respective parties, an order was entered by the circuit court denying the prayers for leave to intervene, and on the same day an appeal was allowed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit. On December 7, 1898, motions by the appellees to dismiss said appeals were sustained, and said appeals were accordingly dismissed; and thereupon the appellants in open court prayed an appeal to this court, which was allowed. Credits Commutation Co. v. Ames, 62 U. S. App. 728, 91 Fed. Rep. 570, 34 C. C. A. 12. Motion to dismiss or affirm was submitted.

Messrs. Henry J. Taylor and John C. Coombs submitted the cause for appellants in Nos. 233, 234, 235:

Even if the decree or order appealed from was within the discretion of the circuit court, and an exercise thereof, nevertheless the same would remain reviewable on appeal.

Farmers' Loan & T. Co., Petitioner, 129 U. S. 206, 32 L. ed. 656, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265.

The decree of the circuit court appealed from shows upon its face that the circuit court refused to exercise discretion, and did adjudicate upon the merits and law, questions, and the decision therefore properly presents questions reviewable on appeal.

Pittsfield Nat. Bank v. Bayne, 140 N. Y. 321, 35 N. E. 630; The New England, 3 Sumn. 495, Fed. Cas. No. 10,151; United States v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577, 38 L. ed. 276, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. 140, 36 L. ed. 917, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50; Hays v. Victoria Copper Min. Co. 160 U. S. 303, 40 L. ed. 436, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 282.

The order of dismissal on its face expressly negatives the exercise of discretion, and shows that it is preceded by a determination and denial of the appellants' rights, and proceeds solely from such determination and denial. The order is therefore a final determination of the appellants' rights and is appealable.

People ex rel. Smith v. Fire & Bldg. Dept. Comrs. 103 N. Y. 370, 8 N. E. 730, and cases cited.

The very purpose of this sequestration was avowedly a final disposition of all rights, title, and assets, as completely as though the same constituted a mere fund in court.

Central Trust Co. v. Grant Locomotive Works, 135 U. S. 207, 34 L. ed. 97, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 736.

To constitute a final judgment it is not essential that it should be a bar to another suit.

Colorado Eastern R. Co. v. Union P. R. Co. 94 Fed. Rep. 312, 36 C. C. A. 263.

Attorney General Griggs, Solicitor General Richards, and Mr. John C. Cowin 783

submitted the cause for appellee the United States in Nos. 233, 234:

The decision in order to be reviewable must be final, and the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, establishing the circuit court of appeals, has made no change in this fundamental requirement.

McLish v. Roff, 141 U. S. 661, 35 L. ed. 893, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Roberts, 141 U. S. 690, 35 L. ed. 905, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123; American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 148 U. S. 372, 37 L. ed. 486, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 758; Kirwan v. Murphy, 170 U. S. 205, 42 L. ed. 1009, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 592.

The orders of the circuit court of the United States for the district of Nebraska denying the appellants leave to intervene were not final decisions of that court. Hence they were not appealable orders. This is perfectly well settled.

United States v. Girault, 11 How. 22, 13 L. ed. 587; Dainese v. Kendall, 119 U. S. 53, 30 L. ed. 305, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65; Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. ed. 49; Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. v. Continental Trust Co. 95 Fed. Rep. 497, 36 C. C. A. 155.

Orders granting or denying leave to intervene in pending cases are discretionary and hence not appealable. Decisions which rest in the judicial discretion of a court of original jurisdiction cannot be reviewed in an appellate court.

Cook v. Burnley, 11 Wall. 672, 20 L. ed. 84; Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. ed. 49; Connor v. Peugh, 18 How. 394, 15 L. ed. 432; Hamlin v. Continental Trust Co. 47 U. S. App. 422, 78 Fed. Rep. 664, 24 C. C. 271, 36 L. R. A. 826; Re Streett, 8 U. S. App. 645, 62 Fed. Rep. 218, 10 C. C. A. 446; Smith v. Glasgow Invest. Co. 42 U. S. App. 105, 74 Fed. Rep. 332, 20 C. C. A. 432; United States v. Thomas, 151 U. S. 577, 38 L. ed. 276, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426.

Recitals by a court, in its order, of opinions of law or fact, or by way of inducement, are immaterial and give to such orders or decrees no different aspect or character for the purpose of review, or of determining whether they are reviewable. Such determination is to be governed solely by the essence of what is done, and not by the appellation given to it in the order.

Corning v. Troy Iron & Nail Factory, 15 How. 451, 14 L. ed. 768; Potter v. Beal, 5 U. S. App. 49, 50 Fed. Rep. 860, 2 C. C. A. 60; Caverly v. Deere, 24 U. S. App. 617, 66 Fed. Rep. 309, 13 C. C. A. 452; Russell v. Kern, 34 U. S. App. 90, 69 Fed. Rep. 94, 16 C. C. A. 154; Evans v. Suess Ornamental Glass Co. 53 U. S. App. 567, 83 Fed. Rep. 708, 28 C. C. A. 24.

Messrs. Winslow S. Pierce, William R. Kelly, and G. M. Lambertson submitted the cause for other appellees in Nos. 233, 234. Messrs. John F. Dillon and Lawrence Greer were with them on the brief.

Messrs. Winslow S. Pierce, John F. Dillon, William R. Kelly, and G. M. Lambertson submitted the cause for appellees in No. 235. Mr. Lawrence Greer was with them on the brief.

784

Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion[312] of the court:

The Credits Commutation Company and the Combination *Bridge Company, corpora-[313] tions of the state of Iowa, filed petitions for leave to intervene in three suits against the Union Pacific Railway Company. The object of those suits was to enforce by foreclosure the payment of bonds secured by mortgage and of a debt due to the United States created by certain subsidy bonds, and, pending such proceedings, the appointment of receivers to prevent the disintegration of properties of the railway company.

The Combination Bridge Company is the owner of a bridge across the Missouri river at Sioux City. The Credits Commutation Company is the owner of the stock of the bridge company, and also of interests in the capital stock of certain railroads connected by the said bridge. The petition alleges that the Credits Commutation Company was organized for the purpose of connecting said bridge and railroads with the Union Pacific Railway.

The Union Pacific Railway Company is a consolidated company, composed of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and Congress, by the act of July 1, 1862, in order to "secure to the government the use of the same," conferred upon said companies grants of large and valuable tracts of the public lands, and further subsidized said companies by an advance to them of the public credit in the form of bonds of the United States. The 15th section of the said act of July 1, 1862, was in the following terms:

"And be it further enacted, That any other railroad company now incorporated, or hereafter to be incorporated, shall have the right to connect their road with the road and branches provided for by this act, at such places and upon such just and equitable terms as the President of the United States may prescribe. Wherever the word 'company' is used in this act it shall be construed to embrace the words 'their associates, successors, and assigns,' as if the words had been properly added thereto."

The petition alleges that the Credits Commutation Company was organized in the latter part of 1894, but admits that said company has abstained from making any application to the President of the United States to fix the place at which, and the *just and[314] equitable terms upon which, said company should build a railroad to connect with the road of the Union Pacific Railway Company, because the latter company had been embarrassed and all its property was in the hands of receivers, and bills to foreclose in behalf of the holders of mortgage bonds and to enforce the creditor rights of the United States had been filed. It seems to be the theory of the petitioners that, under the provisions of the act of Congress, they have a right to connect their railroads, now or to be constructed, with the railroad of the Union Pacific Railway Company, and that they have, therefore, a right to intervene in the foreclosure proceedings, in order to protest their right to so connect and to protect the right of the public in such railroad connections.

177 U. S.

As heretofore stated, the circuit court denied the petitions for leave to intervene, and upon appeal to the circuit court of appeals that court dismissed the appeals. The view of the circuit court of appeals was that the order of the circuit court refusing leave to intervene was not a final judgment or decree from which an appeal could be taken, and that, at any rate, the action of the lower court in refusing leave to intervene was not reviewable on appeal, inasmuch as it rested in the sound discretion of the chancellor to admit or reject the intervention. 62 U. S. App. 728, 731, 91 Fed. Rep. 570, 571, 34 C. C. A. 12, 13.

To show that the circuit court, in denying the petition for leave to intervene, was not exercising the usual discretion of a chancellor in passing upon a petition of an outside party for leave to intervene, but adjudicated the petitioners' rights asserted in the petitions, as if upon demurrer thereto, we are pointed to the language used: "Ordered, that the prayers of the petitioners for leave to intervene herein be and the same are hereby denied, not as matter of discretion, but because said petitions do not state facts sufficient to show that the petitioners, or either of them, have a legal right to intervene."

It is urged that the circuit court declined to treat the subject as of one of discretion, and elected to determine the legal rights of the petitioners, so as to preclude them from resorting thereafter to some other tribunal, and that, therefore, its judgment was a final one and properly reviewable on appeal.

[315] *We cannot accept this view of the meaning and effect of the order in question. What was sought in the petitions was leave to intervene in a pending and undetermined cause, and that right alone was determined. The very terms used by the court, that the facts stated were "not sufficient to show that the petitioners, or either of them, have a legal right to intervene," shows that what was considered was the right to intervene. That right refused, the petitioners were left free to assert such other rights as they might possess in any other tribunal. That this was the view of Judge Sanborn himself is seen in the following language of his opinion:

"Whatever the petitioners' right or interest may be, it is nothing more than a contingent, speculative, future possibility. It is contingent, because it is conditioned upon the construction of a railroad. It is speculative, because it depends for its existence upon the question whether or not capitalists shall see sufficient profit in the construction of such a railroad to induce them to put in the necessary money for that purpose. It is future, because it has not yet come into existence, and it is possible, because it may come into existence. Courts of equity are not accustomed, perhaps they have not the power, to adjudicate upon possible rights which are not in being and which are merely susceptible of coming into being at some unlimited time in the future."

The question was well considered by the circuit court of appeals, and we quote and adopt its statement, as follows:

"When such action is taken, that is to say, when leave to intervene in an equity case is asked and refused, the rule, so far as we are aware, is well settled that the order thus made denying leave to intervene is not regarded as a final determination of the merits of the claim on which the intervention is based, but leaves the petitioner at full liberty to assert his rights in any other appropriate form of proceeding. Such an order not only lacks the finality which is necessary to support an appeal, but it is usually said of it that it cannot be reviewed, because it merely involves an exercise of the discretionary powers of the trial court. . . . It is doubtless true that cases may arise where the denial of the right of a third party to intervene therein would be *a practical denial [316] of certain relief to which the intervenor is fairly entitled, and which he can only obtain by an intervention. Cases of this sort are those where there is a fund in court undergoing administration to which a third party asserts some right which will be lost in the event that he is not allowed to intervene before the fund is dissipated. In such cases an order denying leave to intervene is not discretionary with the chancellor, and will generally furnish the basis for an appeal, since it finally disposes of the intervenor's claim by denying him all right to relief. The cases at bar, however, are not of that character. The petitioners were under no obligation to intervene in the litigation against the Union Pacific Railway Company to preserve their alleged right to form a junction with the road of that company when they should have completed their own road to a suitable junction point. The question which they sought to litigate in the pending litigation, could, we think, with more propriety and with less difficulty, have been litigated by an independent bill after they had completed, or were about completing, their line to a suitable junction point. Prior to that time the questions which they sought to raise by means of the intervening petitions were speculative questions, which the lower court, as we think, very properly, refused to consider or determine."

In Connor v. Peugh, 18 How. 394, 15 L. ed. 432, it was said by Mr. Justice Grier, giving the opinion of the court:

"On the 5th of June, 1885, the tenant in possession came into court for the first time, and moved to set aside the judgment and execution issued thereon, and to be allowed to defend the suit for reasons set forth in her affidavit. The court refused to grant this motion, 'whereupon the said Mary Ann Connor prayed an appeal.'

"The tenant in possession having neglected to appear and have herself made defendant and confess lease, entry, and ouster, the judgment was properly entered against the casual ejector. No one but a party to the suit can bring a writ of error. The tenant having neglected to have herself made such cannot have a writ of error to the judgment against the casual ejector. The motion made afterwards to have the judgment set aside [317] and for *leave to intervene was an application to the sound discretion of the court. To the action of the court on such a motion no appeal lies, nor is the subject of a bill of exceptions or a writ of error."

In Ex parte Cutting, 94 U. S. 14, 24 L. ed. 49, it was held that an appeal does not lie from an order of the court below denying a motion in a pending suit to permit a person to intervene and become a party thereto. Guion v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 173, 27 L. ed. 895, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108, is to the same effect.

Whether the contention of the petitioners that, under the legislation of Congress, they and railroad companies similarly situated had a right to connect with the road of the Union Pacific Railway Company, or shall have such a right with respect to that road in the hands of purchasers under the decree of foreclosure, at such places and upon such just and equitable terms as the President of the United States may prescribe, were not questions that, under the pleadings and evidence, were before the circuit court for its determination; and as its action in denying the petitions to intervene was an exercise of purely discretionary power, and not final in its character as respects such alleged right to connect, we think the Circuit Court of Appeals was right in holding that the appeals could not be entertained by that court, and its decree, dismissing the same, is accordingly affirmed.

Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the decision of the cases.

[318]*SARANAC LAND & TIMBER COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,
v.

JAMES A. ROBERTS, as Comptroller of the State of New York.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 318-331.)

Error to Federal court—effect of prior decision on error to state court—tax titles—defects cured by statute of limitations.

1. A decision by the Supreme Court of the United States affirming a decision of a state court that upheld a state statute of limitations, the constitutional validity of which was dependent upon the existence of some precedent or coincident remedy, must be regarded as expressly deciding that such remedy exists, and cannot be disregarded as a precedent in a later case on writ of error to a lower Federal court, on the theory that the existence of such remedy was merely assumed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the former case because it was bound in that particular to follow the decision of the state court, but is not so bound in a case arising in a Federal court.

2. Any defects or irregularities in the proceedings by which a tax title to land is acquired—such as the sale for aggregate unpaid taxes of several years on a tract which had been assessed in separate parcels, or part of which had in some years not been assessed at all, and the failure to publish a proper notice of redemption—will not affect the validity of the tax title under N. Y. Laws 1885, chap. 448, after the expiration of the two years thereby prescribed, even if some of the defects are to be deemed jurisdictional, since the statute is not merely a curative one, but is a statute of limitations.

[No. 94.]

Argued December 21, 22, 1899. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York to review a decision sustaining the constitutionality of a statute validating tax titles after lapse of a certain period of time. Affirmed.

See same case below, 83 Fed. Rep. 436.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

*This is an action of ejectment brought to [318] recover a tract of 7,500 acres of forest land, known as the northwest quarter of township 24, Great Tract One, Macomb's Purchase, situated in Franklin county, in the northern district of the state of New York.

The plaintiff deraigned title by various mesne conveyances from one Daniel McCormick, who became the grantee of the state of New York in 1798. The defendant claims through deeds executed to the state of New York in pursuance of sales for taxes.

The defendant also set up as a defense a six months' statute of limitations contained in chapter 448 of a law enacted in 1885, certain statutes against champerty, the illegal organization of the plaintiff in error, and a former adjudication made on an application to cancel one of the tax sales under which the state claimed title.

The first sale upon which the title of the state is based was made in 1877 for unpaid taxes of 1866 to 1877, inclusive. A certificate was issued dated October 18, 1877, showing a sale to the state of the whole of the northwest quarter for the sum of $2,756.40, and subsequently a deed in the usual form, and dated *June 9, 1881, which was rec- [319] orded in Franklin county clerk's office June 8, 1882.

The subsequent sales were made respectively in 1881 for the unpaid taxes of 1871 to 1876; in 1885 for those of 1877 to 1879; in 1890 for those of 1881 to 1885. At all of the sales except the first one the property was treated as already state property, and struck off to the state without giving opportunity for bids. Certificates and deeds were duly issued to the state in pursuance of the sale of 1881 and 1885 in due form, and duly recorded in the clerk's office of the proper county. A certificate alone was issued in pursuance of the sale of 1890.

The taxes for the years 1866 and 1867 were assessed against the whole quarter as one parcel. In the years 1868, 1869, and 1870 the whole quarter was not assessed, and so much of it as was assessed was placed upon the rolls in two parcels, and described as follows:

"Township 24, Great Tract One, Macomb's Purchase; N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$, excepting 1,000 acres, lying in N. W. corner; also 1,215 acres which is water, leaving 5,285 acres.

"Macomb's Purchase, Great Tract One, township 24, 1,000 acres, lying in the northwest corner of northwest quarter."

There was evidence tending to show that on the tract in controversy there were bodies of water, but no part of them was within the parcel of 1,000 acres laid out in a square form in the northwest corner.

In December, 1894, the defendant caused a notice to be published once a week for three successive weeks in a newspaper published in Franklin county, of which the following is a copy:

To Whom It May Concern:

Notice is hereby given that the following is the list of wild, vacant forest lands located in the county of Franklin to which the state holds title, and that from and after three weeks from the 22d day of December, 1894, possession thereof will be deemed to be in the comptroller of this state, pursuant to the provisions of section 13 of chapter 711, Laws of 1893.

William J. Morgan,
Deputy Comptroller.

[320] *The list attached to this notice contained the land in question.

When the testimony in the case was closed the counsel for each of the respective parties, with the approval of the court, admitted that there was no question of fact in the case to be submitted to the jury; that the issues depended upon the construction that the court should give to the law; and thereupon the jury was discharged, and a written stipulation waiving a jury trial was signed by the attorneys of record for the respective parties, and filed with the clerk.

The plaintiff requested the court to rule on certain propositions of law which were based on the assumption of the sale of the tract in one parcel for the aggregate unpaid taxes for several years, and claiming the following as jurisdictional defects in the sale, and not cured or validated by chapter 448 of the Laws of 1885, or chapter 711 of the Laws of 1893: The sale of the whole tract for taxes which were assessed against separate and distinct parcels of it; such sale when during one or more of the years a part of the tract was not assessed; such sale when some of the taxes were assessed against the whole tract and others against a part only; insufficiency of the description to identify and distinguish the parcel sold; that at the sale of 1881 the comptroller treated the property as that of the state, and struck it off to the state without giving opportunity for other bids; and that chapter 448 of the Laws of 1885 was unconstitutional and void, and repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

These propositions of law the court refused to affirm, and the court's action is assigned as error.

It is also urged that it was error to admit in evidence, over the objection of plaintiff, the deed from the state made on the sale of 1881 conveying to the state two parcels of land in the northwest quarter of township 24 by the following description:

"Macomb's Purchase, Great Tract One, township 24, northwest quarter, 5,285 acres, more or less, being all that remains of the said northwest quarter after excepting therefrom 1,000 acres in the northwest corner thereof, and 1,215 acres covered by water; 1,000 acres in the northwest corner of the northwest quarter."

*Also in receiving in evidence the certificate of sale issued on the sale of 1890, because it was not in evidence of a legal title.

The assignments of error may, as is said in the brief of plaintiff in error, be reduced in a general way to two—

"First. Is chapter 448 of the Laws of New York of 1885 a valid and constitutional law when set up by the state in its own favor?

"Second. Were the defects shown to exist in the tax sales, or either of them, of such nature as to be beyond the reach of that law if valid, accepting the construction which has been put upon it by the New York court?"

The act referred to is inserted in the margin.† The circuit court found in favor of the state, basing its decision upon the constitutionality of chapter 448, following Turner v. New York, 168 U. S. 90, 42 L. ed. 392, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38, and holding also the law to be curative of the defects urged against the validity of the tax sales. 83 Fed. Rep. 436. The complaint was filed January 25, 1895. The plaintiff sued out this writ of error.

†Laws 1885, Chapter 448.

An Act to Amend Chapter Four Hundred and Twenty-seven of the Laws of Eighteen Hundred and Fifty-five, Entitled, "An Act in Relation to the Collection of Taxes on Lands of Nonresidents, and to Provide for the Sale of Such Lands for Unpaid Taxes."

Sec. 1. Section sixty-five of chapter four hundred and twenty-seven of the laws of eighteen hundred and fifty-five, entitled, "An Act in Relation to the Collection of Taxes on Lands of Nonresidents, and to Provide for the Sale of Such Lands for Unpaid Taxes," is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"§ 65. Such conveyances shall be executed by the comptroller, under his hand and seal, and the execution thereof shall be witnessed by the treasurer or deputy comptroller, and all such conveyances that have been heretofore executed by the comptroller, and all conveyances of the same lands by his grantee or grantees therein named, after having been recorded for two years in the office of the clerk of the county in which the lands conveyed thereby are located, and all outstanding certificates of a tax sale heretofore held by the comptroller that shall have remained in force for two years after the last day allowed by law to redeem from such sale, shall, six months after this act takes effect, be conclusive evidence that the sale and all proceedings prior thereto, from and including the assessment of the land and all notices required by law to be given previous to the expiration

Mr. Frank E. Smith argued the cause and, with Mr. Thomas F. Conway, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The questions which in Turner v. New York, 168 U. S. 90, 42 L. ed. 392, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38, were assumed to have been correctly decided because they were questions of state law must now be decided by this court for itself.

Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall. 511, 19 L. ed. 997; Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 40 L. ed. 91, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80; Fallbrook Irrig. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 41 L. ed. 369, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 56.

The act in question does not attempt to cure "jurisdictional defects." A tax sale void by reason of such defect remains void notwithstanding the statute.

Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 329, 14 N. E. 400, 15 N. E. 401; Joslyn v. Rockwell, 128 N. Y. 334, 28 N. E. 604; People v. Turner, 145 N. Y. 451, 40 N. E. 400; Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. v. Lloyd, 7 App. Div. 359, 40 N. Y. Supp. 58; Marsh v. Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. 18 Misc. 314, 42 N. Y. Supp. 996, Reversed in 25 App. Div. 34, 49 N. Y. Supp. 384.

A sale of land for taxes must, we think, be wholly good or wholly bad. It is indivisible, and unless it can be sustained as a whole it cannot be sustained in part. It is also manifest that the sale of the 1,215-acre parcel for the unpaid taxes of five years cannot, independently of curative legislation, be justified because as to two of those years it was legally liable.

People v. Hagadorn, 104 N. Y. 516, 10 N. E. 891.

The sale of the whole quarter for taxes which were not a lien upon the whole quarter was illegal and void. It is not different in principle from the case of the assessment of an entire tract, followed by payment of a proportionate part of the tax upon a specific part of the land, and a sale of the entire tract for the unpaid balance. Such a sale is void in toto.

Black, Tax Titles, 2d ed. § 258; Marsh v. Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. 18 Misc. 314, 42 N. Y. Supp. 996, Reversed in 25 App. Div. 34, 49 N. Y. Supp. 384.

A sale of land for unpaid taxes must be made as the land has been assessed and taxed; and the practice of bunching into one parcel two or more lots which have been separately assessed, and selling them as one for the aggregate tax, has been uniformly condemned.

Blackwell, Tax Titles, 5th ed. § 526; Cool-ey, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 493; National F. Ins. Co. v. McKay, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 445; Thompson v. Burkans, 61 N. Y. 52; Turner v. Boyce, 11 Misc. 502, 33 N. Y. Supp. 433; Marsh v. Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. 18 Misc. 314, 42 N. Y. Supp. 996, Reversed in 25 App. Div. 34, 49 N. Y. Supp. 384.

Certainty of description is indispensable in all proceedings to divest the title of a citizen for nonpayment of taxes, or otherwise in invitum.

Tallman v. White, 2 N. Y. 66; Re New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 191; Re New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 342; Zink v. McManus, 121 N. Y. 259, 24 N. E. 467.

The rule requiring certainty of description applies with peculiar force to the assessment roll, as that is the foundation on which all the proceedings to levy and enforce a tax must rest.

Blackwell, Tax Titles, 5th ed. § 224; Black, Tax Titles, 2d ed. § 112; Stout v. Mastin, 139 U. S. 151, 35 L. ed. 121, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 519; Tallman v. White, 2 N. Y. 66; Greene v. Lunt, 58 Me. 518.

A description which would be sufficient in a voluntary deed, as between grantor and grantee, may be wholly insufficient in tax proceedings.

Blackwell, Tax Titles, 5th ed. § 226; Devlin, Deeds, § 1405; Stout v. Mastin, 139 U. S. 151, 35 L. ed. 121, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 519; Tallman v. White, 2 N. Y. 66.

Tax proceedings must be certain in themselves, and cannot be aided by extrinsic proof.

Black, Tax Titles, 2d ed. §§ 406, 407; Blackwell, Tax Titles, 5th ed. § 227; Stout v. Mastin, 139 U. S. 151, 35 L. ed. 121, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 519; Tallman v. White, 2 N. Y. 66; Curtis v. Brown County Supers. 22 Wis. 167; Orton v. Noonan, 23 Wis. 102; People v. Mahoney, 55 Cal. 286; Bowers v. Andrews, 52 Miss. 596.

When in tax proceedings the officials attempt to exclude from their operation a specific part of the tract otherwise proceeded against, the part excepted must be described of the two years allowed by law to redeem, were regular and were regularly given, published and served according to the provisions of this act, and all laws directing or requiring the same, or in any manner relating thereto, and all other conveyances or certificates heretofore or hereafter executed or issued by the comptroller, shall be presumptive evidence of the regularity of all the said proceedings and matters hereinbefore recited, and shall be conclusive evidence thereof from and after the expiration of two years from the date of recording such other conveyances, or of four years from and after the date of issuing such other certificates. But all such conveyances and certificates and the taxes and tax sales on which they are based shall be subject to cancelation, as now provided by law, on a direct application to the comptroller or an action brought before a competent court therefor, by reason of the legal payment of such taxes, or by reason of the levying of such taxes by a town or ward having no legal right to assess the land on which they are laid."

Sec. 2. The provisions of this act are hereby made applicable only to the following counties, namely: Clinton, Delaware, Essex, Franklin, Fulton, Greene, Hamilton, Herkimer, Lewis, Saratoga, St. Lawrence, Sullivan, Ulster, Warren, and Washington, but shall not affect any action, proceeding, or application pending at the time of its passage; nor any action that shall be begun, proceeding taken, or application duly made within six months thereafter for the purpose of vacating any tax sale or any conveyance or certificate of sale made thereunder.

with certainty, or the proceedings will be void.

Black, Tax Titles, 2d ed. § 405; Marsh v. Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. 18 Misc. 314, 42 N. Y. Supp. 996, Reversed in 25 App. Div. 34, 49 N. Y. Supp. 384; Johnson v. Ashland Lumber Co. 52 Wis. 458, 9 N. W. 464.

The description was fatally defective because neither of the excepted parcels was so described that it could be located.

Zink v. McManus, 121 N. Y. 259, 24 N. E. 467.

Such a description has been sustained in some states, where by statute land sold for taxes must be laid out in a square form.

Newby v. Brownlee, 23 Fed. Rep. 320.

There is no such statute in New York.

Treating the land as already the property of the state, and denying opportunity for competitive bidding, was a jurisdictional defect.

Turner v. Boyce, 11 Misc. 502, 33 N. Y. Supp. 433; Andrus v. Wheeler, 18 Misc. 646, 42 N. Y. Supp. 525, Reversed in 22 App. Div. 596, 48 N. Y. Supp. 118; Meigs v. Roberts, 42 App. Div. 290, 59 N. Y. Supp. 215.

Mr. Theodore E. Hancock argued the cause and, with Mr. John C. Davies, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The validity and constitutionality of this particular statute is res judicata.

People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227, 22 N. E. 1022; People v. Turner, 145 N. Y. 451, 40 N. E. 400; Turner v. New York, 168 U. S. 90, 42 L. ed. 392, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38.

Similar statutes have been repeatedly construed as not in contravention of the Federal Constitution, and as valid for the purpose of limiting the time within which actions similar to this shall be commenced.

Geekie v. Kirby Carpenter Co. 106 U. S. 379, 27 L. ed. 157, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 315; Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365; Williams v. Albany Supers. 122 U. S. 163, 30 L. ed. 1090, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1244; Re Brown, 135 U. S. 701, 34 L. ed. 316, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972; Townsen v. Wilson, 9 Pa. 270; Bronson v. St. Croix Lumber Co. 44 Minn. 348, 46 N. W. 570; Coulter v. Stafford, 48 Fed. Rep. 266; Land & River Improv. Co. v. Bardon, 45 Fed. Rep. 706; Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 329, 14 N. E. 400, 15 N. E. 401; Ostrander v. Darling, 127 N. Y. 70, 27 N. E. 353; Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Iowa, 508; Smith v. Cleveland, 17 Wis. 563; Freeman v. Thayer, 33 Me. 83; Raley v. Guinn, 76 Mo. 270; Pillow v. Roberts, 13 How. 472, 14 L. ed. 228.

A departure from the strict letter of a statute, which, had it been directed by statute, would not have rendered it unconstitutional, cannot be said to be a jurisdictional defect in a constitutional sense; and a curative statute may validate acts which the legislature might originally have authorized, and limit the time within which actions to set aside tax sales based upon irregularities shall be commenced.

Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 339, 14 N. E. 400, 15 N. E. 401; People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 238, 22 N. E. 1022; People v. Turner, 145 N. Y. 451, 40 N. E. 400; People ex rel. Flow- 177 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

er v. Bleckwenn, 55 Hun, 169, 7 N. Y. Supp. 914; Re Lamb, 51 Hun, 633, 4 N. Y. Supp. 858.

The United States courts will follow the decisions of the state courts in the construction of the state statutes relating to the forms of assessments and methods of procedure in making sales.

Palmer v. McMahon, 133 U. S. 660, 33 L. ed. 772, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324; Amy v. Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470, 25 L. ed. 228; Lamborn v. Dickinson County Comrs. 97 U. S. 181, 24 L. ed. 926; Harpending v. Reformed Protestant Dutch Church, 16 Pet. 455, 10 L. ed. 1029; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. 291, 8 L. ed. 402; De Wolf v. Rabaud, 1 Pet. 476, 7 L. ed. 227; Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. 264, 8 L. ed. 120; Beryman v. Bly, 27 U. S. App. 650, 66 Fed. Rep. 40, 13 C. C. A. 319; Sanford v. Poc, 37 U. S. App. 378, 69 Fed. Rep. 546, 16 C. C. A. 305; Christy v. Pridgeon, 4 Wall. 196, 18 L. ed. 322; Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 71, 19 L. ed. 101; State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 618, sub nom. Taylor v. Secor, 23 L. ed. 675; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall. 217, 18 L. ed. 342.

There is no uncertainty in the description, as the 1,000 acres would be in the form of a square.

Marsh v. Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. 25 App. Div. 40, 49 N. Y. Supp. 384; Dolan v. Treleven, 31 Wis. 147; Bowers v. Chambers, 53 Miss. 259; Doe ex dem. Hooper v. Clayton, 81 Ala. 391, 2 So. 24; Walsh v. Ringer, 2 Ohio, 328; Prior v. Scott, 87 Mo. 308; Enochs v. Miller, 60 Miss. 19; McCready v. Lansdale, 58 Miss. 877; Bybee v. Hageman, 66 Ill. 519; Colcord v. Alexander, 67 Ill. 581; Major v. Brush, 7 Ind. 232.

The defects complained of by plaintiff in error were simply irregularities, and not of a jurisdictional nature.

Marsh v. Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. 25 App. Div. 36, 49 N. Y. Supp. 384; Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 329, 14 N. E. 400, 15 N. E. 401.

*Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the [322] opinion of the court:

If chapter 448 is constitutional, its limitation attached some years before this action was commenced. It was held constitutional by this court in Turner v. New York, 168 U. S. 90, 42 L. ed. 392, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38. The contention now is, however, that our conclusion depended upon reasoning not applicable to the case at bar. It is said that to the validity of a statute of limitations a remedy precedent to and during the period of limitation must exist, and that a remedy did exist we assumed was decided by the state court as a state question, and that on a writ of error to its judgment we were bound by the ruling, and for that reason affirmed the judgment. But the pending case being on error to a United States court, we [323] not only may, but must, exercise an independent judgment—decide for ourselves, not follow the state court—whether a remedy existed.

But was the conclusion in the Turner Case as dependent as contended? The question is best answered by the case itself.

The action was brought in the state court, and was replevin for logs cut upon wild forest lands. The state claimed title through sales for delinquent taxes and deeds executed in pursuance of them. The defendant attacked the deeds, alleging the invalidity of the taxes for 1867 and 1870, and offered evidence to show that the oath of the assessors to the assessment roll of 1867 was taken on August 10, instead of on the third Tuesday of August; and that the assessors omitted to meet on the third Tuesday to review the assessment for that year.

The state objected to the evidence as immaterial because the comptroller's deed was made conclusive evidence of those matters by the statute of the state of 1885, chap. 448,—the statute now in controversy. To the objection it was replied that the statute infringed the 1st section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The state's objection, however, was sustained, and judgment was directed and entered for the state, which was affirmed by the court of appeals, 145 N. Y. 451, 40 N. E. 400.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of this court. He stated the law of 1885 establishing a forest preserve and the creation of a forest commission and its duties, and that at the date of the passage of the statute the time for redemption from tax sales was two years. He then stated the enactment and provisions of the law whose constitutionality was attacked, the time of the tax sales, the time for redemption and its expiration, the period the comptroller's deeds were on record, and the time that they became conclusive, and said:

"The statute according to its principal intent and effect, and as construed by the court of appeals of the state, was a statute of limitations. People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227, 22 N. E. 1022; People v. Turner, 145 N. Y. 451, 40 N. E. 400. It is well settled that a statute shortening the period of limitation is within the constitutional power of the legislature, provided a reasonable time, taking [324] into consideration *the nature of the case, is allowed for bringing an action after the passage of the statute and before the bar takes effect. Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 632, 633, 24 L. ed. 365, 366; Re Brown, 135 U. S. 701, 705-707, 34 L. ed. 316-318, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972.

"The statute now in question relates to land sold and conveyed to the state for non-payment of taxes; it applies to those cases only in which the conveyance has been of record for two years in the office where all conveyances of lands within the county are recorded, and it does not bar any action begun within six months after its passage. Independently of the consideration that before the passage of the statute the plaintiff had had eight years since the sale and three years since the recording of the deed, during which he might have asserted his title, this court concurs with the highest court of the state in the opinion that the limitation of six months, as applied to a case of this kind, is not repugnant to any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

"It was argued in behalf of the plaintiff in error that the statute was unconstitutional because it did not allow him any opportunity to assert his rights even within six months after its passage. But the statute did not take away any right of action which he had before its passage, but merely limited the time within which he might assert such a right. Within the six months he had every remedy which he would have had before the passage of the statute. If he had no remedy before, the statute took none away. From the judgments of the court of appeals in the case at bar, and in the subsequent case of People ex rel. Millard v. Roberts, 151 N. Y. 540, 45 N. E. 941, there would appear to have been some difference of opinion in that court upon the question whether his proper remedy was by direct application to the comptroller to cancel the sale or by action of ejectment against the comptroller or the forest commissioners. But as that court has uniformly held that he had a remedy, it is not for us to determine what that remedy was under the local Constitution and laws."

The decision establishes the following propositions:

1. That statutes of limitations are within the constitutional power of the legislature of a state to enact.

*2. That the limitation of six months was [325] not unreasonable.

3. That the statute took away no remedy which the landowner had before its passage.

4. That the state court held he had a remedy, although there was difference of opinion whether it was by direct application to the comptroller to cancel the sales or by action of ejectment against the comptroller or forest commissioners.

5. That as the state courts decided he had a remedy it was not for us to determine what that remedy was under the local Constitution and laws,—that is, whether it was either a direct application to the comptroller or by action of ejectment.

What, then, did this court assume, that it did not decide or ought now to decide? Counsel for plaintiff in error say that—

"The Turner Case established the sufficiency of the time allowed by the law now in question, but it treated the existence of a court competent to try the disputed rights and of a person liable to be sued for that purpose as questions of state law, and foreclosed by the judgment of the state court. These things ought now to be decided and not assumed."

The case, however, as we have seen, was not so limited. It decided more than that the time allowed by the statute was reasonable and sufficient. It also decided that the statute took away no remedy the landowner had before its passage, and that the law of the state gave him a remedy. What it precisely was,—which of the three enumerated ones it was,—was not decided. Not, however, because of the assumption of anything, but because it was not demanded. And why? The question presented was the constitutionality of the statute. That depended upon the existence of a remedy in the landowner during the period of its limitation, and whether a remedy existed what better evidence or authority could there be than the decisions of the courts interpreting the laws of the state? To accept them as such was not to assume anything without deciding it. It was to ascertain a necessary element of decision, and then exercising decision. This was our duty then, and it is our duty now, and the fact that the case comes for review from the circuit court of the United States neither enforces nor justifies different considerations. If a precedent or coincident remedy is necessary *to the constitutional validity of a statute of limitations, the existence of such remedy is necessary to be decided, and it depends upon the same considerations, and must be upon the same examination, no matter in what court it may be presented or may come.

The reasoning of the Turner Case was therefore complete, and we think it is decisive against the contention of the plaintiff in error. The sufficiency of the remedies enumerated was not contested. It is not contested now. The existence of remedies is denied, but to the reasoning which attempts to support the denial we reply by repeating what we said in the Turner Case—that as the New York court of appeals has uniformly held that the landowner had a remedy, “it is not for us to determine what that remedy was under the local Constitution and laws.”

The defects which plaintiff in error claims to have been in the assessments and to have been jurisdictional are stated as follows:

“1. The sale of the whole tract of land in question for the aggregate unpaid taxes of several years when, during one or more of those years, a part of the tract sold was not assessed or taxed at all.

“2. The sale as one tract of two or more parcels separately assessed.

“3. The assessment of taxes by a description so uncertain as not to identify the parcel of land taxed.

“4. Treating the land on the sale as already the property of the state, and denying opportunity for competitive bidding.”

The first two are treated by counsel as similar and dependent upon the same grounds of objection. The specification of those grounds is that at the sale of 1877 the whole quarter, containing 7,500 acres, was sold as one parcel for the aggregate unpaid taxes of 1866-1870 inclusive, amounting, with interest and costs, to $2,756.40, but that it was not assessed as a whole except for the years 1866 and 1867; that for the years 1868, 1869, and 1870 it was assessed in two parcels: (1) the northwest quarter of township 24, “excepting 1,000 acres lying in the northwest corner; also 1,315 acres which is water;” and (2) “1,000 acres lying in the northwest corner of the northwest quarter.” And that

[327] *1,215 acres was not assessed at all for those years. The plaintiff in error, however, does not show that it was in any way injured by the manner of selling. Its counsel supposes a possible severalty of ownership of the different parcels, and claims a cause of action from an injury which might have resulted to someone else. “We take it to be settled law,” counsel say, “that the constitutionality of a statute is to be tested, not so much by what is done as what may be done under it. . . . The present record is silent as to the actual ownership of the different parcels of the quarter in question during the years 1866-1870, but plainly they might have been the subject of separate ownership.” And counsel proceed to show how a separate owner, if he had existed, would have been embarrassed in his right of redemption by the necessity of paying some other person’s taxes besides his own, and of which he had not been notified during the pendency of the tax proceedings.

177 U. S.

We are not concerned with what might have been, but only with what was. The plaintiff in error now sues as owner of the whole tract, and if there was a several ownership of it, or of parts of it, such ownership should have been shown if anything can be claimed from it. We may not suppose it from this record. It is manifest that the manner of sale could do no injury to the owner of the whole tract. Its separation in parcels on the assessment roll would be artificial and mere description. It would not affect its value, would not require the owner to pay someone’s else taxes, would not make him pay more than was justly due from him, either before a sale or after a sale, if he then desired to exercise the right of redemption.

But even if we should suppose a several ownership of the lands at the time of the assessment or sale, we do not think that the defects in the latter were jurisdictional, and certainly of all other defects the law of 1885 is not curative only—it is one of limitation. It matters not, therefore, what the rights of any predecessor of the plaintiff might have been if seasonably asserted. They were not seasonably asserted, and they are therefore now precluded.

The law is like any other statute of limitations. It is not *affected by what the rights of plaintiff in error were. Whatever they were their remedy is gone, and the title and possession of the state, whatever may have been the defects in the proceedings of which they are the consummation, cannot now be disturbed. This was the ruling in Marsh v. Ne-ha-sa-ne Park Asso. 25 App. Div. 34, 49 N. Y. Supp. 384, where the cases were reviewed, and we think correctly interpreted.

In People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227, 22 N. E. 1022, the remedies of the landowner before and after a sale were considered, and the law defined as one of limitation. The court said: “Considered as an act of limitation, the only question in relation thereto is whether such limitation is just and gives the claimant a reasonable opportunity to enforce his rights. (See authorities, supra.) Under all the circumstances of the case it cannot, we think, be said, as a question of law, that the time afforded is unreasonable. Considered as establishing a rule of evidence, the only question for examination is whether property is thereby necessarily taken without due process of law."

That case seems to have been qualified somewhat by Joslyn v. Rockwell, 128 N. Y. 334, 28 N. E. 604, where it was decided that the law was not conclusive against jurisdictional defects. But People v. Turner was reaffirmed in 145 N. Y. 451, 40 N. E. 400. If the cases are in conflict the latter must prevail, but assuming their reconciliation to be in the character of the defects passed on, they are equally authoritative against plaintiff in error.

In Joslyn v. Rockwell two defects were said to be jurisdictional: The payment of taxes and the occupation of the lands. Of the latter it was said: "The act of 1885 (chap. 448) is one, by its title, relating 'to the collection of taxes on lands of nonresidents, and to provide for the sale of such lands for unpaid taxes.' It is provided that occupied lands are not the lands of nonresidents. (1 R. S. 339, § 3.) And where lands of a nonresident of a county are occupied by a resident of the town an assessment to the owner in the 'nonresident' part of the roll is illegal, and the lands should be assessed to the resident occupant. People ex rel. Barnard v. Wemple, 117 N. Y. 77, 22 N. E. 761. 'If the lands were occupied the act of 1885 would not apply.' In the case at bar there is no such fact to preclude the application of the law.

[329] *In the case of Meigs v. Roberts, recently decided by the court of appeals of New York, [162 N. Y. 371, 377, 56 N. E. 838] Joslyn v. Rockwell has been explained and limited, and People v. Turner again affirmed.

The action was ejectment, and the plaintiff Meigs traced his title by a chain of conveyances from an original grant by the state in 1798. The defendant justified his possession under deeds to the state in pursuance of sales for taxes. One of them was assailed on account of an alleged defect in the notice of redemption published by the comptroller. The defendant pleaded that the action was not brought within the time prescribed by the provision of chapter 448 of the Laws of 1885 and subsequent laws. The trial court dismissed the complaint on the ground that the land was in the occupation of the state, and suit could not be maintained against it without its consent. An appeal having been taken, the appellate division reversed the judgment and granted a new trial, holding that the action could be maintained, but also holding that the notice of redemption of the tax sale of 1881 was fatally defective, and that the deed made in pursuance of the sale did not pass title, and that the defect was not cured by the provisions of chapter 148 (subsequently re-enacted in part in 1891 and 1893), which makes the conveyance of the comptroller upon tax sales, after the two years from its record in the county in which the lands are situated, conclusive evidence of the regularity of the proceedings in which conveyance was made.

792

The case was taken to the court of appeals, which reversed the appellate division.

The court said:

"We do not find it necessary to pass upon many of the questions which have been elaborately argued before us, or even the one upon which the decision of the trial court proceeded. We are of opinion that the lapse of time between the record of the conveyance of 1884 and the commencement of this action barred the right to the plaintiff to maintain it, even assuming the other questions in the case should be resolved in his favor. The learned appellate division held that the failure to publish a proper redemption notice was jurisdictional as to the conveyance of 1884, and, hence, not cured by chapter 448 of the Laws of 1885, and cited Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 329, 14 N. E. 400, 15 N. E. 401, and Joslyn v. Rockwell, 128 N. Y. 334, 28 N. E. 604, as authorities for that proposition. We think the learned court took too narrow a view of the statute of 1885. This statute, though in some aspects a curative law, is primarily and essentially much more; it is a statute of limitation. It was distinctly held to be such in two decisions of this court (People v. Turner, 117 N. Y. 227, 22 N. E. 1022; People v. Turner, 145 N. Y. 459, 40 N. E. 400), and by the Supreme Court of the United States. Turner v. New York, 168 U. S. 90, 42 L. ed. 392, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 38. A curative act in the ordinary sense of that term is a retrospective law, acting on past cases and existing rights. The power of the legislature to enact such laws is therefore confined within comparatively narrow limits, and they are usually passed to validate irregularities in legal proceedings, or to give effect to contracts between parties which might otherwise fall for failure to comply with technical legal requirements. Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 454. A very full enumeration of the cases in which the legislature may properly exercise this power is to be found in Forster v. Forster, 129 Mass. 559. But there may be in legal proceedings defects which are not mere informalities or irregularities, but so vital in their character as to be beyond the help of retrospective legislation; such defects are called jurisdictional. This principle does not apply to a statute of limitations, for such a statute will bar any right, however high the source from which it may be deduced, provided that a reasonable time is given a party to enforce his right. Terry v. Anderson, 95 U. S. 628, 24 L. ed. 365; Turner v. New York, 145 N. Y. 451, 40 N. E. 400. Ensign v. Barse, 107 N. Y. 329, 14 N. E. 400, 15 N. E. 401, was strictly a case of a retrospective statute, for no period of time was given within which any party affected could assert his rights. The same is true of Cromwell v. MacLean, 123 N. Y. 474, 25 N. E. 932. In Joslyn v. Rockwell, 128 N. Y. 334, 28 N. E. 604, as well as in the two cases of People v. Turner, all of which arose under the statute of 1885, there is to be found a discussion of defects which it was claimed were jurisdictional, and not cured by that act. Such discussion, however, is not to be construed as authority for the proposition that jurisdictional defects in legal proceedings which are beyond the scope of retrospective legislation will equally take a claim out of the bar of a statute of limitations. The existence of such defects was necessarily considered in the authorities cited, because the statute of 1885 in terms exempted from its operation cases [331] where *the taxes had been paid, or where there was no legal right to assess the land on which they were laid. There is no exception, however, as to defects in notices of redemption or in their publication; on the contrary, it is expressly provided that the controller's deed, after the lapse of the requisite time, shall be conclusive evidence that 'all notices required by law to be given previous to the expiration of the two years allowed by law to redeem were regular and regularly given.'

177 U.S.

These considerations dispose also of the other objections to the assessment and sale. If further comment be needed as to the insufficiency of the description, it may be brief. It is based on the possibility of there having been more or less land than 1,215 acres covered by water. But whether there were depends upon a question of fact, and what the court found we are not informed by the record. Not insisting on that, however, the evidence of the plaintiff tended to show that the area covered was 1,035 acres; the evidence of the defendant tended to show that the area was 1,284 acres. Even if the court found the latter, the difference between it and the assessment did not make the description insufficient. A description of land for the purposes of taxation is sufficient if it affords the means of identification, and does not positively mislead the owner. Cooley, Taxn. 407; Keeley v. Sanders, 99 U. S. 443, 25 L. ed. 327.

The assessment was not of the land covered by water. That was an exception from a larger tract, and an error of a few acres in a part so completely defined by its character surely did not so impair the identity of the larger tract as to hide it from the search or knowledge of its owner, whether he was anxious or indifferent about his taxes.

The same comment can be made of the "1,000 acres lying in the northwest corner of the northwest quarter" of the tract, whether we regard it as a parcel or an exception from another parcel. Jackson ex dem. Kellogg v. Vickory, 1 Wend. 407, 19 Am. Dec. 522; Dolan v. Trelevan, 31 Wis. 147; Bowers v. Chambers, 53 Miss. 259; Doe ex dem. Hooper v. Clayton, 81 Ala. 391, 2 So. 24.

The other assignments of error it is not necessary to specifically notice nor the defenses of champerty and the alleged illegal organization of the plaintiff in error.

Judgment affirmed.

177 U. S.

*MINNEAPOLIS & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY [332] et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

HENRY A. GARDNER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 332-345.)

Corporations—new company formed by consolidation—granting it the rights, privileges, and immunities of constituent corporations.

1. A new corporation was formed by the consolidation of railroad companies under Minn. Spec. Laws 1881, chap. 113, providing for the manner of consolidation, the name of the new company,—which might be "the name of either corporation party thereto or any other name,"—the transfer of the property or the old corporations, the retirement of their stock and the issue of new stock, and for compensating the stockholders of the old corporations who decline to convert their stock into the stock of the new company.
2. The grant to a consolidated railroad company by Minn. Spec. Laws 1881, chap. 113, of the franchises, exemptions, and immunities of the older company, does not include the exemption which the stockholders of the earlier company were given by mere implication, without any express provision therefor, even if such exemption could be granted by the legislature under the provision of the state Constitution of 1858, which imposes liability upon the shareholders of all such corporations.

[No. 160.]

Argued March 5, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota to review a decision affirming a judgment enforcing the liability of stockholders. Affirmed.

See same case below, 73 Minn. 517, 76 N. W. 282.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

*On the merits this case presents the question of the liability of the individual plaintiffs in error upon a judgment which was recovered by one Revilo F. Parshall against the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company, and assigned to the defendant in error. [332]

A motion, however, is made to dismiss on the ground that this court has no jurisdiction.

The Minnesota Western Railway was incorporated by the territory of Minnesota, by an act of its legislature approved March 3, 1853. The usual powers of corporation

NOTE.—As to consolidation of corporations and its effect—see Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Boney (Ind.) 3 L. R. A. 435, and note.

As to liability of a consolidated railroad company for debts of its predecessor—see Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. Hall (Ind.) 23 L. R. A. 231, and note.

As to rights and obligations of consolidated corporation—see note to Cantillon v. Dubuque & N. W. R. Co. (Iowa) 5 L. R. A. 726.

793

were conferred, and the company was authorized to construct a railroad from and to certain points in the territory.

Power was reserved to alter or amend the act. There was no provision fixing the liability of stockholders. The act was several times amended, changing the route of the road in some particulars.

In 1858 the state of Minnesota was admitted into the Union, and its Constitution contained the following provision: "[333]*stockholder in any corporation shall be liable to the amount of the stock held or owned by him." Art. 10, § 3.

It was amended in 1872 so as to except the stockholders of corporations organized for carrying on any kind of manufacturing or mechanical business.

On February 4, 1870, the provision of the act of 1853, reserving the right to alter or amend the act, was repealed.

After the passage of the act of 1870 the company changed its name to the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company.

No steps were taken towards construction or acquiring any line of railroad until 1869. The actual construction was commenced during the fall of 1870, since which time the said company or the consolidated company, hereafter mentioned, has operated and maintained a line of railway in the state.

By an act approved March 2, 1881, in addition to other powers conferred, the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company, and any other railway companies in the construction of whose lines it has aided, or whose lines were at the time held under lease by it, were authorized to consolidate. The act provided for the manner of consolidation, the name of the new corporation,—which might be "the name of either corporation party thereto or any other name,"—the transfer of the properties of the old corporations, the retirement of their stock and the issue of new, and defined the purposes and powers of the new corporation. It is inserted in the margin.†

†Chapter 113, Special Laws 1881.

An Act to Amend an Act Entitled an Act to Amend an Act entitled An Act to Incorporate the Minnesota Western Railroad Company, Approved March Third (3d), One Thousand Eight Hundred and Fifty-three (1853), and the Acts Amendatory thereof, Approved February Fourth, One Thousand Eight Hundred and Seventy (1870).

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota: Section 1. That the Act Entitled An Act to Amend an Act entitled An Act to Incorporate the Minnesota Western Railroad Company, approved March thlrd (3d), one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three (1853), and the acts amendatory thereof, approved February fourth (4th), one thousand eight hundred and seventy (1870), be amended by adding thereto the following section, to wit:

Section eight (8). The Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company, formerly known as the Minnesota Western Railroad Company, in addition to the powers already conferred upon it by the laws of the territory of Minnesota and of the state of Minnesota, is hereby authorized to make or acquire, from time to time, any extension of the lines of railway now owned or operated by it, or of those hereafter constructed

*The consolidation was made as provided[334] in the act by agreement between the Minneapolis Railway Company, the Minneapolis & Duluth Railroad Company, the Minnesota [335] & Iowa Railroad Company, and the Fort Wayne & Fort Ridgely Railroad Company,[336] and articles of incorporation were duly filed in pursuance of the act.

*The consolidated company thereafter entered upon, and until the 2d of November, 1894, enjoyed, the franchises, rights, property, and earnings of the constituent corporations.

The Minneapolis & Duluth Railroad Company was a Minnesota corporation, and the Fort Dodge & Fort Ridgely Railroad Company and the Minnesota & Iowa Southern Railroad Company were Iowa corporations; and the laws of the state of Iowa authorized the incorporators of railroad companies to exempt themselves from personal liability for the corporate debts by embodying in the articles of incorporation an article or provision declaring the exemption. This was done.

On and prior to June 28, 1888, the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company executed three mortgages, one of which was to the Central Trust Company of New York, dated June 1, 1881, to secure outstanding bonds of the aggregate par value of $1,382,000, together with interest thereon, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

This mortgage was duly foreclosed, and the railroad properties, rights, and franchises covered by it duly sold, and the title confirmed by final decree to the assignee of the purchaser.

The defendant in error was a judgment creditor of the consolidated company, being assignee of a judgment recovered by *R. F. [338] Parshall, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota, for personal injuries received by him from the railway company.

The individual plaintiffs in error were shareholders of that company, and each ac-and operated by it according to law, into the states of Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, and Wisconsin, and into the territory of Dakota, or into one or more of the same. Provided, That authority shall exist or be given in or by the states or territory into which its lines are so extended to make or acquire and maintain such extensions.

Section nine (9). The said Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company shall have power to acquire, from time to time, by lease or purchase, or exchange of stock, or otherwise, any other railroad or railroads, whether within or without this state, whose lines connect with its own lines as they now exist or as they shall be extended, either directly or by means of intervening lines. Such acquisition shall be made upon such terms as shall be agreed upon by a contract in writing between the respective corporations. But the same shall not be consummated until first approved by two thirds in amount of the stockholders of each such corporation, either given at a regular or called meeting of such stockholders or by a consent expressed in writing. In either case a copy of such contract, together with the evidence of such consent of the stockholders, shall be filed in the office of the secretary of state.

quired his stock between November, 1884, and the date of the commencement of this suit, but was not a shareholder of either of the companies which formed the consolidated company.

The answer of the individual defendants denied liability under the Constitution and laws of the state of Minnesota, alleged the incorporation of the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company prior to the adoption of the Constitution and statutes, and that it was incorporated in the year 1853, under and pursuant to the provisions of chapter 66 of the Special Laws enacted by the legislature of the territory of Minnesota, under and by the name of the Minnesota Western Railroad Company, which name was subsequently changed to the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company, substantially as set forth in the first division of the complaint; that the liability of the stockholders of said Minnesota & St. Louis Railway Company was fixed by said act of incorporation, and not otherwise; and that the constitutional provision and laws referred to in the complaint are not applicable to or binding upon these defendants in that behalf.

The trial court rendered judgment for the defendant in error, which was affirmed by the supreme court of the state (73 Minn. 517, 76 N. W. 282), and this writ of error was sued out.

On the appeal to the supreme court of the state it was assigned as error, among others, that the trial court erred in holding that the state Constitution, if applied to the defendant railway company, did not violate section 10, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States in that the provisions of section 3, article 10, impaired the obligation of the charter contract contained in chapter 66, Laws of 1853, territory of Minnesota. Also in holding that the constitutional provision of the state, if applied to defendant in error, is not in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that the state, by and through the provisions of section 3, article 10, assumed *to impair and destroy rights theretofore vested in the defendants (plaintiffs in error). [339]

Also in holding that the defendant railway company was not created until the passage of the act of 1881, that the legislature intended by the act to create, or did in fact create, a new corporation, or intended to or did abridge or modify the rights, privileges, or immunities theretofore possessed by the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company; or if a new corporate entity was created, that it did not possess such rights, privileges, and immunities, including the exemption from double liability upon its stock created by the act of 1853, and also possessed by the other constituent corporations of the consolidation.

The assignments of error in this court claim that the supreme court of the state held, and erred in holding, the constitutional provision imposing liability on stockholders valid against plaintiffs in error, and not to be in violation of the contract created by the act of 1853, the benefits of which act were vested, continued, and perpetuated in the plaintiffs in error by the act of 1881, and not to be in violation of that provision of the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits any state from impairing the obligations of a contract, and not in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that it assumes to impair and destroy rights vested by the act of 1853 and the act of 1881.

It is also claimed that the court held, and erred in holding, that the Constitution of the state, if enforced against plaintiffs in error, was not in violation of section 10, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States, and did not impair the obligations of the contract between the state and plaintiffs in error, embodied in the act of 1881.

Also that the consolidation of the several

Section ten (10). It shall and may be lawful for the said Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company to merge and consolidate its capital, franchises, and property with the capital stock, franchises, and property of any other railroad company or companies organized under the laws of this state or under the laws of any other state or territory of the United States, in the construction of whose lines the said Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company shall have aided, or whose lines of railroad are or shall, at the time of such consolidation, be held under lease by the said Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company. Provided, That the lines of railway of the companies or corporations so consolidating shall form a continuous line of railway with each other, or by means of any intervening railway, bridge, or ferry. But no such consolidation shall be made by the said company with any other railroad corporation, or the lessees, purchaser, or manager of any railroad corporation owning or controlling a parallel or competing line.

Such consolidations shall be made under the conditions, provisions, and restrictions and with the powers hereinafter mentioned and contained, that is to say:

First (1st). The directors of the company proposing to consolidate may enter into a joint agreement, under the corporate seal of each company, for the consolidation of said companies and railroads, which agreement shall prescribe the terms and conditions thereof, and the mode of carrying the same into effect, the name of the new corporation, which may be the name of either corporation party thereto, or any other name, the number, names, and places of residence of the directors and other officers thereof, who shall be the directors and officers thereof for the first (1st) year. The amount of the capital stock of the new company, which shall not exceed the amount of twenty million (20,000,000) dollars, the number of shares into which such capital stock is to be divided (which stock may be divided into classes, with such preferences in respect to any of the classes as may be agreed upon), the amount or par value of each share, the manner of converting or exchanging the capital stock of each of the said companies so consolidating into or for that of the new corporation and the terms of such conversion, the manner of compensating stockholders in each of the old corporations who decline to convert their stock into the stock of the new corporation, and how and when directors and officers shall be chosen, with such other details railroad corporations pursuant to the act of 1881 created a new corporation.

Mr. William Strauss argued the cause and, with Messrs. Albert E. Clarke, W. W. Dudley, and L. T. Michener filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

If the consolidation agreement did not create a new corporation, the franchises, exemptions, privileges, and immunities of each constituent company were continued.

Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Georgia, 92 U. S. 665, 23 L. ed. 757.

If a new corporation was created by the consolidation, the franchises of the constituent corporations either passed to the new corporation or vested in the state, which could lawfully confer them upon the new corporation.

First Div. of St. Paul & P. R. Co. v. Par-cher, 14 Minn. 297, Gil. 224; Green v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 35 Minn. 155, 27 N. W. 924; Amcs v. Lake Superior & M. S. R. Co. 21 Minn. 281; St. Paul v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 23 Minn. 469; Huff v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 11 Minn. 180, Gil. 114.

The state may continue the immunities of the original corporations to the new one by reference to the original act.

Maine C. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 499, 24 L. ed. 836; The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51, sub nom. Chenango Bridge Co. v. Binghamton Bridge Co. 18 L. ed. 137.

It is for this court to determine, independently of the adjudications of the state court, whether there exists a contract within the protection of the Federal Constitution.

Jefferson Branch Bank v. Skelly, 1 Black, 436, 17 L. ed. 173; Wright v. Nagle, 101 U.

S. 793, 25 L. ed. 922; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Palmes, 109 U. S. 256, 27 L. ed. 926, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 193.

If the adjudication of a Federal question is necessarily involved in the disposition of a case by a state court, it is not necessary that it should appear affirmatively in the record or in the opinion of the court that such a question was raised and decided.

Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 142 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 1004, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Roby v. Colehour, 146 U. S. 153, 36 L. ed. 922, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 47.

In order to preclude this court from taking jurisdiction, it must appear that the decision of the state court was made upon rules of general jurisprudence, or that the case was disposed of there upon other grounds, broad enough in themselves to sustain the judgment without considering the Federal question, and that such question was not necessarily involved.

New Orleans v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 142 U. S. 79, 35 L. ed. 943, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 142.

Mr. F. W. M. Cutcheon argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The consolidated company was brought into existence under authority of the act of 1881. Its shareholders are therefore subjected to the liability imposed by the Minnesota Constitution.

Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed. 357, Affirming 26 Ohio St. 86; State v. Northern C. R. Co. 44 Md. 131; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbs, 27 S. C. 385, 4 S. E. 49; Frazier v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 138, 12 S. W. 537; Morawetz, as they shall deem necessary to perfect such new organization and the consolidation of such companies or railroads.

Second (2d). Such agreement of the directors shall not be deemed to be the agreement of the said old corporations until after it has been submitted to the stockholders of each of the said corporations, separately, at a meeting thereof, to be called upon a notice of at least thirty (30) days, specifying the time and place of such meeting and the object thereof, to be addressed to each of such stockholders when their place of residence is known, and deposited in the postoffice, and published at least three (3) successive weeks in one newspaper in each of the cities, counties, or towns in which the said corporations have their principal office or business, and is sanctioned by such stockholders by a vote of at least two thirds in amount of the stockholders present at such meeting, either in person or by proxy, each share of the capital stock being entitled to one vote; and when such agreement of the directors is so sanctioned by each of the meetings of the stockholders, separately, it shall be deemed the agreement of the said old corporations.

Third (3d). If the holder of any stock in either of the corporations existing under the laws of this state and so consolidated at the time of making such consolidation shall be dissatisfied with the same, the consolidated company shall pay to such dissatisfied stockholder or stockholders the full actual value of his or their stock immediately prior to such consolidation, which value shall be assessed and fixed by three disinterested commissioners appointed for that purpose by the supreme court of this state, upon the application of either party, made upon twenty (20) days' notice, but the said company shall not be compelled to pay for the stocks of such dissatisfied stockholder or stockholders unless he or they shall give written notice of such dissatisfaction to the president, secretary, or treasurer of the company whose stock shall be held by him or them, within three (3) months after such consolidation shall have been consented to by the requisite number of stockholders.

Section eleven (11). Upon the approval of such agreement and act of consolidation as hereinbefore provided, and upon the filing of the same, or a copy thereof, in the office of the secretary of state, the said corporations, parties thereto, shall be deemed and taken to be one corporation, by the name provided in the said agreement and act, and the stock of the new corporation, issued under the terms of such agreement and act of consolidation in exchange for the stock of the former companies, shall be deemed and taken as lawful stock, and subject only to such further payments, calls, or assessments, if any, as may be mentioned in said consolidation agreement, and such new corporation shall possess all the powers, rights, and franchises conferred upon each of its constituent corporations, and shall be subject to all the restrictions and duties imposed by the laws of the state.

Section twelve (12). Upon the consummation of said act of consolidation as aforesaid, all and singular the rights, privileges, exemptions, and franchises of each of said corpora-

Priv. Corporations, §§ 944-47; Thompson, Corporations, § 5424; Ashley v. Ryan, 153 U. S. 436, 38 L. ed. 773, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 664, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865.

The intent of the constituent companies themselves to organize a new corporation distinct from, and independent of, the Minnesota Western Railroad Company, is evident from their action in taking advantage of all the powers conferred upon a consolidated company that had not been possessed by the Minnesota Western Railroad Company, and was emphasized by the adoption of a distinct name.

Fitz v. Minnesota C. R. Co. 11 Minn. 414, Gil. 304; Huff v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 11 Minn. 180, Gil. 114; Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed. 357; State v. Northern C. R. Co. 44 Md. 131; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 27 S. C. 385, 4 S. E. 49; Frazier v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 88 Tenn. 138, 12 S. W. 537; Ames v. Lake Superior & M. S. R. Co. 21 Minn. 241.

The fact that the act of 1881 was cast in the form of an act amendatory of the act incorporating the Minnesota Western Railroad company is only one item of evidence (and in this instance an extremely unimportant item) as to the intention of the legislature, and can have little weight in view of the plain and unambiguous language of the act itself.

Ames v. Lake Superior & M. S. R. Co. 21 Minn. 241.

[340] *Mr. Justice McKenna, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

To sustain the motion to dismiss for want

tions, parties to the same, and all the property, real, personal, and mixed, and all the debts due, on whatever account, to either of said corporations, as well as all the stock, subscriptions, and other things in action belonging to either of said corporations, shall be taken and deemed to be transferred to and vested in such new corporation, without further act or deed, and all claims, demands, property, rights of way, and every other interest shall be as effectually the property of the new corporation as they were of the former corporations, parties to the said agreement and act, and the title to all real estate, taken by deed or otherwise under the laws of this state, vested in either of said corporations, parties to said agreement and act, shall not be deemed to revert or be in any way impaired by reason of this act, or anything done by virtue thereof, but shall be vested in the new corporation by virtue of such act of consolidation.

Section thirteen (13). The rights of all creditors of and all the holders of liens upon the property of either of said corporations, parties to said agreement and act, shall remain and be preserved unimpaired, and shall be assumed and borne by the new corporation, and the respective corporations shall be deemed to continue in existence so far as necessary to preserve the same, and all debts and liabilities incurred by either of said corporations shall thenceforth attach to such new corporation and be enforced against it and its property to the same extent as if said debts or liabilities had been originally incurred or constructed by it. No suit or action or other proceeding now pending before of jurisdiction the defendant in error contends that the Federal question raised here was not that raised in the court below, and therefore cannot be entertained, and that, besides, there was a question, not Federal, decided by the court sufficient to support its judgment.

(1) No right under the Constitution of the United States was claimed in the answer. But the protection of section 10, article 1, and the Fourteenth Amendment of that instrument, was invoked in the assignment of errors on appeal to the supreme court and urged upon its consideration. It is true they claimed the law of 1853 as the contract, and not explicitly that of 1881. But they also claimed that the act of 1881 did not create a new corporation, and whether it did or not, that the act continued the immunity from liability for the corporate debts to the stock and stockholders of the consolidated corporation. We think this makes substantial identity between the Federal question in the supreme court of the state and in this court.

(2) But it is said the state court did not decide the Federal question, but decided that the act of 1881 created a new corporation, which became subject to the constitutional provision imposing liability upon stockholders for corporate debts, and that the court rested its judgment on that construction. The court said: "Whatever may be the liability of the several [constituent] corporations we need not inquire, because the liability here sought to be enforced is one against individuals who have been and are stockholders in the new corporation." And again: "Other questions have been raised and discussed by the respective counsel, but a deci-any court or tribunal in which either of said railroad companies is a party shall be deemed to have abated or been discontinued by the agreement and act of consolidation as aforesaid, but the same may be conducted in the name of the existing corporation to final judgment, or such new corporation may be, by order of the court, on motion, substituted as a party; suits may be brought and maintained against such new corporation for all causes of action in the same manner as against other railroad corporations in this state.

Section fourteen (14). All the provisions of the general laws of this state, in regard to railroad corporations, shall be applicable to any new corporations formed by consolidation under the provisions of this act, except so far as the same shall not be applicable thereto by reason of the situation of portions of its line without this state. Provided, That, nevertheless, the privileges, franchises, exemptions, immunities, hitherto granted to the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company shall continue to and be vested in such new corporation with the same effect as if originally granted thereto, and that such new corporation may at any time hereafter be consolidated with any other railroad company or companies in the same manner and with the same effect as is by this act provided.

Section two. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Approved this second day of March, A. D. 1881.

sion upon them by this court in this action is entirely unnecessary, and we express no opinion thereon." This was in effect to deny the existence of the contract claimed by plaintiffs in error. But it is the duty of this court to decide for itself the fact of contract and its impairment, and the motion to dismiss must therefore be denied.

[341] *The territorial act of 1853 by which the Minnesota Western Railroad was incorporated is claimed primarily to be the contract which is impaired. It gave immunity to the stockholders of that company from liability for the corporate debts, or rather did not impose such liability. It is claimed that the Constitution of the state of 1858 violated this contract. It imposes liability upon each shareholder of any corporation to the amount of stock held or owned by him. It is self-executing. Willis v. Mabon, 48 Minn. 140, 16 L. R. A. 281, 50 N. W. 1110.

The act of 1881 is also claimed as a contract which became binding on the state by the acceptance of its provisions by the several railroad companies, and is impaired by the application of the Constitution of the state.

If the Minnesota Western Railroad or its stockholders, or any of the other railroad companies or their stockholders, were parties to this suit, the questions presented would be simpler. But neither of the companies is party to the suit, nor are the stockholders parties. Their rights are asserted to be transferred to the plaintiffs in error by virtue of the act of 1881.

The argument is that prior to the adoption of the state Constitution the stockholders of the original corporation created by the act of 1853 were exempt from personal liability for corporate indebtedness; that prior to consolidation, under the act of 1881, the stockholders of the constituent companies were also exempt. It is hence contended that it is immaterial whether the Minneapolis Railroad Company is the original of that name chartered by the act of 1853, or a new corporation created by the consolidation. If it is identical, it is argued, with the original company, its stockholders are exempt because its charter contract is older than the Constitution of the state. If it is a new company, its stockholders are nevertheless exempt because it is the settled law in Minnesota that its legislature may transmit existing franchises, immunities, and exemptions vested in one corporation to a new corporation, although it could not grant new franchises of the same class to such corporation. And that the legislature has exercised this power and specifically vested in the consolidated company, first, all the franchises, privileges, and immunities of each of the [342] constituent companies; *and, second, the particular privileges, exemptions, and immunities granted to the Minnesota Western Railroad Company.

We think that there is no doubt whatever that the act of 1881 created a new corporation. It is so designated, not only expressly, but by distinction from the old corporations. The original Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company was given power (§ 9) to acquire by lease or purchase other railroad lines or consolidate with certain other railroads. Section 10. It chose the latter, and the conditions of the consolidation are prescribed. The consolidation is to be accomplished by an agreement of the directors of the companies proposing to consolidate, and the agreement is to provide the terms and mode of carrying the same into effect, the name of "the new corporation, which may be the name of either corporation party thereto, or any other name," the number, names, and residences of the directors and other officers, the amount of capital stock and the number of shares into which it is to be divided, and the classes and par value, the manner of converting the stock of the consolidating companies into that of the new corporation, and the manner of compensating the stockholders of the old corporations who declined to convert their stock into the stock of the new corporations, and many other details.

Section 11 is as follows:

"Upon the approval of such agreement and act of consolidation, as hereinbefore provided, and upon the filing of the same, or a copy thereof, in the office of the secretary of state, the said corporations, parties thereto, shall be deemed and taken to be one corporation, by the name provided in the said agreement and act, and the stock of the new corporation issued under the terms of such agreement and act of consolidation in exchange for the stock of the former companies shall be deemed and taken as lawful stock, and subject only to such further payments, calls, or assessments, if any, as may be mentioned in the said consolidation agreement, and such new corporation shall possess all the powers, rights, and franchises conferred upon each of its constituent corporations, and shall be subject to all the restrictions and duties imposed by the laws of the state."

There can be no doubt, therefore, that a new corporation *was created with new stock-[343] holders. and the case is brought in close similarity to Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed. 357. In that case, as in this, there was a consolidation of railroad companies, and it was held a new corporation was formed. In that case, as in this, one of the companies claimed a special right under its charter (the right to charge such tolls as it might deem "reasonable") and its transmission to the new corporation by the provision of the act authorizing consolidation, which declared: "And such new corporation shall possess all the powers, rights, and franchises conferred upon such two or more corporations by the several acts incorporating the same, or relating thereto respectively, and shall be subject to all the duties imposed by such acts, so far as the same may be consistent with the provisions of this act."

The claim was rejected, Mr. Justice Swayne, speaking for the court, said:

"The legislature had provided for the consolidation. In each case, before it took place the original companies existed and were independent of each other. It could not occur without their consent. The consolidated company had then no existence. It could have none while the original corporation subsisted. All—the old and the new—could not coexist. It was a condition precedent to the existence of the new corporation that the old ones should first surrender their vitality and submit to dissolution. That being done, eo instanti the new corporation came into existence. But the franchises alone to be a corporation would have been unavailing for the purposes in view.

"There is a material difference between such an artificial creation and a natural person. The latter can do anything not forbidden by law. The former can do only what is authorized by its charter. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 12 Wall. 65, 20 L. ed. 354. It was therefore indispensable that other powers and franchises should be given. This was carefully provided for. The new organization took the powers and faculties designated in advance in the acts authorizing the consolidation,—no more and no less. It did not acquire anything by mere transmission. It took everything by creation and grant.

[344] The language was "brief and it was made operative by reference. But this did not affect the legal result. A deed inter partes may be made as effectual by referring to a description elsewhere as by reciting it in full in the present instrument. The consequence is the same in both cases."

In the case at bar, however, the grant to the new corporation is claimed to be not only of the franchises of the constituent companies, but of their "exemptions,"—not only of the franchises of the original Minnesota & St. Louis Railway Company, but of its "exemptions and immunities." But what franchises, exemptions, and immunities? The designation is definite,—those of "each of said corporations," those "hitherto granted to the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company,"—not those of or those granted to the stockholders of either company. And the distinction must be observed,—the distinction between a corporation and its stockholders. It is made in many cases. This court has recognized it for the purposes of taxation. To judge of the intention of the legislature, whether it is in accordance with or against the policy and provisions of the Constitution of the state, the distinction ought to be recognized. The exemption of stockholders from the payment of corporate debts or their liability to pay them (individual liability) is the concern of the stockholders and the corporate creditors.

We do not mean to say that such an exemption may not be secured by the charter of a corporation and protected to its stockholders by the Constitution of the United States from impairment by subsequent state legislation. But we do mean to say that in a state having a constitutional provision imposing liability on stockholders, if the legislature intended those of a new corporation created by it should be exempt it would express the intention directly, and not commit it to disputable inference from provisions which apply by name to the corporation.

177 U. S.

The question is as to the intention of the legislature, and in ascertaining that intention it must be remembered that the act of 1853 did not grant immunity to the stockholders of the Minnesota Western Railroad from liability. The immunity resulted because liability was not imposed, and this legal right of "the stockholders of that corporation, we do not think, can be said to have been transmitted to the stockholders of the new corporation created by the act of 1881 by the grant to it of the "immunities heretofore granted to the Minneapolis & St. Louis Railway Company."

Besides, the grant of power to the new corporation had adequate purpose. As was said in Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed. 357, powers and faculties were necessary to be bestowed upon the new organization, and this could be done directly, as it was to a great extent, or by reference, and would be supposed to be done in subordination to constitutional restrictions. Nor does the provision of § 14, which makes the new corporation subject to the general laws of the state, except as to the privileges, franchises, exemptions, and immunities hitherto granted to the Minnesota & St. Louis Railway Company, conflict with the supposition. That provision had its explanation in the previous laws applying to that company. After its incorporation in 1853 the Minnesota Western did nothing, and nothing was done in pursuance of the purpose of its incorporation, until after the act of 1870 authorizing a change of its name to the Minnesota & St. Louis Railway Company. That act gave it new powers, authorized the creation and issuance of different classes of stock, and provided a means of taxation, and exempted it from all other taxation. But it is not necessary to extend the discussion farther.

We have not deemed it necessary to consider the effect of the constitutional provision as an amendment to the act of 1853, or the power of the legislature to pass the act of 1881 if it could be construed as contended for by plaintiffs in error. We construe it differently, and determine against their contention. In other words, we hold that the legislature did not intend by the act of 1881 to give immunity to the stockholders of the new corporation from the liability imposed by the Constitution of the state.

Judgment affirmed.

*RICHARD F. CAFFREY, as County Clerk [346] of Oklahoma County, Oklahoma Territory, Plff. in Err. and Appt.,

v.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA on the relation of Harper S. Cunningham, Attorney General.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 346-349.)

Appeal—from territorial court—amount in

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Supreme Court to review territorial decisions—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

As to amount necessary to give United States Supreme Court jurisdiction—see note to Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 256.

controversy—decision as to duty of county clerk in respect to taxes.

A decision requiring a county clerk to comply with an order of a territorial board of equalization increasing the assessed valuation of the property in the county does not involve any pecuniary rights of the clerk, where it does not appear that he is a property owner or taxpayer of the county, but bases his resistance to the order upon his duty as an officer; and therefore such decision is not within the jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court on appeal from or writ of error to the supreme court of the territory.

[No. 182.]

Argued March 13, 14, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

IN ERROR to and on APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma to review the judgment of that court granting a writ of mandamus and committing the defendant to jail for refusing to obey the writ. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James R. Keaton argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error and appellant on motion to dismiss:

The value of the matter in dispute is measured by the whole amount of the tax, and not by the separate parts into which it is to be divided when collected.

Davies v. Corbin, 112 U. S. 36, 28 L. ed. 627, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4.

Where an appeal or writ of error has been allowed by the lower court, and the proof in this court leaves the matter in doubt, a motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdictional amount will be denied.

Rector v. Lipscomb, 141 U. S. 557, 35 L. ed. 857, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 83; Gage v. Pumpelly, 108 U. S. 164, 27 L. ed. 668, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390.

In the case at bar, however, the proof to show jurisdictional amount is overwhelming; consequently the court will encounter no difficulty on this question.

Micas v. Williams, 104 U. S. 556, 26 L. ed. 842.

Mr. John S. Flannery also argued the cause and, with Messrs. James R. Keaton and Francis J. Kearful, filed a brief for plaintiff in error and appellant.

Mr. Frederick C. Bryan argued the cause and, with Messrs. Harper S. Cunningham and Charles Dick, filed a brief for defendant in error and appellee.

[346] Mr. Justice McKenna* delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of mandamus brought by the territory of Oklahoma on the relation of Harper S. Cunningham, attorney general of the territory, against Richard F. Caffrey, county clerk of Oklahoma county.

The territorial board of equalization, composed of the governor, *the territorial secretary, and the auditor, increased the assessed valuation of the property of Oklahoma county 24 per cent, and notified the plaintiff in error and appellant thereof, as county clerk.

He refused to comply with the order, and this action was brought in the supreme court of the territory to compel compliance therewith.

An alternative writ of mandamus was issued, to which he made return and answer. In his return and answer he admitted that he had been duly notified of the order of the board of equalization, and had failed to comply with it, and alleged that it was illegal and void, because, first, the board had no jurisdiction or legal authority to make it; second, that it was not made for the purpose of equalizing the valuation of property, but for other and illegal purposes; that it was made arbitrarily, and without evidence other than the assessment roll; that the valuation of the property of Oklahoma county, as shown by the assessment roll, was fair and as high as the property of Pottawatomie county, which the board took as the basis of equalization; that a large part of the property whose valuation was increased consisted of money.

He also alleged that he was prevented from complying by an order of the board of county commissioners.

He prayed "that he be granted a hearing in behalf of the taxpayers of his county, in order that he may establish by competent proof the allegations of fact hereinbefore set out, and that upon a final hearing he have judgment against the relator for his costs in this behalf laid out and expended."

A motion was made by relator to quash the answer and return, which was granted, and on the 21st of September, 1898, judgment was entered granting a peremptory writ of mandamus against the plaintiff in error and appellant.

Declining to obey the writ, he was cited for contempt, and such proceedings were had on the citation that he was adjudged guilty, and committed to jail until he should comply with the writ, and the case was then brought here.

A motion is made to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in this court, which we think should be granted.

*It is provided by the act of March 3, 1885, [348] that no appeal or writ of error shall hereafter be allowed from any judgment or decree in the supreme court of any of the territories of the United States, unless the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, or unless the validity of a patent or a copyright is involved, or a treaty or statute of, or an authority exercised under, the United States, is drawn in question. 23 Stat. at L. 443, chap. 355.

There is controversy between the parties, respectively supported by affidavits, whether the effect of the order of the territorial board of equalization is to increase the taxes of the county $3,179.27 or $28,751.87. But whether it is one sum or the other, the plaintiff in error and appellant does not show that he has any interest in it. He does not allege that he is a property owner or a taxpayer of the county. He alleges he is its county clerk, and bases his resistance to the order of the territorial board of equalization upon his duty as such officer.

However this may have justified his action, of which we express no opinion, or may have caused a dispute which the territorial court had jurisdiction to pass on and determine, it does not give us jurisdiction. To justify our taking jurisdiction there must be a controversy which involves pecuniary value exceeding $5,000 to the party appealing. In other words, there must be a dispute which involves a sum in excess of $5,000. and such sum, or property of its value, must be taken from him by the judgment which he seeks to review.

Colvin v. Jacksonville, 158 U. S. 456, 39 L. ed. 1053, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 866, is in point. It was a suit in equity to restrain the issue of bonds by the city of Jacksonville, and was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Florida. Colvin alleged that he was a taxpayer, and that the amount of taxes that would be assessed upon the property owned by him in the city would exceed $2,000. This was denied, and the complainant then contended that not the amount of his taxes, but the amount of the bonds proposed to be issued ($1,000,000), was the amount in controversy. The circuit court dismissed the case for want of jurisdiction, and this court sustained the ruling, saying by the Chief Justice that "the amount of the interest of *complainant, and not the entire issue of bonds, was the amount in controversy, and, in respect of that, we have no doubt the ruling of the circuit court was correct." El Paso Water Co. v. El Paso, 152 U. S. 157, 38 L. ed. 396, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 494, was cited and approved.

In the pending action the plaintiff in error and appellant has neither gained nor lost any money or money's worth by the judgment of the supreme court of the territory.

The writ of error and appeal are dismissed.

RICHARD F. CAFFREY, County Clerk, etc.,
Plff. in Err. and Appt.,
v.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA ex rel. W. R. TAYLOR, County Attorney.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 349.)

[No. 274.]

IN ERROR to and APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma. Dismissed.

Counsel in this cause having stipulated that the same judgment shall be entered in this case as in No. 182 (177 U. S. 346. ante, 799, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664), the writ of error and appeal are dismissed.
177 U. S.

E. F. BLACK, Appt.,

v.

WALTER P. JACKSON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 349-365.)

Appeal—amount in controversy—right to jury in territorial court—injunction to establish title to land.

1. The value of land, and not simply the value of the right of present possession thereof, is the amount in controversy for the purpose of an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the supreme court of a territory, when the case involves a claim of right to land of which the naked legal title remains in the United States.
2. A mandatory injunction to establish a right to the possession of land claimed as a homestead under the United States statutes cannot be granted by an Oklahoma court, under Okla. Stat. (1893) 764, § 3882, abolishing the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, where no special grounds are shown for equitable relief, and there is a remedy at law by action of forcible detainer, and a jury trial is not waived, since there is a right to a jury trial in such case, by virtue of U. S. Const. 7th Amend.

[No. 107.]

Submitted February 1, 1900. Decided March 26, 1900.

APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma to review a decision affirming a judgment granting an injunction in an action relating to the possession of land claimed as a homestead. Reversed.

See same case below, 6 Okla. 751, 52 Pac. 406.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

*By a petition filed by Jackson against [350] Black in the district court of Kay county, Oklahoma territory, the following case was made:

On the 17th day of November, 1886, Jackson made a homestead entry upon the S. W. 1/4 sec. 26, T. 28, R. 2 east, I. M. The same land, prior to that date, had been embraced in a homestead entry made by Black, but that entry was finally held for cancelation

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Supreme Court to review territorial decisions—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

As to amount necessary to give United States Supreme Court jurisdiction—see note to Schunk v. Moline, M. & S. Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 256.

As to right to trial by jury—see notes to Eilenbecker v. Plymouth County Dist. Ct. 33 L. ed. U. S. 801; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Shane, 39 L. ed. U. S. 727; Perego v. Dodge, 41 L. ed. U. S. 113; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Sparrow (C. C. W. D. Mich.) 1 L. R. A. 480; Anderson v. O'Donnell (S. C.) 1 L. R. A. 632.

As to right to trial by jury in Federal courts—see notes to O'Connell v. Reed, 5 C. C. A. 603; Vany v. Peirce, 26 C. C. A. 528.

As to mandatory injunctions—see Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.) 20 L. R. A. 161, and note.

by the Secretary of the Interior, who by a decision rendered October 26, 1896, denied Black's motion for review, and allowed Jackson to make entry of the land. After that decision Black continued to remain in possession of the west 80 acres of the tract, and refused and neglected to vacate the same, although requested to do so. He had upon the land a barbed-wire fence and other [351] improvements attached *to the realty. It was alleged that he was financially unable to respond in damages for any injury he was causing the plaintiff by trespassing upon the land, and that plaintiff had no adequate remedy other than by this suit.

The relief asked was a mandatory injunction to restrain the defendant from entering upon or in any manner trespassing upon or using any portion of the land embraced in the plaintiff's homestead entry; from removing or in any manner destroying the fence or other improvements on the lands that were permanently attached thereto; and for such other and further relief as the court deemed just and right.

The defendant filed an answer, but it was withdrawn that he might file a demurrer. He demurred to the application for an injunction upon the grounds, among others, that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the court was without jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant, after excepting to that ruling, filed an amended answer.

In the first paragraph of the amended answer the defendant alleged that he had resided upon the land in question since about the 16th day of September, 1893, claiming a right thereto under the laws of the United States: that at the time of settlement thereon, and thereafter, he was a legally qualified homestead claimant; that he had done no act of any kind or nature since the 16th day of September, 1893, disqualifying him to hold the land as a homestead; that on the 31st day of October, 1895, he filed a homestead entry upon the land, and afterwards the plaintiff filed a contest against such entry upon the ground that his settlement as a homestead claimant was prior to that of defendant and prior to the filing of defendant's homestead entry; that it had been finally determined and decided by the Land Department of the United States that defendant's settlement upon and entry of the land was subsequent to that of plaintiff, and defendant's homestead entry was canceled, and plaintiff allowed to make homestead entry upon the sole ground that plaintiff's settlement was prior to the settlement and homestead entry of the defendant; that during the time he had resided upon the land, [352] defendant *had placed thereon lasting and valuable improvements, worth about $500, claiming to be entitled to the benefit of the laws of the United States and of the territory of Oklahoma relating to occupying claimants; and that his rights "cannot be disposed of in a case in equity before the court only."

The second paragraph of the answer alleged that on the 16th day of September, 1893, and thereafter, the defendant was a native-born citizen of the United States, in all respects qualified to make homestead entry upon the land in question; that on that day, after 12 o'clock, central standard time (a signal for starting from the outer line of the Cherokee outlet being given), he ran from the 100-foot strip along the south line of the state of Kansas that had been measured, staked off, and reserved as a gathering place for those desiring to "run" for lands in the Cherokee outlet, and made all possible haste to secure and settle upon a suitable piece of land as a homestead; that there were many thousands of people along that line, more than could secure homes in the outlet, allowing 160 acres to each qualified entryman: that the plaintiff, not observing the law, the proclamation of the President, and the rules governing the opening of those lands to settlement, and for the purpose of gaining an unlawful and undue advantage of defendant and others seeking a home in the outlet, crossed the 100-foot reserve around the outer boundary of the lands prior to 12 o'clock noon, central standard time, September 16, 1893, and unlawfully and wrongfully entered upon the lands embraced within the outlet and within the 100-foot reservation known as the Chilocco reservation, and at the hour of noon, when the outlet was opened to settlement, started on the race for a home from the south line of that reservation and about 3½ miles south of the 100-foot reservation along the northern boundary of the Cherokee outlet, and thereby wrongfully, unlawfully, and unjustly started in the race for a home 3½ miles in advance of the defendant and others who observed the law of Congress opening the lands to settlement and the President's proclamation pursuant thereto; that plaintiff's prior settlement was wholly by reason of said advantage; that plaintiff filed in the United States land office at Perry, Oklahoma territory, a contest *against defendant's [353] homestead entry made upon the land described in the petition on the 31st day of October, 1893, and as grounds for the contest alleged and claimed that he, plaintiff, settled upon the land in question, claiming it as his homestead prior to the settlement and homestead entry of defendant; that upon the trial of such contest, it was conclusively proved and admitted by plaintiff that he had started upon the race from the south line of the Chilocco reservation as stated; that upon such trial the register and receiver of the land office at Perry, Oklahoma territory, found from the evidence that plaintiff had started upon the race from the point and in the manner mentioned, and also that his settlement upon and claim of the land was prior to that of defendant, and the qualification of the plaintiff to acquire a homestead on account of his having entered upon the land in violation of the act of Congress opening the same to settlement and the President's proclamation pursuant thereto was directly in issue between plaintiff and defendant in the contest case; but that the register and receiver, although finding from the evidence and admissions of plaintiff that he had so entered upon said land, misunderstood and wrongfully interpreted and misapplied the law in relation to the qualification of plaintiff to take and hold the land as a homestead, and expressly found, as a matter of law, that plaintiff was not disqualified as "a sooner" by reason of having entered upon the land in the manner aforesaid.

[354] The answer also alleged that the defendant duly appealed from the decision of the register and receiver to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, presenting to that officer the same question with reference to the disqualification of plaintiff to acquire title to the land as a homestead, but that the Commissioner misapplied the law and wrongfully and unlawfully sustained the conclusion of the register and receiver in that regard; that the defendant then appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, to whom the same legal question was submitted, and the Secretary also misapplied the law in relation to the qualification of plaintiff and wrongfully and unlawfully sustained the findings of the Commissioner; that the defendant duly filed his motion for review in the case, in which the question as to the qualification of plaintiff was presented, and urged a reconsideration and reversal, but the Secretary, still misunderstanding and misapplying the law, wrongfully and unlawfully refused a review, and wrongfully and contrary to law canceled the homestead entry of defendant and permitted plaintiff to make homestead entry of the land, although plaintiff was at the time, and still is, wholly disqualified to acquire title to it based upon a prior settlement by reason of his having entered upon the Cherokee outlet in violation of law; that by reason of such disqualification the plaintiff could never acquire the title to the land, nor a greater estate therein than a trust estate for the sole benefit of the defendant; that defendant was lawfully entitled to reside upon the land as a homestead and acquire the title thereto by compliance with the laws of the United States and the rules of the Land Department; and that plaintiff, being disqualified to acquire title, should not be heard in this action to demand that defendant be ejected from the land and his home and improvements thereon.

The answer further alleged that if the defendant were ejected from the land and his home and improvements thereon the plaintiff would relinquish to the government of the United States for a valuable consideration all his claim to and interest in the land, and the same would "be entered as a homestead by some other person qualified to enter and hold the same and a stranger to the disqualification and wrongful acts of the plaintiff herein; that said land, with the improvements thereon by this defendant, could be transferred in the manner aforesaid for the sum of $6,000; that he has been by temporary order of this court restrained from exercising the right of possession and control over all of said land, with the exception of about 5 acres occupied by his dwelling and improvements immediately surrounding the same, and that he is ready and willing to execute to the plaintiff a good and sufficient bond to compensate him for all loss of every kind or nature occasioned by defendant's occupancy and detention of said 5 acres and improvements, provided defendant is allowed to retain his possession thereof and so remain in position to assert his rights to all of said land as soon as he can possibly do so in accordance with law."

*The defendant prayed: First. That the plaintiff be not allowed to further maintain his action for the possession of the land or any part thereof. Second. That in the event that prayer was not granted, the plaintiff be denied the right to maintain his action to the extent of wholly ejecting the defendant from the 5 acres and his dwelling and improvements situated thereon until such time as the plaintiff acquired a patent to the land and the defendant was in a position to commence suit for the purpose of having plaintiff's title so acquired declared to be held in trust for him. [355]

The trial court sustained a demurrer to the answer, and, the defendant declining to further answer, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff as prayed for in the application for a mandatory injunction, the defendant being enjoined from in any manner entering upon the premises in question or exercising any control or possession over them except for the purpose of removing therefrom his improvements, including buildings and fences, for which thirty days' time was given.

This judgment was affirmed in the supreme court of the territory. That court in its opinion held (using the words of the syllabus prepared by the court) that "where adverse claimants are residing upon a tract of land, and each claiming the same as a homestead by virtue of priority of settlement, and the Land Department makes a final award thereof, the losing party cannot properly claim the right to continue his residence upon the land for the purpose of bringing a suit in equity to declare a trust against his successful adversary, when he has already resided upon the land a sufficient length of time, under the law, to enable him to make final proof for the land." 6 Okla. 751, 52 Pac. 406.

Mr. John W. Shartel submitted the cause for appellant. Mr. S. H. Harris was with him on the brief.

The Code of Civil Procedure of the territory makes no distinction between an equitable right to possession and a legal right to possession. If plaintiff had a right to the possession of the land covered by his entry, and the defendant was wrongfully in possession of a portion of the premises, he should have brought ejectment, because facts which will support such an injunctive proceeding will equally support ejectment.

Duffey v. Rafferty, 15 Kan. 9; Simpson v. Boring, 16 Kan. 248; Mooney v. Olsen, 21 Kan. 697; Hollenback v. Ess, 31 Kan. 88, 1 Pac. 275.

Mr. Fred Beall submitted the cause for appellee:

Conceding the value of the land to exceed $5,000, there is nothing in the record by which can be determined the value of the possession of the land, which was the matter in dispute.

Willis v. Eastern Trust & Bkg. Co. 167 U. S. 76, 42 L. ed. 83, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1004.

The right asserted by Black is entirely speculative. His interest as alleged is too uncertain and contingent to give this court jurisdiction of his appeal.

South Carolina v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 353, sub nom. United States ex rel. South Carolina v. Seymour, 38 L. ed. 742, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 871, and cases cited; Durham v. Seymour, 161 U. S. 235, 40 L. ed. 682, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; Huntington v. Saunders, 163 U. S. 319, 41 L. ed. 174, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1120.

The court had jurisdiction to issue a mandatory injunction.

Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355, 41 Pac. 357; Sproat v. Durland, 2 Okla. 25, 35 Pac. 682, 886; Re Lennon, 166 U. S. 548, 41 L. ed. 1110, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 658; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 3d ed. p. 261, § 959, and notes; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. p. 2093, § 1359, and notes.

To exclude equity the remedy at law must be as practical and efficient to the ends of justice and its prompt administration as the remedy in equity.

Tyler v. Savage, 143 U. S. 79, 36 L. ed. 82, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; Kilbourn v. Sunderland, 130 U. S. 505, 32 L. ed. 1005, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Missouri P. R. Co. 147 U. S. 248, 37 L. ed. 155, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 299.

A proceeding by unlawful detainer could not give full relief against the wrongful acts of the defendant.

Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355, 41 Pac. 357.

[355] Mr. Justice Harlan, after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

[356] 1. The final judgment of the supreme court of the territory *can be re-examined here if the value of the matter in dispute be sufficient to give this court jurisdiction. The defendant claimed to have acquired by his entry and settlement a vested interest in the entire land covered by his entry, and insisted that even if the plaintiff obtained a patent therefor the title would be held in trust for him. He proceeds in his defense upon the ground that after residing upon the land for the period designated in the statute he will be entitled under the law to a patent. It ought not to be assumed that he will put himself in such position that he cannot demand a patent. Although the naked legal title remains in the United States in trust for the person who may earn it, we think that in determining the value of the matter in dispute we should look at the value of the land, not simply at the value of the right of present possession. According to the weight of proof, the value of the land embraced by the homestead entry of Black is more than the sum required for our jurisdiction. 23 Stat. at L. 443, chap.

804

355; 26 Stat. at L. 81, 86, chap. 182, § 9. Besides the demurrer admitted the averment in the answer to the effect that the land with the defendant's improvements thereon could be transferred in the manner stated in the answer for the sum of $6,000. The motion to dismiss the appeal must therefore be overruled.

2. This case having been determined on demurrer to the answer, it must be taken as true that Black resided upon the land in dispute on and after September 16, 1893, claiming the right to do so in virtue of the laws of the United States and of a homestead entry made before the one made by Jackson. It appears that the Land Office recognized the prior right to be in Jackson. This action of the Land Office, Black contends, was erroneous in matter of law, and he has announced his purpose, in the event a patent is issued to Jackson, to institute appropriate judicial proceedings, the object of which will be to have it declared that the legal title is held in trust for him. He insists that although, in the absence of fraud, the courts will not go behind the facts found by the Land Department in any contest before it relating to the administration of the public lands, he is not concluded by the decision of that Department upon questions of law.

If parties are injuriously affected by any action of the Land *Department based upon an erroneous view of the law, the courts have power in some form to protect their rights against such illegal action. In Cornelius v. Kessel, 128 U. S. 456, 461, 32 L. ed. 482, 483, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122, 124, this court said: "The power of supervision possessed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office over the acts of the register and receiver of the local land offices in the disposition of the public lands undoubtedly authorizes him to correct and annul entries of land allowed by them, where the lands are not subject to entry, or the parties do not possess the qualifications required, or have previously entered all that the law permits. The exercise of this power is necessary to the due administration of the Land Department. If an investigation of the validity of such entries were required in the courts of law before they could be canceled, the necessary delays attending the examination would greatly impair, if not destroy, the efficiency of the Department. But the power of supervision and correction is not an unlimited or an arbitrary power. It can be exerted only when the entry was made upon false testimony, or without authority of law. It cannot be exercised so as to deprive any person of land lawfully entered and paid for. By such entry and payment the purchaser secures a vested interest in the property and a right to a patent therefor, and can no more be deprived of it by order of the Commissioner than he can be deprived by such order of any other lawfully acquired property. Any attempted deprivation in that way of such interest will be corrected whenever the matter is presented so that the judiciary can act upon it." So, in Sanford v. Sanford, 139 U. S. 642, 647, 35 L. ed. 290, 291, 11 Sup. Ct.

177 U. S.

Rep. 666, 667, it was said that where the matters determined by the Land Office "are not properly before the Department, or its conclusions have been reached from a misconstruction by its officers of the law applicable to the cases before it, and it has thus denied to parties rights which, upon a correct construction, would have been conceded to them, or where misrepresentations and fraud have been practised, necessarily affecting its judgment, then the courts can, in a proper proceeding, interfere and control its determination so as to secure the just rights of parties injuriously affected"—citing Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 426, 26 L. ed. 800, 802; Baldwin v. Stark, 107 U. S. 463, 465, 27 L. ed. 526, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 473.

[358] *As to Jackson's right to possession, it is clear that although successful in his contest with Black before the Land Office, no patent could issue to him under the original homestead law until after the expiration of five years from the date of his entry, and not then except upon proof that he, or if he be dead his widow, or if she be dead her heirs or devisees, prove "by two credible witnesses that he, she, or they have resided upon or cultivated the same for the term of five years immediately succeeding the time of filing the affidavit [required by § 2290 of the Revised Statutes], and makes affidavit that no part of such land has been alienated, except as provided in § 2288, and that he, she, or they will bear true allegiance to the government of the United States; then, in such case, he, she, or they, if at that time citizens of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent, as in other cases provided by law." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2291. But by the 3d section of the act of May 14, 1880, entitled "An Act for the Relief of Settlers on Public Lands," 21 Stat. at L. 140, chap. 89, it was provided "that any settler who has settled, or who shall hereafter settle, on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall be allowed the same time to file his homestead application and perfect his original entry in the United States Land Office as is now allowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws to put their claims on record, and his right shall relate back to the date of settlement, the same as if he settled under the pre-emption laws."

It thus appears that Jackson holds only an inchoate title to the land in dispute and that he may so conduct himself before making final proof and securing final certificate as to forfeit his right to obtain a patent based upon the decision of the Land Office.

By the decree below the defendant is enjoined from entering upon the premises in question or exercising any further control or possession over them, except to remove his improvements within thirty days after the decree. In his original answer the defendant claimed that he was entitled to a trial by jury, and in his amended answer he insisted that his rights could not be disposed of in equity before the court only.

[359] *What circumstances under the laws of

Oklahoma will justify the use of a mandatory injunction for the purpose of ousting a person of the possession of land and putting his adversary in possession—neither party having the legal title—is left in some doubt by the decisions of the supreme court of that territory. Sproat v. Durland, 2 Okla. 24, 35 Pac. 682, 886; Peckham v. Faught, 2 Okla. 173, 37 Pac. 1085; Reaves v. Oliver, 3 Okla. 62, 41 Pac. 353; Woodruff v. Wallace, 3 Okla. 355, 41 Pac. 357; Procter v. Stuart, 4 Okla. 679, 46 Pac. 501; Barnes v. Newton, 5 Okla. 428, 48 Pac. 190, 49 Pac. 1074; Laughlin v. Fariss, 7 Okla. 1, 50 Pac. 254; Glover v. Swartz (Okla.) 58 Pac. 943; Brown v. Donnelly (Okla.) 59 Pac. 975. Some of the decisions seem to restrict the right to such an injunction to cases in which the defendant was a mere trespasser upon the particular land in dispute without color or pretense of claim or title, while others recognize the appropriateness of that remedy where a plaintiff seeks possession after succeeding in a contest before the Land Office with one who at the initiation of such contest was in peaceable possession and in good faith contending for his right to such possession.

We think that the decision in Laughlin v. Fariss, 7 Okla. 1, 5-7, 9, 11, 50 Pac. 254, should be accepted as a correct exposition of the law of the territory. What was that case? One F. M. Fariss made a homestead entry on land, and received a certificate of cash entry. The interest so acquired was conveyed by deed to W. D. Fariss. Before F. M. Fariss made his final proof, Laughlin filed against him a contest on the ground of prior settlement. That contest finally came before the Secretary of the Interior for review, and was decided adversely to Laughlin. Subsequently, and before F. M. Fariss made his final proof, Laughlin filed another contest alleging that Fariss was disqualified to make a homestead entry by reason of having entered the Oklahoma country in violation of law. Fariss's assignee sued Laughlin, alleging that he was entitled to the sole and exclusive occupancy of the land, and asking that an injunction be awarded restraining Laughlin from cultivating or interfering with the land and removing him from the premises.

The questions presented to the supreme court of Oklahoma for decision in that case were: 1. Did the petition show that plaintiff had an equitable title to the tract of land in controversy? *2. If so, was that title a [360] sufficient basis for an action at law for the recovery of the possession of the land? 3. Should questions 1 and 2 be answered in the affirmative, then the inquiry was whether the petition contained a sufficient statement of facts to justify the relief sought and obtained?

The court answered the first question upon the authority of Flanagan v. Forsythe, 6 Okla. 225, 50 Pac. 152, in which it was held that "when a homestead entryman has complied with all the requirements of the Federal statutes applicable to the disposal of the tract of land occupied by him, and has made his final proof, paid the amount of money required, and received final certificate therefor, he has a complete equitable title to said land, with the naked legal title only remaining in the government."

In answering the second question in the affirmative, the court referred to § 614 of the Territorial Code of Civil Procedure which provides: "In an action for the recovery of real property, it shall be sufficient if the plaintiff state in his petition that he has a legal or equitable estate therein, and is entitled to the possession thereof, describing the same, as required by § 127, and that the defendant unlawfully keeps him out of possession. It shall not be necessary to state how the plaintiff's estate or ownership is derived." Okla. Stat. 1893, 864, title Procedure—Civil. Section 127, here referred to, provides that, "in any action for the recovery of real property, it shall be described with such convenient certainty as will enable an officer holding an execution to identify it." The supreme court of the territory said: "It would seem that the language of this section is too plain to need the support of authority to show that an equitable title or estate in land is a sufficient basis for an action in the nature of ejectment, but if such were necessary it can be found in abundance by consulting the decisions of the supreme court of the state from which the statute was taken"—citing Simpson v. Boring, 16 Kan. 248; Kansas P. R. Co. v. McBratney, 12 Kan. 9; Duffey v. Rafferty, 15 Kan. 9; State v. Stringfellow, 2 Kan. 263; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Pracht (Kan.) 1 Pac. 319. The court added: "It is also apparent [361] that the allegations *contained in plaintiff's petition, regarding his title and right of possession, are amply sufficient to entitle him to maintain an action of forcible detainer for the possession of said tract of land. Price v. Olds, 9 Kan. 66; Conaway v. Gore, 27 Kan. 122."

The third question was answered in the negative, the court reaffirming the principle announced in Richardson v. Penny, 6 Okla. 328, 50 Pac. 231, in which it was said: "We still hold to the well, if not universally, established doctrine that, when a party has a plain and adequate remedy at law he cannot invoke the powers of a court of equity to issue its writ of injunction."

In the course of its opinion the court, having stated that it was conceded that the action of forcible entry and detainer would lie in a case like the one then before it, said: "This remedy by injunction, both mandatory and prohibitive in character, may and does sometimes become a very far-reaching and oppressive, as well as a speedy and effective, one, and should only be granted by courts of equity in cases where the applicants therefor bring themselves clearly within the well-defined and established rules authorizing the issuance of same; hence, such courts rarely deem it necessary or advisable to interfere in this manner, to aid a person endeavoring to recover the possession of real property"—citing High on Injunctions, 2d ed. §§ 354, 355, 360, and Lacassagne v. Chapuis, 144 U. S. 119, 124, 36 L. ed. 368, 370, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 659, 661. The rule, the court observed, was clearly and concisely stated by this court in Lacassagne v. Chapuis, in which it was said: "The plaintiff was out of possession when he instituted this suit, and by the prayer of this bill he attempts to regain possession by means of the injunction asked for. In other words, the effort is to restore the plaintiff by injunction to rights of which he had been deprived. The function of an injunction is to afford preventive relief, not to redress alleged wrongs which had been committed already. An injunction will not be used to take property out of the possession of one party and put it into that of another. . . . The plaintiff has a full, adequate, and complete remedy at law, and the case is not one for the jurisdiction of a court of equity."

The supreme court of the territory thus concluded its opinion *in Laughlin v. Fariss: [362] "We hold that the action of injunction will not lie to adjust possessory rights to a tract of land after the equitable title thereto has passed from the government of the United States and become vested in an individual, unless in a case which presents some recognized special ground therefor, which must be one other than that one party claims that he is the owner and entitled to the immediate possession thereof, and that the other party unlawfully and without any right whatever holds and detains such possession. We therefore conclude that the facts, stated by the plaintiff below in his amended petition, are not sufficient to entitle him to the interference of a court of equity."

In the decision in Laughlin v. Fariss all the justices of the supreme court of the territory concurred, including those who constituted the majority when the present case was decided. And we cannot find that that court has in any case withdrawn or qualified the ruling that an entryman, out of possession and having a decision by the Land Office in his favor, may proceed against his adversary in possession by an action of forcible detainer, and thus obtain possession without resorting to the extraordinary remedies used by courts of equity. According to the decisions of that court, Black, as between himself and his successful adversary, was in possession without color of title. Now, by the statutes of the territory, in the article relating to forcible entry and detainer, if it be found that lands and tenements after a lawful entry "are held unlawfully," then the justice "shall cause the party complaining to have restitution thereof;" and it is provided that proceedings under that article may be had in all cases "where the defendant is a settler or occupier of lands and tenements, without color of title, and to which the complainant has the right of possession." Okla. Stat. 1893, 919, 920, §§ 4805, 4806.

In the opinion in the present case the supreme court of the territory said nothing about defendant's contention that he was entitled to a trial by jury. Speaking by the same justice who in the court below delivered the opinion in the present case, the supreme court of the territory, in Barnes v. Newton, 5 Okla. 428, 432, 48 Pac. 190, 49 Pac. 1074, conceded that in a case between [363]contesting entrymen *the one who obtained the decision of the Land Office might avail himself of the statutory provisions relating to forcible entry and detainer, but that such a remedy was not sufficiently efficacious, for the reason that "by delays and appeals a party in possession of a homestead could keep his adversary out of possession of the land for years." But the same reason could be urged to justify the extraordinary remedy of a mandatory injunction in order to put a defendant out of possession, even where the plaintiff was entitled to maintain ejectment or an action in the nature of ejectment. The suggestion referred to leaves out of view the distinction made by the Constitution of the United States between cases in law and cases in equity. Robinson v. Campbell, 3 Wheat. 212, 223, 4 L. ed. 372, 376; Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 19 L. ed. 260; Van Norden v. Morton, 99 U. S. 373, 25 L. ed. 453; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 467, 516, 42 L. ed. 819, 838, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418. And it also fails to recognize the provisions of the Seventh Amendment securing the right of trial by jury in "suits at common law" where the value in controversy exceeds $20. That Amendment, so far as it secures the right of trial by jury, applies to judicial proceedings in the territories of the United States. Webster v. Reid, 11 How. 437, 460, 13 L. ed. 761, 770; American Pub. Co. v. Fisher, 166 U. S. 464, 466, 41 L. ed. 1079, 1080, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 618; Springville v. Thomas, 166 U. S. 707, 41 L. ed. 1172, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 717. So that a court of a territory authorized, as Oklahoma was, to pass laws not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States (26 Stat. at L. 81, 84, chap. 182, § 6), could not proceed in a "common-law" action as if it were a suit in equity, and determine by mandatory injunction rights for the protection or enforcement of which there was a plain and adequate remedy at law according to the established distinctions between law and equity. And this evidently is in accordance with the statutes of Oklahoma providing that while the court must try issues of law, unless referred in the mode prescribed, "issues of fact arising in actions for the recovery of money or of specific real or personal property shall be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived or a reference be ordered." Okla. Stat. 1893, 809, § 4156.

In the case before us no special grounds are disclosed that would authorize the court to issue a mandatory injunction and determine without a jury the issue as to the right [364]of possession. *If it be said that the plaintiff's residence upon the land for a given time is necessary in order that he may earn a patent, the answer is that the defendant is not alleged to be in the actual possession of the entire land embraced by the plaintiff's entry. Nor does it appear that the plaintiff may not, without interference by the defendant, maintain a residence upon that part of the land which is not in the actual possession of the defendant, and do all that may be requisite in order to earn a patent. We may also observe that it is not alleged that the defendant is doing any actual injury to the part of the land remaining in his possession. It does not appear that he has done anything except to continue in possession of that part. If Black prevents Jackson from taking possession of the 80 acres in question, he is entitled to bring his action of forcible detainer and to recover possession unless it appears that the Land Office erred, as matter of law, in deciding for him. It is not meant by this that an action of forcible detainer is the only remedy that can be adopted by the plaintiff.

As in Oklahoma the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity is abolished,—each action being called a civil action, whatever the nature of the relief asked (Okla. Stat. 1893, 764, § 3882),—we perceive no reason why the case may not proceed in the trial court under the pleadings as they have been framed, with the right of the defendant to a trial by jury in respect of all issues which, according to the recognized distinctions between actions at common law and suits in equity, are determinable in that mode.

3. One of the defenses made by Black is that the plaintiff entered upon the land in violation of the act of March 1, 1889, 25 Stat. at L. 759, chap. 317, and of the act of March 2, 1889, 25 Stat. at L. 980, 1005, chap. 412, as well as of the proclamation of the President of March 23, 1889, 26 Stat. at L. 1544, 1546. The acts and proclamation referred to related to the lands obtained by the United States under the agreement with the Muscogee or Creek Nation of Indians in the Indian territory. The contention of the defendant is that the plaintiff by his conduct disqualified himself from acquiring any interest in the tract of land here in dispute which was part of the lands obtained from the Muscogee or *Creek Indians, and conse- [365]quently the Land Office erred, as matter of law, in its decision for the plaintiff. Smith v. Townsend, 148 U. S. 490, 37 L. ed. 533, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 634; Payne v. Robertson, 169 U. S. 323, 42 L. ed. 764, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337; Calhoun v. Violet, 173 U. S. 60, 62, 43 L. ed. 614, 615, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324. No opinion was expressed on this question by the supreme court of the territory, and we need not now express an opinion. If the plaintiff should proceed against the defendant in some other mode than by injunction, the facts connected with his alleged unlawful entering upon the lands opened for settlement under the above acts and proclamation can all be proved, and any question arising out of them as to his disqualification to acquire any interest whatever in the land in dispute can then be determined.

We are of opinion that the case made out by the plaintiff was not such as to entitle him to a mandatory injunction, and that the court of original jurisdiction erred in determining the cause without a jury. The decree of the Supreme Court of the Territory is therefore reversed, and the cause is remanded with directions to set aside that decree and for such further proceedings as will be consistent with law and this opinion.

Reversed.

J. C. POTTS, Appt.,
v.
THOMAS N. HOLLEN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 365-370.)

Appeal—amount in controversy—right to jury trial.

1. A motion to dismiss an appeal from the supreme court of a territory on the ground that the amount in controversy is insufficient to give jurisdiction must be denied where there are affidavits showing that the land in question is of greater value than $5,000, while the record contains an order made by the supreme court of the territory on the application for appeal, stating that more than that amount was involved in the action.
2. A mandatory injunction to establish a right to the possession of land claimed as a homestead under the United States statutes cannot be granted by an Oklahoma court, under Okla. Stat. (1893) 764, § 3882, abolishing the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, where no special grounds are shown for equitable relief, and there is a remedy at law by action of forcible detainer, and a jury trial is not waived, since there is a right to a jury trial in such case, by virtue of U. S. Const. 7th Amend.

[No. 143.]

Submitted February 1, 1900. Decided March 26, 1900.

APPEAL from a decision of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma affirming a judgment granting an injunction against interference with possession of land claimed as a homestead and ordering a party to remove therefrom. Reversed.

See same case below, 6 Okla. 696, 52 Pac. 917.

Statement by Mr. Justice Harlan:

This action was commenced by petition filed in the district court for Kay county, Oklahoma territory.

[366] The plaintiff Hollon, the appellee here, alleged that on the 13th day of October, 1893, he made a homestead entry of the southeast quarter of section 32, township 28 north, of range 3 east, 1. M., in Perry land district, Oklahoma territory, which land office had jurisdiction over that tract, and the officers of which had authority to make and allow such entry; that there was filed in that office at Perry a certified affidavit of contest by defendant Potts; that under the allegations of that contest the case went to a hearing, after which a decision was rendered in favor of plaintiff and the contest case was dismissed, from which decision defendant appealed, but not within the time required by law, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, who affirmed the decision of the local land office; that the defendant filed an amended contest affidavit before the Commissioner, which was rejected, and the motion for rehearing was denied; that the defendant appealed from the Commissioner's decision, and on the 9th day of June, 1896, the Secretary of the Interior passed upon the case and affirmed the action of the Commissioner; that all the proceedings before the Interior Department upon which the defendant was entitled to be heard with reference to such land contest had been had and the case was fully closed; that under and by virtue of his homestead entry the plaintiff was entitled to the exclusive use, benefit, and possession of all the southeast quarter of section 32, township 28 north, range 3 east; that under claim of right, based upon the contest so dismissed, defendant entered upon said quarter section and entered into possession of a part thereof, erecting or causing to be erected a house and other improvements thereon, and still maintained possession of a portion of the section under the protest and against the wishes of plaintiff and without claim or color of title thereto; that defendant at the time had pending before the Department of the Interior no contest or claim of right or title to said tract or piece of land; that defendant was insolvent and unable to respond in damages to the plaintiff, and her possession of and improvements upon the tract prevented the plaintiff from properly cultivating and using that portion of the land in her possession; that defendant threatened, by retaining the possession of a portion of the tract, to involve the plaintiff in many vexatious suits, to his great and irreparable damage and injury; that she had been in possession of a portion of the land since a short time after the opening of the Cherokee outlet; that the plaintiff had no adequate remedy at law; that the defendant had used, cultivated, and controlled about 25 acres of the land to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $150; and that the rents and profits of the land so used by the defendant would amount to about $150.

The relief asked was that the defendant, her agents and employees, be restrained from interfering with the plaintiff's possession, use, and occupancy of the land included in his homestead entry; that she be enjoined from cultivating, improving, or occupying any part of the tract; and that she be permitted, within a time to be fixed, to remove therefrom any improvements made by her prior to the plaintiff's homestead entry, and vacate the land on the order of the court.

The defendant in her answer admitted that "defendant [plaintiff] has the homestead entry in said land and that defendant filed a contest against said entry," but denied each and every other material allegation of the petitioner. The defendant also alleged that "she filed a contest against the said entry of the said Hollon, charging and alleging in substance that plaintiff was disqualified to enter and hold lands by reason of having entered the Cherokee outlet prior to 12 o'clock noon of September 16th, 1893, and run from the south side of the Chilocco reservation, which is 3½ miles south of the [368] lines established in the President's proclamation; that said contest was rejected and defendant duly appealed, and while said cause was still pending defendant filed her amended affidavit of contest against said entry, a copy of which said contest is attached to plaintiff's petition, marked 'Exhibit C,' and hereby referred to and made a part of this answer. Defendant further alleges that within the time required by the rules of practice in the Land Department, to wit, July 22d, 1896, she filed a motion for a review of the Secretary's decision of June 9th, 1896, a copy of which said motion is hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part hereof; and that said cause is *now and was pending at the commencement of this action in the Land Department of the United States."

The plaintiff filed a reply denying "each and every material allegation" in the defendant's answer.

To sustain the issues on his part the plaintiff introduced in evidence an official communication to the register and receiver at Perry, Oklahoma, from the Commissioner of the Land Office, dated November 24th, 1896, which showed that the defendant's motion for a review of the previous action taken in the contest case had been denied by the Land Department. That communication concluded: "The case is hereby closed, and you will advise said Potts that she may, if she elects, file a new contest against the entryman Hollon, incorporating the charge set out in her amended affidavit in due time the action taken, transmitting therewith evidence of notice hereof and of the decision of the Department." The plaintiff then testified in his own behalf, stating that he had the homestead entry on the land in dispute; that the defendant was residing on part of it, about 25 acres. The plaintiff having rested upon this proof, the defendant demurred to the evidence upon two grounds: (1) It did not sustain the allegations of the petition; (2) it did not show that the plaintiff had a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, an exception to that action of the court being taken. The defendant stood upon the demurrer and introduced no evidence.

The trial court without a jury rendered judgment for the plaintiff, enjoining the defendant from interfering with his right to possess and control the land in question, "except that the defendant is hereby given the right to enter upon and harvest the fall wheat crop she has sown upon the land in dispute, and is to remove said wheat from said land within thirty days after the same is ripe and fit to cut;" and she was further enjoined and restrained "from removing or interfering [with] or injuring in any way any well of water that she may have placed upon said land, and all growing timber or trees that she may have placed upon said land, and any growing timber or trees that she may have planted."

The supreme court of the territory affirmed the judgment *of the inferior court. The [369] syllabus of its opinion, prepared by the court, is as follows: "Injunction—When properly granted.—A filed a homestead entry for a tract of government land. B initiated a contest, alleging that A was disqualified from entering the land. The contest was by the Land Department decided in favor of A. During the pendency of such contest B filed an amended affidavit of contest, alleging a different ground of disqualification upon the part of A. Shortly after B first instituted the first contest, B in some manner became possessed of about 25 acres of the land, and held such possession until after the final decision upon the first contest. Held, that upon the authority of Sproat v. Durland, 2 Okla. 24, 35 Pac. 682, 886, A was entitled to an injunction restraining B from interfering with the possession of A, and requiring him to remove from the land in dispute." 6 Okla. 696, 52 Pac. 917.
177 U. S.

From the judgment of the supreme court of the territory the defendant appealed to this court.

Mr. John W. Shartel submitted the cause for appellant. Mr. S. H. Harris was with him on the brief.

Mr. Fred Beall submitted the cause for appellees.

For contentions of counsel, see briefs as reported in Black v. Jackson, 177 U. S. 349, ante, 801, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648.

*Mr. Justice Harlan, after stating the [369] case, delivered the opinion of the court:

The motion to dismiss the present appeal is denied. The land in question is shown to be of greater value than $5,000. In addition to the affidavits filed on the subject of value, the record contains an order made by the supreme court of the territory on the application for appeal, stating that more than the above amount was involved in the action. This order we assume was based upon proof as to value.

One of the assignments of error is that the supreme court of the territory erred in holding that the trial court had jurisdiction of the subject of the action and the right to entertain the suit as a proceeding in equity and without a trial by jury.

For the reasons stated in the opinion in Black v. Jackson, just decided (177 U. S. 349, ante, 801, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 648, we adjudge that the issue of fact involving the right of possession of the premises in dispute could not properly be *determined without the aid [370] of a jury, unless a jury was waived. Without repeating what was said in that opinion, we also hold that the case made by the plaintiff was not such as to entitle him to a mandatory injunction.

The decree is reversed and cause remanded for such further proceedings as may be consistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

EDWARD B. WESLEY, Appt.,

v.

HOWARD P. EELLS.

Specific performance—of contract for land —title not marketable.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 370-378.)

A contract to purchase land will not be specifically enforced against the vendee, when the title is not marketable and cannot be made so except by successful litigation to remove a mortgage from record,—especially when no affirmative action therefor can be taken because the mortgage is held by a state official on behalf of the state.

[No. 176.]

Argued and Submitted March 9, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio dismissing a bill for specific performance of a contract for land. Affirmed.

See same case below, 90 Fed. Rep. 151.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William H. Lyles argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Arthur St. J. Newberry submitted the cause for appellee.

Mr. William A. Barber filed a brief as Amicus Curie.

[370] Mr. Justice Harlan, delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Ohio by Wesley, a citizen of New York, against Eells, a citizen of Ohio.

[371] *The case made by the bill was as follows: The state of South Carolina, being the owner in fee of certain real estate situated in the city of Columbia in that state,—part of the property being known as Agricultural Hall,—caused the same to be sold at public auction, Wesley becoming the purchaser.

By the terms of sale the purchaser was required to pay in cash one third of the price, and to execute his bond and mortgage on the property to secure payment of the balance in two equal annual instalments, with interest from the date of purchase, the obligor to have the option of paying the whole or any part of the sum so secured before the maturity thereof.

At the instance of Wesley, the commissioners of the sinking fund of South Carolina executed a deed in fee simple for the property to one J. W. Alexander, who consented to act as trustee for the plaintiff, the deed, however, not containing any declaration of the trust. Thereupon Alexander executed to the treasurer of the state his bond for the payment of the purchase price,—the mortgagor being accorded the privilege of paying before maturity the whole or any part of the money secured.

NOTE.—That purchaser of real property is not compelled to take doubtful title—see Close v. Stuyvesant (Ill.) 3 L. R. A. 161 and note; Townshend v. Goodfellow (Minn.) 3 L. R. A. 739 and note; Moore v. Williams (N. Y.) 5 L. R. A. 654 and note.

As to when specific performance will be decreed and when refused—see notes to Hepburn v. Dunlop, 4 L. ed. U. S. 65; Colson v. Thompson, 4 L. ed. U. S. 253; Brashler v. Gratz, 5 L. ed. U. S. 323.

810

The mortgage not having then been filed for record, and Wesley having furnished to Alexander a sufficient amount of what is known as South Carolina revenue bond scrip, the latter tendered to the state treasurer of South Carolina in such scrip the principal and interest of the above bond. That officer had authority to receipt for the sum due on the bond and mortgage. The tender was refused by the state treasurer.

By the laws of South Carolina a tender in full of the amount due on a mortgage of real or personal property at any time when the mortgagor has the right to pay the same operates as a satisfaction and extinguishment of the lien of the mortgage, whether the amount be accepted or not, and whether the mortgagor keeps himself in a position to make good the tender or not.

Notwithstanding the tender, the state treasurer caused the above mortgage to be recorded in the proper office.

Subsequently, Alexander conveyed the premises in question to Wesley.

*The bill contains a statement of the [372] history of the above-mentioned revenue bond scrip and of the plaintiff's connection therewith. Reference was made to the act of the general assembly of South Carolina approved the 15th day of September, 1868, entitled "An Act to Authorize Additional Aid to the Blue Ridge Railroad Company in South Carolina," and to the act approved the 2d day of March, 1872, entitled "An Act to Relieve the State of South Carolina of all Liability for its Guaranty of the Bonds of the Blue Ridge Railroad Company by Providing for the Securing and Destruction of the Same," which provided for the issue of certificates of indebtedness styled revenue bond scrip, which should express that the sum mentioned therein was due by the state to bearer, and that the same would be received in payment of taxes and all other dues to the state, except special taxes levied to pay interest on the public debt. By the 4th section of the above act of 1872 the faith and funds of the state were pledged for the ultimate redemption of the revenue bond scrip, and county treasurers were required to receive the same in payment of all taxes levied by the state, except in payment of special taxes levied to pay interest on the public debt; and the state treasurer and all other public officers were required to receive the same in payment of all dues to the state.

The plaintiff had received from the state treasurer of South Carolina, under the circumstances detailed in the bill (which need not be repeated), a large amount of revenue bond scrip. He stated that he was the owner and holder of the scrip received by him, and charged in his bill that by the tender to the state treasurer the Alexander mortgage had been extinguished by operation of law.

177 U.S.

The revenue bond scrip referred to was in the following form:

$100. No. 21. $100.

Revenue Bond Scrip.

THE STATE OF [Palmetto Tree] SOUTH CAROLINA.

COLUMBIA, S. C., March —, 1872.

[373] Receivable as one hundred dollars in payment of all taxes *and dues to the estate, except special tax levied to pay interest on public debt.

Niles G. Parker, State Treasurer.

One hundred dollars. One hundred dollars.

Such being Wesley's relations to the mortgaged property he made a written contract with Eells whereby he agreed, for the price of $20,000, to be paid in cash, to convey to the latter in fee simple the premises in question, free from any valid lien or encumbrance whatever.

The plaintiff offered to deliver to Eells a deed for the premises in fee simple, and demanded payment of the purchase price. But Eells refused to receive the deed or to pay the price, alleging that the scrip tendered by Alexander were not valid obligations of South Carolina, and therefore did not constitute a legal tender of the amount due the state nor operate as an extinguishment of the mortgage.

The plaintiff brought into court and tendered a deed to Eells, and offered to agree that the plaintiff might retain so much of the price for the property as would protect it against any taxes that had accrued upon it.

The relief asked was a decree that the defendant should accept the deed tendered to him and pay the purchase price of the property, less any sum to meet the taxes assessed upon it.

The defendant admitted in his answer that there were no liens or encumbrances upon the property except the mortgage described in the bill and such taxes as were due thereon to the state and to the city of Columbia. But he alleged that the statute authorizing revenue bond scrip to be received in payment of dues to the state had been repealed, and county auditors and county treasurers forbidden to collect any taxes for the redemption of such scrip; that the act under which the scrip was issued was in violation of the Constitution of the United States, forbidding the states from emitting bills of credit, and also in violation of the Constitution of South Carolina, and such scrip was null and void.

[374] The defendant stated in his answer that he had always been, and was then, willing to perform his contract, provided he received *a full and perfect title to the premises, free from any valid lien, and was protected in the quiet and peaceable possession thereof.

The plaintiff filed a general replication, and the cause was submitted on the pleadings and certain documentary evidence showing the history of the revenue bond scrip, the legislation of South Carolina, and certain decisions of the supreme court of that state.

The circuit court of the United States held that the bond scrip issued under the act of March 2d, 1872, were bills of credit and void; that the tender of scrip by Alexander to the state treasurer was therefore not a valid tender, and did not operate to extinguish the mortgage given by Alexander to the state; and that the Agricultural Hall property was still encumbered by the mortgage, and plaintiff could not give defendant a clear title to it. The bill was dismissed at the plaintiff's cost.

In the memorandum of evidence used by stipulation of the parties, reference was made to the case of Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 204, 221, 42 L. ed. 137, 143, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770, 777. But the decision there has no bearing upon the present case. That was an action by Wesley to recover the possession of the property here in dispute,—the defendants being in possession only in their capacities as officers or agents of South Carolina, and insisting that the suit against them was, in legal effect, one against the state within the meaning of the Eleventh Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. "The settled doctrine of this court," it was said in that case, "wholly precludes the idea that a suit against individuals to recover possession of real property is a suit against the state, simply because the defendant holding possession happens to be an officer of the state and asserts that he is lawfully in possession on its behalf. . . . Whether the one or the other party is entitled in law to possession is a judicial, not an executive or legislative, question. It does not cease to be a judicial question because the defendant claims that the right of possession is in the government of which he is an officer or agent." These extracts indicate the scope of the decision in Tindal v. Wesley, and make it clear that that decision does not determine any question now presented.

*The vital question in the present case is [375] whether the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for specific performance. The plaintiff bases his right to such a decree upon the ground that Alexander's tender of revenue bond scrip to the treasurer of South Carolina had the effect to extinguish the lien of the mortgage executed by him, and consequently that plaintiff's deed conveying the fee would give to Eells a good title. This view assumes that the revenue bond scrip tendered by Alexander to the state treasurer were legally receivable in payment of the amount on the Alexander bond and mortgage. But as will be seen from an examination of the cases of State ex rel. Shiver v. Comptroller General, 4 S. C. N. S. 185, and Auditor v. Treasurer, 4 S. C. N. S. 311, the supreme court of South Carolina has held that the revenue bond scrip issued under the act of March 2d, 1872, were bills of credit which the Constitution of the United States forbade the states to emit, and therefore were null and void. And in that view the court below concurred. What then, will be the effect of a decree in the circuit court of the United States sitting in Ohio, requiring the defendant to pay the amount he agreed to pay and to take the deed tendered him by the plaintiff? What would the defendant get under such a decree in consideration of the amount paid by him for the property? He would get a deed from Wesley for premises covered by a mortgage of record which the highest court of the state in which the property is situated will presumably hold not to have been discharged by the tender of revenue bond scrip. And we do not perceive that Eells could by any affirmative action on his part bring the question of the validity of that tender before any court in South Carolina for adjudication. He could not sue the state against its consent, and no suit except one to which the state was a party would effectively reach such a question and release the property from the encumbrance created by the Alexander mortgage. So that, if compelled to take Wesley's deed, Eells would be powerless to have his title made clear of record, unless the state brought suit to foreclose the mortgage and thereby enabled him in defense to relitigate the question already concluded in the courts of that state by judicial decision. It is thus manifest that a decree for specific performance would put upon him a title that *was not at all marketable and could not become such except by successful litigation.

In Hennessey v. Woolworth, 128 U. S. 438, 442, 32 L. ed. 500, 501, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109, 111, this court said: "Specific performance is not of absolute right. It rests entirely in judicial discretion, exercised, it is true, according to the settled principles of equity, and not arbitrarily or capriciously, yet always with reference to the facts of the particular case,"—citing Willard v. Tayloe, 8 Wall. 557, 567, 19 L. ed. 501, 504; Rutland Marble Co. v. Ripley, 10 Wall. 339, 357, 19 L. ed. 955, 961; 1 Story's Eq. Jur. § 742; Seymour v. Delancey, 6 Johns. Ch. 222, 224. To the same effect are McCabe v. Matthews, 155 U. S. 550, 553, 39 L. ed. 256, 257, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 190; Rust v. Conrad, 47 Mich. 449, 454, 41 Am. Rep. 720, 11 N. W. 265; Petty v. Roberts, 7 Bush, 411, 419; Huntington v. Rogers, 9 Ohio St. 511, 516. A court of equity will not compel specific performance if under all the circumstances it would be inequitable to do so. Starnes v. Newsom, 1 Tenn. Ch. 239, 244; Parish v. Oldham, 3 J. J. Marsh. 544, 546; Clowes v. Higginson, 1 Ves. & B. 524, 527.

Again, it is a settled rule of equity that the defendant in a suit brought for the specific performance of an executory contract will not be compelled to take a title about which doubt may reasonably exist or which may expose him to litigation. Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Wheat. 290, 299, 301, 4 L. ed. 242, 244, 245; Tiffin v. Shawhan, 43 Ohio St. 178, 183, 1 N. E. 581. And, speaking generally, a title is to be deemed doubtful where a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction has decided adversely to it or to the principles on which it rests. Fry, Spec. Perf. 3d ed. § 870, and authorities there cited. One of the grounds upon which a decree for specific performance was denied in Hepburn v. Auld, 5 Cranch, 262, 278, 3 L. ed. 96, 100, was that it would impose upon the defendant the necessity of bringing a suit to perfect his title.

The principle is well illustrated in Jeffries v. Jeffries, 117 Mass. 184, 187, which was a suit for the specific performance of a written agreement for the purchase of certain real estate. One of the objections to the title was that it was encumbered by conditions that would interfere with the enjoyment of the property. The supreme judicial court of Massachusetts there said: "Hence the propriety and the necessity of the rule in equity that a defendant in proceedings for specific performance shall *not be compelled [377] to accept a title in the least degree doubtful. It is not necessary that he should satisfy the court that the title is defective so that he ought to prevail at law; it is enough if it appear to be subject to adverse claims which are of such a nature as may reasonably be expected to expose the purchaser to controversy to maintain his title or rights incident to it. Richmond v. Gray, 3 Allen, 25; Sturtevant v. Jaques, 14 Allen, 523; Hayes v. Harmony Grove Cemetery, 108 Mass. 400. He ought not to be subjected, against his agreement or consent, to the necessity of litigation to remove even that which is only a cloud upon his title." So, in Lowry v. Muldrow, 8 Rich. Eq. 241, 247, the court said that on bills for specific performance of contracts concerning lands, "courts of equity do not force the purchasers to take anything but a good title, and do not compel them to buy lawsuits." Numerous other American cases announce the same rule.

The principle is also illustrated in many English cases. In Parker v. Tootal, 11 H. L. Cas. 143, 158, it was said to be an established rule of equity not to compel a purchaser to take a doubtful title. In Rose v. Calland, 5 Ves. Jr. 186, 188, which was a suit by devisees in trust to obtain the specific performance of an agreement entered into by the defendant for the purchase of an estate, certain reasons were given why the plaintiff could not make a sufficient title, one of which was that the court of exchequer, in Nagle v. Edwards, 3 Anstr. 702, had announced principles which, if followed, would prevent the defendant from obtaining such a title as he ought to have. The lord chancellor said: "If I was to send this case to the master, I should create a needless expense; for upon the case in the court of exchequer, Nagle v. Edwards, which I have looked into, my difficulty is this: Can I make a person take a title in the face of that decision? If I do, I decree him to enter into a lawsuit. . . . I desire to be understood as not entirely agreeing with the determination of the court of exchequer. But I should be in a strange situation in desiring a purchaser to take this title, because I think the point a pretty good one, though the court of exchequer have determined against it. It [378] is telling him to try my opinion at his expense." So in *Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. & G. 159, 165, in which the vice chancellor said: "In attempting to lay down a rule upon this subject, I should say that a purchaser is not to take a property which he can only acquire in possession by litigation and judicial decision." In Pyrke v. Waddingham, 10 Hare, 1, 8, it was held that the court will not compel a purchaser to take a title that "will expose him to litigation or hazard."

We are of opinion that the plaintiff's title is not such as a court of equity should compel the defendant to accept. He should not have been compelled to accept it, even if the court below had been of opinion that the revenue bond scrip tendered by Alexander were not bills of credit.

Upon the grounds stated, and without expressing any opinion upon the question whether the revenue bond scrip referred to were or were not bills of credit within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, the decree below is affirmed.

Ex parte: In the Matter of the Application of RAMON BAEZ, Petitioner.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 378-390.)

Habeas corpus—denying leave to file petition—where writ would be ineffectual.

Leave to file a petition for the writ of habeas corpus and certiorari will not be granted where it is obvious that, before a return to the writ, can be made or any other action taken, the restraint of which the prisoner complains will be terminated.

[No. —, Original.]

Submitted March 26, 1900. Decided April 12, 1900.

MOTION for leave to file petition for writ of habeas corpus and certiorari. Denied.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

On March 26 a motion was made for leave to file the following petition for the writ of habeas corpus and certiorari:

[379] "Your petitioner, Ramon Baez, by Tulio Larrinaga, for him *and in his behalf, respectfully shows that he is a native-born inhabitant of the island of Puerto Rico, formerly a dependency of the Kingdom of Spain, but at the time of the occurrences hereinafter narrated belonging to and forming a part of the territory of the United States of America.

"Your petitioner was also formerly a subject of His Imperial Majesty the King of Spain but since long prior to the occurrences herein complained of and ever since, to and including the present time, he has neither owned nor acknowledged allegiance to any other nation or sovereignty than that of the United States of America.

"Your petitioner represents unto this honorable court that he is wrongfully, improperly, unjustly, and illegally imprisoned and restrained of his liberty at Humacao, in and on said island of Puerto Rico, by one Samuel C. Bothwell, called and styled as and 177 U. S.

being the marshal of the United States provisional court for the department of Puerto Rico.

"By act of Congress approved April 25, 1898, it was declared that a state of war had existed and then existed between the United States of America and the Kingdom of Spain, and thereafter, in the course of the prosecution of such war, the military forces of the United States invaded and conquered the island of Puerto Rico and have ever since remained in possession and control thereof.

"December 10, 1898, a treaty of peace was signed at Paris, France, between the duly accredited representatives of the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen Regent of Spain; and the same having been duly reported to the Senate of the United States, ratification thereof was advised by the Senate on February 6, 1899, and, having been ratified by the President of the United States on said date and subsequently by Her Majesty the Queen Regent of Spain, ratifications thereof were exchanged at Washington on the 11th day of April, 1899, and the treaty was proclaimed by the President of the United States on the same day.

"By said treaty it was provided, among other things, as follows:

"Art. II. Spain cedes to the United States the island of Porto *Rico and other islands [380] now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies.

"Art. XI. All Spaniards residing in the territories over which Spain by this treaty cedes or relinquishes her sovereignty shall be subject in matters civil as well as criminal to the jurisdiction of the courts of the country wherein they reside, pursuant to the ordinary laws governing the same; and they shall have the right to appear before such courts, and to pursue the same course as citizens of the country to which the courts belong."

"Prior to the ratification of said treaty of peace and on or about the 12th day of August, 1898, a protocol or agreement between the United States and the Kingdom of Spain was signed at the city of Washington by the representatives of the two nations, under and by virtue of the terms of which a suspension of hostilities between said nations was declared by the President of the United States.

"By article IV. of the said protocol it was agreed that Spain should evacuate Porto Rico, and that commissioners should be appointed by the signatory powers for the purpose of arranging and carrying out the details of such evacuation.

"Thereafter an evacuation commission was appointed by the President of the United States, and a similar commission was appointed by the government of Spain, and the commissioners subsequently assembled in the city of San Juan, Porto Rico, and duly arranged the terms of such evacuation, which were accepted by the respective governments, and the evacuation and retirement of the Spanish forces from the island of Puerto Rico occurred on the 18th day of October, 1898.

"Thereupon, and on said date, Major General John R. Brooke, commanding the forces of the United States, in compliance with the orders of the President, assumed the government of the said island of Porto Rico, and by General Order No. 1, of said date, established the military 'Department of Puerto Rico.'

"Said order, among other things, contained the following:

"The provincial and municipal laws, in so far as they affect the settlement of private rights of persons and property and provide for the punishment of crime, will be enforced unless they are incompatible with the changed conditions of Porto Rico, in which event they may be suspended by the department commander."

"Your petitioner further shows that after said 12th day of August, 1898, hostilities ceased to exist in the island of Porto Rico between the forces of the United States and of Spain, and that since the 11th day of April, 1899, war has ceased to exist between the nations, and also since the last-named date, if not prior thereto, there has been and is now a condition of peace existing throughout said island of Porto Rico, and there has been neither a state of war with any foreign power in the said island, nor has there been any internal or domestic rebellions, revolutions, or dissensions, nor any failure to recognize the authority and sovereignty of the United States.

"Since the occupation of Porto Rico by the United States authorities the civil courts of that island have been in session, exercising the same jurisdiction and in substantially the same form as during the Spanish occupation of the island, and such courts were exercising their ordinary civil and criminal jurisdiction during all of the times herein-after mentioned.

"On the 27th day of June, 1899, by General Order No. 88, of Brigadier General George W. Davis, United States Army, then commanding the department of Porto Rico, and the supreme military authority in said island, there was established a 'United States Provisional Court for the Department of Porto Rico.'

"Said General Order 88, among other things, provided as follows:

"Sec. II. The judicial power of the provisional court hereby established shall extend to all cases which would be properly cognizable by the circuit or district courts of the United States under the Constitution, and to all common-law offenses within the restrictions hereinafter specified."

"Sec. IV. The decisions of said courts shall follow the principles of common law and equity as established by the courts of the United States, and its procedure, rules, and records shall conform as nearly as practicable to those observed and kept in said Federal courts. . . .

"Sec. V. The provisional court shall consist of three judges, *one of whom shall be known as the law judge, and the other two as associate judges, one United States district attorney, one marshal, one clerk, three deputy clerks, one stenographer and reporter, one interpreter, one bailiff and janitor, and one messenger. The law judge shall preside, and shall determine and decide all technical questions of law. A majority vote of the bench shall determine all questions of fact. The jury system may be introduced or dispensed with in any particular case in the discretion of the court.

"Sec. VI. The judges of the provisional court shall be clothed with the powers vested in the judges of the circuit or district courts of the United States.

"Sec. VII. The district attorney shall be authorized to present to the court information against all parties for violations of United States statutes and regulations. He shall also in like manner present informations for violations of orders issued by the department commander relating to civil matters, which may be referred to him from these headquarters. . . .

"Sec. VIII. In order to define more clearly certain branches of the criminal jurisdiction of the provisional court, it is hereby provided that it shall include and be exclusive in the following classes of cases:

"1st. All offenses punishable under the statutory laws of the United States, such as those indicated in paragraph I. of this order.

"2d. Offenses committed by or against persons, foreigners or Americans, not residents of this department, but who may be traveling or temporarily sojourning therein, or against the property of nonresidents.

"3d. Offenses against the person or property of persons belonging to the army or navy, or those committed by persons belonging to the army or navy, not properly triable by military or naval courts; but not including minor police offenses.

"4th. Offenses committed by or against foreigners or by or against citizens of another state, district, or territory of the United States, residing in this department."

"Sec. XI. If any party litigant shall feel aggrieved by the judgment or decree of said court a stay of ninety days shall *be granted such party before the execution of such judgment or decree, upon the filing of a bond by him with sureties in an amount and with such conditions as the court may determine, for the purpose of allowing such party to make application to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari or other suitable process to review such judgment or decree. But if at the end of said ninety days such process has not been issued by the Supreme Court execution shall forthwith issue."

"Sec. XVI. The court shall adopt an appropriate seal which shall be procured by the treasurer of the island. The clerk of the court shall have the custody of the seal for use in attesting legal documents in the usual manner.

"Sec. XVII. In accordance with the provisions of paragraph V. of this order the following appointments are announced to take effect July 1st, 1899:

[Here followed the designation of a "law judge;" a "provisional United States attorney;" two military officers as "associate judges;" and another as "clerk."]

"Private Samuel C. Bothwell, troop D, 5th U. S. cavalry, is detailed on special duty as marshal of the U. S. provisional court."

"By General Order 216 of said department, dated December 18, 1899, section XI. of General Order 88, hereinbefore set forth, was amended so as to read as follows:

"If any party litigant shall feel aggrieved by the judgment or decree of said court, a stay of ninety days shall be granted such party before the execution of such judgment or decree, upon the filing of a bond by him with sureties in an amount and with such conditions as the court may determine, for the purpose of allowing such party to make application to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari or other suitable process to review such judgment or decree.

"For good cause, this court may extend the time of filing such application and record in the office of the clerk of the supreme or appellate court aforesaid.

[384] "The stay of execution granted by this court shall be in force until the final disposition of the case by the supreme or appellate court aforesaid, provided that the party availing himself of the provisions of this section shall not be guilty of negligence in prosecuting his application before the said supreme or appellate court."

"On the 21st day of September, 1899, by General Order 145 of said department, issued by Brigadier General George W. Davis, United States Army, as aforesaid, provision was made for the holding of municipal elections in said island of Porto Rico, and certain rules and regulations governing the right of the inhabitants to vote at such elections and the manner of exercising such suffrage were therein provided for, among others the following:

"Sec. V. An elector to vote at such elections shall possess the following qualifications:

"a. He must be a bona fide male resident of the municipality.

"b. He must be over twenty-one years of age.

"c. He must be a taxpayer of record at the date of his registration, or he must be able to read and write.

"d. He must have resided upon the island of Puerto Rico for two years next preceding the date of his registration, and for the last six months of said two years within the municipality where the election is held."

"Thereafter, by General Orders 160 of said department, issued October 12, 1899, General Orders 145 were amended so as to read in part as follows:

"Sec. VIII. He must be a taxpayer of record in the municipality in which he votes at the date of this order, or he must be able to read and write. Persons who pay insular or municipal taxes of any kind, in their own right or name, or in the name of their lawful wife or minor child, or the members of a firm, corporation, or copartnership paying taxes, and the heirs of an estate that pay taxes, are deemed taxpayers under the meaning of this clause. But administrators, guardians, trustees, agents, or other persons who pay taxes for other than themselves or their lawful family are not taxpayers within its meaning through such payment."
177 U. S.

"Sec. XVI. Any person who fraudulently votes, or attempts *or offers to fraudulently vote, or attempts to influence or control others to fraudulently vote, at any public election, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or to imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding three months, or to both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

"Thereafter, by special orders of the military authorities commanding the said department, an election was ordered to be held on the 31st day of October, 1899, in the city of Guayama, Porto Rico, for the election of the ordinary municipal officers of said city to fill the offices in the plan of civil government established by the military authority of the United States.

"Your petitioner represents that, being duly qualified in accordance with law and the general orders aforesaid, he voted at said election for the candidates of the party to which he belonged, and thereafter, on or about the 10th day of November, 1899, he was arrested and taken into custody by one Samuel C. Bothwell, marshal of said United States Provisional Court of the Department of Porto Rico, and brought before said provisional court, and was there charged by the district attorney thereof, in an information or complaint which was read to him, with having illegally voted at the said election in the city of Guayama heretofore mentioned.

"Your petitioner pleaded 'Not guilty' to said charge, and thereafter said United States provisional court proceeded to try him for said alleged offense, although your petitioner objected to the jurisdiction of said court and denied that he had committed any crime or offense cognizable by said court, and further objected on the ground that no presentment or information had been returned by a grand jury, and further that he was deprived of a trial by jury in said cause, a jury trial having been demanded by him and refused by said court.

"After hearing the evidence in said proceeding, said provisional court found your petitioner 'Guilty,' and sentenced him to imprisonment at hard labor in the jail at Humacao, Porto Rico, for a period of thirty days.

"Thereupon, in accordance with the provisions of section XI. of General Orders 88, as amended and heretofore referred to, *your petitioner applied for a stay of execution of ninety days, to permit him to make application to this honorable court for a writ of certiorari or other suitable process, to review the action, and to set aside the judgment of said provisional court."

"Such application was granted; and the time allowed under said section having expired, your petitioner has been taken into custody by the said Samuel C. Bothwell, marshal as aforesaid, and is by him now unlawfully restrained of his liberty and compelled to perform infamous tasks.
815

"The proceedings of said United States provisional court are set forth at large in the duly certified copy of the transcript of the record in said court submitted herewith.

"Your petitioner further alleges that he is advised that said United States Provisional Court for the Department of Porto Rico had no jurisdiction or lawful authority under the Constitution and laws of the United States to cause the arrest of your petitioner or to proceed against him in manner and form aforesaid, and that said pretended process, arrest, order, trial, and judgment, and warrant whereby your petitioner was committed to the custody of said Samuel C. Bothwell, and whereby, in custody of said Samuel C. Bothwell, he is imprisoned and restrained of his liberty, as aforesaid, were and are, each and all of them, in violation of the Constitution of the United States and the just rights of your petitioner, and are without authority of law and void.

"Your petitioner further alleges that said United States provisional court had no jurisdiction to try him for the alleged offense with which he is charged for the reasons following, among others:

[The reasons were here set forth at length.]

"Your petitioner further avers that more than thirty other persons, residents of said island of Porto Rico, were apprehended and tried by said provisional court upon the same or similar charges to those preferred against him, and such persons were likewise found guilty and sentenced to undergo like punishment, but the sentences of the court in such other cases have been stayed pending the determination of your petitioner's application herein."

[387] * [Here followed the prayer.]

The petition was signed: "Ramon Baez, by Tulio Larrinaga;" and was verified as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Tulio Larrinaga, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is an inhabitant of Porto Rico and knows the petitioner, Ramon Baez;

He has read the foregoing petition by him subscribed and knows the contents thereof, and—

That the matters and things therein stated are true of his own knowledge except as to matters therein stated on information or belief, and as to those matters he believes them to be true.

Further, this petition is signed and verified by him for and on behalf of the said Ramon Baez for the reason that the petitioner is confined in the island of Porto Rico, and to delay this application by sending the same for the signature and affidavit of the petitioner himself would greatly retard, if not entirely defeat, the relief thereby sought to be obtained.

816

Tulio Larrinaga.

Subscribed and sworn to before a notary public March 24, A. D. 1900.

Mr. Frederic D. McKenney submitted the cause for petitioner. Messrs. Francis H. Dexter and Wayne MacVeagh were with him on the brief.

Solicitor-General Richards opposed.

*Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the [387] opinion of the court:

Application to file this petition was made to the court on March 26, when, under pressure of the mass of business under advisement, we were about to take a recess until April 9, of which recess the bar had been previously advised.

No notice of the application having been given, on suggestion of counsel for the United States, leave was granted, according to the usual course, and in view of the conceded importance of the questions involved, to submit a brief in opposition within a *week, and [388] three days were allowed counsel for petitioner to reply. These briefs were subsequently duly filed.

It appears from the petition and accompanying papers that the alleged proceedings against petitioner were stayed at his instance, from December 11 until March 16, to enable him to apply to this court in the premises, but no such application was made. And it further appears that petitioner was not restrained of his liberty until up to March 16, and that such restraint was to continue for thirty days from that date, which would expire April 15.

The petition is not signed or verified by Baez, but on his behalf, and the affidavit does not state that the application is made by authority or at the request of Baez, or any facts showing that he was unable to make it, except the averment by affiant that "this petition is signed and verified by him for and on behalf of the said Ramon Baez for the reason that the petitioner is confined in the island of Porto Rico, and to delay this application by sending the same for the signature and affidavit of the petitioner himself would greatly retard, if not entirely defeat, the relief thereby sought to be obtained." The affidavit was sworn to on the 24th of March in the District of Columbia.

Assuming, however, that the application is made in accordance with the wishes of Baez, we should have been better satisfied if the delay in the presentation of the petition had been accounted for. The fact that on March 24 it was impracticable to send to Porto Rico to petitioner for him to act, does not explain why the assertion of his alleged rights was delayed so long, but rather shows that our interposition would be unavailing, if we took jurisdiction.

Section 756 of the Revised Statutes provides in relation to the writ of habeas corpus: "Any person to whom such writ is directed shall make due return thereof within three days thereafter, unless the party be detained beyond the distance of twenty miles; and if beyond that distance and not beyond the distance of a hundred miles, within ten days; and if beyond the distance of a hundred miles, within twenty days." This section was taken almost literally from the habeas corpus act, chap. 2 of the 31st Car. II., which was designed to remedy procrastination *and trifling with the writ. Prior to that act the mode of compelling a return was by taking out an alias, and then a pluries writ, and thereafter issuing an attachment. A reasonable time has always been allowed for making the return, and it is not to be presumed that one will not be made. Stockdale v. Hansard, 8 Dowl. P. C. 474; Mash's Case, 2 W. Bl. 805. And see United States v. Bollman, 1 Cranch, C. C. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 14,622, where the circuit court of the District of Columbia refused to issue an attachment until three days had expired after the service of the writ. Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 2d ed. 236; Church, Habeas Corpus, 2d ed. § 126.

177 U. S.

In this case, if the writ of habeas corpus had been issued April 9, the next court day after the petition for the writ was presented to this court, the imprisonment of petitioner would have expired six days after the issue of the writ, and fourteen days before the person having him in custody would be required to make his return, and, before the case could be heard upon the writ and return, the prisoner would no longer be in custody.

The grave questions of public and constitutional law sought to be brought into judgment by this application would have become merely moot questions so far as the decision thereof could affect any right or interest of the petitioner. And this would be so even if we issued the writ and attempted to deal with the prisoner by a preliminary order. Before he could be communicated with and brought before us he would be freed from restraint. Re Callicot, 8 Blatchf. 89, Fed. Cas. No. 2,323.

As was said in Stockdale's Case, we cannot presume that a return would not be made, and even if made at once, as it must be made from Porto Rico, it would nevertheless be too late for any action of ours to be effectual.

True, the issue of the writ might be waived by the government, or we could enter a rule and proceed in the absence of the prisoner and at once, by agreement (Medley, Petitioner, 134 U. S. 160, 33 L. ed. 835, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 384; Re Burrus, 136 U. S. 586, 34 L. ed. 500, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850), but the motion for leave to file has been resisted, and there has been no intimation of a disposition to speed the proceedings. Under these circumstances we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that before definite action could be had, the application would abate.

[390] *It is well settled that this court will not proceed to adjudication where there is no subject-matter on which the judgment of the court can operate. And although this application has not as yet reached that stage, still, as it is obvious that before a return to the writ can be made, or any other action can be taken, the restraint of which petitioner complains would have terminated, we are constrained to decline to grant leave to file the petition.
177 U. S.

The situation was the same April 9, and these observations are applicable as of that date.

In arriving at this conclusion we are not to be understood as intimating in any degree an opinion on the question of jurisdiction or other questions pressed on our attention.

Leave denied.

PHILIP WERLEIN, Plff. in Err.,
v.
CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 390-403.)

Res judicata—denial of injunction against sale as a bar to suit to declare the sale void.

1. A city's claim that land which it holds by dedication for public use cannot be legally sold under a judgment against the city is conclusively defeated by a decision against the city in a suit for an injunction against the sale on the ground of its illegality, although in that suit the question of the effect of the dedication was not presented or considered.
2. A judgment against a city in an action to restrain an alleged illegal sale of its property under a judgment against the city is a bar to another action after the sale to declare the sale null and void, although in the meantime the city has discovered that it held the property for public use only, by virtue of a long prior dedication, and therefore claims now to hold it in a capacity different from that in which it formerly sued, since there is in truth no difference in the character of the title by which a municipality holds such property and that by which it holds other property.

[No. 189.]

Argued March 16, 1900. Decided April 16 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana to review a judgment affirming a decision against the validity of a sale of city property under a judgment. Reversed.

See same case below, 50 La. Ann. 1251, 24 So. 232.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

*This action was commenced in March, [391] 1895, by the city of New Orleans in the civil district court for the parish of Orleans in the state of Louisiana, for the purpose of recovering from the defendant below, Philip Werlein, a certain lot of land situated in that city and described in the petition, and of which he was in possession. The facts upon which the suit was brought are as follows:

NOTE.—As to conclusiveness of judgments generally—see notes to Sharon v. Terry (C. C. N. D. Cal.) 1 L. R. A. 572; Bollong v. Schuyler Nat. Bank (Neb.) 3 L. R. A. 142; Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Fund Soc. (Cal.) 7 L. R. A. 577; Morrill v. Morrill (Or.) 11 L. ed. 155; Bank of United States v. Beverly, 11 L. ed. U. S. 75; Johnson Co. v. Wharton, 38 L. ed. U. S. 429; Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 42 L. ed. U. S. 355.

In March, 1876, one John Klein, a citizen of the state of Mississippi, commenced an action against the city of New Orleans in the circuit court of the United States in the district of Louisiana, for the recovery of over $89,000 and interest upon certain bonds issued by that city, and fully described in the plaintiff's petition. The city filed an answer denying all and singular the allegations contained in the plaintiff's petition. The case came on for hearing before the court without a jury, a jury being waived, and resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff against the city for the sum of $89,000, with 6 per cent interest, as stated in the judgment which was entered on May 2, 1876. The plaintiff, in order to obtain satisfaction, issued a feri facias on the judgment to the marshal, who thereupon seized and took into his possession all the right, title, and interest of the city in and to the portion of ground described in the marshal's return to the writ (and being the premises in question), and advertised the property for sale. The city of New Orleans thereupon commenced an action against [392] Klein in the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Louisiana, to prevent him from selling the property under his judgment.

In its bill of complaint the city alleged the recovery of judgment by Klein against the city, that he had issued a writ of feri facias upon such judgment for the purpose of enforcing satisfaction of the same, and had seized under the writ the property already described, which was advertised to be sold on a day named in the bill, and that Klein had no right to issue the writ in that suit, or to cause the seizure, advertisement, or sale of the property thereunder, for the reasons and causes stated in the bill, which were, (1) that he had registered the judgment in the office of the administrator of public accounts for the city of New Orleans in accordance with an act of the legislature passed in the year 1870, and, therefore, had no right to issue any writ for the collection of the judgment against the city; (2) because Klein had assigned and transferred all his interest in the judgment before the writ was issued, to certain parties named; (3) that the writ upon which the property had been seized and advertised to be sold had issued for a larger sum than was due on the judgment; the city therefore prayed for an injunction restraining Klein, his attorneys and agents, from proceeding further in the advertisement and sale of the property under the writ; that the seizure of the property by the marshal might be adjudged to be illegal and void, and for general relief.

An order to show cause why an injunction pendente lite should not issue was granted, and upon a hearing it was ordered to issue.

The defendant Klein answered the bill, admitted the seizure of the property, and that it was advertised for sale; also, that he had procured his judgment to be registered as alleged in the bill, but denied that he thereby lost or forfeited any other remedy for the enforcement of the judgment, especially that of an ordinary execution; admitted the assignment of his judgment, but alleged that it was only as a security or pledge, and denied that the writ issued for a larger sum than was due, and he therefore asked that the injunction pendente lite might be *dis-[393] solved, the perpetual injunction denied, and for such further relief as might be proper.

The case came on for hearing on bill and answer, and the court "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the interlocutory injunction issued be dissolved, an injunction refused, and complainant's bill of complaint dismissed with costs." The judgment was signed June 19, 1878.

After the entry of the judgment dissolving the injunction and dismissing the bill, the marshal took proceedings to sell the property which he had seized, and on August 21, 1878, sold the same to Andrew C. Lewis, the highest bidder, through whom by several mesne conveyances the appellant claims title, and from the time of the above sale he or his grantors have been in possession.

The petition in the present suit, filed by the city, describes the premises in question, and alleges that the defendant, appellant herein, is in possession thereof, and unjustly claims title thereto, with the improvement thereon, valued in all at $15,000. The city avers that the defendant is not and never was the owner of the property, and that his only alleged title thereto is derived through mesne conveyances from a sale made by the United States marshal to Andrew C. Lewis, as above stated. The city further alleges that the sale by the marshal to Lewis was absolutely null and void, and that no title or right whatever in or to the property passed by that sale to Lewis or through him to the defendant herein; that the property was dedicated to public use long prior to the date of the marshal's sale, by Bertrand and John Gravier, and that it forms part of the Place Gravier, in the Faubourg St. Mary in the city of New Orleans, and that the property was at the date of the marshal's sale, and has ever since been, unsusceptible to alienation or private ownership or of private possession, and that the defendant's possession is illegal and in bad faith. The petition further alleges that the city was invested by law with the administration and possession, for the public benefit, of all property in the city dedicated to public use and that it had the right to sue for the recovery of the possession of and to establish the title and right of use of the public to any such property, *and the petition therefore prayed that [394] the city might have judgment against the defendant, decreeing the property purchased at the sale to the property dedicated to public use, and recognizing plaintiff's right to the possession and administration of the same, and ordering the defendant to deliver to plaintiff possession of the property free from all encumbrances, and for costs.

The defendant answered the bill, and set up therein the recovery of the judgment of Klein against the city, the seizure of the property thereunder, the commencement of suit by the city to enjoin the sale of the property, and the judgment of the court thereon dismissing that bill and dissolving the injunction, and defendant therefore alleged that the right of Klein to proceed and sell the land described in the petition, under his execution, was in and by that judgment recognized, affirmed, and established, and such right was therefore res judicata.

Other defenses were set up denying that the land had in fact ever been dedicated to public use, or that it had ever been so used; also alleging that the city had regularly collected taxes upon the property ever since its purchase by Lewis (more than fifteen years), and that by reason of the facts the city was estopped from maintaining its action.

Upon these pleadings the parties went to trial, and the plaintiff, after giving evidence tending to prove its case, admitted that the defendant held a regular chain of title from and through Lewis, the purchaser of the land under the sale by the United States marshal, but denied the validity of such title. The defendant offered in evidence an exemplification of the proceedings and judgment in the suit brought to enjoin the sale by the marshal which offer was made for the purpose of proving the plea of res judicata. The plaintiff objected to the evidence on the ground that the cause of action involved in the suit was not identical with the cause of action in the suit on trial, because the sole and only issues decided in the other suit were whether John Klein, having registered his judgment against the city of New Orleans in the office of the comptroller, pursuant to a statute of the state, and having elected that method of collecting his judgment, had not waived his right to pursue any other [395] method of collection; also whether John Klein was the owner of the judgment, and, if so, whether he was estopped by having registered in the office of the comptroller a transfer of the same, and also whether the judgment was not subject to certain credits; whereas the issue involved in this case was whether the property upon which it is alleged the execution was levied and the property sold was legally subject to such seizure and sale; also that the thing demanded in the other suit was not the same thing demanded in this suit, the prayer in the other being for an injunction restraining Klein from selling the property in dispute, whereas the thing demanded in this case was a decree declaring the sale effected by Klein absolutely null and void. The court sustained the objection and refused to admit the evidence, and the defendant duly excepted.

Oral evidence was then given for the purpose of sustaining the other defenses set up by the defendant, and the trial having been concluded, the judge made a finding in favor of the complainant, and judgment was thereupon entered decreeing that the property described therein was property dedicated to public use, and that the right of the city to the possession and administration of such property must be recognized, and the defendant was ordered to deliver possession of the property to the city free from all encumbrances.

An appeal was taken from the judgment to the supreme court of the state of Louisiana, where it was affirmed and the defendant below has brought the case here on writ of error.

Mr. Edwin T. Merrick argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction is res judicata between the parties, their privies, assigns, and ayantes causes.

Fleitas v. Meraux, 47 La. Ann. 232, 16 So. 848; Delabigarre v. Second Municipality, 3 La. Ann. 230; Johnson v. Weld, 8 La. Ann. 126; Heroman v. Louisiana Institute of Deaf and Dumb, 34 La. Ann. 814; McNeely v. Hyde, 46 La. Ann. 1098, 15 So. 167; Broussard v. Broussard, 43 La. Ann. 924, 9 So. 910; Dull v. Blackman, 169 U. S. 248, 42 L. ed. 735, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 333; New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 398, 42 L. ed. 211, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905.

The sale being allowed to proceed and the city's injunction dismissed the property was legally sold. Not only what was set up by the city to stop the sale, but every question that might have been set up, was concluded by the decree.

Black, Judgments, § 731; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 428, 24 L. ed. 206; Stout v. Lye, 103 U. S. 71, 26 L. ed. 430; Hubbell v. United States, 171 U. S. 209, 43 L. ed. 138, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 828; Griffin v. Long Island R. Co. 102 N. Y. 452, 7 N. E. 735; Danaher v. Prentiss, 22 Wis. 316; Bates v. Spooner, 45 Ind. 493.

The binding effect of res judicata cannot be impaired by the fact that the thing established by it involves a question of public order, and is afterwards found to be wholly untrue.

Lebrew's Succession, 31 La. Ann. 212.

Mr. R. A. Tichenor argued the cause and Mr. Samuel L. Gilmore filed a brief for defendant in error:

The city owns and can own property which is alienable, and to such property she has what we may style private title. If under a money judgment against the city, property dedicated to public use is erroneously seized as alienable property, to which the city has private title, the seizure in no way affects the public's interest in the property.

New Orleans v. Louisiana Constr. Co. 129 U. S. 45, 32 L. ed. 607, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 223.

The cause of action in the suit of New Orleans v. Klein (No. 8461 of the United States circuit court) was not the same as the cause of action in the present suit. The cause of action is the immediate foundation of the right which one claims to exercise. It is the immediate basis of the demand, and must not be confounded either with the various bases or simple means which produce the cause, or with the right itself which is the object of the demand.

Slocomb v. De Lizardi, 21 La. Ann. 356.

The general expression often found in the reports, that a judgment is conclusive of every matter which the parties might have litigated in the action, is misleading. What is really meant by this expression is that a judgment is conclusive upon the issues tendered by the plaintiff's complaint.

Freeman, Judgments, pp. 441, 442, § 249.

[395] *Mr. Justice Peckham, after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error has made a motion to dismiss the writ of error on the ground of want of jurisdiction. We think it must be denied. The sole question in the case is in regard to the validity of the exception to the decision of the trial court *refusing to admit in evidence the judgment recovered in the United States circuit court in the action of the city of New Orleans against Klein.

[396] The defendant herein in his answer specially set up such judgment, and claimed that under and by virtue thereof the city was concluded from maintaining its action; the state court refused to give effect to the judgment, and the denial of this right was excepted to by the defendant, and was also assigned as error in the state supreme court. In such case we think a Federal question exists.

Pittsburgh, C. C. & L. R. Co. v. Long Island Loan & T. Co. 172 U. S. 493, 507, 43 L. ed. 528, 532. 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 238, and cases there cited; Phoenix F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Tennessee, 161 U. S. 174, 184, 40 L. ed. 660, 664. 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 471. Whether full faith and credit have been given the judgment of a Federal court by the courts of a state is a Federal question, and that question exists in this case.

Upon the merits we have simply to inquire whether the courts below erred in their decision refusing to admit in evidence the judgment in the chancery suit above mentioned.

The judgment in that suit was between the city as complainant and Klein as defendant, and it had reference to the proceedings of the marshal in the execution of his writ issued upon the judgment of Klein against the city. The defendant in this suit traces his title back to Lewis, who purchased upon the sale under the marshal's writ, and so when the defendant is sued in this action he stands as privy to one of the parties to the chancery suit and can claim the same rights in the judgment therein as an adjudication, which Lewis or Klein could have claimed if either were in possession of the property, and this suit had been brought against the one in possession.

The law in relation to the effect of a judgment between the same parties is well known, but its proper application to particular cases is sometimes quite difficult to determine. The following authorities treat of the subject very fully and exhaustively: Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351, 24 L. ed. 195; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 423, 24 L. ed. 204; New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. 371, 42 L. ed. 202, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; 820

Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 42 L. ed. 355, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Delabigayre v. Second Municipality, 3 La. Ann. 230; Slocomb v. de Lizardi, 21 La. Ann. 355, 99 Am. Dec. 740.

*In the first cited case, it was said that a [397] former judgment between the same parties (or their privies) upon the same cause of action as that stated in the second case constitutes an absolute bar to the prosecution of the second action, not only as to every matter which was offered and received to sustain or defeat the claim or demand, but as to any other admissible matter which might have been offered for that purpose. Where the second action between the same parties is upon a different claim or demand, the judgment in the former action operates as an estoppel only as to those matters in issue or points controverted upon the determination of which the finding or verdict was rendered.

So, in Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 428, 24 L. ed. 207, Mr. Justice Field, in delivering the opinion of the court, said, in speaking of a prior judgment: "The judgment is not only conclusive as to what was actually determined respecting such demand, but as to every matter which might have been brought forward and determined respecting it."

In New Orleans v. Citizens' Bank, 167 U. S. at page 396, 42 L. ed. 211, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 913, Mr. Justice White, speaking for the court, said: "The estoppel resulting from the thing adjudged does not depend upon whether there is the same demand in both cases, but exists, even although there be different demands, when the question upon which the recovery of the second demand depends has, under identical circumstances and conditions, been previously concluded by a judgment between the parties or their privies."

To the same effect is Southern P. R. Co. v. United States, 168 U. S. 1, 42 L. ed. 355, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18.

The same rule is substantially laid down in the cases above cited from the Louisiana reports.

Now, what was the demand and what was the thing adjudged in the chancery suit between the city of New Orleans and Klein? In that suit the city alleged that Klein had seized under a writ of fieri facias, in his action against the city, certain property which was described in the complainant's bill, which he threatened to sell, and which was advertised to be sold on a certain day, and the city alleged "that the said John Klein has no right to issue the said writ of pluries fieri facias *in said suit, or to cause [398] the seizure, advertisement, and sale of the said property thereunder," and it set forth in its bill the grounds (already stated) for such an allegation.

The sole cause of action was the apprehended and threatened sale of the property, which sale, the complainant alleged, would be illegal. All the other facts set up in the bill were but the grounds justifying and proving, as contended, the allegation that Klein had no right to sell the property, and it was this illegality of the threatened sale that was the sole cause or foundation of the action; it was the matter in dispute and the subject of contest. If the property were not legally subject to seizure and sale, then it would clearly be an illegal sale if consummated, and that fact would be material in proof of the cause of action of the city.

Upon the trial the court adjudged that defendant had the right to sell the property, and it therefore dissolved the injunction and dismissed the bill, and judgment to that effect was duly signed and entered. This would seem to be a full and complete adjudication upon the right of defendant Klein to sell the property seized under his writ. That right would not exist if the property were not the subject of a legal sale. Whether or not it was thus subject was an inquiry which the court would have had jurisdiction to make had it been alleged in that suit.

It is, however, contended that as the city had only set up certain facts as the foundation of its action to prevent the alleged illegal sale of the property, the judgment only bound it as to those facts, and therefore it is now urged that the city in this action was at liberty to prove other facts which would also show that Klein had no right to sell the property, namely, that the property had long before the sale been dedicated to public use, and the city therefore had no right to alienate it, nor had anyone the right to sell it upon an execution issued on a judgment against the city.

It is not disputed that, if there were no question of a prior judgment in this case, proof that the land had been properly and duly dedicated for a public square to the public use, and therefore had been withdrawn from commerce, would furnish a defense to the claim by any person of a right to sell the [399] property *under an execution upon a judgment against the city. New Orleans v. United States, 10 Pet. 662, 731, 736, 9 L. ed. 573, 600, 602; Police Jury v. Foulhouze, 30 La. Ann. 64; Police Jury v. McCormack, 32 La. Ann. 624; Kline v. Parish of Ascension, 33 La. Ann. 562; Leonard v. Brooklyn, 71 N. Y. 498, 27 Am. Rep. 80.

Assuming the law to be as thus stated, the question in this case is, What effect has this judgment under discussion upon the rights of the parties?

The fact now alleged would have furnished in the chancery suit but another ground or reason upon which to base the claim of the city, that Klein had no right to sell the property under his writ. In other words, it would have been additional proof of the cause of action set forth in that suit. The city would have had the right to set that fact up in its bill and to have proved it on the trial, and, if proved, it would have been foundation for a judgment enjoining the sale of the property; but the fact would have been nothing more than evidence of the right of the city to obtain the injunction asked for in the chancery suit, and we think it was the duty of the city to set up in that suit and to prove any and all grounds that it had to support the allegation that Klein had no right to seize or sell the property.

The threatened sale might have been illegal for a number of reasons, based upon widely divergent facts, but whatever those reasons were, the facts upon which they rested were open to proof in the chancery action, and if the city desired the benefit of them, they should have been alleged and proved. It would seem to be quite clear that the plaintiff could not be permitted to prove each independent fact in a separate suit. Suppose the city had only set up the fact of the registry of the judgment as a ground for enjoining the sale, and after a trial on that issue it had been beaten and judgment had gone against it, could the city after that have commenced another suit for the same purpose, and set up as a ground for the alleged illegality of the sale the assignment of the judgment by Klein? In such second action would not the judgment in the prior action conclude the city? If not, then on being beaten on a trial of that issue the city could commence still another action *based on the [400] allegation that the judgment had been paid. Thus, as many different actions as the city might allege grounds for claiming the sale would be illegal could be maintained seriatim, and no one judgment would conclude the city except as to the particular ground upon which the city proceeded in each particular case. And yet all these different grounds would simply form evidence upon which the original cause of action was based, namely, the alleged illegality of the apprehended sale. They would form simply separate facts upon which the cause of action might rest. There is no difference in the nature of the ground now urged in this case from the other grounds actually set up in the chancery suit.

It is true that in the chancery suit the thing demanded was an injunction restraining Klein from selling the property, while in this suit it is a decree declaring the sale effected by Klein absolutely null and void. But the two demands, though different in terms, are in substance the same, and are founded upon the same cause of action, viz., the total illegality of the sale, whether threatened or accomplished. The demand in the later action is simply altered to conform to the fact that there had been a sale of the property, while the demand in the former suit was based upon the fact that there had not been a sale, and the relief demanded was an injunction to prevent such sale. In substance and effect the thing demanded is the same in both cases.

It is contended, however, that the ground now urged for the illegality of the sale, namely, a long prior dedication of the property to public use, is of a totally different nature from the grounds which were set up in the chancery suit; that the city there appeared in a different capacity from that in which it now appears, and that it was therefore unnecessary to allege or prove this ground in that suit, and that a judgment in the former suit in favor of the right of Klein to sell this property does not conclude the city from proving that he had no such right by reason of the character of the property sold. Although the city has been more than fifteen years in discovering this defense, yet, nevertheless, it is now argued that a judgment against the city in the chancery suit [401] being a judgment against *it in a different capacity from that in which it appears in this action as a trustee for the public, the rule applies in such a case as it sometimes does in the case of a judgment against A B, in relation to property held by him as executor or as trustee, which would be no evidence for or against A B in his individual and personal capacity. Collins v. Hydorn, 135 N. Y. 320, 32 N. E. 69. Although there are exceptions even to that rule. Morton v. Packwood, 3 La. Ann. 167; Fouché v. Harison, 78 Ga. 360, 3 S. E. 330.

We think there is no double capacity in this case, and that the city appears in the same character and capacity in both these suits, and that in this suit it is bound by the judgment in the chancery suit.

The title to land which has been dedicated to public use, as for a highway or public square in a city, is in the city as trustee for the public, and it has been held, in the case of such a dedication of land in a proposed city, to be thereafter built, that the fee will remain in abeyance until the proper grantee or city comes in esse, when it will vest in such city. A dedication to the public may exist where there is no city or town or corporate entity to take as grantee, and in such case, while the fee may remain in the individual who dedicates the land, he will be estopped from setting it up as against the public who may be interested in the use of the land according to its dedication. Nevertheless, when a dedication is made in an existing city, the city takes title as trustee. These statements are borne out by the following cases: Pawlet v. Clark, 9 Cranch, 292, 3 L. ed. 735; Beatty v. Kurtz, 2 Pet. 566, 7 L. ed. 521; Cincinnati v. White, 6 Pet. 431, 435, 436, 8 L. ed. 452, 455; Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. 498, 8 L. ed. 477; New Orleans v. United States, 10 Pet. 662, 9 L. ed. 573; Police Jury v. Foulhouze, 30 La. Ann. 64.

Although the city holds property of such nature in trust for the public, that fact does not distinguish it from the character or capacity in which the city holds its other property, so as to bring the case within the meaning of the rule that a judgment against a man as an administrator does not bind him as an individual. The city holds all property which it owns, as trustee for the public, although certain classes or kinds of property, such as the public streets, the public squares, [402] the courthouse, *and the jail, cannot be taken on execution against it, for reasons which are plain to be seen. Such property is so necessary for the present and daily use of the city as the representative of the public, as well as for the use of the public itself, that to allow it to be taken on execution against the city would interfere so substantially with the immediate wants and rights of the public whose trustee the city is, and also with the due performance of the duties which are imposed upon the city by virtue of its incorporation, that it ought not to be tolerated. Other property which the city might hold, not being so situated, might be taken on execution against it, but it nevertheless holds that very property, as trustee. It holds it for the purpose of discharging in a general way the duties which it owes to the public, that is, to the inhabitants of the city. The citizens or inhabitants of a city, not the common council or local legislature, constitute the "corporation" of the city. 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 40. The corporation, as such, has no human wants to be supplied. It cannot eat or drink or wear clothing or live in houses. It must as to all its property be the representative or trustee of somebody or of some aggregation of persons, and it must therefore hold its property for the same use, call that use either public or private. It is a use for the benefit of individuals. A municipal corporation is the trustee of the inhabitants of that corporation, and it holds all its property in a general and substantial, although not in a strictly technical, sense in trust for them. They are the people of the state inhabiting that particular subdivision of its territory, a fluctuating class constantly passing out of the scope of the trust by removal and death and as constantly renewed by fresh accretions of population. The property which a municipal corporation holds is for their use, and is held for their benefit. Any of the property held by a city does not belong to the mayor, or to any or all of the members of the common council, nor to the common people as individual property. If any of those functionaries should appropriate the property or its avails to his own use, he would be guilty of embezzlement, and if one of the people not clothed with official station should do the like, he would be guilty of larceny. So we see *that whatever property a municipal cor- [403] poration holds, it holds it in trust for its inhabitants, in other words, for the public, and the only difference in the trust existing in the case of a public highway or a public square, and other cases, is that in the one case the property cannot be taken in execution against the city, while in other cases it may be. The right of the city is less absolute in the one case than in the other, but it owns all the property in the same capacity and character as a corporation, and in trust for the inhabitants thereof. Views similar to these have been heretofore substantially expressed by the late Judge Denio, in speaking for the court of appeals of New York in Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248.

From these considerations we are of opinion that there is no difference in the character of the title by which a municipal corporation holds these two classes of property, but there is simply a difference in the power which such corporation can exercise over its property in the two cases. That difference arises from the peculiar nature of the use of the property, which in the one case requires it to be inalienable and not liable for the debts of the city, while in the other case it is open both to alienation and to sale under execution. In each case the character or capacity in which the city in fact holds the title is the same.

We therefore think the former judgment should have been admitted in evidence upon the trial of this action. By that judgment it conclusively appears that this property was legally sold upon the execution on Klein's judgment and that the purchaser at the sale obtained a title which was good. This title the plaintiff in error now owns, and it must prevail against the claim of the city.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana must be reversed, and the cause remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of this court, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice McKenna did not hear the argument, and took no part in the decision of this case.

[404] AMERICAN EXPRESS COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

FRED A. MAYNARD, Attorney General of the State of Michigan, ex rel. GEORGE F. MOORE et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 404-419.)

Mandamus—as a suit—Federal question as to construction of act of Congress—war revenue tax—charge by express company for cost of stamp.

1. A proceeding for a mandamus is a "suit" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, relating to the jurisdiction of the United States Supreme Court on writ of error to state courts.
2. A question as to the construction to be placed on the act of Congress of June 13, 1898, known as the war revenue act, with respect to the right of an express company to shift the burden of the stamp tax upon shippers, constitutes a Federal question for the purpose of a writ of error to a state court from the Supreme Court of the United States.
3. An express company is not forbidden by the act of Congress of June 13, 1898, known as the war revenue act, from adding to its rates an amount sufficient to cover the cost of the stamp required to be affixed to a receipt issued to the shipper, and thereby shifting the burden of the tax upon the shipper, if the rate as increased thereby is not unreasonable.

[No. 220.]

Argued November 9, 1899. Decided April 16, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan to review a decision affirming a judgment ordering a mandamus to compel an express company to receive packages and issue a receipt therefor with a revenue stamp duly canceled, without adding the cost of the stamp to the rate charged for transportation. Reversed.

NOTE.—As to Federal jurisdiction over state courts; necessity of Federal question—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois ex rel. Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what is a Federal question: when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

177 U. S.

See same case below, 118 Mich. 682, 77 N. W. 317.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

The Attorney General of the State of Michigan on the relation of George F. Moore and others commenced proceedings in the circuit court of Wayne county, Michigan, against the American Express Company. The company was described as "a joint-stock association organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York and having its principal business office located in the city of New York, in said state." It was averred that the company complied with the requirements of certain statutes of the state of Michigan, and had obtained the necessary certificate authorizing it to carry on an express business in that state, and in order to conduct such business had a large number of agents and offices in the state. The petition then alleged that on June the 13th, 1898, the Congress of the United States passed an act commonly designated as the "war revenue act," by which it was made the duty of express companies on receiving a package for carriage to issue a receipt for such package, and providing that the receipt thus issued should bear a one-cent stamp. After referring to the text of the act of Congress on the above subject, it was alleged that by the provisions of the law in question the primary and absolute duty was imposed upon express companies to provide the receipt, and to affix and cancel the one-cent stamp as required by law. The following averments were then made:

"That by reason of a desire of the respondent (the express company) to avoid the payment of the stamp tax, so called, and to impose such obligation on the shipper, the respondent *herein refuses to accept any goods [405] for transportation unless such shipper attaches the stamp to the said bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment, or furnishes the money or means for that purpose to the said company, and that the said company thereby not only avoids its duty under said act of Congress to pay and bear its proportion of the revenues to meet war expenditures as provided by said act, but violates its duty as a common carrier to receive, accept, and deliver such goods, wares, and merchandise so offered and tendered to it for that purpose."

A number of instances were specified where it was averred the express company on the tender to it of packages for transportation as a common carrier had refused to receive the same and to issue receipts therefor "unless a stamp of the value of one cent was paid or provided" by the shipper. It was charged that the conduct of the express company was in violation of the obligations imposed upon it by the act of Congress in question, and constituted a refusal to perform its duty as a common carrier. The prayer was for a mandamus commanding the company to receive packages for transportation by express, and issue a receipt with stamp duly canceled thereon, without seeking to compel shippers who might tender packages for carriage either to pay for the one-cent stamp or to provide the means for so doing.

[406] The answer of the express company admitted that it required persons who tendered packages for carriage, by express, either to pay or provide the means for defraying the cost of the one-cent stamp, but denied that its conduct in so doing was a violation of the act of Congress by which the one-cent tax on express receipts was imposed. On the contrary, it was averred that the act of Congress, when properly construed, although imposing the absolute duty to issue a receipt for every package as therein provided, left the question of who should pay for the stamp free for adjustment between the shipper and the express company. By the act of Congress, it was asserted, the express company had, therefore, the right or privilege of insisting that those who offered packages to be carried by express should either furnish the one-cent stamp or provide the means of paying for it. It was, moreover, alleged that the company had in effect but increased its rates on each shipment by adding to the previous rates the sum of the stamp tax. And it was averred that this increase the company was not forbidden to make, by the act of Congress imposing the one-cent stamp tax, and that the rate as increased by exacting that the one-cent stamp should be furnished or that its value be paid for by the shipper was just and reasonable, and was not in conflict with the act of Congress. The answer was in effect demurred to as not stating a defense. The case was submitted for decision on petition and answer. The court ordered the mandamus to issue substantially as prayed for. The cause was then removed by writ of certiorari to the supreme court of the state of Michigan, where the judgment of the trial court was affirmed. 118 Mich. 682, 77 N. W. 317. By an allowance of a writ of error the judgment of the supreme court of this state is before us for review.

Mr. Lewis Cass Ledyard argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. C. E. Warner argued the cause and filed a brief for defendants in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

[406] Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

We will first dispose of the claim that this court is without jurisdiction to review the judgment, and that hence the writ of error should be dismissed. The contention is based upon the following: (1) That the proceeding below, being for a mandamus, was not a "suit" within the meaning of that term as employed in § 709 of the Revised Statutes; and (2) because no Federal question is involved, and no such question was below decided.

The first proposition is not tenable. McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 24, 36 L. ed. 869, 873, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 3; Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672, 26 L. ed. 271.

The second is likewise without merit. From the summary of the pleadings just made, in the statement of the case, it is apparent that the issue between the parties involved an assertion on the one side that the act of Congress imposed on the express company the absolute duty of furnishing the receipt, of affixing the stamp thereto, and canceling the same. The argument was that it was hence a violation of the duty, imposed upon the express company by the act of Congress, for the company either to demand the stamp or the amount thereof from the shipper, and that it was also a violation of the act of Congress for the express company to increase its rates to the extent necessary to accomplish the result of securing the reimbursement of the amount of the one-cent stamp tax. On the other hand, the defense of the express company was that under the act of Congress it had the right, privilege, or immunity (which it specially set up and claimed) of demanding the payment of the one cent or of increasing its rates to the extent that the tax imposed a burden upon it, provided only the rates charged were just and reasonable. The question thus presented was in substance the only one decided by the supreme court of the state. In stating the issues arising for its decision, the court said: "The main question in the case relates to the construction to be placed upon the act in question," that is, the act of Congress. After a review of the provisions of the statute it was decided that under it the express company could not in any event or by any means transfer the burden of the tax in question. Considering the right of the express company to increase its rates to the extent necessary to secure the payment of the tax by the shipper, the court said:

"It is contended, however, that the company has the right to make new regulations and establish new rates to meet all this burden. It is contended that the effect of this is to throw the burden upon the shipper. It is apparent upon the face of this proceeding that the very purpose of this change in the regulations and the increase of rates is to avoid the payment of the tax and thus cast upon the shipper the burden which the act of Congress puts upon the company. This is but an evasion and a subterfuge to avoid the terms of the act."

The foregoing reasoning was supplemented by comment upon the fact that the increase of rate resulting from the charge of one cent on each package was made without reference to the distance each package was to be carried. We do not, however, understand the remarks on this subject as implying that the *court below decided that the rate as increased by the one cent was intrinsically unreasonable without regard to the provisions of the act of Congress, but only that the rate as so increased was unreasonable, because an attempt on the part of the express company to shift the burden of the tax imposed upon it by the act of Congress, and hence was by legal inference forbidden by that act. No other view is possible when the state of the record is considered. As we have seen, the controversy was submitted on petition and answer. It is nowhere, however, averred in the petition that the rates, with or without the addition of the tax, were intrinsically unjust and unreasonable; while in the answer, following an averment as to the enactment of the stamp act and its resulting effects, it was averred as follows:

"Respondent therefore decided to raise, and did raise, its rates of transportation to an amount reasonable and just, and only necessary to meet the change of conditions made by said act, and save itself from great loss of revenue and profits as compared with its earnings before the passage of said act.

"And respondent submits and asserts that it had the full and perfect right to make such change in its method of transacting its business and in its former rates for transportation."

As, therefore, upon the submission of the cause upon the pleadings, there was no controversy as to the intrinsic reasonableness of the increased rates, it follows that if we were to hold that the court below had decided that the increased rates were unreasonable in themselves, we would conclude that the court below had so held, although it was substantially admitted on the record by both parties that the increase of rates was just and reasonable, if not forbidden by the act of Congress. But such action cannot be attributed consistently with reason and justice. This being the state of the case, the Federal question presented is wholly unaffected by what was said by the court on the subject of the right of the corporation to increase its charges by the amount of the tax. As there was no allegation that the rates existing prior to the imposition of the one-cent stamp tax were unreasonable, it would follow that the rates which were otherwise reasonable were decided not to be so solely because there was added to the charge for [409] each package *the exact amount of the increased cost for transporting the package, occasioned as to each package, by the specific imposition on each by the act of Congress of the one-cent stamp tax. But to cause rates which were conceded to be reasonable to become unreasonable because alone of such increased charge the assumption must be made that the act of Congress not only imposed the burden of the tax solely on the express company, but also forbade its shifting the same by any and every method. And no other view is, in reason, possible when the averments of the answer are borne in mind. It hence results that the Federal question, although changed in form of statement, remains in substance the same. In the changed form it is as follows: Did the act of Congress deprive the express company of the right to shift the burden of the tax by increasing the rate by the exact amount distinctly and separately imposed by the act upon each shipment, and hence render the charge unreasonable, which would be in itself reasonable, except for the hypothesis that the act of Congress renders all efforts to shift the tax illegal.

177 U. S.

It follows that the case as made by the pleadings, and which was decided below, involved a right, privilege, or immunity under the act of Congress, which was specially set up and claimed by the express company, to contract with the shippers for the payment of the tax provided by the act of Congress, or to increase its rate, within the limit of reasonableness, to the extent of such tax, which right, privilege, or immunity was denied and held to be without merit by the court below. There is therefore jurisdiction. Rev. Stat. 709, chap. 11.

The controversy which is contained in the merits of the cause is resolvable into three questions: First. Does the act of Congress impose upon the express company the duty of making a receipt for a package tendered to it, and does it, also, forbid the express company from requiring the shipper to furnish the stamp to be affixed to the receipt, or of supplying the means of paying for the same? Second. If the act of Congress does impose such duty on the express company, and does inhibit it from requiring that the shipper furnish the stamp or the means of paying for it, does the act further forbid the express company *from seeking to cast the bur- [410] den on the shipper by an increase of rates? Third. And, as a corollary of the second proposition, does an increase of rate by an express company which is otherwise just and reasonable become unlawful, under the act of Congress, because such increase is made with the purpose of shifting the burden of the one-cent tax from its own shoulders to that of the shipper?

The first proposition is unnecessary to be considered, since, even although it be conceded that the act of Congress imposes on the express company the duty of paying the one-cent stamp tax, this admission would not be at all decisive of the cause unless also it be ascertained under the second proposition, that the act of Congress also forbids the express company from shifting the burden of the tax by means of an increase of rates. And no necessity for passing on the first proposition arises from the mere fact that the decision of the second proposition requires a consideration of the provisions of the statute which it would be necessary to take into view if the first proposition was under consideration.

It is also to be observed that the second and third propositions, which involve, the one the right to shift the burden of the tax by exacting that the one cent be provided, and the other the power to increase rates within the limits of the requirement that the charges as increased be reasonable, both depend upon the same considerations.

Indeed, the question into which all the issues are ultimately resolvable is whether the right exists to shift the burden, of course ever circumscribed by the duty of not exceeding reasonable rates. If it does not, that is, upon the hypothesis that it not only can be, but is, forbidden, then it must result that all methods adopted to attain the prohibited result are void. On the contrary, if the right to seek to shift the burden obtains, then the substantial result of what is done becomes the criterion, and the mere fact that the motive, announced, for a reasonable increase of rates, is declared to be a shifting of the burden, cannot prevent the exercise of the lawful right.

[114] The special provisions of the law upon which the case turns are the first paragraph of § 6 and the express and freight *clause of Schedule A, forming a part of § 25. 30 Stat. at L. 451, 459, chap. 448.

The paragraph of § 6 referred to is as follows:

"Sec. 6. That on and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness, and other documents, instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in Schedule A of this act, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, or things, or any of them, shall be written or printed by any person or persons, or party who shall make, sign, or issue the same, or for whose use or benefit the same shall be made, signed, or issued, the several taxes or sums of money set down in figures against the same, respectively, or otherwise specified or set forth in the said schedule."

Now, there is nothing in the provisions just quoted which, by the widest conjecture, can be construed as expressly forbidding the person upon which the taxes are cast from shifting the same by contract or by any other lawful means. An inference to the contrary arises from the fact that the duty is imposed in the alternative on "any person or persons, or party, who shall make, sign, or issue the same, or for whose use or benefit the same shall be made, signed, or issued."

The language of the express and freight clause of Schedule A is as follows:

"Express and Freight: It shall be the duty of every railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation, or person whose occupation is to act as such, to issue to the shipper or consignor or his agent, or person from whom any goods are accepted for transportation, a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment received for carriage and transportation, whether in bulk or in boxes, bales, packages, bundles, or not so inclosed or included; and there shall be duly attached and canceled, as is in this act provided, to each of said bills of lading, manifests, or other memorandum, and to each duplicate thereof, a stamp of the value of one cent: Provided, That but one bill of [412] lading *shall be required on bundles or packages of newspapers when inclosed in one general bundle at the time of shipment. Any failure to issue such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum, as herein provided, shall subject such railroad or steamboat company, carrier, express company, or corporation or person to a penalty of fifty dollars for each offense, and no such bill of lading, manifest, or other memorandum shall be used in evidence unless it shall be duly stamped as aforesaid."

The argument is that as it is made the duty of the express company to make and issue "a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt and forwarding for each shipment, . . . and there shall be duly attached and canceled, as in this act provided, to each of said bills of lading, manifests, or other memorandum and to each duplicate thereof, a stamp of the value of one cent;" therefore, the obligation is imposed absolutely on the express company, not only to make and furnish the receipt, but to issue it with the stamp duly canceled. But as we have said, though the correctness of the claim be, arguendo, taken for granted, such concession does not suffice to dispose of the essential issues. They are that by the statute the express company is forbidden from shifting the burden by an increase of rates, although such increased rates be in themselves reasonable. As no express provisions sustaining the propositions are found in the law, they must rest solely upon the general assumption that because it is concluded that the law has cast upon the express company the duty of paying the one-cent stamp tax, there is hence to be implied a prohibition restraining the express company from shifting the burden by means of an increase of rates within the limits of what is reasonable. In other words, the contention comes to this, that the act in question is not alone a law levying taxes and providing the means for collecting them, but is moreover a statute determining that the burden must irrevocably continue to be upon the one on whom it is primarily placed. The result follows that all contracts or acts shifting the burden, and which would be otherwise valid, become void. To add by implication such a provision to a tax law would be contrary to its intent, and be in conflict with the general object which a law levying taxes *is naturally presumed to effectuate. [413] Indeed, it seems almost impossible to suppose that a purpose of such a character could have been contemplated, as the widest conjecture would not be adequate to foreshadow the far-reaching consequences which would ensue from it. To declare upon what person or property all taxes must primarily fall is a usual purpose of a law levying taxes. To say when and how the ultimate burden of a tax shall be distributed among all the members of society would necessitate taking into view every possible contract which can be made, and would compel the weighing of the final influence of every conceivable dealing between man and man. A tax rests upon real estate. Can it be said that by the law imposing such a tax it was intended to prevent the owner of real property from taking into consideration the amount of a tax thereon, in determining the rent which is to be exacted by him? A tax is imposed upon stock in trade. Must it be held that the purpose of such a law is to regulate the price at which the goods shall be sold, and restrain the merchant, therefore, from distributing the sum of the tax in the price charged for his merchandise? As the means by which the burdens of taxes may be shifted are as multiform and as various as is the power to contract itself, it follows that the argument relied on if adopted would control almost every conceivable form of contract, and render them void if they had the result stated. Thus, the price of all property, the result of all production, the sum of all wages, would be controlled irrevocably by a law levying taxes, if such a law forbade a shifting of the burden of the tax and avoided all acts which brought about that result. It cannot be doubted that to adopt, by implication, the view pressed upon us, would be to virtually destroy all freedom of contract, and in its final analyses would deny the existence of all rights of property. And this becomes more especially demonstrable when the nature of a stamp tax is taken into consideration. A stamp duty is embraced within the purview of those taxes which are denominated indirect, and one of the natural characteristics of which is, although it may not be essential, that they are susceptible of being shifted from the person upon whom in the first instance the duty [414] of "payment is laid. We are thus invoked by construction to add to the statute a provision forbidding all attempts to shift the burden of the stamp tax when the nature of the indirect taxation which the statute creates suggests a contrary inference. And, in this connection, although we have already called attention to the consequences which must generally result from the application of the doctrine contended for, it will not be inappropriate to refer to certain of the provisions of the act now under consideration, which more aptly serve to make particularly manifest the consequences indicated. Thus, perfumery, patent medicines, and many other articles are required by the statute to be stamped by the owner before sale. The logical result of the doctrine referred to would be that the price of the articles so made amenable to a stamp tax could not be increased, so as to shift the cost of the stamp upon the consumer. Yet it is apparent that such a construction of the statute would be both unnatural and strained.

The argument is not strengthened by the contention that as the law has imposed the stamp tax on the carrier, public policy forbids that the carrier should be allowed to escape his share of the public burdens by shifting the tax to others who are presumed to have discharged their due share of taxes. This argument of public policy if applied to a carrier would be equally applicable to all the other stamp taxes which the law imposes. Nor is the fact that the express company is a common carrier and engaged in a business in which the public has an interest, and which is subject to regulation, of importance in determining the correctness of the proposition relied upon. The mere fact that the stamp duty is imposed upon a common carrier does not divest such tax of one of its usual characteristics or justly imply that the carrier is in consequence of the law deprived of its lawful right to fix reasonable rates. Unquestionably a carrier is subject to the requirement of reasonable rates, but as we have seen, no question of the intrinsic unreasonableness of the rates charged arises on this record or is at issue in this cause. As previously pointed out, to decide, as a matter of law, that rates are essentially unreasonable from the mere fact that their enforcement will operate to shift the "burden" [415] of a stamp tax would be in effect but to hold that the act of Congress by the mere fact of imposing a stamp tax forbids all attempts to shift it, and consequently that the carrier is deprived by the law of the right to fix rates, even although the limit of reasonable rates be not transcended. This reduces the contention back to the unsound proposition which we have already examined and disposed of.

There is a special provision of the law which grants affirmatively the right to add the tax to the cost of an instrument, and hence it is urged this express authority in one case is pregnant with the denial of a right to do so in other cases. The clause in the statute referred to is found in a paragraph of Schedule A, whereby a stamp tax is imposed on "bill of exchange (inland), draft, certificate of deposit drawing interest or order for the payment of any sum of money . . ."

The second and concluding sentence of the paragraph reads as follows:

"And from and after the first day of July, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, the provisions of this paragraph shall apply as well to original domestic money orders issued by the government of the United States, and the price of such money orders shall be increased by a sum equal to the value of the stamps herein provided for."

Without the provision last quoted, authority would have been wanting to increase the cost of a government money order, by adding the sum of the tax imposed upon such order to the charge therefor, because the charge for a money order was fixed by law. This at once explains the necessity for conferring authority to add to the cost of the money order the amount of the stamp tax. Instead, therefore, of giving rise to the suggestion that the right to shift the burden of other stamp taxes was taken away in all cases where there was liberty and power to contract, the provision relied on is persuasive to the contrary. For, clearly, the express authority conferred to do that which the law otherwise forbade in consequence of the want of power in a government official, cannot with reason be held to imply a prohibition against doing that which was not forbidden by law. The argument, in effect, amounts to this and nothing more; "that, because it" [416] was imperatively necessary to confer a power upon a government officer which, owing to statutory restriction, he otherwise would not have possessed, therefore the legal deduction must be drawn that freedom of contract as between those who had the right to contract was destroyed.

But it is asserted that the war revenue act of 1898 was modeled upon the act of July the 1st, 1862, providing internal revenue tax (12 Stat. at L. 432, chap. 119), and as the act of 1862 plainly manifested the purpose of Congress to impose a stamp tax on express companies and to forbid them from shifting the burden arising from such tax, therefore the act under consideration should be construed as having the same effect. The fact that the present act was modeled upon the act of 1862 is undoubted (see § 94 of the act of 1862, 12 Stat. at L. 475, chap. 119), but the text of the act of 1862 expressed no restraint upon the power of shifting by contract or by an increase of rates within the limit of the requirement that they should be reasonable. It follows that testing the present act by that of 1862 throws no additional light upon the controversy. The claim that the act of 1862 contained a prohibition against shifting is thus inferred. By the act of 1862 a stated per centum of tax was imposed upon the gross receipts of railroads, steamboats, and ferryboats, as well as toll bridges. Section 80, 12 Stat. at L. 468, chap. 119. After providing for the levy and collection of the taxes in question, the following proviso was applied to the section by which the taxes just referred to were levied: "Provided, That all such persons, companies, and corporations shall have the right to add the duty or tax imposed hereby to their rates of fare whenever their liability thereto may commence, any limitations which may exist by law or by agreement with any person or company which may have paid or be liable to pay such fare to the contrary notwithstanding."

This express authority to shift the burden of the tax on gross receipts, it is claimed under the rule of inclusio unius, justifies the implication that the power to shift did not exist as to taxes imposed by other portions of the act of 1862, to which the proviso did not apply.

[417] In passing it is worthy of remark that by the act of March 3, *1863 (12 Stat. at L. 713, chap. 74), it was enacted (§ 10) that on and after the 1st day of April, 1863, "any person or persons, firms, companies, or corporations, carrying on an express business shall, in lieu of the tax and stamp duties imposed by existing laws, be subject to pay a duty of two per centum on the gross amount of all the receipts of such express business, and shall be subject to the same provisions, rules, and penalties as are prescribed in § 80 of the act to which this is an amendment." In other words, when in 1863 the stamp tax relating to express companies was abrogated and a tax on gross receipts substituted therefor, the express companies were authorized to add the result of the gross receipt tax to their charges, any law or contract to the contrary. But the implication deduced from the authority conferred by the statute of 1862 to shift the burden of the tax on gross receipts levied on railroads, etc., by an increase of charges, is unsound. Indeed, the proviso in question, when properly construed, gives rise to an inference contrary to the one sought to be drawn from it.

The tax imposed under the section in question was not in form a stamp tax, but on gross receipts, and the proviso referred to may, from abundance of caution, have been inserted to leave no room for the assumption that a tax thereby imposed was a direct tax, and not subject to be shifted. Besides, the whole context manifests the purpose not to declare a rule in violation of public policy as to particular corporations, but to enable such corporations to possess the power to shift the tax by increasing its charges, even although contracts or restrictions previously imposed might otherwise prevent.

The right to shift by an increase of rates within what is reasonable can only be held to be illegal upon the assumption that public policy forbids it. If such be taken to have been the principle of public policy embodied in the act of 1862, that act must be held to have repudiated, by the proviso to § 80, the very public policy by the light of which it is contended the act must be interpreted. If there was a rule of public policy giving rise to the assumption that stamp taxes relating to express companies could not be shifted, it becomes impossible in reason to understand why, when the taxation was changed *by the [418] act of 1863 from a stamp tax to one on gross receipts, the express companies should have been brought within the proviso to § 80 of the act of 1862. Clearly, if the rule of public policy which is relied on existed it would have been as cogently applicable to the one form of tax as to the other.

In the State Freight Tax Case, 15 Wall. 232, 21 L. ed. 146, the court was called upon to notice a state law conferring a right to charge over by an increase of rates the sum of tax imposed. In considering the subject (pp. 273, 274, 21 L. ed. 161), it was said:

"The provision is as follows: 'Corporations whose lines of improvements are used by others for the transportation of freight, and whose only earnings arise from tolls charged for such use, are authorized to add the tax hereby imposed to said tolls, and to collect the same therewith.' Evidently this contemplates a liability for the tax beyond that of the company required to pay it into the treasury, and it authorizes the burden to be laid upon the freight carried, in exemption of the corporation owning the roadway. It carries the tax over and beyond the carrier to the thing carried. Improvement companies, not themselves authorized to act as carriers, but having only power to construct and maintain roadways, charging tolls for the use thereof, are generally limited by their charters in the rates of toll they are allowed to charge. Hence the right to increase the tolls to the extent of the tax was given them in order that the tax might come from the freight transported, and not from the treasury of the companies. It required no such grant to companies which not only own their roadway, but have the right to transport thereon. Though the tolls they may exact are limited, their charges for carriage are not. They can, therefore, add the tax to the charge for transportation without further authority."

Other contentions as to the construction of the act based upon various other provisions have been pressed with great earnestness, but we deem it unnecessary to consider them, as the foregoing considerations dispose of the case. It follows that the court below erred in holding that by the act of Congress the express company was forbidden from shifting the burden of the stamp tax by an increase of rates which were not in [419] themselves unreasonable. *The judgment below rendered must, therefore, be reversed, and the case be remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Harlan and Mr. Justice McKenna dissenting:

We are of opinion that the act of Congress imposed upon the express company the duty, not only of affixing at its own expense the required stamp upon any receipt issued by it to a shipper, but of canceling such stamp—thus giving to the shipper a receipt that could, when necessary, be used as evidence. Whether the company, having issued a receipt duly stamped and canceled, could increase its charges against the shipper for the purpose, whether avowed or not, of meeting this additional expense, is not, in our opinion, a Federal question, and upon that point this court need not express an opinion.

WILLIAM CRAWFORD, Appt.,
v.

WILLIAM L. HUBBELL, as Treasurer of the Adams Express Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 419-421.)

War revenue tax—stamp on express company's receipt—shifting burden on shipper.

An express company is not forbidden by the act of Congress of June 13, 1898, known as the war revenue act, from adding to its rates an amount sufficient to cover the cost of the stamp required to be affixed to a receipt issued to the shipper, and thereby shifting the burden of the tax upon the shipper, if the rate as increased thereby is not unreasonable.

[No. 248.]

Argued November 8, 9, 1899. Decided April 16, 1900.

ON A CERTIFICATE from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit presenting questions as to the right of an express company to shift the burden of the war revenue stamp tax upon shippers. Answers in favor of such right.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

177 U. S.

Mr. Frederic R. Kellogg and Allan L. McDermott argued the cause and, with Messrs. Dill, Seymour, & Baldwin and Mr. James B. Dill, filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Harvey L. Christie by leave of court filed a brief in behalf of Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co. and others.

Mr. Charles Steele argued the cause and, with Messrs. William D. Guthrie and Theodore S. Beecher filed a brief for appellee.

Mr. Charles B. Alexander argued the cause for appellee, and by leave of court filed a brief in behalf of Wells, Fargo & Co.

*Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion [420] of the court:

The certificate and the questions which arise from it are as follows:

"This cause came before this court on February 2, 1899, upon an appeal taken by the complainant to review a decree of the circuit court, southern district of New York, sitting in equity. Such decree dismissed the bill. As to a question of law arising upon said appeal this court desires the instruction of the Supreme Court for its proper decision.

"Statement of Facts.

"This suit is for an injunction to restrain the express company from refusing to accept express packages from complainant for transportation, except upon the condition that complainant either pay for or provide the war revenue stamp required to be affixed to each receipt in addition to its usual and ordinary charges for transportation as the same existed on and for a long time prior to July 1, 1898. The defendant company since July 1, 1898, has fixed rates of compensation which it offers to accept for services rendered by it, whereby, in addition to the amount of its charges as the same existed on and for a long time prior to July 1, 1898, it requires the shipper either to provide or pay for the cost of the stamp on the bill of lading or receipt required to be issued by the act of Congress of June 13, 1898, known as the 'War Revenue Act.' It has made known these charges to shippers, and particularly to complainant, and refuses to accept packages for transportation except upon payment thereof. The pleadings are annexed to this certificate.

"Questions Certified.

"Upon the facts set forth, the questions of law concerning which this court desires the instruction of the Supreme Court for its proper decision are:

"(1) Does the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, impose upon the carrier exclusively the tax represented by the stamp to be affixed to each bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt required to be issued to each shipper of goods accepted *by [421] the carrier for transportation, or does it impose the tax merely upon the transaction of shipment, leaving it to be paid indifferently by either party thereto?

"(2) If the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, does impose such tax exclusively upon the carrier, does it preclude the carrier, who is by such act required to issue to each shipper a bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt, from relieving itself of the expense of affixing and canceling the stamp required to be attached to such bill of lading, manifest, or other evidence of receipt?

"In accordance with the provisions of § 6 of the act of March 3, 1891, establishing courts of appeal, etc., the foregoing questions of law are by the circuit court of appeals hereby certified to the Supreme Court."

The subject to which the certificate relates and the matter embraced in the questions submitted has been considered, and was passed on in an opinion this day announced in the case of American Exp. Co. v. Maynard ex rel. Moore, No. 220 of the docket of this term (177 U. S. 404, ante, 823, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695).

For the reasons given in the opinion in the case just referred to, it is unnecessary to answer the first question submitted, and a negative answer to the second question is required; and it is so ordered.

ANDREW DOHERTY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 421-435.)

Public lands—grant to railroads—location of terminus.

The right of the Northern Pacific Railway Company to select its eastern terminus at a point on Lake Superior, in the state of Minnesota or Wisconsin, which it actually exercised by the selection of Ashland, in Wisconsin, under the act of Congress of July 2, 1864, was not intentionally or by operation of law ended or determined by the company's compliance with the conditions sought to be imposed by the legislation of Minnesota and Wisconsin respecting branch-line connections, which the legislatures deemed desirable for local advantage, and which were imposed as conditions of the consent of those states to the construction of the road.

[No. 121.]

*Argued and Submitted January 26, 29, 1900.
Decided April 16, 1900.*

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin to review a decision reversing a judgment for the appointment of commissioners to appraise land taken for railroad purposes. Affirmed.

See same case below, 100 Wis. 39, 75 N. W. 1079.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

[422] *In the Superior court of Douglas county, Wisconsin, in November, 1896, Andrew Doherty filed a petition asking for the appointment of commissioners to appraise certain real estate taken by the Northern Pacific Railway Company for a portion of its line passing through property alleged to belong to the petitioner.

The petition alleged that Doherty was and had been since November 8, 1882, the owner in fee simple of the north one half of the southwest quarter of section 4, township 47, range 11 west, in Douglas county, Wisconsin; that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was a corporation duly authorized by the laws of the United States to construct and maintain a line of railway from a point on Lake Superior, in the states of Wisconsin or Minnesota, to some point on Puget sound, in the state of Washington; that some time during the year 1883 the said company had unlawfully laid its railroad track upon a portion of petitioner's land, and had unlawfully entered upon and appropriated the same, without the consent or authority of petitioner, and had been in possession thereof ever since until about August 31, 1896; that on or about the last-mentioned date all the property, effects, rights, and franchises of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had been transferred and sold to and purchased by the Northern Pacific Railway Company, and said railroad has ever since been operated and owned by the said the Northern Pacific Railway Company, which the petition alleged to be a domestic corporation, duly authorized by its charter and the laws of the state of Wisconsin to maintain and operate the line of railway before mentioned; that neither the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, nor its successor, the Northern Pacific Railway Company, has acquired title to said land, or made any attempt to acquire title thereto by purchase, eminent domain, or otherwise. The petition further alleged that the value of the land so taken and the damages occasioned by the taking thereof were less than $5,000,000 and more than $100,000. Wherefore an order was prayed that commissioners be appointed to ascertain and appraise the compensation to be made, etc.

*To this petition the Northern Pacific [423] Railway Company made answer asserting title by virtue of the grant of right of way by § 2 of the act of Congress of July 2, 1864, to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and of the purchase of the interest of the last-named company, etc.

The essential facts in the case were settled by a stipulation in writing, substantially as follows:

"On July 2, 1864, the land in question was public land of the United States. On November 8, 1882, the petitioner Doherty made a homestead entry thereof, and thereafter complied with the homestead laws and received a patent from the United States purporting to convey the lands February 6, 1890. In December, 1883, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company took possession of the strip in controversy, and constructed a railroad upon it, and remained in possession, operating the railroad, until August

NOTE.—As to land grants to railroads—see note to Kansas P. R. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 L. ed. U. S. 724.

31, 1896, when all the property, rights, and franchises of said railroad company were sold to the appellant, the Northern Pacific Railway Company, a Wisconsin corporation, which is duly organized to operate said railroad, and has occupied said strip for railroad purposes. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company, of which the appellant is the successor in interest, was organized by and obtained its rights under an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, and entitled 'An Act Granting Lands to Aid in the Construction of a Railroad and Telegraph Line, from Lake Superior to Puget Sound on the Pacific Coast by the Northern Route.' By the 1st section of this act a corporation created thereby was authorized to lay out and construct a continuous railroad and telegraph line, beginning at a point on Lake Superior in the state of Minnesota or Wisconsin; thence westerly upon the most eligible route as shall be determined by said company within the United States and north of the forty-fifth degree of latitude to some point on Puget sound. By the 2d and 3d sections of the same act the right of way through the public lands of the United States was granted to said railroad company, its successors, and assigns, for the construction of the line, and it was also provided that if its route should be found to be upon the same general line as the route of [424] another railroad which *owned a previous land grant from the United States, the amount of said previous land grant should be deducted from the amount granted by this act, provided that the railroad owning the previous grant might assign its interest to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, or might consolidate, confederate, and associate with said company upon the terms named in the 1st section of the act. The lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the act amounted to ten alternate sections per mile on each side of the line within the states, and twenty alternate sections in the territories, with a 10-mile indemnity limit, and by resolution of Congress, May 31, 1870, an additional indemnity belt 10 miles in width was created on each side of the line. This act was accepted by the company within the time required by law. The act also required the company to procure legislative consent of the states through which it was to run before its construction, and in the year 1865 the legislatures of Minnesota and Wisconsin gave such consent. The Minnesota act, providing that if the eastern terminus of the road should be located east of the eastern boundary of Minnesota, then that the company should construct or cause to be constructed a railroad from its main line to the navigable waters of Lake Superior at some point within the state of Minnesota.

"In 1870 the company located its general route from the mouth of the Montreal river in Wisconsin, across Wisconsin and Minnesota to a point on the Red River of the North near Fargo, and transmitted a map showing this location August 13, 1870, to the Secretary of the Interior. This map showed the proposed general route to commence at the mouth of the Montreal river, thence a little south of west upon a direct line to a point directly south of and about 6 miles distant from the south end of Chequamegon bay; thence a little north of west upon a direct line crossing the state boundary between Wisconsin and Minnesota, at or near the point where the St. Louis river becomes such boundary. Upon receipt of this map the Secretary of the Interior transmitted it to the Land Commissioner, with instructions to withdraw from sale, homestead, and pre-emption all odd-numbered sections of land within 20 *miles of the line [425] within both states. This order was complied with by the Land Commissioner by directions given to the district land officers at Bayfield, Wisconsin. Such withdrawals were made and the price of the even-numbered sections was raised to $2.50 per acre, and thereafter large quantities of such land were sold by the government at the rate of $2.50 per acre. In 1882 a map of definite location of said railroad from a point upon the St. Paul & Duluth Railroad, now called 'Thompson Junction,' eastward to a point in section 15, township 47, N., of range 2 W., in the state of Wisconsin, was prepared and approved by the directors and certified and forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior. The line of definite location laid down on this map followed substantially the line of general location upon the prior map, but it turned to the north and touched Superior, and also Ashland, and stopped some 10 miles west of the mouth of the Montreal river. Upon receipt of this map of definite location the Land Commissioner, by direction of the Secretary of the Interior, adjusted the land grant in accordance with it, and prepared diagrams showing the limits of the grant and indemnity belts, and transmitted such diagrams to the district land officers with the proper directions as to the withdrawal of lands, which were complied with.

"August 2, 1884, the directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company adopted a resolution fixing the eastern terminus of the railroad at the city of Ashland, which resolution was duly certified and transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, December 3, 1884. Thereafter the Commissioner prepared a diagram showing the final eastern terminus of the line at Ashland, and sent the same to the district officers at Bayfield, with instructions to adjust the grant on this basis. The point so fixed is on the line of definite location of July 6, 1882, but about 12 miles west of the east end of that line. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company constructed a continuous line of railroad from the city of Ashland to Puget sound, in all respects in accordance with its act of incorporation, and the whole line has been duly accepted by the President of the United States, as provided in that act. That portion of the road extending east from Thompson Junction was *con- [426] structed upon the line of definite location shown in the map of 1882, and was constructed during the years 1881, 1882, 1883, and 1884.

"The 1st section extended from Thompson Junction to Superior, and was examined and reported favorably upon by commissioners in 1882, and the recommendations were approved by the President, September 16, 1882; the 2d section, extending from Superior to the Brule river, was constructed in the latter part of 1883, and crossed the land in question here, and was approved in like manner January 31, 1884; the 3d section extends from the Brule river to Ashland, and was approved in like manner February, 1885. It appears further that, March 6, 1865, one Joshua Perham, then the president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, transmitted to the office of the Land Commissioner a map purporting to show the proposed general route of the Northern Pacific Railroad. Upon this map there appeared two lines from a point in the present state of North Dakota eastward, one terminating upon Lake Superior at or near Duluth, and the other extending into Wisconsin some distance south of Lake Superior, and terminating at the mouth of the Montreal river, this last-named line being apparently partially obliterated by a wavy red line. This map was accompanied by a letter from Perham, stating that it shows the general line of the Northern Pacific Railroad from a point on Lake Superior in Wisconsin to a point on Puget sound. The Secretary of the Interior transmitted this map to the Land Commissioner, suggesting the withdrawal of the lands along the line, but the Land Commissioner soon afterward transmitted a letter to the Secretary of the Interior recommending that the map be rejected, for the reason that the same did not comply with the rules of the land department, which recommendation was approved by the Secretary. There is nothing to explain the apparent alteration of this map, nor to show when it was made, and it is not shown that the directors of the company ever authorized the making or filing of the map, but it appears that the president of the company had no power to make or file it.

[427] "By act approved May 5, 1864, Congress granted ten sections of land per mile to the state of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a railroad from St. Paul to Lake Superior. In the same year the legislature of Minnesota conferred this grant upon the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company, a Minnesota corporation, and afterwards known as the St. Paul & Duluth Railroad Company. On January 1, 1872, this company had constructed and was operating a railroad from St. Paul to Duluth, by way of Thompson Junction, which is upon the St. Louis river, and is the point from which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company started to build its line westward. On the last-named date the Northern Pacific Railroad Company purchased a one-half interest in that part of this road extending from Thompson Junction to Duluth, for the sum of $500,000, and received a deed therefor.

On the same day the two companies made a written agreement providing for the operation of trains and the maintaining of the road. On May 1, 1872, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company made a further agreement, by which the lines of the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad were leased to the Northern Pacific Railroad for an annual rental, the land grant of the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad being expressly excepted from the operation of the lease. Pursuant to this lease the Northern Pacific Railroad Company operated the entire railroad thus leased, from May 1, 1872, until February 1, 1874, when it surrendered the lines leased and relinquished all its interests under the lease, but surrendered no rights under the deed. On the 12th of May, 1874, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Lake Superior & Mississippi Company made an agreement for the operation of the line from Thompson Junction to Duluth.

"It further appears that, by act approved May 5, 1864, the United States granted lands to the state of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of a railroad from Bayfield to Superior, but no road was constructed under this grant."

The superior court of Douglas county sustained the petition, and appointed commissioners as prayed for. An appeal was taken to the supreme court of Wisconsin, which court, on June 23, 1898, reversed the order of the superior court, and remanded the cause to that court with directions to dismiss the petition. Northern P. R. Co. v. Doherty, 100 Wis. 39, 75 N. W. 1079. [428]

Thereupon the cause was brought here by a writ of error allowed by the Chief Justice of the supreme court of Wisconsin.

Mr. M. S. Bright submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Crownhart & Foley were with him on the brief.

In fixing a terminus and building its line to Lake Superior, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had no rights other than those contained in the granting act, and the terms of the act are to be construed most strongly against the company.

Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036.

The right to construct from "a point on Lake Superior" cannot be construed as authorizing a company to lay out its road skirting for miles the shore of the lake, so as practically to monopolize the use of the waters and harbors thereof and the land adjacent thereto.

Prosser v. Northern P. R. Co. 152 U. S. 59, 38 L. ed. 352, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 528.

It is well settled that where authority is given a chartered company to do an act, that power is exhausted when once exercised, unless it clearly appears that it was intended the exercise thereof should be continuous.

East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Frazier, 139 U. S. 288, 35 L. ed. 196, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 517.

The rule seems to be without exception, 177 U. S.

that where authority to locate a railroad is given to a company, when that location is made the power is exhausted, and the company cannot thereafter change that location at will.

Hudson & D. Canal Co. v. New York & E. R. Co. 9 Paige, 328; State v. Norwalk & D. Turnp. Co. 10 Conn. 157; Mason v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co. 35 Barb. 374; People v. New York & H. R. Co. 45 Barb. 73; Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 366, 27 L. ed. 203, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Pierce, Railroads, 254, 255.

Messrs. James B. Kerr and C. W. Bunn argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

Congress, having failed to fix the point on Lake Superior from which the road should run, must be held to have intended to confer upon the corporation the power to fix the point.

Fall River Iron Works Co. v. Old Colony & F. River R. Co. 5 Allen, 221; Parke's Appeal, 64 Pa. 137; United States v. Northern P. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 842.

When the plaintiff established its terminus on Lake Superior it had full authority to touch the shore a second time, if the adoption of the most eligible route from such terminus to Puget sound required it.

Boston & P. R. Corp. v. Midland R. Co. 1 Gray, 340; Parke's Appeal, 64 Pa. 137; Kansas City, L. & S. K. R. Co. v. Atty. Gen. 118 U. S. 682, sub nom. Kansas Cty, L. & S. K. R. Co. v. Brewster, 30 L. ed. 281, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 66.

Such transactions as were had between the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company, which left each company existing as a separate and distinct corporation, and did not affect in the slightest degree their interests in their respective land grants, cannot be held to be a consolidation within the meaning of the act.

2 Morawetz Priv. Corp. § 939; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Shirley, 54 Tex. 125; Clearwater v. Meredith, 1 Wall. 25, sub nom. Ferguson v. Meredith, 17 L. ed. 604; Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319, 24 L. ed. 357; Atlantic & G. R. Co. v. Georgia, 98 U. S. 359, 25 L. ed. 185.

Authority to build and construct a line between given points carries with it by necessary implication the authority to purchase a line already constructed between those points.

Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 468, 27 L. ed. 279, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495.

Power to build or acquire by purchase a half interest in the road from Thomson Junction to Duluth, to be operated as a branch line or feeder to the transcontinental road, is a clear incident of the general power conferred by the charter.

Green Bay & M. R. Co. v. Union S. B. Co. 107 U. S. 98, 27 L. ed. 413, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Re Omaha Bridge Cases, 10 U. S. App. 98, 51 Fed. Rep. 309, 2 C. C. A. 174.

The filing of a map of definite location, followed by the resolution of the board of directors establishing the point of beginning at Ashland, must be conclusive.
177 U. S.

Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. ed. 1122, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Sioux City & I. F. Town Lot & Land Co. v. Griffey, 143 U. S. 32, 36 L. ed. 64, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 362; Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 360, 27 L. ed. 201, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Walden v. Knevals, 114 U. S. 373, 29 L. ed. 167, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 898.

The acceptance of the map of definite location vested the grant of right of way, and is conclusive.

Walden v. Knevals, 114 U. S. 373, 29 L. ed. 167, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 898; Noble v. Union River Logging R. Co. 147 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 271.

*Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion[428] of the court:

It is conceded that Doherty, the plaintiff in error, owns the southwest quarter of section 4, township 47 north, of range of 11 west, in Douglas county, Wisconsin, having made a homestead entry thereof November 8, 1882, and obtained a patent therefor February 6, 1890.

The Northern Pacific Railway Company, the defendant in error, claims a right of way 400 feet in width over and across this quarter section, and has constructed and is operating its railroad thereon. It is not claimed that this right of way was acquired by purchase or condemnation, but it is claimed by virtue of the terms of the act of Congress, approved July 2, 1864, incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and granting to it, among other rights and privileges, a right of way through the public lands of the United States. This act authorized the corporation, thereby created, to construct a railroad "beginning at a point on Lake Superior in the state of Minnesota or Wisconsin" westward to "some point on Puget sound," and the controlling question in this case is whether the eastern terminus of the railroad constructed under the act is at Duluth, Minnesota, or at Ashland, Wisconsin. If at Duluth, then the company acquired no right of way over any public land in Wisconsin; but if at Ashland, then it did acquire a right of way over public lands in Wisconsin, including the land in question.

*It is conceded that on August 2, 1884, the[429] directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company adopted a resolution fixing the eastern terminus of the railroad at Ashland; that this resolution was transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; that thereafter the Commissioner prepared a diagram showing the final eastern terminus of the line at Ashland, and sent the same to the district officers at Bayfield, Wisconsin, with instructions to adjust the grant on this basis; that a continuous line of railroad from Ashland to Puget sound in all respects in accordance with the act of incorporation, and as depicted upon its map of definite location, has been constructed, and has been accepted as such by the President of the United States. Such concessions would seem to warrant a conclusion that the defendant in error is entitled, as matter of right, to maintain and operate its road upon a right of way over the land in dispute, and we are led to inquire why it is that such a conclusion is disputed.

And, first, it is claimed by the plaintiff in error that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company definitely located its eastern terminus at Duluth, January 1, 1872, when it purchased one half of the track and right of way of the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company from Thompson Junction to Duluth, and made a contract for operation of the line in common.

In reply to this claim the company denies that, by purchasing an interest in the line from Thompson Junction to Duluth, it was ever intended by the company to make Duluth the eastern terminus, or that the arrangement with the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad operated, as a matter of law, to fix and determine Duluth as the eastern terminus; and attention is called to the fact that it is provided in the act of July 2, 1864, that before the Northern Pacific Railroad Company could commence the construction of its road it should obtain the consent of the legislature of any state through which any portion of its line might pass. Such consent was obtained from the states of Wisconsin and Minnesota; and in the act of the latter state, granting consent, it was in terms provided "that should the company elect to make the eastern terminus of said line east of the eastern boundary of the state of Minnesota, [430] then, and in *that case, they shall construct, or cause to be constructed, a line of railroad from the said main line to the navigable waters of Lake Superior, within the state of Minnesota, of the same gauge as said main line, for which purpose the same powers, rights, and privileges are hereby granted to said company as they have or may have to construct said main line in the state of Minnesota."

Evidently it was not intended by the legislature of Minnesota by this enactment to compel the railroad company to make its eastern terminus within the limits of that state. Indeed, the act recognizes the right of the company to elect to make its eastern terminus east of the limits of Minnesota.

It was, then, in compliance with the condition imposed by Minnesota, namely, that in case the railroad company elected to make its eastern terminus in Wisconsin, that the arrangement was made whereby the line from Thompson Junction on the main line to Duluth became, as to one half thereof, the property of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

We agree with the supreme court of Wisconsin in so regarding this transaction, and also in its holding that the arrangement between the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company did not constitute a consolidation of the companies in any legal sense, so as to make the short line between Thompson Junction and Duluth a part of the trunk line contemplated by Congress.

When, in August, 1870, the company located its proposed general route, and when its map of such location was approved by the Secretary of the Interior, showing its eastern terminus to be in Wisconsin, it became obligatory on the company to comply with the condition imposed, in that event, to construct a branch line to Lake Superior within the limits of Minnesota, and hence the agreement with the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company.

It is next contended by the plaintiff in error that, even if Duluth is not to be regarded as the eastern terminus of the company's road, yet that when afterwards, in constructing its road eastward from Thompson Junction, the company's road reached the city of Superior, the latter thereby became the *point [431] on Lake Superior which was to be regarded as the eastern terminus; that the city of Superior was the first point at which the Northern Pacific Railroad Company connected with Lake Superior by its own road, and it thereby became the initial point contemplated by the granting act.

In connection with this proposition it is necessary to take notice of certain legislation of the state of Wisconsin.

By an act approved April 10, 1865, the legislature of that state gave its consent, unconditionally, to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to build and maintain its road within the state limits. Stat. 1865, chap. 465.

On March 25, 1872, the legislature passed an amending act, whereby the consent previously given to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to construct and operate its road in the state of Wisconsin was made subject to certain conditions, among which were that the company should build and operate a line of railroad running from the junction of the said main line of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company with the Lake Superior & Minnesota Railroad to the bay of Superior, and should build and maintain at the latter point docks and piers suitable for the transfer of passengers and freight between the railroad and lake-going craft; and that until such connecting road and docks were constructed, it should not be lawful for the company to construct or maintain any other railroad in Wisconsin. Stat. 1872, chap. 139.

To comply with this legislation it was necessary for the company to alter the line of its road as defined by its map of general route, so that the same might touch the lake at the bay of Superior. But it does not follow that thereby the company abandoned its right to itself select the point of its eastern terminus. This and the similar legislation of Minnesota were not intended or regarded as taking away from the company its rights and powers under the act of Congress. They only imposed, whether lawfully or otherwise, certain conditions respecting branch line connections which the legislatures deemed desirable for local advantage.

Some reliance is placed upon two decisions of the Secretary of the Interior—the first rendered November 13, 1895, and *reported [432] in volume 21, U. S. Land Dec. 412: the second and, rendered August 27, 1896, and reported in volume 23, U. S. Land Dec. 204.

Those decisions were made by the Secretary in disposing of a list of indemnity selections filed by the Northern Pacific Railway Company, based on losses of lands within the place limits lying east of the city of Superior. The opinion of the Secretary was that because the company was empowered to locate and construct a line of railroad from a point on Lake Superior to some point on Puget Sound, it had authority to touch the lake at only one point, and that, notwithstanding it filed a map of definite location from Thompson Junction to Ashland, the fact that the line so located and constructed touched the lake at the city of Superior precluded the company from extending its line eastward from that point. In his later decision the Secretary concluded that the transaction between the Lake Superior & Mississippi Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was, in legal effect, a consolidation of the two corporations, and that, therefore, the eastern terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad was definitely fixed at Duluth.

We do not care to repeat the considerations already advanced going to show that, in our opinion, the right of the railroad company, under the act of July 2, 1864, to select its eastern terminus at a point on Lake Superior in the state of Minnesota or Wisconsin, was not intentionally, or by operation of law, ended or determined by the company's compliance with the conditions sought to be imposed by the legislation of Minnesota and Wisconsin. The views of the supreme court of Wisconsin on this subject may be properly quoted: "On March 6, 1865, one Josiah Perham, then president of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, filed with the Secretary of the Interior a map showing a proposed route of the proposed railroad. On this map appear two lines from a point in North Dakota to Lake Superior, one ending at Duluth and one at the mouth of the Montreal river. This latter line is partially obliterated by a wavy red line through its whole length. It appears affirmatively that the president had [433] no authority to make or file this *map, and that the directors never authorized it; and further, that on June 22, 1865, the map was rejected by the Land Commissioner and Secretary of the Interior because it did not comply with the rules and regulations of the land department. No further action was ever taken upon it, and it seems too plain to require argument that it can cut no figure in the case. All the subsequent maps made and filed by the corporation, as well as its recorded acts, show the clear intention to make the eastern terminus of the road in Wisconsin. In 1870 a map of general route was filed, showing the eastern terminus to be at the mouth of the Montreal river; upon receipt of which the odd-numbered sections of land within 20 miles of the line were withdrawn from sale, homestead, and pre-emption entry within the states of Minnesota and Wisconsin, and the price of land in the even-numbered sections was raised to $2.50 per acre, and large quantities sold by the United States at that price. In 1882 a map of definite location of the line from Thompson Junction eastward to a point in section 15, town 47, range 2 west of the fourth P. M. was filed in the land office at Washington. This line passed through Ashland and terminated a few miles east of that city. This map was approved, and the land grant adjusted in accordance therewith by the department. In August, 1884, the board of directors of the company, by formal resolution, fixed the eastern terminus of the road at Ashland, and a certified copy of the resolution was filed in the General Land Office in December, 1884, whereupon the Land Commissioner made a diagram showing the eastern terminus so fixed, and adjusted the grant in accordance therewith.

"The portion of the road extending eastward from Thompson Junction to Ashland was constructed in the years 1881, 1882, 1883, and 1884, and was examined in three sections by commissioners appointed by the President of the United States, as provided by the act of incorporation. The commissioners reported favorably upon all of these sections, and their recommendations were approved by the President, the last approval being dated February 6, 1885.

"All of these deliberate acts of the department and executive *officers are brushed aside by Secretary Smith on the ground that the terminus of the road had been unalterably fixed at Duluth by the action of the Northern Pacific Company in 1872. As we do not agree with the Secretary's premise we cannot agree with his conclusion, and therefore hold that the terminus of the road is at Ashland, and hence that the railroad company had a right of way across the petitioner's land by virtue of the provisions of the act of incorporation."

Northern P. R. Co. v. Doherty, 100 Wis. 39, 75 N. W. 1079. [434]

In a bill filed in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota by the United States against the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, the Northern Pacific Railway Company and others sought to have canceled and annulled a patent granted by the United States, on April 22, 1895, to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, for lot 5 of section 29, township 54 north, of range 13 west, in the county of St. Louis and state of Minnesota, a tract of land situated more than 10 miles east of Duluth, which the bill averred to be the eastern terminus or eastern initial point of the grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the act of July 2, 1864. The bill alleged that the patent had been granted through inadvertence and mistake, and under an "erroneous impression and mistaken belief that said tract of land was lying and being within the limits of the aforesaid grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company."

The case was so proceeded in, on bill, answer, and an agreed statement of facts, that on February 20, 1899, the bill of complainant was dismissed for want of equity; and this decree was, on appeal to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, on July 10, 1899, by that court affirmed.

v. Northern P. R. Co. 95 Fed. Rep. 865, 37 C. C. A. 290.

The controversy in that case involved the same questions as those we have been considering in the present case of Doherty, and the conclusions reached were that the land department committed no error of law when it held that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company had authority under its charter to locate its eastern terminus at Ashland, and made no mistake of fact when it found that [435] the Northern Pacific Railroad Company *had actually selected Ashland as its eastern terminus. The facts and reasoning relied on by the respective parties were, in the main, the same with those that were relied on in the case in the supreme court of Wisconsin, now under review in this court.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin is affirmed.

Mr. Justice McKenna did not take part in the decision of the case.

UNITED STATES, Appt.,

v.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, Northern Pacific Railway Company, and Edwin H. McHenry and Frank G. Bigelow, Receivers.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 435-442.)

Public lands—railroad grants—question of forfeiture.

1. The question of the forfeiture of a railroad grant for noncompletion within the time limited by the grant is not put in issue in a suit to annul a patent on the sole ground that it was issued under a mistaken belief as to the location of a terminus, by an allegation in the answer that it was "duly" and "in all respects" constructed in accordance with the law.
2. Land granted to a railroad company does not, ipso facto, revert to the United States by mere failure to complete the road within the period prescribed by Congress in the grant; but, to effect a forfeiture, some act is essential on the part of the government evincing an intention to take advantage of such failure.

[No. 408.]

Argued January 26, 29, 1900. Decided April 16, 1900.

APPPEAL from a decree of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit affirming a decision by the Circuit Court dismissing for want of equity a bill to cancel a patent for lands. Affirmed.

See same case below, 95 Fed. Rep. 864, 37 C. C. A. 290.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

[436] *In July, 1898, the United States, by the Attorney General, filed in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota a bill of complaint against the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and others. The object of the suit was to procure the cancelation and annulment of a certain patent granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by the United States on April 22, 1895, for a tract of land lying and being more than 10 miles east of Duluth, in the state of Minnesota, and which patent was alleged by the bill to have been inadvertently and mistakenly issued. The case was disposed of on bill, answer, and a stipulation of facts. The circuit court dismissed the case for want of equity, and the cause was taken on appeal to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit, where the decree of the circuit court was, on July 10, 1899, affirmed. An appeal was thereupon allowed to this court.

Mr. Charles W. Russell argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

Messrs. James B. Kerr and C. W. Bunn argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion and in the briefs as reported in Doherty v. Northern P. R. Co. 177 U. S. 421, ante, 830, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677.

*Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion [436] of the court:

This cause was heard in this court in connection with that of Doherty v. Northern P. R. Co. No. 121 of the present term. [177 U. S. 421, ante, 830, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 677.] That case came here on a writ of error to the supreme court of the state of Wisconsin. The present one is on appeal from the circuit court of appeals from the eighth circuit.

The important questions of fact and of law were substantially the same in the two cases, and so were the reasoning and conclusions of the respective courts below. In a judgment just entered by this court, the judgment of the supreme court of Wisconsin was affirmed, for reasons given in the opinion, a reference to which is deemed to be a sufficient disposition of the questions common to the two cases.

*But in the present case there has been [437] raised and argued a proposition not considered in the supreme court of Wisconsin, and which is entitled to our attention. Briefly stated, it is that, even if it be conceded that the eastern terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company was lawfully fixed at Ashland, Wisconsin, yet that the land grant of the company had lapsed before any map of definite location of the railroad east of Duluth, Minnesota, had been filed in the land department; that the company could not lawfully extend the construction of its railroad, so as to entitle it to land under its land grant, after the time limited by act of Congress for the completion of the railroad had fully expired; and that, consequently, the patent to the land described in the bill, being land east of Duluth, was granted mistakenly and improperly.

This contention is based on the language of § 8 of the incorporating act, which is as follows: That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to, and accepted by, said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence work upon said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than fifty miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the fourth day of July, anno Domini eighteen hundred and seventy-six." The time of completion was subsequently extended to July 4, 1880. 13 Stat. at L. 370, chap. 217 (15 Stat. at L. 255).

177 U. S.

It is always safe, in approaching a question of this kind, to have regard to the pleadings in the case. Otherwise there is danger that the court and counsel may be drawn into discussions outside of the case actually presented.

On inspection, it appears that the case made by the bill is, that the eastern terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad became, was, and now is at the city of Duluth, state of Minnesota; that the land in question, being part and parcel of the public lands of the United States, is more than 10 miles east of the said eastern terminus and not, therefore, within the limits of the grant to said company; that the patent granted to the said company on April 22, 1895, was issued [438] "through *mistake and inadvertence, and under the erroneous impression and mistaken belief that said tract of land was within the limits of the said grant to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company;" and the relief prayed for is that said tract of land be restored to the complainant; that the defendant be required to reconvey all of said tract of land; and that said patent issued by the ministerial officers of the government, so far as the tract of land described in the bill is concerned, be canceled and annulled; and for such other and further relief as may be just and equitable.

It is true that, in the narrative part of the bill, the 8th section of the incorporating act is quoted, and also there is set forth the several transactions whereby it is alleged Duluth became established as the eastern terminus of the company's road, but there is no intimation that it was the purpose of the bill to have a forfeiture of the company's rights and property judicially ascertained and declared. Indeed, the obvious purpose of the suit was to have the question of the proper terminus of the company's road determined; and it seems a fair deduction from the averments and prayers of the bill that, if that terminus was found to be at Ashland, then the complainant would not be entitled to any relief.

It is argued on behalf of the government that, even if the bill did not point to a forfeiture as part of the proof that the land had been mistakenly patented, yet that as the defendants, in their answer, had set up, as part of their defense, that the road had been "duly," and "in all respects," constructed in accordance with the law, thereby entitling them to the land in dispute, the issue was thereby widened so as to include the question of forfeiture. We think the court of appeals properly disposed of this argument when it said: "It is nothing but a suit to avoid a patent to a single tract of land on the sole ground that the land department erroneously found the eastern terminus of the road to be at Ashland when it was at Duluth. No forfeiture of any of the rights and privileges of the company on account of the delay in the construction of its railroad has been prayed, no issue of forfeiture has been tendered or made by the pleadings, and that question is not here for consideration. It is a *general rule that questions that are [439] not within the issue presented by the pleadings may not be determined by the courts, much less may so important a question as the forfeiture of the rights of a corporation to thousands of miles of railroad and thousands of acres of land under a congressional grant. Courts have no jurisdiction to consider or determine the question of the forfeiture of a railroad grant until it is raised by direct allegations in a suit instituted by lawful authority for the express purpose of presenting it." [95 Fed. Rep. 879, 37 C. C. A. 305.]

Again, it is contended that when a statutory grant contains on the face of the law a provision that each and every grant, right, and privilege are upon condition that the road shall be completed within a certain time, and that time expires without performance of the condition, all future proceedings of the company, even if acquiesced in and approved by executive officers of the government, in disregard of the forfeiture, are unauthorized, ultra vires, and forbidden.

In other words, if we understand the position, it is claimed that under § 8 of the act of July 2, 1864, noncompletion of the railroad within the time limited of itself operates as a forfeiture; the grant immediately reverts to the government; and courts must so hold on the simple statement of the fact of noncompliance within the limit. We do not understand this to be a correct statement of the law. In Schulenberg v. Harriman, 21 Wall. 44, 22 L. ed. 551, this court was called upon to consider the legal import of such a provision in the act of Congress of June 3, 1856, granting public lands to the state of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of railroads in said state. After providing that the lands should be sold, from time to time, as the construction of the railroad progressed, until the road was completed, it was enacted that "if said road is not completed within ten years no further sales shall be made, and the lands unsold shall revert to the United States."

No part of the road having been built at the expiration of the period limited in the grant, it was claimed that the lands reverted to the United States. It was held by the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota that such lands did not ipso facto revert to the United States by [440] mere failure to build the road within the period prescribed by Congress, and that to effect a forfeiture some act on the part of the government evincing an intention to take advantage of such failure was essential; and, on error, that ruling was affirmed by this court, and the following statement of the law was made by Mr. Justice Field in giving the opinion of the court:

"In what manner the reserved right of the grantor for breach of the condition must be asserted so as to restore the estate depends upon the character of the grant. If it be a private grant, that right must be asserted by entry or its equivalent. If the grant be a public one, it must be asserted by judicial proceedings authorized by law, the equivalent of an inquest of office at common law, finding the fact of forfeiture, and adjudging the restoration of the estate on that ground, or there must be some legislative assertion of ownership of the property for breach of condition, such as an act directing the possession and appropriation of the property, or that it be offered for sale or settlement. At common law the sovereign could not make an entry in person, and therefore an office found was necessary to determine the estate; but, as said by this court in a late case (United States v. Repentigny, 5 Wall. 268, 18 L. ed. 646), 'the mode of asserting or of resuming the forfeited grant is subject to the legislative authority of the government. It may be after judicial investigation, or by taking possession directly under the authority of the government without these preliminary proceedings.'

"In the present case no action has been taken, either by legislative or judicial proceedings, to enforce a forfeiture of the estate granted by the acts of 1856 and 1864. The title remains, therefore, in the state as completely as it existed on the day when the title by location of the route of the railroad acquired precision and became attached to the adjoining alternate sections."

In July, 1866, Congress granted unto the California & Oregon Railroad Company a right of way over the public lands. In a subsequent suit between the railroad company and one Bybee, a holder of a mining claim, it was claimed that the railroad company had

[441] forfeited and lost its right under the *grant by its failure to complete its road within the time limited in the act; that such failure operated ipso facto as a termination of all right to acquire any further interest in any lands not then patented. But it was held by this court, in the words of Mr. Justice Brown, "that in all cases in which the question has been passed upon by this court, the failure to complete the road within the time limited is treated as a condition subsequent, not operating ipso facto as a revocation of the grant, but as authorizing the government itself to take advantage of it, and forfeit the grant by judicial proceedings, or by an act of Congress, resuming title to the land." Schulenberg v. Harriman; Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 360, 27 L. ed. 201, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336, are then cited, and likewise St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. McGee, 115 U. S. 473, 29 L. ed. 448, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 125, where it was said by Chief Justice Waite to have been often decided "that lands granted by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads do not revert after condition broken until a forfeiture has been asserted by the United States, either through judicial proceedings instituted under authority of law for that purpose, or through some legislative action legally equivalent to judgment of office found at common law." "Legislation to be sufficient must manifest an intention by Congress to reassert title and to resume possession. As it is to take the place of a suit by the United States to enforce a forfeiture, and judgment therein establishing the right, it should be direct, positive, and free from all doubt or ambiguity."

As the bill in this case does not allege that it is brought under authority of Congress for the purpose of enforcing a forfeiture, and does not allege any other legislative act whatever looking to such an intention, it is plain, under the authorities cited, that this suit must be regarded as only intended to have the point of the eastern terminus judicially ascertained. This being so, and that terminus having been found to be at Ashland, it follows that the courts below committed no error in dismissing the bill of complaint.

This view of the case renders it unnecessary for us to consider whether the United States could be estopped by the acts of the executive department in recognizing the rights of the railroad company as continuing in full force after the expiration *of the time [442] named in the statute; or to consider whether the ordinary doctrines of courts of equity, which relieve a contracting party from forfeiture by reason of a failure to complete the contract within the time fixed, when the work is subsequently completed and accepted, would apply to a case like the present. Undoubtedly there would seem to be room for a fair presumption that Congress was aware of the action of the President and of the functionaries of the land department in the particulars before mentioned, and approved of the same. It is not, as put by the counsel of the government in his able brief, the case of a waiver presumed from mere nonaction, but from nonaction in the special circumstances disclosed.

As the evidence and conceded facts failed to show any mistake, fraud, or error, in fact or in law, in the action of the land department in accepting the location of the eastern terminus made by the company, and in issuing the patent in question, the bill was properly dismissed, and the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals is affirmed.

Mr. Justice McKenna did not take part in the decision of the case.

[442] *SETH CARTER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF TEXAS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 442-449.)

Civil rights—constitutional right to have negroes on grand jury—motion to dismiss indictment.

1. The exclusion of all persons of the African race from a grand jury which finds an indictment against a negro in a state court, when they are excluded solely because of their race or color, denies him the equal protection of the laws in violation of U. S. Const. 14th Amend., whether such exclusion is done through the action of the legislature, through the courts, or through the executive or administrative officers of the state.
2. A motion to quash an indictment against a negro because it was found by a grand jury from which all persons of the African race had been excluded because of their race or color, when made before arraignment, and when there had been no opportunity to challenge the array because the grand jury had been impaneled before the offense was committed, was a proper and timely mode of presenting the fundamental objection to such indictment, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, because of such exclusion, although the state statute does not provide for quashing an indictment on such ground.

3. An omission in a bill of exceptions, of the names of witnesses whom the accused intended to call, and of any statement of their testimony on a certain subject, cannot deprive him of the benefit of his exception to the wrongful refusal of the court to hear any evidence whatever on that subject.

[No. 193.]

Submitted March 16, 1900. Decided April 16, 1900.

NOTE.—As to qualifications of grand jurors—see State v. Russell (Iowa) 28 L. R. A. 204, and note.

Negroes as grand jurors.

All statutes discriminating against negroes in the formation of a grand jury are contrary to the 13th and 14th Amendments to the United States Constitution. Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676 (hab. corp.); Com. v. Johnson, 78 Ky. 509 (obj. of judge criminally prosecuted); Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567 (mo. qu.); Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 110, 27 L. ed. 354, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 625 (mo. set aside).

But the equal protection of the laws is not denied to colored persons by a state constitution and laws which make no discrimination against the colored race in terms, but which grant a discretion to certain officers which can be used to the abridgement of the right of colored persons to vote and serve on grand or petit juries, where it is not shown that the actual administration of such constitution and statutes was evil, but only that evil was possible under them. Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 42 L. ed. 1012, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583 (mo. qu.).

And the selection of grand jurors from the registry list of qualified voters, as required by Miss. Const. § 264, does not operate as an unlawful discrimination against negroes with respect to their right to sit on grand juries, although the educational qualifications required of electors may exclude from the elective franchise a greater number of colored than of white persons. Dixon v. State, 74 Miss. 271, 20 So. 839 (mo. qu.).

A motion to quash an indictment, made after arrest and before arraignment, on the ground that, in the organization of the grand jury, negroes were discriminated against in that none were selected by the jury commissioners, is proper and timely, where the accused had no opportunity to challenge the array because the grand jury had been impaneled prior to the commission of the offense. Carter v. State, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 345, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. W. 508.

But after plea of not guilty and petition for removal of cause to the Federal court, a plea in abatement on this ground was too late. Cooper v. State, 64 Md. 40, 20 Atl. 986 (pl. abate.).

And habeas corpus on this ground was denied in a Federal court where proper objections were not made in the state court, as there was a remedy by review. Re Wood, 140 U. S. 278, sub. nom. Wood v. Brush, 35 L. ed. 505, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 738 (hab. corp.).
177 U. S.

A prisoner is not entitled to his discharge on habeas corpus because he is a negro and citizens of his race were not summoned for qualification as grand jurors, where the state law directs the jury commissioners to select the jurors impartially from all citizens having the requisite qualifications as voters, and does not discriminate against men of the African race. Ex parte Murray, 66 Fed. Rep. 297.

And the removal of the prosecution of a colored person from the state to a Federal court cannot be had because the jury commissioners or other subordinate officers have, without authority derived from the Constitution or laws of the state, excluded colored citizens from the grand jury because of their race. Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 40 L. ed. 1075, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904.

And a denial in a state court of the right to show that persons of the race of the accused were arbitrarily excluded by the sheriff from the panel of grand and petit jurors solely because of their race does not defeat the jurisdiction of that court so as to warrant a writ of habeas corpus. Andrews v. Swartz, 156 U. S. 272, 39 L. ed. 422, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389.

The court said "his proper remedy was . . . to carry the case to the highest court of the state having jurisdiction to review that judgment, thence upon writ of error to this court if the final judgment of such state court denied any right, privilege, or immunity specially claimed and which was secured to him by the Constitution of the United States."

Under Ala. Code, §§ 4087, 4187, providing that no objection for disqualification can be made except that the grand jury were not drawn in the presence of the officer, an objection that negroes were excluded would not avail. Boulo v. State, 51 Ala. 18 (pl. abate.).

And where a party waives his right to object, he cannot object by habeas corpus. Haggard v. Com. 79 Ky. 366 (hab. corp.).

An objection that part of the grand jury were negroes was insufficient under Miss. Code, § 499, art. 131, providing that impaneling the grand jury is conclusive evidence of competency except for fraud. Lee v. State, 45 Misc. 114 (pl. abate.).

And a white man cannot complain that negroes were not on the panel. Com. v. Wright, 79 Ky. 22, 42 Am. Rep. 203 (obj.).

IN ERROR to the Court of Criminal Appeals of the State of Texas to review a decision refusing to quash an indictment against a negro which was found by a grand jury from which all persons of his race were excluded. Reversed.

See same case below, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 345, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. W. 508.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Wilford H. Smith and E. M. Hewlett submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

The trial court was bound to permit the introduction of any evidence bearing upon the question or tending to prove the issue, in order that this court may be enabled to say whether or not the issue is established from the proof appearing in the record.

Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 40 L. ed. 1075, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 42 L. ed. 1012, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583.

It will open wide the door to judicial oppression, to permit the state courts in this way to nullify the amendments to the Constitution and overturn the decisions of this tribunal upholding and giving expression to the rights of negroes to the equal protection of the laws, by arbitrarily refusing to allow the introduction of proof in support of motions, or other pleadings, calling the attention of this court to injustices and wrongs upon their rights under the Federal Constitution, in the administration of state laws.

Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

Mr. T. S. Smith submitted the cause for defendant in error:

It is not to be understood that the approval by the trial court of the bill of exceptions as tendered by the accused, and an order to file the same, is an admission by the court that everything contained therein is true as a matter of fact.

Smith v. State, 4 Tex. App. 630.

[443] Mr. Justice Gray* delivered the opinion of the court:

At November term, 1897, of the criminal district court, held at the city of Galveston, for the county of Galveston and state of Texas, the grand jury, on November 26, 1897, returned an indictment against Seth Carter for the murder on November 24, 1897, of Bertha Brantley, both being of the negro race.

The record states that at March term, 1898, when the case was called for trial, the [444] defendant, in open court, and before he *had been arraigned or had pleaded to the indictment, presented and read to the court a motion to quash the indictment.

The motion to quash was signed and sworn to by the defendant, and was in these words: "And now comes the said defendant, in his own proper person, and moves the court to set aside and quash the indictment herein against him, because the jury commissioners, appointed to select the grand jury which found and presented said indictment, selected no person or persons of color or of African descent, known as 'negroes', to serve on said grand jury; but, on the contrary, did exclude from the list of persons to serve as such grand jurors all colored persons or persons of African descent, known as 'negroes', because of their race and color; and that said grand jury were composed exclusively of persons of the white race, while all persons of the colored race or persons of African descent, known as 'negroes,' although consisting of and constituting about one fourth of the population and of the registered voters in said city and county of Galveston, and although otherwise qualified to serve as such grand jurors, were excluded therefrom on the ground of their race and color, and have been so excluded from serving on any jury in said criminal district court for a great many years, which is a discrimination against the defendant, since he is a person of color and of African descent, known as a 'negro,' and that such discrimination is a denial to him of the equal protection of the laws, and of his civil rights guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the United States. All of which the defendant is ready to verify."

840

The record further shows that the court overruled the motion, and to that ruling the defendant excepted in open court; that the defendant was then arraigned and pleaded not guilty, and was tried and convicted by a jury, and adjudged guilty, by the court, of murder in the first degree; and that a bill of exceptions was tendered by him, and was by the presiding judge approved, allowed, and ordered to be made part of the record, which stated that, "after reading the said motion, the defendant asked leave of the court to introduce witnesses, and offered to introduce witnesses, to prove and sustain the allegations therein made; but the court refused to hear any evidence in *support of the said mo- [445] tion and thereupon overruled the same, without investigating into the truth or falsity of the allegations of said motion,—to which action of the court the defendant then and there excepted."

The defendant appealed to the court of Criminal Appeals of the state of Texas (being the highest court of the state in which a decision in the case could be had (which affirmed the judgment, and denied a motion for a rehearing. The opinions delivered by that court upon affirming the judgment, and upon denying the motion for a rehearing, are set out in the record, and are reported in 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 345, 46 S. W. 236, 48 S. W. 508. The defendant sued out this writ of error.

The Code of Criminal Procedure of the state of Texas contains the following provisions:

"Art. 397. Any person, before the grand jury have been impaneled, may challenge the array of jurors, or any person presented as a grand juror; and in no other way shall objections to the qualifications and legality of the grand jury be heard. Any person confined in jail in the county shall, upon his request, be brought into court to make such challenge."

"Art. 559. A motion to set aside an indictment" "shall be based on one or more of the following causes, and no other: 1. That it appears by the records of the court that the indictment was not found by at least nine grand jurors." "2. That some person not authorized by law was present when the grand jury were deliberating upon the accusation against the defendant, or were voting upon the same."

"Art. 561. The only special pleas which can be heard for the defendant are: 1. That he has been before convicted legally, in a court of competent jurisdiction, upon the same accusation, after having been tried upon the merits for the same offense. 2. That he has been before acquitted by a jury of the accusation against him, in a court of competent jurisdiction, whether the acquittal was regular or irregular."

The court of criminal appeals, in its first opinion affirming the judgment of the trial court, disposed of the objection to the grand jury by holding that, by the very terms of article 523, "the fact that people of African [446] descent were not drawn by the *commissioners to serve as jurors upon the grand jury is not a ground for setting aside an indictment;" and that the appellant had not undertaken to bring himself within the purview of article 397, as to which the court said: "If there were any objections to the grand jury, or any member of it, they should have been exercised by challenge, either to the array or to a particular member of said body. . . . The question of challenge to the array or to a particular juror is not suggested, nor is it shown that he was debarred this right. It is too late, after indictment found, to question the manner of impaneling a grand jury." 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 348, 349, 46 S. W. 237.

In the opinion delivered on denying the motion for a rehearing, the court substantially abandoned as untenable the positions taken in its first opinion; and admitted that "in this particular case no opportunity was afforded appellant to challenge the array, because the grand jury which returned the bill against him had been impaneled prior to the commission of this offense," and consequently that a motion to quash the indictment, made after his arrest under it, and before his arraignment, was a proper and timely mode of presenting a fundamental objection under the Constitution and laws of the United States, although no such objection was mentioned in the statutes of the state. And the reasons assigned for denying the rehearing were that "the motion to quash was based simply on the affidavit of appellant," and "the question was presented to the court without any evidence whatever in support of it;" that "in this case the motion to quash was not predicated on the record, but involved extraneous matters, and before the court would be authorized to act, there must be some proof of the allegations contained in the motion;" that "the motion was but a mere tender of the issue, unaccompanied by any supporting testimony;" that "it names no witness or person by whom it was proposed to prove the allegations of the motion;" and that "the bare recitation" (in the bill of exceptions) "that the court refused to hear evidence in support of said motion is without meaning, because in fact no testimony was tendered by appellant." 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 354-357, 48 S. W. 510, 511.

177 U. S.

The rules of law which must govern this case are clearly established by previous decisions of this court.

*Whenever by any action of a state, [447] whether through its legislature, through its courts, or through its executive or administrative officers, all persons of the African race are excluded, solely because of their race or color, from serving as grand jurors in the criminal prosecution of a person of the African race, the equal protection of the laws is denied to him, contrary to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 397, 26 L. ed. 567, 574; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 40 L. ed. 1075, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904.

When the defendant has had no opportunity to challenge the grand jury which found the indictment against him, the objection to the constitution of the grand jury upon this ground may be taken, either by plea in abatement, or by motion to quash the indictment, before pleading in bar. United States v. Gale, 109 U. S. 65, 67, 27 L. ed. 857, 858, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1.

The motion to quash on such a ground being based on allegations of facts not appearing in the record, those allegations, if controverted by the attorney for the state, must be supported by evidence on the part of the defendant. Smith v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 592, 601, 40 L. ed. 1082, 1085, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900; Williams v. Mississippi, 170 U. S. 213, 42 L. ed. 1012, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 583.

But the question whether a right or privilege, claimed under the Constitution or laws of the United States, was distinctly and sufficiently pleaded and brought to the notice of a state court, is itself a Federal question, in the decision of which this court, on writ of error, is not concluded by the view taken by the highest court of the state. Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 396, 397, 26 L. ed. 567, 574; Mitchell v. Clark, 110 U. S. 633, 645, 28 L. ed. 279, 283, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 170, 312; Boyd v. Nebraska ex rel. Thayer, 143 U. S. 135, 180, 36 L. ed. 103, 116, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375.

In the case at bar, as may be inferred from the dates appearing in the record, and as is distinctly stated in the opinion delivered by the court below on denying a rehearing, the grand jury had been impaneled before the commission of the offense for which the defendant was indicted. He therefore never had any opportunity to challenge the array of the grand jury, and was entitled to present the objection on which he relied by motion to quash.

The defendant's motion to quash the indictment was presented to the court before he had been arraigned, or had pleaded to *the [448] indictment. The motion, besides stating that the defendant was of the African race, fully and specifically alleged, with almost the precision of a plea in abatement, that the jury commissioners appointed to select the grand jury selected no persons of African descent to serve on the grand jury, but, on the contrary, excluded from the list all such persons because of their race and color; that the grand jury was composed exclusively of persons of the white race, while all persons of the African race, although constituting about one fourth of the registered voters in the county, and although otherwise well qualified to serve as such grand jurors, were excluded therefrom on the ground of their race and color, and had been so excluded from serving on any jury in that court for a great many years; and that this was a discrimination against the defendant, and a denial to him of the equal protection of the laws, and of his civil rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States. And the motion concluded with the statement: "All of which the defendant is ready to verify."

841

The bill of exceptions tendered by the defendant, and allowed by the presiding judge, and made part of the record by his order, explicitly states that "after reading the said motion, the defendant asked leave of the court to introduce witnesses, and offered to introduce witnesses, to prove and sustain the allegations therein made; but the court refused to hear any evidence in support of the said motion, and thereupon overruled the same, without investigating into the truth or falsity of the allegations of said motion,—to which action of the court the defendant then and there excepted."

It thus clearly appears by the record that the defendant, having duly and distinctly alleged, in his motion to quash, that all persons of the African race were excluded, because of their race and color, from the grand jury which found the indictment, asked leave of the court to introduce witnesses, and offered to introduce witnesses, to prove and sustain that allegation; and that the court refused to hear any evidence upon the subject, and overruled the motion, without investigating whether the allegation was true or false.

[449] The defendant having offered to introduce witnesses to prove the allegations in the motion to quash, and the court having declined to hear any evidence upon the subject, it is quite clear that the omission of the bill of exceptions to give the names of the witnesses whom the defendant proposed or intended to call, or to state their testimony in detail, cannot deprive the defendant of the benefit of his exception to the refusal of the court to hear any evidence whatever. And the assumption, in the final opinion of the state court, that no evidence was tendered by the defendant in support of the allegations in the motion to quash, is plainly disproved by the statements, in the bill of exceptions, of what took place in the trial court.

The necessary conclusion is that the defendant has been denied a right duly set up and claimed by him under the Constitution and laws of the United States; and therefore the judgment is reversed, and the case is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

GREAT SOUTHERN FIRE PROOF HOTEL COMPANY, Petitioner,

v.

BENJAMIN F. JONES et al. and Sosman & Landis.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 449-458.)

Federal courts—diverse citizenship—limited partnership as a citizen.

1. A limited-partnership association created under Pa. Laws 1874, p. 271, although it may be called a quasi-corporation and is declared by the state statute to be a citizen of the state, is not, like a corporation created under the laws of the state, to be deemed a citizen of that state, within the meaning of the clause of the Federal Constitution which extends the judicial powers of the United States to controversies between citizens of different states.
2. The citizenship of the individual members of a limited partnership association created by the laws of Pennsylvania must be alleged in a suit by that association in a Federal court, where jurisdiction depends upon diverse citizenship of the parties.

[No. 210.]

Argued March 21, 22, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a decision reversing a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States dismissing the bill. Reversed.

See same case below, 58 U. S. App. 397, 86 Fed. Rep. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John E. Sater and D. F. Pugh argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner.

Mr. Talfourd P. Linn argued the cause and, with Messrs. Outhwaite, Linn & Thurman, and Mr. John D. McKennan, filed a brief for respondents.

Mr. Louis G. Addison argued the cause and, with Mr. George K. Nash, filed a brief for respondents Sosman & Landis.

Mr. Justice Harlan* delivered the opinion [450] of the court:

The bill in this suit, commenced in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio, eastern division, describes the plaintiffs Benjamin F. Jones, NOTE.—As to diverse citizenship as ground for Federal jurisdiction—see notes to Roberts v. Lewis, 36 L. ed. U. S. 579; Seddon v. Virginia, T. & C. Steel & Iron Co. (C. C. W. D. Va.) 1 L. R. A. 108; Myers v. Murray, N. & Co. (C. C. S. D. Iowa) 11 L. R. A. 216; Shipp v. Williams, 10 C. C. A. 249; Mason v. Dullagham, 27 C. C. A. 298.

George M. Laughlins, Henry A. Laughlins, Jr., and Benjamin F. Jones, Jr., as "members of the limited partnership association doing business under the firm name and style of Jones & Laughlins, Limited, which said association is a limited partnership association organized under an act of the general assembly of Pennsylvania, approved June 23d [2d], 1874, entitled 'An Act Authorizing the Formation of Partnership Associations in Which the Capital Subscribed Shall Alone be Responsible for the Debts of the Association, except under Certain Circumstances,'" and who "Have Their Office and Principal Place of Business in the City of Pittsburgh," and which association is "a Citizen of the State of Pennsylvania." Pa. Laws 1874, p. 271.

The defendant first named in the bill is the Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Company, a corporation of the state of Ohio; and some of the defendants are corporations and citizens of states other than the state of Pennsylvania.

The remaining defendants are thus described in the bill:

"Taylor, Beall, & Company is a partnership doing business in *the city of Columbus and state of Ohio, the individual partners thereof being William D. Taylor, James P. Beall, and William J. Keever."

"Sturgeon, Ford, & Company is a partnership doing business in the city of Columbus and state of Ohio, the individual partners thereof being unknown to your orators."

"Meacham & Wright is a partnership doing business in the city of Columbus and state of Ohio, the individual partners thereof being Floras D. Meacham and Frank S. Wright."

"Sosman & Landis is a partnership of Chicago, Illinois, doing business in the state of Ohio, the names of the individual partners thereof being unknown to your orators."

"Dundon & Bergin is a partnership doing business in the city of Columbus, state of Ohio, the individual partners thereof being Thomas J. Dundon and Matthew J. Bergin."

"H. C. Johnson & Company is a partnership doing business in the state of Ohio, the names of the individual partners thereof being unknown to your orators."

"Schoedinger, Fearn, & Company is a partnership doing business in the state of Ohio, the individual partners thereof being F. O. Schoedinger, W. A. Fearn, and J. R. Dickson."

"L. Hiltgartner & Sons is a partnership doing business in the city of Columbus, state of Ohio, the names of the individual partners thereof being unknown to your orators."

The nature of the case made by the bill is as follows:

By written agreement between Jones & Laughlins, Limited, and W. J. McClain, dated December 13, 1894, the former agreed, upon certain terms, to furnish structural steel for use in the erection of the Great Southern Hotel at Columbus, for the construction of which McClain had previously contracted with the Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Company. Under the above contract Jones & Laughlins, Limited, shipped and furnished to McClain structural steel of the value of $43,296.74. All of that sum was paid by McClain except $11,410.02, which was due to the plaintiffs with interest from January 23, 1896.

On the 11th day of August, 1896, McClain executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors. And on the 21st day of April, 1896, within four months after the above materials *were delivered to McClain, Jones & Laughlins, Limited, filed with the recorder of Franklin county, Ohio, an affidavit containing an itemized statement of the amount and value of such materials. The object of the filing was to conform to the provisions of §§ 3184 (as amended April 13th, 1894, 91 Ohio Laws, 135), and 3185 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, both sections relating to mechanic's liens, and thereby obtain, in behalf of Jones & Laughlins, Limited, for the amount due them, a lien upon the hotel and the opera house connected with it, as well as upon the land on which they stood.

After stating that the defendants each claim to have some interest in the property in question as lienholders or otherwise, the exact nature and extent of which was unknown to the plaintiff, the relief asked was: 1. That the defendants be required to answer and fully set forth their respective interests in the property, and failing to do so that they be barred from asserting any claim thereto. 2. That a receiver be appointed to collect rents. 3. That the plaintiff's demand be declared a valid and subsisting lien on the property. 4. That all the liens be marshalled, the premises sold, and the proceeds distributed.

The Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Company demurred generally to the bill as insufficient.

The defendants Sosman & Landis filed their answer and cross bill, claiming a lien upon the property for a balance due under a contract made between them and McClain pursuant to which they furnished scenery, stage work, and fixtures for the improvements contemplated by the contract between McClain and the hotel company. To that cross bill a demurrer was also filed.

The cause was heard in the circuit court upon the demurrers, the only question argued being the constitutionality of the Ohio statute of April 13, 1894. That court sustained the demurrers, and dismissed the bill and cross bill upon the ground that the provisions of the mechanic's lien law of Ohio, under which the plaintiffs and cross plaintiffs proceeded, were unconstitutional. 79 Fed. Rep. 477.

Upon appeal to the circuit court of appeals the decree of *the circuit court was reversed—the former court holding that the statute of Ohio in question was not void. 58 U. S. App. 397, 86 Fed. Rep. 370, 30 C. C. A. 108. The hotel company then applied for and obtained this writ of certiorari.

The bill rests the jurisdiction of the circuit court upon the ground of the diverse citizenship of the parties. But was the case as presented by the record one of which the circuit court of the United States could take cognizance by reason of diversity of citizenship? When this question was suggested at the argument counsel responded that no objection had been urged to the jurisdiction of that court. But the failure of parties to urge objections of that character cannot relieve this court from the duty of ascertaining from the record whether the circuit court could properly take jurisdiction of this suit. In Mansfield, C. & L. M. R. Co. v. Swan, 111 U. S. 379, 382, 28 L. ed. 462, 463, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 510, 511, the court, after observing that the jurisdiction of a circuit court fails, unless the necessary citizenship affirmatively appears in the pleadings or elsewhere in the record (Grace v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 278, 283, 27 L. ed. 932, 934, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Robertson v. Coase, 97 U. S. 646, 24 L. ed. 1057), said: "The rule, springing from the nature and limits of the judicial power of the United States, is inflexible and without exception, which requires this court, of its own motion, to deny its own jurisdiction, and, in the exercise of its appellate power, that of all other courts of the United States, in all cases where such jurisdiction does not affirmatively appear in the record on which, in the exercise of that power, it is called to act. On every writ of error or appeal, the first and fundamental question is that of jurisdiction, first, of this court, and then of the court from which the record comes. This question the court is bound to ask and answer for itself, even when not otherwise suggested, and without respect to the relation of the parties to it. This rule was adopted in Capron v. Van Noorden, 2 Cranch, 126, 2 L. ed. 229, decided in 1804, where a judgment was reversed, on the application of the party against whom it had been rendered in the circuit court, for want of the allegation of his own citizenship, which he ought to have made to establish the jurisdiction which he invoked. This case [454] was cited with approval by Chief *Justice Marshall in Brown v. Keene, 8 Pet. 112, 8 L. ed. 885." These rules have been recognized and applied in numerous cases.†

We are of opinion that the plaintiff as a limited partnership association was not entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of the circuit court. It was not alleged to be, nor could it have alleged that it was, a corporation in virtue of the statute of Pennsylvania under which, according to the averments of the bill, it was organized. In Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. 404, 405, 15 L. ed. 451, 452, which was an action brought by citizens of Ohio in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Indiana, the declaration described the defendant as the "Lafayette Insurance Company, a citizen of the state of Indiana." This court said: "This averment is not sufficient to show jurisdiction. It does not appear from it that the Lafayette Insurance Company is a corporation; or if it be such, by the law of what state it was created. The averment that the company is a citizen of the state of Indiana can have no sensible meaning attached to it. This court does not hold that either a voluntary association of persons, or an association into a body politic, created by law, is a citizen of a state within the meaning of the Constitution. And, therefore, if the defective averment in the declaration had not been otherwise supplied, the suit must have been dismissed." The case of Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 677, 682, 32 L. ed. 800, 801, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426, 428, is decisive of the present question. That was an action in the circuit court of the United States by the United States Express Company. This court said: "On looking into the record we find no satisfactory showing as to the citizenship of the plaintiff. The allegation of the amended petition is, that the United States Express Company is a joint-stock company organized under a law of the state of New York, and is a citizen *of that state. [455] But the express company cannot be a citizen of New York, within the meaning of the statutes regulating jurisdiction, unless it be a corporation. The allegation that the company was organized under the laws of New York is not an allegation that it is a corporation. In fact, the allegation is, that the company is not a corporation, but a joint-stock company—that is, a mere partnership. And although it may be authorized by the laws of the state of New York to bring suit in the name of its president, that fact cannot give the company power, by that name, to sue in a Federal court. The company may have been organized under the laws of the state of New York, and may be doing business in that state, and yet all the members of it may not be citizens of that state. The record does not show the citizenship of Barney or of any of the members of the company. They are not shown to be citizens of some state other than Illinois. Grace v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 109 U. S. 278, 283, 27 L. ed. 932, 934, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, and authorities there cited. For these reasons we are of opinion that the record does not show a case of which the circuit court could take jurisdiction."

The case of United States Exp. Co. v. Kountze Bros. 8 Wall. 342, 351, 19 L. ed. 457, 460, to which attention is called by a supplementary brief, does not announce a different rule. The declaration in that case, singularly enough, described the defendant company as a "foreign corporation, formed under and created by the laws of the state of New York." Looking at the allegations of the pleadings, and there being no evidence to the contrary, this court held that the averment as to the citizenship of the defendant was sufficient, observing "It is alleged that the United States Express Company, the defendant in the suit, is a foreign corporation formed under and created by the laws of the state of New York. The obvious meaning of this allegation is that the defendant is a citizen of the state of New York."

†Hancock v. Holbrook, 112 U. S. 229, 231, 28 L. ed. 714, 715, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 115; Thayer v. Life Asso. of America, 112 U. S. 717, 720, 28 L. ed. 864, 865, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355; Ayers v. Watson, 113 U. S. 594, 598, 28 L. ed. 1093, 1094, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641; King Bridge Co. v. Otoc County, 120 U. S. 225, 226, 30 L. ed. 623, 624, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 552; Metcalf v. Watertown, 128 U. S. 586, 587, 32 L. ed. 543, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173; Morris v. Gilmer, 129 U. S. 315, 325, 32 L. ed. 690, 693, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289; Chapman v. Barney, 129 U. S. 677, 681, 32 L. ed. 800,

801, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Stevens v. Nichols, 130 U. S. 230, 32 L. ed. 914, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518; Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 571, 590, 33 L. ed. 462, 468, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 196; Parker v. Ormsby, 141 U. S. 81, 83, 35 L. ed. 654, 655, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912; Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 673, 689, 38 L. ed. 311, 317, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Mattingly v. Northwestern Virginia R. Co. 158 U. S. 53, 57, 39 L. ed. 894, 895, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 725; Powers v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 169 U. S. 92, 98, 42 L. ed. 672, 675, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264.

[456] It has been suggested that the plaintiffs are entitled to sue, and may be sued, by their association name. 1 Brightly's Purdon's Digest, Pa. (12th ed.) 1088, title Joint Stock Companies, § 16. But the capacity to sue and be sued by the name of the association does not make the plaintiffs a corporation within the rule that a suit by or against a corporation in its corporate name in a court of the United States is conclusively presumed to be one by or against citizens of the state creating the corporation. Louisville, C. & C. R. Co. v. Letson, 2 How. 497, 11 L. ed. 353; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Wheeler, 1 Black, 286, 17 L. ed. 130; National S. S. Co. v. Tugman, 106 U. S. 118, 120, 27 L. ed. 87, 88, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58. The rule that for purposes of jurisdiction and within the meaning of the clause of the Constitution extending the judicial powers of the United States to controversies between citizens of different states, a corporation was to be deemed a citizen of the state creating it, has been so long recognized and applied that it is not now to be questioned. No such rule, however, has been applied to partnership associations although such associations may have some of the characteristics of a corporation. When the question relates to the jurisdiction of a circuit court of the United States as resting on the diverse citizenship of the parties we must look in the case of a suit by or against a partnership association to the citizenship of the several persons composing such association.

Nor can we accede to the suggestion that this question of jurisdiction is affected by the clause of the Constitution of Pennsylvania providing that the term "corporations," as used in article XVI. of that instrument, "shall be construed to include all joint-stock companies or associations having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships." Pa. Const. art. XVI. § 13. The only effect of that clause is to place the joint-stock companies or associations referred to under the restrictions imposed by that article upon corporations; and not to invest them with all the attributes of corporations.

We have not been referred to any case in the supreme court of Pennsylvania which distinctly places limited partnership associations, created under the statutes of that state, on the basis of corporations. "Such an association," that court said in Oak Ridge Coal Co. v. Rogers, 108 Pa. 147, 150, "is not technically a corporation. Yet it has many of the characteristics of one," and "it may not be improper to call such an association a quasi-corporation." In Hill v. Stetler, 127 Pa. 145, 161, 13 Atl. 306, 17 Atl. 887, referring to the act of June 2, 1874, the court said that it provided for the *crea- [457] tion of "a new artificial person to be called a joint-stock association, having some of the characteristics of a partnership and some of a corporation."
177 U. S.

In Carter v. Producers' Oil Co. 182 Pa. 551, 573, 574, 38 Atl. 571, 576, which involved the validity of a rule adopted by a limited partnership association organized under the Pennsylvania statute of June 2, 1874, and its supplements, and which rule prohibited any person who acquired the capital stock of a member from exercising the privileges of a member, unless he was elected as such, the court said: "We cannot assent to the plaintiff's claim that the defendant company is a corporation and restricted, in the adoption of by-laws, rules, and regulations for its government, to such as it is within the power of the latter to prescribe. It may be conceded that the defendant company has some of the qualities of a corporation, but it is, nevertheless, a partnership association, governed by the statutes and articles under which it was organized, and the rules and regulations it may prescribe in execution of the power with which the statutes have invested it."

That a limited partnership association created under the Pennsylvania statute may be described as a "quasi corporation," having some of the characteristics of a corporation, or as a "new artificial person," is not a sufficient reason for regarding it as a corporation within the jurisdictional rule heretofore adverted to. That rule must not be extended. We are unwilling to extend it so as to embrace partnership associations.

We have not overlooked the case of Andrews Bros. Co. v. Youngstown Coke Co. 58 U. S. App. 444, 86 Fed. Rep. 585, 30 C. C. A. 293, in which the circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, speaking by Judge Lurton, held that limited partnership associations organized under the Pennsylvania statute were corporations within the jurisdictional requirement of diverse citizenship. For the reasons stated, we are unable to concur in the view taken by that court.

We therefore adjudge that as the bill does not make a case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, it was necessary to set out the citizenship of the individual members of the partnership association of Jones & Laughlins, Limited, which brought this suit.

*Another question as to jurisdiction arises [458] on the record. The citizenship of the members of the several partnerships that are named as defendants does not appear from the pleadings or otherwise. An allegation as to the state in which those firms were doing business is not sufficient to show the citizenship of the individual partners. The relief sought is the marshaling of all the lien debts on the hotel and the opera house of the Great Southern Fire Proof Hotel Company, the sale of the property, and the distribution of the proceeds among the parties according to their respective rights. As no allusion was made to this latter at the argument before us, we do not now express any opinion upon the question whether the citizenship of the individuals composing the defendant partnerships doing business in Ohio is material to the jurisdiction of the circuit court. We leave that to be determined by the court below, if an application be made to amend the pleadings as to the citizenship of the parties.
845

Without considering the merits of the case, we are constrained to reverse the judgments of the circuit court of appeals and of the circuit court, and remand the cause for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Under the circumstances, the plaintiffs should be allowed, upon application, to amend the bill upon the subject of the citizenship of the parties. If the amendment shows a case within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, the parties should be permitted to proceed to a final hearing; otherwise, the bill should be dismissed at the plaintiffs' costs without prejudice to another suit in a court of competent jurisdiction.

Reversed.

[459]*JOHN T. BOSKE, Sheriff of Kenton County, Kentucky, Appt.,
v.

DAVID N. COMINGORE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 459-470.)

Appeal—Federal question—use of papers in custody of internal revenue collector—order by state court for their production—validity of Treasury regulations prohibiting it—protection of collector—habeas corpus to release him from custody of state court.

1. The question whether or not the Constitution of the United States allows regulations of the Treasury Department adopted by merely executive officers to be regarded as having the force of law is one that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, within the meaning of the provision of the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, with respect to appeals to be taken from the district or circuit courts direct to the Supreme Court of the United States.
2. The detention in prison by state authorities, of an officer of the revenue service of NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal courts on habeas corpus—see Re Huse, 25 C. C. A. 1, and note.

As to jurisdiction of United States courts to issue writs of habeas corpus—see note to Re Rehnitz (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 236.

As to power of Federal courts to issue writ of habeas corpus—see note to Tinsley v. Anderson, 43 L. ed. U. S. 92.

As to when habeas corpus will be issued—see notes to United States v. Hamilton, 1 L. ed. U. S. 490; Cortes v. Jacobus, 34 L. ed. U. S. 464; Pearce v. Texas, 39 L. ed. U. S. 164.

the United States, whose presence at his post of duty is important to the public interests, presents such a case of urgency as will warrant the interference by writ of habeas corpus from a Federal court, even before final action by the state court, to determine whether or not the imprisonment is in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States.

3. Regulations of the Treasury Department prohibiting a collector of internal revenue from producing records in his office, or copies thereof, in a state court, are within the power conferred upon the Secretary of the Treasury by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 161; and therefore an attempt of a state court to punish him for obeying such regulations will be in violation of his rights under the Constitution and laws of the United States, against which he will be protected by the Federal courts.

[No. 370.]

Submitted January 8, 1900. Decided April 9, 1900.

APPEAL from final order of the District Court of the United States for the District of Kentucky discharging an internal revenue collector from the custody of a sheriff. Affirmed.

See same case below, 96 Fed. Rep. 552.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John G. Carlisle, Henry M. Winslow and William S. Taylor submitted the cause for appellant. Messrs. Russell & Winslow and Winslow & Winslow were with them on the brief.

A habeas corpus proceeding is not proper to determine a question like the one arising in this case.

Hirsch v. Pomerooy, 57 U. S. App. 165, 87 Fed. Rep. 1005, 31 C. C. A. 350; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 13, 25 L. ed. 538; Ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheat. 38, 5 L. ed. 391; Ex parte Watkins, 3 Pet. 193, 7 L. ed. 650; Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 18 L. ed. 281. See also Ex parte Crouch, 112 U. S. 178, 28 L. ed. 690, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96, and cases cited.

An internal revenue collector is not justified in refusing to produce, in obedience to a subpoena duces tecum issued by a state court, the application or return made by the person who desires to pay the tax imposed by the statutes of the United States upon persons engaged in the retail liquor business, either by the nature of such documents or by alleged instructions from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue not to produce such papers for use in evidence in the state courts.

Re Hirsch, 74 Fed. Rep. 928.

The regulations of the department cannot have the effect of amending the law. They may aid in carrying the law as it exists into execution, but they cannot change its positive provisions.

United States v. Two Hundred Barrels of Whiskey, 95 U. S. 571, 24 L. ed. 491.

Messrs. Henry M. Winslow, Clifton J. Pratt, and Winslow & Winslow filed a reply brief for appellant.

Assistant Attorney General Boyd submitted the cause for appellee:

Regulations made by the Secretary of the 177 U. S.

Treasury under § 251 of the Revised Statutes, not inconsistent with law, and fairly within its scope and purpose, and not infringing upon any existing legal rights of individuals have the force of law.

United States v. Hutton, 10 Ben. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 15,433; 15 Ops. Atty. Gen. 128.

Regulations made by the Commissioner, pursuant to the statutory authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in respect to the assessment and collection of internal taxes, have the force of statutes.

Re Huttman, 70 Fed. Rep. 699; Re Weeks, 82 Fed. Rep. 729; Gratiot v. United States, 4 How. 80, 11 L. ed. 884; Ex parte Reed, 100 U. S. 13, 25 L. ed. 538; United States v. Barrows, 1 Abb. U. S. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 14,529; United States v. Eliason, 13 Pet. 291, 10 L. ed. 968.

The Federal government cannot dictate as to evidence in state courts, but it cannot be required to provide evidence for them; and the state has no right to Federal instruments of purely Federal character for proof, unless they are left within its reach, and these are not, but are put without that reach.

Re Weeks, 82 Fed. Rep. 732.

[460] *Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a final order of the district court of the United States for the district of Kentucky discharging appellee, United States internal revenue collector for the sixth collection district in Kentucky, from the custody of the appellant as sheriff of Kenton county in that commonwealth.

The discharge was upon the ground that the imprisonment and detention of the appellee were in violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States. That ruling presents the only question to be considered.

Under date of April 15, 1898, the Commissioners of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, promulgated certain regulations for the government of collectors of internal revenue, as follows:

"All records in the offices of collectors of internal revenue or of any of their deputies are in their custody and control for purposes relating to the collection of the revenues of the United States only. They have no control of them and no discretion with regard to permitting the use of them for any other purpose. Collectors are hereby pro-[461]hibited from giving out any special tax *records or any copies thereof to private persons or to local officers, or to produce such records or copies thereof in a state court, whether in answer to subpœnas duces tecum or otherwise. Whenever such subpœnas shall have been served upon them, they will appear in court in answer thereto and respectfully decline to produce the records called for, on the ground of being prohibited therefrom by the regulations of this department. The information contained in the records relating to special-tax payers in the collector's office is furnished by these persons under compulsion of law for the purpose of raising revenue for the United States; and there is no provision of law authorizing the sending out of these records or of any copies thereof for use against the special-tax payers in cases not arising under the laws of the United States. The giving out of such records or any copies thereof by a collector in such cases is held to be contrary to public policy, and not to be permitted. As to any other records than those relating to special-tax payers, collectors are also forbidden to furnish them or any copies thereof at the request of any person. Where copies thereof are desired for the use of parties to a suit, whether in a state court or in a court of the United States, collectors should refer the persons interested to the following paragraph in rule X of the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department, namely: In all cases where copies of documents or records are desired by or on behalf of parties to a suit, whether in a court of the United States or any other, such copies shall be furnished to the court only, and on a rule of the court upon the Secretary of the Treasury requesting the same. Whenever such rule of the court shall have been obtained collectors are directed to carefully prepare a copy of the record or document containing the information called for and send it to this office, whereupon it will be transmitted to the Secretary of the Treasury with a request for its authentication, under the seal of the department, and transmission to the judge of the court calling for it, unless it should be found that circumstances or conditions exist which makes it necessary to decline, in the interest of the public service, to furnish such a copy."

These Treasury regulations being in force, a proceeding was *instituted in the county [462] court of Carroll county, Kentucky—a court of limited jurisdiction—in the name of the commonwealth against Elias Block & Sons, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount and value of a large amount of whisky which, it was alleged, the defendants had in their bonded warehouses for a named period, but had not listed for taxation, and of enforcing the assessment and payment of state and county taxes thereon. Ky. Stat. § 4241.

In the progress of that proceeding the commonwealth of Kentucky, represented by the auditor's agent, took the deposition of Comingore, collector of internal revenue. In answer to questions propounded to him, the collector stated that Block & Sons, owners of a distillery, made monthly reports to his office of liquors manufactured by them and deposited in the bonded warehouses on the distillery premises from 1887 on; that the defendants made application from time to time for permission to withdraw liquors from bond; and that such reports, commencing October 1, 1885, and ending July 1, 1897, were on the files of his office, but not under his control except as collector. He was then asked to file copies of those reports and make them part of his deposition. This he declined to do, "under § 3167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the rulings of the department." That section reads: "§ 3167. If any collector or deputy collector, or any inspector or other officer acting under the authority of any revenue law of the United States, divulges to any party, or makes known in any other manner than may be provided by law, the operations, style of work, or apparatus of a manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, he shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding one thousand dollars, or to be imprisoned for not exceeding one year, or to both, at the discretion of the court, and shall be dismissed from office, and be forever thereafter incapable of holding any office under the government." Being asked what rulings of the department he referred to other than § 3167 of the Revised Statutes, he said: "The department does not permit the giving out of anything contained in internal revenue returns or documents by a collector, storekeeper, or any other officer of a collection [463] district *for purposes other than those which the statutes of the United States contemplate." That ruling, he said, was made by the Secretary of the Treasury through the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

In consequence of the refusal of the collector to file and make part of his deposition copies of the above reports of the defendants, the notary public before whom his deposition was taken adjudged him to be in contempt, and ordered him to pay to the commonwealth a fine of $5, and to be confined in the county jail for six hours, or until he was willing to furnish the copies called for, or permit access to the records of his office in order that information might be obtained to be used as evidence in the above case.

The matter having been reported by the notary public to the Carroll county court, as required by § 538 of the Kentucky Civil Code of Practice, that court made the following order:

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff's motions be sustained, and that plaintiff is entitled to use as evidence the facts stated in the reports and papers filed by any or all of the defendants in the office of the collector of internal revenue for the sixth district of Kentucky and also such facts as are stated in the reports made to said office by certain officers known as 'United States storekeepers,' and any other similar records, papers, documents, or exemplifications in said office tending to show the amount of liquor on hand at the distillery of the defendants on the 15th day of September, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, and on the 15th day of November, 1892; it is further ordered that the witness, D. N. Comingore, make or cause to be made or permit the plaintiff, its agent or attorneys, to make true copies of such of said papers as the plaintiff or its attorneys may demand, and that said Comingore, as collector, attest the same and attach his seal of office thereto, if he has such seal, and that he permit the plaintiff or its agents or attorneys to compare said copies with the originals and verify the same, and that he shall also testify further in regard to same, if demand be made, and leave is hereby given to complete the taking of said deposition on giving proper notice, and *for this [464] purpose the clerk is directed upon request of plaintiff's attorneys to transmit said deposition as now on file to W. A. Price, notary public, Covington, Ky. It is further adjudged that the action of the notary public, W. A. Price, in adjudging the witness, D. N. Comingore, to be in contempt for failure to file copies of reports, papers, documents, and exemplifications or to testify as to their contents, as requested, be sustained and affirmed, and that the commonwealth of Kentucky recover of said D. N. Comingore the sum of $5 as a fine, and that he be taken by the sheriff of Kenton county, Ky., and confined in the jail of said county for the space of six hours, or until he signifies his willingness to comply with the request made in the deposition attempted to be taken, as follows: 'Please file official copies of the reports made to your office by Block & Son as to the amount of liquor which they manufactured and deposited in the bonded warehouses located on their distillery premises from the year 1887 down to the present time and also official copies of applications made by them to your office during said time for permission to withdraw such liquors from bond.' Also with the following request: 'Please file official copies of such reports of the United States storekeepers as show the liquors on hand at the warehouses on the distillery premises of the defendants in Carroll county on September 15, 1890, September 15, 1891, November 15, 1892, September 15, 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896.'"

This action of the county court having been brought to the attention of the collector, he still refused to give the copies called for or to allow access to or inspection of the records of his office for the purposes indicated by the questions propounded to him. He was thereupon again held by the notary public to be in contempt, and the petition states, that officer adjudged that "the commonwealth of Kentucky recover of your petitioner the sum of $5 as a fine, and that he be taken by the sheriff or some constable of Kenton county, and confined in the jail of said county for the space of six hours, or until he shall signify his willingness to purge himself of the said contempt and testify and give the information from the records and documents under his control and in his custody as collector *of internal reve-

[465] nue of the United States for the sixth district of Kentucky, or allow an inspection of his records for the purpose of obtaining such information for use as evidence in said action of The Commonwealth of Kentucky v. Block et al. in said county court," etc.

Having been taken into custody by the sheriff under this order, the collector sued out a writ of habeas corpus, and was discharged from custody by the order of the United States district court for the Kentucky district.

1. In the brief of the Assistant Attorney General some doubt is expressed whether we can take cognizance of this case upon appeal from the district court. Prior to the passage of the act of March 3, 1891, establishing the circuit court of appeals, an appeal from the final judgment of a district court on an application for a writ of habeas corpus by or on behalf of one alleged to be restrained of his liberty in violation of the Constitution or any law of the United States went first to the circuit court. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 763. But by the above act of 1891 it was provided that appeals or writs of error may be taken from the district courts or from the circuit courts direct to this court in certain cases, among others, "in any case that involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States." 26 Stat. at L. 826, 828, chap. 517, § 5. The present case belongs to that class. The appellee, who was discharged upon habeas corpus, invoked the protection of the Constitution against his being restrained of his liberty by the appellant resting under an order of commitment issued by an inferior state court; and the judgment of the district court proceeded upon the ground that the proceedings against him were inconsistent with the laws of the United States and with regulations of the Treasury Department legally prescribed under those laws. Throughout, the contention of the appellant has been that the Constitution forbade the giving of the force of law to those regulations adopted by merely executive officers. We think the case is properly here on appeal as one involving the construction and application of the Constitution of the United States.

[466] 2. Of the power of the district court to discharge the appellee *if he was held in custody in violation of the Constitution of the United States, no doubt can be entertained. It is true that in Ex parte Royall, 117 U. S. 241, 251, 29 L. ed. 868, 871, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 734, it was said that, although a court of the United States had power to discharge one held in custody by state authorities in violation of the Constitution of the United States, it was not bound to interpose immediately upon application being made for the writ, but should exercise the discretion with which it was invested "in the light of the relations existing, under our system of government, between the judicial tribunals of the Union and of the states, and in recognition of the fact that the public good requires that those relations be not disturbed by unnecessary conflict between courts equally bound to guard and protect rights secured by the Constitution." Hence, the general rule that the courts of the United States should not interfere by habeas corpus with the custody by state authorities of one claiming to be held in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States, until after final action by the state courts in the case in which such custody exists. Ex parte Royall, above cited; New York v. Eno, 155 U. S. 89, 39 L. ed. 80, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30, and authorities there cited; Whitten v. Tom- linson, 160 U. S. 231, 40 L. ed. 406, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 297, and authorities there cited. But to this general rule there are exceptions which are thus indicated in Ex parte Royall: "When the petitioner is in custody by state authority for an act done or omitted to be done in pursuance of a law of the United States, or of an order, process, or decree of a court or judge thereof; or where, being a subject or citizen of a foreign state, and domiciled therein, he is in custody, under like authority, for an act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, privilege, protection, or exemption claimed under the commission, or order, or sanction of any foreign state, or under color thereof, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations; in such and like cases of urgency, involving the authority and operations of the general government, or the obligations of this country to, or its relations with, foreign nations, the courts of the United States have frequently interposed by writs of habeas corpus and discharged prisoners who were held in custody under state authority."

The present case was one of urgency, in that the appellee was an *officer in the revenue service of the United States whose presence at his post of duty was important to the public interests, and whose detention in prison by the state authorities might have interfered with the regular and orderly course of the business of the department to which he belonged. The district court therefore did not err in determining the question of constitutional law raised by the application for a writ of habeas corpus, and rendering final judgment.

3. We come, then, to inquire whether the imprisonment of the appellee was in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States. This question was fully examined in the elaborate and able opinion of Judge Evans of the district court. 96 Fed. Rep. 552.

The commitment of the appellee was because of a refusal to file with his deposition copies of certain reports made to him by Block & Sons, distillers, of liquors manufactured by them and deposited in the bonded warehouses on the distillery premises during a specified period. Manifestly, he could not have filed the copies called for without violating regulations formally promulgated by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. If these regulations were such as the Secretary could legally prescribe, then, it must be conceded, the state authorities were without jurisdiction to compel the collector to violate them.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is an officer in the department of the Treasury. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 319. And the Secretary of the Treasury, as the head of an executive department of the government, was authorized "to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of his department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it." U. S. Rev. Stat. § 161.

[468] Now the reports or copies of reports in the possession of the collector—for not producing copies of which he was adjudged to be imprisoned—were records and papers appertaining to the business of the Treasury Department and belonging to the United States. The Secretary was authorized by statute to "make regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the custody, use, and preservation of such records, papers, and property. The Constitution gives Congress power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers vested by that instrument in the government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof. Const. art. 1, § 8. That power was exerted by Congress when it authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to provide by regulations not inconsistent with law for the government of his department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it. The regulations in question may not have been absolutely or indispensably necessary to accomplish the objects indicated by the statute. But that is not the test to be applied when we are determining whether an act of Congress transcends the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution. Congress has a large discretion as to the means to be employed in the execution of a power conferred upon it, and is not restricted to "those alone without which the power would be nugatory;" for, "all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted" to the end authorized to be attained, "which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional." "Where the law is not prohibited, and is really calculated to effect any of the objects intrusted to the government, to undertake here to inquire into the degree of its necessity would be to pass the line which circumscribes the judicial department and to tread on legislative ground." McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 415, 421, 423, 4 L. ed. 579, 603, 605. In the more recent case of Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 283, 293, 36 L. ed. 429, 435, 439, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, 622, 626, this court, referring to the above constitutional provision, said that, "in the exercise of this general power of legislation, Congress may use any means, appearing to it most eligible and appropriate, which are adapted to the end to be accomplished, and are consistent with the letter and the spirit of the Constitution." Again: "Every right created by, arising under, or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States may be protected and enforced by Congress by such means and in such manner as Congress, in [469] *the exercise of the correlative duty of protection, or of the legislative powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, may in its discretion deem most eligible and best adapted to attain the object."

Can it be said that to invest the Secretary of the Treasury with authority to prescribe regulations not inconsistent with law for the conduct of the business of his department, and to provide for the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it, was not a means appropriate and plainly adapted to the successful administration of the affairs of that department? Manifestly not. The bare statement of the proposition suggests this conclusion, and extended argument to support it is unnecessary.

This brings us to the question whether it was inconsistent with law for the Secretary to adopt a regulation declaring that all records in the offices of collectors of internal revenue, or any of their deputies, are in their custody and control "for purposes relating to the collection of the revenues of the United States only," and that collectors "have no control of them, and no discretion with regard to permitting the use of them for any other purpose."

There is certainly no statute which expressly or by necessary implication forbade the adoption of such a regulation. This being the case, we do not perceive upon what ground the regulation in question can be regarded as inconsistent with law, unless it be that the records and papers in the office of a collector of internal revenue are at all times open of right to inspection and examination by the public despite the wishes of the department. That cannot be admitted. The papers in question, copies of which were sought from the appellee, were the property of the United States, and were in his official custody under a regulation forbidding him to permit their use except for purposes relating to the collection of the revenues of the United States. Reasons of public policy may well have suggested the necessity, in the interest of the government, of not allowing access to the records in the offices of collectors of internal revenue, except as might be directed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The interests of persons compelled, under the revenue *laws, to furnish information as [470] to their private business affairs would often be seriously affected if the disclosures so made were not properly guarded. Besides, great confusion might arise in the business of the department if the Secretary allowed the use of records and papers in the custody of collectors to depend upon the discretion or judgment of subordinates. At any rate, the Secretary deemed the regulation in question a wise and proper one, and we cannot perceive that his action was beyond the authority conferred upon him by Congress. In determining whether the regulations promulgated by him are consistent with law, we must apply the rule of decision which controls when an act of Congress is assailed as not being within the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution; that is to say, a regulation adopted under § 161 of the Revised Statutes should not be disregarded or annulled unless, in the judgment of the court, it is plainly and palpably inconsistent with law. Those who insist that such a regulation is invalid must make its invalidity so manifest that the court has no choice except to hold that the Secretary has exceeded his authority and employed means that are not at all appropriate to the end specified in the act of Congress.

In our opinion the Secretary, under the regulations as to the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to the business of his department, may take from a subordinate, such as a collector, all discretion as to permitting the records in his custody to be used for any other purpose than the collection of the revenue, and reserve for his own determination all matters of that character.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

[471] *THOMAS M. ADAMS and E. C. Means, Administrators, with the Will Annexed, of Thomas W. Means, Petitioners,
v.

BENJAMIN R. COWEN, Evan F. Williams, and A. S. Frazer, Trustees.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 471-485.)

Wills—construction of—advancement as a gift—receipt for legacy without consideration.

1. Moneys advanced by testator to a son during his lifetime and after the will was made, whatever the amount, and whether charged on his books or not, cannot be deducted from the share of such son under a will reciting that he has made advances to children, which are charged to them on his books, and may make further advances which may be charged on his books to their respective accounts, and that he desires that equal provision made for each shall be in addition to the "advances made or that may hereafter be made," and that "said advances made and that may hereafter be made be treated, not as advances, but as gifts, not in any manner to be accounted for."
2. A receipt acknowledging payment of a legacy which is not paid, except by the cancellation of an alleged debt of the legatee to the testator for advances which, by the will, were to be treated as a gift to the son, will not be upheld when it was obtained by the representatives of the estate, who were in a fiduciary relation to the legatee, and who insisted that he was morally, if not legally, bound to execute the release, thereby securing it from him, when he was by business reverses broken in spirit and wavering in his purposes.

NOTE.—That the intention of the testator is to govern in the interpretation of wills—see notes to Dougherty v. Rogers (Ind.) 3 L. R. A. 847; Boston Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Coffin (Mass.) 8 L. R. A. 740; Davidson v. Coon (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 584; Masterson v. Townshend (N. Y.) 10 L. R. A. 816; Pray v. Belt, 7 L. ed. U. S. 309.

As to doctrine of advancements; distinguished from gift; intention; effect on legacy—see Jaques v. Swasey (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 566, and note.

As to effect and conclusiveness of receipts—see note to Baker v. Nachtrieb, 15 L. ed. U. S. 528.

177 U. S.

[No. 113 of October Term, 1898.]

Argued January 9, 10, 1899. Affirmed by Divided Court May 22, 1899. [See Book 43, p. 1188.] Leave granted to file petition for rehearing May 22, 1899. Rehearing granted October 30, 1899. Reargued January 10, 11, 1900. Decided April 16, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit to review a decision reversing a decree of the Circuit Court dismissing a bill against administrators. Affirmed.

See same case below, 47 U. S. App. 676, 80 Fed. Rep. 448, 25 C. C. A. 547.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

*On November 16, 1891, the respondents, [472] trustees for the wife and children of William Means, filed their bill in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Kentucky against the petitioners as administrators (with the will annexed) of Thomas W. Means, deceased, and John Means, a son of said Thomas W. Means. The case passed to hearing in that court upon pleadings and proofs, and resulted in a decree, on July 31, 1895, in favor of the defendants, dismissing the bill. From such dismissal the plaintiffs appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, which court, on February 8, 1897, reversed the decree of dismissal, and entered a decree in favor of the plaintiffs. 47 U. S. App. 439, 78 Fed. Rep. 536, 24 C. C. A. 198, 47 U. S. App. 676, 80 Fed. Rep. 448, 25 C. C. A. 547. On May 24, 1897, a petition was filed in this court for a certiorari, which was allowed, and on December 6, 1897, the certiorari and return were duly filed. At the October term, 1898, of this court, after argument and on May 22, 1899, the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals was affirmed by a divided court. Thereafter, upon petition, a rehearing was ordered, and the case was argued at the present term before a full bench.

*The facts are these: Thomas W. Means, [473] a resident of Ashland, Kentucky, died there on June 8, 1890, leaving an estate consisting chiefly of personal property, which was appraised (including the notes of his son, William Means, for $136,035.75) at $752,302.44. He left four children, John Means, William Means, Margaret A. Means, and Mary A. Adams, and one grandson, Thomas M. Culbertson, the only child of a deceased daughter. Some ten years prior to his death, and on July 20, 1880, he made a will, in which, after provisions for the payment of his debts, funeral expenses, and expenses of administration, were these two items:

"Item 4. I give, devise, and bequeath all the residue and remainder of my estate, personal, real, and mixed, wherever situated or located, of which I shall die possessed, to be equally divided among my four children, John Means, William Means, Mary A. Adams, and Margaret A. Means, and my grandson, Thomas M. Culbertson (son and sole heir of my deceased daughter, Sarah Jane Culbertson), who shall be living at the time of my decease, and the issue of any child now living, and of said grandson, who may then have deceased, such issue taking the share to which such child or grandson would be entitled if living. But said share given, devised, and bequeathed to said grandson or his issue is to be held in trust as hereinafter provided, and to be subject to the provisions hereinafter contained as to said grandson's share.

"Item 5. I have made advances to my said children which are charged to them respectively on my books, and I may make further advances to them respectively, or to some of them, and to my said grandson, which may be charged on my books to their respective accounts. I desire the equal provision, herein made for said children, and the provision for said grandson, to be a provision for them respectively, in addition to said advances made and that may hereafter be made, and that in the division, distribution, and settlement of my said estate said advances made and that may hereafter be made, be treated, not as advancements, but as gifts not in any manner to be accounted for by my said children and grandson, or any of them, or the issue of any of them."

[474] *Thomas W. Means was a prosperous iron manufacturer, who had, as stated, accumulated in his lifetime a large estate. For many years he had been in the habit of letting his children have money. This he had been doing for at least twenty-five years before the making of the will. This money was not given to them in equal sums at regular or irregular intervals. In other words, he was not making a partial and equal distribution of his estate in advance of his death, but the money was paid to or for one or another of his children as occasion seemed to call for it. Accounts were entered with each of these children in his books, and the money thus paid to or for them was charged against them in these accounts, so that upon the face of the books they stood as debtors to him for the amounts so charged. The amounts thus charged were sometimes large. The accounts were often reduced by money or property returned to the father. So the father dealt separately with each child, letting him or her have money whenever in his judgment the interest of the child called for it. He was helping them in their business, paying their debts, and otherwise using his large properties for their benefit. At the same time the accounts were kept in his books in such a way as to indicate that he retained a claim against each child for the balance shown on such account. He made memoranda on his books, such as this at the head of John's account: "This account and the accounts of William Means and Mary A. Adams are not to be charged with interest when final settlement is made, or at any time. Thomas W. Means." With that as the relation between himself and children, Thomas W. Means made the will containing the two items above quoted. He was then seventy-seven years old. At the date of the will the accounts showed the following debt- or balances:

John	$79,214 36
William	58,409 54
Mrs. Adams	51,207 48
Margaret	39,120 78
Mrs. Culbertson	29,609 82

In 1888 a bank in Cincinnati, of which William was president, failed, a failure which brought financial ruin to William. To *relieve him from the embarrassment and[475] dangers which threatened by reason of such failure, a large sum of money was paid out by Thomas W. Means for William's benefit. The question presented in this case is whether the money thus paid out is to be held a part of William's share of his father's estate, or whether it is to be deducted from the estate and the division made of the balance between the five legatees.

Mr. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., argued the cause and, with Messrs. John F. Hager and Julius L. Anderson filed a brief for petitioners.

Messrs. Judson Harmon and John J. Glidden argued the cause and, with Mr. H. P. Whitaker, filed a brief for respondents.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion-[475] of the court:

The primary question is upon the construction of the fifth item of the will of Thomas W. Means. If there had been no such item of course all sums due from the children and grandchild to the father and grandfather would be part of the property of his estate and to be counted in determining the sum to be divided among the five in accordance with item 4. But item 5 evidently contemplated that some amounts were to be deducted from the gross sum of the decedent's property before a division was to be made. What were those deductions? What did the testator intend should be deducted? For, in the absence of some absolute and controlling rule of law to the contrary, the intentions of a testator, as deduced from the language of the will, construed in the light of the circumstances surrounding him at the date of its execution, always control as to the disposition of the estate. Without entering into any discussion we make these quotations from prior decisions of this court. In Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. 68, 8 L. ed. 322, it was said by Chief Justice Marshall:

"The first and great rule in the exposition of wills, to which all other rules must bend, is that the intention of the testator expressed in his will shall prevail, provided it be consistent with the rules of law. [Davis v. Stephens] 1 Dougl. 322; [Perrin v. Blake] 1 W. Bl. 672. This principle *is generally asserted in the construction of every testamentary disposition. It is emphatically the will of the person who makes it, and is defined to be 'the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death.' 2 Bl. Com. 499. These intentions are to be collected from his words and ought to be carried into effect if they be consistent with law. In the construction of ambiguous expressions, the situation of the parties may properly be taken into view. The ties which connect the testator with his legatees, the affection subsisting between them, the motives which may reasonably be supposed to operate with him and to influence him in the disposition of his property, are all entitled to consideration in expounding doubtful words and ascertaining the meaning in which the testator used them. . . . No rule is better settled than that the whole will is to be taken together, and is to be so construed as to give effect, if it be possible, to the whole. . . . Notwithstanding the reasonableness and good sense of this general rule, that the intention shall prevail, it has been sometimes disregarded. If the testator attempts to effect that which the law forbids, his will must yield to the rules of law. But courts have sometimes gone farther. The construction put upon words in one will has been supposed to furnish a rule for construing the same words in other wills; and thereby to furnish some settled and fixed rules of construction which ought to be respected. We cannot say that this principle ought to be totally disregarded; but it should never be carried so far as to defeat the plain intent, if that intent may be carried into execution without violating the rules of law. It has been said truly ([Gulliver v. Poyntz] 3 Wils. 141) 'that cases on wills may guide us to general rules of construction; but unless a case cited be in every respect directly in point, and agree in every circumstance, it will have little or no weight with the court, who always look upon the intention of the testator as the polar star to direct them in the construction of wills.'

And in Blake v. Hawkins, 98 U. S. 315, 324, 25 L. ed. 139, 141, Mr. Justice Strong used these words:

[477] "It is a common remark, that, when interpreting a will, the attending circumstances of the testator, such as the condition *of his family, and the amount and character of his property, may and ought to be taken into consideration. The interpreter may place himself in the position occupied by the testator when he made the will, and from that standpoint discover what was intended."

See also Clarke v. Boorman, 18 Wall. 493, 21 L. ed. 904; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 32 L. ed. 138, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1164; Lee v. Simpson, 134 U. S. 572, 33 L. ed. 1038, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 631.

In the light of these decisions we turn to inquire, What was the intention of the testator? Suppose that on the next day after making this will he had died, upon what basis would the distribution of his estate have been made? Obviously by first canceling all the gifts and advances made to his children, and then distributing the balance equally between the five. For he declares that the equal provision made by item 4 shall be in addition to his advances, "and that in the division, distribution, and settlement of my said estate said advances . . . be treated, not as advancements, but as gifts not in any manner to be accounted for by my said children and grandson, or any of them, or the issue of any of them." Language could not be more clear. Nothing could express the intent of the testator more forcibly than these words. Whatever he had done in the way of letting his children and grandson have money was to be taken as a matter of gift, for which none of the recipients was to account, and only his estate, less such gifts and advances, was to be equally distributed between the legatees named. And this intent, which is so clearly disclosed in respect to what he had already done, is equally clear in respect to what he might do thereafter. He says that he "may make further advances to them respectively, or to some of them," and declares that in the division, distribution, and settlement of his estate "said advances . . . that may hereafter be made, be treated, not as advancements, but as gifts." In other words, as he had used some of his property in the past again and again to help his children, he saw that it was likely in the future he might do the same thing, and declared, not only that every dollar he had let them have in the past, but also every dollar that he might let them have in the future, should be taken, "not as advancements, but as gifts." Not only that, but that such gifts should not be accounted for in any manner *by any of the recipients, and that only the balance of his estate, after all these personal gifts were canceled, should be distributed equally among the legatees. As in the past he had freely used his estate for the benefit of his children, so he announced his intention to deal as freely with it in the future, and to use any part of it in any way that he might deem best for the interests of any one of his children, and declared that such help given, or that might be given in the future, should not be made the basis of any accounting between his legatees. He knew he had a large estate, and that, whatever he might do with a fraction of it, there would be an abundance left for each of them—enough to place them beyond the reach of want. He had the large and generous paternal feeling; that feeling which prompts the parent to care as best he can during his lifetime for each of his children according to their respective wants, and he did not mean that anything he did for one child should be challenged by another. He doubtless recalled, as every parent does, that during infancy and childhood one child had called for more attention and care, more hours of toil and watch, than another. He realized that as they had grown to manhood and womanhood, and entered into their various places in life, there had been different calls for pecuniary assistance, and that doubtless there would be differences in the future. He knew that he had responded to every need of each child in its early days, was trying in the later days of manhood and womanhood to make like responses, and felt that while life should be prolonged to him he would be under the same pressure of affection to each. He believed that after he had done in his lifetime what in his judgment they severally required there would be an abundance of his estate left for distribution, and intended that all dealings between himself and each of his children should be wiped out—there should be a tabula rasa—and that what was left (and it would be a large estate) after having discharged to each one his paternal obligation, the untouched estate, should be distributed equally. We do not see how that purpose and thought of his could be expressed more clearly and forcibly than it was done in the fifth item of the will, and it would be a sad commentary on the wisdom of the law if that purpose was not recognized and enforced.

[479] *It is said that there is an expressed limitation on this generous purpose in that he describes the advances already made as “charged to them respectively on my books,” and that as to further advances they “may be charged on my books to their respective accounts,” and that in order that any subsequent advances should come within the scope of this provision they should be formally charged on his books “to their respective accounts.” We cannot believe that the generous purposes of the father were intended to be limited by the action of a bookkeeper. In the full possession of his faculties and watchful over his books he knew what entries had been made, and that they told the full story of his advances to his children, and so, not unnaturally, he referred to those books as evidence of those advances, but as to future advances he says only that they “may be charged on my books,” and surely he did not make the possibilities of such entries the measure of his generosity. He was seventy-seven years of age when this will was made. He could not foresee the length of days which might be allotted to him nor the possible failure of any of his faculties—and indeed before his death there was a failure of eyesight, and possibly, towards the last, of his mental powers. Of course, when he made this will he knew the possibility of these things, and it is inconsistent with the whole spirit of the will to suppose that he meant that his generosity should be determined and measured by the fidelity or forgetfulness of a mere clerk. No man acting in a spirit of generous affection ever contemplates that a stranger shall measure the scope and reach of such affection. It is a matter personal to himself, the beginning and ending of which, the scope and limits of which, he and he only is to determine.

With this understanding of the scope and purpose of this clause in the will, we pass to a consideration of what took place in respect to the advances for the benefit of his son William. At that time the father was feeling the weaknesses of old age, his eyesight was failing, and he had called his son John to act as his agent in the care of his estate. News of the disaster to the bank and the effect of its failure on the welfare of his son William came to the father, and John went to Cincinnati to investigate, came back [480] and reported the situation as he had *found it; told his father of the personal loans made to William by the bank, and that they were secured by collateral. We quote his testimony as to the conversation with his father:

Q. 832. What communication did you have with your father upon your return to Ashland?

A. I told him of William's debt to the bank—individual debt—and what it would probably amount to, and that friends here advised it was for William's interest that that debt, individual debt, should be paid. I told him that the securities which William had turned over to the bank as security on the debt would some of them probably be sacrificed at a sale here—that I thought we had better pay the debt.

Q. 833. What did he say?

A. He said that he was satisfied to do whatever I thought was best.

Q. 834. What else did he say about the matter other than to say to you that he was satisfied to do whatever you thought was best?

A. Well, I think I have answered it. I cannot repeat the conversation between us any more than the general result of it.

On the faith of this conversation John returned to Cincinnati, and having raised the needed money, paid off William's obligations to the bank and took up the collateral, whose face value was largely in excess of the indebtedness. That the collateral when properly utilized, as it apparently was, did not pay the amount of William's indebtedness to the bank, is immaterial, nor is it material that William gave a note for the amount of this advance, as well as other notes afterwards for like advances, and that such notes were entered on the books of the father in the account of “bills receivable.” It appears that this payment was not made at the request of William, but made upon consultation between the father and his son and agent, John, and made probably with the expectation that the collateral, if properly used, would pay the amount of the indebtedness.

And here it becomes important to consider the relations of John Means to his father. As the father grew old and his faculties began to fail he naturally called his oldest son John into his service, and John acted during the last years of his father's life as his agent, and it was really at John's suggestion *that the money was advanced for the benefit [481] of William. But in calling John to his service as agent and caretaker of his property there is nothing to indicate that the father meant that the son should do anything to prevent the full carrying out of the purpose expressed in his will. He had no express authority, and indeed no implied authority, to alter that instrument in which had long been recorded the settled determination of the father. So that whatever he may have done in caring for the property as the agent of his father during his lifetime is not to be taken, unless there are other circumstances to indicate the fact, as showing an intent on the part of the father to change in any way the scope and effect of the will.

And indeed it is but simple justice to John Means to say that from the evidence we are satisfied that there was no thought or intent on his part to change or limit his father's will. He did not intend by any strategy or device to thwart his father's purpose of kindness to any of his children, nor did he pursue the course he did in respect to this advance with the idea that he could satisfy his father's desire to help William and at the same time place the act of help outside the reach of item 5 of the will, and thus advance the pecuniary interest of himself and the other legatees not thus helped by his father. Very likely he was uncertain as to the construction which would be placed upon item 5; possibly thought that even if it meant exactly that which we are clear it does mean, there might be an impropriety at his father's age and feebleness in his advancing so much money for the benefit of a single child, and in order that the transaction, in case of his death before that of his father, might be clearly disclosed, took notes from William and entered them on his father's books under the head of "bills receivable." It appears from some of the testimony that there was also a thought of protecting William's share in the estate which by the death of the father might soon come to him, from attacks of creditors, and it may also be that partly on that account William executed the notes which were received for these moneys. At any rate, the correspondence between the brothers at the time of these transactions indicates that they were friendly, and that John was willingly doing that which he [482] thought the father desired in using a portion of the father's estate in helping William out of his troubles. But whatever John or William may have purposed or thought, the evidence does not indicate that the father intended that this held extended to William should stand in any different attitude to that which he had theretofore extended to others of his children, or meant that this advance should not come within the scope of the provisions in item 5; and that is the fundamental question in the case. It is the father's estate which is being distributed, and it is the duty of the courts to see that it is distributed according to his expressed intention.

The testimony in this case is voluminous, and there are many facts and circumstances disclosed in it throwing light on the questions which we have considered. We have deemed it unnecessary to refer to them in view of the very full and satisfactory opinion filed by the circuit court of appeals, in which these facts and circumstances are recited and considered at length, and which in the main meets our approval.

One further question remains for consideration: The father died June 8, 1890. The will was duly probated, and administrators with the will annexed were appointed and qualified. On October 16, 1890, William Means executed and delivered to these administrators the following receipt:

Ashland, Ky., October 16, 1890.

Received of Thomas M. Adams and E. C. 177 U. S.

Means, administrators with the will annexed of the estate of Thomas W. Means, deceased, the sum of one hundred and thirty-six thousand and thirty-five and 75-100 dollars, being a part of my distributable share as legatee under said will applied by them as ordered by me upon the following notes and claims owed by me to the estate of said decedent, and payable to his order, viz.:

[Here follows description of ten notes, with balance due on each, aggregating $136,035.75.]

This receipt is given in pursuance of settlement made October 6, 1890.

William Means.

Attest: John F. Hager.

A. E. Lampton.

*The validity of this receipt or release was [483] challenged by the respondents (plaintiffs in the circuit court), who claimed title to that portion of the estate of Thomas W. Means passing under the will to William Means by virtue of the following proceedings: At the May term, 1891, of the common pleas court of the county of Greene, state of Ohio, a decree was entered in a cause then pending in said court between William Means on the one side and on the other Martha E. C. Means, his wife, and their children, Gertrude E. Means and Pearl E. Means and Patti Means, a minor, by her next friend, her mother, which, after finding that in the lifetime of Thomas W. Means, for a good and valuable consideration, William Means made an agreement with his wife and children whereby he settled upon them, through trustees, for their maintenance and support, his interest in expectancy in the estate of his father, Thomas W. Means, transferred all such interest to the plaintiffs as trustees. This decree having been entered after personal service upon William Means, of course binds him both by its findings and order. How far the findings in such decree as to the agreement and the time at which it was made may affect the action of the administrators is a matter discussed in the briefs, but which we deem it unnecessary to consider.

Neither do we stop to consider the charge of fraudulent conduct on the part of the administrators, for, independently of those considerations, we are of opinion that equity will not enforce this receipt or release. It was a surrender by William Means, without any consideration, of practically his whole interest in his father's estate, amounting to between $100,000 and $200,000. The administrators were acting in a fiduciary capacity. Their obligations to each of the beneficiaries were equal. Their duty was to dispose of the property placed in their hands according to the expressed will of the testator, and they were not at liberty to act in the interests of one legatee as against those of another. If they were doubtful as to the meaning of any clause in the will they should have applied to the court for its construction and direction. If they chose to act upon their own interpretation of its meaning they should have so acted, and not sought to conclude any of the legatees by a contract *binding him to [484] accept their interpretation. As shown by papers introduced in evidence signed by William Means, they proceeded with more than promptness and with great activity and energy to secure this and other releases. Obviously William Means was in such a condition as to require that they who were in fact trustees of his interests should seek to protect instead of destroying them. We think the evidence justifies that which was said by the court of appeals in its opinion:

"William had lost all his property, and was in very straitened circumstances. Since his downfall he has been broken in spirit and wavering in his purposes. He seems at times to have been impressed that the administrators had a moral, if not a legal, claim upon him, that he should yield up his legacy to the estate, and this claim was pressed and insisted upon by the administrators. That they had no such legal claim upon him we have already determined. His brother and sisters all being in affluent circumstances, and his own family in needy circumstances, that he should have voluntarily given up the whole of this large sum, with no mistake in regard to what his legal rights were, it is difficult to believe. It amounted simply to a gift to the administrators for the benefit of the other legatees, whose only claim rested on the bounty of the testator. Courts of equity view such transactions with distrust, and, if the circumstances indicate that the trustee has dealt with the beneficiary unjustly, will not hesitate to set them aside. The absence of any adequate consideration in itself raises a presumption of unfairness which the trustee is bound to repel." [47 U. S. App. 467, 78 Fed. Rep. 552, 24 C. C. A. 214.]

While a man in the full possession of his faculties and under no duress may give away his property, and equity will not recall the gift, yet it looks with careful scrutiny upon all transactions between trustee and beneficiary, and if it appears that the trustee has taken any advantage of the situation of the beneficiary, and has obtained from him, even for only the benefit of other beneficiaries, large property without consideration, it will refuse to uphold the transaction thus accomplished. Taylor v. Taylor, 8 How. 183, 12 L. ed. 1040; Comstock v. Herron, 6 U. S. App. 626-637, 55 Fed. Rep. 803, 5 C. C. A. 266, and cases cited; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 307, 308; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. §§ 951, 958, [485] 1088. So, without considering the *debatable questions presented in respect to this receipt or release, we are of opinion that the circuit court of appeals was right in refusing to uphold it.

There is nothing else in the case that seems to us to call for consideration. We find no error in the conclusions of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and its decree is affirmed.

Dissenting: Mr. Justice Harlan, Mr. Justice Gray, Mr. Justice Brown, and Mr. Justice White.

MAST, FOOS, & COMPANY, Petitioner,
v.
STOVER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 485-495.)

Federal courts—comity—following prior decision in patent case—patent for windmill—lack of invention—ordering dismissal of bill before answer.

1. A circuit court of appeals is not bound to affirm an order of a circuit court which, upon the ground of comity, followed the decision of the circuit court of appeals of another circuit with reference to the validity and scope of a patent, but may investigate the matter of the validity and scope of the patent for itself, since comity is not a rule of law, but simply a rule of expediency.
2. The Supreme Court of the United States will not reverse a decision of a lower court, if correct upon the merits, simply because the lower court may not have sufficiently recognized the doctrine of comity.
3. The device of the Martin patent, No. 433,531, for an improvement in a windmill, which consists of the combination of an external toothed pinion with an internal toothed spur wheel, is invalid for lack of invention, because that kind of a combination had been previously well known in other machinery.
4. The application of a patented device to a use which was new only in the patented machine, and was well known in other machinery, constitutes mere mechanical skill, and does not constitute a patentable invention.
5. On appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction the court may properly order the dismissal of the bill before the filing of an answer or the taking of proofs, where the bill is obviously devoid of equity upon its face, and its invalidity cannot be cured by amendment.

[No. 149.]

Argued February 1, 2, 1900. Decided April 23, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit to review a decree dismissing a bill in equity for the infringement of a patent. Affirmed.

See same case below, 60 U. S. App. 325, 89 Fed. Rep. 333, 32 C. C. A. 231.

NOTE.—As to patentability of inventions—see notes to Cornlng v. Burden, 14 L. ed. U. S. 683; Thompson v. Bolsselier, 29 L. ed. U. S. 76; Grant v. Walter, 37 L. ed. U. S. 553; Market Street Cable R. Co. v. Rowley, 39 L. ed. U. S. 284; Dashlell v. Grosvenor, 40 L. ed. U. S. 1025.

As to the effect upon the circuit court of appeals of previous adjudications as to the validity and construction of patents—see notes to National Cash Register Co. v. American Cash Register Co. 3 C. C. A. 565; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Hoosick R. Co. 27 C. C. A. 427; United States Freehold Land & Emigration Co. v. Gallegos 32 C. C. A. 484.

As to review in circuit court of appeals of interlocutory decrees in patent cases—see notes to Consolidated Piedmont Cable Co. v. Pacific Cable R. Co. 3 C. C. A. 572; Southern P. Co. v. Earl, 27 C. C. A. 189; United States Freehold Land & Emigration Co. v. Gallegos, 32 C. C. A. 484.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

[486] This was a writ of certiorari to review a decree of the circuit court of appeals dismissing a bill in equity brought for *the infringement of a patent, and appealed to that court from an order of the circuit court for the northern district of Illinois, granting a preliminary injunction. The bill was filed by the petitioner, Mast, Foos, & Company, an Ohio corporation, and was founded upon letters patent No. 433,531, granted to the petitioner, upon the application of one Samuel W. Martin, for an improvement in windmills.

In his specification the patentee states that the "invention consists, essentially, of an improved back gear organization involving an external toothed pinion, and an internal toothed spur gear, the pinion being mounted on the wheel shaft, and the gear having formed on or connected with it the wrist pin, to which the operating pitman is attached, whereby the speed of the main shaft as applied to the wrist pin and pitman is reduced, and whereby, also, all pounding and lost motion is prevented as the pitman connection passes over the center and changes from a pushing to a pulling action. This object is accomplished by the fact that a plurality of the pinion teeth are always engaged with the internal spur gear, resulting in giving a perfectly uniform and smooth and noiseless reciprocating motion to the actuating rod, thereby prolonging the life of the machine by saving it from constant jarring and preventing wear and tear."

"The freedom of the organization from lost motion and sudden jerks as the wrist pin passes over the center renders the operation of the pump smooth and regular. This increases the effectiveness of the pump, and prevents undue wear and tear."

The following diagram illustrates the patented combination:

[487]

Petitioner sought a recovery only upon the first claim:

"1. The combination, with a windmill driving shaft and a pinion thereon, of an internal toothed spur wheel mounted adjacent to the said shaft and meshing with said pinion, a pitman connected with the spur wheel, and an actuating rod connected with the pitman."

Almost immediately upon filing the bill motion was made for a preliminary injunction, which was granted, largely upon the authority of an opinion of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit in the case of Mast, F. & Co. v. Dempster Mfg. Co. 49 U. S. App. 508, 82 Fed. Rep. 327, 27 C. C. A. 191, 85 Fed. Rep. 782. An appeal was taken from that order to the circuit court of appeals, which not only reversed the order for the injunction, but dismissed the bill. 60 U. S. App. 325, 89 Fed. Rep. 333, 32 C. C. A. 231.

Whereupon petitioner applied for and was granted a writ of certiorari from this court.

Mr. H. A. Toulmin and Lysander Hill argued the cause and filed a brief for petitioner:

When a bill prays for injunction and other relief, it is error to dismiss it upon an injunction motion without allowing the cause to proceed regularly to final hearing upon full proofs.

Hummert v. Schwab, 54 Ill. 142; Brockway v. Rowley, 66 Ill. 99; Pullen v. Baker, 41 Tex. 419; Strong v. Harrison, 62 Miss. 61; Walsh v. King, 74 Mich. 350, 41 N. W. 1080; Makemson v. Kauffman, 35 Ohio St. 444; Augusta Nat. Bank v. Printup, 63 Ga. 570; Johnston v. Alexander, 6 Ark. 302; Robinson v. Mays, 76 Va. 708; Noyes v. Vickers, 39 W. Va. 30, 19 S. E. 429; Knox v. The Coroner, 13 La. Ann. 88; Zeigler v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 58 Ala. 599.

The appeal taken under § 7 of the act of March 3, 1891, did not bring up the "merits" of the case, but only the question whether the judge below had, in granting the injunction, exercised his discretion providently or improvidently.

William C. Atwater & Co. v. Castner, 50 U. S. App. 394, 88 Fed. Rep. 642, 32 C. C. A. 77.

The circuit court of appeals dismissed the bill upon evidence taken in violation of the express requirements of the statutory rules of this court and of the statutes of Illinois.

Myers's (Ill.) Rev. Stat. chap. 51, §§ 24-38; 27 Stat. at L. 7 (act March 9, 1892).

The rule of comity, so far at least as concerns the Federal system of courts, is a rule of the highest wisdom and expediency.

Electric Mfg. Co. v. Edison Electric Light Co. 18 U. S. App. 637, 61 Fed. Rep. 834, 10 C. C. A. 106; Beach v. Hobbs, 82 Fed. Rep. 916.

Messrs. Charles K. Offield and Charles C. Linthicum argued the cause and, with Mr. Loren L. Morrison, filed a brief for respondent:

The circuit court of appeals had jurisdiction and power, upon an appeal from an interlocutory decree granting a temporary injunction, to direct a final decree dismissing the bill upon the record presented.

Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, 165 U. S.

518, 41 L. ed. 810, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407; Knowville v. Africa, 47 U. S. App. 74, 77 Fed. Rep. 501, 23 C. C. A. 252; Curtis v. Overman Wheel Co. 20 U. S. App. 146, 58 Fed. Rep. 784, 7 C. C. A. 493; Magic Light Co. v. Economy Gas-Lamp Co. 97 Fed. Rep. 87, 38 C. C. A. 56.

This court has frequently denied the title of inventor to improvers in the mechanical arts, where the inventions improve the particular device to which they are applied, only in the narrow sense of carrying forward an old idea.

American Road Mach. Co. v. Pennock & S. Co. 164 U. S. 26, 41 L. ed. 337, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Wright v. Yuengling, 155 U. S. 47, 39 L. ed. 64, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1.

[488] *Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

1. Plaintiff complains of the action of the circuit court of appeals in refusing to follow the opinion of the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit in a case of this same plaintiff against the Dempster Mill Manufacturing Company, 49 U. S. App. 508, 82 Fed. Rep. 327, 27 C. C. A. 191, and in reversing the order of the circuit court, which, upon the ground of comity, followed the judgment of that court with respect to the validity and scope of the patent. Its contention is, practically, that the circuit court of appeals should have been governed by the prior adjudication of that court, and, so far, at least, as concerned the interlocutory motion, should have accorded it the same force and dignity as is accorded to judgments of this court. Premising that these considerations can have no application in this court,—whose duty it is to review the judgments of all inferior courts, and in case of conflict to decide between them,—we think the plaintiff overstates somewhat the claims of comity.

Comity is not a rule of law, but one of practice, convenience, and expediency. It is something more than mere courtesy, which implies only deference to the opinion of others, since it has a substantial value in securing uniformity of decision, and discouraging repeated litigation of the same question. But its obligation is not imperative. If it were, the indiscreet action of one court might become a precedent, increasing in weight with each successive adjudication, until the whole country was tied down to an unsound principle. Comity persuades; but it does not command. It declares, not how a case shall be decided, but how it may with propriety be decided. It recognizes the fact that the primary duty of every court is to dispose of cases according to the law and the facts; in a word, to decide them right. In doing so, the judge is bound to determine them according to his own convictions. If he be clear in those convictions, he should follow them. It is only in cases where, in his own mind, there may be a doubt as to the soundness of his views that comity comes in play and suggests a uniformity of ruling to avoid confusion, until a higher court has settled the *law. It demands of no one that he shall abdicate his individual judgment, but only that deference shall be paid to the judgments of other co-ordinate tribunals. Clearly it applies only to questions which have been actually decided, and which arose under the same facts.

The obligation to follow the decisions of other courts in patent cases of course increases in proportion to the number of courts which have passed upon the question, and the concordance of opinion may have been so general as to become a controlling authority. So, too, if a prior adjudication has followed a final hearing upon pleadings and proofs, especially after a protracted litigation, greater weight should be given to it than if it were made upon a motion for a preliminary injunction. These are substantially the views embodied in a number of well-considered cases in the circuit courts and circuit courts of appeals. Macbeth v. Gillinder, 54 Fed. Rep. 169; Electric Mfg. Co. v. Edison Electric Light Co. 18 U. S. App. 637, 61 Fed. Rep. 834, 10 C. C. A. 106; Edison Electric Light Co. v. Beacon Vacuum Pump & Electrical Co. 54 Fed. Rep. 678, and cases cited; Beach v. Hobbs, 82 Fed. Rep. 916, 63 U. S. App. 626, 92 Fed. Rep. 146, 34 C. C. A. 248; see, also, Newall v. Wilson, 2 De G. M. & G. 282.

Comity, however, has no application to questions not considered by the prior court, or, in patent cases, to alleged anticipating devices which were not laid before that court. As to such the action of the court is purely original, though the fact that such anticipating devices were not called to the attention of the prior court is likely to open them to suspicion. It is scarcely necessary to say, however, that when the case reaches this court we should not reverse the action of the court below if we thought it correct upon the merits, though we were of opinion it had not given sufficient weight to the doctrine of comity.

2. The principal mechanism of an ordinary pumping windmill is directed to the conversion of the rapid rotation of the wind wheel into the perpendicular reciprocating movement of an ordinary pumping shaft. This is accomplished in much the same way that the revolution of a water wheel is made to operate an upright saw, namely, by means of a pitman—of different *forms, but always [490] with the object of converting one motion into another. In doing this the revolving wheel, during one half of a complete revolution, pulls, and during the other half pushes upon the pitman. This change from a pulling to a pushing motion is accompanied, as the pitman rod passes over the center of motion, by a pounding, which not only produces a peculiar noise, but a strain upon the mechanism, resulting in frequent breakages. These poundings naturally increase in force as the mechanism becomes worn, and are sometimes heavy enough to strip the cogs from the wheels. Before the Martin patent the device usually employed was a small external toothed wheel or pinion mounted upon the shaft of the wind wheel, the cogs of which interlaced with the teeth or cogs of a large spur wheel, also externally toothed and revolving at a greatly reduced speed, to which the pitman bar was attached. As both wheels were fitted with teeth on the outer edge of the rim, the consequence was that as each wheel presented its convexity to the other, but one or two teeth of either wheel engaged with the corresponding teeth of its fellow, and fractures of the teeth were frequent. There was also a tendency of the two wheels to draw apart. Martin obviated this by providing the large or spur wheel with teeth fitted on the inner side of the rim, whereby the concavity of the rim was opposed to the convexity of the pinion, and a greater number of teeth on each wheel engaged with the corresponding teeth of the other, and the strain occasioned by the change of motion was greatly reduced. That the invention was a useful and popular one is shown by the fact that it went into immediate use, and over three thousand windmills containing the combination are said to have been manufactured and sold since 1890.

Prior to Martin's patent, windmills of this class had been driven by externally toothed spur wheels, interlacing with externally toothed pinions, and hence were subject to the pounding motion which proved so destructive to the mechanism, and which it was the object of the Martin patent to obviate. The defense to this case is largely based upon the fact that the prior art had shown a large number of instances of spur wheels, provided with teeth on the inner side of the rim, operated by external *toothed pinions. [491] They are shown to have existed as early as 1841, in a patent to Perry Davis, No. 2,215, for an improvement in windmills, in which cogs fixed upon the inner periphery of the rim, interlaced with an external toothed pinion, although for a different purpose, of keeping the wheel in the wind. They are shown in several other patents for windmills, and also in a large number of other patents for harvesters, hay tedders, churns, mowing and sewing machines, and other mechanical movements for the conversion of motion. It would appear from the opinion and dissenting opinion in the case against the Dempster Mill Manufacturing Company, 49 U. S. App. 508, 82 Fed. Rep. 327, 27 C. C. A. 191, and from the opinion of the circuit court of appeals in this case, that, while the combination of an external toothed pinion and internal toothed spur wheel was common in other mechanisms, the only windmill patent in that case offered as an anticipation of Martin's was one granted to Edward Williams, September 19, 1876, No. 182,394, which showed a pitman actuated by two eccentric external toothed gear wheels; and that the majority of the court was of opinion that the transfer of the Martin device to windmills for the purpose named in the patent involved invention within the cases of the Western Electric Co. v. La Rue, 139 U. S. 601, 35 L. ed. 294, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670; Crane v. Price, Webster, Pat. Cas. 393, and Potts v. Creager, 155 U. S. 597, sub nom. C. & A. Potts & Co. v. Creager, 39 L. ed. 275, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194. In the present case, however, not only are there a large number of patents shown containing this combination, [491] 177 U. S.

but several in which the combination is used for different purposes in the construction of windmills: For instance, in patent No. 254,527, to George H. Andrews; in patent No. 500,340, to S. W. Martin; in patent No. 271,635, to William H. and Clifford A. Holcombe; in patent No. 273,226, to Peter T. Coffield; in patent No. 317,731, to Coleman & Turner; and in patent No. 346,674, to Henry G. Newell, in all of which the system is employed for different purposes in connection with windmills—generally to keep the wheel in the direction of the wind.

It is admitted that in none of the instances in which an internal toothed wheel is employed in windmills in connection with an external toothed wheel, is the combination used for the purpose specified in the Martin patent of converting the revolving *mo-[492] tion of the wind wheel shaft into the perpendicular motion of the pump shaft, though what is known as the Perkins mill presents the closest analogy. This mill is shown, by indisputable proof, to have been manufactured at Mishawaka, Indiana, as early as 1885, and to have been sold in considerable numbers. It does not appear to have been a pumping mill; and the upright shaft, instead of having the reciprocating perpendicular movement of a pumping shaft, revolved, and furnished, by means of a bevelled gear at the lower end of the shaft, a revolving motion to a horizontal shaft used for various purposes upon farms. A large internal toothed wheel was placed on the outer ends of the arms of the spider to which the wind-wheel arms were bolted, the internal gearing of which wheel engaged with a small gear wheel or pinion placed on an independent shaft, at the other end of which shaft a bevelled pinion was placed, interlacing with a corresponding bevel on the upper end of the upright revolving shaft. As there was no conversion or change of motion, the strain was uniform, and there was no interruption of a continuous motion or a pounding to be provided against. This is undoubtedly a different use from that to which the Martin combination was put; but the question is, whether there is not such an analogy between the several uses in which this combination was employed as to remove its adoption, in the use employed by Martin, from the domain of invention.

The case, then, reduces itself to this: The Martin combination had previously been used in a large number of mechanical contrivances for the purpose of converting a rotary into a reciprocating motion, as is notably shown in patent No. 421,533, to John Wenzin, for a reciprocating gearing; in patent No. 399,492, to Edward Burke, for a means of converting motion; in patent No. 89,217, to E. R. Hall, for a wood sawyer; in reissue patent No. 2,746, to Christopher Hodgkins, for a sewing machine; in patent to Krum and Brokaw, for harvesters; and in what is known as Filer & Stowell Company's lath bolter, a sketch of which is given in the record. The combination had also been used in windmills, but not for the purpose of converting rotary into reciprocating [493] motion, although in the Perkins mill it was *used in connection with the shaft of the wind wheel to transfer power from a horizontal to an upright rotating shaft, which, at its lower end, transferred its own motion by a bevelled gearing to another horizontal shaft. The combination of two externally toothed wheels had also been used in windmills for the purpose of converting rotary into reciprocating motion.

Having all these various devices before him, and, whatever the facts may have been, he is chargeable with a knowledge of all pre-existing devices, did it involve an exercise of the inventive faculty to employ this same combination in a windmill for the purpose of converting a rotary into a reciprocating motion? We are of opinion that it did not. The main advantage derived from it arose from the engagement of a large number of teeth in each wheel. This peculiarity, however, inured to the advantage of every machine in which the combination was used for the purpose of converting motion, although the jar produced by the change of motion may not have been sufficient to endanger a small machine. So, too, a reduction of speed is involved wherever the cogs of a small wheel engage with the cogs of a large one. Martin, therefore, discovered no new function; and he created no new situation, except in the limited sense that he first applied an internal gearing to the old Mast-Foos mill, which was practically identical with the Martin patent, except in the use of an internal gearing. He invented no new device; he used it for no new purpose; he applied it to no new machine. All he did was to apply it to a new purpose in a machine where it had not before been used for that purpose. The result may have added to the efficiency and popularity of the earlier device, although to what extent is open to very considerable doubt. In our opinion this transfer does not rise to the dignity of invention. We repeat what we said in Potts v. Creager, 155 U. S. 597, 608, sub nom. C. & A. Potts & Co. v. Creager, 39 L. ed. 275, 279, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 194, 199: "If the new use be so nearly analogous to the former one that the applicability of the device to its new use would occur to a person of ordinary mechanical skill, it is only a case of double use." The line between invention and mechanical skill is often an exceedingly difficult one to draw; but in view of the state of the art as heretofore shown, we cannot say that the application of this

[494] old device to a use which was only new *in the particular machine to which it was applied was anything more than would have been suggested to an intelligent mechanic, who had before him the patents to which we have called attention. While it is entirely true that the fact that this change had not occurred to any mechanic familiar with windmills is evidence of something more than mechanical skill in the person who did discover it, it is probable that no one of these was fully aware of the state of the art and the prior devices; but, as before stated, in determining the question of invention, we must presume the patentee was fully informed of everything which preceded him, whether such were the actual fact or not. There is no doubt the patent laws sometimes fail to do justice to an individual who may, with the light he had before him, have exhibited inventive talent of a high order, and yet be denied a patent by reason of antecedent devices which actually existed, but not to his knowledge, and are only revealed after a careful search in the Patent Office. But the statute (§ 4886) is inexorable. It denies the patent, if the device were known or used by others in this country before his invention. Congress having created the monopoly, may put such limitations upon it as it pleases.

860

The case in the eighth circuit was evidently decided upon a wholly incomplete showing on the part of the defendant.

3. One of the principal questions pressed upon our attention related to the power of the court of appeals to order the dismissal of the bill before answer filed, or proofs taken, upon appeal from an order granting a temporary injunction.

This question is not necessarily concluded by Smith v. Vulcan Iron Works, 165 U. S. 518, 41 L. ed. 810, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 407, since in that case the interlocutory injunction was granted after answer and replication filed, a full hearing had upon pleadings and proofs, and an interlocutory decree entered adjudging the validity of the patent, the infringement and injunction, and a reference of the case to a master to take an account of profits and damages. In that case we held that, if the appellate court were of opinion that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction because his bill was devoid of equity, such court might, to save the parties from further litigation, proceed to consider and decide the case upon its merits, and direct a final decree dismissing the bill.

*Does this doctrine apply to a case where [495] a temporary injunction is granted pendente lite upon affidavits and immediately upon the filing of a bill? We are of opinion that this must be determined upon the circumstances of the particular case. If the showing made by the plaintiff be incomplete; if the order for the injunction be reversed, because injunction was not the proper remedy, or because under the particular circumstances of the case, it should not have been granted; or if other relief be possible, notwithstanding the injunction be refused, then, clearly, the case should be remanded for a full hearing upon pleadings and proofs. But if the bill be obviously devoid of equity upon its face, and such invalidity be incapable of remedy by amendment; or if the patent manifestly fail to disclose a patentable novelty in the invention, we know of no reason why to save a protracted litigation, the court may not order the bill to be dismissed. Ordinarily, if the case involve a question of fact, as of anticipation or infringement, we think the parties are entitled to put in their evidence in the manner prescribed by the rules of this court for taking testimony in equity causes. But if there be nothing in the affidavits tending to throw a doubt upon the existence or date of the anticipating devices, and giving them their proper effect, they establish the invalidity of the patent; or if no question be made regarding the identity of the alleged infringing device, and it appear clear that such device is not an infringement, and no suggestion be made of further proofs upon the subject, we think the court should not only overrule the order for the injunction, but dismiss the bill. Gardt v. Brown, 113 Ill. 475, 55 Am. Rep. 434. This practice was approved by the Chief Justice in a case where the bill disclosed no ground of equitable cognizance, in Green v. Mills, 25 U. S. App. 383, 69 Fed. Rep. 852, 16 C. C. A. 516, 30 L. R. A. 90, and by the circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit in Knoxville v. Africa, 47 U. S. App. 74, 246, 77 Fed. Rep. 501, 23 C. C. A. 252, where the question involved was one of law and was fully presented to the court. The power was properly exercised in this case.

177 U. S.

There was no error in the action of the circuit court of appeals, and its decree is affirmed.

[496]ORERLIN M. CARTER, on the Petition of Abram J. Rose, Appt. & Plff. in Err., v.

CAPTAIN BENJAMIN K. ROBERTS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 496-500.)

Sentence of court-martial—petition for habeas corpus—raising constitutional objection—appeals—direct appeal to Supreme Court after appeal to circuit court of appeals.

1. The constitutional objection that a sentence of an army court-martial imposed a double punishment for the same offense can hardly be deemed to be raised in a United States circuit court, so as to authorize a direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, by a bare averment in a petition for a writ of habeas corpus that, petitioner having suffered the punishment of dismissal and of publication, his "imprisonment is without authority of law," and his further punishment and detention "and the carrying out of said sentence is contrary to law and to the provision of the Constitution of the United States, and is illegal."
2. A direct appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from a decision of a circuit court involving a constitutional right cannot be taken, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, after the cause has been appealed to and decided by the circuit court of appeals, as that act does not permit independent appeals to both courts.

[No. 570.]

Submitted April 9, 1900. Decided April 23, 1900.

A PPEAL from and in ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review a 177 U. S.

decision dismissing a writ of habeas corpus on motions to dismiss or affirm. Dismissed.

See same case below, 97 Fed. Rep. 496.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Abram J. Rose and Benjamin F. Tracy submitted the cause for Carter:

That the court will, upon habeas corpus, inquire whether the accused has been twice punished for the same offense, and, if so, discharge the prisoner, is fully supported by the decisions of this court.

Nielsen, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 176, 33 L. ed. 118, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 672; Re Snow, 120 U. S. 274, 30 L. ed. 658, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 556; Coffey v. United States, 116 U. S. 436, 29 L. ed. 684, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437; United States v. Chouteau, 102 U. S. 603, 26 L. ed. 246; Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872.

The right to appeal directly to this court from the circuit court because of a constitutional question is not waived by taking an appeal also to the circuit court of appeals.

Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 43 L. ed. 108, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808.

The question presented to this court in Robinson v. Caldwell, 165 U. S. 359, 41 L. ed. 745, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343, was simply as to the jurisdiction of the circuit court, the contention being that plaintiff could not have brought an original suit in the circuit court of the United States, and therefore that the case was not removable from the state court, where it was originally commenced.

Nor does the case of Columbus Constr. Co. v. Crane Co. 174 U. S. 600, 43 L. ed. 1102, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721, in any way preclude the maintenance of this appeal. In that case the appeal was taken to this court while the case was still pending before the circuit court of appeals, and this court said it was not in accordance with orderly practice that separate appeals or writs of error on the merits in the same case should be pending at the same time in two appellate courts.

Solicitor General Richards submitted the cause for Roberts. Mr. Henry L. Burnett was with him on the brief:

To give the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction under the act of March 3, 1891, upon the ground that the case "involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States," a construction or application of the Constitution must have been expressed or requested in the circuit court below.

Cornell v. Green, 163 U. S. 79, 41 L. ed. 77, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 969; Muse v. Arlington Hotel Co. 168 U. S. 435, 42 L. ed. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 170, 37 L. ed. 1041, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 63.

The constitutional provision that no person shall be deprived of liberty without due process of law is a restriction upon the courts of the United States, but courts-martial are no part of the judiciary of the United States, but simply an instrumentality of the executive, and neither the 5th nor any other amendment of the Constitution affects the government of the land and naval forces.

Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 123, 18 L. ed. 296; Re Bogart, 2 Sawy. 407, Fed. Cas. No. 1,596.

Even if the record exhibited a case coming under the act of March 3, 1891, § 5, the appellant has no right to have this case finally determined by the Supreme Court because he has heretofore elected to take his case to the circuit court of appeals by writ of error, under § 6 of that act, instead of taking it direct from the circuit court to the Supreme Court under an appropriate clause of § 5, if the same could be done.

Robinson v. Caldwell, 165 U. S. 359, 41 L. ed. 745, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343; May, U. S. Sup. Ct. Practice, p. 465; McLish v. Roff, 141 U. S. 661, 35 L. ed. 893, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 118; United States v. Jahn, 155 U. S. 109, 39 L. ed. 87, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39; Chappell v. United States, 160 U. S. 499, 40 L. ed. 510, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397.

[496] *Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

[497] *Carter was a captain of the United States Army, assigned to the corps of engineers. He was arraigned and tried before a court martial in Savannah, Georgia, convened according to law, upon certain charges and specifications; found guilty; sentenced to dismissal; to suffer a fine; to be imprisoned; and to publication of crime and punishment. This sentence was approved by the Secretary of War and confirmed by the President of the United States, September 29, 1899, and the Secretary of War took the necessary action for the execution of the sentence. October 2, 1899, Carter obtained from the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York a writ of habeas corpus, directed to the military authority having him in custody, for his production before the court, together with the time and cause of his detention. He was accordingly produced, and due return made, setting up that he was lawfully held in custody by authority of General Orders No. 172, of September 29, 1899. During the pendency of the habeas corpus proceedings the fine imposed was paid. The circuit court dismissed the writ, and Carter was remanded to custody. 97 Fed. Rep. 496.

From this final order, as appears from the records of this court, and is conceded, petitioner prosecuted an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals for the second circuit. The case having been there heard, that court, on January 24, 1900, entered judgment affirming the judgment of the circuit court, with costs. On February 5, 1900, an application for the writ of certiorari to the circuit court of appeals was made to this court, which, on February 26, 1900, was denied. 176 U. S. 684, ante, 638, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1026.

On the same day an appeal from the final order of the circuit court directly to this court was allowed by a judge of the circuit court, as also a writ of error.

The 8th section of art. 1 of the Constitution provides that the Congress shall have power "to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces," and in the exercise of that power Congress has enacted rules for the regulation of the army known as the Articles of War. Rev. Stat. § 1342. Every officer, before he enters on the duties of his *office, subscribes to these articles, and places himself within the power of courts martial to pass on any offense which he may have committed in contravention of them. Courts martial are lawful tribunals, with authority to finally determine any case over which they have jurisdiction, and their proceedings, when confirmed as provided, are not open to review by the civil tribunals, except for the purpose of ascertaining whether the military court had jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, and whether, though having such jurisdiction, it had exceeded its powers in the sentence pronounced. [198]

The ground for an appeal directly to this court is said in the briefs to be that the case involved the construction or application of the Constitution, in that by the sentence petitioner was twice punished for the same offense. But if the statutes authorized the penalties in question to be inflicted in one and the same proceeding as punishment for the offenses charged, then there was no double punishment. And, as this was a case arising in the land forces, it is hardly to be conceded that the suggested constitutional objection was raised below as such by the bare averment in the petition that petitioner, having suffered the punishment of dismissal and of publication, his "imprisonment is without authority of law," and "his further punishment and detention," and "the carrying out of said sentence, is contrary to law and the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and is illegal."

The circuit court stated the questions thus: "The contention of the relator is that, conceding that the court martial had jurisdiction of the person of the accused and of the offenses charged, and conceding, further, the regularity of its proceedings and the propriety of its findings, it was without power to impose the four separate punishments of dismissal, fine, imprisonment, and degradation (special publication of sentence), although it might have imposed either one of them. When application was made for the writ, it appeared that the first punishment (dismissal from the service of the United States) and the fourth (publication of sentence) had been carried out; and the relator contended that, having thus paid a penalty which the court had power to inflict, he could not be held to submit to another penalty,*which the court had no power to add to the one already by it selected. [499] Since the return was made the relator has also paid the fine, and, although that fact does not appear upon the face of the original papers, it has been discussed in the briefs of both sides, and is now embodied in a stipulation, thus completing the case.

"If the relator's premises be sound, viz., that punishments have been imposed in the aggregate, when the statute authorized their imposition only in the alternative, his conclusion is supported by high authority. Ex parte Lange, 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872. In that case it was held that when a court has imposed fine and imprisonment, where the statute only conferred power to punish by fine or imprisonment, and the fine has been paid, and the judgment of the court thus executed so as to be a full satisfaction of one of the alternative penalties of the law, the power of the court as to that offense is at an end. The important question in the case, therefore, is whether, under the statutes of the United States, the court martial had the power, under its findings, to impose a sentence inflicting these four penalties." And the court, after considering that question at length, held that the court martial had such power.

We need not discuss, however, whether a direct appeal could have been taken in the first instance, as we are of opinion that, even if so, the present appeal cannot be maintained. It falls directly within the ruling in Robinson v. Caldwell, 165 U. S. 359, 41 L. ed. 745, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343. It was there held that the judiciary act of March 3, 1891, does not give a defeated party in a circuit court the right to have his case finally determined both in this court and in the circuit court of appeals on independent appeals. That case was heard in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Idaho upon its merits, which included the consideration of questions involving the construction of a treaty and the validity of an act of Congress. Judgment passed for plaintiff, and defendant was allowed a direct appeal to this court. Pending this, defendant had also prosecuted an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, and the case was there again heard and determined. 29 U. S. App. 468, 67 Fed. Rep. 391, 14 C. C. A. 448. When subsequently the appeal to this court was heard, it was dismissed, because we held that "we could not properly retain cognizance thereof in face of the fact that the case had been adjudicated by the court of appeals, whose judgment remained undisturbed."

Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Central Transp. Co. 171 U. S. 138, 43 L. ed. 108, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 808, is not to the contrary. The Pullman Company had taken an appeal directly from the circuit court to this court, on the theory that the case involved the construction or application of the Constitution, and had also taken an appeal to the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit. The circuit court of appeals overruled a motion to dismiss, but postponed further argument until the appeal to this court was disposed of. 39 U. S. App. 307, 76 Fed. Rep. 401, 22 C. C. A. 246. A motion to dismiss was also made in this court, whereupon an application was made for a writ of certiorari to the circuit court of appeals, and, by reason of the circumstances, was granted, and the record returned by virtue of that writ. And we proceeded to dispose of the case on the merits without passing on the question, which had become immaterial, whether the direct appeal could have been maintained or not.

The case before us presents no such features. It has been regularly heard and gone to judgment in the circuit court of appeals, and an application duly made to this court for certiorari has been denied. These prior proceedings cannot be ignored and the cause brought here as if they had not been had.

When cases arise which are controlled by the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, a direct appeal, lies to this court, and if such cases are carried to the circuit courts of appeals, those courts may decline to take jurisdiction, or where such construction or application is involved with other questions, may certify the constitutional question and afterwards proceed to judgment, or may decide the whole case in the first instance. Holt v. Indiana Mfg. Co. 46 U. S. App. 717, 80 Fed. Rep. 1, 25 C. C. A. 301, 176 U. S. 68, ante, 374, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; United States v. Jahn, 155 U. S. 109, 39 L. ed. 87, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39; New Orleans v. Benjamin, 153 U. S. 411, 38 L. ed. 764, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Benjamin v. New Orleans, 169 U. S. 161, 42 L. ed. 700, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298. But when the circuit court of appeals has acted on the whole case its judgment stands unless revised by certiorari to or appeal from that court in accordance with the act of March 3, 1891.

Appeal and writ of error dismissed.

*STATE OF TENNESSEE, Complainant, [501]
v.

STATE OF VIRGINIA.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 501-504.)

State boundaries—order appointing commissioners to retrace and re-establish.

[No. 11, Original.]

Submitted April 17, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

Mr. G. W. Pickle, Attorney General of Tennessee, for complainant.

Mr. A. J. Montague, Attorney General of Virginia, for defendant.

*Mr. Chief Justice Fuller announced that [502] the court ordered the following decree to be entered:

This cause coming on to be heard on the original bill filed herein by the state of Tennessee against the state of Virginia, the answer thereto by the state of Virginia, the reply to said answer by the state of Tennessee, and the stipulations filed herein by counsel for the respective parties; and the pleadings and stipulations having been duly considered, and the decree of this court entered on the third day of April, A. D. 1893, at the October term, 1892, in a certain original cause in equity, wherein the state of Virginia was complainant and the state of Tennessee was defendant, and the record of said cause having been examined:—

It is thereupon, this 30th day of April, A. D. 1900, ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the boundary line established between the states of Virginia and Tennessee by the compact of 1803 between the said states is the real, certain, and true boundary between the said states, which boundary line was actually run and located under proceedings had by the two states in 1801-1803, was then marked with five chops in the shape of a diamond, was commonly known as the diamond line, and ran from White Top mountain to Cumberland gap.

And it appearing further to the court that the said boundary line has become so far obscured by lapse of time or loss of monuments as to justify and necessitate its re-establishment and remarking under the direction of this court, it is therefore further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that William C. Hodgkins, of the state of Massachusetts, James B. Baylor, of the state of Virginia, and Andrew H. Buchanan, of the state of Tennessee, be and they are hereby appointed commissioners to ascertain, retrace, remark, and re-establish said boundary line, but without authority to run or establish any other or new line.

[504] And it is further ordered that, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, each of the said commissioners shall be duly sworn to perform faithfully, impartially, without prejudice or bias, the duties herein imposed, said oath to be taken before the clerk of this court, or before either of the clerks of the circuit courts of the United States for the states of Massachusetts, *Virginia, or Tennessee, and returned with their report; that said commissioners may arrange for their organization, their meetings, and the particular manner of the performance of their duties, and are authorized to adopt all ordinary and legitimate methods for the ascertainment of the true location of said boundary line, including the taking of evidence, but, in the event evidence is taken, the parties shall be notified and permitted to be present and examine and cross-examine the witnesses, and the rules of law as to admissibility and competency shall be observed; and all evidence taken by the commissioners, and all exceptions thereto, and action thereon, shall be preserved and certified, and returned with their report.

And when the true location of said boundary line is ascertained, said commissioners shall cause such marks and monuments of a durable nature to be so placed on and along said line as to perpetuate it, and enable the citizens of each state, and others, to find it with reasonable diligence.

It is further ordered that the clerk of this court at once forward to the chief magistrate of each of said states, and to each of the commissioners designated by this decree, a copy of the decree duly authenticated, and that the commissioners proceed with all convenient speed to discharge their duty in ascertaining, retracing, remarking, and re-establishing said line, as herein directed, and make their report thereof and of their proceedings in the premises to this court, on or before the first day of the next term thereof, together with a complete bill of costs and charges annexed.

And it is further ordered that, should vacancies occur in said board of commissioners while the court is not in session, the Chief Justice is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint other commissioners, to supply the same, and he is authorized to act on such information in the premises as may be satisfactory to himself.

It is further ordered that all costs of this proceeding, including remuneration not exceeding $10 per day for each commissioner, and the other costs incident to the ascertaining, retracing, remarking, and re-establishing said line, shall be paid by the states of Tennessee and Virginia equally.

*SHOSHONE MINING COMPANY, Appt., [505]
v.

ROYAL J. RUTTER and F. W. Bradley.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 505-514.)

Appeal—Federal question—suit as to mining claim.

A suit brought in support of an adverse claim to a mine under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 2325, 2326, is not a suit arising under the laws of the United States in such a sense as to confer jurisdiction on a Federal court without regard to the citizenship of the parties, unless it involves the determination of a question as to the construction or effect of the mining laws.

[No. 208.]

Argued March 21, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

A PPEAL from a judgment of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in a consolidated case as to adverse claims to mining property. Reversed.

See same case below, 59 U. S. App. 538, 87 Fed. Rep. 801, 31 C. C. A. 223.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. B. Heyburn argued the cause and, with Mr. Lyttleton Price filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Curtis H. Lindley argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court: [505]

In Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, ante, 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222, decided January 8, 1900, we held that a suit brought in support of an adverse claim

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of cases involving Federal question—see notes to Montana Ore-Purchasing Co. v. Boston & M. Consol. Copper & Silver Min. Co. 35 C. C. A. 7; Bailey v. Moshier, 11 C. C. A. 308.

under §§ 2325 and 2326 of the Revised Statutes was not a suit arising under the laws of the United States in such a sense as to confer jurisdiction on a Federal court regardless of the citizenship of the parties. In this case the same question is again presented, and has been elaborately argued by counsel against the opinion we then announced. Its importance, as well as the great ability with which it was argued by counsel for appellee, has induced a careful re-examination of the question. While it [506] may be conceded *that the matter is not free from doubt, nevertheless our re-examination has not led us to change our former views. We deem it unnecessary to restate all the reasons given in the opinion then delivered, and yet some matters may appropriately be noticed.

By the Constitution (art. 3, § 2) the judicial power of the United States extends "to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States" and to controversies "between citizens of different states." By article 4, § 3, cl. 2, Congress is given "power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States." Under these clauses Congress might doubtless provide that any controversy of a judicial nature arising in or growing out of the disposal of the public lands should be litigated only in the courts of the United States. The question, therefore, is not one of the power of Congress, but of its intent. It has so constructed the judicial system of the United States that the great bulk of litigation respecting rights of property, although those rights may in their inception go back to some law of the United States, is in fact carried on in the courts of the several states. It has provided that the Federal courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction of admiralty and patent litigation, and jurisdiction concurrent with the state courts of suits arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States. U. S. Rev. Stat. 629; 25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866.

When in § 2326, Rev. Stat., Congress authorized that which is familiarly known in the mining regions as an "adverse suit," it simply declared that the adverse claimant should commence proceedings "in a court of competent jurisdiction." It did not in express language prescribe either a Federal or a state court, and did not provide for exclusive or concurrent jurisdiction. If it had intended that the jurisdiction should be vested only in the Federal courts, it would undoubtedly have said so. If it had intended that any new rule of demarcation between the jurisdiction of the Federal and state courts should apply, it would likewise undoubtedly have said so. Leaving the matter as it did, it unquestionably meant that the [507] competency of *the court should be determined by rules theretofore prescribed in respect to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts. In that view, if the adverse suit were between citizens of different states, and the value of the thing in controversy exceeded $2,000, then by virtue of the general provisions of the statutes the Federal courts might take jurisdiction, or, if the suit was one arising under the Constitution or the laws of the United States, and the amount in controversy was over $2,000, then also the Federal courts might take jurisdiction. Conversely, it would be true that if the amount in controversy was not in excess of $2,000, or if the parties were not citizens of different states, and the suit was not one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, the Federal courts could not take jurisdiction.

In the present case diverse citizenship does not exist. Jurisdiction must therefore depend upon the question whether the suit is one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

We pointed out in the former opinion that it was well settled that a suit to enforce a right which takes its origin in the laws of the United States is not necessarily one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, within the meaning of the jurisdiction clauses; for if it did, every action to establish title to real estate (at least in the newer states) would be such a one, as all titles in those states come from the United States or by virtue of its laws. As said by Mr. Chief Justice Waite, in Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 203, 24 L. ed. 656, 658:

"The suit must, in part at least, arise out of a controversy between the parties in regard to the operation and effect of the Constitution or laws upon the facts involved. . . . Before, therefore, a circuit court can be required to retain a cause under this jurisdiction, it must, in some form, appear upon the record, by a statement of facts, 'in legal and logical form,' such as is required in good pleading, . . . that the suit is one which 'really and substantially involves a dispute or controversy' as to a right which depends upon the construction or effect of the Constitution or some law or treaty of the United States."

The adverse suit, Rev. Stat. § 2326, is "to determine the question of the right of possession." That right may or may *not in- [508]volve the construction or effect of the Constitution or a law or treaty of the United States. By §§ 2319, 2324, and 2332, Revised Statutes, it is expressly provided that this right of possession may be determined by "local customs or rules of miners in the several mining districts, so far as the same are applicable and not inconsistent with the laws of the United States;" or "by the statute of limitations for mining claims of the state or territory where the same may be situated." So that in a given case the right of possession may not involve any question under the Constitution or laws of the United States, but simply a determination of local rules and customs, or state statutes, or even only a mere matter of fact.

The recognition by Congress of local customs and statutory provisions as at times controlling the right of possession does not incorporate them into the body of Federal law. Section 2 of article I of the Constitution provides that the electors in each state of members of the House of Representatives "shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislature," but this does not make the statutes and constitutional provisions of the various states in reference to the qualifications of electors parts of the Constitution or laws of the United States.

On August 8, 1890, Congress enacted (26 Stat. at L. 313, chap. 728) that intoxicating liquors transported into any state or territory "shall upon arrival in such state or territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such state or territory," etc., and in Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 561, sub nom. Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 576, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865, 869, this court said:

"Congress has not attempted to delegate the power to regulate commerce, or to exercise any power reserved to the states, or to grant a power not possessed by the states, or to adopt state laws."

In Miller v. Swan, 150 U. S. 132, 136, 37 L. ed. 1028, 1029, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52, 54, it appeared that the state of Alabama had passed an act containing this provision: "The said Alabama & Chattanooga Railroad Company shall have the privilege and right of selling said lands or any part thereof in accordance with the acts of Congress granting the same;" and it was held:

[509] "The question is not what rights passed to the state under *the acts of Congress, but what authority the railroad company had under the statute of the state. The construction of such a statute is a matter for the state court, and its determination thereof is binding on this court. The fact that the state statute and the mortgage refer to certain acts of Congress as prescribing the rule and measure of the rights granted by the state does not make the determination of such rights a Federal question. A state may prescribe the procedure in the Federal courts as the rule of practice in its own tribunals; it may authorize the disposal of its own lands in accordance with the provisions for the sale of the public lands of the United States; and in such cases an examination may be necessary of the acts of Congress, the rules of the Federal courts, and the practices of the Land Department, and yet the questions for decision would not be of a Federal character. The inquiry along Federal lines is only incidental to a determination of the local question of what the state has required and prescribed. The matter decided is one of state rule and practice. The facts by which that state rule and practice are determined may be of a Federal origin."

Inasmuch, therefore, as the "adverse suit" to determine the right of possession may not involve any question as to the construction or effect of the Constitution or laws of the United States, but may present simply a question of fact as to the time of the discovery of mineral, the location of the claim on the ground, or a determination of the meaning and effect of certain local rules and customs prescribed by the miners of the district, or the effect of state statutes, it would seem to follow that it is not one which necessarily arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

As against this we are met by these suggestions: First, that a corporation created by Congress has a right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in respect to any litigation which it may have, except as specifically restricted by some act of Congress. Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; Pacific Railroad Removal Cases, 115 U. S. 1, sub nom. Union P. R. Co. v. Myers, 29 L. ed. 319, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1113. The argument of Chief Justice Marshall in support of this was, briefly, that a corporation has no powers and can incur no obligations except as authorized or provided for in its charter. Its power to do *any act [510] which it assumes to do, and its liability to any obligation which is sought to be cast upon it, depend upon its charter, and when such charter is given by one of the laws of the United States, there is the primary question of the extent and meaning of that law. In other words, as to every act or obligation the first question is whether that act or obligation is within the scope of the law of Congress, and that being the matter which must be first determined, a suit by or against the corporation is one which involves a construction of the terms of its charter; in other words, a question arising under the law of Congress. But that argument is not pertinent here. The right of the contestants in an adverse suit, as we have seen, does not always call for any construction of an act of Congress. It may depend solely on local rules or customs or state statutes, and in that case does not involve a dispute or controversy "which depends upon the construction or effect of the Constitution, or some law or treaty of the United States. . . . In most actions concerning mining claims, the parties agree as to the proper rule of construction to be applied to the mining laws, and the controversies are usually limited to questions of fact relating to the compliance with these laws. In such cases the Federal courts have no original jurisdiction, unless there is a diversity of citizenship; but in cases arising under § 2326 of the Revised Statutes, the authority for the action is found in the legislation of Congress. Without this authority the action for the purposes avowed by the statute could not be maintained." 2 Lindley, Mines, § 748. A statute authorizing an action to establish a right is very different from one which creates a right to be established. An action brought under the one may involve no controversy as to the scope and effect of the statute, while in the other case it necessarily involves such a controversy, for the thing to be decided is the extent of the right given by the statute.

Again, it is said that this adverse suit is one step in the administration of the laws of the United States in respect to mineral lands, and therefore it must be presumed that Congress intended that such step should rightfully be taken in one of the courts of the United States. This suggestion was [511] open to the *consideration of Congress when it was determining where the adverse suit should be brought, but that it did not consider it vital is evident from the conceded fact that, unless the amount in controversy is over $2,000, no jurisdiction attaches to the Federal court. In other words, Congress did not deem the matter of the jurisdiction of those courts so essential a part of the administration of the land laws of the United States as to vest in them jurisdiction of all such controversies, but left a large, if not a major, portion of them to be determined in the state courts. It evidently contemplated the fact that a controversy about a right of possession might as appropriately be decided in a state as in a Federal court, and, not prescribing in which court it should be litigated, left the matter to be determined by the ordinary rules in respect to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts.

Counsel also calls our attention to the difference in the procedure in the disposal of agricultural and mineral lands. With respect to the former, all proceedings are carried on in the Land Department, and it is only after the legal title has passed by patent that inquiry is permissible in the courts, while in respect to the latter the aid of the courts is invoked before the issue of a patent and in order to determine, to some extent, the right thereto. Noticing this distinction, he also notes the fact that a contest in respect to the validity of a patent for agricultural lands can be litigated in the Federal courts, and hence draws the inference that a contest preliminary to a patent for mineral lands, and involving the right thereto, must also be one which can be litigated in the same courts. But we think the true inference from this difference of procedure is to the contrary, because, in respect to agricultural lands, it is settled that all questions of fact are determined by the Land Department, and that after the issue of a patent only questions of law are open for consideration in the courts, and, as the laws of Congress alone determine the matter of the disposal of the public lands, it follows that the questions of law which are thus open for consideration are those arising under the acts of Congress. While on the other hand, as we have heretofore shown, in these adverse suits preliminary to a patent [512] of mineral lands not merely questions of law arising under the statutes of the United States, but questions of fact and questions arising under local rules and customs and state statutes are open for consideration. The scope of the inquiry which is permissible in the two cases emphasizes the fact that in the latter case the controversy may be one not arising under the Constitution or laws of Congress.

Again, it is said that Congress has in these cases prescribed a specific rule of limitation which is ordinarily different from that obtaining under state statutes in respect to actions for the recovery of possession; that it has authorized decrees in peculiar form, some partly for and partly against each of the different parties, and also some adversely to both. 21 Stat. at L. 505, chap. 140; 177 U. S.

Richmond Min. Co. v. Rose, 114 U. S. 576, 585, 29 L. ed. 273, 276, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1055; Perego v. Dodge, 163 U. S. 160, 167, 41 L. ed. 113, 118, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 971. But incidental matters such as these are not decisive, especially as confessedly the statute leaves the jurisdiction over those cases in which the matter in controversy does not exceed $2,000 in value in the state courts. This fact shows conclusively that Congress was not intending to carve out a new jurisdiction for the Federal courts, and also that it did not doubt that the state courts would carry into effect its enactments in reference to limitations and procedure.

And, finally, it is said that Congress cannot confer any jurisdiction on the state courts, that they may decline to entertain these adverse suits, and that Congress cannot compel them to do so. But here again we are met with the fact that Congress has left all controversies in respect to right of possession, not exceeding $2,000 in value, to the state courts. It evidently proceeded upon the supposition (which is a rightful one) that, as by the express terms of the Constitution, article 6, clause 2, "this Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, . . . shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding," no courts, national or state, would decline to carry into effect the acts of Congress. Whether, if a state court should refuse to act under these statutes, the matter is one which could be corrected by error in this court, is immaterial. *If it shall appear that state [513] courts decline to entertain such jurisdiction, and that it cannot be enforced upon them, Congress may further legislate. Evidently, thus far in these cases, as in many others, there has been no reason to suppose that any state court would decline to enforce the laws of the United States or to carry into effect their provisions. And, as well said by Mr. Justice Miller in Iron Silver Min. Co. v. Campbell, 135 U. S. 286, 299, 34 L. ed. 155, 160, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 765, 769:

"The purpose of the statute seems to be that where there are two claimants to the same mine, neither of whom has yet acquired the title from the government, they shall bring their respective claims to the same property, in the manner prescribed in the statute, before some judicial tribunal located in the neighborhood where the property is, and that the result of this judicial investigation shall govern the action of the officers of the Land Department in determining which of these claimants shall have the patent, the final evidence of title, from the government."

If every adverse suit could be taken into the Federal courts, obviously in some of the larger western states the litigation would not be "before some judicial tribunal located in the neighborhood where the property is," for in them the Federal courts are often held only in the capital or chief city of the state and at a great distance from certain parts of the mining regions there.

So, we conclude, as we did in the prior case, that although these suits may sometimes so present questions arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States that the Federal courts will have jurisdiction, yet the mere fact that a suit is an adverse suit authorized by the statutes of Congress is not in and of itself sufficient to vest jurisdiction in the Federal courts.

[514] It appears that there were two cases in the circuit court of Idaho, that they were there consolidated for trial, and the consolidated case taken on appeal to the circuit court of appeals. Of the two original cases, No. 81 on the docket of the circuit court was commenced by the appellees in that court. The other, No. 102, was commenced by the appellant in the district court of the first judicial district of the state of Idaho in and *for Shoshone county, and by the appellees removed to the Federal court. The matters involved in the two cases were similar, and hence the consolidation. Under these circumstances, and in view of the conclusion to which we have arrived, the order will be that the judgment of the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit is reversed, and the case remanded to the circuit court, northern division, district of Idaho, with instructions to reverse its decree and enter a decree dismissing case No. 81, and an order remanding case No. 102 to the state court.

Mr. Justice White did not hear the argument and took no part in the decision of this case.

Mr. Justice McKenna dissents.

CLEVELAND, CINCINNATI, CHICAGO, &
ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff.
in Err.,

v.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS
ex rel. THOMAS M. JETT.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 514-523.)

Interstate commerce—statute requiring passenger trains to stop at county seat.

The requirement that all regular passenger trains must stop at county seats, which is made by the Illinois act of March 21, 1874, § 26, constitutes a direct burden upon interstate commerce in violation of the United States Constitution, so far, at least, as that

NOTE.—That state laws cannot regulate interstate commerce—see Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. (Va.) 13 L. R. A. 107, and note.

As to state laws interfering with interstate or foreign commerce—see note to McCanna & F. Co. v. Citizens' Trust & Surety Co. 24 C. C. A. 13.

As to state regulation of commerce—see notes to Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 32 L. ed. U. S. 229; Harmon v. Chicago, 37 L. ed. U. S. 216; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 38 L. ed. U. S. 1041; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Adams, 39 L. ed. U. S. 311.

868

statute requires through interstate passenger trains to stop at such stations when adequate train service has been provided for local traffic.

[No. 198.]

Argued and Submitted March 16, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois to review a decision affirming a judgment awarding a mandamus to compel a railroad company to stop passenger trains at a county seat. Reversed.

See same case below, 175 Ill. 359, 51 N. E. 842.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

*This was a petition for a writ of mandamus filed in the circuit court for the county of Montgomery, by the state's attorney for that county, to compel the defendant railway company, which for several years past has operated, and is now operating, a railroad from St. Louis, Missouri, through the county of Montgomery and the city of Hillsboro, the county seat of such county, to Indianapolis, Indiana, to stop a regular passenger train designated as the "Knickerbocker Special" at the city of Hillsboro a sufficient length of time to receive and let off passengers with safety. [515]

The petition was based upon section 26 of an act of the General Assembly of Illinois, entitled "An Act in Relation to Fences and Operating Railroads," approved March 21, 1874, which reads as follows:

"Every railroad corporation shall cause its passenger trains to stop upon its (their) arrival at each station advertised by such corporation as a place of receiving and discharging passengers upon and from such trains, a sufficient length of time to receive and let off such passengers with safety: Provided, all regular passenger trains shall stop a sufficient length of time at the railroad stations of county seats to receive and let off passengers with safety."

The answer of the railroad company averred that the company furnished four regular passenger trains each way a day, passing through and stopping at Hillsboro, and that they amply accommodated the travel, and afforded every reasonable facility to such city; that the Knickerbocker Special was a train especially devoted to carrying interstate transportation between the city of St. Louis and the city of New York; that the travel between these cities had grown to such an extent that it had become necessary to put on a through fast train, which connected with other similar trains on the Lake Shore and New York Central roads, and that it was necessary to put on this train because the trains theretofore run, none of which had ever been taken off, could not, by reason of stopping at Hillsboro and other similar stations, make the time necessary for eastern connections, or carry passengers from St. Louis to New York within the time which the demands of business and interstate *traf- [516] fic required; that the Knickerbocker Special is not a regular passenger train for carrying passengers from one point to another in the state of Illinois, such traffic being amply provided for by other trains, and that the Knickerbocker Special is used exclusively for interstate traffic from and to points without the state of Illinois; that it is not subject to regulation by the statute of Illinois providing that all trains shall stop at all county seats, and that to subject it to the statutes of the various states through which it passes, requiring it to stop at county seats, would wholly destroy the usefulness of the train, and would impede and obstruct interstate commerce, and that obedience to the statute in question would require it to abandon the train.

177 U. S.

A demurrer to this answer was sustained, and the defendant electing to stand upon it as a full defense to the petition, a final judgment was rendered and a peremptory writ of mandamus awarded against the defendant. On appeal to the supreme court of the state this judgment was affirmed. Whereupon the railway company sued out a writ of error from this court.

Mr. John T. Dye argued the cause and, with Mr. George F. McNulty, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The line between the exclusive power of Congress to regulate commerce among the states, and the power of the states to regulate their internal affairs, is drawn as distinctly in this case as it was in Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4.

It cannot be too strongly insisted upon that the right of continuous transportation from one end of the country to the other is essential, in modern times, to that freedom of commerce from the restraints which the states might choose to impose on it that the commerce clause was intended to secure. Ibid.

A state can do nothing which will directly burden or impede the interstate traffic of a railroad company, or impair the usefulness of its facilities for such traffic.

Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 163 U. S. 142, 41 L. ed. 107, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1096; Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall. 584, 22 L. ed. 173; Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564.

Neither does this case come within that class where laws having for their object the personal security of passengers while traveling from one state to another, within their respective limits, have been held valid.

New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 41 L. ed. 853, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

Mr. E. C. Akin submitted the cause for defendant in error. Messrs. C. A. Hill and B. D. Monroe were with him on the brief.

In granting a charter to a private corporation, the state does not part with any of its power to enact proper police regulations operating upon such corporation.

177 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McClelland, 25 Ill. 140.

Every person and corporation within the territorial limits of a state is, while there, subject to the constitutional authority of the state government.

Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 116 U. S. 307, 29 L. ed. 636, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191.

A state legislature has power to regulate railroad corporations in the exercise of their corporate franchises, so as to provide for the public safety, welfare, and convenience.

Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Loomis, 13 Ill. 548, 56 Am. Dec. 471; Potter's Dwarrris on Stat. 458; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 715; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McClelland, 25 Ill. 140; Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery, 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 105 Ill. 657; People ex rel. Walker v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 120 Ill. 49, 10 N. E. 657; Illinois C. R. Co. v. People, 143 Ill. 435, 19 L. R. A. 119, 33 N. E. 178; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465.

When an act of Congress is claimed to be unconstitutional, the presumption is in favor of validity; and it is only when the question is free from any reasonable doubt, that this court should hold an act of the law-making power of the government to be in violation of that fundamental instrument upon which all the powers of the government rest.

Nicol v. Amcs, 173 U. S. 509, 43 L. ed. 786, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522.

And the same rule should, of course, apply to an act of the legislature of a state.

Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court: [516]

Few classes of cases have become more common of recent years than those wherein the police power of the state over the vehicles of interstate commerce has been drawn in question. That such power exists and will be enforced, notwithstanding the constitutional authority of Congress to regulate such commerce, is evident from the large number of cases in which we have sustained the validity of local laws designed to secure the safety and comfort of passengers, employees, persons crossing railway tracks, and adjacent property owners, as well as other regulations intended for the public good.

*We have recently applied this doctrine to state laws requiring locomotive engineers to be examined and licensed by the state authorities (Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 508, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564), requiring such engineers to be examined from time to time with respect to their ability to distinguish colors (Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 32 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28), requiring telegraph companies to receive despatches and to transmit and deliver them with due diligence, as applied to messages from outside the state (Western U. Teleg. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 40 L. ed. 1105, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934), forbidding the running of freight trains on Sunday (Henning- ton v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 41 L. ed. 166, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1086), requiring railway companies to fix their rates annually for the transportation of passengers and freight, and also requiring them to post a printed copy of such rates at all their stations (Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Fuller, 17 Wall. 560, 21 L. ed. 710), forbidding the consolidation of parallel or competing lines of railway (Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 677, 40 L. ed. 849, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 714), regulating the heating of passenger cars, and directing guards and guard posts to be placed on railroad bridges and trestles and the approaches thereto (New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New York, 165 U. S. 628, 41 L. ed. 853, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418), providing that no contract shall exempt any railroad corporation from the liability of a common carrier or a carrier of passengers, which would have existed if no contract had been made (Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Solan, 169 U. S. 133, 42 L. ed. 688, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 289), and declaring that when a common carrier accepts for transportation anything directed to a point of destination beyond the terminus of his own line or route he shall be deemed thereby to assume an obligation for its safe carriage to such point of destination, unless at the time of such acceptance such carrier be released or exempted from such liability by contract in writing, signed by the owner or his agent. Richmond & A. R. Co. v. R. A. Patterson Tobacco Co. 169 U. S. 311, 42 L. ed. 759, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335. In none of these cases was it thought that the regulations were unreasonable or operated in any just sense as a restriction upon interstate commerce.

But for the reason that these laws were considered unreasonable and to unnecessarily hamper commerce between the states, we have felt ourselves constrained in a large number of cases to express our disapproval [518] of such as provided for taxing directly* or indirectly the carrying on or the profits of interstate commerce. We have also held to be invalid a statute of Louisiana requiring those engaged in interstate commerce to give all persons upon public conveyances equal rights and privileges in all parts of the conveyance, without distinction or discrimination on account of race or color (Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547), another regulating the charges of railway companies for passengers or freight between places in different states (Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 31, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 4), another requiring telegraph companies to deliver despatches by messenger to the persons to whom the same are addressed, so far as they attempted to regulate the delivery of such despatches at places situated in another state (Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 1187, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 306, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1126), and still another forbidding common carriers from bringing intoxicating liquors into the state without being furnished with a certificate that the consignee was authorized to sell intoxicating liquors in the county (Bow- man v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465, 31 L. ed. 700, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 823, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689, 1062).

Several acts in pari materia with the one under consideration have been before this court, and have been approved or disapproved as they have seemed reasonable or unreasonable, or bore more or less heavily upon the power of railways to regulate their trains in the respective and sometimes conflicting interests of local and through traffic. In the earliest of these cases (Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 163 U. S. 142, 41 L. ed. 107, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1096), the very statute of Illinois under consideration in this case, as construed and applied by the supreme court of that state, was held to be an unreasonable restriction upon interstate traffic, in requiring a fast mail train from Chicago to places south of the Ohio river, over an interstate highway established by authority of Congress, to delay the transportation of its interstate passengers and United States mail by turning aside from its direct route and running to a station (Cairo) 3½ miles away from a point on that route, and back again to the same point, before proceeding on its way; and to do this for the purpose of discharging and receiving passengers at that station, for whom the railroad company furnished other and ample accommodation. Said Mr. Justice Gray: "The state may doubtless *com-[519]pel the railroad company to perform the duty imposed by its charter of carrying passengers and goods between its termini within the state. But so long, at least, as that duty is adequately performed by the company, the state cannot, under the guise of compelling its performance, interfere with the performance of paramount duties to which the company has been subjected by the Constitution and laws of the United States."

Upon the contrary, in Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 41 L. ed. 1064, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 627, a state statute requiring every railroad to stop all its regular passenger trains running wholly within the state at its stations in all county seats long enough to take on and discharge passengers with safety was held to be a reasonable exercise of the police power of the state, even as applied to a train connecting with a train of the same company running into another state, and carrying some interstate passengers as well as the mail. The case was distinguished from that of the Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois in the fact that the train in question ran wholly within the state of Minnesota, and could have stopped at the county seats without deviating from its course; and that the statute of Minnesota expressly provided that the act should not apply to through trains entering the state from any other state, or to transcontinental trains of any railroad. Speaking of police regulations for the government of railroads while operating roads within the jurisdiction of the state, it was said that "they are not in themselves regulations of interstate commerce; and it is only when they operate as such in the circumstances of their application and conflict with the express or presumed will of Congress exerted upon the same subject, that they can be required to give way to the paramount authority of the Constitution of the United States." The railroad in this case was treated as a purely domestic corporation, notwithstanding it connected, as most railroads do, with railroads in other states.

In the most recent case upon this subject (Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 173 U. S. 285, 43 L. ed. 702, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 465), a statute of Ohio providing that every railroad company should cause three of its regular trains carrying passengers, if so many are run daily, Sundays excepted, to stop at [520] a station, city, or village containing *over 3,000 inhabitants, for a time sufficient to receive and let off passengers, was held to be, in the absence of legislation by Congress upon the subject, consistent with the Constitution of the United States, when applied to trains engaged in interstate commerce through the state of Ohio. In delivering the opinion of the court Mr. Justice Harlan observed: "The statute does not stand in the way of the railroad company running as many trains as it may choose between Chicago and Buffalo without stopping at intermediate points, or only at very large cities on the route, if in the contingency named in the statute the required number of trains stop at each place containing 3,000 inhabitants long enough to receive and let off passengers. It seems from the evidence that the average time required to stop a train and receive and let off passengers is only three minutes. Certainly the state of Ohio did not endow the plaintiff in error with the rights of a corporation for the purpose simply of subserving the convenience of passengers traveling through the state between points outside of its territory. . . . It was for the state to take into consideration all the circumstances affecting passenger travel within its limits, and as far as practicable make such regulations as were just to all who might pass over the road in question. It was entitled, of course, to provide for the convenience of persons desiring to travel from one point to another in the state on domestic trains. But it was not bound to ignore the convenience of those who desired to travel from places in the state to places beyond its limits, or the convenience of those outside of the state who wished to come into it. Its statute is in aid of interstate commerce of that character. It was not compelled to look only to the convenience of those who wished to pass through the state without stopping." This case is readily distinguishable from the one under consideration, in the fact that the statute of Ohio required only that three regular passenger trains should stop at every station containing 3,000 inhabitants, leaving the company at liberty to run as many through passenger trains exceeding three per day as it chose, without restriction as to stoppage at particular stations. In other words, it left open the loophole which the statute of Illinois has effectually closed.

177 U. S.

*The question broadly presented in this[521] case is this: Whether a state statute is valid which requires every passenger train, regardless of the number of such trains passing each way daily and of the character of the traffic carried by them, to stop at every county seat through which such trains may pass by day or night, and regardless also of the fact whether another train designated especially for local traffic may stop at the same station within a few minutes before or after the arrival of the train in question.

The demurrer to the answer admits that the railway company furnishes a sufficient number of regular passenger trains (four each way a day), to accommodate all the local and through business along the line of the road, and that all of such trains stop at Hillsboro; that none of such trains have been taken off, and all of which ran prior to the putting on of the Knickerbocker Special still run and still stop at Hillsboro, and that they furnish ample and sufficient accommodation to all persons desiring to travel to and from that place; that the Knickerbocker Special was put on in response to an urgent demand on the part of the through traveling public from St. Louis to New York, and that it was necessary, as the passenger trains theretofore used could not, by reason of stopping at way stations, make the time required for eastern connections, and if compelled to stop at county seats the company will be compelled to abandon the train, to the great damage of the traveling public and to the railway company.

It is evident that the power attempted to be exercised under this statute would operate as a serious restriction upon the speed of trains engaged in interstate traffic, and might, in some cases, render it impossible for trunk lines running through the state of Illinois to compete with other lines running through states in which no such restrictions were applied. If such passenger trains may be compelled to stop at county seats it is difficult to see why the legislature may not compel them to stop at every station,—a requirement which would be practically destructive of through travel, where there were competing lines unhampered by such regulations. While, as we held in the Lake Shore Case, railways are bound to provide primarily and adequately *for the accommodation of those[522] to whom they are directly tributary, and who not only have granted to them their franchise, but who may have contributed largely to the construction of the road, they are bound to do no more than this, and may then provide special facilities for the accommodation of through traffic. We are not obliged to shut our eyes to the fact that competition among railways for through passenger traffic has become very spirited, and we think they have a right to demand that they shall not be unnecessarily hampered in their efforts to obtain a share of such traffic. It is evident, however, that neither the greater safety of their tracks, the superior comfort of their coaches or sleeping berths, nor the excellence of their tables would insure them such share if they were unable to compete with their rivals in the matter of time. The great efforts of modern engineering have been directed to combining safety with the greatest possible speed in transportation, both by land and water. The public demand this; the railway and steamship companies are anxious in their own interests to furnish it, and local legislation ought not to stand in the way of it.

871

With no disposition whatever to vary or qualify the cases above cited, neither the conclusions of the court nor the tenor of the opinions are opposed to the principle we hold to in this case, that, after all local conditions have been adequately met, railways have the legal right to adopt special provisions for through traffic, and legislative interference therewith is unreasonable, and an infringement upon that provision of the Constitution which we have held requires that commerce between the states shall be free and unobstructed.

While the statute in question is operative only in the state of Illinois, it is obnoxious to the criticism made of the Louisiana statute in Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 485, 24 L. ed. 547, that "while it purports only to control the carrier when engaged within the state, it must necessarily influence his conduct, to some extent, in the management of his business throughout his entire voyage. . . .

[523] If each state was at liberty to regulate the conduct of carriers while within its jurisdiction, the confusion likely to follow could not but be productive of great inconvenience and unnecessary hardship. Each state could provide for its own *passengers and regulate the transportation of its own freight regardless of the interests of others." The distinction between this statute and regulations requiring passenger trains to stop at railroad crossings and drawbridges, and to reduce the speed of trains when running through crowded thoroughfares; requiring its tracks to be fenced, and a bell and whistle to be attached to each engine, signal lights to be carried at night, and tariff and time tables to be posted at proper places, and other similar requirements contributing to the safety, comfort, and convenience of their patrons,—is too obvious to require discussion. Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 307, 334, sub nom. Stone v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 29 L. ed. 636, 645, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 334, 388, 1191.

We are of opinion that the act in question is a direct burden upon interstate commerce, and the judgment of the supreme court of the state of Illinois must therefore be reversed, and the case remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice Shiras concurring:

We concur in this judgment on the proposition that the act of the legislature of Illinois, whether reasonable or unreasonable, wise or foolish, is, as applied to the facts of this case, an attempt by the state to directly regulate interstate commerce, and, as such attempt, is beyond the power of the state.

DE LAMAR'S NEVADA GOLD MINING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JAMES NESBITT.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 523-529.)

Appeal—Federal question—decision as to mining claim.

1. The mere fact that defendant in a suit to quiet title to a mining claim claims title under a location made under the general mining laws of the United States is not in itself sufficient to raise a Federal question which will sustain a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to a state court, where the gravamen of defendant's argument was not the denial of any right under the mining laws, but the invalidity of the proceedings in a state court under which the plaintiffs claimed to have acquired title by virtue of a prior location.
2. A decision of a state court in favor of a right or privilege claimed by a party under an act of Congress will not be reviewed in the Supreme Court of the United States at the instance of the adverse party, who made no claim under that statute.

[No. 152.]

Argued March 1, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Nevada to review a decision affirming a judgment for plaintiff in a suit to quiet title to a mine. Dismissed.

See same case below, 52 Pac. 609; rehearing denied in 53 Pac. 178.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

*This was a suit begun in the district court [524] for the fourth judicial district of Nevada by Nesbitt, as part owner of the Fraction mine, against one William Davidson, the alleged locator of the Sleeper mining claim, covering the same ground as the Fraction mine, to quiet plaintiff's title and that of his co-tenants to the Fraction mine, and to recover a money judgment against the defendant.

The complaint alleged that the plaintiff and his co-owners were tenants in common, and since May 15, 1892, had been in possession of the Fraction mining claim, pursuant to the laws of the United States, and that the defendant also claimed a right to possession upon the alleged location of a certain mining claim called by him the Sleeper mine; that such location was made subsequent to the location of the Fraction mine, and that the plaintiff had protested in the land office at Carson City against the issuance of a patent to the defendant.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois ex rel. Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what constitutes Federal question; when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

The answer denied the ownership and possession of the plaintiff of the Fraction mine, and alleged as a defense the invalidity of the proceedings under which Nesbitt and his cotenants had acquired the titles of the original locators to the Fraction mine.

The case came on for trial before the court without a jury, and resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff, whereby it was decreed that the title of plaintiff and his cotenants to the Fraction mine be quieted, and the claim of the defendant to that portion of the Sleeper mine embraced within the boundary lines of the Fraction mine be rejected; with a further decree for the recovery of certain incidental fees and costs. Upon motion for a new trial it was ordered that De Lamar's Nevada Gold Mining Company be substituted as defendant in the place of Davidson, deceased, and that the motion for a new trial be overruled. Defendant appealed to the supreme court of the state, which affirmed the judgment. 52 Pac. 609. Whereupon it sued out a writ of error from this court.

Messrs. J. H. Ralston and William M. Stewart argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Walter A. Johnston and George S. Sawyer argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

[525] *Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant, known as De Lamar's Nevada Gold Mining Company (hereinafter referred to as the mining company), claims title to the property in question through an application filed by Davidson in the land office at Carson City, in pursuance of Rev. Stat. § 2325, for a patent to the Sleeper mine, against the issue of which patent plaintiff Nesbitt filed an adverse claim as to so much of the Sleeper mine as was embraced within the boundaries of the Fraction mine.

Plaintiff Nesbitt took title to the Fraction mine through a location made May 12, 1892, by W. De Beque, H. Stevens, and A. Borth, who, it appeared, performed all the acts required to make a valid location. Plaintiff claimed that he and George Nesbitt, his brother, had acquired all the right, title, and interest of De Beque and Stevens to this mine through certain judgments recovered in a justice's court against De Beque and Stevens, upon which executions had been issued, and a sale made to the Nesbitt brothers of their interests in the Fraction mine. This left the Nesbitts and Borth the owners of that mine as tenants in common. The court held these judgments to be void, but admissible for the purpose of showing or tending to show color of title and adverse possession in the Nesbitts and Borth. It further appeared that the Nesbitts and Borth did assessment work in each of the years 1895, 1896, and 1897 to the full amount required by law (§ 2324); that no work was done in either of the years 1893 and 1894, but that the Nesbitt brothers, in December of each of said years, had a notice recorded in the county recorder's office, where the original notice of the location of the Fraction mine was filed, declaring their intention in good faith to hold and work the mine. Meantime, however, the Sleeper mine was located January 1, 1895, the boundaries of which took in the Fraction mine.

*The supreme court held the vital question [526] to be whether the notices which the Nesbitt brothers caused to be recorded of their intention to hold and work the mine had the legal effect of saving it from being subject to a relocation by Davidson. Revised Statutes, § 2324, provides that, until a patent has been issued upon a mining claim previously located, "not less than $100 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year," and that "upon a failure to comply with these conditions the claim or mine upon which such failure occurred shall be open to relocation in the same manner as if no location of the same had ever been made." But, owing probably to the stress of the financial panic then prevailing, Congress passed on November 3, 1893, an act (28 Stat. at L. 6, chap. 12) providing that the requirements of § 2324 be suspended for that year, "so that no mining claim which has been regularly located and recorded as required by the local laws and mining regulations shall be subject to forfeiture for non-performance of the annual assessment for the year 1893," provided a notice of an intention to hold and work the claim be filed in the proper office. This act was extended to the year 1894 by a subsequent statute. 28 Stat. at L. 114, chap. 142. Plaintiff relied upon these statutes, and the court held that, the Nesbitt brothers and Borth having had the notice required by the statutes recorded, under an agreement between themselves recognizing each other as co-owners and tenants in common, and under the honest belief of all three that the Nesbitt brothers had legally acquired all the interest of De Beque and Stevens by virtue of the sale made under these judgments, the mine had not been forfeited and was not subject to relocation when the location of the Sleeper mine was made, and therefore that the location of such mine was invalid so far as it covered the Fraction mining claim.

From this summary of the pleadings and findings of the court, it is clear that the defendant set up no right, title, privilege, or immunity under a statute of the United States, the decision of which was adverse to it in that particular. The mere fact that the mining company claimed title under a location made by Davidson under the general mining laws of the United States * (Rev. Stat. [527] § 2325), was not in itself sufficient to raise a Federal question, since no dispute arose as to the legality of such location, except so far as it covered ground previously located, or as to the construction of this section. We have repeatedly held that to sustain a writ of error from this court something more must appear than that the parties claim title under an act of Congress.

The subject is fully discussed and the prior authorities cited in the recent case of Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, ante, 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222, which was also a contest between rival claimants of a mine under §§ 2325 and 2326. It was held that the provision in § 2326 for the trial of adverse claims to a mining patent "by a court of competent jurisdiction" did not in itself vest jurisdiction in the Federal courts, although, of course, jurisdiction would be sustained if the requirements of amount and diverse citizenship existed; and that the judgment of the supreme court of the state in such case could not be reviewed in this court simply because the parties were claiming rights under a Federal statute. A like ruling was made in the still later case of Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 176 U. S. 321, ante, 486, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 399. See also California Powder Works v. Davis, 151 U. S. 389, 38 L. ed. 206, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350.

If the law were otherwise, then every land case wherein one of the parties claimed title, either immediately or remotely through a patent of the United States, would present a Federal question; and as most of the land titles in the western states of this country are traceable back to a right under the laws of the United States, every such case might be held reviewable by this court on writ of error. This position, of course, is untenable. If the fact that the plaintiff takes title, directly or indirectly, from the United States, be insufficient to create a case "arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States" within the meaning of the jurisdictional act of 1888, much less does it make one of a "title, right, privilege, or immunity" claimed under a statute of the United States, an adverse decision of which by the highest court of a state entitles the injured party under Rev. Stat. § 709, to a writ of error from this court. To raise a Federal ques-

[528] tion the right must be one claimed *under a particular statute of the United States, the validity, construction, or applicability of which was made the subject of dispute in the state court; and the decision upon such statute must have been adverse to the plaintiff in error. No Federal question was presented by the pleadings in the case, and the whole gravamen of defendant's argument was, not the denial to it of any right under the mining laws of the United States, but the invalidity of the proceedings under which the Nesbitt brothers had acquired the interest of De Beque and Stevens in the Fraction mine.

There was undoubtedly a Federal question raised in the case, but it was raised by the plaintiff Nesbitt, who based his right to recover upon the acts of Congress of November 3, 1893, and July 18, 1894, suspending the forfeiture of mining claims for failure to do the required amount of work. The decision of the court, however, was in favor of, and not against, the right claimed under this statute, and of this construction the plaintiff in error is in no position to take advantage, as it made no claim under those statutes. This subject was considered in the case of Missouri v. Andriano, 138 U. S. 496, 34 L. ed. 1012, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385, in which the contest was between rival claimants to the office of sheriff. Respondent relied upon the fact that he had received a majority of the votes cast at a popular election for the office. Relator claimed the election to be void under the state Constitution, which declared that no one should be elected or appointed to office who was not a citizen of the United States. Respondent admitted his foreign birth, but claimed that, under Rev. Stat. § 2172, he became a citizen by the naturalization of his father. The decision of the court was in his favor, and it was held that the relator had no right to a review of the question in this court, although if the judgment had been adverse to the claim of the respondent there would have been no doubt of his right to a writ of error. It was said that the right or privilege must be personal to the plaintiff in error, and that he was not entitled to a review where the right or privilege was asserted by the other party, and the decision was in favor of that party, and adverse to himself. It is manifest that the object of § 709 was not to give a right of review wherever the validity of an act of *Congress was drawn in question, but to pre-[529] vent states from frittering away the authority of the Federal government by limiting too closely the construction of Federal statutes. Hence the writ of error will only lie where the decision is adverse to the right claimed. To the same effect are Dover v. Richards, 151 U. S. 658, 666, 38 L. ed. 305, 308, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 452; Sayward v. Denny, 158 U. S. 180, 39 L. ed. 941, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Jersey City & B. R. Co. v. Morgan, 160 U. S. 288, 40 L. ed. 430, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 276; Rae v. Homestead Loan & Guaranty Co. 176 U. S. 121, ante, 398, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, Abbott v. Tacoma Bank of Commerce, 175 U. S. 409, sub nom. Abbott v. National Bank of Commerce, ante, 217, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 153.

874

Except so far as the case under consideration required a construction of the above-mentioned acts of Congress suspending the forfeiture of mining claims, the questions were purely of a local nature, and not subject to review in this court.

There is no Federal question presented by the record in this case, and it must therefore be dismissed.

Mr. Justice McKenna dissented.

JOHN BAD ELK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 529-538.)

Arrest—on Indian reservation—without

NOTE.—As to arrest with and without a warrant—see State v. Hunter (N. C.) 8 L. R. A. 529, and note.

As to what information an accused person is entitled to at the time of his arrest—see State v. Taylor (Vt.) 42 L. R. A. 673, and note.

177 U. S.

warrant—resistance—power of Indian policeman—erroneous instruction as to right to resist.

1. An officer at the Pine Ridge Indian reservation in South Dakota has no authority to arrest a resident on such reservation without a warrant, on a charge of misdemeanor not committed in his presence.
2. Indian policemen are not marshals or deputy marshals within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 788, giving such officials in each state the same powers in executing the laws of the United States as sheriffs and their deputies may have by law in executing the laws thereof.
3. An instruction that officers had the right to use all necessary force to arrest the accused, and that he had no right to resist, is prejudicial error where the accused, who was thereupon convicted of murder committed in resisting an arrest, had not been guilty of any offense for which the officers had any legal authority to make the arrest.

[No. 350.]

Submitted February 26, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of South Dakota to review a sentence of conviction for murder. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Thomas B. McMartin submitted the cause for plaintiff in error. Mr. S. B. Van Buskirk was with him on the brief.

Assistant Attorney General Boyd submitted the cause for defendant in error.

[530] *Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error was convicted in April, 1899, in the circuit court of the United States, in South Dakota, of the murder on March 13, 1899, of John Kills Back at the Pine Ridge Indian reservation, in South Dakota, and sentenced to be hanged. The case is brought here on writ of error to the circuit court.

Both the deceased and the plaintiff in error were Indians and policemen, residing on the reservation at the time of the killing.

Upon the trial it appeared that the plaintiff in error, on March 8, 1899, while out of doors, fired a couple of shots from *his gun at or near the place where he resided. Soon after the firing, one Captain Gleason, who stated that he was what is called an "additional farmer" on the same reservation, having heard the shots, and meeting the plaintiff in error, asked him if he had done that shooting, and he said that he had; that "he had shot into the air for fun;" to which Gleason responded by saying to him, "Come around to the office in a little while, and we will talk the matter over." Thereupon they separated. As he did not come to the office, Gleason, after waiting several days, gave verbal orders to three of the Indian policemen to go and arrest plaintiff in error at his mother's house near by and take him to the agency, some 25 miles distant. No reason for making the arrest was given, nor any charge made against him. The policemen, one of whom was the deceased, went to the house where the plaintiff in error was stopping, and came back and reported to Gleason that he was not there, and they were then ordered to return and wait for him and to arrest him. They returned to the house, but came back again and reported that the plaintiff in error said that he would go with them to the agency in the morning; that it was too late to go with them that night. Gleason then told them to watch him and see that he did not go away, and in the morning to take him to the Pine Ridge agency.

177 U. S.

The policemen then again went back to the house where plaintiff in error was staying and met him coming towards his mother's place. He went into the house, and one of their number followed him; found him smoking, and told him that they had come to take him to the agency at Pine Ridge. Plaintiff in error refused to go, and the policeman went outside. Another of them then went into the house, and in a few minutes both he and the plaintiff in error came out, and the latter saddled his horse and went over to the house of a friend, and they followed him. It was getting dark when he came back to his mother's house, still followed by them, and while following the plaintiff in error to his house on this last occasion they were joined by others, so that when he went into the house there were four or five men standing about it. In a short *time the plaintiff in error came out, and asked of those outside, "What are you here bothering me for?" The deceased said: "Cousin, you are a policeman, and know what the rules and orders are." To which plaintiff in error replied: "Yes; I know what the rules and orders are, but I told you I would go with you to Pine Ridge in the morning." Then, according to the evidence for the prosecution, the plaintiff in error, without further provocation, shot the deceased, who died within a few minutes.

The policemen had their arms with them when they went up to where the plaintiff in error was at the time the shooting was done.

This is substantially the case made by the prosecution.

There is an entire absence of any evidence of a complaint having been made before any magistrate or officer charging an offense against the plaintiff in error, and there is no proof that he had been guilty of any criminal offense, or that he had even violated any rule or regulation for the government of the Indians on the reservation, or that any warrant had been issued for his arrest. On the contrary, Gleason swears that his orders to arrest plaintiff in error were not in writing, but given orally. Indeed, it does not appear that Gleason had any authority even to entertain a complaint or to issue a warrant in any event.

The plaintiff in error testified in his own behalf, and said that during the day he had been looking after the schools along the creek near the station; that that was his duty as a policeman; that he arrived at his mother's house about half past four in the afternoon, and soon afterwards an Indian named High Eagle came into the house, stayed a minute or two, but did not speak, then went out doors, and Lone Bear came in, and said that he was directed to take the plaintiff in error to Pine Ridge to Major Clapp. To which the plaintiff replied: "All right, but my horse is used up, and I shall have to go to my brother's, Harrison White Thunder's, and get another horse." Lone Bear said all right. Then the plaintiff in error started for his brother's, and when he got there found that the horses were out on the range, and when they came in his brother promised to bring one of them down to him.

[533] In this he was corroborated by his *brother, who testified that he brought the horse over about dark. On his way back to his mother's the plaintiff in error stopped at a friend's and got a Winchester rifle for the purpose, as he said, of shooting prairie chickens. When he went back to his mother's he was there but a short time when the deceased and two or three others came to his house to arrest him, and the plaintiff in error went out, and, according to his testimony, the following was what occurred: "I asked John Kills Back and High Eagle what they were there bothering me all the while for. John Kills Back said: 'You are a policeman, and know what the rules are.' I said: 'Yes, I know what the rules are, but I told you that I would go to Pine Ridge agency in the morning.' Then the deceased moved a little forward, and put his hand around as if to reach for his gun. I saw the gun, and shot; then I shot twice more, and John Kills Back and High Eagle ran off. John Kills Back fell after he had gone a short distance. I shot because I knew that they (John Kills Back and High Eagle) would shoot me. I saw their revolvers at the time I shot." This was in substance all the evidence.

Counsel for plaintiff in error asked the court to charge as follows:

"From the evidence as it appears in this action, none of the policemen who sought to arrest the defendant in this action prior to the killing of the deceased, John Kills Back, were justified in arresting the defendant, and he had a right to use such force as a reasonably prudent person might do in resisting such arrest by them."

The court denied the request and counsel excepted.

The court charged the jury, among other things, as follows:

"The deceased, John Kills Back, had been ordered to arrest the defendant; hence he had a right to go and make the attempt to arrest the defendant. The defendant had no right to resist him. It is claimed on the part of the defendant that he made no resistance, and he was willing to go with the officer in the morning. I charge you, of course, that the officer, John Kills Back, had a right to determine for himself when this man should go to the agency with him.

gentlemen of the jury, that the deceased, being an officer of the law, had a right to be armed, and for the purpose of arresting the defendant he would have had the right to show his revolver. He would have had the right to use only so much force as was necessary to take his prisoner, and the fact that he was using no more force than was necessary to take his prisoner would not be sufficient justification for the defendant to shoot him and kill him. The defendant would only be justified in killing the deceased when you should find that the circumstances showed that the deceased had so far forgotten his duties as an officer, and had gone beyond the force necessary to arrest defendant, and was about to kill him or to inflict great bodily injury upon him, which was not necessary for the purpose of making the arrest."

This charge was duly excepted to.

We think the court clearly erred in charging that the policemen had the right to arrest the plaintiff in error, and to use such force as was necessary to accomplish the arrest, and that the plaintiff in error had no right to resist it.

The evidence as to the facts immediately preceding the killing was contradictory; the prosecution showing a killing when no active effort was at that very moment made to arrest, and the defendant showing an intended arrest and a determination to take him at that time at all events, and a move made by the deceased towards him with his pistol in sight, and a seeming intention to use it against the defendant for the purpose of overcoming all resistance. Under these circumstances the error of the charge was material and prejudicial.

At common law, if a party resisted arrest by an officer without warrant and who had no right to arrest him, and if in the course of that resistance the officer was killed, the offense of the party resisting arrest would be reduced from what would have been murder if the officer had had the right to arrest, to manslaughter. What would be murder if the officer had the right to arrest might be reduced to manslaughter by the very fact that he had no such right. So an officer, at common law, was not authorized to make an arrest without a warrant, for a mere misdemeanor not committed in his presence. 1 Arch. Crim. Pr. * & Pl. 7th Am. ed. 103, note [535] (1); also page 861 and following pages; 2 Hawk. P. C. 129, § 8; 3 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed. 83, 84, 97; 1 Chitty's Crim. L. *15; 1 East, P. C. chap. 5, p. 328; Derecourt v. Corbishley, 5 El. & Bl. 188; Fox v. Gaunt, 3 Barn. & Ad. 798; Reg. v. Chapman, 12 Cox C. C. 4; Rafferty v. People, 69 Ill. 111, 18 Am. Rep. 601; S. C. on a subsequent writ, 72 Ill. 37. If the officer had no right to arrest, the other party might resist the illegal attempt to arrest him, using no more force than was absolutely necessary to repel the assault constituting the attempt to arrest. 1 East, supra.

We do not find any statute of the United States or of the state of South Dakota giving any right to these men to arrest an individual without a warrant, on a charge of misdemeanor not committed in their presence. Marshals and their deputies have in each state, by virtue of § 788, Revised Statutes of the United States, the same powers in executing the laws of the United States as sheriffs and their deputies in such state may have by law in executing the laws thereof. This certainly does not give any power to an officer at the Pine Ridge agency to arrest a person without warrant, even though charged with the commission of a misdemeanor. These policemen were not marshals nor deputies of marshals, and the statutes have no application to them.

[534] * "In this connection I desire to say to you,

By § 1014 of the Revised Statutes, the officers of the United States named therein and certain state officers may, agreeably to the usual mode of process against offenders in such state, order the arrest of an offender for any crime or offense committed against the United States. This section has no application.

Referring to the laws of South Dakota, we find no authority for making such an arrest without warrant. The law upon the subject of arrests in that state is contained in the Compiled Laws of South Dakota 1887, § 7139, and the following sections, and it will be seen that the common law is therein substantially enacted. The sections referred to are set out in the margin.†

- [536] *No rule or regulation for the government of Indians upon a reservation has been cited, nor have we found any, which prohibits the firing of a gun there, "for fun," nor do we find any law, rule, or regulation which authorizes an arrest, without warrant, *of an Indian not charged even with the commission of a misdemeanor, nor does it anywhere appear that Gleason had authority to issue a warrant for an alleged violation of the rules or regulations.

It is plain from this review of the subject

†Sec. 7139. An arrest may be either—

1. By a peace officer, under a warrant;
2. By a peace officer, without a warrant; or,
3. By a private person.

Sec. 7141. If the offense charged is a felony, the arrest may be made on any day and at any time of the day or night. If it is a misdemeanor, the arrest cannot be made at night, unless upon the direction of the magistrate indorsed upon the warrant.

Sec. 7144. The officer must inform the defendant that he acts under the authority of the warrant, and must also show the warrant if required.

Sec. 7145. If, after notice of intention to arrest the defendant, he either flee or forcibly resist, the officer may use all necessary means to effect the arrest.

Sec. 7148. A peace officer may, without a warrant, arrest a person—

1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.
2. When the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence.
3. When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it.
4. On a charge, made upon reasonable cause, of the commission of a felony by the party arrested.

Sec. 7150. He may also at night, without a warrant, arrest any person whom he has reasonable cause for believing to have committed a felony, and is justified in making the arrest, though it afterward appear that the felony had not been committed.

Sec. 7151. When arresting a person without a warrant, the officer must inform him of his authority and the cause of the arrest, except when he is in the actual commission of a public offense, or is pursued immediately after an escape.

Sec. 7153. When a public offense is committed in the presence of a magistrate, he may, by a verbal or written order, command any person to arrest the offender, and may thereupon proceed as if the offender had been brought before him on a warrant of arrest.

Sec. 7154. A private person may arrest another—

1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.
2. When the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence.
3. When a felony has been in fact committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it.

Sec. 7155. He must, before making the arrest, inform the person to be arrested of the cause thereof, and require him to submit, except when he is in the actual commission of the offense, or when he is arrested on pursuit immediately after its commission.

sonable cause for believing to have committed a felony, and is justified in making the arrest, though it afterward appear that the felony had not been committed.

Sec. 7151. When arresting a person without a warrant, the officer must inform him of his authority and the cause of the arrest, except when he is in the actual commission of a public offense, or is pursued immediately after an escape.

Sec. 7153. When a public offense is committed in the presence of a magistrate, he may, by a verbal or written order, command any person to arrest the offender, and may thereupon proceed as if the offender had been brought before him on a warrant of arrest.

Sec. 7154. A private person may arrest another—

1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.
2. When the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence.
3. When a felony has been in fact committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it.

Sec. 7155. He must, before making the arrest, inform the person to be arrested of the cause thereof, and require him to submit, except when he is in the actual commission of the offense, or when he is arrested on pursuit immediately after its commission.

tion, when the officer had the right to make the arrest, from what it does if the officer had no such right. What might be murder [538] in the first *case might be nothing more than manslaughter in the other, or the facts might show that no offense had been committed.

The plaintiff in error was undoubtedly prejudiced by this error in the charge, and the judgment of the court below must therefore be reversed, and the case remanded with instructions to grant a new trial.

COUNTY OF APACHE, Appt.,

v.

JULIA BARTH, Executrix of Jacob Barth,
Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 538-548.)

Appeal—from territorial court—findings of fact—additional findings on appeal—evidence of county warrants—burden of proof of genuineness and execution.

1. On an appeal from a territorial supreme court which, in addition to adopting the facts found by the trial court, made an additional finding of facts, the Supreme Court of the United States may consider the latter findings, as well as the former, in determining the question of the sufficiency of the facts found to authorize the judgment.
2. Additional findings of facts, and not mere conclusions of law, are involved in findings by the supreme court of a territory, when that court, after reciting that it adopts the facts found by the trial court as the statement of facts in the cause, also finds that the court below did not err in granting judgment in favor of the validity of county warrants, "notwithstanding the verified answer" denying their execution, nor in refusing to enter judgment, notwithstanding the lack of any evidence to establish the genuineness of the warrant sued on, "because the court finds that the warrants were verity of themselves," and that the verified answer only put defendant in a position to establish the facts set up, and did not put plaintiff on proof of their genuineness, wherefore the court finds as a conclusion that the judgment should be affirmed.
3. County warrants are inadmissible in evidence at common law without proof of their execution, where the genuineness of the signatures thereto is put in issue by the pleadings.
4. An affidavit of verification in an action on county warrants, that the facts stated in the answer as defenses to the various causes of action declared on are true, and that the warrants sued on are not genuine, is a sufficient compliance with a statute requiring the verification of any answer containing a denial of the execution of an instrument on which suit is brought.
5. The verification of an answer containing a denial of the execution of county warrants sued on, in compliance with Ariz. Rev. Stat.

1887, 735, which requires the verification of any answer containing a denial of the execution of an instrument on which suit is brought, renders the warrants inadmissible in evidence until their execution is proved.

[No. 181.]

Submitted March 13, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decision of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona affirming a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action on county warrants. Reversed. See same case below, 53 Pac. 187.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

In September, 1891, Jacob Barth commenced an action in one of the district courts of the territory of Arizona against the board of supervisors of Apache county, in that territory, to recover upon certain warrants which he alleged had been issued *by that [539] county during the year 1884, and of which he claimed to be the owner. Barth soon thereafter died, leaving a will, which was proved in February, 1892, and by order of the court in March, 1896, the action was revived in the name of Julia Barth, the appellee, who was the executrix named in the will. She filed in March, 1896, by leave of court, an amended complaint containing forty counts upon as many different warrants, which she alleged had been issued by the board of supervisors of the county on account of debts due from the county, and of which warrants she was the owner, and that the county owed her thereon an amount exceeding $7,000, for which sum she duly demanded judgment, with interest. A copy of each warrant was annexed to the complaint, and formed part thereof.

The defendant filed an unverified amended answer to this amended complaint, which answer was subsequently verified, and among other things denied that any of the warrants sued on had ever been issued or been directed to be issued by the board of supervisors of the county or by the authority of that board, but, on the contrary, defendant alleged that the pretended warrants sued on were, and each of them was, falsely made and forged, and that they were, and each of them was, a forgery, and that they were so falsely made and forged with a fraudulent intent to defraud the county of Apache. The defendant prayed judgment that plaintiff take nothing by her action, and for costs and for general relief.

Other defenses were set up, among which was the statute of limitations.

The case came on for trial before the court, a jury trial having been waived, and the court, having decided it, signed a statement of the facts found by it, in which it was stated that evidence had been introduced upon the trial, both oral and documentary, and upon the admission of the plaintiff the court found that the figures on eleven of the warrants (duly described and identified) had been altered and changed after they had been issued, and that such alterations and changes

NOTE.—As to review by United States Supreme Court of territorial decisions—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa ex rel. District Prosecuting Attorney, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

As to scope, nature, and effect of verification—see note to Equitable Acci. Ins. Co. v. Osborn (Ala.) 13 L. R. A. 267.

vitiated and rendered null and void those warrants as against the defendant, and that they were not valid claims against the county. The *court then made a general finding that all of the other warrants sued on were valid and subsisting legal claims against the county, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover upon each warrant the amount named therein, which, with interest, amounted to about the sum of $14,000 and for that sum judgment was directed to be entered, which was subsequently done. There was no further or special finding made by the trial court.

From this judgment an appeal was taken by the county to the supreme court of the territory of Arizona, where it was affirmed.

The supreme court at the time of affirming the judgment made and signed by its chief justice a statement of facts in the case as follows:

"The supreme court takes the facts as found by the district court on the trial in that court and as shown by the record, and makes them the statement of the facts in this cause.

"This court finds that the district court did not commit error in finding against the plea of limitation set up by appellant.

"The court further finds that the district court did not commit error in granting and rendering judgment in favor of appellee on the warrants sued on and against appellant, notwithstanding the verified answer of appellant. The supreme court further finds that the district court did not commit error in refusing to render judgment for appellant on the verified answer of appellant, notwithstanding appellee did not introduce any evidence to establish the genuineness of said warrants for which appellee asked judgment, because the court finds that the warrants were verity of themselves, and the verified answer only put appellant in position in court to prove the facts set up in her answer, and did not put appellee on proof of their genuineness; hence the supreme court finds as a conclusion that the judgment of the district court should be affirmed. Judgment of affirmation and confirmation is therefore ordered and directed.

"This June 11th, 1898."

The county has appealed to this court from the judgment of the supreme court of the territory.

Mr. J. F. Wilson submitted the cause for appellant.

Mr. Reuben Hatch submitted the cause for appellee.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

[541] Mr. Justice Peckham, after stating the facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

The statute approved April 7, 1874, entitled "An Act Concerning the Practice in Territorial Courts and Appeals Therefrom" (18 Stat. at L. 27, chap. 80), by the 2d section provides:

"That the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States over the 177 U. S.

judgments and decrees of said territorial courts in cases of trial by jury shall be exercised by writ of error, and in all other cases by appeal, according to such rules and regulations as to form and modes of proceeding as the said Supreme Court have prescribed, or may hereafter prescribe: Provided, That on appeal, instead of the evidence at large, a statement of the facts of the case in the nature of a special verdict, and also the rulings of the court on the admission or rejection of evidence, when excepted to, shall be made and certified by the court below, and transmitted to the Supreme Court, together with the transcript of the proceedings and judgment or decree," etc.

The legislature of the territory passed an act in 1897 providing as follows:

"Sec. 1. Whenever an appeal or writ of error is taken from any district or circuit court of this territory to the supreme court of the territory, the appellant or plaintiff in error, as the case may be, may have the testimony taken in the case transcribed and certified by the court reporter and file the same with the papers in the case, and thereupon it shall become and be a part of the record in such case.

"Sec. 5. All rulings made by the court below in opposition to the plaintiff in error or appellant shall be taken as excepted to by the party appealing or suing out the writ of error, and when assigned as error in the brief shall be reviewed by the supreme court without any bill of exceptions or other assignment of errors as herein provided."

*This last act was passed subsequently to the trial of this action, but immediately after the filing of findings herein, and, pursuant to its provisions, the reporter's notes of trial, with his certificate, were returned upon appeal, and are contained in this record. [542]

This act could give us no jurisdiction to review an objection to evidence taken upon the trial, if no exception were taken, for the act of Congress of 1874, above cited, provides for a review in this court only when the decisions of the court were excepted to, and our jurisdiction is regulated by that act. Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U. S. 468, 474, 41 L. ed. 230, 232, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

Upon a review of a judgment in a case not tried by jury and taken by appeal from the supreme court of a territory, this court is by statute restricted to an inquiry whether the findings of fact made by the court below support its judgment, and to a review of exceptions duly taken to rulings on admission or rejection of evidence. Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U. S. 468, 41 L. ed. 230, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Bear Lake & River Waterworks & Irrig. Co. v. Garland, 164 U. S. 1, 18, 41 L. ed. 327, 334, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7; Harrison v. Perea, 168 U. S. 311, 323, 42 L. ed. 478, 482, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 129; Young v. Amy, 171 U. S. 179, 183, 43 L. ed. 127, 128, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802.

There is no bill of exceptions in the record, and there is nothing to show that any exception was taken on the trial to the admission or rejection of evidence. Counsel for appellee therefore urges that the only inquity before this court is whether the facts found by the trial court authorize the judgment which was entered; and he claims that upon those findings there can be no question that the judgment entered is right. This does not give the full and proper force to the additional finding of facts by the supreme court to which it is entitled. Although in that finding it is said that "the supreme court takes the facts as found by the district court on the trial in that court, and as shown by the record, and makes them the statement of the facts in this cause," yet a perusal of the statement made by the supreme court renders it plain that such court found other facts in addition to those adopted from the district court, and those facts found by it should be regarded in the decision of this case.

[543] What we regard as additional facts in the statement of the supreme court are regarded by counsel for the appellee as conclusions *of law only, and he contends that we are confined to the general findings of fact made by the district court and adopted by the supreme court, and that upon those facts the appellee is clearly entitled to judgment. We cannot acquiesce in the correctness of the claim so made.

The supreme court in its statement finds a conclusion of law, viz.: That the court below did not err in granting judgment for appellee; and this conclusion is immediately followed by the declaration, "notwithstanding the verified answer of the appellant," which latter is a statement of fact. In addition to the fact thus stated, and in continuation of its statement, the court "further finds that the district court did not commit error in refusing to render judgment for appellant on the verified answer of appellant, notwithstanding appellee did not introduce any evidence to establish the genuineness of said warrants for which appellee asked judgment, because the court finds that the warrants were verity of themselves, and the verified answer only put appellant in position in court to prove the facts set up in her answer, and did not put appellee on proof of their genuineness; hence the supreme court finds as a conclusion that the judgment of the district court should be affirmed."

We do not think that all of this can be called a conclusion of law only, and not a finding of any fact. It is too technical a treatment of this statement to limit the finding of facts wholly to those set forth in the finding of the district court.

If we were not, in this particular, limited to the findings of the court, and could look at the notes of the stenographer taken on the trial and attached to the record by virtue of the territorial act referred to, we should there find that defendant was granted leave to verify its answer before the plaintiff rested her case, and that the answer was then verified and the plaintiff given opportunity to put in such evidence as she chose after such verification was made and before she closed her case. She did not avail herself of the leave, and the case rests only upon the production of the warrants, with the words indorsed thereon: "Not paid for want of funds; Presented Dec. 31, 1884. D. Baca, Treasurer, A. Ruiz, Deputy. Sol. Barth;" also with the word "Forgery" marked in red ink across the faces of the warrants. *No proof whatever was given as to [544] the genuineness of these signatures.

The finding of the supreme court shows that its decision was not placed upon the ground that the answer was verified after the plaintiff had rested; nor was its finding put on any ground of waiver. We must therefore take the fact that the answer was verified in ample time to call upon the plaintiff to prove the affirmative of the issues presented by the pleading.

Coming to an examination of the case in the light of these facts, we see that this was an action brought upon certain county warrants fully described in the amended complaint, and it was therein alleged that they were issued under the direction and authority of the board of supervisors of the county, signed by the chairman, and countersigned by the clerk of the board. The answer denied the fact that the warrants were issued by the authority or direction of the board, and alleged that they were forged warrants, and that the county was not liable thereon. Irrespective of any statute in regard to pleading, an issue was thus joined which raised the question of the genuineness of the signatures subscribed to these warrants; in other words, the question of their execution was put in issue, which would make it necessary for the plaintiff to prove that fact before they could be admitted in evidence. We are aware of no exception to this rule which would permit the introduction of alleged county warrants such as these, without any proof whatever of their execution. They do not prove themselves. The mere production of a piece of paper upon which is written or printed a promise to pay upon the part of a county, and upon which certain signatures appear, without the slightest proof of the genuineness of such signatures, does not entitle such paper to be admitted in evidence.

It is stated that it has been held by the courts generally that county and state warrants signed by the proper officers are prima facie binding and legal; that those officers will be presumed to have done their duty, and that such warrants make a prima facie cause of action, and that impeachment must come from the defendant. 1 Dillon's Municipal Corporations, 3d ed. sec. 502. *This may [545] very well be in regard to those warrants when, as above stated, they have been, in fact, signed by the proper officers, and very probably the presumption may then be made that those officers who are proved to have signed the warrants have done their duty; but we are aware of no case where it has been held, in the absence of a statute to that effect, that the mere production of a paper upon which is written or printed an obligation of a county, bearing certain names thereon, can be put in evidence without the slightest proof that the signatures on the paper were those of the persons they purport to be. No such case has been called to our attention, and we think there is no principle upon which such a holding could stand.

The cases referred to by counsel simply hold the burden of proof shifted after there has been proof of the execution of the warrants; that such proof makes out a prima facie case against the county. Such are the cases of Floyd County Comrs. v. Day, 19 Ind. 450, and Leavenworth County Comrs. v. Keller, 6 Kan. 510. In both those cases the warrants were proved to have been signed by the proper authorities of the county before they were admitted in evidence, and it was said in the Indiana case, upon these facts, that "the officer, in the discharge of his general powers, will be presumed to have done his duty, in drawing a warrant or order, till the contrary appears; and hence such order makes a prima facie cause of action," citing Hamilton v. Newcastle & D. R. Co. 9 Ind. 359. And in the Kansas case it appeared that the county board audited and allowed the bill of claimant, and that a county warrant was drawn in his favor for the amount due, and signed by the chairman of the board, and it was held that upon those facts an action might be maintained on the warrant, but that it was liable to be defeated by showing that the tribunal which issued it had no authority to make the allowance on which the warrant was issued. In other words, that proof being given of the signature of the proper officer, the warrant was admissible in evidence and constituted a prima facie case [546] against the county, and any *facts going to show that no cause of action existed rested upon the defendant to prove.

In Grayson v. Latham, 84 Ala. 546, 549, 550, 4 So. 200, 202, 366, two county warrants were sued on which were alleged and purported to have been issued by the commissioners of the county of Pickens and signed by the probate judge. In delivering the opinion of the court, Stone, Chief Justice, said:

"The warrants declared on, issued and signed by the judge of probate, as they were shown to have been, prima facie imported a liability on the county. . . . Upon the question we have been discussing, the plaintiff made a prima facie case when he produced and proved his warrants, showed that they had been registered, proved that, in the receipt and disbursement of county funds, the time had arrived for their payment according to their place on the registry, and that payment has been demanded and refused; or, if payment was not shown to have been demanded, by proving that demand would have been unnecessary. Making this prima facie case, if made, the burden would then be shifted to the defendants to overturn the presumption of liability."

Another case relied upon to sustain the ruling of the courts below is that of Wall v. Monroe County, 103 U. S. 74, 26 L. ed. 430. That case does not show that the warrants were proved by their mere production; on the contrary, it appears that the warrants were drawn by the clerk of the county upon the treasurer in favor of one Frank Gall-gher, and transferred by him to the plaintiff. Their execution was alleged and proved, and the question decided had no relevancy to the matter here under discussion.

No case cited by counsel shows that there is anything peculiar to a paper in the form of a county warrant, which proves itself upon mere production.

It is clear, then, that at common law, in an action upon such an instrument, and upon a pleading denying the execution thereof by the defendant, and setting up its forgery, the plaintiff in order to be entitled to put the instrument in evidence, and thereby to make a prima facie case, would be compelled to prove its execution. The question is, what difference the statute of Arizona makes in this rule.

*The Revised Statutes of Arizona, 1887. [547] provide:

"735. (Sec. 87.) Any answer setting up any of the following matters, unless the truth of the pleadings appear of record, shall be verified by affidavit:—

"8. A denial of the execution by himself or by his authority, of any instrument in writing upon which any pleading is founded, in whole or in part, and charged to have been executed by him or by his authority, and not alleged to be lost or destroyed. Where such instrument in writing is charged to have been executed by a person then deceased, the affidavit will be sufficient if it state that the affiant has reason to believe and does believe that such instrument was not executed by the decedent or by his authority."

The answer in this case did deny the execution on behalf of the county of these warrants, and alleged that they were forgeries made to defraud it. The affidavit of verification was made by the clerk of the board of supervisors, who swore that the facts stated in the answer, as defenses to the various causes of action declared on, were true, and that the warrants sued on were not genuine. The statute does not require that the affidavit should contain a denial of the execution of the instrument on which suit is brought. It requires that any answer which contains a denial of the execution of an instrument shall be verified, and the verification in this case is not open to the objection of insufficiency urged by the appellee.

We have, then, the fact as stated by the supreme court of the territory, that this answer was verified, and that the appellee did not introduce any evidence to establish the genuineness of the warrants sued on, and as a conclusion of law from those facts the court held the plaintiff entitled to judgment on the ground that the verified answer did not put the plaintiff to proof of the genuineness of the warrants.

It seems plain to us that the court did not give that force to the verification of the answer which it was entitled to, and that by reason of such verification the defendant was not only put in position to prove the facts set up in the answer, but the plaintiff *in the [548] action was thereby compelled to prove the execution of the warrants by the proper officers of the county.

Statutes similar to this have been passed in other states, and it has been held in Colorado, in Lothrop v. Roberts, 16 Colo. 250, 254, 27 Pac. 698, that an answer denying the execution of a note, under oath, made it necessary for the plaintiff to give proof of its execution before the note was properly admissible in evidence.

In Horn v. Volcano Water Co. 13 Cal. 62, 73 Am. Dec. 569, under a somewhat similar statute, where the answer was a general denial without verification, the genuineness and due execution of the note sued on were regarded as admitted.

To the same effect is Corcoran v. Doll, 32 Cal. 82, 88, where it was stated that the action being upon a note, and the complaint containing a copy, and the answer not verified, the due execution of the note was admitted.

In Shepherd v. Royce, 71 Ill. App. 321, under a similar statute, it was held that the effect of the verification of the plea setting up the forgery of a note sued on was to cast upon appellant the burden of proving the execution of the note as at common law, citing Wallace v. Wallace, 8 Ill. App. 69.

The Michigan courts have decided in the same way upon the same kind of a statute. Ortmann v. Merchants' Bank, 41 Mich. 482, 2 N. W. 677; New York Iron Mine v. Citizen's Bank, 44 Mich. 344, 6 N. W. 823.

We have no doubt that the effect of the statute of Arizona is that when the defendant does not verify his answer in a case provided for therein, the note or warrant or other paper sued on is admitted as genuine, but when the answer denying that fact is verified, the plaintiff must prove it as he would have had to do at common law in a case where the genuineness of the paper was put at issue by the pleadings.

Upon the facts found by the district judge and accepted by the supreme court of the territory in this case, and upon the additional facts found by that court, we are of opinion that the judgment entered under its direction is erroneous and not warranted by those facts, and therefore it is reversed, and the case remanded, with directions to grant a new trial, and it is so ordered.

[549] *A. J. DAGGS and R. E. Daggs, Appts.,
v.

PHENIX NATIONAL BANK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 549-558.)

National banks—rate of interest taken by—when rate fixed by law—contract rate for—pleading—evidence—finding of facts on evidence.

1. The rate of interest which a national bank may charge in Arizona is not limited to 7 per cent by U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5197, 5198, authorizing such banks to charge interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state or territory where they are located, and allowing only 7 per cent if no rate is fixed by such laws, although Ariz. Stat. 2161, 2162, allow parties to agree upon any rate, and in default of any agreement to take 7 per cent only, since under these statutes any rate which may be agreed upon is thereby "fixed" by the law.

NOTE.—As to usury by national banks—see note to Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Dearing, 23 L. ed. U. S. 196.

2. An unverified denial of each and every allegation in a counterclaim which sets up assignment of a promissory note for a valuable consideration, the fact of the maker's insolvency, of which the assignor had knowledge, and the nonpayment of the note, puts the allegations of insolvency and nonpayment in issue.
3. Facts alleged to be established by the testimony cannot be considered in passing upon a motion for judgment based on confession of the allegations of a counterclaim.
4. No finding of facts need be made where the question before the court for decision is the sufficiency of the averments of a counterclaim as a defense.

[No. 138.]

Submitted January 30, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona affirming a decision in favor of the plaintiff in an action on notes and mortgages alleged to be usurious. Affirmed.

See same case below, 53 Pac. 201.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

*This cause embraces three suits brought by [549] the Phoenix National Bank against A. J. and R. E. Daggs, defendants in error. They were respectively numbered 2554, 2555, and 2556, and were consolidated by stipulations of the parties.

They were brought to recover on three promissory notes, aggregating the sum of $9,741.73 signed by A. J. Daggs, one of the appellants. Each note was dated November 1, 1894, and payable on or before one year from date, with interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. Also, to foreclose certain mortgages executed to secure the notes:—one executed by R. E. Daggs on the 28th of November, 1894, on certain real estate in Maricopa county, Arizona, and on four water rights of the Consolidated Canal Company, represented by certificates; two executed by A. J. Daggs on same day, on certain other real estate situate in the same county.

The answers were substantially the same in all of the cases.

They admitted the making of the notes and mortgages, but alleged that the interest charge was usurious, and in violation of §§ 5197 and 5198 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

As a counterclaim it was alleged that the plaintiff (appellee) was indebted to the defendant (appellant) upon a certain promissory note executed by W. A. Daggs and P. P. Daggs as copartners and as individuals, and delivered to Thomas Armstrong, Jr., and assigned by him to the plaintiff in blank, and by the latter, on the 28th of November, 1894, [550] for a valuable *consideration, to the defendant, A. J. Daggs, at which time the makers were, and ever since have been, notoriously insolvent, all of which the plaintiff knew. The note was as follows, marked "Exhibit A," and made part of the counterclaim:

No. 1340. Due Sept. 1st.

Phoenix, Arizona, July 1st, 1893.

$5,000.00.

On the 1st day of September, 1893, without grace, we or either of us, for value received, promise to pay to Thos. Armstrong, Jr., at the Phoenix National Bank, at their office in Phoenix, Arizona, five thousand dollars (\$5,000) in United States gold coin, with interest, at the rate of 1 and $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent per month, until paid. In case of legal proceedings hereon, we or either of us agree to pay 10 per cent of amount due hereon as attorney's fees. W. A. and P. P. Daggs.

Secured by chattel mortgage of even date herewith.

W. A. Daggs.
P. P. Daggs.

It was also alleged that no part of the note was paid, and that there was due thereon the sum of $7,076.91. And judgment was prayed for the amount and interest.

For another defense it was alleged that at the time of the execution of the three promissory notes sued on, the plaintiff (appellee) and the defendant, A. J. Daggs, entered into a contract in writing (a copy of which is attached to the answer, marked Exhibit "B") wherein the plaintiff as part of the consideration for the said three notes, sold and assigned and expressly stipulated that the three notes should be received in payment for all its rights, title, and interest in and to that certain right in action wherein Hugh McCrum was plaintiff and W. A. and P. A. Daggs were defendants, and plaintiff was intervener, over that certain $5,000 note marked "Exhibit A" herein, and the mortgage securing the same.

That at said time the makers of said note were actually insolvent, which plaintiff [551] knew, and it was agreed that plaintiff *should carry on the said litigation in its name until the cause of action should be determined and settled, and pay all costs accruing prior to November 1, 1894, and the defendant to pay those accruing thereafter. And it was alleged that the defendant paid out large sums of money in the prosecution of said suit, to wit, $45.65 as transcript fee from the court below, and $500 as costs, and expended work and labor of the reasonable value of $500, and has performed all the conditions of said contract, but that plaintiff (appellant) has failed to perform the conditions on its part to the damage of defendant in the sum $10,122.55.

For another defense, it was alleged that the defendant pledged certain water stock in the Tempe Irrigating Canal as security for said promissory notes, which was reasonably worth $4,000, and that the plaintiff (appellee) has converted it to its own use, to de-endant's damage in the sum of $4,000; wherefore defendant prayed that he be relieved from the payment of interest on said notes, for his expenditures in said suit; the amount of said $5,000 note, for $4,000 value of the water stock pledged, and for $2,000 damages.

In case No. 2555 the defendants filed a plea in abatement on account of the pendency of case No. 2554, and a like plea in case No. 2556. The pleas were overruled.

And in case No. 2555 A. J. Daggs moved for judgment upon his counterclaim on the ground that it was confessed, because no reply was made to it.

A similar motion was made in case No. 2556.

Testimony was taken and judgment was entered for the plaintiff, the Phoenix National Bank, against the defendant, A. J. Daggs, for the principal of the three notes and interest, and decreeing a foreclosure of the mortgages and the sale of the property mortgaged. A motion for a new trial was made and denied. On writ of error to the supreme court of the territory the judgment was affirmed (53 Pac. 201), and an appeal was then taken to this court.

In passing on the case the supreme court of the territory said:

"At the outset we are compelled to call attention to the *omission of counsel to comply with the statute and the rules of this court on the subject of assignments of error. [552]

"These are imperative and must be observed. It is not our business to search the record if perchance we may find reversible error. It is our duty to examine into such alleged errors, and only such, as are distinctly pointed out in the record. The assignments made by plaintiffs in error in their brief are, for the most part, so general in character and so wanting in definiteness that they cannot be considered. Although defective as assignments, we have, by liberal construction, found that two of them present questions for our review.

"The first of these reads as follows:

"The court erred in not giving judgment for plaintiffs in error on their pleas in bar of the recovery of any interest for the reason that the contract with the national bank for 10 per cent interest is ultra vires."

"The second assignment of error as made by plaintiffs in error, reads: 'The court erred in overruling the plaintiffs' in error motion for judgment on the pleadings for the reason that there was no reply to plaintiffs' in error verified counterclaims.'"

No statement of facts in the nature of a special verdict being certified with the record, the plaintiffs in error moved for and obtained from this court a certiorari to supply the defect, and in response thereto a statement of facts, which had been made by the supreme court of the territory, was certified to this court, in which was recited act No. 71 of the territory, regulating appeals and writs of error to the supreme court, the judgment of foreclosure and sale, the assignments of error of appellants, and concluded as follows:

"Under the assignments of error thus made and presented in the record this court could and did make no determination of the facts of the case, except such as appeared in the pleadings and judgment, for the reason that such of the assignments as were sufficient in form to raise any question presented none for our consideration which necessitated the further finding of facts in the case. We are unable to determine from the record presented in this court, in the absence of a

[553] bill of exceptions *and a statement of facts, what the facts were which were put in evidence on the trial in the court below, further than as they are shown by the transcript of the reporter's notes, and from such review of the record the judgment of the district court was affirmed as follows:

"In the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona.

"R. E. Daggs and A. J. Daggs, Plaintiffs in Error,

v.

Phoenix National Bank, a Corporation, Defendants in Error.

"This cause having been heretofore submitted and by the court taken under consideration, and the court having considered the same and being fully advised in the premises, it is ordered that the judgment of the district court herein be, and the same is hereby, affirmed.

"It is further ordered and adjudged that the defendant in error herein do have and recover of and from the plaintiffs in error, R. E. Daggs and A. J. Daggs, as principals, and R. F. Doll, W. M. Billups, and the London Company, as sureties, on cost bond, its costs in this court, taxed at forty-three and 10-100 ($43.10) dollars.

"By the court: Webster Street, C. J.
Richard E. Sloan, A. J.
Fletcher M. Doan, C. J.
Geo. R. Davis, A. J."

Asserting that the statement did not embody a finding of fact according to law, plaintiffs in error moved for a rule to show cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding the supreme court of the territory to make and certify a statement of the facts in the nature of a special verdict, and also the rulings of the district court on the admission and rejection of evidence excepted to.

Plaintiffs in error submitted with the motion a statement which they claimed the record justified.

The motion was denied January 29, 1900.

Mr. A. J. Daggs, propria persona, submitted the cause for appellants.

Messrs. Aldis B. Browne and Alexander Britton submitted the cause for appellee.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

[554] *Mr. Justice McKenna, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

We are confined by the record to the points passed on by the supreme court of the territory; to wit, the defense of usury, and the motion for judgment on the counterclaim.

(1.) By § 5197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States a national bank may charge on any note interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state or territory where it is situated. It is further provided, however, that if no rate is fixed by such laws the bank may not charge a greater rate than 7 per cent, and if a greater rate be knowingly charged, the entire interest agreed to be paid shall be forfeited. Sec. 5198.

The laws of the territory are as follows:

2161. "Sec. 1. When there is no express agreement fixing a different rate of interest, interest shall be allowed at the rate of 7 per cent per annum on all moneys after they become due on any bond, bill, promissory note, or other instrument in writing, or any judgment recovered in any court in this territory, for money lent, for money due on any settlement of accounts from the day on which the balance is ascertained, and for money received for the use of another."

2162. "Sec. 2. Parties may agree in writing for the payment of any rate of interest whatever on money due or to become due on any contract; any judgment rendered on such contract shall conform thereto, and shall bear the rate of interest agreed upon by the parties, and which shall be specified in the judgment."

The contention of appellant is that the rate of interest is not fixed by the laws of the territory. It permits the parties to do so, but does not do so itself. In other words, it is urged that the rate is fixed by permission of the laws, and not by the laws, and upon this distinction a power which every person and every bank in the territory has, it is contended, the national banks do not have.

*We cannot accept this as a correct interpretation of either the spirit or the words of the national banking act. By that act, certainly no discrimination was intended against national banks, and that the interpretation contended for would seriously embarrass their business is manifest.

We said in Tiffany v. National Bank, 18 Wall. 409, 21 L. ed. 862, that national banks "were established for the purpose, in part, of providing a currency for the whole country, and in part to create a market for the loans of the general government. It could not have been intended, therefore, to expose them to the hazard of unfriendly legislation by the states, or to ruinous competition with state banks."

The language of the Revised Statutes is that national banks "may take, receive, reserve, and charge on any loan . . . upon any note . . . interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state, territory, or district" where located, "and no more, except that where by the laws of any state a different rate is limited for banks of issue organized under state laws, the rate so limited shall be allowed for associations organized or existing in any such state under this title." Rev. Stat. § 5197. The italics are ours.

The meaning of these provisions is unmistakable. A national bank may charge interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the state or territory where it is located; and equality is carefully secured with local banks.

The clear meaning and purpose of these provisions remove the ambiguity of those which follow, if there is any ambiguity. "When no rate is fixed by the laws of the state or territory or district, the bank may take, receive, reserve, or charge a rate not exceeding 7 per centum." "Fixed by the laws" must be construed to mean "allowed by the laws," not a rate expressed in the laws. In instances it might be that, but not necessarily. The intention of the national law is to adopt the state law, and permit to national banks what the state law allows to its citizens and to the banks organized by it. Tiffany v. National Bank, 18 Wall. 409, 21 L. ed. 862.

It is urged, however, that National Bank v. Johnson, 104 U. S. 271, 26 L. ed. 742, is in conflict with these views.

[556] In that case the defendant, a national bank doing business in "the state of New York, discounted for the plaintiff in the case, at the rate of 12 per cent per annum, commercial paper and promissory notes amounting to $158,003. The interest which the bank knowingly charged amounted to $6,564.88, an excess of $2,735.36 beyond the rate allowed by the general laws of the state. Judgment was rendered for twice the amount of the interest, which was affirmed by this court upon the statute of the state, which established the rate of interest for the loan or forbearance of money at 7 per cent.

Meeting the arguments of counsel upon a supposed difference between loans and discounts, and usurious and nonusurious contracts under the laws of the state in the transactions of natural persons, the learned justice who delivered the opinion of the court made some remarks which seemed to imply that a rate allowed by a state law was not a rate fixed by a state law. The remarks, however, were not necessary to the decision, and cannot be considered as expressing the judgment of the court.

(2.) The counterclaim of plaintiffs in error present these facts:

The making of the $5,000 note by W. A. and P. P. Daggs, and its delivery to Thomas Armstrong, Jr.; its assignment by the latter to the Phoenix National Bank (appellee), and by the bank, in writing, for a valuable consideration to the defendant, A. J. Daggs (one of the appellants); the insolvency of the makers, W. A. and P. P. Daggs, and the nonpayment of the note or any part of it.

To the counterclaim there was a demurrer for insufficiency, and a denial of each and every one of its allegations. The denial was not verified. The supreme court of the territory, considering an error assigned on the overruling of appellants' motion for judgment on the counterclaim, held it insufficient because it did not allege that due diligence to collect the note had been exercised, as required by the statute of the territory, or that any effort had been made to collect the same.

By this ruling it is urged that the court assumed that the counterclaim was based on the rights of a surety, instead of upon the direct obligation of the Phoenix Bank as assignor of the Armstrong note on account of Armstrong's insolvency. Articles 122, 1226, and 788 of the Arizona Statutes.

*Assuming, without deciding, that appellants are correct in their construction of the Arizona statutes, and assuming that the answer to the counterclaim did not put in issue the making of the Armstrong note and its assignment to plaintiff in error, nevertheless the answer to the counterclaim did put in issue the other facts alleged; to wit, the insolvency of the makers of the note and its nonpayment. [557]

But it is said that the contract marked "Exhibit B" shows the insolvency. It certainly does not. It recites the transfer of the Armstrong note to A. J. Daggs, and that it is secured by a mortgage on 3,500 sheep; that the note is in litigation between the Phoenix Bank and Hugh McCrum, of San Francisco, as assignee of D. A. Abrams as assignee of the Bank of Tempe, "to establish and determine the priorities of rights under mortgages between said litigants hereinbefore mentioned, which said cause of action and rights of the Phoenix National Bank under its first mortgage in said litigation described is also hereby sold, assigned, transferred, and set over unto A. J. Daggs for the above nine thousand seven hundred and forty-one and 73/100 dollars ($9,741.73). It is further agreed that the aforesaid cause of action described shall be continued in the name of the Phoenix National Bank until the said case is determined and settled; but it is further agreed that from this date, November 1, 1894, A. J. Daggs shall pay the costs that shall hereafter accrue in the said case."

This contract standing alone establishes nothing definite, and appreciating this the appellants attempt to explain it by a resort to what they allege to be the testimony in the case. It is said that "they (W. A. and P. E. Daggs) could not pay their notes, three suits in court foreclosing three mortgages, each seeking priority, hanging to them like mill stones, grinding them to dust. Appellee had lost its reputed first mortgage in the district court and appealed. It then sold this note and litigation, the contract shows, and agreed to stand up and carry the suit on in its name. The case was tried in the supreme court of Arizona, and held adversely to the appellee in appellants' suit against the makers of the $5,000 note. The appellee then fell down and refused to let its name be used any farther to carry on the suit, refused to sign the bond, and would have nothing more to do with the suit. . . . Appellant then demanded payment of the $5,000 note, and was refused. Appellant spent over $500 in money and $500 in services prosecuting the makers of the $5,000 note, followed it to the supreme court of Arizona, and would have went further, but appellee refused to let its name be used and he was compelled to stop. Appellant then demanded credit for the $5,000 note."

Those facts, however, are not a part of the counterclaims, and, it is hardly necessary to say, cannot be considered in passing on a motion for judgment based on a confession of the allegations of the counterclaims.

Nor can it be said that such facts should have been found by the lower court, because, as we have seen, under the statement of the case as considered by that court, the question for decision was the sufficiency of the averments of the counterclaims as a defense.

We repeat, therefore, that we are confined to the propositions we have stated above and discussed, and as there was no prejudicial error in the ruling of the supreme court of the territory on them, its judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, Herman Silver,
Z. D. Matthuss, et al., Appts.,
v.

LOS ANGELES CITY WATER COMPANY, Crystal Springs Land & Water Company, and S. G. Murphy.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 558-584.)

Waterworks—lease of, by city—reservation of power to fix rates—impairment of obligation of contract by change of judicial decision—estoppel to contest ordinance by

NOTE.—As to estoppel by silent acquiescence—see notes to Reichert v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. (Ark.) 5 L. R. A. 183; Brookhaven v. Smith (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 755; Tarkington v. Purvis (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 609; Michigan ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 38 L. ed. U. S. 478.

As to impairment of obligation of contract by state Constitution—see note to Franklin County Grammar School v. Bailey (Vt.) 10 L. R. A. 405.

Change of decision of state court as impairing obligation of contract.

The exposition given by the highest tribunal of the state to its laws and Constitution will be taken by the United States Supreme Court as correct, so far as contracts made under the laws so interpreted are concerned, and their validity and obligation cannot be impaired by any subsequent change in the decisions of the state court. Ohio Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. 416, 14 L. ed. 997; Gelpcke v. Dubuque, 1 Wall. 175, 17 L. ed. 520; Havemeyer v. Iowa County, 3 Wall. 295, 18 L. ed. 38; Lee County v. Rogers, 7 Wall. 181, 19 L. ed. 160; Kenosha v. Lamson, 9 Wall. 477, 19 L. ed. 725; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County Supers. 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382; Douglass v. Pike County, 101 U. S. 677, 25 L. ed. 968; Weightman v. Clark, 103 U. S. 256, 26 L. ed. 392; Taylor v. Ypsilanti, 105 U. S. 60, 26 L. ed. 1008; Louisiana v. Pilsbury, 105 U. S. 278, 26 L. ed. 1090; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 27 L. ed. 359, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Anderson v. Santa Anna, 116 U. S. 356, 29 L. ed. 633, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413; German Sav. Bank v. Franklin County, 128 U. S. 526, 32 L. ed. 519, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159.

reason of delay—income of water company as affected by change of rates—equitable relief against ordinance—invalidity not appearing on its face—estoppel of city as to taking of water from stream.

1. Reservation by a city in a lease of its waterworks, of the right to regulate rates, provided they be not reduced below the then existing rates, must, if valid, be deemed to be a limitation upon the right of the city as a municipality to regulate water rates, and not a mere granting back by the lessees of the right of the city in its proprietary capacity only.
2. A contract authorized by the existing state Constitution as then construed by the highest court of the state cannot be affected by subsequent change in the decisions of that court, or by the adoption of a new Constitution.
3. A water company is not estopped to contest the constitutionality of a city ordinance fixing its water rates at a rate in violation of a provision in a contract between the city and the grantors of the company, merely because for fifteen years it has collected the rates established by similarly objectionable ordinances, where it has annually protested against the city's conduct.
4. A reduction of the income of a water company need not be shown in order to establish the fact that a reduction of its rates by ordinance impairs the obligation of a contract prohibiting such reduction.
5. The right to equitable relief against an invalid ordinance reducing the rates of a water company in violation of a contract, on the ground that it is a cloud upon title, is not

It will be noticed, however, that in all the above decisions the United States Supreme Court had acquired jurisdiction on some grounds other than the unconstitutionality of such decisions; and that court has held that such a decision is not an unconstitutional law which will give the United States Supreme Court jurisdiction to revise the judgment of the state court. Mississippi & M. R. Co. v. McClure, 10 Wall. 511, 19 L. ed. 997; Knox v. Exchange Bank, 12 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 414; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Ref. Co. 125 U. S. 18, 31 L. ed. 607, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741; Brown v. Smart, 145 U. S. 454, 36 L. ed. 773, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 958.

The decisions of the United States Supreme Court have, however, had more or less effect upon state decisions, and the state courts have to some extent acquired the idea that the obligation of a contract ought not to be impaired by a later judicial decision. See Ray v. Western Pennsylvania Natural Gas Co. 138 Pa. 576, 12 L. R. A. 290, 20 Atl. 1065, 1067; Farrior v. New England Mortg. Security Co. 92 Ala. 176, 12 L. R. A. 856, 9 So. 532; Harmon v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 123 Ill. 122, 13 N. E. 161; Menges v. Dentler, 33 Pa. 495, 75 Am. Dec. 616.

For a full review of the cases cited above, see note to Allen v. Allen (Cal.) 16 L. R. A. 646.

In Union Bank v. Oxford Comrs. 90 Fed. Rep. 7, the court refused to follow a decision of a state court rendered after an issue of bonds, which changed the construction previously given to a state statute under which the bonds were issued, so as to invalidate them. The court said: "To hold otherwise would be to impair by judicial decision the obligation of a contract made in compliance with the law, precluded by the fact that the ordinance is void, where its invalidity appears only when it is considered in connection with the contract and evidence showing what the rates were when the contract was made.

6. A municipality which for nearly thirty years has allowed a water company to divert from a stream an amount of water greatly in excess of the quantity specified in a contract between them, and to expend vast sums of money upon the faith of a continuance of the right to take such water, cannot during the life of the contract withdraw its consent to a continuance of such taking of the larger quantity.

[No 148.]

Submitted March 15, 1900. Decided April 30, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of California vacating an ordinance. Affirmed.

See same case below, 88 Fed. Rep. 720.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

- [559] *This suit involves the constitutionality of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, adopted February 23, 1897, fixing the water rates to be charged and collected by the Los Angeles City Water Company for the year ending June 30, 1898.

It is claimed that the ordinance impairs the obligation of the contract made with the grantors of the company on the 20th of July, 1868.

which the Constitution of the United States does not permit."

But a change by a state court of its construction of a state statute, even if its former construction had become a rule of property, cannot constitute a Federal question as to the impairment of the obligation of a contract, for which a writ of error will lie from the Supreme Court of the United States to the state court. Bacon v. Texas, 163 U. S. 207, 41 L. ed. 132, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023.

A decision by the highest court of a state overruling a prior decision, and holding unconstitutional a statute held to be constitutional by that decision, does not impair the obligation of a contract entered into before the later decision was rendered, as a decision of a court is not in fact a law, and, if erroneously made, cannot make a law. Storrie v. Cortes, 90 Tex. 283, 35 L. R. A. 666, 38 S. W. 154. The court discussed a number of cases decided by the United States Supreme Court which bear upon the question, and said: "The real ground upon which each of the decisions rests is that the Federal courts do not consider themselves bound to follow the state courts in the determination of questions of which they have concurrent and independent jurisdiction, and that in determining what the law of the state is as to the matter under consideration they will follow or disregard the decisions of the state court, as they may deem best. It follows that the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in those cases are not binding upon the state courts as authority in the determination of like questions."

So, the reversal of a decision erroneously construing a state statute is not prohibited as a law impairing the obligation of a contract made in reliance on the erroneous decision.

177 U. S.

The facts were stipulated, and are substantially as follows:

On the 22d of July, 1868, the city of Los Angeles entered into a contract with John S. Griffin, P. Beaudry, and Solomon Lazard, whereby it leased its waterworks to the said persons and their assignees for a term of thirty years, with the right to lay pipes in the streets of the city, and to sell and distribute the water for domestic purposes to the inhabitants of the city; *also with the right to take water from the Los Angeles river at a point at or above the present dam, to be selected within sixty days of the date of the contract. It was provided that no more than 10 inches of water should be taken from the river without the previous consent of the mayor and common council.

The city bound itself not to make any other lease, sale, contract, grant, or franchise to any person, corporation, or company for the sale or delivery of water to the inhabitants of the city for domestic purposes during the continuance of the contract.

And it was provided "that the mayor and common council of said city shall have, and do, reserve the right to regulate the water rates charged by said parties of the second part, or their assigns, provided that they shall not so reduce such water rates or so fix the price thereof to be less than those now charged by the parties of the second part for water."

The said persons agreed to pay the city a rental of $1,500 for the waterworks; to lay Alferitz v. Borgwardt, 126 Cal. 201, 58 Pac. 460.

But the construction of a statute of descent, established by the decisions of the courts at the time of the execution of a quitclaim deed by heirs claiming under the statute, becomes a part of the contract and must govern the rights of the parties, as against a different construction thereafter adopted by overruling the former decisions. Haskett v. Maxey, 134 Ind. 182, 19 L. R. A. 379, 33 N. E. 358.

And an order of court made prior to the commencement of a sheriff's term of office, fixing the compensation to be allowed him for boarding vagrants, establishes a definite contract between the sheriff and the county, the obligation of which cannot be impaired by a retrospective order fixing a greater compensation. Strock v. Cumberland County Comrs. 4 Pa. Dist. R. 321.

A decision of a state court upholding the validity of chattel mortgages as common-law assignments giving preference to creditors, rendered after these mortgages were executed, does not impair the obligation of a contract between the mortgagor and an unsecured general creditor who gave him credit at a time when under the existing decisions such mortgages would be void. Brown v. Grand Rapids Parlor Furniture Co. 16 U. S. App. 221, 58 Fed. Rep. 286, 7 C. A. 225, 22 L. R. A. 817.

A school township can raise no question in respect to vested rights in the surplus dog tax fund, which, it claims, were invaded by a change in the judicial construction of a statute providing for the disposition of such surplus, as the control of the state over public corporations is not subject to the limitations operating in favor of individuals and private corporations. Center School Twp. v. State ex rel. Indianapolis School Comrs. 150 Ind. 168, 49 N. E. 961.

887

down in the streets of the city 12 miles of iron pipes of sufficient capacity to supply the inhabitants with water for domestic purposes; to extend the pipes as fast as the citizens would agree to take sufficient water to pay 10 per cent upon the cost of such extension; to erect one hydrant, as protection against fire, at one corner of each crossing of streets where pipes were or might be laid; to erect an ornamental fountain on the public plaza at a cost not exceeding $1,000; to construct and erect, within two years, such reservoirs, machinery, ditches, and flumes as would secure the inhabitants with a constant supply of water for domestic purposes; to furnish water free of charge for the public school-houses, hospitals, and jails; to keep in repair all of said improvements, at the cost and expense of the parties of the second part, for said term of thirty years, and to return said waterworks to said party of the first part at the expiration of said term, in good order and condition, reasonable wear and damage of the elements excepted, upon payment to said parties of the value of the aforesaid improvements, to be ascertained as provided for in the contract; to give a bond in the sum of $20,000 for the performance of said contract, and to pay all state and county taxes assessed upon the waterworks during the period of thirty years.

[561] *And as the circuit found:

"Griffin, Beaudry, and Lazard applied for and procured said contract on behalf and for the benefit of themselves and other persons, with the intention of forming a corporation to carry out said contract, and afterwards, about the middle or latter part of August, 1868, themselves and said other persons being the incorporators, organized, under the laws of the state of California, the Los Angeles City Water Company, for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of said city with water for domestic purposes, etc., under the terms of said contract, and assigned all their rights and franchises under said contract to said company by a written instrument dated June the 12th, 1869, and recorded in the office of the recorder of said county of Los Angeles, June the 15th, 1869.

"On April the 2d, 1870, the legislature of California passed an act hereinafter set forth, in terms ratifying and confirming said contract.

"Griffin, Beaudry, and Lazard did nothing personally in carrying out said contract or constructing or maintaining said waterworks, but said company, after it was organized, took possession of said waterworks, and has performed all of the above-mentioned obligations of said contract, except the one providing for the return of the waterworks at expiration of lease, and in such performance has laid 320 miles of pipe, erected over 500 hydrants for protection against fire, and constructed 6 reservoirs, with an aggregate capacity of nearly sixty-six millions of gallons, and is now, as it has been at all times since the contract was made, furnishing the city of Los Angeles with water for the extinguishment of fires and for the public schools, hospitals, and jails in said city free of charge. The aforesaid extensions of the waterworks were rendered necessary by the growth of said city, whose population in 1868 was between 5,000 and 6,000, and is now about 103,000.

"During the whole of the year 1868 the territorial limits of the city of Los Angeles were as follows: Four square leagues in a square form, the center of which was the center of the old pueblo plaza.

"About 1872 the limits were extended 420 yards south of *the former south boundary, [562] and within the past three years, and prior to July, 1897, the limits were further extended so as to take in between 10 and 15 square miles of additional adjoining territory. Immediately after the extension of the said limits, the Los Angeles City Water Company began to extend its pipes over the said addition to the city as the same was settled up and improved, and ever since has been, and is now, furnishing water to the people in said district added to the original territory of the city, and, upon the demands of the city council, erected fire hydrants within the said additional territory and furnished water free of charge, and has in all respects continued to lay pipes, erect fire hydrants, and furnish the inhabitants with water for domestic uses in like manner as it has conducted the same business within the original limits of the city as established by the act incorporating it, and so with the more recent extensions of the city limits, to wit, those made within the last three years, the company has also extended its pipes in portions of those limits and furnished water in the same way.

"The quantity of water required to supply the domestic wants of the people of said city is 1 inch of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, to every 100 inhabitants. To meet the increased demands upon it for water under said contract, said company has, among other things, purchased the system known as the 'Beaudry System of Waterworks,' and also certain water rights in the Arroyo Seco, and conducted water from the Arroyo Seco into the city on the east side of the Los Angeles river, and has been furnishing the inhabitants of that portion of the city with water from said system, and also acquired the stock of the corporation known as the East Side Spring Water Company.—the same mentioned in paragraph 10 of the complaint.

"In the growth of the city its settlement extended to localities of higher elevation than those occupied by its inhabitants at the time of said contract, and the point originally selected for the diversion of the water of the Los Angeles river for supplying the city and its inhabitants, as in said contract provided, was so located in said river that it was impracticable to *there maintain dams [563] and diversion works that would not occasionally be swept away or rendered useless by floods; and the surface water of the river after severe storms became muddy and unfit for supplying the inhabitants with water for domestic uses; and in the year 1889 the Crystal Springs Land & Water Company made excavations in the places referred to in the bill of complaint, and laid the pipes therein as alleged, and the water that has been used by the Los Angeles City Water Company for supplying the city with water, as provided in said contract, has ever since been obtained from that source, except that from time to time a further supply of water has been taken from the Los Angeles river in order to supply said inhabitants, which diversions have been at or near the place where the said underground pipes are laid, and that by these means the water can be delivered to the higher elevations, and the underground waters, as to quality and amount, are thus protected against the influences of floods.

"The Los Angeles City Water Company ever since its incorporation has taken more than 10 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, from the Los Angeles river, and the amount taken has increased with the increase of the population of the city and the demands of the municipality itself for water for extinguishing fires and the other public purposes referred to in the said contract, and the amount has increased until now it requires from 1,000 to 1,500 inches of water, measured under a 4-inch pressure, for such purposes, and during the summer season the amount of water used by the Los Angeles City Water Company for the purposes aforesaid runs from 1,000 to 1,500 inches under a 4-inch pressure, inclusive of the water obtained by the underground excavations, which latter furnish from 650 to 690 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure.

"The city of Los Angeles has always had flowing in the Los Angeles River, at the point from which said Los Angeles City Water Company has always diverted water from said river, a quantity of water sufficient to have supplied said Los Angeles City Water Company with all the water required to supply said city and its inhabitants with water [564] for domestic purposes and *municipal uses, and has never objected, up to October 20, 1896, to said Los Angeles City Water Company taking as much water from said river as it might require for said uses, and during all of said period said city has never objected to said company's taking from the surface stream of said river at said point as much water as said company needed for said uses.

"On October the 19th, 1896, the council of the city of Los Angeles adopted a resolution requiring the Los Angeles City Water Company to pay to the city of Los Angeles an amount of money equal to 40 per cent of the gross rates received by said company from the consumers of water as rental for all water taken by said company from the Los Angeles river, and before the 21st day of October, 1896, to attorn to the city of Los Angeles, as tenant of said city, for all of the water so taken from said river, and to agree to pay said rental to said city, and, in case of failure to attorn and agree to pay said rental, to refrain from diverting, taking, or interfering with any of the water mentioned in 177 U. S.

said resolution, except 10 inches after the 20th day of October, 1896.

"On October the 19th, 1896, the city attorney, in writing, notified the Los Angeles City Water Company and the Crystal Springs Land & Water Company of said resolution, and demanded compliance therewith, delivering a copy of said resolution to each of said companies. Neither of them ever attorned to said city for said water or any part thereof, or ever agreed to pay any rental for the same. After the passage of said resolution and ever since said notification, up to the present time, the Los Angeles City Water Company has continually taken from the Los Angeles river, at a point above the northern boundary of said city, for the purposes of distribution and selling the same in said city, a quantity of water varying from 400 to 1,000 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure.

"On the 19th day of April, 1870, the common council of the city of Los Angeles accepted, and the mayor approved, the following report:

"To the Honorable the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Los Angeles and the Los Angeles City Water Company:

"The undersigned commissioners, duly appointed on behalf *of your honorable bodies [565] to adjust, fix, and establish the rates and charges of the Los Angeles City Water Company (a corporation duly incorporated under the laws of the state of California for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of Los Angeles City with pure, fresh water), respectfully report that they have established water rates and charges for domestic purposes, taking as a guide, as near as can be, the charges and rates for domestic purposes charged in July, 1868; that your committee have also fixed the rates and charges for other reasonable objects and purposes, and report as follows, to wit:

"(Then follow the rates agreed upon.)

"The commissioners referred to in said report had been previously selected, two by the city and two by the Los Angeles City Water Company.

"In June, 1871, the city council, on a report of a committee constituted similarly to the one above mentioned, established the same rates as those established in April, 1870.

"On the 13th of August, 1874, a committee constituted in the same manner and for the same purposes as the committee already mentioned reported that they had established water rates and charges for domestic purposes, taking as a guide, as near as possible, the charges and rates for domestic and other reasonable objects and purposes charged in July, 1868. The report was adopted and a committee appointed in conjunction with the city attorney to draft an ordinance embodying the rates fixed in said report, and thereafter, on August the 20th, 1874, an ordinance so drawn was adopted by the council of said city, and the rates established by said ordinance were the same as those established in 1870 and 1871.

"Since and including the year 1880 the [566] city council of the city of Los Angeles has in February of each year passed an ordinance fixing the rates to be charged by all corporations and persons within said city supplying water to the inhabitants thereof, to be in force for one year from and including July the 1st, which rates have been less than the rates charged in 1870, as contained in the ordinance hereinbefore mentioned, and the Los Angeles City Water Company has collected the rates thus fixed by the city of Los Angeles, and no more, but in *the year 1896 the council of the city of Los Angeles passed an ordinance fixing the rates to be charged for water for the year commencing July the 1st, 1896, and ending June 30, 1897, at less than they had ever been fixed before, and a suit was then brought by the complainants herein in this court against the city of Los Angeles to set aside the said ordinance; and in February of the year 1897 the city of Los Angeles passed the ordinance which is assailed in this suit, making a still further reduction in the rates.

"The action of the Los Angeles City Water Company in collecting the rates fixed by said several ordinances constitutes the only acquiescence (if it be an acquiescence) in the action of said council.

"If the rates established in 1870 were collected for the year beginning July the 1st, 1897, and ending June the 30th, 1898, the revenues received by the Los Angeles City Water Company from said rates would be more than $50,000 in excess of the amount which would be received under the rates named in the ordinance of February, 1897.

"In January, 1882, the Los Angeles City Water Company furnished to the council of the city of Los Angeles a statement of its transactions for the preceding year, protesting at the same time against the establishment of any rates less than those which were in force at the date of the lease hereinbefore mentioned, to wit. July the 22d, 1868.

"In January, 1883, said company again furnished said council with a statement showing the names of the consumers of water, the rates paid during the year preceding the date of the statement, and also an itemized statement of the expenditures made for supplying water during the year preceding, but expressly denying any legal right on the part of the council to demand said statement or to fix any rates less than those which were in force in July. 1868.

"Similar statements, accompanied by similar protests, were made annually thereafter up to and including the year 1889, and since that time unverified statements or reports showing its receipts and expenditures have been made by said company to the city council each year.

[567] *"Article 14 of the present Constitution of California, adopted in 1879, is as follows:

"ARTICLE XIV.

"Water and Water Rights.

"Section 1. The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the state in the manner to be prescribed by law: Provided, that the rates or compensation to be collected by any person, company, or corporation in this state for the use of water supplied to any city and county, or city or town, or the inhabitants thereof, shall be fixed annually by the board of supervisors, or city and county, or city or town council, or other governing body of such city and county, or city or town, by ordinance or otherwise, in the manner that other ordinances or legislative acts or resolutions are passed by such body, and shall continue in force for one year, and no longer. Such ordinances or resolutions shall be passed in the month of February of each year, and take effect on the 1st day of July thereafter. Any board or body failing to pass the necessary ordinances or resolutions fixing water rates, where necessary, within such time, shall be subject to peremptory process to compel action at the suit of any party interested, and shall be liable to such further processes and penalties as the legislature may prescribe. Any person, company, or corporation collecting water rates in any city and county, or city or town in this state, otherwise than as so established, shall forfeit the franchises and waterworks of such person, company, or corporation to the city and county, or city or town, where the same are collected, for the public use.

890

"Sec. 2. The right to collect rates or compensation for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and cannot be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law."

"To carry out these provisions of the Constitution, the legislature of California passed an act entitled 'Act to Enable *the Board [568] of Supervisors, Town Council, Board of Aldermen,' etc., which was approved March the 7th, 1881. Stat. Cal. 1881, p. 54.

"In the year 1888 the electors of the city of Los Angeles, pursuant to provisions of the Constitution of said state authorizing them so to do, adopted a charter for said city, which charter was, under the provisions of said Constitution, submitted to the legislature of said state for its approval, ratification, and adoption, and the said charter was, on the 31st day of January, 1889, adopted by said legislature, and thereupon became and ever since has been the charter of the said city of Los Angeles; and by the said charter it is provided, in § 193 as follows:

"The rates of compensation for use of water to be collected by any person, company, or corporation in said city shall be fixed annually by ordinance, and shall continue in force for one year, and no longer. Such ordinance shall be passed in the month of February of each year, and take effect on the 1st day of July thereafter. Should the council fail to pass the necessary ordinance fixing the water rates within the time hereinbefore prescribed, it shall be subject to peremptory processes to compel action at the suit of any party interested." Stat. 1889, p. 503.

"The ordinance of 1897 now sought to be annulled was passed pursuant to the foregoing constitutional and statutory provisions." [88 Fed. Rep. 723.]

177 U. S.

A decree was entered for complainants (appellees), adjudging that that part of the contract entered into between the city of Los Angeles and Griffin, Beaudry, and Lazard, in so far as said contract provides that the city shall not reduce the water rates below those charged on the date of said contract, is valid, and that the ordinance of February 23, 1897, reduced the water rates below those so charged, and "impaired the obligation of such contract, and said ordinance is null and void; and it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said ordinance be, and the same is, hereby vacated and set aside and held for naught."

From the judgment this appeal is taken.

The assignments of error present the contentions discussed in the opinion.

Mr. S. O. Houghton submitted the cause for appellants. Mr. Walter F. Haas and Messrs. Lee & Scott were with him on the brief.

Complainants have been guilty of such acquiescence in the action of the council as to estop them from maintaining the present suit; and even if this be not so, their laches in not sooner seeking an injunction against infringement of their rights is fatal.

Smith v. Clay, 2 Ambl. 645; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 817, 418, 419; Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. §§ 17, 18; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Austin, 168 U. S. 685, 42 L. ed. 626, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 223.

If the company had a valid contract it should have gone on and collected the rates authorized by that instrument. Its remedy was to disregard the ordinance.

Austin v. Austin City Cemetery Asso. 87 Tex. 330, 28 S. W. 528.

Injunction is not the proper remedy, as there is an adequate remedy at law against any attempt to enforce the ordinance if invalid.

Spring Valley Waterworks v. Bartlett, 9 Sawy. 555, 16 Fed. Rep. 615; Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 503; Murphy v. East Portland, 42 Fed. Rep. 308; Stevens v. St. Mary's Training School, 144 Ill. 336, 18 L. R. A. 832, 32 N. E. 962.

The constitutional provision with regard to incurring a forfeiture by charging higher rates than those fixed by the council cannot apply here.

Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co. 124 Cal. 385, 57 Pac. 216; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Waterworks Co. 49 Cal. 638.

The rule that the interpretation placed by parties on a contract controls does not apply to acts of authorities of municipal corporations.

National Waterworks Co. v. School Dist. No. 7, 4 McCrary, 198, 48 Fed. Rep. 523.

A license is never irrevocable where it appears to be intended to continue during the pleasure of the licensor, and the licensee cannot make the license irrevocable by imprudently expending money upon the hope and expectation that the license will not be countermanded.
177 U. S.

Emerson v. Bergin, 76 Cal. 201, 18 Pac. 264; Potter v. Mercer, 53 Cal. 673; Washburne, Real Prop. marg. pp. 400 et seq. p. 727 (star p. 560).

A license with respect to real property can be revoked even after the licensee has incurred expense on the faith thereof.

Morse v. Copeland, 2 Gray, 302; Wood v. Edes, 2 Allen, 578; Mason v. Holt, 1 Allen, 45; Houston v. Laffee, 46 N. H. 505; Crosdale v. Lanigan, 129 N. Y. 604, 29 N. E. 824; Hathaway v. Yakima Water, Light, & Power Co. 14 Wash. 469, 44 Pac. 896; Wheeler v. St. Joseph Stockyards & Terminal Co. 66 Mo. App. 260; Jensen v. Hunter (Cal.) 41 Pac. 14.

It is only in exceptional cases that an estoppel can be invoked against a municipal corporation.

Sacramento v. Clunie, 120 Cal. 29, 52 Pac. 44.

Messrs. John Garber and S. M. White submitted the cause for appellees. Mr. J. S. Chapman and Messrs. White & Monroc were with them on the brief.

The city is estopped from challenging the authority of this contract, in view of the various acts of the legislature and the acceptance of the charters by the city, and of the various city ordinances and the entire conduct of both parties.

Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank v. Arkansas City, 40 U. S. App. 257, 76 Fed. Rep. 271, 22 C. C. A. 171, 34 L. R. A. 518.

Where a contract is uncertain and indefinite,—as this one certainly is, with reference to the amount of water to be taken,—the courts will accept the interpretation that the conduct of the parties has put upon it.

Central Trust Co. v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 34 Fed. Rep. 255; McNeil v. Shirley, 33 Cal. 206; Hill v. McKay, 94 Cal. 20, 29 Pac. 406; Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 108; Pico v. Coleman, 47 Cal. 65; Truett v. Adams, 66 Cal. 218, 5 Pac. 96; Yocco v. Conroy, 104 Cal. 468, 38 Pac. 107; Long-Bell Lumber Co. v. Stump, 57 U. S. App. 546, 86 Fed. Rep. 578, 30 C. C. A. 260.

The city, having allowed the water company for nearly thirty years to divert more than 10 inches of water under a 4-inch pressure, and to expend vast sums of money upon the faith of the continuance of the right to take such water, could not withdraw its consent within the period of the contract.

Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co. 124 Cal. 368, 57 Pac. 210, 571.

The prohibition in the contract against taking more than 10 inches of water does not mean 10 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure.

Dougherty v. Haggin, 56 Cal. 522.

The validity of the contract has frequently been recognized by the California supreme court.

Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Waterworks Co. 49 Cal. 638; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co. 61 Cal. 65; Los Angeles Water Co. v. Los Angeles, 55 Cal. 176;

Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co. 124 Cal. 368, 57 Pac. 210, 571.

The legislative act ratifying the contract, passed after the company was incorporated and after the assignment to it, does not come within the principle of San Francisco v. Spring Valley Waterworks, 48 Cal. 493.

Santa Ana Water Co. v. San Buenaventura, 56 Fed. Rep. 348; People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Stanford, 77 Cal. 371, 2 L. R. A. 92, 18 Pac. 85, 19 Pac. 693.

The legislature may confer powers upon, or grant privileges to, private corporations by special act.

California State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co. 22 Cal. 398.

[569] *Mr. Justice McKenna, after stating the case, delivered the opinion of the court:

The circuit court decided that the provision of the contract executed by the city and Griffin, Beaudry, and Lazard constituted a contract, and the ordinance of the city regulating the rates of appellees impaired it. Against this conclusion the appellant contends: (1) The contract only purports to bind the city in its corporate capacity,—the city as landlord and owner, and not as a governmental agent of the state; (2) the city did not have power to bind the state; (3) the provision of the contract, restraining the city from granting any other franchise, if it created an exclusive franchise, invalidated the whole contract; (4) the act of 1870, purporting to ratify the contract of 1868, is unconstitutional and void; (5) the water company has no power under its charter to collect water rates, except as prescribed by the Constitution and statutes of the state; (6) By acquiescing in the regulations of rates ever since 1880 the company is estopped from claiming equitable relief, and is guilty of laches; (7) water rates established by the ordinance are not shown to be lower than those charged in 1868, or if lower, that the revenue of the company is reduced; (8) if the ordinance is invalid, it is void on its face, and there is therefore no cloud on the company's title; (9) the company violated the contract by taking water from the Los Angeles river, and therefore is not entitled to specific performance.

We will consider these contentions in their order.

1. The contract only purports to bind the city in its corporate capacity,—the city as landlord and owner, and not as governmental agent of the state.

The argument to support the contention, succinctly stated, is that the right to regulate rates came from the contract, not from the law. In other words, it was reserved from the contract, and was a virtual granting back by the lessees of the proprietary [570] *right which would have otherwise passed by the lease, leaving, however, all municipal powers intact.

The provision of the contract is as follows: "Always provided that the mayor and common council of said city shall have, and do reserve, the right to regulate the water rates charged by said parties of the second part, or their assigns, provided that they shall not so reduce such water rates, or so fix the price thereof, to be less than those now charged by the parties of the second part for water."

The municipal powers of the city provided in the act of incorporation, among others, were: "To make by-laws or ordinances, . . . to make regulations to prevent and extinguish fires, . . . to provide for supplying the city with water."

It is not denied that the city had power to regulate rates. Indeed, it is insisted that it was so constantly its duty that it could not be contracted away. It was not a power, therefore, necessary to be granted by the contract, and the distinction between the proprietary right and the municipal right, made by appellants, would have been idle to observe. To have limited the right of regulation to the city in one capacity, and left it unrestrained in the other, would have been useless, and such intention cannot be attributed to the parties. We think, therefore, the power to regulate rates was an existent power, not granted by the contract, but reserved from it, with a single limitation,—the limitation that it should not be exercised to reduce rates below what was then charged. Undoubtedly there was a contractual element; it was not, however, in granting the power of regulation, but in the limitation upon it. Whether the limitation was and is valid is another consideration.

2. The city did not have the power to bind the state.

This contention as expressed is very comprehensive, and seems to deny the competency of the state to give the city the power to bind it. We do not, however, understand counsel as so contending, nor could they. Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 341, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77. See also People v. Stephens, 62 Cal. 209. We understand the argument to be that the power, if not expressly given will not be presumed unless necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to other powers expressly given,—not *simply convenient, but indispensable [571] to them. In other words, the rule of strict construction is invoked against the grant of such power to the city.

The rule is familiar. It has often been announced by this court, and quite lately in Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit R. Co. 171 U. S. 48, 43 L. ed. 67, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 732.

The effect of the rule in the case at bar we are not required to determine if the act of 1870 ratifying the contract is valid.

It reads as follows:

"An Act to Ratify Certain Acts and Ordinances of the Mayor and Common Council of the City of Los Angeles.

"The people of the state of California, represented in senate and assembly, do enact as follows:

"Sec. 1. The following acts, contracts, and ordinances of the mayor and common council of the city of Los Angeles are hereby ratified and confirmed: The contract and lease for the care and maintenance of the Los Angeles City Waterworks, entered into and made between the mayor and common council of the city of Los Angeles, on the one part, and John S. Griffin, Prudent Beaudry, and Solomon Lazard, on the other part, dated the twentieth (20th) day of July, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight (1868); and also the ordinance confirmatory of the same, passed July the twenty-second (22d), eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, which contract and ordinance are recorded in the office of the county recorder of Los Angeles county, in book one of miscellaneous records, pages four hundred and twenty-eight (428) to four hundred and thirty-one (431); (here follows certain other ordinances and deeds not affecting the contract in question)."

Appellants assert that the act violates the following provision of the Constitution of the state:

"Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, except for municipal purposes. All general laws and special acts passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time, or repealed." [Art. 4, § 31.]

[572] At the time of the passage of the act of 1870 the contract of 1868 had been assigned to the water company, and the facts show that it was applied for and procured on behalf of Griffin, *Beaudry, and Lazard, and other persons, with the intention of forming a corporation to execute its provisions, and for such purpose they and other persons organized under the laws of the state the Los Angeles City Water Company, the appellee. It is hence argued that the act of 1870 confers franchises on the company by a special act, instead of by a general law, and thereby infringes the constitutional provision, and against the existence of such power in the legislature the following cases are cited; Low v. Marysville, 5 Cal. 214; San Francisco v. Spring Valley Waterworks, 48 Cal. 493; Oroville & V. R. Co. v. Plumas County Supers. 37 Cal. 354; Spring Valley Waterworks v. Bryant, 52 Cal. 132; San Francisco v. Spring Valley Waterworks, 53 Cal. 608.

Of these cases, only Low v. Marysville and Oroville & V. R. Co. v. Plumas County Supers. were decided before the passage of act of 1870.

It was held in Low v. Marysville that the legislature was prohibited from conferring upon a municipal corporation powers other than governmental by a special act. Chief Justice Murray said: ". . . for as it would have been a violation of the Constitution to create an incorporation by special act, for any other than municipal purposes, it follows that it would be equally unconstitutional to confer special power on a corporation already created. In other words, it would be doing, by two acts, that which the legislature could not do by one; and corporations for almost every purpose might be created by special act by first incorporating the stockholders as a municipal body."

But in California State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co. 22 Cal. 398, decided at July term, 1863, a contrary doctrine was announced. It 177 U. S.

was held that the legislature could grant exclusive franchises and privileges to persons or corporations; that if granted to a person they could be assigned to a corporation, and that a corporation could receive from the legislature a direct grant of special privileges and franchises. The case necessarily involved all of those propositions.

The right and privilege passed on were granted by an act of *the legislature, and [573] consisted of the exclusive right to O. E. Allen and Clark Burnham to construct and put in operation a telegraph line from San Francisco to the city of Marysville. They assigned the right to the California State Telegraph Company. The court said: "The case presents the following questions for our adjudication: 1st. Is the act of May 3d, 1852, granting certain exclusive privileges to Allen and Burnham, constitutional? 2d. Have the plaintiffs the power or right to purchase, hold, and enjoy these exclusive privileges?"

Both propositions were answered in the affirmative. Of the second the court said:

"The next and most important question is whether the plaintiff, a corporation, had the power to purchase and hold the special privileges granted by the act to Allen & Burnham. It is not disputed that those grantees had power to sell and convey, for the act specially makes the grant to them or 'their assigns,' thus clearly making the privileges assignable. But it is urged that the clause in the Constitution which prohibits the legislature from creating a private corporation by special act equally prohibits them from conferring any powers or privileges of a corporate character by special law; and that all the powers and privileges which a corporation can exercise or hold must be derived from a general law, applicable alike to all corporations.

"It is clear that the Constitution prohibits the legislature from 'creating' corporations by special act, except for municipal purposes; and it is equally clear that this prohibition extends only to their 'creation.' There is nothing in the language used which either directly or impliedly prohibits the legislature from directly granting to a corporation already in existence and created under the general laws, special privileges in the nature of a franchise, by a special act, or prohibiting a corporation from purchasing or holding such franchises which may have been granted to others. To give the Constitution any such effect we would be compelled to interpolate terms not used, and which cannot be implied without a perversion of the language employed. To give it such a construction we would have to make it read thus: 'Corporations may be formed, and other franchises *and special privileges granted, under [574] general laws, but shall not be created or granted by special act, except for municipal purposes.' If such had been the meaning intended by the framers of the Constitution, they could have easily expressed it in apt words. The language used by them is clear, and they well knew that it included but one of a numerous class of franchises, the subjects of legislative grant, and that a regulation of one could not by any reasonable implication be extended to others not mentioned."

And the learned justice who delivered the opinion of the court concluded the discussion by saying: "I hold, then, that the plaintiffs, as a corporation, were capable of receiving a grant of these special privileges directly from the legislature, and of purchasing them from the grantees."

There was an implied recognition of the same doctrine in Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 22 Cal. 434.

But it is urged by appellants that Oroville & V. R. Co. v. Plumas County Supers. (decided in April, 1869) held "that the legislature could not authorize the county to grant special privileges to a private corporation, and this was confirmed in Waterloo Turnp. Road Co. v. Cole, 51 Cal. 384 (decided in 1876)." The latter case we may disregard, as it was decided subsequently to the act of 1870. The former case did not decide as contended, nor was the point involved in it. The action was mandamus to compel the county to subscribe to the capital stock of the railroad company under an act of the legislature directing the supervisors of the county to meet at a designated day and take and subscribe to the capital stock of the railroad company.

The defense was not want of power in the legislature to direct the subscription, not want of power in the company to receive it because it was a corporation, but want of power to receive because it was not a corporation. Against this it was urged that the act of the legislature recognized the company as a corporation. To the contention the court replied: "But it is claimed that the existence of the corporation is recognized by the act requiring the county to subscribe to the stock of the company. Admitting such to be the case, that will not overcome the difficulty, for a corporation of this character cannot *be created by legislative recognition; the Constitution (art. 4, § 31) prohibiting the creation of corporations, except for municipal purposes, otherwise than by general laws."

It follows, therefore, that at the time of the contract of 1868 and of the passage of the ratifying act of 1870 it was established by the decision of the highest court of the state that the Constitution of the state permitted a grant of special franchises to persons and corporations, and permitted the latter to receive assignments of them from such persons, or grants of them directly from the legislature. This law was part of the contract of 1868, as confirmed by the act of 1870, and could not be affected by subsequent decisions. Rowan v. Runnels, 5 How. 134, 12 L. ed. 85; Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Debolt, 16 How. 416, 14 L. ed. 997; Havemeyer v. Iowa County, 3 Wall. 294, 18 L. ed. 38; Chicago v. Sheldon, 9 Wall. 50, 19 L. ed. 594; Olcott v. Fond du Lac County Supers. 16 Wall. 678, 21 L. ed. 382; McCullough v. Virginia, 172 U. S. 102, 43 L. ed. 382, 19 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 134. Nor by the new Constitution of 1879. New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Fisk v. Jefferson Police Jury, 116 U. S. 131, 29 L. ed. 587, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 329; St. Tammany Waterworks v. New Orleans Waterworks, 120 U. S. 64, 30 L. ed. 563, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 405.

The subsequent decisions of the supreme court of the state have not been uniform. San Francisco v. Spring Valley Waterworks unqualifiedly overruled California State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co. but People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Stanford, 77 Cal. 360, 2 L. R. A. 92, 18 Pac. 85, 19 Pac. 693, restored its doctrine to the extent, at least, of holding that the constitutional provision that "corporations may be formed by general laws, but shall not be created by special act," only prohibits the creation of corporations and conferring powers upon them by legislative enactment, and does not prohibit "the assignment of a franchise to a legally organized corporation by persons having the lawful right to exercise and transfer the same." See also San Luis Water Co. v. Estrada, 117 Cal. 168, 48 Pac. 1075.

There are expressions in the latter case which, it is urged, that notwithstanding the modification by it and by People ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Stanford of the doctrine of San Francisco v. Spring Valley Waterworks, make that doctrine applicable to the case at bar. The San Luis Water Company was a corporation, and was formed for the purpose of furnishing the town of San Luis Obispo and the inhabitants thereof with pure fresh water.

*By an act of the legislature entitled "An[576] Act to Provide for the Introduction of Good and Pure Water into the Town of San Luis Obispo," approved March 28, 1872, a franchise was granted for that purpose to M. A. Benrimo, C. W. Dana, and W. W. Hays. The San Luis Water Company claimed to be the assignee of the franchise. The assignment was attacked on the ground that it was invalid under the Constitution of the state. The court said: "The precise point made is, that the power to supply a city with water cannot be conferred, directly or indirectly, upon a private corporation by special act."

And further: "The grant to Benrimo and his associates was also to their assigns. There can be no doubt but that they might, by the terms of the grant, sell or assign the franchise. It seems to me too plain to require argument, that the purchase by the plaintiff was strictly and directly within its powers, and contributed necessarily and directly to its objects and purposes." But the learned commissioner who delivered the opinion also said: "If any connection could be traced between the plaintiff and the passage of the special act of 1872, or it appeared that the act was obtained for the purpose of evading the constitutional inhibition, I could see how the case of San Francisco v. Spring Valley Waterworks, 48 Cal. 493, might apply. But, in view of the facts in this case, I cannot regard the article of the Constitution mentioned or the case last cited as having any application here." But this is not a decision that the case would apply. And if it is a concession of strength in the argument it is not a concession of conclusive strength.

[577] We are not concerned, however, to reconcile the cases decided since 1870, and we have only mentioned them to present fully the contention of appellants. The cases prior to that time, as we have seen, made the obligation of the contract of 1868, and determined the power of the legislature to ratify it. And there seems to have been no question of this power. Besides legislative recognition, besides recognition by many acts of the city, the contract has received judicial recognition. Taxation upon the property acquired to execute it has been sustained. 49 Cal. 638. It was interpreted, and under its provisions the company denied compensation* for water used in sprinkling the streets of the city. 55 Cal. 176. An ordinance was declared void imposing a license upon the company for doing business in the city. 61 Cal. 65. Its right to take more than 10 inches of water from the river was sustained in 124 Cal. 368, 57 Pac. 210, 571.

The case in 61 Cal. was heard in department and in banc, and the contract received careful consideration. The judgment of the trial court was for the water company, and department 2 of the supreme court, affirming it, said:

"The court was correct in its judgment. The plaintiff had already reserved a sum to be paid by defendant for the privilege of vending water for domestic purposes, and it could not change its contract in the manner proposed. The privileges granted by the lease and the ordinance of 1868 were already vested in the defendant as strongly as they could be by a license under the ordinance of 1879. A license is a grant of permission or authority. The defendant already had permission and authority granted by ordinance and ratified by the legislature. The city cannot, during the term of the lease, of its own motion, increase the amount to be paid for the privileges granted.

"It is hardly necessary to say that the point made by the appellant, that neither the city nor the legislature can grant or alienate any of the rights of sovereignty, has no application to this case."

The court in banc, through its chief justice, approved this language, and, after quoting cases, said:

"The authorities of the city of Los Angeles, by a contract (the validity of which has not been challenged by either party) and for certain valuable considerations therein expressed, granted to the defendant's assignors the privilege of supplying the city of Los Angeles and the inhabitants thereof with fresh water for domestic purposes, with the right to receive the rents and profits thereof to their own use;"—and after citing cases to show that the exaction of the license would impair the obligation of the contract, concluded as follows:

"The principles enunciated in the foregoing cases are eminently *sound and just, and [578] are directly applicable to the case we are now considering. The city of Los Angeles, by its solemn contract and for various considerations therein stated, gave to the party under whom defendant claims the privilege of introducing, distributing, and selling water to the inhabitants of that city on certain terms and conditions which defendant has complied with; and it was not within the power of the city authorities, by ordinance or otherwise, afterward to impose additional burdens as a condition to the exercise of the rights and privileges granted."

3. The provision of the contract, restraining the city from granting any other franchise, if it created an exclusive franchise, invalidated the whole contract. 4. The act of 1870, purporting to ratify the contract of 1868, is unconstitutional and void. 5. The water company has no power under its charter to collect water rates, except as prescribed by the Constitution and statutes of the state.

These contentions are dependent upon the same reasoning as the preceding one, and do not require a separate discussion.

6. By acquiescing in the regulations of rates ever since 1880 the company is estopped from claiming equitable relief and is guilty of laches.

There was no such acquiescence as estopped the water company from contesting the ordinance of the city. The facts are that in 1880 the city passed an ordinance to be in effect one year, establishing water rates, and passed one every year thereafter, including 1897, when the one in controversy was passed. The rates established by the ordinances were less than those adopted in 1870, and the latter are claimed to have been not higher than the rates charged in 1868. The company collected the rates established by the ordinances, except those established in 1896 and 1897. A suit was brought by the company to set aside the ordinance of 1896, and that of 1897 is assailed in the case at bar. These ordinances fixed the rates at less than they had been fixed before. The company has also every year since 1882 filed a statement with the city council, showing the names of the consumers of water, the rates paid, and the expenditures made for supplying water for the preceding year. The company *always protested against the right [579] of the city to demand statements, and claimed to make them solely for its information. The company also in 1882 protested against the power of the city to fix rates on any other basis than that of the contract of 1868. The city therefore cannot claim to have been deceived by the action of the company in collecting the rates established prior to 1896. They were less, it is stipulated, than those of 1870, but how much less we are not informed. It is true we are not informed how much less those fixed in 1896 and 1897 are than those of the prior years. They are less, "less than they had ever been fixed before," is the stipulation; and they will, according to the stipulation, produce more than $50,000 less revenue than those of 1870.

Acquiescence in a regulation which, all things considered, may not have been injurious, does not preclude a contest of that which is injurious. It must be remembered that the contract did not forbid all regulation, but only regulation beyond a certain limit. There was no concession of a power to go beyond that limit, but constant protest against it; and when its exercise did go beyond that limit, producing injury not balanced by other considerations, the right to restrain it would naturally be, and we think could legally be, exerted. As we have said, there was no concealment, no misleading, no injury, no change of condition, no circumstance which could invoke the doctrine of estoppel or of laches. Appellants, however, assert there was, and claim that the acquiescence of the water company was induced by the fear that the city would prevent the unlimited use of the river water,—a use beyond the 10 inches claimed to be allowed by the contract, and a use against other and proprietary rights of the city. Of the latter the record does not enable us to form a judgment. Of the former the supreme court of the state (124 Cal. 368, 57 Pac. 210, 571) has decided against the contention of the city. We approve the decision and hereafter quote its language. The appellants' inference, therefore, is without the support of anything in the record.

7. The water rates established by the ordinance are not shown to be lower than those charged in 1868, or, if lower, that the revenue of the company is reduced.

[580] *To sustain this contention it is claimed by appellants that there is no testimony in the record to show that the rates established in 1897 were lower than those charged in 1868. Appellants say:

"The only thing which complainants rely on to establish this fact is the recital in the report of a committee of the council appointed in 1870 for the purpose of agreeing with the water company upon a schedule of water rates to be charged, in which it stated (by the joint committee) 'that they have established water rates and charges for domestic purposes, taking as a guide, as near as can be, the charges and rates for domestic purposes charged in July, 1868. That your committee have also fixed the rates and charges for other reasonable objects and purposes, and report as follows.'"

It is urged this is not a statement that the rates fixed in 1870 were equal to those of 1868; indeed, that they may have been higher. And it is also urged there is a distinction made between rates for domestic purposes and rates for "other reasonable objects and purposes," which may mean not domestic purposes, and as to these it does not appear upon what they were based.

We are not disposed to dwell long on these claims. It is incredible that the city should have demanded statements from the company yearly, have passed ordinances yearly, and provoked and endured an expensive litigation to establish rates higher than or the same as those which already existed. If statements and ordinances were necessary in fulfillment of the duty of the city under the Constitution of the state, neither controversy nor litigation was necessary, nor would either have ensued.

It is urged under this head that it is not shown that the income of the water company is less under the rates fixed by the city than under those of 1868. The showing would be irrelevant. The contract concerns rates, not income, and the power of the city over them under the contract.

8. If the ordinance is invalid, it is void on its face, and there is, therefore, no cloud on the company's title.

The contention is that "if the contract of 1868 is valid, and the ordinance of 1897 reduces the income of the company below *that [581] which it should receive, the ordinance is void on its face as being in conflict with the Federal Constitution, and is no cloud on complainants' title."

It is hence deduced that the water company has adequate legal remedies, and cannot resort to an equitable one.

We concur with the learned trial judge that the ordinance is not void on its face. As said by him:

"In the case at bar, however, the ordinance upon its face is valid, and its invalidity appears only when considered in connection with the contract of July the 22d, 1868, and evidence showing what the water rates were at that date. While the court takes judicial notice of the ratifying act of April 2, 1870, still, since the provisions of the contract of July the 22d, 1868, are not embodied in said act, I am not sure that said provisions are matters of judicial knowledge, although such seems to be the ruling of the court (one of the justices dissenting) in Brady v. Page, 59 Cal. 52. Conceding, however, that the court will take judicial notice of all the provisions of said contract, still the one in question simply provides that water rates shall not be reduced below the rates then charged, without indicating what those rates were, and therefore the invalidity of the ordinance appears, not upon its face, but only in connection with extraneous evidence of what the rates were in July, 1868, and for this reason complainants have adduced that evidence in the present case."

And further:

"The complainants must either submit to the terms of the ordinance or incur unusually onerous expenditures. It is reasonably certain that if, with the ordinance standing, they were to undertake the collection of rates in excess of those prescribed in the ordinance, they would be resisted at every point by the consumers of water, and thus be driven to innumerable actions at law. Besides, should they, in any instance, succeed in collecting, without an action, a higher rate than the ordinance prescribes, it is equally certain that they would thereby bring upon themselves protracted and heavy litigation, having for its object forfeiture of their entire system of works. Surely these injuries are irreparable, and actions at law, [582] so far from being adequate *to the exigencies of the situation, are, as complainants in their brief forcibly put it, mere mockeries of a remedy."

9. The company violated the contract by taking water from the Los Angeles river, and therefore is not entitled to specific performance.

In reply to this contention, we may adopt the language of the supreme court of the state of California, used on behalf of the court by Mr. Justice McFarland, in Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co. 124 Cal. 377, 57 Pac. 213.

The contract of 1868 and the right of the water company to take water from the river were considered and decided. The learned justice said:

"Before considering the main questions in the case, it is proper here to notice a preliminary point made by the city, and somewhat insisted on; to wit: That the only quantity of the water of the Los Angeles river to which the water company is entitled under the contract is 10 inches under a 4-inch pressure. This contention cannot be maintained. The words of the contract on this subject are simply that the company shall not take from the river 'more than 10 inches of water without the previous consent' of the city; there is nothing in the contract about '4-inch pressure,' nor is there any intimation as to what the parties meant by '10 inches' of water. But, looking at the context and the subject-matter of the contract, it is quite evident that the parties did not mean only 10 inches under a 4-inch pressure. If that had been the meaning, there would have been no sense in the other important covenants. At the time of the contract it would have taken many times 10 inches under a 4-inch pressure to furnish water for domestic purposes to even the few thousand people who were then inhabitants of the city; and much more than that amount was necessary to supply free water under the contract; and a solemn covenant to supply a growing city with sufficient water for domestic and municipal purposes for thirty years from a flow of 10 inches under a 4-inch pressure would have been absurd. The company, immediately after the date of the contract, commenced to use an amount of water greatly in excess of 10 inches under a 4-inch pressure; soon after [583] the execution *of the contract the company was using 300 inches under a 4-inch pressure, and from that to the present time they have been using, with the knowledge and consent of the city, from 300 to 700 inches so measured. Therefore, whatever (if anything) was meant by the simple words '10 inches,' the contract was immediately, and has been continuously, construed by the action of the parties as meaning more than 10 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure. There is no pretense that the city ever objected to the use of this water by the water company until 1896, when an ordinance was passed by the city government undertaking to withdraw the city's consent to the taking of more than 10 inches from the river. It is difficult to imagine how this ordinance was passed seriously; for if the water company had been prevented from taking from the river at that time more than 10 inches of water under a 4-inch pressure, there certainly would have been a water famine in the city, for the city had no works of its own and no means whatever for supplying water for either domestic or municipal purposes. But the city, having allowed the water company for nearly thirty years to divert the quantity of water above mentioned, and to expend vast sums of money upon the faith of a continuance of the right to take said water, could not withdraw its consent within the period of the contract."

177 U. S.

The learned justice then quoted and approved the following remarks of the circuit court in the case at bar:

"If it be conceded, as claimed by defendants (which, however, I do not decide) that the provision of the contract, limiting the quantity of the water to be taken from the river without previous consent of the city, is sufficiently certain for enforcement, or, more specially, that said quantity is 10 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure, still, the consent of the city to the taking of a larger quantity, once given, cannot be withdrawn during the life of the contract, for the reason that large expenditures have been made by complainants in reliance upon such consent." The court cites as authorities to the point: Rhodes v. Otis, 33 Ala. 600, 73 Am. Dec. 439; Woodbury v. Parshley, 7 N. H. 237, 26 Am. Dec. 739; Lacy v. Arnett, 33 Pa. 169; Russell v. Hubbard*, 59 [584] Ill. 339; Beall v. Marietta Paper Mill Co. 45 Ga. 33; Veghte v. Raritan Water Power Co. 19 N. J. Eq. 153; Williamston & T. R. Co. v. Battle, 66 N. C. 546; Flickinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 11 L. R. A. 134, 25 Pac. 268; Grimshaw v. Belcher, 88 Cal. 217, 26 Pac. 84; Smith v. Green, 109 Cal. 228, 41 Pac. 1022, all of which sustain the point."

Decree affirmed.

NEWMAN ERB, as Receiver of the Kansas City, Wyandotte, & Northwestern Railroad Company, Plff. in Err.,

v.

OTTO J. MORASCH and Eliza Morasch, as the Next of Kin of Irene Morasch, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 584-587.)

Receivers—duties of—liability to suit—regulation of speed of trains by city—effect on interstate trains—exception of dummy engines or electric railroad.

1. A receiver appointed by a Federal court to NOTE.—As to actions against receivers—see Dillingham v. Anthony (Tex.) 3 L. R. A. 634, and note.

As to action by and against receivers—see note to J. I. Case Plow Works v. Finks, 26 C. C. 4. 49.

As to equality of rights and privileges—see take charge of a railroad must operate the road according to the laws of the state in which it is situated.

2. A receiver is liable to suit in a court other than that by which he was appointed, even in a state court, for disregard of official duty which causes injury to the parties suing.
3. A regulation by a city of the speed of railroad trains within the city limits is not, as to interstate trains, an unconstitutional regulation of interstate commerce,—at least until Congress shall take action in the matter.
4. An exception of a dummy railroad operated by steam, or of an electric railroad, from an ordinance limiting the speed of railroad trains within a city, does not make an arbitrary and unreasonable classification in denial of the equal protection of the laws.

[No. 249.]

Submitted April 18, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas to review a decision sustaining an ordinance regulating speed of trains in a city. Affirmed.

See same case below, 60 Kan. 251, 56 Pac. 133.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. B. P. Waggener and Albert H. Horton submitted the cause for plaintiff in error.

Mr. George B. Watson submitted the cause for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

While in their briefs many matters are [585]discussed with fulness *and elaboration by counsel for plaintiff in error, we are of opinion that those of a Federal nature involved in this record are few in number and practically determined by previous decisions of this court. Of course, all questions arising under the Constitution and laws of Kansas are, for the purposes of this case, foreclosed by the decisions of the state courts. Turner v. Wilkes County Comrs. 173 U. S. 461, 43 L. ed. 768, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464; Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, ante, 119, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77, and cases cited in opinion.

In September, 1888, the city council of Kansas City passed an ordinance regulating the running of railroad trains through that city. Sections 2 and 8 are the only ones material to the present controversy. They are as follows:

"Sec. 2. It shall be unlawful for any such engineer, conductor, or other persons having a railway engine or train of cars in charge to permit the same to be run along any track in said city at a greater speed than six miles an hour."

"Sec. 8. The provisions of this ordinance shall not apply to the Interstate Rapid Transit Railway Company, excepting with reference to funeral or other processions."

Now, in respect to the Federal questions, we remark, first, that it is the duty of a receiver, appointed by a Federal court to take charge of a railroad, to operate such road according to the laws of the state in which it is situated. 25 Stat. at L. 436, chap. 866, § 2; United States v. Harris, 177 U. S. 305, ante, 780, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609.

Second, that he is liable to suit in a court other than that by which he was appointed, even in a state court, for a disregard of official duty which causes injury to the party suing. McNulta v. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327, 35 L. ed. 796, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905.

Third, that a city, when authorized by the legislature, may regulate the speed of railroad trains within the city limits. Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 521, 24 L. ed. 734; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Illinois ex rel. Jett, 177 U. S. 514, ante, 868, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 722. Such act is, even as to interstate trains, one only indirectly affecting interstate commerce, and is within the power of the state until at least Congress shall take action in the matter.

And, fourth, the sections quoted of the ordinance are not in *conflict with those provisions of the 1st section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, which restrain a state from denying the equal protection of the laws. This last proposition seems to be the only matter requiring anything more than a declaration of the law and a citation of decided cases. [586]

The contention here is that the exception of the Interstate Transit Railway Company from the provision in reference to the speed of its trains creates a classification which is arbitrary and without any reasonable basis, and therefore operates to deny the equal protection of the laws. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255. If there were nothing in the record beyond the mere words of the ordinance we are of opinion that that contention could not be sustained, because it is obvious on a moment's reflection that the tracks of different railroads may traverse the limits of a city under circumstances so essentially different as to justify separate regulations. One may pass through crowded parts crossing or along streets constantly traveled upon by foot passengers and vehicles, while others may pass through remote parts of the city where there is little travel

Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 579, and note.

As to validity of class legislation—see State v. Goodwill (W. Va.) 6 L. R. A. 621, and note; State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 789, and note.

That state laws cannot regulate interstate commerce—see Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Com. (Va.) 13 L. R. A. 107, and note.

As to state laws interfering with interstate or foreign commerce—see note to McCanna & F. Co. v. Citizens' Trust & Surety Co. 24 C. C. A. 13.

As to state regulation of commerce—see notes to Ratterman v. Western U. Tele. Co. 32 L. ed. U. S. 229; Harmon v. Chicago, 37 L. ed. U. S. 216; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Backus, 38 L. ed. U. S. 1041; Postal Tele. Cable Co. v. Adams, 39 L. ed. U. S. 311.

and little danger to individuals or carriages. One may pass through such parts of the city as will prevent its tracks from being fenced and where it is not in fact fenced, while another may pass through parts which permit of the fencing of the tracks and where its tracks are in fact fenced. Under those circumstances a difference of regulation as to the matter of speed would be perfectly legitimate, and it could not be held that the classification was arbitrary or without reasonable reference to the conditions of the several roads. With the presumption always in favor of the validity of legislation, state or municipal, if the ordinance stood by itself the courts would be compelled to presume that the different circumstances surrounding the tracks of the respective railroads were such as to justify a different rule in respect to the speed of their trains.

[587] But in this case we are not left to any mere matter of presumption. The testimony discloses that the Interstate Rapid Transit Railroad is simply a street railroad connecting the cities of Kansas City, Missouri, and Kansas City, Kansas, operated at the time of the passage of the ordinance by steam power, but *with that power used only in dummy engines, and, at the time of the accident involved in this case, by electricity. It is true that there is testimony that at or near the place where the accident happened parties thought the operation of the street railroad was more dangerous than the operation of the railroad of which the plaintiff in error was receiver, but the validity of such an ordinance is not determinable by individual judgments. It is not a question to be settled by the opinions of witnesses and the verdict of a jury upon the question whether one railroad in its operation is more dangerous than another. All that is necessary to uphold the ordinance is that there is a difference, and that existing it is for the city council to determine whether separate regulations shall be applied to the two. It is not strange that one witness differs from another in respect to the comparative danger of the two roads. One jury might also disagree with another in respect to the same matter. But neither witness nor jury determine the validity of state or municipal legislation. Given the fact of a difference, it is a part of the legislative power to determine what difference there shall be in the prescribed regulations. We see nothing else in this case calling for notice, and the judgment of the Supreme Court of Kansas is affirmed.

GEORGE L'HOTE and the Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Plff. in Err.,
v.

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 587-600.)

Constitutional law—police power—ordinance designating limits for prostitutes.

An ordinance prescribing limits in a city outside of which no woman of lewd character shall dwell, with a proviso that nothing therein shall be so construed as to authorize such women to occupy a house in any portion of the city, and with nothing in the ordinance to deny the ordinary rights of individuals to restrain a private nuisance, is an exercise of the police power which does not invade the rights of property owners in or adjacent to the prescribed limits, in violation of the Federal Constitution, although the pecuniary value of their property may be depreciated in consequence thereof.

[No. 204.]

Argued March 20, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana to review a decision reversing a judgment for an injunction against enforcing an ordinance. Affirmed.

See same case below, 51 La. Ann. 93, 44 L. R. A. 90, 24 So. 608.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

*By ordinance No. 13,032, council series, [588] approved January 29th, 1897, it was ordained by the common council of the city of New Orleans:

"That from the first of October, 1897, it shall be unlawful for any public prostitute or woman notoriously abandoned to lewdness to occupy, inhabit, live, or sleep in any house, room, or closet, situated without the following limits: South side of Custom House street from Basin to Robertson street, east side of Robertson street from Custom House to St. Louis street, south side of St. Louis street from Robertson to Basin street. Provided, That no lewd woman shall be permitted to occupy a house, room, or closet on St. Louis street. Provided further, That nothing herein shall be so construed as to authorize any lewd woman to occupy a house, room, or closet in any portion of the city. § 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, whether agent or owner, to rent, lease, or hire any house, building, or room to any woman or girl notoriously abandoned to lewdness or for immoral purposes outside the limits specified in section 1 of this ordinance. § 3. That public prostitutes or notoriously lewd and abandoned women are forbidden to stand upon the sidewalks in front of or near the premises they may occupy, or at the alleyway, door, or gate of such premises, or to occupy the steps thereof, or to accost, call, or stop any person passing by, or to walk up and down the sidewalks, or to stroll about the city streets indecently attired, or in other respects so as to behave in public as to occasion scandal, or disturb and offend the peace and good morals of the people. § 4. That it shall not be lawful for any lewd women to frequent any cabaret or coffee house or bar room and to drink therein. § 5. That it shall be unlawful for any party or parties to establish or carry on a house of prostitution or assignation without the limits specified in section — of this ordinance. § 6. That wherever a house of prostitution or assignation within or without the limits established by this ordinance may become [589] dangerous *to public morals, either from the manner in which it is conducted or the character of the neighborhood in which it is situated, the mayor may, on such facts coming to his knowledge, order the occupants of such house, building, or room to remove therefrom within a delay of five days, by service of notice on such occupants in person, or by posting the notice on the door of the house, building, or room, to remove therefrom within a delay of five days, and upon such occupants failing to do so, each shall be punished as provided in section — of this ordinance. § 7. That in the event that the occupants of such house, building, or room referred to in section 6 do not remove therefrom after the infliction of the penalty, the mayor is authorized to close the same and to place a policeman at the door of such premises to warn away all such parties who shall undertake to enter. § 8. That any person or persons who shall violate the provisions of this ordinance, or who shall disturb the tranquillity of the neighborhood or commit a breach of the peace, shall be punished by the recorder having jurisdiction, for the first offense by a fine not exceeding $5, and in default of payment by imprisonment not exceeding ten days, for the second offense by a fine not exceeding $10, and in default of payment by imprisonment not exceeding twenty days, and for any subsequent offense by a fine not exceeding $25, and in default of payment by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. § 9. That each day any person or persons shall continue to violate the provisions of this ordinance shall constitute a separate offense. § 10. That on and from the day this ordinance takes effect all ordinances in conflict therewith be and the same are hereby repealed, provided that nothing herein contained shall affect ordinance 12,456, C. S., relative to prostitutes in the fifth district."

NOTE.—As to power of a city over houses of ill fame—see People v. Hanrahan (Mich.) 4 L. 177 U. S. R. A. 751, and note; and note to State v. Karstendiek (La.) 39 L. R. A. 520.

By ordinance No. 13,485, council series of the city of New Orleans, approved July 7th, 1897, it was ordained: "That section 1 of ordinance 13,032, C. S., be and the same is hereby amended as follows: From and after the 1st of October, 1897, it shall be unlawful for any public prostitute or woman notoriously abandoned to lewdness to occupy, inhabit, live, or sleep in any house, room, or closet situate without the following limits, [590] *viz.: 1. From the south side of Custom House street to the north side of St. Louis street, and from the lower or wood side of North Basin street to the lower or wood side of Robertson street. 2. And from the upper side of Perdido street to the lower side of Gravier street, and from the river side of Franklin street to the lower or wood side of Locust street, provided that nothing herein shall be so construed as to authorize any lewd woman to occupy a house, room, or closet in any portion of the city. Be it further ordained, That section 1 of ordinance 13,032, C. S., as amended above, be and the same is hereby re-enacted."

The above ordinance being in force, the plaintiff in error George L'Hote, a resident, citizen, and taxpayer of New Orleans, brought this action in the civil district court for the parish of Orleans against the city of New Orleans, its mayor and superintendent of police, on behalf of himself and all other persons similarly situated, who might intervene and bear their proportion of costs and expenses. The object of the suit was to obtain a decree enjoining and prohibiting the defendants from in any manner enforcing ordinance No. 13,032 as amended by section 1 of ordinance No. 13,485.

The bill alleged that the plaintiff was the owner of property situated in the square bounded by St. Louis, Franklin, Tremé, and Toulouse streets in the second district of the city of New Orleans, and resided with his wife and children in that square at No. 522 Tremé street; that the chief and principal way of approach to his residence, and for ingress and egress thereto, was in, through, and from St. Louis street; that the locality in which he resided was, at the commencement of the action, and had always been, used for private residences, schools, groceries, and other mercantile establishments; that the people residing in that locality were then and had always been moral, virtuous, sober, law-abiding, and peaceful; that the locality referred to was not then and never had been dedicated to immoral purposes or used for dwelling places and as the refuge of public prostitutes, lewd and abandoned women and the necessary attendants thereof, drunkards, idle, vicious, and disorderly persons, who gather around them to gratify their depraved appetites, and *who were re- [591] garded as dangerous to the peace and welfare of the community, their presence at any place being always a just cause of alarm and apprehension:

That the above ordinances were unconstitutional, illegal, unreasonable, and oppressive, and would, if executed, work irreparable injury, wrong, and damage to the plaintiff;

That the council in enacting those ordinances pretended to have acted under and by virtue of the power conferred upon them in § 15 of act No. 45, approved July 7th, 1896, "to regulate the police of houses of prostitution and assignation and to close such houses in certain limits, and shall have the power to exclude the same, and to authorize the mayor and police to close said places;" and

That the enforcement of those ordinances in the manner provided for violated the provisions both of the Constitution of the United States and of the state, and would deprive the plaintiff of his property without due process of law, and amount to a taking or damaging of such property for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid.

The bill further alleged that "the introduction of public prostitutes, women notoriously abandoned to lewdness, in said locality, authorizing them to occupy, inhabit, live, and sleep in houses and rooms situated therein, will materially lessen and depreciate the value of your petitioner's property, render his dwelling and the dwelling of his neighbors similarly situated unfit for the occupancy of private families, destroy the morals, peace, and good order of the neighborhood, drive out and turn away the law-abiding, virtuous citizens and their families from said locality, and dedicate the same to public and private nuisances per se, contrary to law and good morals;"

That "the common council of the city of New Orleans had previously designated the limits within which prostitutes and women notoriously abandoned to lewdness should inhabit and live, and had thereby exhausted whatever power was vested in them by legislature of the state and were without legal right to alter, change, or modify the same to the injury, detriment, and damage of your petitioner and others residing in said locality, which said council have attempted to include within said *limits; that, having so exhausted the authority conferred upon them by the legislature, the said council was without power to capriciously change the limits previously established by them; that the avocations plied by public prostitutes and women notoriously abandoned to lewdness are contra bonos mores, and the said common council of the city of New Orleans have no right, power, or authority to legalize the same and to permit such persons to reside in the said vicinity in which your petitioner and others dwell with their families;"

That "there was no good and sufficient reason for the enactment of said ordinance or the changing of the limits previously existing and established;"

That "said council, in enacting said ordinance No. 13,485, council series, eliminated and excluded a large area of the city which had been previously dedicated to the occupancy of lewd and abandoned women, to the detriment and injury of petitioner, by changing said limits so as to include St. Louis street in his locality;"

That the execution of the ordinances would render plaintiff's dwelling house and those of his neighbors unfit and unsuitable for the occupancy of their families, wives, and children, and wholly valueless for the purposes for which they were constructed and had theretofore been used; and

That the plaintiff and others similarly situated would be compelled, if the ordinances were executed, to abandon and remove from their dwellings at great trouble, expense, and annoyance, and that the enforcement of the ordinance would oppress, injure, and seriously damage and incommode the plaintiff and all others similarly situated.

The plaintiff also averred that the ordinances if executed would deprive him and others similarly situated of the equal protection of the laws and be in violation equally of the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the state; that, under the laws and ordinances of the city as they existed, he and all others similarly situated in the locality had the right to cause houses of prostitution and assignation suppressed as nuisances per se and the inmates arrested and forced to vacate and remove therefrom, and of that right the plaintiff had theretofore availed himself; *and that the ordinances if executed would legalize such nuisance and take away the rights of citizens theretofore existing and vested in plaintiff and others residing in that locality.

After alleging that the enforcement of the ordinance would work irreparable damage and injury to him in the depreciation in value of his property, because it would cease to be a fit and proper place for the dwelling house of himself, his wife, and children, and necessitate their abandonment of the same and removal from the locality, he prayed that the ordinances might be declared null and void.

The writ of injunction as prayed was directed to be issued.

The city of New Orleans, its mayor and superintendent of police, pleaded that the court was without jurisdiction ratione materiae.

Bernardo Gonzales Carbajal intervened by petition, and after alleging that he was the owner of certain improved property within the limits prescribed by the above ordinances, reiterated all the allegations of the petition of L'Hote so far as they related to his property, and averred that the enforcement of the ordinances would work great and irreparable injury to him and depreciate his property by rendering it unfit and unsuitable for dwelling houses. He united in the prayer that the ordinances be declared null and void.

The Church Extension Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, a corporation chartered and organized under the laws of Pennsylvania, also intervened, and alleged that it was the owner of buildings and improvements within the above district which were used and occupied for church purposes; that a religious congregation known as the Union Chapel of the Methodist Episcopal Church assembled and worshipped therein on each and every Sabbath and on Tuesday and Friday evenings, as well as on other stated occasions; that besides the religious services conducted in that church a Sunday school was organized and established which was attended by 170 children, who received religious instruction and teaching, and that the membership of that congregation consisted of about 300 persons, while those worshipping in the church numbered about 600 persons.

*The society reiterated all the allegations of the plaintiff's petition and alleged that if the ordinances were enforced the value of its property would be destroyed and the same would be unfit for the purposes for which it was erected and was now being used, enjoyed, and occupied; that the threats to enforce the ordinances had already caused a portion of the congregation attending the church to cease from attending therein; that, encouraged by the action of the city council of New Orleans in passing the ordinances, a number of lewd and abandoned women had already taken up their abode and habitation in the vicinity of the church and were plying their vocation as prostitutes; and that a number of houses were then in progress of erection and construction which were intended to be used and kept as brothels and houses of prostitution, and other places had been leased and let for the purpose of carrying on liquor saloons and concert halls, for the purpose and with the intention of changing the hitherto respectable character of that neighborhood into a resort for vice and the establishment of nuisances mala in se.

After averring that the above ordinances were in violation of the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution and laws of Louisiana, and that the city council had no right to destroy the value of the intervenor's property and render the neighborhood in which the same was located the resort of lewd and abandoned women, it united in the prayer of the plaintiff's petition that those ordinances be declared null and void.

The exceptions filed by the defendants to the petitions of the plaintiff and the interveners having been overruled, the city of New Orleans and its chief of police filed an answer averring that the ordinances in question were legal and that their enforcement would be a lawful exercise of the power conferred upon the city, and especially a valid exercise of the power conferred upon it by act No. 45 of 1896.

The civil district court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, but in favor of the city against the interveners. From that judgment suspensive appeals were allowed and prosecuted by the city as well as by the Church Extension Society.

By the final judgment of the supreme court of Louisiana the *judgment of the civil district court in favor of the plaintiff was reversed, and the injunction obtained by him was dissolved and his suit dismissed, while the judgment dismissing the intervening petitions and dissolving the injunction granted on behalf of the interveners was affirmed. 51 La. Ann. 93, 44 L. R. A. 90, 24 So. 608.

Mr. E. Howard McCaleb argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The extraordinary power conferred upon the mayor by the ordinance in question is not due process of law.

Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550.

Due process of law requires an orderly proceeding adapted to the nature of the case, in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard and to defend, enforce, and protect his rights. A hearing, or an opportunity to be heard, is absolutely essential.

Black. Const. Law, p. 481, § 212; Pennay-er v. Neff, 95 U. S. 715, 24 L. ed. 565.

The city of New Orleans, in dedicating the area prescribed in the ordinance for the residence of bawds and prostitutes, infringes plaintiff's and intervenor's rights of property.

Eaton v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 51 N. H. 504. 12 Am. Rep. 147; Lackland v. North Missouri R. Co. 31 Mo. 180; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 595, 743, 744, 755; Pumpelly v. Green Bay & M. Canal Co. 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. ed. 557.

The police power does not extend to the supervision, regulation, and inspection of prostitutes. The city of New Orleans has no authority to regulate prostitution.

Tiedeman, Limitation of Police Power, p. 131, ¶ 49, p. 150, p. 391, ¶ 105.

The state cannot, under the exercise of its police power, encroach upon the powers of the general government, or rights granted or secured by the supreme law of the land.

New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 210, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446, 29 L. ed. 691, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 454; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 41 L. ed. 632, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265.

The ordinance complained of denies to plaintiff and intervenor the equal protection of the laws. Immoral contracts and immoral persons are permitted in one portion of the city of New Orleans, and prohibited in the others. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064.

To recognize the right of the city to create an asylum for abandoned women, and to dedicate a portion of her territory for the residence of this class of people, and to permit them there to ply their unholy vocation, is a violation of the principles of the Christian religion, which the Supreme Court of the United States says is the foundation of our government and the civilization which it has produced in the western world.

Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. v. United States, 136 U. S. 49, 34 L. ed. 493, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 792; Wood, Nuisances, §§ 29, 32.

Mr. James J. McLoughlin argued the cause and, with Messrs. Samuel L. Gilmore and Branch K. Miller, filed a brief for defendant in error:

It is settled that police laws and regulations are not unconstitutional, even though they may disturb the enjoyment of individual rights. If the individual suffers any injury, it is deemed damnum absque injuria, or, in the theory of the law, the injury to the owner is deemed compensated by the public benefit the regulation is designed to subserve.

1 Dill. Mun. Corp. p. 93; 1 Dillon, § 310; Black. Const. Law, p. 310; Dwarries, Statutes, p. 455.

The Federal Constitution, broad and comprehensive as it is, was not designed in any respect to interfere with the power of a state, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 31, 28 L. ed. 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

Ordinances to regulate and confine the prosecution of business, even lawful and not immoral in character, within certain definite territorial limits, have been held by this court as being purely police regulations.

within the competency of a municipality possessed of ordinary powers.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 707, 28 L. ed. 1146, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730.

The confinement of houses of prostitution to certain prescribed limits, in the judgment of municipal authorities best calculated to mitigate their evil effects, is obviously included within the ordinary powers of a municipal corporation.

State v. Karstendiek, 49 La. Ann. 1621, 39 L. R. A. 521, 22 So. 845.

In Louisiana the power to suppress such establishments has been held free from constitutional objection.

Shreveport v. Roos, 35 La. Ann. 1011.

[595] *Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented in this case is whether an ordinance of the city of New Orleans prescribing limits in that city, outside of which no woman of lewd character shall dwell, operates to deprive these plaintiffs in error of any right secured by the Constitution of the United States. It is well, in the first place, to look at the negative side and see what is not involved. No woman of that character is challenging its validity; there is no complaint by her that she is deprived of any personal rights, either as to the control of her life or the selection of an abiding place. She is not saying that she is denied the right to select a home where she may desire, or that her personal conduct is in any way interfered with. In brief, the persons named in the ordinance, and against whom its provisions are directed, do not question its validity.

In the second place, no person owning buildings outside of the prescribed limits is complaining that he is deprived of a possible tenant by virtue of the ordinance, or saying that the abridgment of her freedom of domicile operates to cut down the amount of his rents.

In the third place, it will be perceived that the ordinance does not attempt to give to persons of such character license to carry on their business in any way they see fit, or, indeed, to carry it on at all, or to conduct themselves in such a manner as to disturb the public peace within the prescribed limits. [596] Clauses 3 *and 4 of the first section of the ordinance are clearly designed to restrain any public manifestation, of the vocation which these persons pursue, and to keep so far as possible unseen from public gaze the character of their lives, while clauses 6, 7, 8 and 9 provide means for enforcing order and preventing disturbances of the peace.

The question, therefore, is simply whether one who may own or occupy property in or adjacent to the prescribed limits, whether occupied as a residence or for other purposes, can prevent the enforcement of such an ordinance on the ground that by it his rights under the Federal Constitution are invaded.

In this respect we premise by saying that one of the difficult social problems of the day is what shall be done in respect to those cations which minister to and feed upon human weaknesses, appetites, and passions. The management of these vocations comes directly within the scope of what is known as the police power. They affect directly the public health and morals. Their management becomes a matter of growing importance, especially in our larger cities, where from the very density of population the things which minister to vice tend to increase and multiply. It has been often said that the police power was not by the Federal Constitution transferred to the nation, but was reserved to the states, and that upon them rests the duty of so exercising it as to protect the public health and morals. While, of course, that power cannot be exercised by the states in any way to infringe upon the powers expressly granted to Congress, yet until there is some invasion of congressional power or of private rights secured by the Constitution of the United States, the action of the states in this respect is beyond question in the courts of the nation. In Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 28 L. ed. 923, 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, 359, it was said:

"But neither the amendment—broad and comprehensive as it is—nor any other amendment was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its police power, to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education, and good order of the people."

See also Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 501, 24 L. ed. 1115; Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036; Plumley v. Massachusetts, 155 U. S. 461, 39 L. ed. 223, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154, and cases in the opinion. [597]

Obviously, the regulation of houses of ill fame, legislation in respect to women of loose character, may involve one of three possibilities: First, absolute prohibition; second, full freedom in respect to place, coupled with rules of conduct; or, third, a restriction of the location of such houses to certain defined limits. Whatever course of conduct the legislature may adopt is in a general way conclusive upon all courts, state or Federal. It is no part of the judicial function to determine the wisdom or folly of a regulation by the legislative body in respect to matters of a police nature.

Now, this ordinance neither prohibits absolutely nor gives entire freedom to the vocation of these women. It attempts to confine their domicile, their lives, to certain territorial limits. Upon what ground shall it be adjudged that such restriction is unjustifiable; that it is an unwarranted exercise of the police power? Is the power to control and regulate limited only as to the matter of territory? May that not be one of the wisest and safest methods of dealing with the problem? At any rate, can the power to so regulate be denied? But given the power to limit the vocation of these persons to certain localities, and no one can question the legality of the location. The power to prescribe a limitation carries with it the power to discriminate against one citizen and in favor of another. Some must suffer by the establishment of any territorial boundaries. We do not question what is so earnestly said by counsel for plaintiffs in error in respect to the disagreeable results from the neighborhood of such houses and people; but if the power to prescribe territorial limits exists, the courts cannot say that the limits shall be other than those the legislative body prescribes. If these limits hurt the present plaintiffs in error, other limits would hurt others. But clearly the inquiry as to the reasonableness or propriety of the limits is a matter for legislative consideration, and cannot become the basis of judicial action. The ordinance is an attempt to protect a part of the citizens from the unpleasant consequences of such neighbors. Because the [598] legislative *body is unable to protect all, must it be denied the power to protect any?

It is said that this operates to depreciate the pecuniary value of the property belonging to the plaintiffs in error, but a similar result would follow if other limits were prescribed, and therefore the power to prescribe limits could never be exercised, because, whatever the limits, it might operate to the pecuniary disadvantage of some property holders.

The truth is, the exercise of the police power often works pecuniary injury, but the settled rule of this court is that the mere fact of pecuniary injury does not warrant the overthrow of legislation of a police character.

Among the cases in which this question has been presented may be noticed Northwestern Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. ed. 1036, and Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273. In the first of these cases an act of the general assembly of the state of Illinois had authorized the fertilizing company to establish a plant for the purpose of converting dead animals into an agricultural fertilizer. In pursuance of this authority the company had built its factory outside the then limits of the city of Chicago and in a territory adjacent to which there was no population. As the years rolled by population gathered around the factory, and the character of the work carried on was such as to make it a nuisance to the neighborhood. The village of Hyde Park, which had grown up around the works of the company, passed an ordinance to suppress these works, and a bill was filed in the state court to restrain the enforcement of that ordinance. The supreme court of the state held the ordinance valid, and on error to this court that judgment was affirmed. Although there was a charter right to maintain these works, and although when established they were located in a territory in which there was no population, yet when population had gathered around them the police power of the state was held sufficient to stop their existence, and that without compensation to the owner. The pecuniary injury which directly resulted to the company from the stoppage of its works was held no bar to the police power of the state. In the other case Mugler had established a brewery in Kansas, when such an institution was authorized by the laws of the *state. The buildings and machinery [599] were of little value except for the purpose of manufacturing beer. Yet when Kansas, in the exercise of its police power, determined that the manufacture of beer should cease, it was ruled by this court that the pecuniary loss to Mugler did not justify any restraint of the legislative acts prohibiting the manufacture of beer. Each individual holds his property subject to the ordinary and reasonable exercise of the police power, and the fact that its exercise may in a particular case work pecuniary injury was adjudged insufficient to stay the legislative action. It is true those cases involved pecuniary injury to the persons whose action was prohibited, but it cannot be that the police power of a state can be stayed because it works injury to one person, and not stayed if it works injury to another.

In 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 141, the rule is thus stated:

"Laws and ordinances relating to the comfort, health, convenience, good order, and general welfare of the inhabitants are comprehensively styled 'Police Laws or Regulations.' It is well settled that laws and regulations of this character, though they may disturb the enjoyment of individual rights, are not unconstitutional, though no provision is made for compensation for such disturbances. They do not appropriate private property for public use, but simply regulate its use and enjoyment by the owner. If he suffers injury it is either damnum absque injuria, or, in the theory of the law, he is compensated for it by sharing in the general benefits which the regulations are intended and calculated to secure. The citizen owns his property absolutely, it is true; it cannot be taken from him for any private use whatever, without his consent, nor can it be taken for any public use without compensation; still he owns it subject to this restriction, namely, that it must be so used as not unreasonably to injure others, and that the sovereign authority may, by police regulations, so direct the use of it that it shall not prove pernicious to his neighbors, or the citizens generally."

The learned author, in these and accompanying sentences, is discussing the rule when legislative action operates directly upon the property of the complainant and where injuries alleged *to result are the direct consequence of legislative action. If under such circumstances the individual has no cause of action, a fortiori must the same be true when the injuries are not direct but consequential, when his property is not directly touched by the legislative action but is affected in only an incidental and consequential way. Here the ordinance in no manner touched the property of the plaintiffs. It subjected that property to no burden, it cast no duty or restraint upon it, and only in an indirect way can it be said that its pecuniary value was affected by this ordinance. Who can say in advance that in proximity to their property any houses of the character indicated will be established, or that any persons of loose character will find near by a home? They may go to the other end of the named district. All that can be said is that by narrowing the limits within which such houses and people must be, the greater the probability of their near location. Even if any such establishment should be located in proximity, there is nothing in the ordinance to deny the ordinary right of the individual to restrain a private nuisance. Under these circumstances we are of the opinion that the ordinance in question is not one of which the plaintiffs in error can complain. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana is therefore affirmed.

[601] *GEORGE S. WILLIAMS, Plff. in Err.,
v.
C. E. WINGO.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 601-604.)

Ferry license—as a contract—effect of general law.

A ferry license granted by the county court under Va. act March 5, 1840 (Va. Code 1873, chap. 64, § 23), which was an act of general legislation making it unlawful for the court to grant a license for a ferry within $\frac{1}{2}$ mile of any other ferry, does not constitute a contract the obligation of which is impaired by Va. act March 5, 1894, which specially authorizes the establishment of a ferry within less than $\frac{1}{2}$ mile of the former ferry.

[No. 222.]

Argued April 11, 12, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of Virginia to review a decision affirming a judgment sustaining a ferry license. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

[601] *By the statutes of Virginia authority was given to the county courts of the several counties to license ferries. By an act passed March 5, 1840 (Acts Assembly 1839-1840, p. 58), carried, with simply verbal changes, into chap. 64 of the Code of Virginia of 1873 as § 23, and subsequently into chap. 62 of the Code of 1887 as § 1386, it was provided:

"Be it enacted by the general assembly, That it shall not be lawful for the court of any county to grant leave to establish a ferry over any watercourse within one half mile, in a direct line, of any other ferry legally established over the same watercourse."

In 1880 the county court of Giles county gave to the plaintiff in error a license to maintain a ferry across New river. On March 5, 1894, the general assembly of Virginia passed the following act (Acts Assembly 1893-1894, p. 789):

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of Virginia, That it shall be lawful for the county court of Giles county to establish a ferry at a point on New river, in said county at a point around Egglestons Springs depot and between Egglestons Springs and Egglestons depot, on the New river branch of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, Giles county, Virginia. Said court in establishing said ferry shall be bound by sections thirteen hundred and seventy-five, thirteen hundred and seventy-six, thirteen hundred *and seventy-seven, thirteen hundred and seventy-eight, thirteen hundred and seventy-nine, thirteen hundred and eighty, thirteen hundred and eighty-one, thirteen hundred and eighty-two, thirteen hundred and eighty-three, thirteen hundred and eighty-four, and thirteen hundred and eighty-five of the Code of Virginia; but section thirteen hundred and eighty-six of said Code so far as the distance of one half a mile is concerned, shall not apply to the establishment of said ferry at said place."

Under this act a license was given to the defendant in error to establish a ferry within less than half a mile of the ferry established by the plaintiff in error under his prior license. The rightfulness of this action was sustained by the circuit court of Giles county, and subsequently by the supreme court of appeals of the state of Virginia, and to review such decision this writ of error was brought.

Mr. W. J. Henson argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Samuel W. Williams argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion [602] of the court:

The contention of the plaintiff in error is that, under the laws of the state of Virginia in force at the time of such action, the license granted by the county court to him to establish a ferry created a contract between him and the state to the effect that no ferry should be established within half a mile; and that the act of 1894 and the subsequent proceedings of the county court of Giles county impaired the obligation of that contract, and, therefore, were repugnant to section 10 of article 1 of the Constitution of the United States.

This is an obvious error. The act of 1840 was one of general legislation, and subject to repeal by the general assembly. No rights could be created under that statute beyond its terms, and by it no restraint was placed upon legislative action. When the general assembly gave to the county courts power to license ferries it by that act in effect forbade them to establish a second *ferry within half a mile of one already established, but that bound only the county court. It did not tie the hands of the legislature, or prevent it from authorizing another ferry within a half mile whenever in its judgment it saw fit. A contract binding the state is only created by clear language, and is not to be extended by implication beyond the terms of the statute. Fanning v. Gregoire, 16 How. 524, 14 L. ed. 1043, is in point and decisive. In that case the plaintiff was by an act of the Iowa territorial legislature given authority to establish a ferry across the Mississippi river at the then town of Dubuque, and the act also provided that no court or board of county commissioners should authorize any other person to keep a ferry within the limits of the town. The city of Dubuque was thereafter incorporated, and under its general corporate powers entered into a contract with the defendant to run a steam ferryboat across the river. The plaintiff thereupon filed a bill to restrain the defendant from so doing. It was held that the bill could not be maintained, this court saying (pp. 533, 534, 14 L. ed. 1047):

NOTE.—As to what laws are void as impairing obligation of contracts—see note to Fletcher v. Peck, 3 L. ed. U. S. 162.

As to what contracts the rule prohibiting states from impairing obligation affects—see note to Franklin County Grammar School v. Bailey (Vt.) 10 L. R. A. 405.

"Although the county court and county commissioners were prohibited from granting another license to Dubuque, yet this prohibition did not apply to the legislature; and as it had the power to authorize another ferry, the general authority to the council to 'license and establish ferries across the Mississippi river at the city,' enabled the corporation, in the exercise of its discretion, to grant a license, as the legislature might have done. . . . The restriction on the commissioners of the county does not apply, in terms, to the city council; and the court think it cannot be made to apply by implication."

This case was cited with approval in Wheeling & B. Bridge v. Wheeling Bridge, 133 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 967, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301, in which this very statute of Virginia of 1840 was under consideration, and it was said (p. 292, L. ed. p. 969, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 303):

"Here the prohibition of the act of 1840 was only upon the county courts, and that in no way affected the legislative power of the state."

The case of The Binghamton Bridge, 3 Wall. 51, sub nom. Chenango Bridge Co. v. Binghamton Bridge Co. 18 L. ed. 137, is not inconsistent. There an act of the legislature, authorizing the one bridge, contained a proviso "that it should not be lawful for [604]*any person or persons to erect a bridge within a distance of two miles." That provision was held a part of the contract between the state and the bridge company, Mr. Justice Davis, speaking for a majority of the court, saying (p. 81, L. ed. p. 145):

"As there was no necessity of laying a restraint on unauthorized persons, it is clear that such restraint was not within the meaning of the legislature. The restraint was on the legislature itself. The plain reading of the provision, 'that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to erect a bridge within a distance of two miles,' is, that the legislature will not make it lawful by licensing any person or association of persons to do it."

In the case at bar the only effect of the act of 1840, while in force, was, as we have said, to tie the hands of the county court. It operated in no manner as a restraint upon the legislature or as a contract upon its part that the state would not act whenever in its judgment it perceived the necessity for an additional ferry. The fact that in this case the special authority was given to the county court is immaterial. A general act forbidding county courts to license additional ferries is not infringed by a subsequent act giving special right to a single county court to establish a particular ferry. No promise made by the legislature by the first act is broken by the second. The judgment of the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia was correct, and is affirmed.

*GEORGETTE A. CHAMBERLIN et al., [605]
Appts.,
v.

HORATIO BROWNING and Alpheus Middleton, Trading as Browning & Middleton; Thomas T. Keane; The Central National Bank of Washington; and Edward C. Whitford.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 605-609.).

Appeal—amount in dispute—uniting separate claims of appellees.

1. The separate and distinct claims of attachment creditors cannot be united for the purpose of making the jurisdictional amount on appeal from a judgment denying an injunction to prevent the enforcement of their claims against real estate, where they do not jointly assert their claims, or claim under a common right.
2. An appellant cannot unite the separate interests of appellees, to make up the jurisdictional amount, for the purpose of an appeal, if the appellees could not have done so in case of recovery against them.

[No. 251.]

Argued April 19, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

APPEAL from a decision of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia affirming a decree of reversal. Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

See same case below, 14 App. D. C. 389.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

*John D. Scott executed in the District of [605] Columbia, on April 24, 1886, a deed of voluntary assignment for the benefit of his creditors, embracing in a schedule of his assets, among other property, a life estate in certain land situated in Montgomery county, Maryland. Horatio Browning qualified as assignee under the deed of assignment.

NOTE.—As to amount necessary to give United States Supreme Court jurisdiction—see note to Schunk v. Mollne, M. & S. Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 255.

Various steps were taken under the assignment, but prior as well as subsequent to the recording of the deed in Montgomery county, Maryland, certain creditors of Scott, all but one of whom resided in the District of Columbia, seized the real estate referred to under attachment process issued in Maryland. The attachment proceedings went to judgment, whereupon one of the judgment creditors filed a bill in the Maryland court to declare that the interest of Scott in said real estate was in fee simple, and not merely a life estate. In this latter suit a decree was entered sustaining the claim of the creditors, and proceedings were then taken by the several creditors to enforce their judgment claims against said real estate.

[606] The appellants, as creditors of Scott, thereupon filed their bill in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against Scott, Browning, the assignee, and the various creditors who had instituted the attachment proceedings in Maryland. In substance the bill set out the various facts hereinbefore related, charged *that the attaching creditors had actual and constructive notice of the deed of assignment, and had participated in the proceedings thereunder, and were without lawful right to enforce their attachment claims against the real estate referred to, and thus to secure a preference over the other creditors who had elected to take the benefit of the deed of assignment. The sums sought to be recovered by each of the attaching creditors in the proceedings in Maryland were enumerated in the bill, and in no instance did the claim or claims of any of said creditors aggregate more than $3,500. Various allegations were also contained in the bill with respect to mismanagement by Browning in the execution of his trust as assignee. Part of the specific relief prayed in the bill was the removal of Browning as assignee, a stating of his accounts, discovery by Scott of further assets, and the execution by him of a deed in fee simple of the Maryland property. As to the attaching creditors, the following relief was prayed:

"Six. That the attaching creditors be restrained, pending this action, from in any manner proceeding to enforce their said attachments on judgments of condemnation against said Maryland land, and from doing any act or thing to hinder, delay, or interfere with the control or management of the estate abroad for the equal benefit of all said Scott's creditors, and from in any way seeking to secure to themselves any greater benefit or interest out of said estate and effects than shall represent their 'pro rata' share under said assignment, and that on final hearing such injunction be made perpetual.

"Seven. Or, if this cannot be done, that the attaching creditors be directed to bring into court any moneys realized from said land, and that the same be treated as assets passing by said deed of assignment, and distributed among the creditors as therein directed." [Keane v. Chamberlain, 14 App. D. C. 84.]

Each of the defendants who are appellees
177 U. S.

in this court demurred to the bill. From an order overruling the demurrers an appeal was allowed by the court of appeals of the District of Columbia. That court reversed the order made by the lower court and remanded the cause, with directions to sustain the demurrers and dismiss the bill as to the appellees Keane, Middleton, *the Central National Bank of Washington, Edward O. Whitford, and the partnership of Browning and Middleton, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with the opinion of the court. Thereafter the supreme court of the District, upon consideration of the mandate of the court of appeals, entered a decree sustaining the demurrers and dismissing the bill of complaint as to the defendants named in the mandate of the court of appeals. From this decree the case was again taken to the court of appeals, and that court affirmed said decree. This appeal was then taken.

Mr. O. B. Hallam argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants:

In a suit for property, plaintiff's averment of value determines the amount in controversy.

Bennett v. Butterworth, 8 How. 124, 13 L. ed. 859.

The value of the specific property which is in litigation must determine the jurisdiction. The value of a trust estate which is involved is the value of the matter which is in dispute, for the purpose of an appeal by the trustee.

Kenaday v. Edwards, 134 U. S. 117, 33 L. ed. 853, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 523.

If the determination of a cause necessarily involve the validity of title to land of more than $5,000 in value, and several plaintiffs claim under it, although the claim of no one exceeds that sum, the amount is within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

New Orleans P. R. Co. v. Parker, 143 U. S. 42, 36 L. ed. 66, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364.

When a bill by a preferred creditor for more than $5,000 under an assignment, to enjoin a sale of the property by attaching creditors and to establish the assignment with its preferences, is dismissed, the distribution of the assigned property among those claiming under the assignment not being in question, an appeal may be had if the property involved in the assignment exceeds $5,000 in value, although the amount of the claims of the attaching creditors is less than that sum.

Estes v. Gunter, 121 U. S. 183, 30 L. ed. 884, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 854; 122 U. S. 450, 30 L. ed. 1228, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1275; Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 1083, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1066; Stuart v. Boulware, 133 U. S. 78, 33 L. ed. 568, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 242; The Alaska, 130 U. S. 201, sub nom. Metcalf v. The Alaska, 32 L. ed. 923, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Lovell v. Cragin, 136 U. S. 150, 34 L. ed. 379, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1024; Brown v. Trousdale, 138 U. S. 389, 34 L. ed. 987, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Clay v. Field, 138 U. S. 464, 34 L. ed. 1044, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 419.

Messrs. Arthur Peter and A. A. Bir-
907

ney argued the cause and, with Mr. James S. Edwards, filed a brief for appellees:

It is well settled that neither codefendants nor coplaintiffs can unite their separate and distinct interests, for the purpose of making up the amount necessary to give this court jurisdiction upon writ of error or appeal.

Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U. S. 276, 29 L. ed. 379, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40.

Distinct judgments in favor of or against distinct parties cannot be joined to give this court jurisdiction.

Adams v. Crittenden, 106 U. S. 577, 27 L. ed. 99, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; Schwed v. Smith, 106 U. S. 188, 27 L. ed. 156, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 221; Ex parte Baltimore & O. R. Co. 106 U. S. 5, 27 L. ed. 78, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35; Hawley v. Fairbanks, 108 U. S. 548, 27 L. ed. 822, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 846; Tupper v. Wise, 110 U. S. 399, 28 L. ed. 190, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 26; Oliver v. Alexander, 6 Pet. 143, 8 L. ed. 349; Ballard Pav. Co. v. Mulford, 100 U. S. 147, 25 L. ed. 591; Shields v. Thomas, 17 How. 3, 15 L. ed. 93.

Upon the same principle, neither party can appeal from a decree upon a bill by a single plaintiff to enforce separate and distinct liabilities against several defendants, if the sum for which each is alleged or found to be liable is less than the jurisdictional amount.

Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 37, 30 L. ed. 1087, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1066.

[607] *Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

Along with an argument upon the merits, counsel for the appellees have presented a motion to dismiss this appeal as to all the appellees, because of the absence of any controversy involving the requisite jurisdictional amount. This motion we find to be well taken.

The decree appealed from affected only the defendants, who, as attaching creditors, had prosecuted actions in the Maryland court upon their claims against their debtor, Scott, and had by ancillary proceedings subjected real estate owned by their debtor to the satisfaction of the judgments obtained in the actions referred to.

Recovery of land or its value was not the relief sought by the bill below against the attaching creditors, for said creditors did not hold or assert title to the land. The value of the land, therefore, was clearly not the subject-matter of dispute between the complainants and the said attaching creditors. The relief prayed against the latter was the enjoining of the enforcement against real estate in Maryland of the judgments obtained by the appellees, or the bringing into

[608] court of any *moneys realized from said land by virtue of the proceedings. But the appellees, as attaching creditors, were not jointly asserting their claims against Scott or his property, nor were they claiming under a common right. Their claims and the judgments based thereon were separate and distinct, the one from the other, and in no case did the amount of the judgments obtained by either of the appellees equal $5,000. The case presented is clearly within the principle of the decision in Gibson v. Shufeldt, 122 U. S. 27, 30 L. ed. 1083, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1066, and cases there cited. The Gibson Case was a suit brought by general creditors to set aside as fraudulent a conveyance in trust for the benefit of preferred creditors. The decree set aside the conveyance as fraudulent so far only as it affected the rights of the plaintiffs. But one of such general creditors held a claim amounting to $5,000. A motion to dismiss the appeal as to all other plaintiffs was sustained, the court holding that the sole matter in dispute between the defendants and each plaintiff was as to the amount which the latter should recover, and that the motion to dismiss the appeal of the defendants as to all the plaintiffs, except the one whose debt exceeded the jurisdictional amount, should be granted. Had the appellants recovered against the appellees the amount collected by the latter upon their judgments, it is clear that the amount in dispute for the purpose of determining jurisdiction would be the amount of recovery assessed against each defendant separately. Henderson v. Wadsworth, 115 U. S. 264, 29 L. ed. 377, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Friend v. Wise, 111 U. S. 797, 28 L. ed. 602, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695. As stated in the Henderson case, neither codefendant nor coplaintiffs can unite their separate and distinct interests for the purpose of making up the amount necessary to give this court jurisdiction upon writ of error or appeal. If, therefore, the appellees could not, if recovery had been had against them, unite their separate interests for the purposes of an appeal, the appellants cannot do so for the purpose of asserting the existence of appellate jurisdiction in this court.

In the case at bar, we repeat, in effect, the substantial relief sought against the attaching creditors, and the matter in dispute between them, was the defeat of the distinct and separate claims of each attaching creditor so far as it respected the real *estate[609] owned by Scott, and, as already shown, no defendant was asserting claims which aggregated the amount required to confer jurisdiction upon this court.

Dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

AMELIA L. HOWARD et al., Appts.,
v.

P. DE CORDOVA et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 609-614.)

Federal court—jurisdiction to set aside judgment of state court—amendment of pleading to aver citizenship.

1. A Federal court may take jurisdiction of a suit to set aside a judgment of a state court in the same state, when it is attacked for fraud and want of jurisdiction because it was rendered on service by publication, the order for which was obtained by a false affidavit.

NOTE.—As to conclusiveness and effect of judgments as between Federal and state courts—see note to Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Morgan, 21 C. C. A. 478.

2. A defect in a bill in a Federal court, which fails to aver the citizenship of a party, may be cured by amendment.

[No. 246.]

Argued and Submitted April 17, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

APPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Texas dismissing a bill for want of jurisdiction. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

[609] *By their original bill the complainants, alleging themselves to be citizens of the state of Louisiana, complained against P. De Cordova, a citizen of the state of Texas residing in Travis county, W. R. Boyd, F. E. Hill, Charles Robertson, J. M. Parker, and George W. McAdams, citizens of Texas and residents of Freestone county, and against Joseph Smolenski, as to whom it was merely alleged he "is not an inhabitant of or found within this district." The grounds for relief which it is necessary to notice for the purposes of the questions before us, averred in the original bill and an amendment thereto, were as follows: That the complainants were the sole legal heirs of J. W. Zacharie, their deceased father, who during his lifetime was a citizen and resident of the state of Louisiana; that their said deceased ancestor owned a tract of 11 leagues of land

[610] situated in Freestone and Anderson counties, Texas, which had been granted to Manuel Riondo, by the states of Coahuila and Texas; that on the 26th of February, 1852, their said father made a contract with Jacob and Phineas De Cordova by which the two last-named persons agreed to have the grant above mentioned properly placed upon the records, to endeavor to effect compromises with certain parties holding claims by junior locations covering some of the land in the grant; that by the agreement in question all expenses except the taxes were to be paid by the two Cordovas, and in consideration of their services they were to receive one third of the receipts derived from the sale of all the land which might be covered by the compromises to be effected as aforesaid. It was alleged that in pursuance of the contract the two De Cordovas made various compromises with persons claiming under junior grants, and that the land thus embraced, the exact amount of which was not alleged, although it probably equalled 10,000 acres, was sold, and they received their share of the proceeds resulting from the sale. It was charged that in 1860 Jacob De Cordova acknowledged in writing that a full settlement had been made with him by Zacharie for all the lands as to which compromises had been made, and he therefore declared that all and every right which had vested in him by the contract in question had been liquidated and settled. It was then averred that on the 9th of November,

1895, Phineas De Cordova, with the object of defrauding complainants of their right and title to the land aforesaid, filed in the district court of Freestone county, Texas, a suit in partition, in which he falsely alleged himself to be the owner of an undivided one-sixth of the land situated in the Riondo grant; that this suit was brought against the unknown heirs of J. W. Zacharie, deceased, and against Joseph Smolenski, whose residence was also in said suit alleged to be unknown. At the time this suit was thus brought by De Cordova it was averred that both he and Boyd, the attorney who represented De Cordova in the suit, knew who were the heirs of J. W. Zacharie and where they resided, but that in order to defraud and to avoid notice to them of the suit, and to obtain summons by publication as required by the law of Texas, an affidavit was *made by William R. Boyd, the attorney, that [611] the heirs of Zacharie and their residences were unknown; that, predicated upon this affidavit, the order for publication was given by the court; that, instead of publishing the notice at the county seat, it was inserted in a newspaper in a remote portion of the county, and that the complainants had no knowledge whatever of the suit until long after its termination; that in this suit for partition an attorney was subsequently appointed to represent the unknown and absent defendants; that the law of the state of Texas required that a statement of facts should be made by the judge, but that one was prepared by Boyd, representing De Cordova, and the attorney who had been appointed to represent the absent defendants, which had for its effect to produce upon the mind of the court the impression that under the contract aforesaid, made between the Cordovas and Zacharie, the Cordovas were entitled as owners to one third of the 11 leagues of land; that being misled to that conclusion, after proceedings as required in partition suits, a decree of partition was entered. The complaint as amended made other charges of fraud and deception which it is unnecessary to recapitulate. As to the other defendants to the bill, except Smolenski, it was averred that they had acquired, with full notice of the fraud which it was charged had been operated upon the Zacharie heirs by the partition suit as aforesaid, portions of the land in question. Smolenski was made a party to the bill because of the following averments: After the adjustment alleged to have been made between Zacharie and De Cordova, it was stated that Zacharie had sold all the land in August, 1865, to Smolenski for the price of $15,000, evidenced by his notes as follows: One for $3,000 dated May 1, 1866, and twelve notes of $1,000 each, payable yearly thereafter, with 8 per cent interest per annum from May 1, 1866; that in the deed to Smolenski it was stipulated that a vendor's lien should be retained on the land to secure the payment of the notes, and it was provided that if any of the said notes should remain unpaid for six months after maturity, the vendor should have ipso facto the right to cancel and annul the sale, and re-enter and take possession of said lands. It was then averred that none of the [612] notes given by Smolenski *had ever been paid, although past due for twenty or thirty years.

The prayer of the bill was that the proceedings in partition and the decree directing the same be adjudged to be fraudulent and void, that the sales made to the other defendants be also declared fraudulent and void, and that the deed made by Zacharie to Smolenski be set aside and canceled, and the cloud thereby "cast on your orators' title to said land be removed."

To the bill and the amendment thereto the defendants demurred on the following grounds:

"First. It appears from the face of plaintiff's amended bill that the bill seeks to set aside, cancel, and annul the judgment of the district court of Freestone county, state of Texas, and this court has no jurisdiction or power to cancel, set aside, or annul the judgment of the state court, said court having jurisdiction both over the subject-matter and of the persons in said suit, said suit being a partition suit and the proceedings one in rem.

"Second. The amended bill shows upon its face that the object of the bill is to obtain a new trial in this court in cause No. 1960, tried and determined in the district court of Freestone county, Texas, as shown by the exhibits to the bill, under and in accordance with article 1375 of the Revised Statutes of Texas.

"That this proceeding is but a continuation of said suit, and this court has no jurisdiction of the same, but the district court of Freestone county, Texas, alone has jurisdiction of the same.

"Third. That the judgment of the district court of Freestone county, Texas, is valid and binding upon all of the parties to this suit, and this court has no jurisdiction, power, or authority to review or to cancel and annul the same for the pretended fraud, as set out in plaintiff's bill, or for any other cause therein stated."

After hearing, the court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the suit "for want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter in controversy," and the correctness of its action in so doing is the question which arises on this appeal.

Mr. F. C. Zacharie argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants.

Mr. R. H. Ward submitted the cause for appellees. Mr. Ashby S. James was with him on the brief.

[613] Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

That the court erred in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the suit for want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the controversy has been in effect conclusively settled by this court in a case decided since the action of the court below was taken. Cooper v. Newell, 173 U. S. 555, 43 L. ed. 808, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506. In that case suit had been brought in a court of the state of Texas, in the ordinary form of trespass to try title, by Peter McGræel against Stewart Newell, the defendant. It was alleged in the suit that the plaintiff was a resident of Texas, and that the defendant was also a resident and citizen of that state. An answer was filed in the cause by an attorney at law in the name of the defendant, and the suit proceeded to judgment. The controversy decided in Cooper v. Newell thus arose: Newell filed his bill in the circuit court of the United States in and for the eastern district of Texas, in the ordinary form of trespass to try title to recover the land to which the suit of McGræel v. Newell had related. He charged that the defendants claimed title under the judgment rendered in that suit, but that they had no title because he, Newell, had never resided in the state of Texas, had not authorized any attorney to appear for him in the suit, and that, therefore, the proceedings in McGræel v. Newell were as to him res inter alios acta, and wholly void. The controversy turned on whether Newell could be heard in the circuit court of the United States to attack the judgment of the state court, it being contended that the fact that Newell was represented by an attorney at law, who appeared and filed an answer in his name, was conclusively established by the judgment, which could not be assailed collaterally in a court of the United States, however much it might be subject to direct attack for fraud in the courts of the state of Texas. The contention was *not maintained, [614] it being decided that, as the charges went to the jurisdiction of the state court, such question of jurisdiction could be examined in the courts of the United States whenever the judgment of the state court was presented as a muniment of title. The alleged facts in the case before us bring it directly within this ruling. By chapter 95, §§ 13 and 14, Laws of Texas 1847 and 1848, page 129, the affidavit by the plaintiff or his attorney as to the want of knowledge of the names of the parties defendant or their residences is made an essential prerequisite of the jurisdiction of the court to issue an order for publication. In other words, a summons by publication can only take place when the essential affidavit is previously made. In the state court the affidavit was therefore jurisdictional in its character; and its verity was directly assailed by the averments of the present bill, which were admitted by the demurrer. Besides this decisive consideration, the proceedings in the state court, whatever may have been their efficacy as a defense to the charges of fraud contained in the bill, as to which we express no opinion, were not adequate to defeat the jurisdiction of the circuit court of the United States. In other words, they address themselves, not to the jurisdiction of the court, but to the merits of the cause. Huntington v. Laidley, 176 U. S. 668, ante, 630, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526.

Whilst the demurrer which the court below maintained was predicated solely on the fact that there was a want of jurisdiction because of the proceedings had in the state court, which the bill assailed for want of jurisdiction and fraud, we have observed that the citizenship of Smolenski is not averred in the bill. This defect was curable by amendment, and it was not only within the power, but the duty of the court, on its attention being called to the fact, to have allowed such an amendment to be made. It follows that the judgment must be reversed, and the cause be remanded for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion, and it is so ordered.

[615]*CINCINNATI, HAMILTON, & DAYTON
RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

BENJAMIN F. THIEBAUD, Administrator of the Estate of Chris. Sweetman, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 615-621.)

Appeal—questions certified—constitutional question first raised by assignment of error—concurrent writs of error from circuit court of appeals and Supreme Court.

1. A question as to the constitutionality of a state statute, first raised in the assignment of errors in the circuit court of appeals, with nothing to present it in the circuit court except a general exception to an instruction in favor of the plaintiff's right to recover under the statute, will not sustain a writ of error to the circuit court of the United States from the Supreme Court under the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, chap. 517, § 5.
2. A writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to a circuit court will be dismissed if taken while a prior writ of error from a circuit court of appeals is pending in that court.

[Nos. 259, 271.]

No. 259 Argued April 24, 1900. No. 271
Submitted April 24, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

ON A CERTIFICATE in No. 259 from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, and IN ERROR in No. 271 to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio, to determine a question as to the constitutionality of a state statute. Question certified answered in the negative and writ of error dismissed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

[615] *The certificate in No. 259 reads as follows:

"This was an action brought by Benj. F. Thiebaud, a citizen of Indiana, as administrator of Chris. Sweetman, deceased, appointed by the circuit court of Fayette county, Indiana, against the C. H. & D. R. R. Co., a corporation and citizen of Ohio, to recover damages for the wrongful death of said Chris. Sweetman, who, while employed as a locomotive engineer by said company, on an engine drawing its pay car, was, without *fault on his part, killed in a collision [616] between his engine and that of a freight train. The collision was caused by the negligence of the conductor and engineer of the freight train. The court charged the jury, among other things, that inasmuch as the deceased had been killed through the negligence of fellow servants, the defendant would probably not be liable at common law, but that it was liable for the negligence charged and admitted under the act of the general assembly of Indiana, approved March 4, 1893, entitled 'An Act Regulating the Liability of Railroad and Other Corporations, except Municipal, for Personal Injuries to Persons Employed by Them,' etc. Laws of Indiana, 1893, p. 294; Ind. Rev. Stat. §§ 7083-7087. Upon which act the plaintiff relied for recovery; to which charge the defendant excepted.

"The record does not show upon what ground said exception was taken, and does not show that said exception was upon the ground that the statute contravenes the Constitution of the United States, or that the constitutionality of the statute was otherwise raised or considered or decided by the circuit court. The statute is not mentioned in any of the pleadings. The record shows other exceptions taken, duly assigned for error, which do not raise any constitutional question, and which may require the reversal of the judgment of the circuit court without reference to any constitutional question.

"The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and judgment was entered thereon.

"Thereafter the defendant brought the case, by writ of error, to this court, and assigned for error:

"1. That the court erred in charging the jury that the defendant was liable under the act of the general assembly of Indiana, approved March 4, 1893.

"2. That said act is in contravention of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

"3. That said act is in contravention of the Constitution of the state of Indiana, and especially of article 11, § 23, of article 4, §§ 19 and 23 thereof.

"4. That the court erred in overruling the defendant's motion to dismiss the action for want of jurisdiction.

*"5. That the court erred in refusing to [617] permit the defendant to put the following question to the witness, Charles M. Cist: 'Where were those personal effects at the time you made your application?'

"6. That the court erred in ruling out and excluding the testimony offered by the defendant to show that plaintiff's administration was not based upon any personal estate in Fayette county, Indiana, other than the claim sued on.

"Thereupon the defendant in error moved in this court to dismiss the case for want of jurisdiction, on the ground that it is a case in which it is claimed that the statute of a state is in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, and that, therefore, under § 5 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), the writ of error should be taken from the Supreme Court of the United States, and not from this court.

"The court is in doubt whether the case is within the provisions of said section of the act of Congress, and therefore, upon the foregoing statement of facts it is ordered that the following questions be certified to the Supreme Court of the United States for its instructions:

"1. Has the circuit court of appeals jurisdiction of a writ of error to the circuit court in a case in which it is claimed that a law of a state is in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, where the record presents other questions not involving the Constitution of the United States?

"2. Has the circuit court of appeals jurisdiction of a writ of error to the circuit court in a case in which it is claimed that a law of a state is in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, where the record presents other questions not involving the Constitution of the United States, which might require a reversal of the judgment without reference to such constitutional question?

"3. Does a record showing an instruction by the circuit court directing a jury that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in his action under a state law, upon which the plaintiff relies for recovery, to which instruction a general exception is reserved by the defendant, disclose a case in which it is claimed [618] that the *law of a state is in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, within the meaning of § 5 of the act of March 3, 1891, where the record of the circuit court does not affirmatively show that any issue as to the statute was raised by the pleadings, and where the record does not affirmatively show that said exception to said instruction was upon the ground that said statute was in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, or that the constitutionality of said statute was otherwise presented or considered or passed upon by the circuit court?

"4. If it be considered that such record in the circuit court does not disclose a case in which a law of a state is claimed to be in contravention of the Constitution of the United States, but such claim is made, so far as the record shows, for the first time in the circuit court of appeals by assignment of error, and is insisted upon at the bar, has the circuit court of appeals jurisdiction in error to hear and determine the constitutional question raised by such claim?"

No. 271 is a writ of error to the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio to review the judgment referred to in the certificate. In the petition for the writ, defendant set forth that "having duly prosecuted the writ of error heretofore allowed by the court to the United States circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, the plaintiff in this case, being the defendant in error, filed a motion in said circuit court of appeals to dismiss said writ of error upon the ground that the same should have been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States; instead of to the United States circuit court of appeals, and that said circuit court of appeals was therefore without jurisdiction upon said writ of error. Said circuit court of appeals, being in doubt whether it has jurisdiction, has certified certain questions to the Supreme Court of the United States. In view of said proceedings, the defendant, being now in doubt as to whether said writ of error to the United States circuit court of appeals was properly allowed, but without prejudice to said proceeding in error, if it shall hereafter be determined that the same was properly taken, and that the circuit court of appeals has jurisdiction thereof, now prays for a writ *of error to the Supreme Court of the [619] United States, and assigns for error:" [Here followed the assignment of errors.]

Thereupon the circuit court entered this order:

"This cause came on to be heard upon the defendant's petition for the allowance of a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States; on consideration whereof, and it being known to the court that the facts stated in said petition with reference to the writ of error formerly allowed to the circuit court of the United States for the sixth circuit are true, and it being doubtful whether a writ of error should be taken to the Supreme Court of the United States or to the United States circuit court of appeals, said petition is now granted, and a writ of error, as prayed, is allowed to the Supreme Court of the United States."

The cases came on to be heard, and were argued and submitted together.

Mr. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error in No. 259:

An assignment of errors cannot be used to import a constitutional question into a cause, which the record does not show was raised and decided below, so as to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction under the act of March 3, 1891, § 5.

Ansbro v. United States, 159 U. S. 695, 40 L. ed. 310, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187; Carey v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 150 U. S. 170, 37 L. ed. 1041, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 63; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 468, 36 L. ed. 508, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 740; Cornell v. Green, 163 U. S. 75, 41 L. ed. 76, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 969.

Mr. Harlan Cleveland argued the cause and, with Messrs. Charles M. Cist and Edgar W. Cist, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The third question should be answered in the affirmative, as this court has frequently held that it is proper for the circuit court to direct a verdict for the plaintiff where there is no question of fact for the jury, or where it is clear that he is entitled to recover, or where the evidence is undisputed or is so conclusive that the court would set aside a verdict returned in opposition to it, or where all the defenses relied upon involve questions of law only.

Robertson v. Edelhoff, 132 U. S. 614, 33 L. ed. 477, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186; North Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Commercial Bank, 123 U. S. 727, 31 L. ed. 287, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 266; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 139 U. S. 469, 35 L. ed. 213, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 569; Elliott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 150 U. S. 245, 37 L. ed. 1068, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85; Ralls County v. Douglass, 105 U. S. 728, 26 L. ed. 957; Anderson County Comrs. v. Beal, 113 U. S. 227, 28 L. ed. 966, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 433.

This court has frequently held under a somewhat analogous, though much stricter, provision in regard to the review of the decisions of the highest court of a state on a writ of error, that it is not always necessary that the Federal question which gives this court jurisdiction upon such review should appear affirmatively on the record or in the opinion of the state court, if an adjudication of such question was necessarily involved in the disposition of the case by the state court.

Willson v. Black-bird Creek Marsh Co. 2 Pet. 245, 7 L. ed. 412; Armstrong v. Athens County Treasurer, 16 Pet. 281, 10 L. ed. 965; Chicago L. Ins. Co. v. Needles, 113 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 1084, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Eureka Lake & Y. Canal Co. v. Yuba County Super. Ct. 116 U. S. 410, 29 L. ed. 671, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429; New Orleans Water-works v. Louisiana Sugar Ref. Co. 125 U. S. 18, 31 L. ed. 607, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 741; Wilmington & W. R. Co. v. Alsbrook, 146 U. S. 279, 36 L. ed. 972, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 72; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Tennessee, 153 U. S. 486, 38 L. ed. 793, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 968.

So here, in instructing the jury that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under the Indiana statute, while it does not affirmatively appear that the exception was based in whole or in part upon the claim that that act was unconstitutional, that must necessarily have been adjudicated by the circuit court when it charged that the defendant was liable under that act.

Mr. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., submitted the cause for plaintiff in error in No. 271.

Messrs. Harlan Cleveland, Jr., and Charles M. Cist submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. Edgar W. Cist was with them on the brief.

Plaintiff in error, having elected to prosecute his writ of error in the circuit court of appeals, must abide by his election, and cannot thereafter bring the same case into this court by subsequent writ of error.

Columbus Constr. Co. v. Crane Co. 174 U. S. 601, 43 L. ed. 1102, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721.

[619] Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

When our jurisdiction is invoked under § 5 of the judiciary act of March 3, 1891 [26 Stat. at L. 826], chap. 517, on the ground that the case falls within the fourth, fifth, or sixth of the classes of cases therein enumerated, it must appear that a title, right, 177 U. S.

privilege, or immunity was claimed under the Constitution, and a definite issue in respect to the possession of the right must be distinctly deducible from the record; or that the constitutionality of the particular law or the validity or construction of the particular treaty was necessarily and directly drawn in question; or that the Constitution or law of a state was distinctly claimed to be *in contravention of the Constitution of [620] the United States; and it is not sufficient that the point is raised in the assignment of errors. Ansbro v. United States, 159 U. S. 695, 40 L. ed. 310, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 187; Cornell v. Green, 163 U. S. 75, 41 L. ed. 76, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 969; Muse v. Arlington Hotel Co. 168 U. S. 430, 42 L. ed. 531, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 109; Miller v. Cornwall R. Co. 168 U. S. 131, 42 L. ed. 409, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34.

The certificate shows that no question as to the constitutionality of the statute of Indiana, relied on by the plaintiff below, was raised or considered or decided in the circuit court, but that the objection made its appearance for the first time in the assignment of errors in the circuit court of appeals.

In Carter v. Roberts, 177 U. S. 496, ante, 861, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 713, it was held that when cases arise which are controlled by the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States, a direct appeal lies to this court, and if such cases are carried to the circuit courts of appeals, those courts may decline to take jurisdiction; or, where such construction or application is involved with other questions, may certify the constitutional question and afterwards proceed to judgment; or may decide the whole case in the first instance. But when the circuit court of appeals has acted on the whole case, its judgment stands unless revised by certiorari to or appeal from that court in accordance with the act of March 3, 1891. Robinson v. Caldwell, 165 U. S. 359, 41 L. ed. 745, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343; Holt v. Indiana Mfg. Co. 176 U. S. 68, ante, 374, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; United States v. Jahn, 155 U. S. 109, 39 L. ed. 87, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 39; New Orleans v. Benjamin, 153 U. S. 411, 38 L. ed. 764, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Benjamin v. New Orleans, 169 U. S. 161, 42 L. ed. 700, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 298.

The third question propounded in the certificate must be answered in the negative, and we do not deem it necessary to answer the others.

The writ of error in No. 271 was brought while the case was pending in the circuit court of appeals on writ of error from that court. The whole case was open on each writ for review on the merits.

In Columbus Constr. Co. v. Crane Co. 174 U. S. 600, 43 L. ed. 1102, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 721, it was laid down that the act of March 3, 1891, does not contemplate several separate appeals or writs of error, on the merits, in the same case and at the same time to or from two appellate courts; and as the record disclosed in that case that two writs of error to the judgment of the circuit court [621]*were pending, one in the circuit court of appeals and the other and subsequent writ in this court, the latter was dismissed. The writ of error in No. 271 falls within this rule.

The third question propounded in No. 259 is answered in the negative.

The writ of error in No. 271 is dismissed.

Mr. Justice Harlan and Mr. Justice White were not present at the argument and took no part in the decision.

ROBERT S. LEOVY, Petitioner,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 621-637.)

Navigable waters—obstruction of—by dam—violation of act of Congress—navigability of pass or crevasse caused by overflow of river—decision of jury—utility of stream for interstate commerce—judicial notice as to matters of health.

1. A pass or crevasse caused by the overflow of the Mississippi river, making a channel to the Gulf of Mexico, through which a few fishermen have occasionally gone with small vessels carrying oysters for planting, and through which one or two cargoes of willows and timber may have passed, but which has not been used for any purpose of interstate commerce, and the gulf end of which has become closed, does not constitute a navigable water of the United States in such a sense that a dam erected therein for the purpose and with the effect of reclaiming overflowed lands and rendering them fit for cultivation will constitute an obstruction in navigable waters, within the prohibition of the act of Congress of September 19, 1890, against such obstructions without authority of the Secretary of War.
2. The decision of a jury as to the fact of the navigability of water is not binding upon the appellate court, so as to preclude a consideration of the instructions and definitions under which the jury found the verdict.
3. The mere capacity to pass in a boat of any size, however small, from one stream or rivulet to another, is not sufficient to constitute a navigable water of the United States, which the act of Congress of September 19, 1890, makes it a misdemeanor to obstruct, unless the channel is substantially useful to some purpose of interstate commerce.

NOTE.—As to what waters are navigable—see Willow River Club v. Wade (Wis.) 42 L. R. A. 305 and note. See also note to Gibson v. United States, 41 L. ed. U. S. 997.

For a discussion of navigable waters of the United States as distinguished from navigable waters of the states—see note to Willow River Club v. Wade (Wis.) 42 L. R. A. 325.

As to obstruction of navigation—see Fulmer v. Williams (Pa.) 1 L. R. A. 604 and note; Harold v. Jones (Ala.) 3 L. R. A. 406 and note; South Carolina S. B. Co. v. South Carolina R. Co. (S. C.) 4 L. R. A. 209 and note; Swanson v. Mississippi & R. River Boom Co. (Minn.) 7 L. R. A. 673 and note. See also notes to Gaston v. Mace (W. Va.) 5 L. R. A. 393; The Imperial (D. C. D. Or.) 3 L. R. A. 235.

4. The court may take judicial notice that the public health is deeply concerned in the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands.
5. The failure of an order by a police jury for the construction of a dam, to say anything about the subject of health, does not preclude the defense against an indictment for obstructing a navigable stream, that it was done in order to promote the health of the community.

[No. 238.]

Argued April 12, 16, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment of conviction for building a dam across a navigable stream. Reversed.

See same case below, 92 Fed. Rep. 344, 34 C. C. A. 392.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

*At the April term of the circuit court of [622] the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana an indictment was found, charging Augustus F. Leovy and Robert S. Leovy, both of the parish of Plaquemines, state of Louisiana, with, on the 16th of November, 1895, unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly, and without permission of the Secretary of War, building and causing to be built a dam in and across a certain navigable stream of the United States known as Red Pass, and outside of any established harbor lines, which said Red Pass flows in the Gulf of Mexico from a certain navigable stream of the United States, known as the Jump, which said Jump is an outlet of the Mississippi river into the Gulf of Mexico; that said dam has been continued by the defendants since the same was built, and still remains in and across said Red Pass, whereby the navigation of and commerce over and through Red Pass was then and there, and has been ever since, impaired and obstructed; they, the said defendants, well knowing the said Red Pass to be a navigable stream of the United States, in respect of which the United States then and there had jurisdiction, contrary to the form of the statute of the United States in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the United States.

The defendants entered a plea of not guilty; and the cause was tried before the district judge, and a jury. The trial resulted, June 6, 1891, in a verdict of not guilty as to Augustus F. Leovy, and of guilty as to Robert S. Leovy; whereupon it was adjudged that said Robert S. Leovy pay a fine of $200 and costs of prosecution.

Several bills of exception on behalf of Robert S. Leovy were seasonably presented, and signed and allowed by the trial judge, who likewise, on June 16, 1898, allowed a writ of error, and the cause was taken to the United States circuit court of appeals for the fifth district, which court, on February —, 1899, affirmed the judgment of the circuit court.

The case was then brought to this court on a writ of certiorari to the United States circuit court of appeals for the fifth circuit.

Mr. Victor Leovy argued the cause and, with Messrs. Henry J. Leovy and Alexander Porter Morse, and Messrs. Rouse & Grant, filed a brief for petitioner:

The reserved police power of a state extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the state.

Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 149, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 471, 24 L. ed. 530; Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. 62, 21 L. ed. 404; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 715.

The police power is universally conceded to include everything essential to the public safety, health, and morals.

Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499.

Neither the 14th Amendment, broad and comprehensive as it is, nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its "police power," to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity. From the very necessities of society, legislation of a special character having those objects in view must often be had in certain districts,—such as for draining marshes and irrigating arid plains.

Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

The absence of an express exception of state police power does not conclude the matter; nor will police acts be deemed to be included within the general terms of the prohibition.

United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 485, 19 L. ed. 280; Brown v. Houston, 114 U. S. 622, 29 L. ed. 257, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1091; Re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, sub nom. Wilkerson v. Rahrer, 35 L. ed. 572, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 865; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 673, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S. 505, 24 L. ed. 1117.

Power to regulate small streams and bayous which run through every part of the state has been recognized for many years as necessary for redeeming large and valuable tracts of land.

Boykin v. Shaffer, 13 La. Ann. 131; Egan v. Hart, 45 La. Ann. 1358, 14 So. 244.

To render waters navigable in the legal sense, commerce must be carried on over them which is of an essentially valuable character.

Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, p. 241.

Mr. George Hines Gorman argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent:

Where there is some evidence tending to establish a fact in issue, the jury must be the sole judges of its sufficiency.

Richardson v. Boston, 19 How. 263, 15 L. ed. 639; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Snyder, 93 U. S. 393, 23 L. ed. 887.

The appellate court can only look at the evidence to determine its competency. If competent, the fact found by the jury, and all inferences deducible from the fact, are binding upon the appellate court.

177 U. S.

Hepburn v. Dubois, 12 Pet. 345, 9 L. ed. 1111; Bamberger v. Schoolfield, 160 U. S. 149, 40 L. ed. 374, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 225; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Brill, 7 U. S. App. 601, 54 Fed. Rep. 380, 4 C. C. A. 374.

To render a stream navigable, it is not necessary that it should be deep enough to admit the passage of boats at all portions of the stream.

St. Anthony Falls Waterpower Co. v. St. Paul Water Comrs. 168 U. S. 349, 42 L. ed. 497, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 157.

Rivers constitute navigable waters of the United States within the meaning of the acts of Congress, in contra-distinction from the navigable waters of the states, where they form, in their ordinary condition, by themselves or by uniting with other waters, a continued highway over which commerce is or may be carried on with other states or foreign countries.

The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. 557, 19 L. ed. 999; The Montello, 11 Wall. 411, 20 L. ed. 191; Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678, 27 L. ed. 442, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Harman v. Chicago, 147 U. S. 396, 37 L. ed. 216, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306.

Private persons, for their own aggrandizement, cannot, at their own private expense, under the pretense of the authority of a police jury of a parish or state, dam up a navigable river of the United States in order to improve their farm lands.

United States v. Bellingham Bay Boom Co. 176 U. S. 211, ante, 437, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 343.

No definition of the police power, and no urgency for its use, can authorize a state to exercise it in regard to a subject-matter which has been confided exclusively to the discretion of Congress by the Constitution.

Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & Heat Producing & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. v. Louisiana Bd. of Health, 118 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 237, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1114; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. ed. 527.

The case of Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499, relied upon by petitioner, was a fishery case involving the right of a state to pass a law to preserve from extinction fisheries in the lake waters within its jurisdiction, by prohibiting exhaustive methods of fishing or the use of destructive instruments. The common-law right of fishery is entirely distinct and separate from the right of navigation, and may or may not exist in the same waters at the same time.

Gould, Waters, 2d ed. § 54; Leeonfield v. Lonsdale, L. R. 5 C. P. 665; People v. Platt, 17 Johns. 195, 8 Am. Dec. 382.

Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion of the court: [623]

On March 2, 1849, the Congress of the United States by an act of that date, entitled

915

"An Act to Aid the State of Louisiana in Draining the Swamp Lands therein," enacted: "That to aid the state of Louisiana in constructing the necessary levees and drains to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands therein, the whole of those swamp and overflowed lands, which may be or are found unfit for cultivation, shall be, and the same are, hereby granted to that state." 9 Stat. at L. 352, chap. 87.

Similar grants have been made by Congress to other states within whose boundaries were undrained swamp and overflowed lands belonging to the United States. Act of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat. at L. 519, chap. 84). This legislation declares a public policy on the part of the government to aid the states in reclaiming swamp and overflowed lands unfit for cultivation in their natural state, and is a recognition of the right and duty of the respective states, in consideration of such grants, to make and maintain the necessary improvements.

By the act of September 19, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 454, chap. 907), it is provided:

"That it shall not be lawful to build any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, dam, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or structure of any kind outside established harbor lines, or in any navigable waters of the United States where no harbor lines are or may be established, without the permission of the Secretary of War, in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or other waters of the United States, in such manner as shall obstruct or impair navigation, commerce, or anchorage of said waters, and it shall not be lawful hereafter to commence the construction of any bridge, bridge draw, bridge piers, and abutments, causeway, or other works over or in [1624] any port, road, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or navigable waters of the United States, under any act of the legislative assembly of any state, until the location and plan of such bridge or other works have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, or to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of, the channel of said navigable water of the United States, unless approved and authorized by the Secretary of War: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any bridge, bridge draw, bridge piers, and abutments, the construction of which has been heretofore duly authorized by law, or be so construed as to authorize the construction of any bridge, draw bridge, bridge piers, and abutments, or other works, under an act of the legislature of any state, over or in any stream, port, roadstead, haven, or harbor, or other navigable water not wholly within the limits of such state."

The tenth section of the same act provided as follows:

"Every person and every corporation which shall be guilty of creating or continuing any such unlawful obstruction in this act mentioned, or who shall violate the provisions of the last four preceding sections of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, 916 and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding one year, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court. The creating or continuing of any unlawful obstruction in this act mentioned may be prevented, and such obstruction may be caused to be removed by the injunction of any circuit court exercising jurisdiction in any district in which such obstruction may be threatened or may exist; and proper proceedings in equity to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States."

In the river and harbor act of 1892 (27 Stat. at L. pp. 88, 110, chap. 158), section 7 of the act of 1890 was amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"That it shall not be lawful to build any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, dam, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or structure of any kind outside established harbor lines, or in any navigable waters of the United States where no harbor lines are or may *be estab-[625] lished, without the permission of the Secretary of War, in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or other waters of the United States, in such manner as shall obstruct or impair navigation, commerce, or anchorage of said waters; and it shall not be lawful hereafter to commence the construction of any bridge, bridge draw, bridge piers, and abutments, causeway, or other works over or in any port, road, roadstead, haven, harbor, navigable river, or navigable waters of the United States under any act of the legislative assembly of any state until the location and plan of such bridge or other works have been submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War, or to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless approved and authorized by the Secretary of War: Provided, That this section shall not apply to any bridge, bridge draw, bridge piers, and abutments the construction of which has been heretofore duly authorized by law, or be so construed as to authorize the construction of any bridge, drawbridge, bridge piers, and abutments, or other works, under an act of the legislature of any state, over or in any stream, port, roadstead, haven, or harbor, or other navigable water not wholly within the limits of such state."

Subject, then, to the paramount jurisdiction of Congress over the navigable waters of the United States, the state of Louisiana has full power to authorize the construction and maintenance of levees, drains, and other structures necessary and suitable to reclaim swamp and overflowed lands within her limits. The pivotal question in the present case is whether Red Pass is a navigable water of the United States in such a sense that a dam erected therein for the purpose, and with the effect, of reclaiming overflowed lands and rendering them fit for cultivation, could be constructed without the previous authorization of the Secretary of War, it being admitted that no such authority was ever applied for or procured.

[626] Evidence was tendered, on behalf of the defendants, tending to show that the dam in question was built by Robert S. Leovy, *who was the syndic or official of the contiguous ward, in pursuance of a resolution of the police jury of the parish of Plaquemines, dated July 1, 1890, directing such syndic to have Red Pass closed, and also tending to show an approval and ratification of the work by the levee board of the district and by the police jury at a meeting held February 8, 1898, and a direction to the attorney of the board to take such steps as should be necessary to prevent said Red Pass from being reopened. Some of these offers were rejected by the trial court, and exceptions were taken by the defendants. It is evident, however, that the court rejected the offers only because it was the opinion of the court that such evidence was immaterial, inasmuch as if Red Pass was not a navigable water of the United States, within the meaning of the statutes, the defendants would be entitled to a verdict of not guilty, regardless of the action of the police jury and of the levee board, and if Red Pass was such a navigable stream, the action of the state or parish authorities, unauthorized by the Secretary of War, would not avail the defendants. Indeed, the trial judge, in his charge, instructed the jury as if the evidence had been admitted, in the following terms:

"I charge you gentlemen that the police jury of the parish had no right to authorize Mr. Robert S. Leovy to dam Red Pass, if Red Pass was a navigable water of the United States. I say that it had no authority, because, in the year 1890, the Congress of the United States passed the law under which this indictment has been brought, forbidding the damming of any navigable stream of the United States without the previous authorization of the Secretary of War. Therefore, as it was not contended, in this case, that there was any authority from the secretary, but on the contrary there is proof tending to show there was no such authority, then it results that it is no defense for Mr. Robert S. Leovy to show his pretended or alleged authority from the police jury of the parish of Plaquemines. The police jury of the parish of Plaquemines could not legally have dammed it. Therefore Mr. Leovy could not."

[627] We think, therefore, that we are warranted in regarding the dam in question as constructed under the police power of the state, and within the terms and purpose of the grant by Congress. There was evidence tending to show the character of *the country affected by floods from Red Pass—that it was swamp land and sea marsh from the Mississippi river to the gulf. The testimony inclosed in the record, of Shoenberger, president of the police jury and of the levee board; of Lewis, of the state board of engineers; of Wilkerson, ex-president of levee board; and of De Armas,—showed that the closing of this pass has resulted in the redemption of large tracts of land, greatly increasing their value; that the property in the fifth ward, before Red Pass and Spanish Pass were closed, was valued at $5,000, and at this time it is valued at $100,000; and that if those passes are kept closed for five years more it will be three times as much; and that, if this pass be opened again, by the removal of the dam, the orange property will be ruined.

It is conceded that Red Pass is not a natural stream, but is in the nature of a crevasse, caused by the overflow of water from the Mississippi river. This crevasse seems to have been formed some time before the grant by the United States to Louisiana, and the fact that by this and similar breaks through the banks of the river large tracts of land were rendered worthless, was, it may be assumed, well known to Congress, and was, indeed, the actuating cause of the grant.

As respects navigation through Red Pass, there was some evidence, on the part of the government, that small luggers or yawls, chiefly used by fishermen to carry oysters to and from their beds, sometimes went through this pass; but it was not shown that passengers were ever carried through it, or that freight destined to any other state than Louisiana, or, indeed, destined for any market in Louisiana, was ever, much less habitually, carried through it.

The evidence on the part of the defendants showed that for many years these crevasses or passes have been steadily growing shallower and narrower, and that at the time of closing Red Pass few of the smallest craft attempted to pass through it, and that the so-called mouth, or end of Red Pass next the gulf, had closed up and become a mere marsh. The trifling use that was made of that pass was restricted to the river end of the crevasse.

We cannot accept the contention of the government's counsel *that, because the jury [628] was left to determine whether the pass was in fact navigable, and found the defendant guilty, the decision of the jury is binding upon the appellate court. We have a right to consider under what instructions and definitions, given by the trial court, the jury found their verdict.

Before we examine the charge of the court, we shall briefly review some of the cases from which may be derived a definition of "navigable waters of the United States," within the meaning of the statutes under which this indictment was brought.

In the case of Boykin v. Shaffer, 13 La. Ann. 131, it was said by the supreme court of the state of Louisiana:

"Were the mere fact that a steamboat or flatboat had been a short distance up a stream or bayou in high water a sufficient ground for declaring it a navigable stream, every slight depression of the soil on the banks of the Mississippi would then become a navigable stream, and should be opened for the benefit of rafts and boats and the convenience of a few persons, to the total destruction of the planting interests on the banks of the river. It is well known that the state has, for a number of years, been closing the small bayous making out of the principal rivers and bayous, and thus redeeming large and valuable tracts of land."

In the case of Egan v. Hart, 45 La. Ann. 1358, 14 So. 244, there was considered the right of the board of state engineers of the state of Louisiana to build a dam across an alleged stream, designated as Bayou Pierre. It was alleged that it was a purely private undertaking which the board of state engineers was not authorized to do at public expense, and that the dam would obstruct the navigation of Bayou Pierre, and would therefore violate the statute of Congress which forbade the construction of any bridge or other works over or in any navigable waters of the United States, unless approved by the Secretary of War. The trial judge, as to the contention that Bayou Pierre was a navigable stream, said:

[629] "From Grande Ecore, where it (Bayou Pierre) enters Red river, to a point some miles below its junction with Tonre's Bayou, —a stream flowing out of the river,—Bayou Pierre has been frequently navigated by steamboats. But from the point of junction to the dam in question it has never been navigated, and is *unnavigable. Between these two points it is nothing but a highwater outlet, going dry every summer at many places, choked with rafts, and filled with sand, reefs, etc. It has no channel; in various localities it spreads out into shallow lakes and over a wide expanse of country, and is susceptible of being made navigable just as a ditch could be if it were dug deep and wide enough and kept supplied with a sufficiency of water."

And accordingly it was found by the trial court that Bayou Pierre was not a navigable water of the United States. Its judgment was affirmed by the supreme court of Louisiana, and the case was brought to this court and the judgment of the court below affirmed. Egan v. Hart, 165 U. S. 188, 41 L. ed. 680, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 300.

In Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Ohio, 165 U. S. 365, 41 L. ed. 747, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357, a judgment of the supreme court of Ohio, affirming a judgment of a trial court, ordering the defendant, an Ohio corporation, to absolutely remove a bridge or modify its structure over the Ashtabula river, a stream wholly within the state of Ohio, was brought to and affirmed by this court. The case was thus stated in the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice White:

"Both the pleadings and the errors here assigned deny the jurisdiction of the state of Ohio or its courts to control the subject-matter of the controversy, on the theory that the determination of whether the defendant possessed the right to erect the bridge and to continue it, although constructed without authority, is a Federal, and not a state, question. This contention is predicated on §§ 4, 5, and 7 of the act of Congress of September 19, 1890 (26 Stat. at L. 426, 453, chap. 907).

"The contention is that the statute in question manifests the purpose of Congress to deprive the several states of all authority to control and regulate any and every structure over all navigable streams, although they be wholly situated within their territory. That full power resides in the states as to the erection of bridges and other works in navigable streams wholly within their jurisdiction, in the absence of the exercise by Congress of authority to the contrary, is conclusively determined." Willson v. Black-bird Creek Marsh Co. 2 Pet. 245, 7 L. ed. 412; Withers v. Buckley, 20 How. 84, 15 L. ed. 816; Cardwell v. American Bridge Co. 113 U. S. 205, 28 L. ed. 959, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423; Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch*, 125 U. S. 1, 31 L. ed. 629, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 33, 38 L. ed. 343, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548, and cases there cited.

"Indeed the argument at bar does not assail the rule settled by the foregoing cases, but asserts that as the power which it recognizes as existing in the states is predicated solely upon the failure of Congress to exert its paramount authority, therefore the rule no longer obtains, since the act of 1890, relied on, substantially amounts to an express assumption by Congress of entire control over all and every navigable stream, whether or not situated wholly within a state."

After quoting the language of the statute, the opinion proceeded:

"On the face of this statute, it is obvious that it does not support the claim based upon it. Conceding, without deciding, that the words 'waterways of the United States,' therein used, apply to all navigable waters, even though they be wholly situated within a state, and passing, also without deciding, the contention that Congress can lawfully delegate to the Secretary of War all its power to authorize structures of every kind over all navigable waters, nothing in the statute gives rise even to the implication that it was intended to confer such power on the Secretary of War. . . . It follows, therefore, that even conceding, arguendo, that the words 'navigable waters,' as used in the act, were intended to apply to streams wholly within a state, its obvious purpose was not to deprive the states of authority to grant power to bridge such streams, or to render lawful all bridges previously built without authority, but simply to create an additional and cumulative remedy to prevent such structures, although lawfully authorized, from interfering with commerce."

In the case of The Daniel Ball, 10 Wall. 563, sub nom. The Daniel Ball v. United States, 19 L. ed. 1001, the following definition of the term "navigable waters" was expressed:

"Some of our rivers are as navigable for many hundreds of miles above as they are below the limits of tidewater, and some of them are navigable for great distances by large vessels which are not even affected by the tide at any point during their entire length. . . . A different test must, therefore, be applied to determine the navigability of our rivers, and that is found in their *navigable capacity. Those rivers must be regarded as public navigable rivers in law which are navigable in fact. And they are navigable in fact when they are used, or are susceptible of being used, in their ordinary condition, as highways for commerce, over which trade and travel are, or may be conducted in the customary modes of trade and travel on water."

In the case of The Montello, 20 Wall. 441, sub nom. United States v. The Montello, 22 L. ed. 394, the following language was used:

"The capability of use by the public for purposes of transportation and commerce affords the true criterion of the navigability of a river rather than the extent and manner of that use. If it be capable in its natural state of being used for purposes of commerce, no matter in what mode the commerce may be conducted, it is navigable in fact, and becomes in law a public river or highway. Vessels of any kind that can float upon the water, whether propelled by animal power, by the wind, or by the agency of steam, are, or may become, the mode by which a vast commerce can be conducted, and it would be a mischievous rule that would exclude either in determining the navigability of a river."

In Withers v. Buckley, 20 How. 84, 15 L. ed. 816, this court said:

"The act of Congress of March 1, 1817, in prescribing the free navigation of the Mississippi and the navigable waters flowing into this river, could not have been designed to inhibit the power inseparable from every sovereign or efficient government, to devise and to execute measures for the improvement of the state, although such measures might induce or render necessary changes in the channels or courses of rivers within the interior of the state, or might be productive of a change in the value of private property."

"Neither the [Fourteenth] Amendment,—broad and comprehensive as it is,—nor any other amendment, was designed to interfere with the power of the state, sometimes termed its police power, . . . to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources, and add to its wealth and prosperity. From the very necessities of society, legislation of a special character, having these objects in view, must often be had in certain districts, such as for draining marshes and irrigating arid plains." Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357.

[632] *It is a safe inference from these and other cases to the same effect which might be cited, that the term, "navigable waters of the United States," has reference to commerce of a substantial and permanent character to be conducted thereon. The power of Congress to regulate such waters is not expressly granted in the Constitution, but is a power incidental to the express "power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes;" and with reference to which the observation was made by Chief Justice Marshall, that "it is not intended to say that these words comprehend that commerce which is completely internal, which is carried on between man and man in a state.

or between different parts of the same state, and which does not extend to or affect other states." Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 194, 6 L. ed. 69.

While, therefore, it may not be easy for a court to define the size and character of a stream which would place it within the category of "navigable waters of the United States," or to define what traffic shall constitute "commerce among the states," so as to make such questions sheer matters of law, yet, in construing the legislation involved in the case before us, we may be permitted to see that it was not the intention of Congress to interfere with or prevent the exercise by the state of Louisiana of its power to reclaim swamp and overflowed lands by regulating and controlling the current of small streams not used habitually as arteries of interstate commerce.

The trial judge instructed the jury as follows:

"What is a navigable water of the United States? It is a navigable water which, either of itself, or in connection with other water, permits a continuous journey to another state. If a stream is navigable, and from that stream you can make a journey by water, by boat, by one of the principal methods used in ordinary commerce, to another state from the state in which you start on that journey, that is a navigable water of the United States. It is so called in contradistinction to waters which arise and come to an end within the boundaries of the state. . . . But, if from the water in one state you can travel by water continuously to another state, and the water is a navigable water, then it is a navigable stream of the United States. . . . If it was navigable, [633] and connected with waters that permitted a journey to another state, then it is a navigable water of the United States." And again: "But the fact I wish to impress upon you is this, that it is not absolutely necessary that you should find that there was navigability all the way from the Jump out to the gulf, because if, from some point beyond the place where Mr. Robert S. Leovy built this dam, towards the Mississippi river, the stream was navigable, then it would be a navigable stream of the United States, because it would connect with the Mississippi river."

If these instructions were correct, then there is scarcely a creek or stream in the entire country which is not a navigable water of the United States. Nearly all the streams on which a skiff or small lugger can float discharge themselves into other streams or waters flowing into a river which traverses more than one state, and the mere capacity to pass in a boat of any size, however small, from one stream or rivulet to another, the jury is informed, is sufficient to constitute a navigable water of the United States.

Such a view would extend the paramount jurisdiction of the United States over all the flowing waters in the states, and would subject the officers and agents of a state, engaged in constructing levees to restrain overflowing rivers within their banks, or in regulating the channels of small streams for the purposes of internal commerce, to fine and imprisonment, unless permission be first obtained from the Secretary of War. If such were the necessary construction of the statutes here involved, their validity might well be questioned. But we do not so understand the legislation of Congress. When it is remembered that the source of the power of the general government to act at all in this matter arises out of its power to regulate commerce with foreign countries and among the states, it is obvious that what the Constitution and the acts of Congress have in view is the promotion and protection of commerce in its international and interstate aspect, and a practical construction must be put on these enactments as intended for such large and important purposes.

[634] We also think that these instructions are open to the further *criticism that they contain no reference to the nature or extent of the traffic or trade carried on in Red Pass before the erection of the dam. Indeed, the charge necessarily implies that the defendant was guilty if there was merely a capacity for passing from Red Pass into the Mississippi river on any sort of a boat. Very different was the view expressed by Chief Justice Shaw when he said it is not "every small creek in which a fishing skiff or gunning canoe can be made to float at high water, which is deemed navigable." But in order to give it the character of a navigable stream it must be generally and commonly useful to some purpose of trade or agriculture. [Rowe v. Granite Bridge Corp.] 21 Pick. 344.

We have read the testimony offered on behalf of the United States to show the kind and extent of the navigation of the Red Pass, and there is no view we can take of it that warranted the jury in finding that interstate commerce was ever transacted thereon. A few fishermen testified that they occasionally went through this pass with small vessels, carrying oysters for planting, and one or two cargoes of willows and timber were spoken of. None of these witnesses pretended to have carried produce or oysters out of the state. Nor can it be contended that the Red Pass, at the time the dam was built, was open to the gulf. It was shown that the gulf end of the pass had closed up, so that to get to the sea it was necessary to go out of Red Pass into Tiger Pass, Tontine Pass, and Grand Pass, which are open to the gulf. And accordingly the trial judge instructed the jury that it was not necessary, in order to find Red Pass to be a navigable water of the United States, that they should find that it was navigable out to the gulf; that it was sufficient if boats could reach the Mississippi river.

We think the defendant was entitled to the instruction asked for, but refused, that the jury should be satisfied from the evidence that Red Pass was at the time it was closed, as alleged in the indictment, substantially useful to some purpose of interstate commerce. The instruction actually given was as follows:

"If Tontine Pass and Red Pass are available for commerce and navigation by means of luggers and oyster boats for the purpose of useful commerce, it would be a navigable stream; and if you find that it connected with other waters over which *a continuous[635] journey could be made to other states, then it would be a navigable water of the United States.

"I repeat to you that, under my view of the case, all you have to decide is whether Red Pass was a navigable water of the United States, and as you decide that the case will go, because it is conceded that Mr. Leovy dammed it."

It is plain, therefore, that the attention of the jury was not directed at all to the question of any existing interstate commerce, and that the learned judge was of opinion, and so ruled, that the physical possibility of passing by a boat out of Red Pass into the Mississippi river constituted the pass a navigable water of the United States.

The court refused to give the following instruction:

"If the jury shall find that Red Pass was a crevasse, or outbreak, of the Mississippi river from its natural channel, the result of which was to overflow a large portion of Plaquemines Parish, to the detriment of the inhabitants thereof, by the destruction of their property, and prejudicial to their health, the state, in the exercise of its police power delegated to the police jury of the parish of Plaquemines, had a right to close it."

Perhaps this instruction ought to have been qualified or accompanied by a prayer that the acts of Congress relied on by the government were not applicable to the case suggested in the instruction asked for. But we think, in the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, the instruction should have been given, at least as so qualified.

The circuit court of appeals, in dealing with the error assigned for the refusal of the trial judge to so charge, said [92 Fed. Rep. 344, 34 C. C. A. 392]:

"There is no legitimate evidence in the record tending to show that the police jury of the parish of Plaquemines ordered Red Pass closed for the purpose of affecting or promoting the peace, morals, education, health, or good order of the people; but the case does show that the pass was ordered closed, and was closed, for the sole purpose of reclaiming swamp lands. Under the power to regulate commerce, Congress having forbidden the closing of any navigable river without the consent of the United States, it is very doubtful whether any navigable water of the United States, although wholly within the limits *of the state, can be closed under the[636] exercise of the police power of the state for any purpose whatever, but where the purpose only is the reclamation of swamp lands, there is no doubt the police power of the state must give way to the authority of Congress."

We think that the trial court might well take judicial notice that the public health is deeply concerned in the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands. If there is any fact which may be supposed to be known by everybody, and therefore by courts, it is that swamps and stagnant waters are the cause of malarial and malignant fevers, and that the police power is never more legitimately exercised than in removing such nuisances. The defendant was not deprived of the defense that the act which he was charged with was performed in order to promote the health of the community, by the fact, if fact it was, that the order under which he acted did not say anything about the subject of health, but simply authorized the erection of the dam, so as to exclude the overflow from the river.

Nor are we disposed to concur in the doubt expressed whether any navigable water wholly within the limits of a state can be closed under the exercise of the police power for any purpose whatever. Such a doubt might be justified if there was express legislation of the United States forbidding the act proposed. But, as we have seen, in the present case the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands was not only not forbidden, but was recognized as the duty of the state, in consideration of the grant of the public lands. And, for the reasons already given, we do not construe the acts of Congress under which this indictment was brought as intended to apply to the case of a stream of the history and character disclosed in this record. Hence, the state authorities were left free to act in such a manner as they thought fit to promote the health and prosperity of the people concerned.

[637] It can scarcely be contended that if, by a sudden breach of the banks of the Mississippi river in the lowlands of Louisiana, a stream of water across agricultural lands was created, endangering the health and welfare of the inhabitants, that the case would be within the meaning and operation of the acts of Congress relied on in this case. It may be that in such a case, if the state declines to act or, rather, permits such a stream to become a highway of commerce among the states, the Federal control over it might attach. Thus Grand Pass, of which Red Pass is a branch, might, in view of the volume of its water and of the nature and amount of the commerce carried on it, be held to be a navigable water of the United States. However that may be, our conclusion, upon the record now before us, is that Red Pass, in the condition it was at the time when this dam was built, was not shown by adequate evidence to have been a navigable water of the United States, actually used in interstate commerce, and that the court should have charged the jury, as requested, that, upon the whole evidence adduced, the defendants were entitled to a verdict of acquittal.

It is claimed by the counsel for the plaintiff in error that the act of July 13, 1892, so far amended and repealed the act of September 19, 1890, that the penal section of the latter was repealed, and that hence, as no penalty is provided in the act of 1892, the indictment and conviction of the plaintiff in error was without authority of law. It is also contended that the policy of Congress in respect to the authority of the Secretary of War in the matter of obstruction to navigation, has been greatly changed and modified by the act of March 3, 1899. Fifty-fifth Cong., Session 3 [30 Stat. at L.] chap. 425, § 9, p. 1151.

It is also suggested that whatever may be the powers of Congress over streams wholly within a state, they cannot be legitimately enforced by criminal prosecution of officers and agents of the state for acts done under state authority, but that, in such cases, the proper remedy would be found in bills in equity.

But in the view we take of the case in hand, we are not called upon to express any opinion on such questions.

The judgment of the circuit court of appeals is reversed, the judgment of the circuit court is likewise reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court, with directions to award a new trial.

*THE KNAPP, STOUT, & CO. COMPANY, [638]
Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOHN McCAFFREY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 638-648.)

Lien for towage—jurisdiction of state court—proceedings in personam or in rem—questions of local law.

1. A bill to enforce a lien for towage by foreclosure of the lien on a raft of lumber in the complainant's possession, where the suit is brought against individual defendants, seeking a decree against them, and, in default of the payment thereof, a sale of the property to satisfy it, is not a proceeding in rem within the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the Federal courts, but is a suit in personam to enforce a common-law remedy, which may be brought in a state court by virtue of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 563, saving the suitor's right of a common-law remedy in all cases where the common-law is competent to give it.
2. Questions as to the right to a possessory lien upon a raft under state laws, and the extent thereof, as well as the existence of possession, are local questions dependent upon the law of the state, in respect to which the Federal courts will follow the state decisions.
3. The enforceability in equity of a lien for the enforcement of which there is no special statutory provision is a matter as to which the Federal courts will recognize the practice of the state courts as expressive of the local law.

[No. 263.]

Submitted April 24, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois affirming a judgment sustaining a bill to foreclose a lien for towage upon a raft of lumber. Affirmed.

See same case below, 178 Ill. 107, 52 N. E. 898.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

[638] *This was a bill in equity filed in the circuit court for the county of Mercer, Illinois, by the defendant in error, John McCaffrey, against the Knapp, Stout, & Co. Company (hereinafter called the Knapp Company), and the Schulenburg & Boeckler Lumber Company (hereinafter called the Schulenburg Company), and its assignees, to enforce a lien for towage upon a half raft of lumber then lying at Boston Bay, in Mercer county.

The suit arose from a contract made April 6, 1893, by McCaffrey with the Schulenburg Company, in which, after reciting that McCaffrey had purchased of this company three steam tow boats for the sum of $17,500, it was agreed that McCaffrey was to tow all the rafted lumber such company would furnish him at or below their mill at Stillwater, Minnesota, to St. Louis, and deliver the same there to the company in quantities not exceeding one half a raft at a time, for which service he was to be paid $1.12½ per thousand feet, board measure, for the lumber contained in the raft. The other provisions of the contract, of which there were many, were not material to the present controversy. After towing a number of rafts for the company, the charges for which remained unpaid, one of McCaffrey's steamers, known as the Robert Dodds, left Stillwater October 13, 1894, with raft No. 10 of that year. The river being low and navigation difficult, McCaffrey was instructed to divide the raft, to bring one half to St. Louis, and to lay up the other half in some safe harbor. In compliance [639] with these instructions *McCaffrey divided the raft on October 20 at Boston Bay harbor in Mercer county, leaving one half there, while the other half was towed to St. Louis and delivered to the lumber company on November 2. The company paid the clerk of the boat $1,250 without directions as to its application, and McCaffrey applied it on the amount due him for the towage of other rafts. The steamer returned to Boston Bay the morning of November 4, and laid up outside the raft for the winter.

On the next day, November 5, the Schulenburg Company sold the half raft in Boston Bay to the Knapp Company for $15,000, part in cash and the remainder in a note due in four months, which was paid at maturity. A bill of sale was given for the lumber, and a letter written to the watchman in charge of the raft informing him of the sale. On November 9 the Schulenburg Company made a voluntary assignment in St. Louis for the benefit of creditors. McCaffrey, hearing of the assignment, offered both companies to tow the half raft to St. Louis under his contract, but the Knapp Company informed him that they did not wish him to do so, saying that they did their own towing; whereupon McCaffrey, claiming to be still in possession of the half raft and believing that the company was about to take it from him by force, filed this bill to foreclose his lien for towage. The Knapp Company gave a bond for the amount of the claim and took the raft away.

The case came on for hearing in the circuit court upon pleadings and proofs, and resulted in a decree dismissing the bill without prejudice. McCaffrey appealed to the appellate court, which reversed the decree of the circuit court, and remanded the cause with directions to enter a decree for the sum of $3,643.17, with interest thereon. The Knapp Company appealed to the supreme court of the state, which affirmed the judgment of the appellate court (178 Ill. 107, 52 N. E. 898); whereupon defendant sued out a writ of error from this court.

Mr. Charles P. Wise submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

The contract being maritime, to enforce the lien for towage of the raft the United States admiralty courts have exclusive jurisdiction.

The Genesee Chief v. Fitzhugh, 12 How. 457, 13 L. ed. 1064; Jackson v. The Magnolia, 20 How. 296, 15 L. ed. 909; The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, sub nom. The Moses Taylor v. Hammons, 18 L. ed. 397; The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 18 L. ed. 451; The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, sub nom. The Belfast v. Boon, 19 L. ed. 266; The Eagle, 8 Wall. 15, sub nom. The Eagle v. Fraser, 19 L. ed. 365; The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 37 L. ed. 345, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498; Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 38 L. ed. 981, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019; The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 42 L. ed. 296, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930.

The admiralty jurisdiction extends to the entire navigable-river system of the United States.

The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 18 L. ed. 451; Re Garnett, 141 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 631, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 840; McGinnis v. The Pontiac, 5 McLean, 359, Fed. Cas. No. 8,801; The Montello, 20 Wall. 430, sub nom. United States v. The Montello, 22 L. ed. 391; Jackson v. The Magnolia, 20 How. 296, 15 L. ed. 909; Ex parte Boyer, 109 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 1056, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434.

This suit does not come within the clause of the act of 1789. It is not an action at common law, but a suit in equity.

The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 431, sub nom. The Moses Taylor v. Hammons, 18 L. ed. 402; The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 18 L. ed. 451; Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 38 L. ed. 981, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019; The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 42 L. ed. 296, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930.

Messrs. Charles E. Kremer and Guy O. Scott submitted the cause for defendant in error:

The lien for the towage of the raft, if enforceable in admiralty at all, is of the same nature as the lien on cargo for carrying it. It is the common-law lien of the bailee for his hire. It is a possessory lien, which, unlike the ordinary maritime lien, is defeated by the delivery of the property to which it attaches.

The Kalorama, 10 Wall. 205, sub nom. Pendergast v. The Kalorama, 19 L. ed. 942; Westerdell v. Dale, 7 T. R. 312; Justin v. Ballam, 1 Salk. 34; Watkinson v. Bernadiston, 2 P. Wms. 367; 3 Kent. Com. 169; 177 U. S.

Maude & P. Ship, 64; The Zodiac, 1 Hagg. Adm. 320; Spartali v. Benecke, 10 C. B. 223.

McCaffrey has a lien by virtue of the common law and the maritime law, only in case he has possession.

4,885 Bags of Linseed, 1 Black, 112, sub nom. Sears v. Wills, 17 L. ed. 37; The Ed- dy, 5 Wall. 481, sub nom. Mordecai v. Lind- say, 18 L. ed. 486.

But it must clearly appear that there was an intention to abandon the lien, before the courts will consider a delivery absolute and unconditional so as to divest the lien.

151 Tons of Coal, 4 Blatchf. 368, Fed. Cas. No. 10,520; Kimball v. The Anna Kimball, 2 Cliff. 15, Fed. Cas. No. 7,772; The Volun- teer, 1 Sumn. 551, Fed. Cas. No. 16,991; Certain Logs of Mohogany, 2 Sumn. 589, Fed. Cas. No. 2,559; Webb v. Anderson, Taney, 518, Fed. Cas. No. 17,318.

The suit in this case is one strictly in per- sonam, with the bond which was voluntarily given to pay any indebtedness or lien that McCaffrey had on the raft, in place of the latter.

Johnson v. Chicago & P. Elevator Co. 119 U. S. 388, 30 L. ed. 477, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 254.

[640] *Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opin- ion of the court:

Defendants set up in their answers and in- sisted, both before the appellate court and the supreme court of Illinois, that, if plain- tiff had any lien upon the raft at all for his towage services, it was a maritime lien, en- forceable only in the district court of the United States as a court of admiralty. This is the only Federal question presented in the case.

By article 3, § 2, of the Constitution, the judicial power of the general government is declared to extend to "all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction;" and, by § 9 of the original judiciary act of 1789 (1 Stat. at L. 76, chap. 20), it was enacted "that the district courts shall have, exclusively of the courts of the several states, . . . exclu- sive original cognizance of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, . . . saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it." This language is substantially repeated in subdivi- sion 8 of Rev. Stat. § 563, wherein it is expressly stated that "such jurisdiction shall be exclusive, except in the particular cases where jurisdiction of such causes and seiz- ures is given to the circuit courts."

The scope of the admiralty jurisdiction under these clauses was considered in a number of cases, arising not long after the district courts were established, notably so in that of De Lovio v. Boit, 2 Gall. 398, Fed. Cas. No. 3776, wherein Mr. Justice Story brought his great learning to bear upon an exhaustive examination of all the prior au- thorities upon the subject both in England and in America.

But the exclusive character of that juris- diction was never called to the attention of this court until 1866, when the states had 177 U. S.

begun to enact statutes giving liens upon vessels for causes of action cognizable in ad- miralty, and authorizing suits in rem in the state courts for their enforcement. The va- lidity of these laws had been expressly ad- judicated in a number of cases in Ohio, Ala- bama, and California. The earliest case arising in this court was that of The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, sub nom. The Moses Taylor v. Hammons, 18 L. ed. 397, in which was considered a statute of California cre- ating a lien for the breach *of any contract [641] for the transportation of persons or prop- erty, and also providing that actions for such demands might be brought directly against the vessel. The act further provid- ed that the complaint should designate the vessel by name; that the summons should be served upon the master, or person in charge, the vessel attached, and, in case of judgment recovered by the plaintiff, sold by the sheriff. An action having been brought by a passenger before a justice of the peace of the city of San Francisco for failure to furnish him with proper and necessary food, water, and berths, the defense was inter- posed that the cause of action was one of which the courts of admiralty had exclusive jurisdiction. The case finally reached this court, where the defense was sustained, the court holding that the contract for the trans- portation of the plaintiff was a maritime contract; that the action against the steam- er by name, authorized by the statute of California, was a proceeding in the nature and with the incidents of a suit in admiralty. Upon this point Mr. Justice Field observed: "The distinguishing and characteristic fea- ture of such suit is that the vessel or thing proceeded against is itself seized and im- pleaded as the defendant, and is judged and sentenced accordingly. It is this dominion of the suit in admiralty over the vessel or thing itself which gives to the title made un- der its decrees validity against all the world. By the common-law process, whether of mesne attachment or execution, property is reached only through a personal defendant, and then only to the extent of his title. Un- der a sale, therefore, upon a judgment in a common-law proceeding, the title acquired can never be better than that possessed by the personal defendant. It is his title, and not the property itself, which is sold." The court also held that the statute of Califor- nia to the extent to which it authorized ac- tions in rem against vessels for causes of action cognizable in admiralty, invested her courts with admiralty jurisdiction, and to that extent was void.

At the same term arose the case of The Hine v. Trevor, 4 Wall. 555, 18 L. ed. 451, in which a statute of Iowa giving a lien for injuries to persons or property, and provid- ing a remedy in rem against the vessel, was held to be obnoxious to the exclusive juris- diction *of the Federal courts. Speaking of [642] the common-law remedy, saved by the stat- ute, Mr. Justice Miller observed: "But the remedy pursued in the Iowa courts in the case before us is in no sense a common-law remedy. It is a remedy partaking of all the 923 essential features of an admiralty proceeding in rem. The statute provides that the vessel may be sued and made defendant without proceeding against the owners, or even mentioning their names. That a writ may be issued and the vessel seized, on filing a petition similar in substance to a libel. That after a notice in the nature of a monition, the vessel may be condemned and an order made for her sale, if the liability is established for which she was sued. Such is the general character of the steamboat laws of the western states." The same principle was applied in the case of The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, sub nom. The Belfast v. Boon, 19 L. ed. 266, to a statute of Alabama under which contracts of affreightment were authorized to be enforced in rem in the state courts by proceedings the same in form as those used in the courts of admiralty. This was also held to be unconstitutional.

The principle of these cases was restated in The Lottawanna, 21 Wall. 558, 579, sub nom. Rodd v. Heartt, 22 L. ed. 654, 663, although the question settled by that case was that materialmen furnishing repairs and supplies to a vessel in her home port do not acquire thereby a lien upon the vessel by the general maritime law. To the same effect is The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 37 L. ed. 345, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498, in which a lien by a state law for such repairs and supplies was given precedence of a prior mortgage. Finally, in the case of The Glide, 167 U. S. 606, 42 L. ed. 296, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 930, it was held that the enforcement of such a lien upon a vessel, created by a statute of Massachusetts, for repairs and supplies in her home port, for which a remedy in personam may be had in admiralty, was exclusively within the admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and that the statute of Massachusetts, to the extent that it provided for a proceeding in rem, and for a sale of the vessel, was unconstitutional and void. See also Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 38 L. ed. 981, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019.

The rule to be deduced from these cases, so far as they are pertinent to the one under consideration, is this: That wherever any lien is given by a state statute for a cause of action cognizable in admiralty, either [643] in rem or in personam, proceedings in rem* to enforce such lien are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the admiralty courts.

But the converse of this proposition is equally true, that if a lien upon a vessel be created for a claim over which a court of admiralty has no jurisdiction in any form, such lien may be enforced in the courts of the state. Thus, as the admiralty jurisdiction does not extend to a contract for building a vessel, or to work done or materials furnished in its construction,—The Jefferson (People's Ferry Co. v. Beers), 20 How. 393, 15 L. ed. 961; The Capitol (Roach v. Chapman), 22 How. 129, 16 L. ed. 294,—we held in Edwards v. Elliott, 21 Wall. 532, 22 L. ed. 487, that, in respect to such contracts, it was competent for the states to enact such laws as their legislatures might deem just and expedient, and to provide for their enforcement in rem. The same principle was applied in Johnson v. Chicago & P. Elevator Co. 119 U. S. 388, 30 L. ed. 447, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 254, to a statute of Illinois giving a lien upon a vessel for "damage done to a building abutting on the water, upon the ground that the court had previously held that there was no jurisdiction in admiralty for damage done by a ship to a structure affixed to the land. The Plymouth, 3 Wall. 20, sub nom. Hough v. Western Transp. Co. 18 L. ed. 125; Ex parte Phenix Ins. Co. 118 U. S. 610, 30 L. ed. 274, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 25. There was really another sound reason for the decision in the fact that the suit was in personam, with an attachment given upon the property of the defendant, which, as we shall see hereafter, is quite a different case from a proceeding in rem.

To establish the proposition that the proceeding in this case was an invasion of the exclusive jurisdiction of the admiralty courts defendants are bound to show, first, that the contract to tow a raft is a maritime contract; second, that the proceeding taken was a suit in rem within the cases above cited, and not within the exception of a common-law remedy, which § 563 was never designed to forestall.

The first of these conditions may be readily admitted. That a contract to tow another vessel is a maritime contract is too clear for argument, and there is no distinction in principle between a vessel and a raft. Whether the performance of such a contract gives rise to a lien upon the raft for the towage bill admits of more doubt; indeed, the authorities, as to how far a raft is within the jurisdiction of admiralty, are in hopeless confusion, *but for the purposes of this [644] case we may admit that such lien exists. But, if existing, it would not oust or supplant the common-law lien dependent upon possession.

The real question is whether the proceeding taken is within the exception of "saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it." It was certainly not a common-law action, but a suit in equity. But it will be noticed that the reservation is not of an action at common law, but of a common-law remedy; and a remedy does not necessarily imply an action. A remedy is defined by Bouvier as "the means employed to enforce a right, or redress an injury." While, as stated by him, remedies for non-fulfilment of contracts are generally by action, they are by no means universally so. Thus, a landlord has at common law a remedy by distress for his rent—a right also given to him for the purpose of exacting compensation for damages resulting from the trespass of cattle. A bailee of property has a remedy for work done upon such property, or for expenses incurred in keeping it, by detention of possession. An innkeeper has a similar remedy upon the goods of his guests to the amount of his charges for their entertainment; and a carrier has a like lien upon the thing carried. There is also a common-law remedy for nuisances by abatement; a right upon the part of a person assaulted to resist the assailant, even to his death; a right of recaption of goods stolen or unlawfully taken, and a public right against disturbers of the peace by compelling them to give sureties for their good behavior. All these remedies are independent of an action.

Some of the cases already cited recognize the distinction between a common-law action and a common-law remedy. Thus, in The Moses Taylor, 4 Wall. 411, 431, sub nom. The Moses Taylor v. Hammons, 18 L. ed. 397, 402, it is said of the saving clause of the judiciary act: "It is not a remedy in the common-law courts which is saved, but a common-law remedy." To same effect is Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 276, 38 L. ed. 981, 987, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019.

[645] In the case under consideration the remedy chosen by the plaintiff was the detention of the raft for his towage charges. That a carrier has a lien for his charges upon the thing carried, and may retain possession of such thing until such charges are *paid, is too clear for argument. We know of no reason why this principle is not applicable to property towed as well as to property carried. While the duties of a tug to its tow are not the duties of a common carrier, it would seem that his remedy for his charges is the same, provided that the property towed be of a nature admitting of the retention of possession by the owner of the tug. But whatever might be our own opinion upon the subject, the supreme court of Illinois, having held that under the laws of that state the plaintiff had a possessory lien upon this raft, that such lien extended to so much of the raft as was retained in his possession, for the entire bill, and that under the facts of this case plaintiff did have possession of the half raft until he surrendered it under order of the court for its release upon bond given, we should defer to the opinion of that court in these particulars as they are local questions dependent upon the law of the particular state.

Whether a bill in equity will lie to enforce a possessory lien may admit of some doubt, and the authorities are by no means harmonious. That a person having a lien upon chattels has no right himself to sell such chattels in the discharge of his lien is well settled (Doane v. Russell, 3 Gray, 382; Jones v. Pearle, 1 Strange, 557; Lickbarrow v. Mason, 6 East, 21, note; Briggs v. Boston & L. R. Co. 6 Allen, 246, 83 Am. Dec. 626; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herndon, 81 Ill. 143; Hunt v. Haskell, 24 Me. 339, 41 Am. Dec. 387); and in the case of the Thames Iron Works Co. v. Patent Derrick Co. 1 Johns. & H. 93, it was held by Vice Chancellor Wood that ship builders, having a lien upon the ship built by them according to the contract for the purchase money, could not enforce their lien by sale. But in some jurisdictions, and notably so in Illinois, it is held that liens for the enforcement of which there is no special statutory provision are enforceable in equity. Black v. Brennan, 5 Dana, 310; Charter v. Stevens, 3 Denio, 33, 177 U. S.

45 Am. Dec. 444; Dupuy v. Gibson, 36 Ill. 197; Cushman v. Hayes, 46 Ill. 145; Cairo & V. R. Co. v. Fackney, 78 Ill. 116; Bar-chard v. Kohn, 157 Ill. 579, 29 L. R. A. 803, 41 N. E. 902. Such being the practice in Illinois, we recognize it as expressive of the local law. There were circumstances in this case which appealed with peculiar force to the discretion of a court of equity. The defendant disputed McCaffrey's lien and right of possession to the raft, and announced its intention of towing it to St. Louis itself. It was in a position where it might have been taken away by a superior force, unless the plaintiff incurred the expense of employing a gang of men to watch it. Under such circumstances it was not only natural, but just, that he should have applied to a court of equity for relief in the enforcement of his common-law remedy.

We have held in several cases that analogous proceedings were no infringement upon the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the Federal courts. Thus, in Leon v. Galceran, 11 Wall. 185, 20 L. ed. 74, three sailors brought suits in a state court against the owner of a schooner to recover their wages, and had the schooner, which was subject to a lien or privilege in their favor, according to the laws of Louisiana, similar in some respects to the principles of the maritime law, sequestered by the sheriff of the parish. The writ was levied upon the schooner, which was afterwards released upon a forthcoming bond. This was held to be an ordinary suit in personam with an auxiliary attachment of the property of the defendant, and no infringement upon the admiralty jurisdiction. Said Mr. Justice Clifford: "They brought their suits in the state courts against the owner of the schooner, as they had a right to do, and, having obtained judgment against the defendant, they might levy their execution upon any property belonging to him, not exempted from taxes or execution, which was situated in that jurisdiction."

In American S. B. Co. v. Chase, 16 Wall. 522, 21 L. ed. 369, a steamboat owned by the company ran over a sail boat containing the plaintiff's intestate, and killed him. His administrator brought suit against the company in a state court of Rhode Island, under an act making common carriers responsible for deaths occasioned by their negligence, and providing that the damages be recovered in an action on the case. Defendant took the position that the saving clause must be limited to such causes of action as were known to the common law at the time of the passage of the judiciary act, and as the common law gave no remedy for negligence resulting in death, an action subsequently given by the statute was not a common-law remedy. The contention was *held to be un- [647] sound. So, also, in Schoonmaker v. Gilmore, 102 U. S. 118, 26 L. ed. 95, it was held that courts of admiralty had no exclusive jurisdiction of suits in personam growing out of collisions.

In the case already cited of Johnson v. Chicago & P. Elevator Co. 119 U. S. 388, 30

L. ed. 447, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 254, a petition was filed by the elevator company against the owner of a tugboat for injuries done by the jibboom of a schooner in tow of the tug to the wall of plaintiff's warehouse. The petition prayed for a writ of attachment against the defendant, commanding the sheriff to attach the tug, summon the defendant to appear, and for a decree subjecting the tug to a lien for such damages. The statute under which the proceedings were instituted gave a lien for all damages arising from injuries done to persons or property by such water craft. It was held that the damage having been done upon the land, there was no jurisdiction in admiralty, and that the suit was in personam with an attachment as security, the attachment being based upon a lien given by the state statute. Said the court: "There being no lien on the tug by the maritime law for the injury on land inflicted in this case, the state could create such a lien therefor as it deemed expedient, and could enact reasonable rules for its enforcement, not amounting to a regulation of commerce." It would seem that even if the suit had been in rem against the vessel, it would have been sustained, as the injury was not one for which an action would have lain in admiralty.

In the case under consideration the suit was clearly one in personam to enforce a common-law remedy. It was no more a suit in rem than the ordinary foreclosure of a mortgage. The bill prayed for process against the several defendants; that they be required to answer the bill; that plaintiff be decreed to have a first lien upon the raft for the amount due him; that the defendants be decreed to pay such amount, that in default of such payment the raft be sold to satisfy the same; and, that in case of such sale the purchaser have an absolute title, free from all equity of redemption and all claims of the defendants, and that they be debarred, etc. This is the ordinary prayer of a foreclosure bill. The decree of the appellate court reversed that of the circuit court, and directed [648] a recovery of a specified *amount. It resembles a decree in rem only in the fact that the property covered by the lien was ordered to be sold. Such sale, however, would pass the property subject to prior liens, while a sale in rem in admiralty is a complete divestiture of such liens, and carries a free and unencumbered title to the property, the holders of such liens being remitted to the funds in the registry which are substituted for the vessel. The Helena, 4 C. Rob. 3.

The true distinction between such proceedings as are and such as are not invasions of the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction is this: If the cause of action be one cognizable in admiralty, and the suit be in rem against the thing itself, though a monition be also issued to the owner, the proceeding is essentially one in admiralty. If, upon the other hand, the cause of action be not one of which a court of admiralty has jurisdiction, or if the suit be in personam against an individual defendant, with an auxiliary attachment against a particular thing, or against the property of the defendant in general, it is essentially a proceeding according to the course of the common law, and within the saving clause of the statute (§ 563) of a common-law remedy. The suit in this case being one in equity to enforce a common-law remedy, the state courts were correct in assuming jurisdiction.

926

The decree of the Supreme Court of Illinois is therefore affirmed.

*JAMES BRYAR, JR., et al., Appts., [649]
v.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 649-655.)

Appeal—in bankruptcy—delay in taking—objection made too late—res judicata—jurisdiction of state court after decree in Federal court—equitable ejectment as affected by decree for conveyance.

1. An objection that an appeal in bankruptcy was not claimed and notice given within the time prescribed by the rules is made too late in the Supreme Court of the United States after a lapse of sixteen years, where it does not seem to have been called to the attention of the lower court, in which a motion was made to declare the appeal deserted.
2. A judgment rendered by a state court against plaintiff in an action of equitable ejectment, sustaining a defense based on title obtained through sales under mortgages, was not without jurisdiction because the plaintiff had obtained a prior decree in a Federal court against one of the ejectment defendants before the defense sustained by the state court had arisen, when this decree was not set up in the state court as a bar.
3. A suit in a Federal court, which the successful plaintiff abandoned pending appeal, in order to bring a new action in a state court, which was unsuccessful, cannot be resuscitated, after the lapse of sixteen years, for the purpose of defeating the action of the state court, in which the decree of the Federal court was not set up as a bar, and which sustained a defense arising after the Federal decree was rendered.

[No. 227.]

Argued April 12, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

APPEAL from a decree of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit affirming a decree of dismissal. Affirmed.

See same case below, 62 U. S. App. 435, 90 Fed. Rep. 690, 33 C. C. A. 236.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

*This was a suit in equity instituted in [649] the district court for the western district of Pennsylvania, April 30, 1877, by Jane Bryar against James Bryar, her husband, and Robert Arthurs, his assignee in bankruptcy, to enjoin the latter from partitioning or offering for sale an undivided half of 7 acres of land in the city of Pittsburgh, for which, as she alleged, a conveyance had been made by mistake to her husband, though she had paid the purchase money with her own individual funds. Notwithstanding the pendency of this bill the assignee proceeded to sell the land at assignee's sale to the defendant Thomas Campbell, subject to the two mortgages hereinafter mentioned. On August 15, 1878, Campbell was permitted to intervene and defend *the bill, the bill being amended by a new prayer that the defendants make, execute, and deliver to the plaintiff a deed for the property in question.

NOTE.—As to conclusiveness and effect of judgments as between Federal and state courts—see note to Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Morgan, 21 C. C. A. 478.

177 U. S.

[650] The case was heard upon pleadings and proofs, and on June 26, 1879, a decree was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, declaring her to be the equitable owner of the land in suit; that defendant Campbell was chargeable with notice of her rights, and was bound to convey according to the prayer of the bill. An appeal was immediately taken by Arthurs and Campbell to the circuit court, where the case was docketed August 30, 1879. Here the case rested, without further action, for sixteen years, and until December 20, 1895.

Meantime, however, and in February, 1880, Jane Bryar, and her husband in her right, began an action of ejectment in the court of common pleas of Allegheny county against Thomas Campbell, John W. Beckett, and William B. Rodgers, for the land in controversy, which resulted, May 19, 1881, in a verdict for the defendants, and a writ of error from the supreme court of Pennsylvania, which, on November 14, 1881, affirmed the judgment of the court of common pleas. 30 Pittsb. L. J. 12.

Nothing further appears to have been done until December 30, 1895, when Mrs. Bryar moved the circuit court for the western district of Pennsylvania for an order declaring the appeal of Thomas Campbell from the decree of the district court deserted, upon the ground that the appellants had failed to bring up the record from the district court, to pay the entry costs, or to prosecute their appeal to the next term of the circuit court. Campbell filed an answer to this motion, setting up his purchase of the land at assignee's sale, and stating that he had not prosecuted his appeal because he had purchased a mortgage made by James Bryar to Edward R. James, upon which mortgage the property had been sold to his attorney, William B. Rodgers, who had conveyed to him; that he went into possession of the land; that the petitioner and her husband had brought the action of ejectment against him above referred to, and a verdict had been rendered in favor of the defendants; that he believed the result of the ejectment case [651] made it unnecessary *for any further proceedings upon the appeal, and that he and his vendees had ever since been in undisputed possession of the land. The motion to dismiss the bill, or rather to declare the appeal deserted, was denied, and the death of the plaintiff Jane Bryar being suggested, it was 177 U. S.

ordered that her heirs at law, the appellants, be substituted as plaintiffs.

The appeal subsequently went to a hearing in the circuit court upon the former testimony, and new testimony put in by Campbell in support of his answer, and resulted in a reversal of the district court, and a dismissal of the bill. Plaintiffs appealed to the circuit court of appeals, which affirmed the decree of the circuit court (62 U. S. App. 435, 90 Fed. Rep. 690, 33 C. C. A. 236), whereupon plaintiffs appealed to this court.

Messrs. Lowrie C. Barton and Edward Campbell argued the cause and filed a brief for appellants.

Mr. W. B. Rodgers argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

Campbell, being pursued by Mrs. Bryar in the state court, had at least good reason to suppose that Mrs. Bryar had elected to desert her first suit. Therefore his omission to take further action in the appeal in the circuit court was excusable.

Grigsby v. Purcell, 99 U. S. 506, 25 L. ed. 354.

Abandonment of the bill by Mrs. Bryar is to be conclusively presumed as against her and her heirs, by reason of her and their long acquiescence and laches. Campbell was in possession. His title was declared by the supreme court to be a paramount title, and she or her heirs made no move to assert any claim under the decree for over fourteen years.

Waring v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 176 Pa. 172, 35 Atl. 106; Biddle v. Girard Nat. Bank, 109 Pa. 349.

Campbell was compelled to defend the ejectment suit instituted in the state court. He had no option in the matter. He could not set up as a defense the pendency of the bill in equity in the circuit court.

Smith v. Lathrop, 44 Pa. 326, 84 Am. Dec. 448; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 23 L. ed. 983, and cases cited.

*Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion [651] of the court:

Plaintiffs ask for a reversal of this decree upon the grounds, first, that the appeal from the district court to the circuit court in bankruptcy was not claimed and notice given to the clerk of the district court within the time prescribed by the rules; and, second, because it affirmed the decree of the circuit court upon its merits.

1. If there be anything in the defense that the appeal from the district court to the circuit court in the bankruptcy proceedings was not taken within the time prescribed by law, it comes too late. It is true that Rev. Stat. § 4981, declares that "no appeal shall be allowed in any case from the district to the circuit court, unless it is claimed, and notice given thereof to the clerk of the district court, to be entered with the record of the proceedings, and also to the assignee or creditor, as the case may be, or to the defeated party in equity, within ten days after the entry of the decree or decision appealed *from." It appears that the decree of the [652] district court was entered June 26, 1879, and that a petition for an appeal was addressed to the judge of the circuit court, the jurat to which was dated June 28, and on June 30 a bond for costs on appeal was filed. The appeal, however, to the circuit court was not allowed and filed until July 16, twenty days after the decree of the district court, and it does not appear that any notice was given to the clerk of the district court, or to the defeated party, as required by § 4981; but it further appears that the petition for appeal, the allowance thereof, a copy of the docket entries and a bond for costs were filed in the circuit court, August 30, 1879. Here the matter rested until December 20, 1895, when Mrs. Bryar, the prevailing party, moved the circuit court not to dismiss the appeal for the reason that it was not taken in time, but, stating that it had been "duly allowed," to obtain an order declaring it deserted, for the reason that the appellants had failed to bring up the record from the district court, pay the entry costs, or prosecute their appeal. This was apparently treated as a motion to dismiss, and was denied. After a lapse of sixteen years it is now too late to ask this court to hold that the appeal should have been dismissed for a reason which does not seem to have been called to the attention of the circuit court, when the original motion was made to declare the appeal deserted. If the plaintiffs in that case had intended to insist upon their rights under the decree, they should either have moved to dismiss the appeal within a reasonable time, or pressed it to a hearing in the circuit court, instead of abandoning it and bringing a new suit upon the same cause of action in the state court.

2. The case upon the merits depends upon the effect to be given to the judgment in favor of Campbell in the ejectment suit brought by Mrs. Bryar in the state court. Mrs. Bryar appears, for some unexplained reason, to have abandoned her original suit in the district court, notwithstanding the decree in her favor, and to have elected to begin an action in ejectment in the state court. To this action Campbell appears to have set up a new defense, which had accrued since the decree in the district court, arising upon two mortgages executed in 1874 by [653]*James Bryar, namely, one to Thomas McClintock for $3,000, the other to E. R. James for $2,000, which mortgages were, in 1878, foreclosed and judgment entered. In the opinion of the supreme court of the state it is stated that William R. Rodgers, one of the defendants in the ejectment action, as the attorney for Campbell, purchased the judgments obtained upon the mortgages, issued execution, sold the 7 acres at sheriff's sale, and bought the same for $50. A deed was made by the sheriff to Rodgers, who gave a memorandum to Campbell, stating that he would convey to anyone Campbell might wish, when requested so to do. It was not disputed that Rodgers bought and held in trust for Campbell whatever title he obtained by the sheriff's deed.

Upon this state of facts the court held that the mortgages were valid liens, and the fact that the mortgagees were entirely unaffected by any notice of the secret equity of Mrs. Bryar being undisputed, it necessarily followed that, whether Campbell had notice or not, he stood in their shoes when he purchased the title derived from them. "It is contended, however, that Campbell having bought at the assignee's sale, subject to these mortgages, was bound to pay them off, and when he did so they were extinguished. But unless he expressly or by necessary implication agreed to pay them, he was not bound to do so, and had an undoubted right to secure his own title by purchasing them and proceeding to perfect his title under them." It will be seen from this that Campbell did not rely upon his purchase at the assignee's sale, as to which the district court seems to have held that he had notice of Mrs. Bryar's equity in the premises, but upon the purchase of the rights of the mortgagees, who appear to have taken the mortgages, supposing the property to belong to James Bryar, in whose name it stood upon the record.
928

We are advised of no substantial reason why the judgment of the state court does not operate as res judicata in this case. The original suit in the district court was begun by Mrs. Bryar, one of the original plaintiffs in the ejectment suit, for the purpose of compelling the defendant Thomas Campbell to convey to her as the equitable owner thereof the premises now in dispute. *The ejectment [654] suit was begun by her and her husband, in her right, upon the same title against three defendants, one of whom was Campbell, to obtain possession of the same property. The action was brought by Mrs. Bryar upon her equitable title, a procedure allowable in the courts of Pennsylvania, where an equitable ejectment is the full equivalent of and substitute for a bill in equity. Peterman v. Huling, 31 Pa. 432; Winpenny v. Winpenny, 92 Pa. 440. Such procedure, though not authorized by the practice of the Federal courts, will be respected when the question arises upon the effect to be given the judgment. Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch, 481, 3 L. ed. 411; Miles v. Caldwell, 2 Wall. 36, 17 L. ed. 755; Faber v. Hovey, 117 Mass. 107, 19 Am. Rep. 398. While it appears from the opinion of the supreme court of the state that the decree of the district court was called to its attention, it was not set up as a bar to the ejectment in the state court for the obvious reason that Mrs. Bryar had abandoned it by bringing suit in the state court, and there was no object in pleading it, while Campbell did not plead it because it was adverse to him. It would seem, too, that under the practice in Pennsylvania a decree cannot be used as res judicata pending an appeal to a higher court. Souter v. Baymore, 7 Pa. 415, 47 Am. Dec. 518. He could not even plead the pendency of the former suit. Smith v. Lathrop, 44 Pa. 326, 84 Am. Dec. 448; Stanton v. Embrey, 93 U. S. 548, 554, 23 L. ed. 983, 984.

It is now contended that the existence of this prior decree ousted the jurisdiction of the state court. Indeed, the only object of Mrs. Bryar in endeavoring to have the appeal dismissed seems to have been to reinstate the original decree in her favor more effectually, and to insist that it was a final disposition of the matters in controversy between herself and Campbell. The question is whether, having abandoned the original decree for a new action in the state court in which she was defeated, her heirs can now claim that the original decree in the district court, though not set up as a bar by either party, and notwithstanding the appeal, can be resuscitated after a lapse of sixteen years for the purpose of defeating the action of the state court. To state this proposition is to answer it. The state court was at liberty to proceed to dispose of the [655] case upon the issues made by the parties, and as neither party saw fit to set up the former decree as a bar to the action, the state court was not bound to notice it. It did not affect in any way the jurisdiction of that court. In addition to this, however, Campbell relied upon a wholly different defense from that set up by him in the former suit, and one which had accrued to him after the decree in that court was rendered. Whether the decree, if properly pleaded, would have operated as a bar it is unnecessary to determine. As the same issues are presented here as were presented in the state court, it is entirely clear that they cannot be relitigated.

The judgment of the state court was conclusive upon these issues, and the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals to that effect was correct, and it is affirmed.

THE CARLOS F. ROSES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 655-691.)

Prize—ownership of cargo on enemy's vessel—burden of proof—pledge of bills of lading—secret liens or private engagements.

1. The presumption is that a cargo on an enemy vessel is enemy property.
2. A cargo shipped by neutral commission merchants on an enemy vessel, to an enemy port, though on a voyage commenced before war was declared, where the invoices state that the goods were shipped "to order for account and risk and by order of the parties noted below," who are, in addition to the consignor, the owners of the vessel and other subjects of the enemy, while the bills of lading state that the goods are taken "for account of whom it may concern," and there is no charter party, will be deemed to be the property of the consignees during the voyage, so as to be subject to capture,—especially when no claim to any part of the cargo is made by the consignor.
3. Evidence of enemy interest in a captured cargo, arising on the face of the documents, is not overcome in favor of neutral claimants in another country by proof that, before war was declared and during the voyage, they accepted drafts on security of the bills of lading and without any other indemnity than the proceeds of the cargo and the insurance thereon, by which the insurers were subrogated to their rights, where it appears that the claimants sent a part of the bills of lading to bankers at the port where the cargo was, and that these were received several months afterwards, without showing from whom they were then received, and that the claimants retained other bills of lading "pending the disposal of the cargo," but the evidence fails to show whether the insurance contemplated a war risk or why a portion of the bills of lading were retained by the claimants, and fails to set forth the relations, transactions, or correspondence existing and passing between the claimants and the enemy owners of the cargo.

4. The presumption as to ownership arising from a bill of lading may be explained or rebutted by other evidence showing where the real ownership lies.
5. A pledgee to whom a bill of lading is given as security gets the legal title to the goods, only if such is the intention of the parties, and that intention is open to explanation, even as against persons who may have innocently paid value for the bill.
6. The right of capture acts on the proprietary interest of the thing captured at the time of capture, and is not affected by the secret liens or private engagements of the parties.

[No. 243.]

Argued January 12, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida sustaining a claim to the proceeds of a captured cargo. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

*The Carlos F. Roses was a Spanish bark [656] of 499 tons, hailing from Barcelona, Spain, sailing under the Spanish flag, and officered and manned by Spaniards. She had been owned for many years by Pedro Roses Valenti, a citizen of Barcelona. Her last voyage began at Barcelona, whence she proceeded to Montevideo, Uruguay, with a cargo of wine and salt. All of the outward cargo was discharged at Montevideo, where the vessel took on a cargo consisting of jerked beef and garlic, to be delivered at Havana, Cuba, and sailed for the latter port on March 16, 1898. On May 17, when in the Bahama channel off Punta de Maternillos, Cuba, and on her course to Havana, she was captured by the United States cruiser New York, and sent to Key West in charge of a prize crew. The bark and her cargo were duly libeled May 20. All of the ship's papers were delivered to the prize commissioners, and the deposition of Maristany, her master, was taken in preparatorio. Kleinwort Sons & Company, of London, England, made claim to the cargo, consisting of a shipment of 110,256 kilos of jerked beef and 19,980 strings of garlic, and a further shipment of 165,384 kilos of jerked beef, alleging that they were its owners and that it was not lawful prize of war. In support of the claim the firm's agent in the United States filed a test affidavit made on information and belief. In this it was alleged that *Klein- [657] wort Sons & Company were merchants in London; that the members of the firm were subjects of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; that in February and March, 1898, the bark, being then in Montevideo, bound on a voyage to Havana, took on board a cargo of jerked beef and strings of garlic shipped by Pla Gibernau & Company, merchants of Montevideo, to be transported to the port of Havana, and there to be delivered to the order of the shippers according to the condition of certain bills of lading issued therefor by the bark to Pla Gibernau & Company; that the members of the firm of Gibernau & Company were citizens of the Argentine Republic; that the bark left Montevideo on March 16, and proceeded on her voyage to Havana, until May 17, when, being at a point in the Bahama channel off Martinique, she was captured by the United States cruiser New York, without resistance on her part, and sent into Key West as prize of war; that after the shipment of the cargo in Montevideo claimants made advances to the shippers and owners of the cargo in the sum of £6,297, British sterling, to wit, £2,714 item thereof, upon the security of said lot of 110,256 kilos of jerked beef and 19,980 strings of garlic, and £3,583 item thereof, upon the security of said lot of 165,384 kilos of jerked beef; that at the time of making said advances, and in consideration thereof, bills of lading covering the shipments were delivered to claimants duly indorsed in blank, with the intent and purpose that they should thereby take title to said bills of lading and to said shipments of jerked beef and garlic, and should, on the arrival of the vessel at her destination, take delivery of the shipments and hold the same as security for their said advances until paid, and with the right to dispose of said shipments and to apply the proceeds to the payment of their said advances; and accordingly the said Kleinwort Sons & Company did become, and ever since have been and still are as aforesaid, the true and lawful owners of the said bills of lading and of the shipments of jerked beef and garlic therein referred to. The affidavits further stated that the advances were equivalent in money of the United States to about $30,644.35, and that no part of the same had been paid, or otherwise secured to be paid.

[658] *The cause was heard on the libel and claims of the master of the bark and Kleinwort & Company, and the evidence taken in preparatorio. The vessel was condemned as enemy property, and the court ordered the claimants of the cargo to "have sixty days in which to file further proof of ownership;" and because of its perishable nature the marshal of the court was ordered to advertise and sell the same, and deposit the proceeds in accordance to law. No appeal was taken on behalf of the vessel. The cargo was sold and the proceeds deposited with the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, subject to the order of the court. The time for claimants to take further proofs was twice extended. No witnesses were produced by claimants, but Charles F. Harcke, claimants' manager in London, made three ex parte affidavits before the United States consul general, which were offered in evidence by claimants. Appended to the affidavits were a large number of exhibits purporting to be papers, or copies of papers, relating to the shipment of the cargo, and some of the financial transactions of some of those who had to do with it. From these affidavits and papers it appeared that the voyage of the Carlos F. Roses was a joint venture entered into by Pedro Pagés, of Havana, a Spanish subject, the Spanish owners of the vessel, and Gibernau & Company. The whole cargo was made up of two shipments, one of jerked beef and one of garlic, which had been purchased by Gibernau & Company on commission, and by them delivered to the Carlos F. Roses "consigned to order for account and risk and by order of the parties noted" in the invoices. The shipment of jerked beef containing 275,640 kilos in bulk was divided thus: 60%, 165,384 kilos, "to the expedition or voyage of the Carlos F. Roses;" 40%, 110,256 kilos, "to Mr. Pedro Pagés, of Havana." The shipment of garlic was divided thus: 9,990 strings, "account of Mr. Pedro Pagés," and 9,990 strings for "account of" Gibernau & Company. Both invoices were signed by Gibernau & Company, and bore date March 11 and 12, 1898.

Harcke stated in one of his affidavits that "the said cargo was ultimately destined for Don Pedro Pagés, of Havana, who in the ordinary course of business would, by payment to or indemnification *of Kleinwort Sons & Co., or their agents in that behalf, take up the said bills of lading and thus be enabled thereon to take the goods. No payment whatever has been made to Messieurs Kleinwort Sons & Co., or their agents, on account of the payments made by them through the said advances by said Don Pedro Pagés, or by any person on his behalf, or otherwise, and the said Kleinwort Sons & Co. have been and are wholly unindemnified in respect of their said payments, except so far as the proceeds of the said cargo and the insurance thereon which as the owners of the said goods they have become entitled to collect, thereby subrogating to their own right, to the extent of such payments, the insurers of the said goods."

The ship's manifest appears to have been signed by Maristany, her master, at Montevideo, on March 15, 1898, and was viséd by the Spanish consul at that port the previous day. It described the ship's destination as Havana, and her cargo as made up of two lots of jerked beef containing 248,076 kilos and 29,970 kilos respectively, and one lot of garlic containing 19,980 strings, all shipped by Gibernau & Company, "to order." On March 14, Maristany issued three bills of lading, in which it was stated that the shipments were received from Gibernau & Company for transportation to Havana "for account and at the risk of whom it may concern," one of the bills covering a shipment of 165,384 kilos of jerked beef, another of 110,256 kilos of jerked beef, and the third of 19,980 bunches of garlic.

March 15, Gibernau & Company drew this bill of exchange:

No. 128. Montevideo, March 15, 1898. For £2,714 13 8. Ninety days after sight you will please pay for this first of exchange (the second and third being unpaid), to the order of the London River Plate Bank, L'd, the sum of £2,714 13 8, value received, which you will charge to the account of Pedro Pagés, of Havana, as per advice.

Pla Gibernau & Co.

To Messrs. Kleinwort Sons & Co., London.

On the same day, Maristany drew this bill of exchange:

[660] No. 129. Montevideo, March 15, 1898. For £3,583 11 6. *Ninety days after sight you will please pay for this first of exchange (the second and third being unpaid), to the order of Pla Gibernau & Co. the sum of £3,583 11 6, invoice value of jerked beef, per Carlos F. Roses, which you will charge to the account of P. Roses Valenti, of Barcelona, as per advice.

Ysidro Bertran Maristany.

To Messrs. Kleinwort Sons & Co., London.

This was indorsed by Gibernau & Company.

Valenti was the managing owner of the Carlos F. Roses. Both bills of exchange passed through the London River Plate Bank, L't'd, at Montevideo. On April 6 they were accepted by Kleinwort Sons & Company, and on May 9 were paid under discount by that firm. Harche alleged that at the time of the acceptance of these bills of exchange, bills of lading covering the shipments of the garlic, and the jerked beef shipped for account and by order of Pagés indorsed in blank by Gibernau & Company, were delivered to claimants as security for the payment of the bills of exchange; and that thereafter the bill of lading covering the shipment of jerked beef made for the account and by the order of the Carlos F. Roses was delivered in like manner, but affiant did not state when. It was also alleged that on April 9 the bills of lading and invoices covering the shipment of garlic and Pagés' share of the jerked beef were mailed by Kleinwort Sons & Company to Gelak & Company, bankers of Havana, to be held until the bills of exchange charged to the account of Pagés should be paid. Neither the instructions sent to Gelak & Company, nor a copy of them, was produced. Harche further alleged that the bills of lading and the invoices covering the vessel's share of the shipment of jerked beef were retained by Kleinwort Sons & Company "pending the disposal of the said cargo." On May 17, the day of the capture, Kleinwort Sons & Company cabled Gelak & Company requesting them to return the bills of lading and invoices which had been forwarded on April 9. June 9, Gelak & Company replied that the bills and invoices had not been received. On 177 U. S.

October 21 claimants produced these bills of lading, alleging that they had been received from Gelak & *Company on October 18, and [661] that neither Pagés, Gibernau & Company, nor the owners of the Carlos F. Roses had paid claimants anything for or on account of their acceptance and payment of the bills of exchange. The cause of the cargo was heard a second time on the claim, test affidavit, and Harche's affidavits, and a decree was entered for the payment to claimants of the proceeds of sale; from which decree the United States took this appeal.

Mr. James H. Hayden and Assistant Attorney General Hoyt argued the cause and, with Mr. Joseph K. McCammon, filed a brief for the United States and the captors:

The court having ordered further proofs, the burden of proving their ownership and the neutral character of the goods, by clear and positive evidence and beyond a reasonable doubt, rested upon the claimants.

The London Packet, 5 Wheat. 132, 5 L. ed. 52; La Amistad De Rues, 5 Wheat. 385, 5 L. ed. 115; The Amiable Isabella, 6 Wheat. 1, 77, 5 L. ed. 191, 209; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. 283, 5 L. ed. 454; The Sally Magee, 3 Wall. 451, sub nom. Fry v. United States, 18 L. ed. 197; The Jenny, 5 Wall. 183, sub nom. United States v. The Jenny, 18 L. ed. 693.

The portion of the cargo consigned to Gibernau & Co. was the only part of the cargo having color of neutrality. Gibernau & Co. did not claim it; therefore it should have been decreed good prize.

The Adeline, 9 Cranch, 244, 3 L. ed. 719; The Harrison, 1 Wheat. 298, 4 L. ed. 95; The Staadt Embden, 1 C. Rob. 26; 3 Greenleaf, Ev. § 443.

Capture as prize of war jure belli overrides all previous liens.

The Mary and Susan, 1 Wheat. 25, 4 L. ed. 27; The Frances, 8 Cranch, 418, 3 L. ed. 609; The Hampton, 5 Wall. 372, sub nom. The Hampton v. United States, 18 L. ed. 659; The Battle, 6 Wall. 498, sub nom. The Battle v. United States, 18 L. ed. 933.

Mr. Wilhelmus Mynderse argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee:

A transfer made by an enemy prior to the outbreak of hostilities, in respect of goods in transit, is valid.

The Vrouw Margaretha, 1 C. Rob. 336; The Ann Green, 1 Gall. 274, Fed. Cas. No. 414; 2 Halleck's Internat. Law, 3d ed. p. 91; Hall, Internat. Law, p. 526; Wheaton, Internat. Law, p. 485.

A cargo afloat is incapable of manual delivery, and title passes by the delivery of a symbol,—the bill of lading,—with any usual indicia of ownership in the way of indorsement.

Dows v. Greene, 24 N. Y. 638; Anderson v. Clark, 2 Bing. 20; Glyn v. East & West India Docks Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 480; Barber v. Meyerstein, L. R. 4 H. L. Cas. 325; Lickbarrow v. Mason, 5 T. R. 683.

The entire issue of each set of bills of lading was possessed by Kleinwort Sons & Co., under indorsements which gave to them, and to them alone, the right of demanding delivery from the vessel.

Anderson v. Clark, 2 Bing. 20.

Liens for advances, when accompanied by possession or control of the property against which the advances are made, are recognized by the prize courts.

The St. Jozé Indiano, 1 Wheat. 208, 4 L. ed. 73; The Amy Warwick, 2 Sprague, 150, Fed. Cas. No. 343; 2 Black, 635, 17 L. ed. 459; The Winifred, Blatchf. Prize Cas. 33, Fed. Cas. No. 17,873; The Lynchburg, Blatchf. Prize Cas. 51, Fed. Cas. No. 8,637a.

[661] *Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The President's proclamation of April 26, 1898, declared the policy of the government in the conduct of the war would be to adhere to the rules of the Declaration of Paris therein set forth, one of them being thus expressed: "Neutral goods, not contraband of war, are not liable to confiscation under the enemy's flag."

The question is whether this cargo when captured was enemy property or not. The district court held that both the title and right of possession were in these neutral claimants at the time of the capture, "as evidenced by the indorsed bills of lading and the paid bills of exchange," and therefore entered the decree in claimants' favor. As the vessel was an enemy vessel the presumption was that the cargo was enemy's property, and this could only be overcome by clear and positive evidence to the contrary. The burden of proving ownership rested on claimants. The London Packet, 5 Wheat. 132, 5 L. ed. 52; The Sally Magee, 3 Wall. 451, sub nom. Fry v. United States, 18 L. ed. 197; The Benito Estenger, 176 U. S. 568, ante, 592, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489.

[662] Further proofs on claimants' behalf were ordered to be furnished within sixty days from June 2, and the time was enlarged to August 31, and again to October 15. The proofs tendered were three affidavits of claimants' manager sworn to September 27, October 12, and October 21, 1898, respectively, with accompanying papers. Such ex parte statements where further proofs have been ordered, though admitted without objection, are obviously open to criticism, but, without pausing to comment on these in that aspect, we inquire whether they satisfy the requirements of the law of prize in respect of the establishment of the neutral character of this cargo under the circumstances.

Gibernau & Company were citizens of a neutral state; they were evidently commission merchants, and in each invoice a charge for their commission on the shipment appears. The invoices expressly provided that the goods were shipped "to order for account and risk and by order of the parties noted below." The consignees noted below in the invoice of the jerked beef were the owners of the vessel, "the expedition or voyage of the Carlos F. Roses," and "Mr. Pedro Pagés, of Havana," all Spanish subjects. The con-signees of the garlic were "Mr. Pedro Pagés" and "the undersigned" that is, Gibernau & Company. There were three sets of bills of lading issued by the master to Gibernau & Company. One covered the portion of the shipment of jerked beef made for the account of the vessel; another, the portion of that shipment made for the account of Pagés; the third, the shipment of garlic made for the joint account of Pagés and Gibernau & Company. All the bills set forth that the goods were taken for the account and at the risk of whom it might concern. The ship's manifest was signed under date March 15, and the destination of the cargo was stated thus: "Shipped by Pla Gibernau & Co. To order." The visé of the consul of Spain, dated the day before, was: "Good for Havana, with a cargo of jerked beef and garlic." As the vessel had a share in the shipment of the jerked beef, and the consignees were named in the invoices, which set forth that the shipments were made by their orders for their account and at their risk, it would appear that the manifest was erroneous, and this and the fact that the bills of lading stated that the goods were taken "for account of whom it may concern," should be especially noted, since the reasonable inference is *that the consignees must have been known to the master. And it also should be observed that there was no charter party, which would have necessarily revealed the engagements of the vessel, but which naturally would not be entered into if the commercial venture was that of her owner. The general rule is that a consignor on delivering goods ordered, to a master of a ship, delivers them to him as the agent of the consignee, so that the property in them is vested in the latter from the moment of such delivery, though the rule may be departed from by agreement or by a particular trade custom whereby the goods are shipped as belonging to the consignor and on his account and risk. We think that on the face of the papers it must be concluded that when these goods were delivered to the vessel they became the property of the consignees named in the invoices. Hence the shipments of jerked beef must be regarded as owned by Pagés, or by him and the owners of the Carlos F. Roses. One half of the garlic belonged to Pagés, the remaining half was consigned to Gibernau & Company, and they did not claim and have not claimed it, nor was it asserted that Gibernau & Company retained the ownership of any part of the cargo after its delivery to the vessel. Property so long unclaimed may be treated as in any view good prize. The Adeline, 9 Cranch, 244, 3 L. ed. 719; The Harrison, 1 Wheat. 298, 4 L. ed. 95. In fact, claimants admit that the whole cargo "was ultimately destined for Don Pedro Pagés, of Havana." The bill of exchange drawn by Gibernau & Company named Kleinwort Sons & Company as acceptors, and directed them to charge the amount to the account of "Pedro Pagés, of Havana, as per advice." The bill drawn by Maristany also named Kleinwort Sons & Company as drawees, and directed them to charge the amount "to P. Roses Valenti, of Barcelona, as per advice." In neither of them was there any reference to the cargo, and, so far as appeared, the amounts were at once charged up to the persons named.

[664] Hareke said that when the bills of exchange were accepted by Kleinwort Sons & Company bills of lading covering the shipment of 110,256 kilos of jerked beef and of the garlie were delivered to them in consideration of the acceptance of the *draft for £2,714 13 8, and that bills of lading for the 165,384 kilos of jerked beef were afterwards delivered in consideration of the acceptance of the draft for £3,583 11 6. But the date of the latter delivery was not given, and it affirmatively appeared that whenever these bills of lading reached Kleinwort Sons & Company they were retained "pending the disposal of the cargo." Both drafts were accepted April 6, and the bills of lading for the 110,256 kilos of jerked beef and for the garlie were forwarded to Gelak & Company on April 9, but the bills for the 165,384 kilos of jerked beef, whenever received, never were. The instructions to Gelak & Company were not put in evidence, nor any of the correspondence with Valenti or Pagés. In June Gelak & Company cabled that the bills sent to them had not been received; in September they turned up, but no information was afforded as to how they came into Gelak & Company's possession; and in October duplicates were also received by claimants from Gelak & Company, with, so far as disclosed, no accompanying explanation. And Hareke's affidavits failed to set forth the relations, transactions, or correspondence existing and passing between claimants and the enemy owners of the cargo. This, although, as Sir William Scott said in The Magnus, 1 C. Rob. 31, "the correspondence of the parties, the orders for purchase, and the mode of payment would have been the points to which the court would have looked for satisfaction."

The affidavits alleged that claimants were wholly unindemnified except by the proceeds of the cargo and the insurance thereon, by which the insurers were subrogated to their own rights, but did not state whether the insurance contemplated a war risk, or why the bills of lading for the larger portion of the beef were retained by claimants and not sent to their Havana agents, or whether they retained them upon instructions from the enemy owners, or whether they came to claimants from Spain; nor did anything appear in respect of the interest of Pagés as consignee for himself, or in a representative capacity, nor of Valenti, the owner of the enemy vessel, who resided at Barcelona. The evidence of enemy interest arising on the face of the documents called on the asserted neutral owners to prove *beyond question their right and title. And still, for all that appears, the documents may have been sent merely to facilitate delivery to the agent of the enemy owners.

Bills of lading stand as the substitute and representative of the goods described therein, and, while quasi-negotiable instruments, are not negotiable in the full sense in which that term is applied to bills and notes. The transfer of the bill passes to the transferee the transferor's title to the goods described, and the presumption as to ownership arising from the bill may be explained or rebutted by other evidence showing where the real ownership lies. A pledgee to whom a bill of lading is given as security gets the legal title to the goods and the right of possession only if such is the intention of the parties, and that intention is open to explanation. Inquiry into the transaction in which the bill originated is not precluded because it came into the hands of persons who may have innocently paid value for it. Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 7, 26 L. ed. 998; Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co. 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. ed. 892.
177 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

Generally speaking, in the purchase and shipment of goods on bills of lading attached to bills of exchange drawn against them, the bill of exchange is drawn on the consignee and purchaser, and sent forward for collection through the banker at the place of shipment, who advances on the draft, and thereafter realizes on it through his correspondents, or by sale as exchange; or the banker at some other point, or at the general exchange center, may be the drawee of the bill of exchange instead of the consignee or real owner, the banker standing in the place of the owner in virtue of some arrangement with his customer or on the faith of a running account, the pledge of other securities, or the customer's personal liability, so that the draft may be charged up at once, and, at all events, the control of the goods is not the sole reliance of the banker.

In the case in hand, the captors succeeded to the enemy owners' rights and could have introduced evidence as to the real nature of the transactions, and so have rebutted any presumption in favor of the bankers as purchasers for value, and although they did not do this, the question still remains that in prize courts it is necessary for claimants to show the absence of anything *to impeach [666] the transaction, and at least to disclose fully all the surrounding circumstances. And this we think claimants have failed to do.

The right of capture acts on the proprietary interest of the thing captured at the time of the capture, and is not affected by the secret liens or private engagements of the parties. Hence the prize courts have rejected in its favor the lien of bottomry bonds, of mortgages, for supplies, and of bills of lading. The assignment of bills of lading transfers the jus ad rem, but not necessarily the jus in rem. The jus in re or in rem implies the absolute dominion,—the ownership independently of any particular relation with another person. The jus ad rem has for its foundation an obligation incurred by another. Sand. Inst. Just. Introd., xlvi.ii.; 2 Marcadé, Expl. du Code Napoléon, 350; 2 Bouvier (Rawle's Revision), 73; The Young Mechanic, 2 Curt. C. C. 404, Fed. Cas. No. 18,180.

Claimants did not obtain the jus in rem, and, according to the great weight of authority, the right of capture was superior.

In The Frances, 8 Cranch, 418, 3 L. ed. 609, a New York merchant claimed two shipments of goods, one in consequence of an advance made to enemy shippers by him in consideration of the consignment, and the other in virtue of a general balance of account due to him from the shippers as their factor. Both consignments were at the risk of the enemy shippers. The goods were condemned as enemy property, and the sentence was affirmed. This court said:

"The doctrine of liens seems to depend chiefly upon the rules of jurisprudence established in different countries. There is no doubt but that, agreeable to the principles of the common law of England, a factor has a lien upon goods of his principal in his possession, for the balance of account due to him; and so has a consignee for advances made by him to the consignor. . . . But this doctrine is unknown in prize courts unless in very peculiar cases, where the lien is imposed by a general law of the mercantile world, independent of any contract between the parties. Such is the case of freight upon enemies' goods seized in the vessel of a friend, which is always decreed to the owner of the vessel. . . . But in cases of liens created [667] by *the mere private contract of individuals, depending upon the different laws of different countries, the difficulties which an examination of such claims would impose upon the captors, and even upon the prize courts, in deciding upon them, and the door which such a doctrine would open to collusion between the enemy owners of the property and neutral claimants, have excluded such cases from the consideration of those courts. . . . The principal strength of the argument in favor of the claimant in this case seemed to be rested upon the position that the consignor in this case could not have countermanded the consignment after delivery of the goods to the master of the vessel, and hence it was inferred that the captor had no right to intercept the passage of the property to the consignee. This doctrine would be well founded if the goods had been sent to the claimant upon his account and risk, except in the case of insolvency. But when goods are sent upon the account and risk of the shipper, the delivery to the master is a delivery to him as agent of the shipper, not of the consignee; and it is competent to the consignor, at any time before actual delivery to the consignee, to countermand it, and thus to prevent his lien from attaching. Upon the whole, the court is of opinion that, upon the reason of the case, as well as upon authority, this claim cannot be supported, and that the sentence of the court below must be affirmed with costs."

In The Mary and Susan, 1 Wheat. 25, 4 L. ed. 27, an American merchantman bound from Liverpool to New York was captured by a privateer of the United States during the war of 1812. In her cargo were certain goods which had been shipped by British subjects to citizens of the United States, in pursuance of orders received before the declaration of war. Previous to the execution of the orders the shippers became embarrassed, and assigned the goods to certain bankers to secure advances made by them, with a request to the consignees to remit the amount to the bankers, who also repeated the same request, the invoices being for gain and risk of the consignees, and stating the goods to be then the property of the bankers, and it was held that the goods having been purchased and shipped in pursuance of orders from the consignees, the property was originally vested in them,*and was not divested by the intermediate assignment, which was merely intended to transfer the right to the debt due from the consignees. [668]

In The Hampton, 5 Wall. 372, sub nom. The Hampton v. United States, 18 L. ed. 659, the schooner Hampton and her cargo had been captured, libeled, and condemned as prize of war. The master of the vessel was her owner, but interposed no claim, nor did anyone claim the cargo. One Brinckley appeared and claimed the vessel as mortgagee. The bona fides of this mortgage was not disputed, nor that he was a loyal citizen. But his claim was dismissed, and, the case having been certified to this court, it was held that in proceedings in prize, and under the principles of international law, mortgages on vessels captured jure belli are to be treated only as liens subject to be overridden by the capture. Mr. Justice Miller said:

"The first ground on which appellant relies is that the mortgage, being a jus in re held by an innocent party, is something more than a mere lien, and is protected by the law of nations. The mortgagee was not in possession in this case, and the real owner who was in possession admits that his vessel was in delicto by failing to set up any claim for her. It would require pretty strong authority to induce us to import into the prize courts the strict common-law doctrine which is sometimes applied to the relation of a mortgagee to the property mortgaged. It is certainly much more in accordance with the liberal principles which govern admiralty courts to treat mortgages as the equity courts treat them, as mere securities for the debt for which they are given and therefore no more than a lien on the property conveyed. But it is unnecessary to examine this question minutely, because an obvious principle of necessity must forbid a prize court from recognizing the doctrine here contended for. If it were once admitted in these courts, there would be an end of all prize condemnations. As soon as a war was threatened, the owners of vessels and cargoes which might be so situated as to be subject to capture would only have to raise a sufficient sum of money on them, by bona fide mortgages, to indemnify them in case of such capture. If the vessel or cargo was seized the owner need not appear, because he would be indifferent, having the value of his property in his *hands [669] already. The mortgagee having an honest mortgage which he could establish in a court of prize would either have the property restored to him or get the amount of his mortgage out of the proceeds of the sale. The only risk run by enemy vessels or cargoes on the high seas, or by neutrals engaged in an effort to break a blockade, would be the costs and expenses of capture and condemnation, a risk too unimportant to be of any value to a belligerent in reducing his opponent to terms. A principle which thus abolishes the entire value of prize capture on the high seas, and deprives blockades of all dangers to parties disposed to break them, cannot be recognized as a rule of prize courts."

In The Battle, 6 Wall. 498, sub nom. The Battle v. United States, 18 L. ed. 933, the steamer Battle and cargo were captured on the high seas as prize of war, brought into port and condemned for breach of blockade and also as enemy property. Two claims were set up against the steamer in the court below, one for supplies, and another for materials furnished and for work and labor in building a cabin on the boat. These claims were dismissed and the decree affirmed by this court, Mr. Justice Nelson, delivering the opinion, saying: "The principle is too well settled, that capture as prize of war, jure belli, overrides all previous liens, to require examination."

Such is the rule in the British prize courts. The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218; The Marianna, 6 C. Rob. 24; The Ida, Spinks Prize Cas. 331.

The Tobago was a case of claim to a captured French vessel, made on behalf of a British merchant as the holder of a bottomry bond executed and delivered to him by the master of the ship before the commencement of hostilities between Great Britain and France. Sir William Scott said:

"The integrity of this transaction is not impeached, but I am called upon to consider whether the court can, consistently with the principles of law that govern its practice, afford relief. It is the case of a bottomry bond, given fairly in time of peace, without any view of infringing the rights of war, to relieve a ship in distress. . . . But can the court recognize bonds of this kind as titles of property, so as to give persons a right to stand in judgment, and demand restitution of such interests in *a court of prizes? . . . The person advancing money on bonds of this nature acquires, by that act, no property in the vessel; he acquires the jus in rem, but not the jus in re, until it has been converted and appropriated by the final process of a court of justice. . . . But it is that the captor takes cum onere, and, therefore, that this obligation would devolve upon him. That he is held to take cum onere is undoubtedly true, as a rule which is to be understood to apply where the onus is immediately and visibly incumbent upon it. A captor who takes the cargo of an enemy on board the ship of a friend, takes it liable to the freight due to the owner of the ship; because the owner of the ship has the cargo in his possession, subject to that demand by the general law, independent of all contract. . . . But it is a proposition of a much wider extent which affirms that a mere right of action is entitled to the same favorable consideration in its transfer from the neutral to a captor. It is very obvious that claims of such a nature may be so framed as that no powers belonging to this court can enable it to examine them with effect. They are private contracts, passing between parties who may have an interest in colluding; the captor has no access whatever to the original private understanding of the parties in forming such contracts, and it is therefore unfit that he should be affected by them. His rights of capture act upon the property, without regard to secret liens possessed by third parties. . . . I am of opinion that there is no instance in which the court has recognized bonds of this kind as titles of property, and that they are not entitled to be recognized as such in the prize court."

[670]

177 U. S.

In The Marianna the vessel had been sold at Buenos Ayres by American owners to a Spanish merchant; the purchase money, however, had not been paid in full, but was to be satisfied out of the proceeds of a quantity of tallow on board the vessel for sale, consigned to the agents of the American vendors at London. The vessel was seized on her voyage to England, documented as belonging to a Spanish merchant, and sailing under the flag and pass of Spain. The former American proprietors made claim to the cargo, but the claim was "disallowed because the claimants' interest was not sufficient to support it; and the court said:

[671]

"Captors are supposed to lay their hands on the gross tangible property, on which there may be many just claims outstanding between other parties which can have no operation as to them. If such a rule did not exist, it would be quite impossible for captors to know upon what grounds they were proceeding to make any seizure. The fairest and most credible documents, declaring the property to belong to the enemy, would only serve to mislead them, if such documents were liable to be overruled by liens which could not in any manner come to their knowledge. It would be equally impossible for the court, which has to decide upon the question of property, to admit such considerations. The doctrine of liens depends very much on the particular rules of jurisprudence which prevail in different countries. To decide judicially on such claims would require of the court a perfect knowledge of the law of covenant, and the application of that law in all countries, under all the diversities in which that law exists. From necessity, therefore, the court would be obliged to shut the door against such discussions, and to decide on the simple title of property with scarcely any exceptions. . . . As to the title of property in the goods, which are said to have been going as the funds out of which the payment for the ship was to have been made. That they were going for the payment of a debt will not alter the property. There must be something more. Even if bills of lading are delivered, that circumstance will not be sufficient, unless accompanied with an understanding that he who holds the bill of lading is to bear the risk of the goods as to the voyage, and as to the market to which they are consigned; otherwise, though the security may avail pro tanto, it cannot be held to work any change in the property."

[672] These cases were cited by Dr. Lushington in The Ida as settling the law. In that case claim was made by a neutral merchant to a cargo of coffee which had been consigned to him by an enemy on the credit of certain advances, as security for payment of which bills of lading covering the cargo had been delivered to him. But the court declined to recognize the lien, *and condemned the cargo as enemy property. Dr. Lushington referred to The San Jose Indiano, 2 Gall. 268, Fed. Cas. No. 12,322, and subscribed to what was there said by Mr. Justice Story, but thought his remarks inapplicable to the case in hand.

The case referred to was affirmed by this court. 1 Wheat. 208, 4 L. ed. 73. Goods were shipped by Dyson, Brothers, & Company, of Liverpool, on board a neutral ship bound to Rio de Janeiro, which was captured and brought into the United States for adjudication. The invoice was headed: "Consigned to Messrs. Dyson, Brothers, and Finnie, by order and for account of J. Lizaur." In a letter accompanying the bill of lading and invoice, Dyson, Brothers, & Company wrote Dyson, Brothers, and Finnie: "For Mr. Lizaur we open an account in our books here, and debit him, etc. We cannot yet ascertain the proceeds of his hides, etc., but find his order for goods will far exceed the amount of these shipments, therefore we consign the whole to you, that you may come to a proper understanding with him." The two houses consisted of the same persons. It was held that the goods were, during their transit, the property and at the risk of the enemy shippers, and therefore subject to condemnation. Lizaur's claim was rejected, although Dyson, Brothers, & Company had the proceeds of his hides in their hands.

The Lynchburg, Blatchf. Prize Cas. 57, Fed. Cas. No. 8,638, and The Amy Warwick, 2 Sprague, 150, Fed. Cas. No. 343, are cited on behalf of claimants, but, as we read them, they do not sustain their contention. The schooner Lynchburg with a cargo of coffee had been libeled during the Civil War as enemy property, and also for an attempt to violate blockade. Brown Brothers & Company, loyal citizens, intervened as claimants of 2,045 bags of coffee, part of the cargo. They alleged that they had made an advance of credit to Maxwell, Wright, & Company, neutral merchants of Rio de Janeiro, for the purchase of the coffee, under which credit Maxwell, Wright, & Company drew drafts on Brown Brothers & Company for £6,000, on the condition expressed therein that the coffee purchased by claimants should be held until their advances were reimbursed thereon. It was admitted by the United States

[673] attorney that 1,541 bags of the coffee *should be released to Brown Brothers & Company, and that was done. As to the remaining 504 bags embraced in the general claim of Brown Brothers & Company, in which Wortham & Co., of Virginia, asserted an interest, it was held by the court that as no proof was given by claimants that the value of the 1,541 bags restored to them was not equivalent to the sum of their advances used in purchasing the whole 2,045 bags, the reasonable presumption was that the restoration satisfied the entire advance. And Judge Betts said: "The claim to an absolute ownership of the 2,045 bags was placed before the court in the oral argument, and in the written points filed in the cause by the counsel for the claimants, upon the proposition of law that a bill of lading, transmitted to them by the shipper to cover advances, passed to them the title to the cargo purchased therewith. If this doctrine be correct as to mere commercial transactions, it does not prevail in prize courts, in derogation of the rights of captors, when the interest of the claimants is only a debt, although supported by liens equitable and tacit, or legal and positive, even of the character of bottomry bonds, when not signified on the ship's papers at the time of her capture. The Frances, 8 Cranch, 418, 3 L. ed. 609; The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218; The Marianna, 6 C. Rob. 24. Here, the vessel was enemy's bottom; the bill of lading consigned the cargo to order or assigns, at large, at an enemy's port, and, on the surrender of the principal portion of the consignment to the claimants, no other evidence was given in establishing the fact that the remainder of the shipment was owned by them, or yet stood under hypothecation to them on the bill of lading." The 504 bags were condemned. "because, by intendment of law, that portion belonged to Wortham & Co., and was not shown by the proofs to be exempt from capture as prize." [P. 51.]

In The Amy Warwick, J. L. Phipps & Company, of New York, British subjects, purchased 4,700 bags of coffee, part of the cargo of an enemy vessel, which they had purchased through Phipps Brothers & Co., their firm at Rio, with funds of an enemy firm, and £2,000 of their own money by draft on Phipps & Co., their firm at Liverpool. They took from the master *a bill of lading which [674] stated that Phipps Brothers & Company were the shippers of this coffee, and that it was to be delivered to their order. Indorsed on the bill of lading was a statement declaring that a portion of the coffee was the property of British subjects. Phipps Brothers & Company indorsed the bill of lading over to J. L. Phipps & Co. They also delivered to the master another part of the bill of lading, an invoice of the coffee, and a letter of advice to be conveyed to the firm in New York. This letter stated that the coffee was shipped for account of merchants at Richmond, Virginia, and that a bill of lading would have been sent to them had it not been deemed advisable by reason of the unsettled state of political affairs, for the better protection of the property, and to prevent privateers from molesting the vessel, to have it certified on the bill of lading that a portion of the coffee was British property, and that this referred to the portion against which they had valued on Liverpool. It was held that the facts led plainly to the conclusion that claimants ought to be repaid the amount they had expended from their own funds in the purchase of the coffee and that the residue of the proceeds should be condemned. It was said that as the coffee was purchased at Rio by the claimants, and shipped by them on board the vessel under a bill of lading by which the master was bound to deliver it to their order, and they ordered it to be delivered to J. L. Phipps & Co., that is, to themselves, they were the legal owners of the property, and could hardly be said to have a lien upon it. Their real character was that of trustees holding the legal title and possession with a right of retention until their advances should be paid. The doctrine of liens was considered, and The Franees, The Tobago, The Mariana, and other cases examined. Judge Sprague was of opinion that the rule in such cases ought not to be that which stops at the mere legal title, but that which ascertains and deals with the real beneficial interest, "for, if the court were never to look beyond the legal title, the result would be that when such title is held by an enemy in trust for a neutral, the latter loses his whole property; but, when the legal title is in a neutral in trust for an enemy, the property is restored [675] to the neutral, not for his benefit, but *merely as a conduit through which it is to be conveyed to the enemy. To refuse to look beyond the legal title is to close our eyes for the benefit of the enemy. It would enable him always to protect his property by simply putting it in the name of a neutral trustee." [2 Sprague, 158, Fed. Cas. No. 343.]

We agree with counsel for the United States that notwithstanding the indorsement of Gibernau & Company on the bills of lading, the proof of a neutral title was not sufficient. Even if when the neutral interest is adequately proved to be bona fide, the claim of the captors may be required to yield, yet in this case the belligerent right overrides the neutral claim, which must be regarded merely as a debt, and the assignment as a cover to an enemy interest.

Something was said in argument in relation to the character of the cargo. It is true that, by the modern law of nations, provisions, while not generally deemed contraband, may become so, although belonging to a neutral, on account of the particular situation of the war, or on account of their destination, as, if destined for military use, for the army or navy of the enemy, or parts of naval or military equipment. The Benito Estenger, 176 U. S. 568, ante, 592, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 489; The Panama, 176 U. S. 535, ante, 577, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 480; The Peterhoff, 5 Wall. 28, sub nom. The Peterhoff v. United States, 18 L. ed. 564; Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, lib. III., chap. 1, § 5; Hall, § 236.

Doubtless, in this instance, the concentration and accumulation of provisions at Havana might fairly be considered a necessary part of Spanish military operations, imminente bello, and these particular provisions were perhaps especially appropriate for Spanish military use; but while these features may well enough be adverted to in 177 U. S.

connection with all the other facts and circumstances, we do not place our decision upon them.

We are of opinion that a valid transfer of title to this enemy property to claimants was not satisfactorily made out, and that the decree below must be reversed, and a decree of condemnation directed to be entered, and it is so ordered.

*Mr. Justice Shiras dissenting:

[676]

This is an appeal from a decree of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Florida, awarding to Kleinwort Sons & Company, the claimants, the proceeds of the sale of the cargo of the Spanish bark Carlos F. Roses.

The vessel sailed under the Spanish flag, and was owned, officered, and manned by Spaniards. On or about March 14, 1898, Pla Gibernau & Company, a firm of commission merchants doing business at Montevideo, in the Republic of Uruguay, shipped on board the bark, then lying at Montevideo, a cargo consisting of about 275,000 kilos of jerked beef and 20,000 strings of garlic. The property was consigned upon three bills of lading to the order of the shippers; and two bills of exchange, at ninety days, were drawn upon the claimants, Kleinwort Sons & Company, British subjects, domiciled and doing business as bankers at London, England. One of these bills, for £2,714 3 8, was drawn by Pla Gibernau & Company to the order of the London & River Plate Bank, Limited, a banking concern doing business in Montevideo; the other, for £3,583 11 6, was drawn by the master of the Carlos F. Roses to the order of Pla Gibernau & Company, and was by them indorsed to the order of the London & River Plate Bank, Limited.

The bills of exchange and the bills of lading came that day, March 15, 1898, into the possession of the London & River Plate Bank, which cashed the drafts, and forwarded them for acceptance to Kleinwort Sons & Company at London, who accepted them on April 6, 1898, and paid them when due. At the time these bills of exchange were accepted the bills of lading, indorsed by Pla Gibernau & Company, came into the possession of the claimants.

The vessel sailed from Montevideo for Havana on March 16, 1898. On April 25, 1898, war between Spain and the United States was declared, and on May 17, when in the Bahama channel, on her course to Havana, the Carlos F. Roses was captured by a war vessel of the United States, and sent in charge of a prize crew to Key West.

*On June 2, 1898, the district court con-[677] demned the vessel as enemy's property, seized upon the high seas. On February 9, 1899, the district court held that, as it satisfactorily appeared from the proof that both the title and the right of possession to the cargo were in a neutral at the time of the capture, as evidenced by the indorsed bills of lading and the paid bills of exchange presented at the hearing, the claim should be allowed, and it was so ordered. Thereupon the United States took this appeal.

It is admitted that, if the cargo in question belonged to a neutral, and was not contraband of war, it was not liable to confiscation, though found in an enemy's vessel; this upon well-established principles of international law, and as within the President's proclamation of April 26, 1898, expressly declaring that "neutral goods, not contraband of war, are not liable to confiscation under the enemy's flag."

It can scarcely be pretended that, in this instance, the cargo consisted of articles contraband of war. They were the ordinary products of the Republic of Uruguay, a country with which the United States were at peace, and were purchased and shipped six weeks before war was declared. Little, if anything, is left for the commerce of neutrals if such goods, shipped in such circumstances, are not within the protection of the President's proclamation.

The question is whether the district court erred in finding that the goods in question were neutral goods and exempt, as such, from condemnation.

The first contention, on behalf of the United States, is that the affidavits and exhibits relied on by the claimants to prove their title were not competent evidence, and it is urged that the evidence should have been in the form of depositions, taken under a commission, and of documents duly proved.

We think it is a sufficient reply to this objection that the proofs were received and considered by the district court upon the trial entirely without objection on the part of the United States or the captors; and that the action of the court in receiving the evidence was not among the assignments of error made and filed under the appeal.

[678] *"If, however, evidence in the nature of further proof be introduced, and no formal order or objection appear on the record, it must be presumed to have been done by consent of parties, and the irregularity is completely waived. In the present case, no exception was taken to the proceedings or evidence in the district court; and we should not, therefore, incline to reject the further proof, even if we were of opinion that it ought not, in strictness, to have been admitted." The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. 241, 4 L. ed. 229, per Mr. Justice Story.

Rule 13 of this court is as follows:

"In all cases of equity and admiralty jurisdiction heard in this court, no objection shall hereafter be allowed to be taken to the admissibility of any deposition, deed, grant, or other exhibit found in the record as evidence, unless objection was taken thereto in the court below and entered of record; but the same shall otherwise be deemed to have been admitted by consent."

It is next contended that the claimant's evidence, regarded as a whole, does not support the decree of the court below. It is said that the burden of proof is upon the claimants, and that this burden has not been sustained.

This was not the view of the district court, which, as we have heretofore stated, held that it appeared satisfactorily from the proof that both the title and right of possession were in a neutral at the time of capture.

What are the matters urged against this finding of the court below?

It is argued that, because it appears in the invoices and in the manifest that the shipments were made partly on account of "the expedition or voyage of the Carlos F. Roses," partly on account of "Mr. Pedro Pagés, of Havana," and partly on account of the shippers, that is, Gibernau & Company, it is a reasonable inference that it must have been known to the master that the consignees were, as to some of the cargo, enemies, and that it must be concluded, on the face of the papers, that when the goods were delivered to the vessel they became the property of the consignees named in the invoices.

Such a view loses sight of the decisive and indisputable facts that the money used by Gibernau & Company in the purchase *of the [679] goods was procured from the London & River Plate Bank, which cashed the drafts drawn on Kleinwort Sons & Company, the claimants, and that when the latter company, on April 6, accepted the drafts they were furnished with the bills of lading covering the entire shipment; that the said bills of lading, at the time of such delivery, were duly indorsed in blank by Gibernau & Company, the shippers, and to whose order the said cargo was by the terms of the bills of lading to be delivered, all with the intent and result of entitling Kleinwort Sons & Company to the said bills of lading and to the cargo described therein as security for their acceptance of the drafts. It hence was entirely immaterial whether the ultimate consignees were, as to some of the cargo, residents of the enemy's country, and whether that fact was known to the master. Under the facts proved by the claimants the latter, through the London & River Plate Bank, had furnished the money used in the purchase of the goods, before the sailing of the vessel. This is made plainly to appear by the invoices furnished by the shippers, and wherein is stated that the master received the goods from Pla Gibernau & Company, and wherein also there is a statement of the cost of the goods and of the commissions charged by Gibernau & Company, corresponding in amount to the drafts.

The fact that the claimants' proofs do not set forth the correspondence between the claimants and the ultimate consignees is made a matter of unfavorable comment. But the transactions were substantially described in the affidavits, and it is not easy to see what further light would have been afforded by such correspondence, if, indeed, there was such correspondence.

The purchase of the goods, the drawing and cashing of the drafts, the indorsement and delivery of the bills of lading, all took place before the sailing of the vessel, and long before the declaration of war, and before there was any reason to anticipate hostilities. The drafts were accepted before the war, and were paid before the seizure of the vessel.

No counter evidence was offered by the United States, although the case was pending in the district court from June 6, 1898, to February 9, 1899, when the decree in favor of the claimants was entered. It is, of [680] course, true that the burden *of proof was on the claimants, but when the government elected to stand on the proof adduced by the claimants, every fair and reasonable intentment must be made in favor of that proof. If the case so made out is consistent with the rightfulness of the claim, it should not be defeated by mere suggestions and suppositions, not founded on evidence. "All reasonable doubts shall be resolved in favor of the claimants. Any other course would be inconsistent with the right administration of the law and the character of a just government." Prize Cases, 2 Black, 635, sub nom. Preeiat v. United States, 17 L. ed. 459.

The final contention on behalf of the United States is that, even if the facts of the case were as set forth in the claimants' proofs and as found by the district court, yet, as matter of law, the claimants cannot succeed, because "the right of capture acts on the proprietary interest of the thing captured at the time of the capture, and is not affected by the secret liens of private engagements of the parties; that hence prize courts have rejected in its favor the lien of bottomry bonds, of mortgages, for supplies, and of bills of lading; . . . that claimants did not obtain the jus in rem, and, according to the great weight of authority, the right of capture was superior."

To sustain this proposition the following cases are cited: The Mary and Susan, 1 Wheat. 25, 4 L. ed. 27; The Frances, 8 Cranch, 418, 3 L. ed. 609; The Sally Magee, 3 Wall. 451, sub nom. Fry v. United States, 18 L. ed. 197; The Hampton, 5 Wall. 372, sub nom. The Hampton v. United States, 18 L. ed. 659; The Battle, 6 Wall. 498, sub nom. The Battle v. United States, 18 L. ed. 933; The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218; The Marianna, 6 C. Rob. 24; The Ida, 1 Spinks Prize Cas. 331.

The Mary and Susan was a case where an American house had ordered the purchase of goods in England before the declaration of war, and where their English agents had assigned the goods to certain brokers to secure advances made by them. The goods were captured en route to America, and were libeled in the district court of the district of New York as prize of war. But it was held, both in the circuit court and in this court, that the property had vested in the American firm, who were the claimants, before and at the time of shipment, and was not divested by a mere request made by the shippers to the consignees to remit the purchase money to the bankers, although in the invoice it was stated that the goods were the property [681] of the bankers. *The transaction was regarded, not as a transfer of the goods, but as merely intended to transfer the right to the debt due from the consignees. No bills of exchange were drawn on the consignees in favor of the English bankers, nor were any bills of lading indorsed to them. The evidence of the transaction was found only in letters addressed to the consignees by the shippers, requesting them to pay the purchase money to the bankers; and this court held, after a careful examination of the evidence, that there was no intention to secure the bankers by any transfer of the title of the property, but only to secure them by a transfer of the debt due from the consignees.

The case of The Frances was an appeal from the sentence of the circuit court of Rhode Island, condemning certain British goods, captured on board the Frances, and which were claimed by Thomas Irvin, a domiciled merchant of the United States, on the ground of lien. It was stated by Mr. Justice Washington that "it is not pretended that the real ownership in these goods was not vested in the consignors, enemies of the United States; but the claimant founds his pretensions on a lien created on the goods consigned, . . . in consequence of an advance made to the shippers, in consideration of the consignment, by his agent in Glasgow; and . . . in virtue of a general balance of account due to him as their factor." And it was held that while, according to the common law, a factor has a lien upon the goods of his principal in his possession, for the balance of account due him, and likewise a consignee for advances made by him to the consignor; yet that this doctrine is unknown in prize courts, unless in very peculiar circumstances. And the court referred to the case of The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218, where it was held that a lien on a vessel created by a bottomry bond was not protected from capture.

It will be seen that in this case of The Frances, as in the case of The Mary and Susan, there was no question of the effect of a transfer of title by bills of lading, but a mere assertion of a lien by virtue of common-law principles.

The Sally Magee is the next case cited. This was the case of an enemy's vessel bound for an enemy's port. A portion of the cargo was claimed by Fry, Price, & Company for Coleman & *Company, a Rio firm, because, as [682] was alleged, Coleman & Company, as factors and commission merchants, had been directed to purchase and ship for the account of Davenport & Company, of Richmond, Virginia, a cargo of coffee, if procurable at not over 10½ cents per pound; that Coleman & Company did make the shipment of the cargo claimed to the consignment of Davenport & Company, but that by the invoice thereof it appeared that the said purchase was not made at or within the said limit; for which cause Davenport & Company had refused to receive it as purchased for their account, or otherwise than on account of the shippers, Coleman & Company, and as agents of necessity for them; and that Davenport & Company had authorized to receive it in their place and behalf. Another claim related to the residue of the cargo, also coffee, consigned to Dunlap & Company, of Richmond. It was not denied that this portion of the cargo was enemy's property, but the claimants alleged a lien because of a balance due claimants by Dunlap & Company.

177 U. S.

In respect to the first claim, it was held that if Coleman & Company, as factors, bought the coffee at a price exceeding the limit prescribed by Davenport & Company, and the latter, on learning the fact, repudiated the purchase, the title of the factors thereupon became absolute, and none passed to the principals for whom the purchase was made; but that there was an entire failure, on the part of the claimants, to prove the facts as alleged, although more than two years had elapsed between the filing of the claim and the time when the decree was rendered. Accordingly, the decree of condemnation as to that portion of the cargo was affirmed.

The language of the court in disposing of the second claim was as follows:

[683] "The other claim relates to the coffee consigned to Dunlap & Co. of Richmond, and it is not denied that this was enemy's property. The claimants allege a lien. The claim states that Dunlap & Co. owed them a balance of upward of $35,326, and that they were authorized and directed by that firm to receive and sell the coffee, and apply the proceeds, as far as necessary, to the payment of the debt, and to hold the *balance for the account of the debtor firm. The same affiant made the test affidavit, as in the other case. He referred, as in that case, to an important correspondence, and failed to produce it. The same remarks apply upon the subject. It is to be inferred, also, that the letters were written after the shipment of the cargo, and, indeed, after the capture. In either case, the arrangement was made too late to have any effect.

"The ownership of property in such cases cannot be changed while it is in transitu. The capture clothes the captors with all the rights of the owner which subsisted at the commencement of the voyage, and everything done thereafter, designed to encumber the property or change its ownership, is a nullity. No lien created at any time by the secret convention of the parties is recognized. Sound public policy and the right administration of justice forbid it. This rule is rigidly enforced by all prize tribunals. The property was shipped to the enemy. It was diverted from its course by the capture. The allegation of a lien wears the appearance of an afterthought."

It will be observed that there was no effort in this case to claim property vested or transferred by bills of lading. Indeed, it appeared that the bills of lading were made out in favor of the consignees at Richmond, and it was said by the court that the legal effect of a bill of lading was to vest the ownership in the consignees, citing Lawrence v. Minturn, 17 How. 100, 15 L. ed. 58, in which it was said that "the general effect of a bill of lading to raise a presumption of property in goods in him to whom it makes them deliverable, is conceded."

Next comes the cited case of The Hampton, libeled and condemned as prize of war in the supreme court for the District of Columbia.

It was held that mortgages on vessels captured jure belli are to be treated only as liens, subject to be overridden by the capture, not as jura in re, capable of an enforcement superior to the claims of the captor.

Then comes the case of The Battle, where there were claimants against the proceeds of sale of an enemy's vessel for supplies furnished and for materials furnished and for work and labor. The claims were dismissed by the district court of the United States, and on appeal that decree was affirmed by this court, *which, through Justice Nelson, [684] said: "The principle is too well settled, that capture as prize of war jure belli, overrides all previous liens, to require examination," citing the cases of The Hampton and The Frances.

These are all the American cases cited, and it is to be observed that, in none of them, was the court called upon to decide the question whether bills of lading made or indorsed to neutrals, before the declaration of war, on account of money furnished to purchase cargoes, are protected as neutral goods from capture, within the general international rule, and the President's proclamation, protecting such goods, when not contraband, from condemnation as prize of war. The doctrine of these cases simply amounts to the proposition that bottomry bonds, mortgages, and private agreements that factor's balances and advances should be preferred claims, are mere liens, which create no property rights in vessels or cargoes, superior to the captor's rights.

Let us now examine the English cases cited.

The first is that of The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218. This was the case of a bottomry bond, and it was held that such a bond confers no property in the vessel; that the property continues in the former proprietor, who has given a right of action against it, but nothing more. In the case of The Marianna, 6 C. Rob. 24, there was a claim against a Spanish vessel for unpaid purchase money on the vessel which had been sold by an American owner to a Spanish merchant, but which was to be satisfied out of the proceeds of a quantity of tallow consigned to England on board this vessel for sale. Sir William Scott said:

"A claim is given on behalf of the former American proprietor, in virtue of a lien which he is said to have retained on the property for the payment of the purchase money; but such an interest cannot, I conceive, be deemed sufficient to support a claim of property in a court of prize."

In respect to the goods which were said to have been pledged to secure the payment of the purchase money of the ship, Sir William Scott said:

"Then as to the title of property in the goods, which are said to have been going as the funds out of which the payment for *the [685] ship was to have been made. That they were going for the payment of a debt will not alter the property. There must be something more. Even if bills of lading are delivered, that circumstance will not be sufficient, unless accompanied with an understanding that he who holds the bill of lading is to bear the risk of the goods as to the voyage, and as to the market to which they are consigned; otherwise, though the security may avail pro tanto, it cannot be held to work any change in the property."

It will be noticed that the shipper of the goods in this case was the Spanish merchant, an enemy.

Finally, the case of The Ida is relied on. 1 Spinks Prize Cas. 331. The statement of the case was as follows:

"The claim of neutral merchants for 2,650 bags of coffee, consigned to them on the credit of advances made by them, was disallowed. The claim is that of lien, which cannot be upheld against captors. Further proof cannot be allowed when there has been an attempt to deceive the court by simulated papers."

In considering the evidence in the case, Dr. Lushington said:

"Now, that simulated bill of lading was certainly framed for some purpose or other by desire of the master. It is a well-known rule of this court that where there are contradictory papers the burden of proof lies on the claimant to show that the contradiction is not inconsistent with the rights of a belligerent power; and, I must say, I have not heard any satisfactory explanation of how or why these papers were framed, except it was for the purpose of deceiving those who might have to determine whether it was an enemy's property or not."

In discussing the law of the case, Dr. Lushington said:

"It has been contended by counsel that the property is in Behrens & Company by virtue of the indorsement of the bills of lading; and cases from common law have been cited in support of this. I believe that, under some circumstances, that would be the case. They would have a legal title to the property; but I have considerable doubt whether it is not the law of this court that the claimant must show that he has not only a legal, but an equitable, title. If a mere legal title would justify the court in restoring property the consequences would be most alarming; *for nothing would be more easy than to cover enemies' property from one end of the Kingdom to the other. I strongly object to the doctrine that if a legal title be shown this court is bound to restore; for I hold that an equitable title is also necessary to support a claim in this court."

Upon the whole, the learned judge was of the opinion that the property belonged to an enemy, subject to claimant's charges, and that it was not possible to doubt for a single moment that there was an intention in the case, by means of colorable bills of lading, to deceive and defraud Great Britain of its belligerent rights, by attempting to cover enemy's property as neutral.

The case of The Ida can therefore be cited as conceding that, if the claimants had vested in them the legal title to the goods by virtue of the indorsement of the bills of lading, and had also an equitable title, they would be entitled to a judgment of restoration. But the court was of opinion that there was no evidence whatever of any portion of the cargo belonging to a neutral. While it was true that the claimants exhibited a bill of lading indorsed to them, yet another bill of lading not indorsed was found on capture in possession of the master. Such a state of facts justly created a belief that the transaction was essentially fraudulent, as an attempt to cover enemy's property.

We shall now consider some of the cases cited on behalf of the claimants.

The Amy Warwick, 2 Sprague, 150, Fed. Cas. No. 343, 2 Black, 635, 17 L. ed. 459, is, in several respects, a leading case, and is decisive of the present one. It was there held that, where a neutral commission merchant purchased a cargo of coffee for enemy correspondents, partly with their funds and partly with his own, and shipped it under a bill of lading by which it was to be delivered to his order, having a legal title and a beneficial interest, a prize court should award him the amount of his advances, although the residue of the property will be condemned as enemy's.

After a full statement of the facts, the conclusion was thus stated by Judge Sprague:

"The claim of J. L. Phipps & Co. was filed on the 4th of September last. It alleges that this coffee was purchased by them partly by funds of Dunlop, Moncure, & Co. *and partly [687] by £2,000 of their own money; that the legal title has always remained in them, 'and that no other person is the legal owner, except the equitable interest of said Dunlop, Moncure, & Co.'

"These facts seem plainly to lead to the conclusion that the claimants ought to be repaid the amount which they expended from their own funds in the purchase of the coffee, and that the residue of the proceeds should be condemned. This result I shall adopt, unless precluded from doing so by authority.

"The counsel for the captors contend that the claimants had only a lien on this cargo, and that liens will not be protected or regarded in a prize court. This position is sustained by the authorities as to certain kinds of liens. The extent of this doctrine and the reasons on which it is founded are stated by the supreme court in The Frances, 8 Cranch, 418, 3 L. ed. 609. It is there said that 'cases of liens created by the mere private contract of individuals, depending upon the different laws of different countries, are not allowed, because of the difficulties which would arise in deciding upon them, and the door which would be open to fraud.' Similar reasons are given by Lord Stowell in The Marianna, 6 C. Rob. 25, 26, and in several other cases. These reasons are especially applicable to latent liens created under local laws. They do not reach the case now before the court. This coffee was purchased by the claimants at Rio, and shipped by them on board this brig under a bill of lading, by which the master was bound to deliver it to their order, and they ordered it to be delivered to J. L. Phipps & Co. that is, to themselves. They then retained the legal title, and the possession of the master was their possession. Being the legal owners of the property, they can hardly be said to have a lien upon it; a lien being in strictness an encumbrance on the property of another. Their real character was that of trustees holding the legal title and possession, with a right of retention until their advances should be paid. . . . The case of The St. Jozse Indiano, 1 Wheat. 208, 4 L. ed. 73, has been cited by the counsel for the claimants, and they contend that it sustains their whole claim, and requires all the coffee to be restored to them. That case is a stringent authority to the extent of the £2,000 which the claimants invested or advanced *in the purchase; but I do not think that it authorizes me to go further."

[688]

This case was taken to the circuit court and there affirmed. No appeal was taken to the supreme court from that part of the decree which allowed the claim of Phipps & Company. The decree of condemnation of the residue was affirmed. 2 Black, 635, 17 L. ed. 459.

The bark Winifred was captured in May, 1861, off Cape Henry, and confiscation of vessel and cargo was demanded as being enemy's property. The cargo, consisting of 4,200 bags of coffee, had been purchased by Phipps & Company in Rio, as agents for Crenshaw & Company, Richmond merchants. Phipps & Company advanced their own funds to the extent of three eighths of the cargo. The consignment formally was to shipper's order, but the bills of lading were sent forward indorsed to Crenshaw & Company. Subsequently, Phipps & Company made further advances of $20,622 on April 26, while the goods were in transit, and, after the outbreak of hostilities, taking a reassignment of the bills of lading. The district court ordered a restoration of three eighths of the cargo to Phipps & Company, but refused to allow their claim for the further advances on the other five eighths of the cargo, citing The Marianna, 6 C. Rob. 24, and The Frances, 8 Cranch, 418, 3 L. ed. 609. But on appeal the circuit court, while affirming the decree allowing the claim against the three eighths of the cargo, reversed that part of the decree which refused the claim for the further advances, allowed further proofs, and on December —, 1863, allowed the entire claim of Phipps & Company, with interest. The Winifred, Blatchf. Prize Cas. page 35, and note, Fed. Cas. No. 17,873.

The Lynchburg was captured with her cargo in May, 1861, at the mouth of Chesapeake bay. Two thousand and forty-five bags of coffee, part of her cargo, had been purchased by Maxwell, Wright, & Company as agents for Wortham & Company, of Richmond. Maxwell, Wright, & Company took bills of lading, consigning the cargo to their own order, and drew against them on Brown, Shipley, & Company, of London, for £6,090, who accepted the drafts and subsequently paid them. The entire cargo was destined ultimately for enemies. Wortham & *Company, of Richmond, claimed 504 bags of this shipment, subject to the lien of Brown, Shipley, & Company. The district court restored to Brown, Shipley, & Company 1,541 bags, but condemned the 504 bags claimed by Wortham & Company as enemy's property. Judge Betts said:

"The claim to an absolute ownership of the 2,045 bags was placed before the court in the oral argument and in the written points filed in the cause by the counsel for the claimants, upon the proposition of law that a bill of lading, transmitted to them by the shipper to cover advances, passed to them the title to the cargo purchased therewith. If this doctrine be correct as to mere commercial transactions, it does not prevail in prize courts, in derogation of the rights of captors, when the interest of the claimant is only a debt, although supported by liens equitable and tacit, or legal and positive, even of the character of bottomry bonds, when not signified on the ship's papers at the time of her capture. The Frances, 8 Cranch, 418, 3 L. ed. 609; The Tobago, 5 C. Rob. 218; The Marianna, 6 C. Rob. 24."

On appeal the circuit court affirmed as to the allowance of the claim of Brown, Shipley, & Company for the 1,541 bags, but reversed the refusal of their further claim for 504 bags, allowed the claimants to give further proofs, and ultimately the 504 bags were restored by consent to the claimants. The Lynchburg, Blatchf. Prize Cas. 51, and note on p. 52.

The exigencies of trade have called a class of instruments into being which are substantially acknowledgments by public or private agents that they have received merchandise, and from whom or on whose account; and usage has made the possession of such documents equivalent to the possession of the property itself. Among them the most notable is the bill of lading, in respect to which, and replying to the question whether at law the property of goods at sea passes by the indorsement of a bill of lading, Buller, J., said, in his opinion in Lickbarrow v. Mason: "Every authority which can be adduced, from the earliest period of time down to the present hour, agrees that at law the property does pass as absolutely and as effectually as if the goods had been actually delivered into the hands of the consignee." *Smith, Lead. Cas. vol. 1, pt. 11, 7th Am. ed. *869, under the head of Lickbarrow v. Mason.

The conclusion warranted by the cases is that, as well advances made for the purchase of goods, as an absolute purchase, are protected by bills of lading, whether made out directly to the party purchasing or making the advancements, or indorsed to him by the shipper.

While possession of the bills of lading imports a legal title to the goods, yet in prize cases it is permitted for the courts to go behind the bills of lading, if there is evidence tending to show that the party in whose name they are issued, or to whom they have been indorsed, has no equitable interest or is a mere cover to an enemy. In the present case there was no transfer of the property from an enemy to a neutral. Up to the time of shipment the entire cargo was owned by Pla Gibernau & Company. They transferred it to the London & River Plate Bank, Limited, who in turn transferred it to Kleinwort Sons & Company, who produced the bills of lading at the hearing and moved the payment by them, before the capture of the vessel, of the drafts whose negotiation furnished the moneys used in the purchase of the goods. The entire issue of each set of bills of lading was possessed by Kleinwort Sons & Company, under indorsements which gave to them only the right to demand delivery from the vessel.

The case falls plainly within the law as administered in The Amy Warwick, The Winifred, and The Lynchburg.

If the rule asked for by the captors in this case should be upheld, namely, that bills of lading indorsed to neutrals, acting in good faith, who have advanced money to purchase goods shipped long before the declaration of war, do not create a right of property in the goods, there would be very little room left for the operation of the President's proclamation exempting neutral goods from condemnation. Such a rule would be very unfortunate as respects the commerce of the United States in case of hostilities between European countries. Owing to the limited amount of merchant shipping owned in the United States, the greater part of their products, whether breadstuffs or manufactured goods, has to be carried in foreign vessels, and *it is quite evident that bankers and capitalists could not afford to advance the moneys needed to make purchases, if they could not be protected against seizure by foreign belligerents, by the indorsement to them of bills of lading. Only those who actually own the goods could safely ship them on vessels owned by belligerents, and, what constitutes the larger part of international trade, the purchase and shipment of merchandise by factors with moneys advanced by banking houses would, in case of war, have to cease.

177 U. S.

The decree of the district court should be affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brewer concurs in this dissent.

943

MEMORANDA

OF

CASES DISPOSED OF WITHOUT OPINIONS.

[693]EDWARD CLIFFORD, Appellant, v. CARL H. REUMPLER, Sheriff, etc. [No. 561.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of New Jersey.

No counsel for appellant. Mr. James S. Erwin for appellee.

April 16, 1900. Order affirmed with costs, on the authority of Nobles v. Georgia, 168 U. S. 398, 42 L. ed. 515, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87; Kohl v. Lehlback, 160 U. S. 293, 40 L. ed. 432, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304; Clifford v. Heller, 172 U. S. 641, 43 L. ed. 1181, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 874; Clifford v. Ruempler (mem.) 175 U. S. 723, ante, 337, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1024; and Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U. S. 172, ante, 119, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77.

FRED BELL, Plaintiff, v. STATE OF MISSISSIPPI. [No. —, Original.]

Motion for Leave to File Declaration.

April 16, 1900. Denied on the authority of Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 33 L. ed. 842.

STREATOR CATHEDRAL GLASS COMPANY et al., Petitioners, v. WIRE GLASS COMPANY et al. [No. 557.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Mr. Horace K. Tenney for petitioners. Messrs. Lysander Hill and Charles Howson for respondents.

March 26, 1900. Denied.

AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY, Petitioner, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 559.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

March 26, 1900. Granted.

WATERBURY MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Petitioner, v. HARRIOTT H. WALES. [No. 560.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Messrs. John K. Beach and Edmund Wetmore for petitioner. Mr. Roger Foster for respondent.

April 9, 1900. Denied.

177 U. S.

OLIVER S. KELLY et al., Petitioners, v. SPRINGFIELD RAILWAY COMPANY et al. [694] [No. 552.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Messrs. Julian C. Dowell and F. P. Fish for petitioners. Messrs. T. B. Kerr and Drury W. Cooper for respondents.

April 9, 1900. Denied.

GEISER MANUFACTURING COMPANY, Petitioner, v. FRICK COMPANY. [No. 567.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Mr. John G. Johnson for petitioner. Messrs. F. P. Fish and Francis Rawle for respondent.

April 9, 1900. Denied.

JAMES W. OAKFORD, Petitioner, v. FRANCES A. HACKLEY. [No. 568.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Messrs. John G. Johnson and Maxwell Evarts for petitioner. Messrs. H. W. Palmer and R. C. Dale for respondent.

April 9, 1900. Denied.

TENNESSEE COAL, IRON, & RAILROAD COMPANY, Petitioner, v. FRANK H. PIERCE. [No. 569.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Messrs. Walker Percy and W. I. Grubb for petitioner. Mr. W. A. Gunter for respondent.

April 9, 1900. Denied.

LA COMPAGNIE GÉNÉRALE TRANSATLANTIQUE, Petitioner, v. CHARLES N. MIDDLETON, Administrator. [No. 573.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Mr. Edward K. Jones for petitioner. Messrs. George Whitfield Betts, Jr., and J. Parker Kirlin for respondent.

April 9, 1900. Denied.

NEW ORLEANS & NORTH EASTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, Petitioner, v. E. T. CLEMENTS. [No. 576.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Mr. John W. Fewell for petitioner. Mr. Hoke Smith for respondent.

April 16, 1900. Denied.

THAMES TOWBOAT COMPANY, Petitioner, v. HENRY A. HAINES, Master, etc. [No. 582.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Messrs. James Emerson Carpenter and Floyd Hughes for petitioner. Messrs. T. S. Garnett and R. M. Hughes for respondent.

April 16, 1900. Denied.

FRANK L. NEALL, Trustee, Petitioner, v. THAMES TOWBOAT COMPANY, Claimant. [No. 589.]

[695] *Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Mr. Henry Galbraith Ward for petitioner. Mr. Samuel Park for respondent.

April 16, 1900. Denied.

HENRY CLEWS et al., Petitioners, v. MALCOLM M. JAMIESON et al. [No. 595.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

April 16, 1900. Granted.

946

ALBERT H. WAITE, Petitioner, v. SANTA CRUZ. [No. 598.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

April 23, 1900. Granted.

LOUIS LOEB, Petitioner, v. TRUSTEES OF COLUMBIA TOWNSHIP, OHIO. [No. 602.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Mr. J. W. Warrington for petitioner. Mr. S. M. Johnson for respondent.

April 23, 1900. Denied.

LAKE STREET ELEVATED RAILROAD COMPANY, Petitioner, v. WILLIAM ZIEGLER et al. [No. 605.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Mr. Henry S. Robbins for petitioner. Mr. John J. Herrick for respondents.

April 23, 1900. Denied.

SPRING VALLEY COAL COMPANY, Petitioner, v. ALEXANDER PATTING. [No. 606.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Mr. Henry S. Robbins for petitioner. No opposition.

April 23, 1900. Denied.

CHARLES P. COLES, Petitioner, v. COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS OF THE PORT OF SAN FRANCISCO. [No. 607.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

Messrs. Sidney V. Smith and Calderon Carlisle for petitioner. Solicitor General Richards for respondent.

April 23, 1900. Denied.

177 U. S.

CASES

ARGUED AND DECIDED

IN THE

SUPREME COURT

OF THE

UNITED STATES

AT

OCTOBER TERM, 1899.

REFERENCE TABLE

OF SUCH CASES DECIDED IN U. S. SUPREME COURT, OCTOBER TERM, 1899.

AND REPORTED HEREIN,

VOLUME 178,

AS ALSO APPEAR IN

OFFICIAL REPORTER'S EDITION.

Off. Rep. 178 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 178 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
1-2	Roehm v. Horst	953	99-102	Knowlton v. Moore	993
2-5	" "	954	102-105	" "	994
5-7	" "	955	105-108	" "	995
7-9	" "	956	108-110	" "	996
9-11	" "	957	110-111	" "	997
11-14	" "	958	111-112	High v. Coyne	997
14-16	" "	959	112	" "	998
16-19	" "	960	113-114	Fidelity Ins. T. & S. D. Co. v. McClain
19-21	" "	961		Plumber v. Coler	998
22	Osborne v. San Diego Land & T. Co.		115	" "	999
22-24	" "	962	115-117	" "	1001
24-27	" "	963	117-118	" "	1002
27-29	" "	964	118-120	" "	1003
29-32	" "	965	120-123	" "	1004
32	" "	966	123-126	" "	1005
32-35	" "	967	126-128	" "	1006
35-38	" "	968	128-131	" "	1007
38-40	" "	969	131-134	" "	1008
41	Knowlton v. Moore	969	134-136	" "	1009
43	" "	970	136-139	" "	1009
43-45	" "	971	139	Murdock v. Ward	1010
45-48	" "	972	139-141	" "	1011
48-51	" "	973	141-144	" "	1012
51-53	" "	974	144-147	" "	1013
53-56	" "	975	147-149	" "	1014
56-58	" "	976	150-152	Sherman v. United States	1015
58-61	" "	977	152	" "
61-65	" "	978	153-154	Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Howard	1015
65-66	" "	979	154-157	" "	1016
66-68	" "	980	157-160	" "	1017
68-71	" "	981	160-162	" "	1018
71-73	" "	982	162-165	" "	1019
73-76	" "	983	165-167	" "	1020
76-79	" "	984	167-169	Castner v. Coffman	1021
79-81	" "	985	169-171	" "	1022
81-84	" "	986	171-174	" "	1023
84-87	" "	987	174-176	" "	1024
87-89	" "	988	176-179	" "	1025
89-91	" "	989	179-182	" "	1026
92-94	" "	990	182-184	" "	1027
94-97	" "	991	184-186	" "	1028
97-99	" "	992	186	Clarke v. Clarke	1028

REFERENCE TABLE.

Off. Rep. 178 U. S.	Title.	Here in.	Off. Rep. 178 U. S.	Title.	Here in.
186-189	Clarke v. Clarke	1029	317-319	Ex parte Union Steamboat Co.	1084
189-190	" "	1030	319-320	" "	1085
190-192	" "	1031	321	Wheeler v. New York, N. H. &
192-195	" "	1032	H. R. Co.	"	1085
195	" "	1033	321-323	" "	1086
196	Browning v. De Ford	1033	323-326	" "	1087
196-197	" "	1034	326	" "	1088
197-199	" "	1035	327-329	Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Phinney	1088
199-202	" "	1036	329-331	" "	1089
202-205	" "	1037	331-333	" "	1090
205	" "	1038	334-336	" "	1092
205-207	Moran v. Horsky	1038	336-338	" "	1093
207-209	" "	1039	338-341	" "	1094
209-212	" "	1040	341-343	" "	1095
212-214	" "	1041	343-344	" "	1096
214-215	" "	1042	345-346	Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Sears	1096
215-217	Tarpey v. Madsen	1042	346-347	" "	1097
217-218	" "	1043	347-348	Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill	1097
219-220	" "	1044	348-350	" "	1098
220-222	" "	1045	351	Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Allen	1098
222-225	" "	1046	351-353	" "	1099
225-227	" "	1047	353	Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v.
227-229	" "	1048	Clark	"	1099
229-230	McDonnell v. Jordan	1048	354-356	" "	1100
230-232	" "	1049	356-359	" "	1101
233-234	" "	1050	359-362	" "	1102
234-237	" "	1051	362-363	" "	1103
237-239	" "	1052	364-365	" "	1105
239	Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ann		365-368	" "	1106
	Arbor R. Co.	1052	368-371	" "	1107
239-242	" "	1053	371-373	" "	1108
242-244	" "	1054	373	Moffett H. & C. Co. v. Roches-
245-246	Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v.			ter	1108
	Martin	1055	374-376	" "	1109
246-249	" "	1056	376-379	" "	1110
249-251	" "	1057	379-382	" "	1111
251	Rider v. United States	1057	382-384	" "	1112
252-254	" "	1058	384-385	" "	1114
254-257	" "	1059	385-388	" "	1115
257-260	" "	1060	388	" "	1116
260-261	" "	1061	389-390	New York L. Ins. Co. v. Crav-
262	North American Transporta-			ens	1116
	tion & T. Co. v. Morrison	1061	390-392	" "	1117
262-265	" "	1062	392-394	" "	1118
265-267	" "	1063	395-397	" "	1122
267-269	" "	1064	397-399	" "	1123
270-272	Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v.		399-401	" "	1124
	Cleveland Iron Min. Co.	1065	402	Banholzer v. New York L. Ins.
272-274	" "	1066		Co.	1124
274-277	" "	1067	402-404	" "	1125
277-280	" "	1068	404-407	" "	1126
280-281	Corralitos Co. v. United States	1069	407-408	" "	1127
281-284	" "	1070	409	Deserant v. Cerillos Coal R.
284-287	" "	1071		Co.	1127
287-289	" "	1072	409-410	" "	1129
289	Sully v. American Nat. Bank	1072	410-413	" "	1130
291-292	" "	1073	413-416	" "	1131
292-294	" "	1074	416-418	" "	1132
294-297	" "	1075	418-421	" "	1133
297-300	" "	1076	421	" "	1134
300-302	" "	1077	421	Connaway, Ex parte	1134
302-304	" "	1078	422-424	" "	1135
304	Fitzpatrick v. United States	1078	424-427	" "	1136
305-306	" "	1079	427-430	" "	1137
306-308	" "	1080	430-432	" "	1138
308-311	" "	1081	432-435	" "	1139
311-313	" "	1082	435	" "	1140
313-316	" "	1083	436	Smith v. Reeves	1140
316	" "	1084	436-437	" "	1141

REFERENCE TPBLE.

Off. Rep. 178 U. S.	Title.	Here In.	Off. Rep. 178 U. S.	Title.	Here In.
437-439	Smith v. Reeves	1142	525-526	Bardes v. Hawarden Bank	1177
439-442	" "	1143		("Bardes v. First Nat.
442-444	" "	1144		Bank")	1178
444-447	" "	1145	526-529	" "	1179
447-449	" "	1146	529-531	" "	1180
449	Earle v. Pennsylvania ("Earle		531-534	" "	1181
	v. Pennsylvania ex rel. Com-		534-537	" "	1182
	monwealth Title, Ins. & T.		537-539	" "	1182
	Co.")	1146	539	Mitchell v. McClure	1182
450-452	" "	1147	540	" "	1183
452-454	" "	1148	541-542	Hicks v. Knost	1183
454-456	" "	1149	542	White v. Schloerb	1183
456-457	Earle v. Conway	1149	542-544	" "	1184
457-458	" "	1150	544-545	" "	1185
458-460	Motes v. United States	1150	545-547	" "	1186
460-463	" "	1151	547-548	" "	1187
463-465	" "	1152	548-549	Taylor v. Beckham	1187
465-468	" "	1153	549-552	" "	1188
468-471	" "	1154	552-557	" "	1189
471-473	" "	1155	557-558	" "	1190
473-476	" "	1156	558-559	" "	1191
476	Hawley v. Diller	1157	559-562	" "	1192
478-480	" "	1158	562-564	" "	1193
480-483	" "	1159	564-567	" "	1194
483-485	" "	1160	567-570	" "	1195
485-488	" "	1161	570	" "	1196
488-490	" "	1162	570-573	" "	1198
490-493	" "	1163	573-575	" "	1199
493-496	" "	1164	575-578	" "	1200
496	" "	1165	578-581	" "	1201
496-497	May v. New Orleans	1165	581-583	" "	1202
497-500	" "	1166	583-586	" "	1203
500-503	" "	1167	586-589	" "	1204
503-505	" "	1168	589-591	" "	1205
505-508	" "	1169	591-594	" "	1206
508-510	" "	1170	594-597	" "	1207
510	Dewey v. United States	1170	597-599	" "	1208
511-513	" "	1171	599-602	" "	1209
513-516	" "	1172	602-604	" "	1210
516-519	" "	1173	604-607	" "	1211
519-521	" "	1174	607-609	" "	1212
521-524	" "	1175	610	" "	1212
524	Bardes v. Hawarden Bank		610	" "	1213
	("Bardes v. First Nat.		611-615	Memorandum Cases	1215-1217
	Bank")	1175

THE DECISIONS

OF THE

Supreme Court of the United States

AT
OCTOBER TERM, 1899.

[1] *JOHN ROEHM, Petitioner,
v.

PAUL R. G. HORST, E. Clemens Horst, and
Louis A. Horst, Late Trading under the Firm of Horst Bros., to the Use of E.
Clemens Horst and Louis A. Horst.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 1-21.)

Contracts—breach by renunciation before performance is due—right of immediate action.

- I. An unqualified and positive refusal to perform a contract, though the performance thereof is not yet due, may, if the renunciation goes to the whole contract, be treated as a complete breach which will entitle the injured party to bring his action at once.
2. The damages for breach of a contract by renunciation thereof before performance is due are measured by what the injured party would have suffered by the continued breach of the other party down to the time of complete performance, less any abatement by reason of circumstances of which he ought reasonably to have availed himself.

[No. 188.]

Argued March 15, 16, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment for plaintiffs in an action on contract.
Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to right to rescind or abandon contract because of other party's default—see Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards (Ill.)
30 L. R. A. 33, and note.

As to rescission or breach of executory contract; accrual of right to sue—see Marks v.
Van Eeghen, 30 C. C. A. 210, and note.

178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

See same case below, 62 U. S. App. 520, 91
Fed. Rep. 345, 33 C. C. A. 550.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

This was an action for breach of four certain contracts, brought *by Paul R. G. Horst [2] and others against John Roehm in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, in January, 1897, and was tried under a stipulation, waiving a jury, before Dallas, circuit judge, who made a special finding of facts, and, on the facts so found, gave judgment for plaintiffs. 84 Fed. Rep. 565. The case was earried by defendant to the circuit court of appeals for the third circuit, and the judgment of the circuit court was affirmed. 62 U. S.
App. 520, 91 Fed. Rep. 345, 33 C. C. A. 550.
Thereupon Roehm applied to this court for a writ of certiorari, which was granted, and the cause subsequently heard here.

The circuit court found that—

"On August 25th, 1893, the firm of Horst Brothers, composed of Paul R. G. Horst, E.
Clemens Horst, and Louis A. Horst, the legal plaintiffs, entered into four written contracts with John Roehm, the defendant, of which the following are copies:

"Hop Contract.

"Memorandum of agreement made and entered into by and between Horst Brothers, doing business in the city of New York, parties of the first part, and John Roehm, party of the second part.

"Witnesseth: That the said parties of the first part agree to sell and deliver to the party of the second part, and that the party of the second part agrees to purchase, pay for, and receive from the party of the first part, one hundred (100) bales, prime Pacific coast hops of the crop of 1896. Three and one half pounds tare to be deducted on each bale. Said hops to be delivered ex dock or store, New York city, and to be paid for in net cash ten days from date of arrival at the rate of twenty-two (22) cents per pound.

"Time of shipment, 20 bales each month, October, November, December, January, and February, except as hereafter provided.

"If at any time a difference of opinion shall exist regarding the quality or condition of any hops submitted or tendered under this agreement, each party shall select an arbitrator, to whom the question of the quality [3] and condition shall be submitted, *and, in case of their disagreement, a third arbitrator shall be selected by the two thus chosen, and the decision of a majority of the three shall be final; and in case the decision shall be that the hops tendered are not equal to the quality above called for, the parties of the first part shall, within thirty days after receipt of written notice of such decision, submit samples or tender delivery to the party of the second part, other hops, in fulfilment of this agreement, and party of the second part agrees to receive same.

"In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands, Philadelphia, this 25th day of August, 1893. Horst Bros.

John Roehm."

[Here followed a second, third, and fourth contract, of same tenor and under same date, the second for 100 bales of the crop of 1896, to be shipped 20 bales each month, in the months of March, April, May, June, and July; the third for 100 bales of the crop of 1897, to be shipped 20 bales each month, in the months of October, November, December, January, and February; and the fourth for 100 bales of the crop of 1897, to be shipped 20 bales each month, in the months of March, April, May, June, and July.]

"The months named in each of these contracts respectively, as 'time of shipment,' must, under the custom of the trade, be understood as meaning the months so named, which would follow next after the summer months of the year of the crop referred to in the particular contract.

"On June 23d, 1896, the firm of Horst Brothers was dissolved, and Paul R. G. Horst assigned to his copartners, E. Clemens Horst and Louis A. Horst, the use plaintiffs, all the interest of him, the said Paul R. G. Horst, in the said contracts.

"Upon June 23d, 1896, a notice, of which the following is a copy, was addressed to and received by the defendant:

"June 23, 1896.

"Dear Sir: We beg to inform you that the partnership of Horst Brothers has been this day dissolved.

"Respectfully yours, Horst Brothers."

[4] "To this, under date of June 27th, 1896, the defendant replied, saying: . . . 'I suppose that your reason for giving me the notice is on account of the contracts which I had with your late firm, . . . which, of course, you cannot fulfil. I therefore consider the contracts annulled and will make other arrangements for the purchase of the hops I may need, and you may consider this as release from liability on your part to comply with the contracts.' In answer to this,

954

Horst Brothers in liquidation addressed a letter to the defendant, which he duly received, in which it was said that he had misconstrued the notice of dissolution sent out to the trade; that its meaning was that no new contracts would be made and no new business undertaken by the firm of Horst Brothers; and in which it was further stated that, 'so far as the firm or business is concerned, the firm will discharge its obligations and will try to collect its claims. It does not ask for any release or discharge, and will punctually live up to all the contracts which it has made with you.' This communication was not replied to.

"In October, 1896, the first shipment of 20 bales of hops under the contracts was made, and the invoice and bill of lading covering that shipment were sent to the defendant, who, on October 24th, 1896, by telegram and letter, acknowledged receipt of the bill of lading and bill of particulars, but, upon the ground set up in his letter of June 27, 1896, declined to receive the hops.

"At the time of the defendant's refusal to receive the shipment above mentioned, the plaintiffs could have made subcontracts for forward delivery according to the contracts in suit, at the price of 9 cents per pound for 'prime Pacific coast hops of the crop of 1896,' and of 11 cents per pound for like hops of the crop of 1897; and the differences between the prices fixed by the contracts sued on and those above stated, together with interest on the sum of such differences, from October 24, 1896, to this date, are as follows:"

[Here followed the computation resulting in the amount for which judgment was rendered.]

The opinion of the circuit court of appeals stated the case thus:

*"In August, 1893, Paul R. G. Horst, E. Clemens Horst, and Louis A. Horst, trading as Horst Brothers, entered into a contract with John Roehm, the defendant below, for the sale of 1,000 bales of prime Pacific coast hops, to be delivered at various dates in the future, at a uniform price of 22 cents per pound. Of the whole quantity 600 bales had been delivered, accepted, and paid for at the contract price, so that in July, 1896, there remained undelivered 400 bales. These were deliverable at the rate of 20 bales per month during each month from October, 1896, to July, 1898, both inclusive, excepting, however, from said period the months of August and September, 1897, when no deliveries were called for. The record shows that this contract was the result of one negotiation, and provided for a supply of hops for five years. Ten separate papers were drawn, each covering a period of five months or one season. They all bear the same date and are similar as regards the quantity of hops to be delivered and the price to be paid. They differ only in the time of delivery and the year's crop from which delivery was to be made. In June, 1896, the firm of Horst Brothers was dissolved by the retirement of Paul R. G. Horst. He assigned his interest in the Roehm contract to the remaining partners, who continued the business under the same firm name. Roehm, the defendant below, was notified of this dissolution of the firm and of the transfer of Paul R. G. Horst's interest in the contract to its successors. He thereupon gave notice to the firm that he considered his contract canceled thereby. Subsequently the firm of Horst Brothers advised the defendant of their ability and willingness to perform the contract, and under date of September 4, 1896, wrote Roehm, as follows:

178 U. S.

"Dear Sir: Will you please write us whether you wish us to ship the hops under your contract direct to your city? The contract calls for delivery in New York, and as we ship direct from this coast we can ship to either city at same rate. Consequently there will be a saving to you of freight if we ship to your city direct from here. Awaiting your reply, we are,

"Very truly, Horst Brothers."

[6] "To this letter Roehm replied, under date of September 14, 1896:

"Dear Sirs: In response to your letters dated 3d and 4th inst., state that before shipping me any hops always send me samples from which I can select lots, the same as you have been doing in the past.

"Very truly, John Roehm."

"On October 9, 1896, Horst Brothers advised Roehm of the shipment of 20 bales of hops for the October delivery, as called for by the contract, which Roehm, by telegraph, refused to receive, and as supplementary thereto sent the following letter, dated October 24, 1896:

"Gentlemen: Yours of October 9, inclosing bill of lading and bill of particulars per 20 bales of hops forwarded me under the terms of contract of August 25, 1893, was received, and I have wired you that I decline to receive the same. I notified you under date of June 27, 1896, that, owing to the dissolution of the copartnership with which I originally contracted and the fact that this firm was no longer in existence, I considered my contract at an end, and will make arrangements for purchasing my supplies elsewhere. I am advised that I am under no obligations by that contract to accept supplies from you. If you desire to bill these goods at the current market rate under a new contract, I will accept them if upon inspection they are of the quality desired; otherwise they will remain at the freight station subject to your order.

"Very truly yours, John Roehm."

"No further efforts were made by Horst Brothers to make delivery under the contract, but in January, 1897, this action was begun by all the original parties thereto, to the use of the firm as at present constituted, to recover damages for its breach. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiffs."

The contention that Roehm was entitled to treat the contract as determined by the retirement of one of the members of the firm of Horst Brothers, and the assignment of his interest to his copartners, was not renewed in this court.

178 U. S.

Mr. Samuel Dickson argued the cause and, with Messrs. R. O. Moon and Richard C. Dale, filed a brief for petitioner:

The rule allowing recovery for breaches of contract to accept and pay for goods, before the time fixed by the contract for their delivery, though in accordance with the decisions of English courts and of the courts of many of the states, has never been sanctioned and adopted by this court.

Dingley v. Oler, 117 U. S. 490, 29 L. ed. 984, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850; Marks v. Van Eeghen, 57 U. S. App. 149, 85 Fed. Rep. 853, 30 C. C. A. 208; Pierce v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 173 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 591, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335; Clark v. National Benefit & Casualty Co. 67 Fed. Rep. 222.

And this rule has been repudiated by the courts of Massachusetts and North Dakota.

Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, 19 Am. Rep. 384; Stanford v. McGill, 6 N. D. 536, 38 L. R. A. 760, 72 N. W. 938.

The proper measure of damages was the difference between the contract and the market price upon the day appointed for performance.

Brown v. Muller, L. R. 7 Exch. 319; Roper v. Johnson, L. R. 8 C. P. 167.

Mr. Frank P. Prichard argued the cause and, with Mr. John A. Garver, filed a brief for respondents:

The decision in Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, is not inconsistent with the principles or precedents of the common law and is inherently reasonable.

Pollock, Principles of Contract, 6th ed. 410; 5 Viner's Abridg. 224; Co. Litt. § 358; Sir Anthony Main's Case, 5 Coke, 21a; Griffith v. Goodhand, T. Raym. 464; Bowdell v. Parsons, 10 East, 359; Amory v. Broderrick, 1 Dowl. & R. 361; Ford v. Tiley, 6 Barn. & C. 325; Short v. Stone, 8 Q. B. 358; Lovelock v. Franklyn, 8 Q. B. 371; Newcomb v. Brackett, 16 Mass. 161; Cort v. Ambergate, N. & B. & E. Junction R. Co. 17 Q. B. 127; Elderton v. Emmons, 6 C. B. 160, Affirmed on appeal, 4 H. L. Cas. 624.

This doctrine has become the settled law of England as applied to executory contracts for the manufacture or sale of goods, and has been almost universally accepted by the courts of the United States.

Roper v. Johnson, L. R. 8 C. P. 167; Mersey Steel & I. Co. v. Naylor, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 434; Wharton, Contr. § 885a (1882); Bishop, Contr. § 1428 (1887); Lawson, Contr. § 440 (1893); Clark, Contr. p. 645 (1894); Anson, Contr. 8th ed. (1895) with American notes, p. 290; Windmuller v. Pope, 107 N. Y. 674, 14 N. E. 436; Zuck v. McClure, 98 Pa. 541; Hocking v. Hamilton, 158 Pa. 107, 27 Atl. 836; Dugan v. Anderson, 36 Md. 567, 11 Am. Rep. 509; Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 Mich. 291, 74 Am. Dec. 716; Crabtree v. Mcssersmith, 19 Iowa, 179; McCormick v. Basal, 46 Iowa, 235; Fox v. Kitton, 19 Ill. 519; Follansbee v. Adams, 86 Ill. 13; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L. R. A. 33, 38 N. E. 773; Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 275; Davis v. Grand Rapids School-Furniture Co. 41

W. Va. 717, 24 S. E. 630; Remy v. Olds, 88 Cal. 537, 26 Pac. 355; Hancock v. New York L. Ins. Co. 13 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 103, Fed. Cas. No. 6,011; Grau v. McVicker, 8 Biss. 13, Fed. Cas. No. 5,708; Dingley v. Oler, 11 Fed. Rep. 372; Foss-Schneider Brewing Co. v. Bullock, 16 U. S. App. 311, 59 Fed. Rep. 83, 8 C. C. A. 14; Edward Hines Lumber Co. v. Alley, 43 U. S. App. 169, 73 Fed. Rep. 603, 19 C. C. A. 599; Marks v. Van Eeghen, 57 U. S. App. 149, 85 Fed. Rep. 853, 30 C. C. A. 208; Mountjoy v. Metzger, 12 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 442.

Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, 19 Am. Rep. 384, is contrary to the spirit both of the earlier and the later Massachusetts decisions, if it is not directly opposed to them.

Newcomb v. Brackett, 16 Mass. 161; Heard v. Bowers, 23 Pick. 455; Parker v. Russell, 133 Mass. 74; Whitten v. New England Live Stock Ins. Co. 165 Mass. 343, 43 N. E. 121.

The Supreme Court of the United States, while it has never passed upon the question, has repeatedly adopted and applied the principle upon which the ruling of Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, is founded.

Smoot's Case, 15 Wall. 36, sub nom. United States v. Smoot, 21 L. ed. 107; United States v. Behan, 110 U. S. 338, 28 L. ed. 168, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 81; Lovell v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 264, 28 L. ed. 423, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; Hinckley v. Pittsburgh Bessemer Steel Co. 121 U. S. 264, 30 L. ed. 967, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 875; Anvil Min. Co. v. Humble, 153 U. S. 540, 38 L. ed. 814, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Pierce v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 173 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 591, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335.

[7] *Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

It is conceded that the contracts set out in the finding of facts were four of ten simultaneous contracts, for 100 bales each, covering the furnishings of 1,000 bales of hops during a period of five years, of which 600 bales had been delivered and paid for. If the transaction could be treated as amounting to a single contract for 1,000 bales, the breach alleged would have occurred while the contract was in the course of performance; but plaintiffs' declaration or statement of demand averred the execution of the four contracts, "two for the purchase and sale of Pacific coast hops of the crop of 1896, and two for the purchase and sale of Pacific coast hops of the crop of 1897," set them out in extenso, and claimed recovery for breach thereof, and in this view of the case, while as to the first of the four contracts the time to commence performance had arrived, and the October shipment had been tendered and refused, the breach as to the other three contracts was the refusal to perform before the time for performance had arrived.

The first contract falls within the rule that a contract may be broken by the renunciation of liability under it in the course of performance and suit may be immediately instituted. But the other three contracts involve the question whether, where the contract is renounced before performance is due, and the renunciation goes to the whole contract, and is absolute and unequivocal, the injured party may treat the breach as complete and bring his action at once. Defendant repudiated all *liability for hops of the [8] crop of 1896 and of the crop of 1897, and notified plaintiffs that he should make (according to a letter of his attorney in the record that he had made) arrangements to purchase his stock of other parties, whereupon plaintiffs brought suit. The question is therefore presented, in respect of the three contracts, whether plaintiffs were entitled to sue at once or were obliged to wait until the time came for the first month's delivery under each of them.

It is not disputed that if one party to a contract has destroyed the subject-matter, or disabled himself so as to make performance impossible, his conduct is equivalent to a breach of the contract, although the time for performance has not arrived; and also that if a contract provides for a series of acts, and actual default is made in the performance of one of them, accompanied by a refusal to perform the rest, the other party need not perform, but may treat the refusal as a breach of the entire contract, and recover accordingly.

And the doctrine that there may be an anticipatory breach of an executory contract by an absolute refusal to perform it has become the settled law of England as applied to contracts for services, for marriage, and for the manufacture or sale of goods. The cases are extensively commented on in the notes to Cutter v. Powell, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 1212, 1220, 9th edition by Richard Henn Collins and Arbuthnot. Some of these, though quite familiar, may well be referred to.

In Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, plaintiff, in April, 1852, had agreed to serve defendant, and defendant had undertaken to employ plaintiff, as courier, for three months from June 1st, on certain terms. On the 11th of May, defendant wrote plaintiff that he had changed his mind, and declined to avail himself of plaintiff's services. Thereupon, and on May 22d, plaintiff brought an action at law for breach of contract in that defendant, before the said 1st of June, though plaintiff was always ready and willing to perform, refused to engage plaintiff or perform his promise, and then wrongfully exonerated plaintiff from the performance of the agreement, to his damage. And it was ruled that as there could be a breach of contract before the time fixed for performance, a positive and *abso- [9] lute refusal to carry out the contract prior to the date of actual default amounted to such a breach.

In the course of the argument, Mr. Justice Crompton observed: "When a party announces his intention not to fulfil the contract, the other side may take him at his word and rescind the contract. That word 'rescind' implies that both parties have agreed that the contract shall be at an end, as if it had never been. But I am inclined to think that the party may also say: 'Since you have announced that you will not go on with the contract, I will consent that it shall be at an end from this time; but I will hold you liable for the damage I have sustained; and I will proceed to make that damage as little as possible by making the best use I can of my liberty.'"

In delivering the opinion of the court (Campbell, Ch. J., Coleridge, Erle, and Crompton, JJ.), Lord Campbell, after pointing out that at common law there were numerous cases in which an anticipatory act, such as an act rendering the contract impossible of performance, or disabling the party from performing it, would constitute a breach giving an immediate right of action, laid it down that a positive and unqualified refusal by one party to carry out the contract should be treated as belonging to the same category as such anticipatory acts, and said:

"But it is surely much more rational, and more for the benefit of both parties, that, after the renunciation of the agreement by the defendant, the plaintiff should be at liberty to consider himself absolved from any future performance of it, retaining his right to sue for any damage he has suffered from the breach of it. Thus, instead of remaining idle and laying out money in preparations which must be useless, he is at liberty to seek service under another employer, which would go in mitigation of the damages to which he would otherwise be entitled for a breach of the contract. It seems strange that the defendant, after renouncing the contract and absolutely declaring that he will never act under it, should be permitted to object that faith is given to his assertion, and that an opportunity is not left to him of changing his mind. If the plaintiff is barred of any remedy by entering into an engagement inconsistent with starting as a courier with the defendant on the 1st June, he is [10] *prejudiced by putting faith in the defendant's assertion; and it would be more consonant with principle if the defendant were precluded from saying that he had not broken the contract when he declared that he entirely renounced it. Suppose that the defendant, at the time of his renunciation, had embarked on a voyage for Australia, so as to render it physically impossible for him to employ the plaintiff as a courier on the continent of Europe in the months of June, July, and August, 1852; according to decided cases, the action might have been brought before the 1st of June; but the renunciation may have been founded on other facts, to be given in evidence, which would equally have rendered the defendant's performance of the contract impossible. The man who wrongfully renounces a contract into which he has deliberately entered cannot justly complain if he is immediately sued for a compensation in damages by the man whom he has injured; and it seems reasonable to allow an option to the injured party, either to sue immediately, or to wait till the time when the act was to be done, still holding it as prospectively binding for the exercise of this 178 U. S. option, which may be advantageous to the innocent party, and cannot be prejudicial to the wrongdoer. An argument against the action before the 1st of June is urged from the difficulty of calculating the damages; but this argument is equally strong against an action before the 1st of September, when the three months would expire. In either case, the jury in assessing the damages would be justified in looking to all that had happened, or was likely to happen, to increase or mitigate the loss of the plaintiff down to the day of trial. We do not find any decision contrary to the view we are taking of this case."

In Frost v. Knight, L. R. 7 Exch. 111, defendant had promised to marry plaintiff so soon as his (defendant's) father should die. While his father was yet alive he absolutely refused to marry plaintiff, and it was held in the exchequer chamber, overruling the decision of the court of exchequer (L. R. 5 Exch. 322), that for this breach an action was well brought during the father's lifetime. Cockburn, Ch. J., said: "The law with reference to a contract to be performed at a future time, where the party bound to performance announces prior to the time his intention *not to perform it, as established [11] by the cases of Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, and the Danube & B. S. Railway & K. Harbour Co. v. Xenos, 13 C. B. N. S. 825, on the one hand, and Avery v. Bowden, 5 El. & Bl. 714; Reid v. Hoskins, 6 El. & Bl. 953, and Barrick v. Buba, 2 C. B. N. S. 563, on the other, may be thus stated: The promisee, if he pleases, may treat the notice of intention as inoperative, and await the time when the contract is to be executed, and then hold the other party responsible for all the consequences of nonperformance; but in that case he keeps the contract alive for the benefit of the other party as well as his own; he remains subject to all his own obligations and liabilities under it, and enables the other party, not only to complete the contract, if so advised, notwithstanding his previous repudiation of it, but also to take advantage of any supervening circumstance which would justify him in declining to complete it. On the other hand, the promisee may, if he thinks proper, treat the repudiation of the other party as a wrongful putting an end to the contract, and may at once bring his action as on a breach of it; and in such action he will be entitled to such damages as would have arisen from the nonperformance of the contract at the appointed time, subject, however, to abatement in respect of any circumstances which may have afforded him the means of mitigating his loss."

The case of Danube & B. S. Railway & K. Harbour Co. v. Xenos, 11 C. B. N. S. 152, is stated in the headnotes thus: On the 9th of July, A, by his agent, agreed to receive certain goods of B on board his ship to be carried to a foreign port,—the shipment to commence on the 1st of August. On the 21st of July A wrote to B, stating that he did not hold himself responsible for the contract, the agent having no authority to make it; and on the 23d he wrote again offering a substituted contract, but still repudiating the original contract. B, by his attorneys, gave A notice that he should hold him bound by the original contract, and that, if he persisted in refusing to perform it, he (B) should forthwith proceed to make other arrangements for forwarding the goods to their destination, and look to him for any loss. On the 1st of August, A again wrote to B, stating that he was then prepared to receive the goods on board his ship, making no allusion [12] to *the original contract. B had, however, in the meantime entered into a negotiation with one S for the conveyance of the goods by another ship, which negotiation ended in a contract for that purpose with S on the 2d of August. B thereupon sued A for refusing to receive the goods pursuant to his contract; and A brought a cross action against B for refusing to ship. Upon a special case stating these facts: Held, that it was competent to A to treat B's renunciation as a breach of the contract; and that the fact of such renunciation afforded a good answer to the cross action of A, and sustained B's plea that before breach A discharged him from the performance of the agreement.

Erle, Ch. J., said (p. 175): "In Cort v. Ambergate, N. & B. & E. Junction R. Co. 17 Q. B. 127, it was held that, upon the company giving notice to Mr. Cort that they would not receive any more of his chairs, he might abstain from manufacturing them and sue the company for the breach of contract without tendering the goods for their acceptance. So, in Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, it was held that the courier whose services were engaged for a period to commence from a future day, being told before that day that they would not be accepted, was at liberty to treat that as a complete breach, and to hire himself to another party. And the boundary is equally well ascertained on the other side. Thus, in Avery v. Bowden, 5 El. & Bl. 714, 6 El. & Bl. 953, where the agent of the charterer intimated to the captain that, in consequence of the breaking out of the war, he would be unable to furnish him with a cargo, and wished the captain to sail away, and the latter did not do so, it was not to fall within the principle already adverted to, and not to amount to a breach or renunciation of the contract. But where there is an explicit declaration by the one party of his intention not to perform the contract on his part, which is accepted by the other as a breach of the contract, that beyond all doubt affords a cause of action."

The case was heard on error in the exchequer chamber before Cockburn, Ch. J., Pollock, C. B., Wightman, J., Crompton, J., Channell, B., and Wilde, B.; and the judgment of the common pleas was unanimously affirmed. 13 C. B. N. S. 825.

[13] In Johnstone v. Milling, L. R. 16 Q. B. Div. 467, Lord Esher, Master *of the Rolls, puts the principle thus: "When one party assumes to renounce the contract, that is, by anticipation refuses to perform it, he thereby, so far as he is concerned, declares his intention then and there to rescind the contract. Such a renunciation does not, of course, amount to a rescission of the contract, because one party to a contract cannot by himself rescind it, but by wrongfully making such a renunciation of the contract he entitles the other party, if he pleases, to agree to the contract being put an end to, subject to the retention by him of his right to bring an action in respect of such wrongful rescission. The other party may adopt such renunciation of the contract by so acting upon it as in effect to declare that he too treats the contract as at an end, except for the purpose of bringing an action upon it for the damages sustained by him in consequence of such renunciation."

Lord Justice Bowen said (p. 472): "We have, therefore, to consider upon what principles and under what circumstances it must be held that a promisee, who finds himself confronted with a declaration of intention by the promisor not to carry out the contract when the time for performance arrives, may treat the contract as broken, and sue for the breach thereof. It would seem on principle that the declaration of such intention by the promisor is not in itself and unless acted on by the promisee a breach of the contract; and that it only becomes a breach when it is converted by force of what follows it into a wrongful renunciation of the contract. Its real operation appears to be to give the promisee the right of electing either to treat the declaration as brutum fulmen, and, holding fast to the contract, to wait till the time for its performance has arrived, or to act upon it and treat it as a final assertion by the promisor that he is no longer bound by the contract, and a wrongful renunciation of the contractual relation into which he has entered. But such declaration only becomes a wrongful act if the promisee elects to treat it as such. If he does so elect, it becomes a breach of contract, and he can recover upon it as such."

The doctrine which thus obtains in England has been almost universally accepted by the courts of this country, although the precise point has not been ruled by this court.

*In Smoot's Case, 15 Wall. 36, 48, sub nom. [14] United States v. Smoot, 21 L. ed. 107, 110, Mr. Justice Miller observed: "In the case of Phillpotts v. Evans, 5 Mees. & W. 475, the defendant, who had agreed to receive and pay for wheat, notified the plaintiff, before the time of delivery, that he would not receive it. The plaintiff tendered the wheat at the proper time, and the only question raised was, whether the measure of damages should be governed by the price of the wheat at the time of the notice or at the time of the tender. Baron Parke said: 'I think no action would have lain for the breach of the contract at the time of the notice, but that plaintiff was bound to wait until the time of delivery to see whether the defendant would then receive it. The defendant might have chosen to take it and would have been guilty of no breach of contract. His contract was not broken by his previous declaration that he would not accept.' And though some of the judges in the subsequent case of Hochster v. De la Tour, 2 El. & Bl. 678, disapprove very properly of the extreme ground taken by Baron Parke, they all agree that the refusal to accept, on the part of the defendant, in such case, must be absolute and unequivocal, and must have been acted on by the plaintiff."

In Lovell v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 111 U. S. 264, 28 L. ed. 423, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390, a life insurance company had terminated its business and transferred its assets and policies to another company, and the court held that this in itself authorized the insured to treat the contract as at an end, and to sue to recover back the premiums already paid, although the time for the performance of the obligation of the insurance company, to wit, the death of the insured, had not arrived. Mr. Justice Bradley, delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Our third conclusion is that, as the old company totally abandoned the performance of its contract with the complainant by transferring all its assets and obligations to the new company, and as the contract is executory in its nature, the complainant had a right to consider it as determined by the act of the company, and to demand what was justly due to him in that exigency. Of this we think there can be no doubt. Where one party to an executory contract prevents the performance of it, or puts it out of his own power to perform [15] *it, the other party may regard it as terminated and demand whatever damage he has sustained thereby."

In Dingley v. Oler, 117 U. S. 490, 29 L. ed. 984, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850, it was held that the case did not come within the rule laid down in Hochster v. De la Tour, but within Avery v. Bowden and Johnstone v. Milling, since, in the view entertained by the court, there was not a renunciation of the contract by a total refusal to perform.

So in Cleveland Rolling Mill v. Rhodes, 121 U. S. 255, 264, 30 L. ed. 920, 923, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 882, involving a contract for the delivery of iron ore, the court said: "The necessary conclusion is that the defendant was justified in refusing to accept any of the iron shipped in 1881; and whether the notice previously given by the defendant to the plaintiff, that it would not accept under the contract any iron made after December 31, 1880, might have been treated by the plaintiffs as a renunciation and a breach of the contract, need not be considered, because the plaintiffs did not act upon it as such."

In Anvil Min. Co. v. Humble, 153 U. S. 540, 38 L. ed. 814, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876, performance had been commenced, but completion was prevented by defendant, and Mr. Justice Brewer, speaking for the court, said: "Whenever one party thereto is guilty of such a breach as is here attributed to the defendant the other party is at liberty to treat the contract as broken and desist from any further effort on his part to perform; in other words, he may abandon it, and recover as damages the profits which he would have received through full performance. Such an abandonment is not technically a rescission of the contract, but is merely an acceptance of the situation which the wrongdoing of the other party has brought about."
178 U. S.

In Pierce v. Tennessee Coal, I. & R. Co. 173 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 591, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 335, it was held that on discharge from a contract of employment the party discharged might elect to treat the contract as absolutely and finally broken, and in an action recover the full value of the contract to him at the time of the breach, including all that he would have received in the future as well as in the past, deducting any sum that he might have earned or that he might thereafter earn; and Mr. Justice Gray said: "The plaintiff was not bound to wait to see if the defendant would change its decision and take him back into its service; or to resort to *successive actions for damages from [16] time to time; or to leave the whole of his damages to be recovered by his personal representatives after his death. But he had the right to elect to treat the contract as absolutely and finally broken by the defendant; to maintain this action, once for all, as for a total breach of the entire contract."

In Hancock v. New York L. Ins. Co. Fed. Cas. No. 6,011, Hochster v. De la Tour was followed by Bond, J., in the circuit court for the eastern district of Virginia; and in Grau v. McVicker, 8 Biss. 13, Fed. Cas. No. 5,708, Drummond, J., fully approved of the principles decided in that case, and remarked: "It seems to me that it is the better rule to hold that the party who has refused to perform his contract is liable at once to an action, and that whatever arises afterwards, or may arise in consequence of the time not having come or not having expired, should be considered in estimating the damages."

Again, in Dingley v. Oler, 11 Fed. Rep. 372, Lowell, J., applied the rule in the circuit court for the district of Maine, and, after citing Hochster v. De la Tour, Frost v. Knight, and other cases, said: "These cases seem to me to be founded in good sense, and to rest on strong grounds of convenience, however difficult it may be to reconcile them with the strictest logic." And see Foss-Schneider Brewing Co. v. Bullock, 16 U. S. App. 311, 59 Fed. Rep. 83, 8 C. C. A. 14; Edward Hines Lumber Co. v. Alley, 43 U. S. App. 169, 73 Fed. Rep. 603, 19 C. C. A. 599; Marks v. Van Eeghen, 57 U. S. App. 149, 85 Fed. Rep. 853, 30 C. C. A. 208.

The great weight of authority in the state courts is to the same effect, as will appear by reference to the cases cited in the margin.†

†Fox v. Kitton, 19 Ill. 518; Kadish v. Young, 108 Ill. 170, 43 Am. Rep. 548; John A. Roebing's Sons' Co. v. Lock-Stitch Fence Co. 130 Ill. 660, 22 N. E. 518; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 30 L. R. A. 33, 38 N. E. 773; Burtis v. Thompson, 42 N. Y. 246, 1 Am. Rep. 516; Windmuller v. Pope, 107 N. Y. 674, 14 N. E. 436; Mountjoy v. Metzger, 9 Phila. 10; Zuck v. McClure, 98 Pa. 541; Hocking v. Hamilton, 158 Pa. 107, 27 Atl. 836; Dugan v. Anderson, 36 Md. 567, 11 Am. Rep. 509; Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 Mich. 294, 74 Am. Dec. 716; Platt v. Brand, 26 Mich. 173; Crabtree v. Messersmith, 19 Iowa, 179; McCormick v. Basal, 46 Iowa, 235; Kurtz v. Frank, 76 Ind. 594, 40 Am. Rep. 275; Cobb v. Hall, 33 Vt. 233; Davis v. Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. 41 W. Va. 717, 24 S. E. 630; and other cases cited in the text-books and encyclopædias.

On the other hand, in Greenway v. Gaither, [17] Taney, 227, Fed. Cas. No. 5,788, *Mr. Chief Justice Taney, sitting on circuit in Maryland, declined to apply the rule in that particular case. The cause was tried in November, 1851, and more than two years after, at November term, 1853, application was made to the chief justice to seal a bill of exceptions. Hochster v. De la Tour was decided in June, 1853, and the decision of the circuit court had apparently been contrary to the rule laid down in that case. The chief justice refused to seal the bill, chiefly on the ground that under the circumstances the application came too late, but also on the ground that there was no error, as the rule was only applicable to contracts of the special character involved in that case, and the chief justice said as to the contract in hand, by which defendant engaged to pay certain sums of money on certain days: "It has never been supposed that notice to the holder of a bond, or a promissory note, or bill of exchange, that the party would not (from any cause) comply with the contract, would give to the holder an immediate cause of action upon which he might sue before the time of payment arrived."

The rule is disapproved in Daniels v. Newton, 114 Mass. 530, and in Stanford v. McGill, 6 N. D. 536, 38 L. R. A. 760, 72 N. W. 938, on elaborate consideration. The opinion of Judge Wells in Daniels v. Newton is generally regarded as containing all that could be said in opposition to the decision of Hochster v. De la Tour, and one of the propositions on which the opinion rests is that the adoption of the rule in the instance of ordinary contracts would necessitate its adoption in the case of commercial paper. But we are unable to assent to that view. In the case of an ordinary money contract, such as a promissory note, or a bond, the consideration has passed; there are no mutual obligations; and cases of that sort do not fall within the reason of the rule.

In Nichols v. Scranton Steel Co. 137 N. Y. 487, 33 N. E. 566, Mr. Justice Peckham, then a member of the court of appeals of New York, thus expresses the distinction: "It is not intimated that in the bald case of a party bound to pay a promissory note which rests in the hands of the payee, but which is not yet due, such note can be made due by any notice of the maker that he does not intend to pay it when it matures. We decide simply this case where there are material provisions and *obligations interdependent. In such case, and where one party is bound, from time to time, as expressed, to deliver part of an aggregate and specified amount of property to another, who is to pay for each parcel delivered at a certain time and in a certain way, a refusal to be further bound by the terms of the contract or to accept further deliveries, and a refusal to give the notes already demandable for a portion of the property that has been delivered, and a refusal to give any more notes at any time or for any purpose in the future, or to pay moneys at any time, which are eventually to be paid under the contract, all this constitutes a breach of the contract as a whole, and gives a present right of action against the party so refusing to recover damages which the other may sustain by reason of this refusal."

We think it obvious that both as to renunciation after commencement of performance and renunciation before the time for performance has arrived, money contracts, pure and simple, stand on a different footing from executory contracts for the purchase and sale of goods.

The other proposition on which the case of Daniels v. Newton was rested is that until the time for performance arrives neither contracting party can suffer any injury which can form a ground of damages. Wells, J., said: "An executory contract ordinarily confers no title or interest in the subject-matter of the agreement. Until the time arrives when by the terms of the agreement he is or might be entitled to its performance, he can suffer no injury or deprivation which can form a ground of damages. There is neither violation of right, nor loss upon which to found an action."

But there are many cases in which, before the time fixed for performance, one of the contracting parties may do that which amounts to a breach and furnishes a ground of damages. It has always been the law that where a party deliberately incapacitates himself or renders performance of his contract impossible, his act amounts to an injury to the other party, which gives the other party a cause of action for breach of contract; yet this would seem to be inconsistent with the reasoning in Daniels v. Newton, though it is not there in terms decided "that *an absolute refusal to perform [19] a contract, after the time and under the conditions in which plaintiff is entitled to require performance, is not a breach of the contract, even although the contract is by its terms to continue in the future." Parker v. Russell, 133 Mass. 74.

In truth, the opinion goes upon a distinction between cases of renunciation before the arrival of the time of performance and those of renunciation of unmaturing obligations of a contract while it is in course of performance, and it is said that before the argument on the ground of convenience and mutual advantage to the parties can properly have weight, "the point to be reached must first be shown to be consistent with logical deductions from the strictly legal aspects of the case."

We think that there can be no controlling distinction on this point between the two classes of cases, and that it is proper to consider the reasonableness of the conclusion that the absolute renunciation of particular contracts constitutes such a breach as to justify immediate action and recovery therefor. The parties to a contract which is wholly executory have a right to the maintenance of the contractual relations up to the time for performance, as well as to a performance of the contract when due. If it appear that the party who makes an absolute refusal intends thereby to put an end to the contract so far as performance is concerned, and that the other party must accept this position, why should there not be speedy action and settlement in regard to the rights of the parties? Why should a locus pœnitentiæ be awarded to the party whose wrongful action has placed the other at such disadvantage? What reasonable distinction per se is there between liability for a refusal to perform future acts to be done under a contract in course of performance and liability for a refusal to perform the whole contract made before the time for commencement of performance?

[20] As Lord Chief Justice Cockburn observed in Frost v. Knight, the promisee has the right to insist on the contract as subsisting and effective before the arrival of the time for its performance, and its unimpaired and unimpeached efficacy may be essential to his interests, dealing as he may with rights acquired under it in various ways for his benefit and advantage. And of all *such advantage, the repudiation of the contract by the other party, and the announcement that it never will be fulfilled, must of course deprive him; while, by acting on such repudiation and the taking of timely measures, the promisee may in many cases avert, or, at all events, materially lessen, the injurious effects which would otherwise flow from the nonfulfilment of the contract.

During the argument of Cort v. Ambergate, N. & B. & E. Junction R. Co. 17 Q. B. 127, Erle, J., made this suggestion: "Suppose the contract was that plaintiff should send a ship to a certain port for cargo, and defendant should there load one on board; but defendant wrote word that he could not furnish a cargo; must the ship be sent to return empty?" And if it was not necessary for the ship owner to send his ship, it is not perceived why he should be compelled to wait until the time fixed for the loading of the ship at the remote port before bringing suit upon the contract.

If in this case these ten hop contracts had been written into one contract for the supply of hops for five years in instalments, then when the default happened in October, 1896, it cannot be denied that an immediate action could have been brought in which damages could have been recovered in advance for the breach of the agreement to deliver during the two remaining years. But treating the four outstanding contracts as separate contracts, why is it not equally reasonable that an unqualified and positive refusal to perform them constitutes such a breach that damages could be recovered in an immediate action? Why should plaintiff be compelled to bring four suits instead of one? For the reasons above stated, and having reference to the state of the authorities on the subject, our conclusion is that the rule laid down in Hochster v. De la Tour is a reasonable and proper rule to be applied in this case and in many others arising out of the transactions of commerce of the present day.

As to the question of damages, if the action is not premature, the rule is applicable that plaintiff is entitled to compensation based, as far as possible, on the ascertainment of what he would have suffered by the continued breach of the other party down to the time of complete performance, less any abatement by *reason of circumstances of [21] which he ought reasonably to have availed himself. If a vendor is to manufacture goods, and during the process of manufacture the contract is repudiated, he is not bound to complete the manufacture, and estimate his damages by the difference between the market price and the contract price, but the measure of damage is the difference between the contract price and the cost of performance. Hinckley v. Pittsburgh Bessemer Steel Co. 121 U. S. 264, 30 L. ed. 967, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 875. Even if in such cases the manufacturer actually obtains his profits before the time fixed for performance, and recovers on a basis of cost which might have been increased or diminished by subsequent events, the party who broke the contract before the time for complete performance cannot complain, for he took the risk involved in such anticipation. If the vendor has to buy instead of to manufacture, the same principle prevails, and he may show what was the value of the contract by showing for what price he could have made subcontracts, just as the cost of manufacture in the case of a manufacturer may be shown. Although he may receive his money earlier in this way, and may gain, or lose, by the estimation of his damage in advance of the time for performance, still, as we have seen, he has the right to accept the situation tendered him, and the other party cannot complain.

In this case plaintiffs showed at what prices they could have made subcontracts for forward deliveries according to the contracts in suit, and the difference between the prices fixed by the contracts sued on and those was correctly allowed.

Judgment affirmed.

*H. C. OSBORNE, William Knapp, A. Bar-[22]
ber, et al., Appts.,
v.

SAN DIEGO LAND & TOWN COMPANY OF MAINE.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 22-40.)

Bill of review—water rights—power to increase.

1. A bill of review will lie for errors in a de-

NOTE.—As to bill of review; nature of; when may be brought; who may maintain; time within which to be brought; what it should contain—see note to Bank of United States v. Ritchie, 8 L. ed. U. S. 890.

As to when a bill of review may be brought and for what—see note to Shelton v. Van Kleeck, 27 L. ed. U. S. 269.

As to necessity of leave to file bill of review after decision on appeal—see Franklin Sav. Bank v. Taylor, 4 C. C. A. 55, and note.

As to right to maintain bill of review as dependent upon interest—see Thorington v. Thorington (Ala.) 36 L. R. A. 385, and note.

As to legislative regulation of water rates—see note to Winchester & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Croxton (Ky.) 33 L. R. A. 177.

cree that are apparent on the face of the record.

2. The annual rates for water as first fixed are not made irrevocable by a contract for the sale of water rights for a fixed sum, providing in addition for the payment of annual rates, to "be fixed by the party of the first part [the water company] as allowed by law."
3. The power of a water company to increase its annual water rates, in the absence of any attempt by the board of supervisors to fix such rates, is not precluded by Cal. act 1885, §§ 5, 8, giving the supervisors power to fix such rates, and providing that until so established, or after they shall have been abrogated by the board of supervisors, "the actual rates established and collected" by those who furnish water shall be deemed and accepted as the legal established rates thereof.
4. The court will not fix the amount of water rates on holding that the rates charged are unreasonable, but, under Cal. act 1885, resort must first be had to the body designated by the law to fix proper rates, which is the board of supervisors.

[No. 201.]

Argued March 19, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of California dismissing a bill of review. Affirmed.

See same case below, 76 Fed. Rep. 319.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

[22] *This is a bill in equity to review and reverse a decree entered in the United States circuit court for the southern district of California in a suit in which Charles D. Lanning, receiver of the San Diego Land & Town Company of Kansas, was complainant, and appellants herein were respondents, and in which the appellee was substituted before decree as complainant in lieu of said Lanning.

The bill is extremely voluminous, reciting all the pleadings and proceedings in the original suit.

The following is a condensed summary of them:

The bill, in addition to the incorporation of the company and the appointment of a receiver of its assets and affairs, alleged that it was the owner of valuable water, and water rights, reservoirs, and an entire water system for furnishing water to consumers, and that it had a franchise for impounding, sale, and disposition of the waters owned and stored by it to the respondents and other consumers, and to the city of National City and its inhabitants.

[23] The company's supply of water came from the Sweetwater river, a small stream about 5 miles from the city of National City, and its means of distributing the water, which were described, *could supply but a limited amount of territory, consisting of farming lands within and outside of said city, and in part of the residence portion of the city.

The company in procuring the water and its distributing system had expended up to January 1, 1896, the sum of $1,022,473.54, which was reasonably necessary for the purposes.

By the said expenditure it had procured and owned, "subject to the public use and the regulation thereof by law," water and water rights, a reservoir site, and a reservoir of the capacity of six thousand million gallons, and had constructed mains necessary to supply the defendants and their lands, and had constructed and put in the mains and pipes necessary therefor, and was at the time mentioned in the bill furnishing the defendants and each of them with water.

The defendants are the owners respectively of tracts of land under the system of the company, most of them of only a few acres each, and each became the owner of a water right to a part of the water of the company necessary to irrigate his tract of land, and became liable to pay for a yearly rental such as the company was entitled to charge and collect.

The annual expense of the system and its operation, including interest on its bonds, and excluding the natural and necessary depreciation, was $33,034.77, and to pay this expense and income of 6 per cent on the amount invested on the 1st of January, 1896, it was necessary that the rates for water be fixed to realize $119,791.66.

The amount realized outside of the city of National City for that year was about $15,000, and no more than that sum could be probably realized for the year ending January 1, 1897.

The mains and pipes were perishable, and required to be replaced at least once in sixteen years, and required frequent repairs.

To acquire the water and construct the system, the company was compelled to borrow $300,000, and to pay interest in the sum of $21,000 annually, which must be realized from the sale of its water, and was part of its operating expenses, and the share of its revenues which should be raised in the city of National City was about one third, and the amount which could *be raised from said city [24] at the rates which prevailed under the ordinance mentioned in the bill was about $10,715 per annum, and no more.

The value of its water franchises and system was $1,100,000.

No other person or corporation was furnishing water to defendants, nor was there any other system by which they could be furnished, but the franchises and the rights of the company were not exclusive.

The city of National City was a municipal corporation of California, of the sixth class, and the board of trustees thereof, claiming to act under the Constitution and laws of the state, passed an ordinance fixing the rates to be charged for water sold and furnished by the company to consumers of the city.

The company commenced to furnish water in the year 1887, and was informed by its engineer that its system and supply of water would furnish to consumers sufficient to irrigate 20,000 acres, and in addition what would be necessary for domestic use inside and outside of said city. The company was unfamiliar with the operation of the plant and system constructed and the cost of operating and maintaining them, and relying upon the estimates of the engineer, and believing that an annual rate of $3.50 per acre would be sufficient, fixed the rate at such sum, and had charged it until January 1, 1896, but instead of being able to supply sufficient water to irrigate 20,000 acres, it had been demonstrated by actual experience that the system would not supply sufficient to irrigate to exceed 7,000 acres, together with water demanded for domestic use, and it was believed not to exceed 6,000 acres, although there were about 10,000 acres under the system susceptible of irrigation.

At the rate of $3.50 per acre, even if all the lands of the system should be supplied with water and the rates in National City should be maintained, the company would not be able to pay operating expenses and maintain its plant, and the money invested in it would be lost, and the company would be compelled to furnish water at a loss, as it had been furnishing water at a loss, and its system had been going gradually to decay [25] consequent *upon the want of revenue and means to replace the same.

To pay cost of operating and maintaining its system and a reasonable interest it was necessary to charge $7 for irrigation purposes, and said sum was a reasonable rate for consumers to pay, and the smallest amount for which the company could furnish water without loss.

By the laws of California the board of supervisors might upon petition of twenty-five inhabitants and taxpayers of the county fix the yearly rental for water, but no such petition had been presented or rates fixed in the case of the company.

For the reasons above stated the company gave notice to the defendant that on January 1, 1896, it would establish a rental of $7 per acre.

The defendants and each of them refused to pay such sum, and maintain that neither the company nor its receiver had the power to increase the rental, and that the former rate must be and remain the rental until the board of supervisors establish one as provided by law.

The increase of the rental was absolutely necessary to maintain and operate the plant.

To enforce the rental the complainant caused the water to be shut off the premises of each of the defendants, and each of them threatened and would, unless restrained by the court from doing so, commence a suit in the superior court of San Diego county, California, to compel complainant to turn on and furnish water again, claiming the use for $3.50 per acre, and for damages. The rights of the defendants and the determination of the question of the right of the company would affect all in the same way and extent, except the quantity of land owned by the several defendants was different.

The bringing of said suits would involve complainant in a multiplicity of suits, would hinder him in the operation of the property of the company and the settlement of its [25] 178 U. S.

debts and obligations, and the questions involved could better be settled in one suit.

The increase in rates would add to the revenue of the company with the amount of land now under irrigation, not less *than [26] $14,000 per annum, and upon the whole of the land which could be irrigated not less than $20,000 per annum.

There were allegations of the legal character of certain of the defendants, and the bill concluded with the following prayer:

"Wherefore your orator prays your honors to grant to him the writ of injunction against the defendants and each of them, enjoining them from prosecuting in the state courts or elsewhere separate actions against your orator or said land and town company; that said defendants and each of them be required to appear in this suit and set up any claims they may have against the right of your orator or said company to increase the rental for water furnished by said company, as aforesaid, and that it be finally decreed by this court that your orator, as such receiver, and said company have the right to increase the amount of its rentals to any reasonable sum, and that the sum of $7 per acre per annum is a reasonable rental to be charged, and that the defendants and each of them be required to pay said rate as a condition upon which water shall be furnished to them, and that your orator shall have generally such other and further relief as the nature of his case may require."

The answer was very long and somewhat confused by repetitions. The substance of it is given in the opinion of the circuit court. 76 Fed. Rep. 319.

It is sufficient for the purpose to say that its allegations and defenses were based on the claim that the supply and system of the company were subject "to the water rights, easements in, and servitudes upon said reservoir and system, and to all other rights acquired by these defendants therein . . . and annexed to the respective parcels of lands of these defendants. And also each such water right and easement was in freehold and was a freehold servitude imposed upon said water system for the benefit of the land to which it was appurtenant, and that all claims and demands of said company for the price or compensation therefor had been paid or otherwise satisfied by purchase or otherwise, as in the bill of complaint alleged." And such rights extended to and included the right to have the company maintain that system efficiently to conduct the water to the premises of each of the defendants for irrigation, and other *uses, at "the annual rates to be [27] deemed and accepted as the legally established rates therefor under the facts hereinafter set forth."

These facts were, besides those stated in the opinion, that each defendant and all of them paid the full amount demanded by the company as the price of the perpetual easement of water supply from the system granted and annexed to their lands, and that they were forever discharged from the payment of any further sum to apply on the principal of or as income upon the cost or value of the system or debt incurred for its construction or the value of their respective water rights. And that in these respects the company had put all lands on an equal footing, and they had remained on the same footing for more than five years, and in many cases had changed hands; that the value of the water rights had for more than five years entered into the market value of the lands and the price paid to their vendors by the defendants, who were their successors in title, and they were induced to purchase, improve, and settle upon their respective parcels on account of the rate of $3.50 per acre per annum, and it entered into and became a material element of their value.

That by the Constitution of the state of 1879, it is provided in article 14, § 1, among other things, as follows, to wit:

"The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the state, in the manner to be prescribed by law."

"Sec. 2. The right to collect rates or compensation for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and cannot be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law."

And in pursuance of the provision the legislature passed an act approved March 12, 1885, entitled "An Act to Regulate and Control the Sale, Rental, and Distribution of Appropriated Water in the State Other than in Any City, City and County, or Town Therein, and to Secure the Rights of Way for the Conveyance of Such Water to the Places of Use."

[28] *The act provided that the sale and distribution of appropriated water was a public use, and the right to collect compensation therefor a franchise, and, except when furnished by a city or town, should be regulated and controlled by the board of supervisors of the counties of the state in the manner prescribed, and that the board might establish different rates as the case might be, and different rates for the several different uses, such as mining, irrigating, etc., for which the water should be applied, and the rates fixed should be binding and conclusive for a year, until established anew or abrogated. And it was provided that until the boards of supervisors establish rates, the rates "actually established and collected . . . should be deemed and accepted as the legally established rates."

That the rate of $3.50 per acre was the only actual rate for irrigation which had ever been established and collected by the company or its receiver, or assented to by consumers.

That they each had since January 1, 1896, paid the rate of $3.50 per acre to the complainant as receiver, and were willing and offered to pay the same as long as it should be legally established. And it was averred that in so far as the act of 1885 purported to prohibit the company from the sale of servitudes in freehold upon its system, or to contract respecting the same, or to receive full compensation from any consumer therefor who was willing to contract for the same, and to prescribe that such easement should be used only upon the terms and conditions that the owners render net annual receipts and profits upon the value thereof in perpetuity, or to prohibit contracts respecting the annual receipts, or to extinguish and satisfy the right of the company to such net annual receipts, the same was unconstitutional and void, and in conflict with the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and § 1, article 9, of the Constitution of the state.

That the liability of the defendants to pay rates was several, not joint, and that certain of the defendants were not residents of the state, certain others not residents of the county of San Diego, and others were school districts, and that none of them were competent to make petition to the board of supervisors, as required in the act of 1885, and said act, as far as it purported *to authorize the company to increase the rates of $3.50 per acre, was in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and deprived each of them of his or her property without due process of law, and to each of them the equal protection of the laws. [29]

That in so far as the statute of 1885 purported to authorize the company to shut off water from the lands of defendants or to increase the rate without consent of the defendants, or to permit its collection without giving the defendants a standing in court to contest the reasonableness of the increase, was also in violation of said Fourteenth Amendment. And, also, that the complainant, by shutting off water, violated that amendment.

The bill of review then averred that there were exceptions taken to the answer on the ground that it did not set forth or discover relative and material matters of fact tending to show that the bill was not true or in confession or avoidance thereof, but instead set forth immaterial and irrelevant matter.

Each exception was specific, but altogether they went to the whole answer except its admissions and certain of its denials.

It was prayed that the defendants be compelled to amend the answer, and to put in a full and sufficient one.

The exceptions coming on to be heard, they were sustained—the defendants excepted.

By order of the court, on motion of complainant, Charles D. Lanning was discharged as receiver, and the San Diego Land & Town Company of Maine was substituted as complainant—defendants excepted.

A notice was given of a motion to be made that the bill in the suit be taken pro confesso, and a decree of the court be taken accordingly, on the ground that the exceptions to the answer had been sustained and no amended answer had been filed within the time allowed.

The motion came on to be heard, and, pending its hearing, the defendants gave notice

[30] of a motion to dismiss the suit on the ground that the receiver had been discharged, the property had been sold under foreclosure, and had passed into the hands of another corporation; that the San Diego Land & Town Company *of Maine was not the successor of the receiver, and had no interest or right to prosecute the action, and that the board of supervisors of San Diego county had fixed the rates of the company.

The two motions came on to be heard on the 2d of January, 1898, and the motion to dismiss was denied, and the motion that the bill be taken pro confesso against all the defendants was granted, and a decree ordered to be entered according to the opinion of the court. The defendants excepted.

The bill of review further averred that the court caused to be entered, greatly to the prejudice of the orators, its decree which was set out at length. It further averred that the defendants had paid the costs adjudged against them, and detailed at length their exceptions to the ruling of the court. The exceptions reasserted the materiality and sufficiency of the averments of the answer, contended that the court misapprehended them, and erroneously treated and considered the exceptions as raising for discussion the merits of the case, and by expunging the answer from the records deprived the defendants of the right to have the merits of their defenses on their face regularly determined upon the setting of the cause for hearing on bill and answer or upon issues raised and proofs made.

[31] The bill of review asserted further errors against the decree in that it denied the rights alleged in the answer of defendants, and so construed and enforced the Constitution and statutes of the state as to violate § 1, art. 14 of the Constitution of the United States, in that it maintained the company and the receiver in increasing the rate, and the condition of nonpayment the right to shut off the water from the lands of the defendants, and thereby deprived them of the equal protection of the laws and of their property without due process of law. And further, because it was an exercise of judicial power to the same end, and to the deprivation of the right of contract without due process of law. Also denied to the state a republican form of government, guaranteed by § 4, art. 4, of the Constitution of the United States, in that, as enforced and applied, the state assumed the absolute control of all water *appropriated and all works for its distribution, abolished capacity to acquire property, rights, and servitudes in such water and waterworks absolutely, or with ownership of lands for irrigation, or free from the perpetual obligation to pay net revenue of not less than 6 nor more than 18 per cent per annum upon the cost or value of the water system; and abolished the right or capacity to ascertain, fix, or define, by contract or convention, the rate of compensation to be paid by any consumer for the supply of water for irrigation of land.

Error was also asserted in the decree in that it was in favor of the San Diego Land & Town Company, of Maine, although it had not become a party to the cause, by supplemental bill or otherwise, and because what interest it had did not appear, nor was its claim to any interest set forth, so that the defendant could answer or plead thereto. Also, error in that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the cause or make any decree on the merits, and error in not dismissing the suit after the discharge of Lanning, the receiver and complainant.

The bill concluded with the following prayer:

"Wherefore, as said errors appear on the face of the record, and are greatly prejudicial to complainants and their rights in the premises, complainants pray that said decree may be reviewed, reversed, and set aside, and no further proceedings taken therein; and to that end complainants pray process by subpoena against the San Diego Land & Town Company, of Maine, requiring it to appear and answer hereunto, and show cause, if it may, why said decree should not be reviewed, reversed, and set aside, and such further orders and decrees be made as to the court may seem just, including the restoration to your orators of the sum of money paid under said decree, as aforesaid."

The defendant (appellee) moved the court to strike the bill from the files and dismiss the suit.

The motion was denied. The water company then demurred to the bill on the grounds that it appeared therefrom that there was no error in the proceeding and decision in Lanning v. Osborne appearing on the face of the record or otherwise; that complainants were not entitled to the relief prayed for, or any relief; that no error appeared in said suit which could be relieved *by a bill of review or a bill in the nature of a bill of review; that the remedy of complainants was by appeal. [32]

The demurrer was sustained with leave to complainants to amend the bill in ten days.

The complainants elected to stand on their bill, and decree was entered on the demurrer as follows:

"It is therefore considered and decreed by the court that the plaintiffs take nothing by their bill herein; that said bill be, and the same is hereby, dismissed, and that the defendant have and recover of and from the plaintiffs its costs in this behalf laid out and expended, taxed at $20.50."

The case was then brought here.

Mr. Alfred Haines argued the cause and, with Messrs. C. H. Rippey, M. L. Ward, and George Fuller, filed a brief for appellants:

A bill of review for error apparent on the record was the appropriate method of presenting questions of error assigned as committed in the procedure and upon the merits in the original cause; and such questions are substantial.

Whiting v. Bank of United States, 13 Pct. 6, 10 L. ed. 33; Putnam v. Day, 22 Wall. 60, 22 L. ed. 764; Buffington v. Harvey, 95 U.

S. 99, 24 L. ed. 381; Ensminger v. Powers, 108 U. S. 292, 27 L. ed. 732, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 643; Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 31 L. ed. 629, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; Clark v. Killian, 103 U. S. 766, 26 L. ed. 607.

A bill of review will lie if the decree is not warranted by the allegations of the bill.

Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 107, 29 L. ed. 106, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 788; Goodhue v. Churchman, 1 Barb. Ch. 596; Griggs v. Gear, 8 Ill. 2; Prentiss v. Paisley, 25 Fla. 92, 7 L. R. A. 640, 7 So. 56; Stribling v. Hart, 20 Fla. 235; Hurt v. Stribling, 21 Fla. 136; Maynard v. Pereault, 30 Mich. 160.

Until the board of supervisors fixes maximum rates, the statute itself fixes the standard of maximum rates as being the "actual rates established and collected by the corporation," and forbids the corporation to exceed such maximum.

Cal. act 1885, §§ 5, 8.

The word "establish" means "to make stable, firm, or sure; appoint; ordain; settle or fix unalterably."

Genesis, xvii:19; Century Dict.

Could anything be more absurd than a construction which makes this mandatory statute mean that the corporation shall not exceed the established rate of $3.50 per acre per annum, unless it elects to do so?

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 167 U. S. 479, 42 L. ed. 243, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 896.

The circuit court is inherently without power to repeal such legally established rate and to establish the new rate of $7.

Ibid.

The exception to the answer for impertinence was not the proper method for raising the question of the merits of the affirmative defenses set forth in the answer.

Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 160 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 414, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291; Stone v. Moore, 26 Ill. 165; Brown v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. 110 Ill. 235; Barry v. Abbot, 100 Mass. 396; Grether v. Wright, 43 U. S. App. 770, 75 Fed. Rep. 742, 23 C. C. A. 498; Travers v. Ross, 14 N. J. Eq. 254.

The setting the case down for hearing on bill and answer is in effect a submission of the cause to the court by the complainant, on the contention that he is entitled to the decree prayed for in his bill, upon the admissions and notwithstanding the denials of the answer.

Reynolds v. Crawfordsville First Nat. Bank, 112 U. S. 405, sub nom. Reynolds v. First Nat. Bank, 28 L. ed. 733, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213.

Moreover, an exception will not lie to a substantive defense not responsive to the plaintiff's inquiry in the bill.

Adams v. Bridgewater Iron Co. 6 Fed. Rep. 179; Bower Barff Rustless Iron Co. v. Wells Rustless Iron Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 391.

Under equity rule 64 the plaintiff, for default of a full and complete answer after exception for insufficiency allowed, is entitled only to take the bill, so far as the matter of such exception is concerned, as confessed.

Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 160 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 414, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291.

Not even where a defendant was guilty of contempt in disobeying an order of the court, does the court have the power to strike out his answer, and order that a decree pro confesso be taken against him.

Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 42 L. ed. 215, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841.

Mr. Alfred Haines also filed a separate brief for appellants in reply:

The adoption and public promulgation, by the water company, of a schedule of water rates at which it invited people to acquire the perpetual easement of the flow and use of water to their lands, and the acceptance on the part of landowners by the application of the water to their land, and by the payment of that rate for years, is sufficient to show a contract for the easement at that rate, making the rate as perpetual as the easement itself, and its constant reciprocal.

Boyd v. Brinckin, 55 Cal. 427; Southern P. R. Co. v. Terry, 70 Cal. 484, 11 Pac. 769; Avila v. Pereira, 120 Cal. 589, 52 Pac. 840.

Mr. John D. Works argued the cause and, with Messrs. Lewis R. Works, Bradner W. Lee, and Charles D. Lanning, filed a brief for appellee:

The policy of the law is that a company of this kind shall receive reasonable rates.

Spring Valley Waterworks v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286, 6 L. R. A. 756, 22 Pac. 910, 1046; San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 43 L. ed. 1154, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804.

The rates must be based upon the present value of the plant of the company and the value of the services to the consumers, taking into account the cost of the plant, the cost per annum of operating the plant, including interest paid on money borrowed and reasonably necessary in constructing the same, and the annual depreciation of the plant.

San Diego Land & Town Co. v. National City, 174 U. S. 739, 43 L. ed. 1154, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804.

The company was not estopped to change its rates.

Litchfield v. Goodnow, 123 U. S. 549, 31 L. ed. 199, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 210.

Messrs. John Garber and Frank H. Short filed a brief as amici curiæ.

*Mr. Justice McKenna, after making the [32] above statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

One of the grounds of demurrer to the bill was that it appeared from the complainants' own showing that their remedy was by appeal and not by bill of review. It is not pressed with much earnestness here, and is clearly untenable. Whiting v. Bank of United States, 13 Pet. 6, 10 L. ed. 33; Putnam v. Day, 22 Wall. 60, 22 L. ed. 764; Buffington v. Harvey, 95 U. S. 99, 24 L. ed. 381; Ensminger v. Powers, 108 U. S. 292, 27 L. ed. 732, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 642; Willamette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 31 L. ed. 629, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811; Story, Eq. Pl. 10th ed. §§ 403 et seq.

The principal contention of the appellants is that the water rights are easements in the real estate constituting the water system. In other words (as described by appellants), "incorporal interests in the corporeal property of a water system annexed to lands irrigated by that system." Being such, the corporation may sell them, the landowner may [33] contract for them—*may buy them outright and free himself wholly from annual rates, or may stipulate for a particular rate. In other words, that the water right is an interest in the system, paid for with the land, or by the stipulated rate, and not subject to any rate or to increase beyond the stipulated rate, according to the varying expenses or valuations of the system.

It is claimed to be property, and the right to sell and to buy it is asserted respectively for the owner of the system and the consumers of its waters, and that the Constitution and laws of the state of California do not prohibit this, or if they can be construed to do so violate the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States by depriving appellants of their property without due process of law, and violate also certain provisions of the Constitution of the state of California.

It is further contended by appellants that conceding a contract cannot be made between "water corporations" and their customers for a particular rate which will preclude regulation by the state, that until such regulation the parties—company and consumers—may contract. And, further, that the rate of $3.50 per acre per annum was the rate charged and collected by the company, and therefore became the rate established by law by virtue of a provision in § 5 of the statute of 1885, hereafter quoted.

It is also contended that the answer in the original suit averred the rate of $3.50 per acre per annum was a reasonable rate, and denied that the increased rate of $7.00 per acre was reasonable, and that on the issue thus raised, the defendants there, complainants in the bill of review, were entitled to a hearing.

The charge of error in the decrees is based on their adjudging against these contentions.

Opposing the contentions of appellants, the appellee makes a distinction between the facilities for the use and the right to use the water of its system and the actual use of it. The compensation for the former, appellee concedes, may be the subject of contract; the rate for the latter, it contends, is subject to regulation *by law, but, until so regulated, may be established by the water companies. [34]

The circuit court did not accept the distinction made by appellee. It did not accept the view contended for by appellants. It held, interpreting the Constitution and laws of the state, that the appropriation and disposition of water was a public use, the right to collect tolls or compensation for it a franchise, subject to regulation and control in the manner prescribed by law, and that such tolls and compensation could not be fixed by the contract of the parties.

If the contention of the appellee is justified, that the contracts between it and the appellants gave it the right to establish the rates, the controversy is narrowed and simplified, and we are relieved from deciding the many interesting and difficult questions pressed by appellants for judgment.

There was some difference in the way the water rights of the defendants arose, but they are assimilated in the same legal right by the allegation in the original answer that the company did "not make or claim any distinction in respect of the character and quality of the water right, or of the annual rates actually established or collected for irrigation."

It is only necessary, therefore, to say in description that some of the lands were purchased before 1892, and up to that date there was no express or separate grant of "water rights." Some were purchased after 1892, and as to them there was a specific sale of the appurtenant water right. The contracts in both cases contained an agreement to sell certain described real estate, "together with a water right to one acre foot of water per annum for each and every of said above-described real estate, to be delivered by the party of the first part through its pipes and flumes at a point—said water to be used exclusively on said real estate, and not to be diverted therefrom. Provided, that the party of the first part may change the place of delivery of said water, so long as the same is near the highest point of said land. For which land and water right the party of the second part agrees to pay the sum of — dollars."

The contracts also contained the following provisions:

"And the party of the second part further agrees and binds — *self, — heirs, executors, [35] and assigns to pay the regular annual water rates allowed by law and charged by the party of the first part for water covered by said water rights, whether said water is used or not, and to pay for all water used on said land for domestic purposes, monthly, under such rules and regulations for the delivery of water to consumers, as the party of the first part may from time to time make."

Other lands (about 900 acres) described in the answer as "lying outside of National City" were derived, not from the company, but water rights were attached to them on the same basis as to the lands sold by the company up to 1892. After that date the company refused to furnish water, except upon the payment of a sum in gross for the water right over and above the uniform annual rate established and collected, or in lieu thereof 6 per cent annual interest upon the company's estimate of the value of such right. The price was first fixed at $50, afterwards at $100, and the contract in addition providing for the sale of the water right contained the following provision:

"In consideration of the foregoing stipulations and agreements, the party of the second part agrees and binds — self, — heirs, executors, and assigns, to pay the sums above specified promptly as the sums, and each of them, falls due, and that — will in all things comply with and perform the terms and conditions of this agreement on — part to be performed, and that — and they will promptly pay all annual water rates and charges for the water, to which — is entitled under and by virtue of this agreement, at rates fixed by the party of the first part as allowed by law, and at the times, in the manner, and according to the rules and regulations made and adopted by the party of the first part, the annual rental for the amount of water to which the party of the second part is entitled under this contract, to be paid whether the same is used or not, and also to pay for all water used by — on said land for domestic purposes at the rates fixed by the party of the first part and allowed by law.”

Under the same form of contract water rights were attached to about 400 acres of land belonging to other defendants.

[36] *To lands which lay in what is designated Ex-Mission the contracts contained the following provision:

“The parties of the first part will make application for the use of the water upon the form provided by the party of the second part for that purpose, and pay for the use of the water at the current rates as may be enforced from time to time for supplying lands in National Ranch, and subject to the same general rules and regulations.”

J. M. Ballow, one of the defendants, claimed his water right under a contract which provided as follows:

“Provided, that said party of the second part shall make application in the form provided by the company, for the use of the water, and use the same under the same restrictions and conditions, and to pay said party of the first part the current rate therefor, as established, for Chula Vista; provided, said restrictions and conditions are not inconsistent with the water right hereby granted to said party of the second part.”

The rates in Chula Vista were governed by the general contract.

It is apparent that the contracts in all things substantial to the controversy are similar. They provide for the payment of a certain sum for land and water rights, or for water rights alone, and all for the payment of annual rates besides. And provide directly or by reference that the annual rates shall “be fixed by the party of the first part (the company), as allowed by law,” to be paid whether the water is used or not. Water used for domestic purposes is also to be paid for “at the rates fixed by the party of the first part and allowed by law.”

These provisions do not leave much room for construction. For irrigation purposes and for domestic purposes the rental of water is to be paid at rates “fixed” by the company. The only qualification is “as allowed by law.” What this means we shall presently consider; but whatever it means, it does not sustain appellants’ contention that the rate of $3.50 per acre per annum was irrevocable, secured to them free from the power of variation by the company or by law. It is not important to consider, therefore, whether, under the Constitution and laws of the state, they could contract with the company for the price *of a water right. If the contract, they plead, gives to the company the power to fix the annual rate, the only inquiry which need be, is whether the power has been exercised “as allowed by law.” What this means can be the only controversy. [37]

The appellee concedes the power of the regulations of rates by the board of supervisors, but claims that until the power is exercised the right to fix the rates rests with it, and that those fixed by it are “allowed by law.” The appellants contend that the power of the board of supervisors is only a power to fix maximum rates, and below them the right of the parties to contract is unrestrained (a view sufficiently discussed already), and that until the board shall act “the statute itself fixes the standard of maximum rates, as being the ‘actual rates established and collected by the corporation,’ and forbids the corporation to exceed such maximum.”

The contention is claimed to be based on § 5 and § 8 of the act of 1885. Section 5 vests the power to fix rates in the board of supervisors, and provides “when so fixed by such board shall be binding and conclusive for not less than one year next after their establishment, and until established anew or abrogated by such board of supervisors as herein after provided.” And then follows the provision upon which appellants especially rely:

“And until such rates shall be so established, . . . or after they shall have been abrogated by such board of supervisors, as in this act provided, the actual rates established and collected by each of the persons, companies, associations, and corporations now furnishing, or that shall hereafter furnish, appropriated waters for sale, rental, or distribution to the inhabitants of any of the counties of this state, shall be deemed and accepted as the legally established rates thereof.”

Section 8 provides that those furnishing water “shall so sell, rent, or distribute such waters at rates not exceeding the established rates fixed and regulated therefor by the boards of supervisors of such counties, or as fixed and established by such person, company, or association, or corporation, as provided in this act.”

The deduction which appellants make is that when the company *once fixes the rates they must remain so fixed, and if changed by supervisory action recur upon the cessation of that action—inevitable always through every change of condition; if excessive, to forever remain so; if deficient, to forever remain so. [38]

The argument urged to support this is that one of the ordinary meanings of the word “actual” is “existing at the time.” “And if (to quote counsel) the lexicographer be consulted to define the word ‘established’ he will give its meaning substantially, as does the Century Dictionary, to be ‘to make stable; firm or sure; appoint; ordain; settle or fix unalterably.’” To illustrate the immutability which one of its senses conveys, counsel quote with apologetic reverence an illustration, which they say is often found in standard dictionaries: "I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant." Gen. xvii: 19.

We are not impressed with the aptness of the illustration to the case at bar.

Covenants formed and promulgated by a divine wisdom and foresight can have the attribute of immutability, and their language may be used and interpreted to express it. Human regulations are for the most part occasional and temporary. Besides, one definition of a word does not express its whole meaning or necessarily determine the intention of its use. If so, interpretation would not be difficult, and the application of the language of a law or contract would be as unerring as easy.

"Actual," of course, means existent, but it does not preclude change. Nor does the word "establish" convey the idea of permanency. As used in the statute, it has no such meaning. The power of the board of supervisors is not exhausted by one exercise, nor has its result unalterable fixity. It is beyond change only for a year. The language of the statute is "at any time after the establishment of such water rates by any board of supervisors of this state the same may be established anew or abrogated in whole or in part by such board, to take effect at not less than one year next after such first establishment."

[39] It is manifest to construe the word "establish" to mean "to *fix unalterably" would throw the powers of the board of supervisors into confusion and contradiction.

To say that the rates are unalterable for a year would prove nothing. Such effect comes, not from the use of the word "establish," but from other words, and, but for them, rates established might "be established anew" as often as the board of supervisors might choose. Nor can it be said that the word means one thing when applied to the power of the board of supervisors, and another thing when applied to the power of the company. To say so is to abandon the argument. That depends upon the meaning of the word "establish" to be "to fix unalterably,"—to mean of itself, and in its use, permanence and unchangeability. If it does not mean that of itself, there is an end of the argument, for there is nothing in the act or its purpose which would give it such meaning when expressing the power of the company, and something else when expressing the power of the board of supervisors. The purpose of the act rejects such view. Its purpose is regulation, deliberate and judicial and periodical regulation by a selected tribunal, and we cannot believe that the legislature intends by an absolute and peremptory provision to fix rates upon the water companies unalterable by them, no matter what change in conditions might supervene. Against rates which may become unreasonably high, the statute gives relief to consumers through petition to the board of supervisors. Rates which may become unreasonably low, it surely does not intend to impose on the companies forever, except as relief may come from the voluntary justice of its customers or by a violation of the statute and appeal to the courts. There is nothing in the act to indicate such purpose, nor does it need to have such purpose. Its dominant idea is the regulation of rates by law, not commanded to be exercised by the governing bodies as a voluntary duty as establishing rates in cities and towns, but exercised when invoked by petition. Until the necessity of that, what more natural and just than to leave the right with the water companies and recognize it as legal. This is the meaning, we think, of the provisions of §§ 5 and 8, supra. To so interpret them makes the scheme of regulation complete—adequate, without being meddlesome or *oppressive. The power of regulation is asserted and provided for, and ready to be exercised to correct abuse, and who doubts but that its exercise would be invoked. [40]

178 U. S. U. S., BOOK 44.

The appellants assign many errors upon the action of the circuit court in sustaining the exceptions to the answer made in the original suit. It would extend the opinion to too great length to consider them separately. They are reduced to and depend upon the claim that they constituted a submission of the case on bill and answer, and if the latter traversed any material allegation of the bill it could not be taken pro confesso, and a decree entered upon it would be erroneous. (Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 160 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 414, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291).

The application of the principle is claimed upon the ground that the answer denies that the rate of $3.50 per acre per annum is unreasonable or that the increased rate of $7.00 per acre is reasonable.

The circuit court held that issue was not open to its decision. It said that if the rates established by the board of supervisors were unreasonable they could only be annulled. In no case would the court fix them. "Therefore," it was further said, "it is not for the court in the present case to go into the question of reasonableness of the rates established by the complainant, and which it seeks to enforce. If unreasonable, and the consumers are for that reason dissatisfied therewith, resort must first be had to the body designated by the law to fix proper rates, to wit, the board of supervisors of San Diego county."

We concur in this view, and finding no error in the decree it is affirmed.

*EBEN J. KNOWLTON and Thomas A. [41] Buffum, Executors of the Last Will and Testament of Edwin F. Knowlton, Deceased, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

FRANK R. MOORE, United States Collector of Internal Revenue, First Collection District, State of New York.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 41-111.)

War revenue act—tax on legacies and inheritances—nature of tax—constitution—

NOTE.—As to taxes on succession and collat.

ality of act—direct tax—uniformity—application to District of Columbia—degrees of relationship—progressive rate—amount of estate or of legacy.

1. The taxes upon legacies and distributive shares of personal property, which are imposed by the war revenue act of June, 1898 (30 Stat. at L. 448), §§ 29, 30, are imposed upon the transmission or receipt of such inheritances and legacies, and not upon the right of the state to regulate the devolution of property upon death.
2. The heading to a section of a statute is proper to be considered in interpreting the statute, when ambiguity exists and a literal interpretation will work out wrong or injury.
3. The amount of each particular legacy or distributive share, and not the sum of the whole personal estate of a decedent, is the amount on which the progressive rate of tax is imposed by the war revenue act of June, 1898, §§ 29, 30, and by which the rate is measured.
4. A particular construction of a statute which will occasion great inconvenience or produce inequality and injustice is to be avoided, if another more reasonable interpretation is present in the statute.
5. The direct taxes which must be apportioned under U. S. Const. art. 1, § 10, do not include the tax on the transmission or receipt of legacies and distributive shares of personal property, imposed by the war revenue act of June, 1898, §§ 29, 30, as that tax is a duty or excise, as distinguished from a tax on property.
6. The uniformity required by U. S. Const. art. 1, § 9, providing that "duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," is not an intrinsic uniformity relating to the inherent character of the tax as respects its operations on individuals, but is merely a geographical uniformity requiring the same plan and the same method to be operative throughout the United States.
7. An application of the war revenue act of June, 1898, to the District of Columbia is secured by § 31, which incorporates therein the laws relating to the assessment of taxes, thereby including U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3140, which requires the District of Columbia to be regarded as a state in construing the internal revenue laws.
8. A difference between the testamentary and intestacy laws of the states does not prevent the geographical uniformity of the war revenue act of June, 1898, §§ 29, 30, under which the primary right of taxation upon legacies and distributive shares depends upon the degree of relationship or want of relationship to the deceased, since the rate is the same wherever the degree of relationship or the want of relationship is the same, so that the rule is uniform, although there may be different conditions among the states as to the objects upon which the tax is levied.
9. The progressive rate feature of the war revenue act of June, 1898, §§ 29, 30, by which the rates are graded in accordance with the amounts of the legacies or distributive shares, and progressively increased as those amounts increase, cannot be held unconstitutional on the ground that it is repugnant to fundamental principles of equality and justice; but the question whether a progressive tax is more just and equal than a proportional one, is, in the absence of constitutional limitation, a legislative, and not a judicial, question.

[No. 387.]

Argued December 5, 6, 7, 1899. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York to review a decision dismissing a suit to recover an amount paid to the internal revenue collector under protest. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. G. Carlisle argued the cause and, with Messrs. Peter B. Olney, William Edmond Curtis, Henry M. Ward, Ward B. Chamberlin, George F. Chamberlin, Julien T. Davies, Frederic R. Coudert, Jr., E. S. Mansfield, and W. S. B. Hopkins, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Charles H. Otis also argued the cause and, with Mr. John G. Carlisle, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Wheeler H. Peckham also argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. Henry M. Ward filed a separate brief for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Thomas B. Reed and Thomas Thacher also filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Solicitor General Richards argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion [43] of the court:

The act of Congress of June, 1898, which is usually spoken of as the war revenue act (30 Stat. at L. 448, chap. 448), imposes various stamp duties and other taxes. Sections 29 and 30 of the statute, which are therein prefaced by the heading "Legacies and Distributive Shares of Personal Property," provide for the assessment and collection of the particular taxes which are described in the sections in question. To determine the issues which arise on this record it is necessary to decide whether the taxes imposed are void because repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, and, if they be valid, to ascertain and define their true import.

The controversy was thus engendered: Edwin F. Knowlton died in October, 1898, in the borough of Brooklyn, state of New York, where he was domiciled. His will was probated, and the executors named therein were duly qualified. As a preliminary to the assessment of the taxes imposed by the provisions of the statute, the collector of internal revenue demanded of the executors that they make a return showing the amount of the personal estate of the deceased, and disclosing the legatees and distributees thereof. The executors, asserting that they were not obliged to make the return because of the unconstitutionality of §§ 29 and 30 of the statute, nevertheless complied, under protest. The report disclosed that the personal estate was appraised at $2,624,029.63, and afforded full information as to those entitled to take the same. The amount of the tax assessed was the sum of $42,084.67. This was reached according to the computation shown in the table which is printed in the margin.†

eral inheritances—see Re Howe (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 825, and note; Wallace v. Myers (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 171, and note; Com. v. Ferguson (Pa.) 10 L. R. A. 240; Re Romaine (N. Y.) 12 L. R. A. 401. See also note to Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 42 L. ed. U. S. 1037.

As to title as aid to interpretation of statute—see note to People ex rel. Hart v. McElroy (Mich.) 2 L. R. A. 609.

[44] *It is apparent, from the table, that the collector, whilst levying the tax on the legacies and distributive shares, or the right to receive the same, yet, for the purpose of fixing the rate of the tax, took into view the whole of the personal estate of the deceased. That is, whilst the tax was laid upon the legacies, the rate thereof was fixed by a separate and distinct right or thing, the entire personal estate of the deceased. The executors protested against the entire tax, and also as to the method by which it was assessed. The grounds of the protest were as follows:

[45] "1. The provisions of the act of Congress under which it is sought to impose, assess, and collect the said tax or duty are in *violation of the provisions of article 1, sections 8 and 9, of the Constitution of the United States, and are therefore void.

"2. The legacies to George W. Knowlton, Charlotte A. Batchelor, the Unitarian Church of West Upton, Mass., each amount to less than $10,000, and are not subject to any tax or duty under the said provisions of the said act of Congress, even if such provisions be not unconstitutional and void.

"3. The legacy to Eben J. Knowlton, a brother of the testator, amounts to only $100,000, and under the said provisions of the said act should be taxed at the rate of $1.12½ per $100, and not at the rate of $2.25 per $100, even if said act be not unconstitutional and void."

Demand having been made by the collector for the payment, accompanied with a threat to distrain in case of refusal, the tax was paid under written protest, which repeated the grounds above stated. In the receipt given it was recited that the tax had been paid under protest to avoid the use of compulsory process. A petition for refunding was subsequently presented by the executors, in which the grounds of the protest were reiterated. The commissioner of internal revenue having made an adverse ruling, the present suit was commenced to recover the amount paid. The facts as to the assessment and collection of the taxes were averred, and the refusal of the internal revenue commissioner to refund was alleged. The petition for refunding was made a part of the pleadings. The right to repayment was based upon the averment that the sections of the statute, under authority of which the amount

†Names of persons entitled to beneficial interest in said property.	Relation-ship of beneficiary to persons who died possessed.	Clear value of legacy.	Amount taxable.	Rate for every $100.	Amount of tax.
Mary, Countess von Francken Sierstorpff.....	Daughter Furniture.....
Cash legacy.....
Income for life on residuary estate, amounting to $2,348,734.67. Countess Sierstorpff became 28 years of age on July 2, 1898. Present value of her life interest in said residuary estate, estimated according to United States tables, is.....
Total.....		$1,731,996 35	$1,731,996 35	2 25	$38,969 92
George W. Knowlton.....	Brother...	100 00	100 00	2 25	2 25
Charlotte A. Batchelor.....	Sister....	5,000 00	5,000 00	2 25	112 50
Eben J. Knowlton.....	Brother...	100,000 00	100,000 00	2 25	2,250 00
Unitarian Church of West Upton, Mass.....	None.....	5,000 00	5,000 00	15 00	750 00
The remainder of said residuary estate is subject to contingencies, and the individuals who will ultimately become entitled to the same on their degree of relationship to the testator cannot be determined until after the termination of two lives now in being. The present value of the said remainder of said residuary estate, estimated as aforesaid, is $717,803.30.....		717,803 30
Total.....		$2,559,899 65	$1,842,096 35	$42,084 67

had been assessed and collected, were unconstitutional. The circuit court sustained a demurrer, on the ground that no cause of action was alleged. The claim was rejected, and the suit was dismissed with costs.

The questions which arise on this writ of error to review the judgment of the circuit court are fourfold: First, that the taxes should have been refunded because they were direct taxes, and not being apportioned were hence repugnant to article 1, section 8, of the Constitution of the United States; second, if the taxes were not direct, they were levied on rights created solely by state law, depending for their continued existence on the consent of the several states, a volition [46] which Congress *has no power to control, and as to which it could not, therefore, exercise its taxing authority; third, if the taxes were not direct, and were not assessed upon objects or rights which were beyond the reach of Congress, nevertheless the taxes were void, because they were not uniform throughout the United States, as required by article 1, section 9, of the Constitution of the United States; fourth, because, although the taxes be held to have been in all respects constitutional, nevertheless they were illegal, since in their assessment the rate of the tax was determined by the aggregate amount of the personal estate of the deceased, and not by the sum of the legacies or distributive shares, or the right to take the same, which were the objects upon which by law the taxes were placed.

Although it may be, in the abstract, an analysis of these questions in logical sequence would require a consideration of the propositions in the order just stated, we shall not do so for the following reasons: The inquiry whether the taxes are direct or indirect must involve the prior determination of the objects or rights upon which by law they are imposed and assessed, since it becomes essential primarily to know what the law assesses and taxes in order to completely learn the nature of the burden. So, also, to solve the contention as to want of uniformity, it is requisite to understand not only the objects or rights which are taxed, but the method ordained by the statute for assessing and collecting. This must be the case, since uniformity, in whatever aspect it be considered, involves knowledge as to the operation of the taxing law, an understanding of which cannot be arrived at without a clear conception of what the law commands to be done. For these reasons we shall first, in a general way, consider upon what rights or objects death duties, as they are termed in England, are imposed. Having, from a review of the history of such taxes, reached a conclusion on this subject, we shall decide whether Congress has power to levy such taxes. This being settled, we shall analyze the particular act under review, for the purpose of ascertaining the precise form of tax for which it provides and the mode of assessment which it directs. These questions [47] being disposed of, we *shall determine whether the taxes which the act imposes are void, because not apportioned, or for the want of uniformity.

It is conceded on all sides that the levy and collection of some form of death duty is provided by the sections of the law in question. Bearing this in mind, the exact form of the tax and the method of its assessment need not be presently defined, since doing so appropriately belongs to the more specific interpretation of the statute to which we shall hereafter direct our attention. Taxes of this general character are universally deemed to relate, not to property eo nomine, but to its passage by will or by descent in cases of intestacy, as distinguished from taxes imposed on property, real or personal, as such, because of its ownership and possession. In other words, the public contribution which death duties exact is predicated on the passing of property as the result of death, as distinct from a tax on property disassociated from its transmission or receipt by will, or as the result of intestacy. Such taxes so considered were known to the Roman law and the ancient law of the continent of Europe, 3 Smith, Wealth of Nations, London ed. 1811, p. 311. Continuing the rule of the ancient French law, at the present day in France inheritance and legacy taxes are enforced, being collectible as stamp duties. They are included officially under the general denomination of indirect taxes, for the reason that all inheritance and legacy taxes are considered as levied on the "occasion of a particular isolated act." This view of the inheritance and legacy tax conforms to the official definition of indirect taxes, among which inheritance and legacy taxes are classed, which prevails in France at the present day. The definition is as follows:

"Direct taxes bear immediately upon persons, upon the possession and enjoyments of rights; indirect taxes are levied upon the happening of an event or an exchange."

In Germany and other continental countries in various forms death duties are enforced, in the main, by way of stamp duties. They are there, both in theory and in practice, treated as resulting from the occasion of death, and hence as not legally equivalent with taxes levied on property merely because of its *ownership. Cohn, Science of Finance [48] (Veblen's translation), §§ 282, 283, 350; Dos Passos, Inheritance Tax Law, § 1.

The term "Death Duties," by which inheritance and legacy taxes, in whatever form imposed, are described in England, indicates the generic nature of such taxes. In Hanson's Death Duties, p. 1, it is said: "Historically, probate duty is the oldest form of death duty, having been established in 1694." The probate duty thus referred to was a fixed tax dependent on the sum of the personal estate within the jurisdiction of the probate court, payable on the grant of letters of probate by means of stamp duties, and was treated as an expense of administration to be deducted out of the residue of the estate. In 1780 this tax was supplemented by what became known as a legacy tax, at first collected by means of a stamp affixed to the receipt, evidencing the payment of a legacy or share in the personal property of a deceased person. It is unnecessary to consider the change in the mere form of this latter tax. The tax was not deducted as an expense of administration, but was charged and collected upon the passing of the individual legacies or interests upon which it was imposed. In 1853 the probate duty tax and the legacy tax, just referred to, were supplemented by a tax known as the succession duty. This law reached interests in real estate passing or acquired by the death of a person and interests in personal property not covered by the legacy act. This also was not treated as an expense of administration, but was charged upon and collected out of the particular interests subjected to the tax.

The nature of the succession duty is shown by the second section of the act defining the same, which is thus condensed by Hanson at page 40 of his treatise:

"Succession duty is a tax placed on the gratuitous acquisition of property which passes on the death of any person, by means of a transfer (called either a disposition or a devolution) from one person (called the predecessor) to another person (called the successor). Property chargeable with this tax is called a succession."

By the finance act of 1894, the probate duty was superseded by what was termed the estate duty. This, like the probate *duty, was a tax distinct from those imposed by the legacy and succession duty acts upon the receipt of real or personal property, or an interest therein, although in some administrative features it modified or regulated the subject of a succession duty. This tax is payable out of the general revenue of the estate. Re Bourne, [1893] 1 Ch. 188, cited by Hanson at p. 354.

The principle upon which the tax rests is thus stated by Hanson at p. 63:

"The new duty imposed by the finance act, and called estate duty, as has been said above, supersedes probate duty; but the key to the construction of the finance act lies in remembering that the new estate duty, although it is leviable on property which was left untouched by probate duty, such as real estate, yet is in substance of the same nature as the old probate duty. What it taxes is not the interest to which some person succeeds on a death, but the interest which ceased by reason of the death. Unless this principle is kept clearly in view, the mind is constantly tempted by the wording of the act to revert to principles of succession duty which have no real connection with the subject."

This summary suffices to indicate the origin, the development, and the theory underlying death duties. A full analysis thereof will be found in Dowell's History of Taxation, vol. 3, pp. 148 et seq.; in Hanson's Death Duties; and in the treatise of Dos Passos, § 4, and notes, where the various acts are referred to.

In the colonies of Great Britain death duties, as a general rule, obtain. Some of the statutes are modeled upon those of the 178 U. S.

mother country, and levy taxes on legacies, etc., passing, measured by their value and on the estate proper. Others, again, have merely the estate tax without the legacy tax. The statutes are reviewed in the appendix to Hanson's treatise, beginning at page 717.

A retrospective study of the death duty laws enacted in our own country, national and state, will show that they rest upon the same fundamental conception which has caused the adoption of like statutes in other countries; and especially in their national development do they substantially conform (to the *extent to which they go) to the [50] evolution of the system in England.

As early as 1797 Congress imposed a legacy tax. 1 Stat. at L. 527, chap. 11. This act was probably the outgrowth of a recommendation contained in a report of the committee of ways and means, presented in the House on Tuesday, March 17, 1796. Annals of Congress, Fourth Congress, 1st sess. pp. 993 et seq. The report recommended, 1, the collection of $2,000,000 dollars by a direct tax; 2, the imposition of "a duty of 2 per centum ad valorem . . . on all testamentary dispositions, descents, and successions to the estates of intestates, excepting those to parents, husbands, wives, or lineal descendants;" 3, the imposition of various stamp duties; and, 4, an increase of the duty on carriages. The act of 1797 continued in force until June 30, 1802. 2 Stat. at L. 148, chap. 19. In this act, as in the English legacy duty statute of 1780 and supplementary statutes, the mode of collection provided was by stamp duties laid on the receipts evidencing the payment of the legacies or distributive shares in personal property, and the amount was, like the English legacy tax, charged upon the legacies and not upon the residue of the personal estate. The text of the statute is printed in the margin.†

*In sections 111 and 112 of chapter 119, [51] act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 485, chap. 119), a legacy tax was again enacted. Like in character to the act of 1797, this was a tax imposed on legacies or distributive shares of personal property. But in the same chapter was contained still another form of death duty. By section 194 a probate duty, proportioned to the amount of the estate and to be paid by way of stamps, was levied. The result of the act of 1862, therefore, was to cause the death duties imposed by Congress to greatly resemble those then existing in †Chapter XI., July 6, 1797.

"Sec. 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the thirty-first day of December next, there shall be levied, collected, and paid throughout the United States the several stamp duties following, to wit: For every skin or piece of vellum or parchment or sheet or piece of paper upon which shall be written or printed any or either of the instruments or writings following, to wit: . . . any receipt or other discharge for or on account of any legacy left by any will or other testamentary instrument, or for any share or part of a personal estate divided by force of any statute of distributions, the amount

England; that is, first, a legacy tax, chargeable against each legacy or distributive share, and a probate duty chargeable against the mass of the estate. The only difference between the system created by the act of 1862 and that existing in England was that the act of 1862 did not embody the succession tax provided for in England, by which interests in real estate passing by death were subjected to a duty. A detailed reference to the provisions of the act of 1862 need not be made, because we shall have occasion to do so in considering the legislation which, in 1864, in effect re-enacted, although largely increasing the rates, both the probate duty or tax on the whole estate and the legacy tax on each particular legacy or distributive share. The act of 1864, however, added, in separate sections, a duty on the passing of real estate, in substantial harmony with the principle of the succession tax expressed in the English succession duty act. Thus it came to pass that the system of death duties prevailing in England and that adopted by Congress—leaving out of view the differences in rates and the administrative provisions—were substantially identical, and of a threefold nature, that is, a probate duty charged upon the whole estate, a legacy duty charged upon each legacy or distributive share of personalty, and a succession duty charged against each interest in real property. The act of 1864 was amended in several particulars by the act of July 13, 1866 (14 Stat. at L. 140, chap. 184). These amendments, however, did not materially modify the system of taxation provided in the act of 1864.

[52]

Whilst the general plan of the act of 1864 shows that its framers had in mind the English law, this fact was conclusively demonstrated by section 127, wherein the succession or real estate inheritance tax was defined in substantially similar terms to that contained in the English succession duty act. The identity of the conception embodied in the act of 1864 with that existing in England was observed by this court in Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 349, 23 L. ed. 102, where, in holding that the subject-matter of the assessment of a succession tax was the devolution of the estate or the right to become beneficially entitled to the same, etc., the court said (p. 349, L. ed. p. 102):

"Decided support to the proposition that such is the true theory of the act is derived from the fact that the act of Parliament from which the particular provision under discussion was largely borrowed has received substantially the same construction."

In the statute of August 27, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 509, chap. 349), what was in effect a legacy tax was imposed by the provisions of whereof shall be above the value of fifty dollars, and shall not exceed the value of one hundred dollars, twenty-five cents; where the amount thereof shall exceed the value of one hundred dollars and shall not exceed five hundred dollars fifty cents; and for every further sum of five hundred dollars the additional sum of one dollar. . . . Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall extend to charge with a duty any legacy left by any will or other testasection 28. 28 Stat. at L. 553, chap. 349. The tax was eo nomine an income tax, but was in one respect the legal equivalent of a legacy tax, since among the items going to make up the annual income which was taxed was "money and the value of all personal property acquired by gift or inheritance." This law was not enforced. Its constitutionality was assailed on the ground that the income tax, in so far as it included the income from real estate and personal property, was a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, and was void because it had not been apportioned. The contention was twice considered by this court. On the first hearing, in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429, 39 L. ed. 759, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673, it was decided that, to the extent that the income taxes included the rentals from real estate, the tax was a direct tax on the real estate, and was therefore unconstitutional, because not apportioned. Upon the question of whether the unconstitutionality of the tax on income from real estate rendered it legally impossible to enforce all the other taxes provided by the statute, the court was equally divided in opinion. 157 U. S. 586, 39 L. ed. 821, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 691. *On [53] a rehearing (158 U. S. 601, 39 L. ed. 1108, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912), the previous opinion was adhered to, and it was moreover decided that the tax on income from personal property was likewise direct, and that the law imposing such tax was therefore void because not providing for apportionment. The court said (p. 637, L. ed. p. 1125, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 920):

974

"Third. The tax imposed by sections twenty-seven to thirty-seven, inclusive, of the act of 1894, so far as it falls on the income of real estate and of personal property, being a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, and therefore unconstitutional and void because not apportioned according to representation, all those sections, constituting one entire scheme of taxation, are necessarily invalid."

The decision, that the invalidity of the income tax, in the particulars quoted, carried with it the other and different taxes which were included in income, was not predicated upon the unconstitutionality of such other taxes, but solely upon the conclusion that by the statute there was such an inseparable union between the elements of income derived from the revenues of real estate and personal property and the other constituents of income provided in the statute that they could not be divided. The court said (p. 637, L. ed. p. 1125, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 920):

"We do not mean to say that an act laying by apportionment a direct tax on all real esmentary instrument, or any share or part of a personal estate, to be divided by force of any statute of distributions which shall be left to, or divided amongst, the wife, children, or grandchildren of the person deceased intestate, or making such will or testamentary instrument, or any recognizance, bill, bond, or other obligation or contract, which shall be made to or with the United States, or any state, or for their use, respectively."

178 U. S.

tate and personal property, or the income thereof, might not also lay excise taxes on business, privileges, employments, and vocations. But this is not such an act, and the scheme must be considered as a whole. Being invalid as to the greater part, and falling, as the tax would, if any part were held valid, in a direction which could not have been contemplated except in connection with the taxation considered as an entirety, we are constrained to conclude that sections twenty-seven to thirty-seven, inclusive, of the act, which became a law without the signature of the President on August 28, 1894, are wholly inoperative and void."

An inheritance and legacy tax imposed by one of the states (Louisiana) was considered in Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168. The opinion of the court, delivered by Mr. Chief Justice Taney, upheld the right to levy such taxes. The same subject was passed on in United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073. The *question was whether property bequeathed to the United States could be lawfully included in a succession tax. It was decided that it could be. In the opinion, delivered by Mr. Justice Brown, it was said (p. 628, L. ed. p. 288, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 1075):

"The tax is not upon the property in the ordinary sense of the term, but upon the right to dispose of it, and it is not until it has yielded its contribution to the state that it becomes the property of the legatee."

Again (p. 629, L. ed. p. 288, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 1075):

"That the tax is not a tax upon the property itself, but upon its transmission by will or descent, is also held, both in New York and in several other states."

Yet again (p. 630, L. ed. p. 289, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 1075):

"We think that it follows from this that the act in question is not open to the objection that it is an attempt to tax the property of the United States, since the tax is imposed upon the legacy before it reaches the hands of the government. The legacy becomes the property of the United States only after it has suffered a diminution to the amount of the tax, and it is only upon this condition that the legislature assents to a bequest of it."

Once more, quite recently, the subject was considered in Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594. The issue for decision was this: A law of the state of Illinois imposed a legacy and inheritance tax, the rate progressing by the amount of the beneficial interest acquired. This progression of rates was assailed in the courts of Illinois as being in violation of the Constitution of that state, requiring equal and uniform taxation. The state court having decided that the progressive feature did not violate the Constitution of the state, the case came to this court upon the contention that the establishment of a progressive rate was a denial both of due process of law and of the equal protection of the laws within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution. These complaints were held to be untenable. In the course of its opinion the court, speaking through Mr. Justice McKenna, after briefly advertg to the history of inheritance and legacy taxes *in other countries, referred to their adoption in many of the states of the Union as follows (pp. 287, 288, L. ed. pp. 1040, 1041, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 596):

"In the United States they were enacted in Pennsylvania in 1826; Maryland, 1844; Delaware, 1869; West Virginia, 1887; and still more recently in Connecticut, New Jersey, Ohio, Maine, Massachusetts, 1891; Tennessee in 1891, chapter 25, now repealed by chapter 174, Acts 1893. They were adopted in North Carolina in 1846, but repealed in 1883. Were enacted in Virginia in 1844, repealed in 1855, re-enacted in 1863, and repealed in 1884.' Other states have also enacted them—Minnesota by constitutional provision.

"The constitutionality of the taxes have been declared, and the principles upon which they are based explained in United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 628, 41 L. ed. 287, 288, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367; Schoolfield v. Lynchburg, 78 Va. 366; State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 3 L. R. A. 372, 17 Atl. 82; Clapp v. Mason, 94 U. S. 589, 24 L. ed. 212; Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 632, 30 Atl. 76; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L. R. A. 178, 30 S. W. 750; Re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 281, 49 Pac. 181; Dos Passos Collateral Inheritance Tax, 20; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259, 38 N. E. 512; Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 20 Mont. 299, sub nom. State ex rel. Gelsthorpe v. Furnell, 39 L. R. A. 170, 51 Pac. 267. See also Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99.

"It is not necessary to review these cases or state at length the reasoning by which they are supported. They are based on two principles: 1. An inheritance tax is not one on property, but one on the succession. 2. The right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law, and not a natural right—a privilege; and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it. From these principles it is deduced that the states may tax the privilege, discriminate between relatives, and between these and strangers, and grant exemptions; and are not precluded from this power by the provisions of the respective state constitutions requiring uniformity and equality of taxation."

Thus, looking over the whole field, and considering death duties in the order in which we have reviewed them,—that is, in the Roman and ancient law, in that of modern France, Germany and other continental countries, in England and those of *her colonies [56] where such laws have been enacted, in the legislation of the United States and the several states of the Union,—the following appears: Although different modes of assessing such duties prevail, and although they have different accidental names, such as probate duties, stamp duties, taxes on the transaction, or the act of passing of an estate or a succession, legacy taxes, estate taxes, or privilege taxes, nevertheless tax laws of this nature in all countries rest in their essence upon the principle that death is the generating source from which the particular taxing power takes its being, and that it is the power to transmit, or the transmission from the dead to the living, on which such taxes are more immediately rested.

Having ascertained the nature of death duties, the first question which arises is this: Can the Congress of the United States levy a tax of that character? The proposition that it cannot rests upon the assumption that, since the transmission of property by death is exclusively subject to the regulating authority of the several states, therefore the levy by Congress of a tax on inheritances or legacies, in any form, is beyond the power of Congress, and is an interference by the national government with a matter which falls alone within the reach of state legislation. It is to be remarked that this proposition denies to Congress the right to tax a subject-matter which was conceded to be within the scope of its power very early in the history of the government. The act of 1797, which ordained legacy taxes, was adopted at a time when the founders of our government and framers of our Constitution were actively participating in public affairs, thus giving a practical construction to the Constitution which they had helped to establish. Even the then members of the Congress who had not been delegates to the convention which framed the Constitution must have had a keen appreciation of the influences which had shaped the Constitution and the restrictions which it embodied, since all questions which related to the Constitution and its adoption must have been, at that early date, vividly impressed on their minds. It would, under these conditions, be indeed surprising if a tax should have been levied without question upon objects deemed to be beyond the grasp of Congress because exclusively [57] within state authority. *It is, moreover, worthy of remark that similar taxes have at other periods and for a considerable time been enforced; and, although their constitutionality was assailed on other grounds held unsound by this court, the question of the want of authority of Congress to levy a tax on inheritances and legacies was never urged against the acts in question. Whilst these considerations are of great weight, let us for the moment put them aside to consider the reasoning upon which the proposition denying the power in Congress to impose death duties must rest.

Confusion of thought may arise unless it be always remembered that, fundamentally considered, it is the power to transmit or the transmission or receipt of property by death which is the subject levied upon by all death duties. The qualification of such taxes as privileged taxes, or describing them as levied on a privilege, may also produce misconception, unless the import of these words be accurately understood. They have been used where the power of a state government to levy a particular form of inheritance or legacy tax has in some instances been assailed because of a constitutional limitation on the taxing power. Under these circumstances, the question has arisen whether, because of the power of the state to regulate the transmission of property by death, there did not therefore exist a less trammelled right to tax inheritances and legacies than obtained as to other subject-matters of taxation, and, upon the affirmative view being adopted, a tax upon inheritances or legacies for this reason has been spoken of as privilege taxation, or a tax on privileges. The conception, then, as to the privilege, whilst conceding fully that the occasion of the transmission or receipt of property by death is a usual subject of the taxing power, yet maintains that a wider discretion or privilege is vested in the states, because of the right to regulate. Courts which maintain this view have therefore treated death duties as disenthralled from limitations which would otherwise apply, if the privilege of regulation did not exist. The authorities which maintain this doctrine have been already referred to in the citation which we have made from Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 288, 42 L. ed. 1040, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594. An illustration is found in United States v. Perkins*, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073, [58] where the right of the state of New York to levy a tax on a legacy bequeathed to the government of the United States was in part rested on the privilege enjoyed by the state of New York to regulate successions. Some state courts, on the other hand, have held that, despite the power of regulation, no greater privilege of taxation exists as to inheritance and legacy taxes than as to other property. Cope's Estate, 191 Pa. 1, 45 L. R. A. 316, 43 Atl. 79; State ex rel. Schwartz v. Ferris, 53 Ohio St. 314, 30 L. R. A. 218, 41 N. E. 579; State ex rel. Davidson v. Gorman, 40 Minn. 232, 2 L. R. A. 701, 41 N. W. 948; Curry v. Spencer, 61 N. H. 624, 60 Am. Rep. 337. In State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280, 45 S. W. 245, the power of the legislature of Missouri to levy a uniform tax upon the succession of estates was conceded, though such tax was declared not to be a tax upon property in the ordinary sense. The court nevertheless held that the particular tax in question, which was progressive in rate, was invalid, because it violated a provision of the state Constitution; the decision, in effect, being that because the legislature had the power to regulate successions, it was not thereby justified in levying a tax which was not sanctioned by the state Constitution.

All courts and all governments, however, as we have already shown, conceive that the transmission of property occasioned by death, although differing from the tax on property as such, is, nevertheless, a usual subject of taxation. Of course, in considering the power of Congress to impose death duties, we eliminate all thought of a greater privilege to do so than exists as to any other form of taxation, as the right to regulate successions is vested in the states and not in Congress.

It is not denied that, subject to a compliance with the limitations in the Constitution, the taxing power of Congress extends to all usual objects of taxation. Indeed, as said in the License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 462, 471, 18 L. ed. 497, 501, after referring to the limitations expressed in the Constitution, "Thus limited, and thus only, it [the taxing power of Congress] reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion." The limitation which would exclude from Congress the right to tax inheritances and legacies is made to depend upon the contention that as the power to regulate successions is lodged solely in the several states, therefore Congress is without authority to tax the [59] transmission or *receipt of property by death. This proposition is supported by a reference to decisions holding that the several states cannot tax or otherwise impose burdens on the exclusive powers of the national government or the instrumentalities employed to carry such powers into execution, and, conversely, that the same limitation rests upon the national government in relation to the powers of the several states. Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481; McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 431, 437, 4 L. ed. 607, 609; New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Commissioners of Taxes, 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451; The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 124, sub nom. Buffington v. Day, 20 L. ed. 125; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 17 Wall. 327, 21 L. ed. 599; Union P. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. 5, 21 L. ed. 787.

But the fallacy which underlies the proposition contended for is the assumption that the tax on the transmission or receipt of property occasioned by death is imposed on the exclusive power of the state to regulate the devolution of property upon death. The thing forming the universal subject of taxation, upon which inheritance and legacy taxes rest, is the transmission or receipt, and not the right existing to regulate. In legal effect, then, the proposition upon which the argument rests is that wherever a right is subject to exclusive regulation, by either the government of the United States on the one hand or the several states on the other, the exercise of such rights as regulated can alone be taxed by the government having the mission to regulate. But when it is accurately stated, the proposition denies the authority of the states to tax objects which are confessedly within the reach of their taxing power, and also excludes the national government from almost every subject of direct and many acknowledged objects of indirect taxation. Thus, imports are exclusively within the taxing power of Congress. Can it be said that the property when imported and commingled with the goods of the state cannot be taxed, because it had been at some prior time the subject of exclusive regulation by Congress? Again, interstate commerce is often within the exclusive regulating power of Congress. Can it be asserted that the property of all persons or corporations engaged in such commerce is not the subject of taxation by the several states, because Congress may regulate interstate commerce? Conveyances, mortgages, leases, pledges, and, indeed, all property and the contracts *which arise from its ownership, [60] are subject more or less to state regulation, exclusive in its nature. If the proposition here contended for be sound, such property or dealings in relation thereto cannot be taxed by Congress, even in the form of a stamp duty. It cannot be doubted that the argument when reduced to its essence demonstrates its own unsoundness, since it leads to the necessary conclusion that both the national and state governments are divested of those powers of taxation which from the foundation of the government admittedly have belonged to them. Certainly, a tax placed upon an inheritance or legacy diminishes, to the extent of the tax, the value of the right to inherit or receive, but this is a burden cast upon the recipient, and not upon the power of the state to regulate. This distinction shows the inapplicability to the case in hand of the statement made by Mr. Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 431, 4 L. ed. 607, "that the power to tax involves the power to destroy." This principle is pertinent only when there is no power to tax a particular subject, and has no relation to a case where such right exists. In other words, the power to destroy which may be the consequence of taxation is a reason why the right to tax should be confined to subjects which may be lawfully embraced therein, even although it happens that in some particular instance no great harm may be caused by the exercise of the taxing authority as to a subject which is beyond its scope. But this reasoning has no application to a lawful tax, for if it had there would be an end of all taxation; that is to say, if a lawful tax can be defeated because the power which is manifested by its imposition may when further exercised be destructive, it would follow that every lawful tax would become unlawful, and therefore no taxation whatever could be levied. Under our constitutional system both the national and the state governments, moving in their respective orbits, have a common authority to tax many and diverse objects, but this does not cause the exercise of its lawful attributes by one to be a curtailment of the powers of government of the other, for if it did there would practically be an end of the dual system of government which the Constitution established. The contention was adversely decided in the License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 462, 18 L. ed. 497, where (p. 470, L. ed. p. 500) *the court said: "We [61] come now to examine a more serious objection to the legislation of Congress in relation to the dealings in controversy. It was argued, for the defendants in error, that a license to carry on a particular business gives an authority to carry it on; that the dealings in controversy were parcel of the internal trade of the state in which the defendants resided; that the internal trade of a state is not subject, in any respect, to leg-isolation by Congress, and can neither be licensed nor prohibited by its authority; that licenses for such trade, granted under acts of Congress, must therefore be absolutely null and void; and, consequently, that penalties for carrying on such trade without such license could not be constitutionally imposed." The court, after thus stating the argument, decided that the license was a mere form of excise taxation; that it conferred no right to carry on the business (the selling of lottery tickets and the liquor traffic), if forbidden to be engaged in by the state, but license was applicable whenever under the state law such business was permitted to be done. Many other opinions of this court have pointed out the error in the proposition relied on, and render it unnecessary to do more than refer to them. Lane County v. Oregon, 7 Wall. 71, 77, 19 L. ed. 101, 104; Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall. 533, 547, 19 L. ed. 482, 487; First Nat. Bank v. Kentucky, 9 Wall. 353, 362, 19 L. ed. 701, 703; The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 127, sub nom. Buffington v. Day, 20 L. ed. 122, 126; United States v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 17 Wall. 322, 327, 21 L. ed. 597, 599; Union P. R. Co. v. Peniston, 18 Wall. 5, 36, 21 L. ed. 787, 793; California v. Central P. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1, 40, 32 L. ed. 150, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 153, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073.

178 U. S.

977

We are then brought to a consideration of the particular form of death duty which is manifested by the statute under consideration. The sections embodying it are printed in the margin†

†Act of June 13, 1898, chap. 448.

Sec. 29. That any person or persons having in charge or trust as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property, where the whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid shall exceed the sum of $10,000 in actual value, passing, after the passage of this act, from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws of any state or territory, or any personal property or interest therein, transferred by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or bargainor, to any person or persons, or to any body or bodies, politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, shall be, and hereby are, made subject to a duty or tax, to be paid to the United States as follows—that is to say: Where the whole amount of said personal property shall exceed in value $10,000, and shall not exceed in value the sum of $25,000, the tax shall be:

First. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the lineal issue or lineal ancestor, brother, or sister to the person who died possessed of such property as aforesaid, at the rate of seventy-five cents for each and every $100 of the clear value of such interest in such property.

Second. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the descendant of a brother or sister of the person who died possessed as aforesaid, at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents for each and every $100 of the clear value of such interest.

Third. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the brother or sister of the father or mother,

*It is at the outset obvious that the exact [62] meaning of the statute is not free from perplexity, as there are clauses in it, when looked at apart from their context, which may give rise to conflicting views. It is plain, however, that the statute must mean one of three things:

*1. The tax which it imposes is on the passing [63] of the whole amount of the personal estate, with a progressive rate depending upon the sum of the whole personal estate; or,

*2. The tax which it levies is placed on the [64] passing of legacies or distributive shares of personal property at a progressive rate, the amount of such rate being determined, not by the separate sum of each legacy or distributive share, but by the volume of the whole personal estate. This is the mode in which the tax was computed by the assessor, and which was sustained by the court below; or,

3. The tax is on the passing of legacies or distributive shares *of personalty, with a [65] progressive rate on each separately determined by the sum of each of such legacies or distributive shares.

On the very threshold, the theory that the tax is not on particular legacies or distributive shares passing upon a death, but is on the whole amount of the personal property of the deceased, is rebutted by the heading, which describes what is taxed, not as the estates of deceased persons, but as "legacies and distributive shares of personal property." This, whilst not conclusive, is proper to be considered in interpreting the statute, or a descendant of a brother or sister of the father or mother, of the person who died possessed as aforesaid, at the rate of three dollars for each and every one hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

Fourth. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, or a descendant of the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother, of the person who died possessed as aforesaid, at the rate of four dollars for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest.

Fifth. Where the person or persons entitled to any beneficial interest in such property shall be in any other degree of collateral consanguinity than as hereinbefore stated, or shall be a stranger in blood to the person who died possessed as aforesaid, or shall be a body politic or corporate, at the rate of five dollars for each and every hundred dollars of the clear value of such interest: Provided, That all legacies or property passing by will, or by the laws of any state or territory, to husband or wife of the person who died possessed as aforesaid, shall be exempt from tax or duty.

Where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $25,000, but shall not exceed the sum or value of $100,000, the rates of duty or tax above set forth shall be multiplied by one and one half, and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $100,000, but shall not exceed the sum of $500,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by two; and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of $500,000, but shall not exceed the sum of $1,000,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by two and one half; and where the amount or when ambiguity exists and a literal interpretation will work out wrong or injury. United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 358, 386, 2 L. ed. 304, 313; United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 610, 631, 4 L. ed. 471, 477; United States v. Union P. R. Co. 91 U. S. 72, 23 L. ed. 224; Smythe v. Fiske, 23 Wall. 374, 380, 23 L. ed. 47, 49; Coosaw Min. Co. v. South Carolina, 144 U. S. 550, 36 L. ed. 537, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 689.

The opening words of section 29 may, for clearness, be thus arranged:

"That any person or persons having in charge or trust, as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property, . . . passing, after the passage of this act, from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws of any state or territory, . . . shall be, and hereby are, made subject to a duty or tax, to be paid to the United States, as follows—that is to say," etc.

Thus collocated, the statute clearly imposes the duty on the particular legacies or distributive shares, and not on the whole personal estate. It does not say that the tax is levied on the personal estate left by the deceased person, but it is imposed on legacies or distributive shares arising from such property. This is made clearer by considering that in the very same section the tax is described as being upon any interest which may have been "transferred by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, bargainor, to any person or persons," etc. That is to say, whilst the law places the duty on any legacy or distributive share passing by death, it puts a like *burden on gifts which may have [66] been made in contemplation of death and otherwise than by last will and testament.

Following the paragraph from which the foregoing has been quoted, the statute makes five distinct classes or enumerations whereby the rate of the tax is varied, that is, it is made more or less, depending upon the relationship, or want of relationship, of the legatee or distributee to the deceased. But this enumeration can only be explained upon the hypothesis that the law intended to impose a greater or less tax upon a legatee or distributee, arising from his degree of relationship or his being a stranger in blood to the deceased. Thus it cannot be doubted that, in assessing the tax the position of each separate legatee or distributee must be taken into view in order to ascertain the primary rate which the statute establishes. One of two things must arise. When the rate of tax is thus calculated upon the particular attitude to the deceased of each of the legatees or distributees, the sum of the tax must be deducted either from each particular legacy or from the mass of the whole personal estate. If it is deducted from each particular legacy, then it is manifest that the tax imposed will have been levied, not upon the mass of the estate, but upon each particular legatee or beneficiary, since the share of such value of said property shall exceed the sum of $1,000,000, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by three.

Sec. 30. That the tax or duty aforesaid shall be a lien and charge upon the property of every person who may die as aforesaid for twenty years, or until the same shall, within that period, be fully paid to and discharged by the United States; and every executor, administrator, or trustee, before payment and distribution to the legatees, or any parties entitled to beneficial interest therein, shall pay to the collector or deputy collector of the district of which the deceased person was a resident, the amount of the duty or tax assessed upon such legacy or distributive share, and shall also make and render to the said collector or deputy collector a schedule, list, or statement, in duplicate, of the amount of such legacy or distributive share, together with the amount of duty which has accrued or shall accrue thereon, verified by his oath or affirmation, to be administered and certified thereon by some magistrate or officer having lawful power to administer such oaths, in such form and manner as may be prescribed by the commissioner of internal revenue, which schedule, list, or statement shall contain the names of each and every person entitled to any beneficial interest therein, together with the clear value of such interest, the duplicate of which schedule, list, or statement shall be by him immediately delivered, and the tax thereon paid to such collector; and upon such payment and delivery of such schedule, list, or statement said collector or deputy collector shall grant to such person paying such duty or tax a receipt or receipts for the same in duplicate, which shall be prepared as hereinafter provided. Such receipt or receipts, duly signed and delivered by such collector or deputy collector, shall be sufficient evidence to entitle such executor, administrator, or trustee to be credited and allowed such payment by every tribunal which, by laws of any state or territory, is or may be empowered to decide upon and settle the accounts of executors and administrators. And in case such executor, administrator, or trustee shall refuse or neglect to pay the aforesaid duty or tax to the collector or deputy collector as aforesaid, within the time hereinbefore provided, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver to said collector or deputy collector the duplicate of the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate under oath as aforesaid, or shall neglect or refuse to deliver the schedule, list, or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate under oath as aforesaid, or shall deliver to said collector or deputy collector a false schedule or statement of such legacies, property, or personal estate, or give the names and relationship of the persons entitled to beneficial interest therein untruly, or shall not truly and correctly set forth and state therein the clear value of such beneficial interest, or where no administration upon such property or personal estate shall have been granted or allowed under existing laws, the collector or deputy collector shall make out such lists and valuation as in other cases of neglect or refusal, and shall assess the duty thereon; and the collector shall commence appropriate proceedings before any court of the United States, in the name of the United States against such person or persons as may have the actual or constructive custody or possession of such property or personal estate, or any part thereof, and shall subject such property or personal estate, or any portion of person will have paid a rate of taxation predicated upon the amount of the legacy and the relationship, or want of relationship, of the particular recipient thereof to the deceased. This being the case, no room would be left for the contention that the tax was imposed on the whole estate. On the other hand, if the whole sum of the taxation on all the shares, calculated on the basis of the relationship of each beneficiary and the amount received, be deducted from the mass of the estate, then each recipient would pay only a proportion of the amount without reference to his relationship to the deceased. This would result in imposing the tax on the whole personal estate, and ratably distribute the burden among all the beneficiaries. But to reach this the entire classification, grading the rate of the tax by the degrees of relationship, would have to be disregarded. The dilemma, therefore, which is involved in the contention that the statute imposes the tax, not on each legacy or distributive share, [67] but on the whole personalty, is *this: If the tax is levied and collected according to the classifications in the statute, it is clearly on the legacy or distributive share. If, on the contrary, it is levied on the entire personal estate, then the classifications of the statute must be ignored and the construction be upheld which maintains that the act has classified the rate of tax by the relationship of the beneficiaries to the deceased, and has then disregarded the classification by collecting the tax wholly without reference to such relationship. This construction, besides eliminating a large portion of the text of the act, would do violence to its plain import, which is to make the rate of the tax depend upon the character of the links connecting those taking with the deceased. This is greatly fortified by other portions of the act. At the close of the fifth subdivision of section 29, one of the clauses creating a classification with respect to remote relationship, or want of relationship, to the deceased, it is provided as follows:

"Provided, That all legacies or property passing by will, or by the laws of any state or territory, to husband or wife of the person who died possessed as aforesaid, shall be exempt from tax or duty."

same, to be sold upon the judgment or decree of such court, and from the proceeds of such sale the amount of such tax or duty, together with all costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by such court, shall be first paid, and the balance, if any, deposited according to the order of such court, to be paid under its direction to such person or persons as shall establish title to the same. The deed or deeds, or any proper conveyance of such property or personal estate, or any portion thereof, so sold under such judgment or decree, executed by the officer lawfully charged with carrying the same into effect, shall vest in the purchaser thereof all the title of the delinquent to the property or personal estate sold under and by virtue of such judgment or decree, and shall release every other portion of such property or personal estate from the lien or charge thereon created by this act. And every person or persons who shall have in his possession, charge, or custody any record, file, or paper containing, or sup-

Now, mark, the word is "passing" by will, etc., which excludes a conception that the whole amount of the estate, and not the particular portions thereof which passed, is the subject of the tax. And the exemption from the tax or duty, of the legacy, etc., given to the husband or wife of a deceased, implies that the scheme of taxation is of the legacies, etc., and not of the whole personal estate. This must be so, unless it can be said that the statute in terms exempts the legacy to a husband or wife from the legacy tax otherwise imposed, although no legacy taxes resulted from the statute.

The provisions for the collection of the tax contained in section 30 of the act confirm the construction that the passing of each legacy or distributive share, and not the entire personal estate of a deceased person, forms the subject of the tax. Thus, before payment and distribution to the legatees, etc., an executor, administrator, or trustee is required to pay "the amount of the duty or tax assessed upon such legacy or distributive share,"* and to "make and render a schedule," etc., in duplicate, "of the amount of such legacy or distributive share, together with the amount of duty which has accrued, or shall accrue thereon," and the schedule is required to "contain the names of each and every person entitled to any beneficial interest therein." [68]

Whatever be the obscurity it is illumined when the light of the previous legislation, which we have already reviewed, is thrown on it. The passing of legacies and distributive shares were the objects taxed under the English legacy act. They were the subjects taxed under the act of Congress of 1797. By the act of 1862, as we have seen, the whole estate was reached by a probate duty, whilst a distinct duty was charged upon legacies and distributive shares in personal property. When the act of 1864 was enacted there was added a succession tax on real estate, modeled, as said by this court and as shown by the act itself, upon the English succession duty act, which treated each particular gift of real estate as a distinct succession, separately liable for the duty laid by the act. The legacy tax and the succession tax were thus correlated and rested upon posed to contain, any information concerning such property or personal estate as aforesaid, passing from any person who may die as aforesaid, shall exhibit the same at the request of the collector, or deputy collector of the district, and to any law officer of the United States, in the performance of his duty under this act, his deputy or agent, who may desire to examine the same. And if any such person, having in his possession, charge, or custody any such records, files, or papers, shall refuse or neglect to exhibit the same on request as aforesaid, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of $500: Provided, That in all legal controversies where such deed or title shall be the subject of judicial investigation, the recital in said deed shall be prima facie evidence of its truth, and that the requirements of the law had been complied with by the officers of the government. [30 Stat. at L. 464.]

the same theory; that is, both considered, they created a tax on the passing of each particular gift or distributive share of both the personal and real estate, treated as separate, one from the other, and each as forming a distinct estate subject to taxation. To assume that, when the succession duty was adopted in 1864, that the legacy tax, which was also re-enacted in that act, lost its character and became a tax levied, not on the passing of the legacies and distributive shares, but upon the whole amount of the estate before passing, would destroy the entire harmony of the system, and lead to a confession that a confusion of thought existed which cannot in reason be admitted. Indeed, it is difficult to conceive that the act of 1864 contemplated that either the legacy duty or the succession duty which it imposed should be upon the whole estate, since the tax to be paid by the whole estate was therein distinctly and separately provided for by means of the probate duty. If the tax on the whole estate can be, by implication, inserted, the same reasoning would also imply that the succession duty must be likewise treated. It would thus be that the entire [69] act of 1864 would be in force despite its *repeal and the failure to re-enact in the present law either the whole estate or succession duty.

What it was considered the act of 1864 levied the tax on is also in addition demonstrated by the amendments made to the act of 1864 in 1866. One of these amendments was: "That any legacy or share of personal property passing as aforesaid to a minor child of the person who died possessed as aforesaid shall be exempt from taxation under this section, unless such legacy or share shall exceed the sum of one thousand dollars, in which case the excess only above that sum shall be liable to said taxation." Another was that any tax paid under the provisions of sections 124 and 125 of the act of 1864 should "be deducted from the particular legacy or distributive share, on account of which the same is charged." In other words, the act expressly commanded that to be done which it was impossible should be done compatibly with any hypothesis that the tax was on the whole personal estate, for, as we have seen, under that assumption the deduction of the tax from the whole estate was essential.

That the provisions of the act of 1864 were in mind when the present act was drafted is apparent, since it is not disputed that the act under review, so far as the tax on legacies and distributive shares is concerned, is an exact reproduction of the original act of 1864, except to the extent that the present act contains provisions relating to a progressive increase of rates. We say of the original act, because the present act does not contain in it the amendments to which we have referred, made in 1866; the fair inference being that the writer of the present act had before him the original text of the act of 1864, and not that text as amended by the act of 1866.

As the only provisions added to the present law relate to the progressive rate upon the legacies, it follows that, unless these added clauses provide for a tax on the whole estate instead of the legacies, it is a demonstration that the whole estate is not taxed by the present act. That the progressive rate features inserted in the act now under review have even no tendency to bring about such a result, we proceed now to demonstrate. We reproduce such portions of section 29 as are essential, putting in *brackets [70] the words found in the act of 1898 under review, which were not contained in the corresponding provisions existing in the act of 1864:
178 U. S.

"That any person or persons having in charge or trust, as administrators, executors, or trustees, any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property where the whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid shall exceed the sum of one [ten] thousand dollars in actual value, passing, after the passage of this act, from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws of any state, or territory, or any personal property or interest therein, transferred by deed, grant, bargain, sale, or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or bargainor, to any person or persons, or to any body or bodies, politic or corporate, in trust or otherwise, shall be, and hereby are, made subject to a duty or tax to be paid to the United States, as follows, that is to say: [Where the whole amount of said personal property shall exceed in value ten thousand and shall not exceed in value the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, the tax shall be:]" [13 Stat. at L. 285, chap. 173, § 124.]

Immediately following this are five classifications of beneficiaries, each varying in rate. These are followed by the progressive rate clause, which is as follows:

["Where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, but shall not exceed the sum or value of one hundred thousand dollars, the rates of duty or tax above set forth shall be multiplied by one and one half, and where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, but shall not exceed the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by two; and where the amount or value of such property shall exceed the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, but shall not exceed the sum of one million dollars, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by two and one half; and where the amount or value of such property shall exceed the sum of one million dollars, such rates of duty shall be multiplied by three."]

Observing closely the text, it is apparent that the clause *therein which points out [71] what is taxed is an exact copy of the act of 1864, except the substitution of the "ten" for the word "one." The subject taxed, therefore, under the present act is the same which was taxed under the act of 1864. This is the equivalent of a mathematical certainty. Coming, then, to the added provision at the end of the first paragraph, it says: "Where, the whole amount of said personal property shall exceed in value," etc. This, however, creates no new object of taxation, but simply provides that where said personal property, that is, the property previously specified, exceeds a certain amount, a given rate shall be imposed. So, in the further addition, pointing out the progressive feature, the law says, "where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of," etc., thus clearly again referring to the objects of taxation, the property described in the first part of the act, which was identically the same thing described in the act of 1864. The demonstration, therefore, is conclusive that the progressive feature clause added in the present act creates no new subject of taxation; it simply provides for the progressive rates on the said property mentioned in the opening sentences, which is described exactly as it was in the act of 1864. Now, as the act of 1864 taxed, not the whole estate, but each particular legacy or distributive share, the conclusion cannot be escaped that the present law does the same thing, except that there is added thereto a progressive rate.
981

The tax being then on the legacies and distributive shares, the rate primarily being determined by the relation of the legatees or distributees to the estate, does the law command that the progressive rate of tax which it imposes on the legacies or distributive shares shall be measured, not separately by the amount of each particular legacy or distributive share, but by the sum of the whole personal estate? This, as we have said, is the interpretation of the act which was adopted by the assessor in levying the taxes under review, and which was sustained by the court below.

[72] The unsoundness of the construction that the act measures the rate of tax by the whole estate is fully shown by what we have already said, for, as under the act of 1864 the legacies and distributive *shares alone were taxed, and as in re-enacting it the exact language was retained (omitting the separate provisions in the act of 1864, taxing the whole estate by a probate duty and taxing successions), and as the progressive rates only refer to the object taxed, as provided in the act of 1864, it results that under no reasonable construction can the present act be held to provide for a rate of tax computed on the whole estate. Even, however, if all the previous history be shut out of view, and even if the omission from this act of the whole estate duty which obtained under the act of 1864 be for the moment forgotten, the text of the law, considered alone, would not support the construction that it provides for a tax upon each legacy and distributive share by a rate of tax measured by the whole estate. In order to make this clear we will briefly analyze the text. In doing so, however, we eliminate the attempt made by counsel in argument to show the significance thereof by expressions used in the course of the debate by certain members of the Senate. Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, ante, 597, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448, and cases there cited.

The meaning of the act largely turns upon the following words, contained in the opening paragraph of section 29: "Where the whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid shall exceed the sum of ten thousand dollars in actual value, passing," etc. If these words refer to the whole amount of the estate left by a deceased person, then the words added in the act of 1898, to the end of the paragraph, viz., "where the whole amount of said personal property shall exceed in value ten thousand, and shall not exceed in value the sum of twenty-five thousand, dollars, the tax shall be," as stated in five classifications next enumerated, must refer to the same thing. It follows likewise that the progressive rate clause, which says, "where the amount or value of said property shall exceed the sum of," etc., must relate to the same thing; that is, the whole amount of the estate, as stated in the opening sentences of section 29. If this view be correct, then all legacies in an estate of $10,000 are exempt, and all legacies, whatever be their amount, in an estate above $10,000, have the original rate adjusted according to the classifications, and that rate is increased *progressively by [73] the whole amount of the estate, and not by the amount of the legacy. If, on the other hand, the words "where the whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid shall exceed the sum of ten thousand dollars," found in the first sentence of section 29, relate to the whole amount of each legacy, then legacies under $10,000 are not taxable, and those above $10,000 pay the original rate provided in the classifications, and become subject to the progressive increase clause, according to the amount of the legacy, and not by the whole amount of the estate.

But the pivotal words in the first sentence are not simply "the whole amount of such personal property," but the "whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid." This can only refer to the preceding part of the sentence, where what is contemplated by the words "as aforesaid" is and can alone be "any legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property . . . passing after the passage of this act. In other words, the statute itself by the reference clause establishes that the whole amount referred to is the sum or value of each particular legacy, etc., separately considered, passing from the deceased to the taker thereof. And this construction of the vital words referred to, derived from what immediately precedes them, is sustained by what immediately follows them, that is, the clause imposing the tax on "any personal property or interest therein, transferred by deed," etc., "made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor or bargainor, to any person or persons," etc. This latter clause treats each item of property given in contemplation of death otherwise than by last will and testament, as a distinct entity to be considered for the purpose of levying the tax. Each of such items, therefore, separately considered, becomes, for the purpose of the tax, the whole amount of such personal property, the statute clearly recognizing that there may be partial and distinct interests in each item of personal property, such as an interest for life in one person with a remainder in another. Thus by the two clauses, which are linked together by the words "the whole amount of such personal property," it develops that the amount referred to is the separate and distinct *sums or items of personal property passing, and not the whole amount of the entire estate, which, as has been shown in considering the previous proposition, the act did not purport to tax as such.

[74] The subsequent provisions of the act lend cogency to this view. Thus, in section 30, it is made the duty of the executor, etc., to pay over to the collector "the amount of the duty or tax assessed upon such legacy or distributive share," and he is also commanded to deliver to the collector a schedule "of the amount of such legacy or distributive share, together with the amount of the duty which has accrued or shall accrue thereon."

At the risk of repetition, we recur again to a particular feature in the prior legislation, because it very pertinently points out the error which has given rise to the assumption that the "whole personal estate as aforesaid" meant in the act of 1864, or means in this act, the whole amount of the personal estate left by the deceased, and not the whole amount of each legacy considered as a separate estate for the purpose of taxation. Attention has been called to the fact that, in accordance with the English system, the act of 1864 engrafted on the provisions of the act of 1862 a succession or real estate inheritance tax. In doing so, it was unequivocally declared in the law that each separate gift of real property was a distinct succession or estate. In other words, the statute itself announced the rule that the whole amount of each estate subject to taxation, under the succession tax, was the whole amount of each separate item of gift treated as an estate for the purpose of the levy and collection of the taxes thereon. How, then, can it be supposed that the act of 1864 contemplated that the section relating to the legacy should have one meaning, whilst the whole amount of the estate in the sections relating to succession or real estate taxes should have another? Must it not be considered that the statute provided for no such discordant and unjust discrimination, but that, on the contrary, it harmoniously expressed the rule obtaining from the beginning, that is, the levy of a legacy tax on personal estate passing by death to each particular beneficiary treated separately as the amount subject to taxation and the same rule applied to the succession tax by treating each *item of real estate as the whole amount of an estate passing separately for the purpose of taxation?

[75] It is true that in the practical execution of the act of 1864 the words "the whole amount of such personal property . . . shall exceed the sum of one thousand dollars" were administratively construed as applying to the entire personal estate left by one deceased, and not to the distinct legacies or interests. It resulted that where an estate did not equal $1,000, no tax was collected upon legacies or distributive shares therein, and where the estate exceeded $1,000, all legacies and distributive shares, whatever the amount of each, were taxed. Any force resulting from this administrative view, however, is weakened by the fact that the contrary construction prevailed as to the other portions of the act of 1864, the succession duty, where the amount of the tax was determined by the amount or value of each particular item of real property. The administrative construction therefore of the act of 1864 was contradictory, since it enforced one rule on the one hand and an absolutely conflicting one on the other. Besides, the whole estate was taxed as such by the probate duty found in the act of 1864.

As we have said, the act of 1864 was repealed in 1870. 16 Stat. at L. 256, chap. 255. After the repeal, the court was called upon, in Mason v. Sargent, 104 U. S. 689, 26 L. ed. 894, to consider whether, when one who held a life estate in a legacy died subsequent to the repeal of the act, the interest of the legatees in remainder was subject to the inheritance tax. In passing upon this question this court said (p. 690, L. ed. p. 894):

"The tax in question was imposed by section 124 of the act of June 30, 1864, chap. 173 (13 Stat. at L. 223, 285), upon legacies or distributive shares of personal property exceeding the sum of $1,000, passing, after the passage of the act, from a decedent, either testate or intestate, in the hands of an executor, administrator, or trustee, varying in rate, as the party beneficially entitled was less or more remote in consanguinity, or a stranger in blood, to the person from whom it passed; with a proviso that legacies or distributive interests in intestate estates, passing to husband or wife, should be exempt from such tax."

*The opinion thus expressed is in conflict [76] with the assumption that the whole estate contemplated, not each legacy or distributive share, but the entire amount of personal property of the deceased, and this construction may be well considered to have been in effect adopted by the re-enactment of the act of 1864, without any change indicating an intention to the contrary.

Granting, however, there is doubt as to the construction, in view of the consequences which must result from adopting the theory that the act taxes each separate legacy by a rate determined, not by the amount of the legacy, but by the amount of the whole personal estate left by the deceased, we should be compelled to solve the doubt against the interpretation relied on. The principle on which such construction rests was thus defended in argument. The tax is on each separate legacy or distributive share, but the rate is measured by the whole estate. In other words, the construction proceeds upon the assumption that Congress intended to tax the separate legacies, not by their own value, but by that of a wholly distinct and separate thing. But this is equivalent to saying that the principle underlying the asserted interpretation is that the house of A, which is only worth $1,000, may be taxed, but that the rate of the tax is to be determined by attributing to A's house the value of B's house, which may be worth a hundred-fold the amount. The gross inequalities which must inevitably result from the admission of this theory are readily illustrated. Thus, a person dying, and leaving an estate of $10,500, bequeaths to an hospital $10,000. The rate of tax would be 5 per cent, and the amount of tax $500. Another person dies at the same time, leaves an estate of $1,000,000, and bequeaths $10,000 to the same institution. The rate of tax would be 12½ per cent, and the amount of the tax $1,250. It would thus come to pass that the same person, occupying the same relation, and taking in the same character two equal sums from two different persons, would pay in the one case more than twice the tax that he would in the other. In the arguments of counsel tables are found which show how inevitable and profound are the inequalities which the construction *must produce. Clear as is the demonstration which they make, they only serve to multiply instances afforded by the one example which we have just given.

[77]

We are therefore bound to give heed to the rule that, where a particular construction of a statute will occasion great inconvenience or produce inequality and injustice, that view is to be avoided if another and more reasonable interpretation is present in the statute. Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Sulzberger, 157 U. S. 37, 39 L. ed. 611, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 508; Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. 646, 680, 11 L. ed. 1141, 1156; Bloomer v. McQuewan, 14 How. 539, 553, 14 L. ed. 532, 538; Blane v. National Banks, 23 Wall. 307, 320, 23 L. ed. 119, 121; United States v. Kirby, 7 Wall. 482, 486, 19 L. ed. 278, 280. Indeed, the confusion which gives rise to both of the constructions of the statute which we have just considered comes from the want of insight pointed out by Hanson in a passage which we have heretofore quoted; that is, it arises from not keeping in mind the distinction between a tax on the interest to which some person succeeds on a death and a tax on the interest which ceased by reason of the death, the two being different objects of taxation.

It may be doubted by some, aside from express constitutional restrictions, whether the taxation by Congress of the property of one person, accompanied with an arbitrary provision that the rate of tax shall be fixed with reference to the sum of the property of another, thus bringing about the profound inequality which we have noticed, would not transcend the limitations arising from those fundamental conceptions of free government which underlie all constitutional systems. On this question, however, in any of its aspects, we do not even intimate an opinion, as no occasion for doing so exists, since, as we understand the law, we are clearly of opinion that it does not sustain the construction which was placed on it by the court below.

984

By elimination, the process of reasoning which we have resorted to in order to demonstrate the unsoundness of the first two contentions as to the meaning of the statute renders it unnecessary to say anything in elaboration of the significance of the statute as embodied in the third proposition, which is, that the tax is on the legacies and distributive shares, the rate being primarily determined by the classifications and being progressively *increased according to the [78] amount of the legacies or shares. Its correctness is at once apparent when the other views are disposed of. As the "whole amount of such personal property as aforesaid" relates to the sum of each legacy or distributive share considered separately, it follows that all legacies not exceeding $10,000 are not taxed, and that those above that amount are taxed primarily by the degree of relationship or absence thereof, specified in the five classifications contained in the statute, and that the rate of tax is progressively increased by the amount of each separate legacy or distributive share. This being the correct interpretation of the statute, it follows that the court below erroneously maintained a contrary construction, and therefore the tax assessed and collected was for a larger amount than the sum actually due by law.

The precise meaning of the law being thus determined, the question whether the tax which it imposes is direct, and hence subject to the requirement of apportionment, arises for consideration. That death duties, generally, have been from the beginning in all countries considered as different from taxes levied on property, real or personal, directly on account of the ownership and possession thereof, is demonstrated by the review which we have previously made. It has also been established by what we have heretofore said, that such taxes, almost from the beginning of our national life, have been treated as duties, and not as direct taxes. Of course, they concern the passing of property by death, for if there was no property to transmit, there would be nothing upon which the tax levied on the occasion of death could be computed. This legislative and administrative view of such taxes has been directly upheld by this court. In Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 349, 23 L. ed. 102, to which we have heretofore referred, the question presented was the constitutionality of the provisions of the act of 1864, imposing a succession duty as to real estate. The assertion was that the duty was repugnant to the Constitution, because it was a direct tax and had not been apportioned. The tax was decided to be constitutional. The court said (p. 346, L. ed. p. 101):

"But it is clear that the tax or duty levied by the act under consideration is not a direct tax within the meaning of either of *these [79] provisions. Instead of that it is plainly an excise tax or duty, authorized by section eight of article one, which vests the power in Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare.

178 U. S.

"Whether direct taxes in the sense of the Constitution comprehend any other tax than a capitation tax and a tax on land, is a question not absolutely decided, nor is it necessary to determine it in the present case, as it is expressly decided that the term does not include the tax on income, which cannot be distinguished in principle from a succession tax such as the one involved in the present controversy."

This is decisive against the contrary contention here relied on, unless it be that the decision in Scholey v. Rew has been overruled, and therefore is no longer controlling.

The argument is that the decision in Scholey v. Rew was overruled in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429, 39 L. ed. 759, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673, 158 U. S. 601, 39 L. ed. 1108, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912. This contention is thus supported in argument.

As in the course of the opinion in Scholey v. Rew the court said that taxes on successions could not be distinguished in principle from an income tax, therefore the decision in the Pollock Case, which held that an income tax was direct, it is argued, necessarily decided that an inheritance tax was also direct. But in the Pollock Case the decision in Scholey v. Rew, was not overruled. On the contrary, the correctness of the decision in the latter case as to the particular matter which it actually decided in effect was reaffirmed. In consequence of the statement made in Scholey v. Rew, that an income tax and a succession tax could not be distinguished one from the other, that case was relied on in the Pollock Case by counsel in argument and by the members of the court who dissented, as establishing, for the reason stated, that the income tax was not direct. The court, however, treated Scholey v. Rew as inapplicable to an income tax, because it considered that whether an income tax was direct was not actually involved in the latter case, and hence the illustration which was [80] used in Scholey v. Rew as to "an income tax was held not to have been a decision on the question of whether or not an income tax was direct.

The court said (157 U. S. 577, 39 L. ed. 817, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 688):

"Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99, was the case of a succession tax, which the court held to be 'plainly an excise tax or duty' upon the devolution of the estate or the right to become beneficially entitled to the same, or the income thereof, in possession or expectancy. It was like the succession tax of a state, held constitutional in Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; and the distinction between the power of a state and the power of the United States to regulate the succession of property was not referred to, and does not appear to have been in the mind of the court. The opinion stated that the act of Parliament, from which the particular provision under consideration was borrowed, had received substantially the same construction, and cases under that act [178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

hold that a succession duty is not a tax upon income or upon property, but on the actual benefit derived by the individual, determined as prescribed. Re Elwes, 3 Hurlst. & N. 719; Atty. Gen. v. Sefton, 2 Hurlst. & C. 362; S. C. (H. L.) 3 Hurlst. & C. 1023, 11 H. L. Cas. 257."

The argument now made, therefore, comes to this: Although in the Pollock Case the doctrine which the court considered as having been actually decided in Scholey v. Rew was not overruled, nevertheless, because an example which was made use of in the course of the opinion in Scholey v. Rew was disregarded, the Pollock Case therefore overruled Scholey v. Rew. The issue presented in the Pollock Case was whether an income tax was direct, within the meaning of the Constitution. The contentions which the case involved were thus presented. On the one hand, it was argued that only capitation taxes and taxes on land as such were direct, within the meaning of the Constitution, considered as a matter of first impression, and that previous adjudications had construed the Constitution as having that import. On the other hand, it was asserted that, in principle, direct taxes, in the constitutional sense, embraced not only taxes on land and capitation taxes, but all burdens laid on real or personal property because of its ownership, which were equivalent to a direct tax on such property, and it was affirmed that the previous adjudications of this court had settled nothing to the contrary. The issues which were thus presented in the Pollock Case, it will be observed, had been expressly reserved in Scholey v. Rew, where it was said (23 Wall. 346, L. ed. p. 102):

"Whether direct taxes in the sense of the Constitution comprehend any other tax than a capitation tax and a tax on land, is a question not absolutely decided, nor is it necessary to determine it in the present case."

The question which was thus reserved in Scholey v. Rew, and which was presented for decision in the Pollock Case, was decided in the latter case, the court holding that taxes on the income of real and personal property were the legal equivalent of a direct levy on the property from which the income was derived, and therefore required apportionment. But there was no intimation in the Pollock Case that inheritance taxes—which had been held in Scholey v. Rew not to be direct, which had from all time been considered as being imposed, not on property, real or personal, as ordinarily understood, but as being levied on the transmission or receipt of property occasioned by death, and which had from the foundation of the government been treated as a duty or excise—were direct taxes, within the meaning of the Constitution. Undoubtedly, in the course of the opinion in the Pollock Case, it was said that, if a tax was direct within the constitutional sense, the mere erroneous qualification of it as an excise or duty would not take it out of the constitutional requirement as to apportionment. But this language related to the subject-matter under consideration, and was but a statement that a tax which was in itself direct, because imposed upon property solely by reason of its ownership, could not be changed by affixing to it the qualification of excise or duty. Here we are asked to decide that a tax is a direct tax on property which has at all times been considered as the antithesis of such a tax; that is, has ever been treated as a duty or excise, because of the particular occasion which gives rise to its levy.

[81]

[82] But it is asserted that it was decided in the income tax cases that, in order to determine whether a tax be direct within the meaning of the Constitution, it must be ascertained whether the *one upon whom by law the burden of paying it is first cast can thereafter shift it to another person. If he cannot, the tax would then be direct in the constitutional sense, and, hence, however obvious in other respects it might be a duty, impost, or excise, it cannot be levied by the rule of uniformity, and must be apportioned. From this assumed premise it is argued that death duties cannot be shifted from the one on whom they are first cast by law, and therefore they are direct taxes requiring apportionment.

The fallacy is in the premise. It is true that in the income tax cases the theory of certain economists by which direct and indirect taxes are classified with reference to the ability to shift the same was adverted to. But this disputable theory was not the basis of the conclusion of the court. The constitutional meaning of the word direct was the matter decided. Considering that the constitutional rule of apportionment had its origin in the purpose to prevent taxes on persons solely because of their general ownership of property from being levied by any other rule than that of apportionment, two things were decided by the court: First, that no sound distinction existed between a tax levied on a person solely because of his general ownership of real property, and the same tax imposed solely because of his general ownership of personal property. Secondly, that the tax on the income derived from such property, real or personal, was the legal equivalent of a direct tax on the property from which said income was derived, and hence must be apportioned. These conclusions, however, lend no support to the contention that it was decided that duties, imposts and excises which are not the essential equivalent of a tax on property generally, real or personal, solely because of its ownership, must be converted into direct taxes, because it is conceived that it would be demonstrated by a close analysis that they could not be shifted from the person upon whom they first fall. The proposition now relied upon was considered and refuted in Nicol v. Ames, 173 U. S. 509, 43 L. ed. 786, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 522, where the court said (p. 515, L. ed. p. 791, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 525):

[83] "The commands of the Constitution in this, as in all other respects, must be obeyed; direct taxes must be apportioned, while indirect taxes must be uniform throughout the United *States. But while yielding implicit obedience to these constitutional requirements, it is no part of the duty of this court to lessen, impede, or obstruct the exercise of the taxing power by merely abstruse and subtle distinctions as to the particular nature of a specified tax; where such distinction rests more upon the differing theories of political economists than upon the practical nature of the tax itself.

"In deciding upon the validity of a tax with reference to these requirements, no microscopic examination as to the purely economical or theoretical nature of the tax should be indulged in for the purpose of placing it in a category which would invalidate the tax. As a mere abstract, scientific, or economical problem, a particular tax might possibly be regarded as a direct tax, when as a practical matter pertaining to the actual operation of the tax it might quite plainly appear to be indirect. Under such circumstances, and while varying and disputable theories might be indulged as to the real nature of the tax, a court would not be justified, for the purpose of invalidating the tax, in placing it in a class different from that to which its practical results would consign it. Taxation is eminently practical, and is, in fact, brought to every man's door, and for the purpose of deciding upon its validity a tax should be regarded in its actual, practical results, rather than with reference to those theoretical or abstract ideas whose correctness is the subject of dispute and contradiction among those who are experts in the science of political economy."

Concluding, then that the tax under consideration is not direct within the meaning of the Constitution, but, on the contrary, is a duty or excise, we are brought to consider the question of uniformity.

The contention is that because the statute exempts legacies and distributive shares in personal property below $10,000, because it classifies the rate of tax according to the relationship or absence of the relationship of the taker to the deceased, and provides for a rate progressing by the amount of the legacy or share, therefore the tax is repugnant to that portion of the first clause of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution, *which provides that "duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States."

[84] The argument to the contrary, whilst conceding that the tax devised by the statute does not fulfil the requirement of equality and uniformity, as those words are construed when found in state constitutions, asserts that it does not thereby follow that the taxes in question are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, since the provision in the Constitution, that "duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," it is insisted has a different meaning from the expression "equal and uniform," found in state constitutions. In order to decide these respective contentions it becomes at the outset necessary to accurately define the theories upon which they rest.

On the one side, the proposition is that the command that duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States relates to the inherent and intrinsic character of the tax; that it contemplates the operation of the tax upon the property of the individual taxpayer, and exacts that when an impost, duty, or excise is levied, it shall operate precisely in the same manner upon all individuals; that is to say, the proposition is that "uniform throughout the United States" commands that excises, duties, and imposts, when levied, shall be equal and uniform in their operation upon persons and property in the sense of the meaning of the words equal and uniform, as now found in the constitutions of most of the states of the Union. The contrary construction is this: That the words "uniform throughout the United States" do not relate to the inherent character of the tax as respects its operation on individuals, but simply requires that whatever plan or method Congress adopts for laying the tax in question, the same plan and the same method must be made operative throughout the United States; that is to say, that wherever a subject is taxed anywhere, the same must be taxed everywhere throughout the United States, and at the same rate. The two contentions then may be summarized by saying that the one asserts that the Constitution prohibits the levy of any duty, impost, or excise which is not intrinsically equal and uniform in its operations *upon individuals, and the other that the power of Congress in levying the taxes in question is by the terms of the Constitution restrained only by the requirement that such taxes be geographically uniform.

[85]

The argument as to intrinsic uniformity is asserted to find support in expressions used by some of the justices in the carriage tax case. Hylton v. United States, 3 Dall. 171, 1 L. ed. 556. The statements thus referred to are as follows:

Mr. Justice Paterson said (p. 180, L. ed. p. 560):

"Apportionment is an operation on states, and involves valuations and assessments which are arbitrary and should not be resorted to but in case of necessity. Uniformity is an instant operation on individuals, without the intervention of assessments, or any regard to states, and is at once easy, certain, and efficacious."

Mr. Justice Iredell said (p. 181, L. ed. p. 561):

"If it can be considered as a tax, neither direct within the meaning of the Constitution, nor comprehended within the term 'duty, impost, or excise,' there is no provision in the Constitution, one way or another, and then it must be left to such an operation of the power as if the authority to lay taxes had been given generally in all instances, without saying whether they should be apportioned or uniform; and in that case, I should presume, the tax ought to be uniform, because the present Constitution was particularly intended to affect individuals, and not states, except in particular cases specified. And this is the leading distinction between the Articles of Confederation and the present Constitution."

178 U. S.

And the following passage from the opinion in United States v. Singer, 15 Wall. 111, 121, 21 L. ed. 49, 51, is also asserted to support the contention that a tax was imposed upon a distiller, in the nature of an excise, and the question arose whether in its imposition upon different distillers the uniformity of the tax was preserved, and the court said:

"The law is not in our judgment subject to any constitutional objection. The tax imposed upon the distiller is in the nature of an excise, and the only limitation upon the power of Congress in the imposition of taxes of this character is that they *shall be 'uniform throughout the United States.' The tax here is uniform in its operation; that is, it is assessed equally upon all manufacturers of spirits, wherever they are. The law does not establish one rule for one distiller and a different rule for another, but the same rule for all alike."

[86]

In opposition to this view it is urged that the language used by the judges in the Hylton Case was not intended to, and does not, when properly understood, refer to the inherent character of the tax, but simply called attention to the fact that, differing from the Articles of Confederation, power was given to Congress by the Constitution to levy duties, imposts, and excises, thus acting upon individuals; and that the language in the Singer Case, whilst it uses the word "equal," clearly referred, not to an inherent uniformity, but to a geographical one. And this, it is argued, is rendered certain by the opinion in the Head Money Cases, 112 U. S. 580, 594, sub nom. Edye v. Robertson, 28 L. ed. 798, 802, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247, 252, where, in considering the objection that a tax imposed upon the owners of steam vessels for each passenger landed at New York from a foreign port was void because not levied by any rule of uniformity, the court, speaking by Justice Miller, said:

"The tax is uniform when it operates with the same force and effect in every place where the subject of it is found. The tax in this case, which, as far as it can be called a tax, is an excise duty on the business of bringing passengers from foreign countries into this by ocean navigation, is uniform, and operates precisely alike in every port of the United States where such passengers can be landed."

To overcome the construction in favor of geographical uniformity asserted by the government to arise from the language just quoted, it is, in the first place, argued that when correctly understood it does not sustain the claim so based on it, and, in the second place, that if it does, it is not binding as authority, because the Head Money Cases involved, not the uniformity clause of the Constitution, but that portion of clause 6 of section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution, which declares that "no preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one state over those of another."

It is conceded that if the preference clause just referred to *and the uniform clause have the same meaning, that of course merely a geographical operation was intended. But it is insisted that the two clauses are distinct in import, and that the difference in language of the two manifests the distinct meanings which should be affixed to them. It is apparent that the controversy cannot be disposed of by a mere reference to prior adjudications, since reliance is, by both sides, in effect, placed upon the same decisions. But to determine which view of the cited authorities is the correct one, it will become necessary not only to analyze the facts which were at issue in the decided cases, but also to elucidate the language of the opinions which have given rise to the conflicting constructions now placed upon such language, by an examination of the subjects to which the language related. As to do this calls for a critical consideration of the provisions of the Constitution referred to in the opinions relied on, we shall, for the moment, put the cases referred to out of mind, and consider the controversy presented as one of original impression. We are, moreover, impelled to this course from the fact that as the word "uniform," or the words "equal and uniform," are now generally found in state constitutions, and as there contained have been with practical unanimity interpreted by state courts as applying to the intrinsic nature of the tax and its operation upon individuals, if it be that the words "uniform throughout the United States," as contained in the Constitution of the United States, have a different significance, the reason for such conclusion should be carefully and accurately stated.

[87]

Considering the text, it is apparent that if the word "uniform" means "equal and uniform" in the sense now asserted by the opponents of the tax, the words "throughout the United States," are deprived of all real significance, and sustaining the contention must hence lead to a disregard of the elementary canon of construction which requires that effect be given to each word of the Constitution.

Taking a wider view, it is to be remembered that the power to tax contained in section 8 of article 1 is to lay and collect "taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; . . . , but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform [88] throughout the United States." Thus, the qualification of uniformity is imposed, not upon all taxes which the Constitution authorizes, but only on duties, imposts, and excises. The conclusion that inherent equality and uniformity is contemplated involves, therefore, the proposition that the rule of intrinsic uniformity is applied by the Constitution to taxation by means of duties, imposts, and excises, and it is not applicable to any other form of taxes. It cannot be doubted that in levying direct taxes, after apportioning the amount among the several states, as provided in clause 4 of section 9 of article 1 of the Constitution, Congress has the power to choose the objects of direct taxation, and to levy the quota as apportioned directly upon the objects so selected. Even then, if the view of inherent uniformity be the true one, none of the taxes so levied would be subjected to such rule, as the requirement only relates to duties, imposts, and excises.

988

But the classes of taxes termed duties, imposts, and excises, to which the rule of uniformity applies, are those to which the principle of equality and uniformity in the sense claimed is, in the nature of things, the least applicable and least susceptible of being enforced. Excises usually look to a particular subject, and levy burdens with reference to the act of manufacturing them, selling them, etc. They are or may be as varied in form as are the acts or dealings with which the taxes are concerned. Impost duties take every conceivable form, as may by the legislative authority be deemed best for the general welfare. They have been at all times often specific. They have sometimes been discriminatory, particularly when deemed necessary by reason of the tariff legislation of other countries. The claim of intrinsic uniformity, therefore, imputes to the framers a restriction as to certain forms of taxes, where the restraint was least appropriate and the omission where it was most needed. This discord which the construction, if well founded, would create, suggests at once the unsoundness of the proposition, and gives rise to the inference that the contrary view by which the unity of the provisions of the Constitution is maintained, must be the correct one. In fact, it is apparent that if imposts, duties, and excises are controlled by the rule of intrinsic uniformity, the methods usually employed at the time of the adoption of the *Constitution in all countries in the [89] levy of such taxes would have to be abandoned in this country, and, therefore, whilst nominally having the authority to impose taxes of this character, the power to do so would be virtually denied to Congress.

Now, that the requirement that direct taxes should be apportioned among the several states, contemplated the protection of the states, to prevent their being called upon to contribute more than was deemed their due share of the burden, is clear. Giving to the term uniformity as applied to duties, imposts, and excises a geographical significance, likewise causes that provision to look to the forbidding of discrimination as between the states, by the levying of duties, imposts, or excises upon a particular subject in one state and a different duty, impost, or excise on the same subject in another; and therefore, as far as may be, is a restriction in the same direction and in harmony with the requirement of apportionment of direct taxes. And the conclusion that the possible discrimination against one or more states was the only thing intended to be provided for by the rule which uniformity imposed upon the power to levy duties, imposts, and excises, is greatly strengthened by considering the state of the law in the mother country and in the colonies, and the practice of taxation which obtained at or about the time of the adoption of the Constitution.

In England, nowhere had the conception of a limitation on the power to levy duties, imposts, and excises by an intrinsic rule of uniformity found utterance, and the practice which had obtained, it may be said, was commonly to the contrary. Passing without special notice the system of customs (import and export) duties existing in England from a time long prior to the Revolution, which was replete with examples of taxation not fulfilling the requirement of intrinsic equality and uniformity, we briefly refer to a few examples of the same nature afforded by statutes imposing internal taxation in the mother country.

178 U. S.

[90] Internal taxation, in the form of excises, was introduced into England by a Parliamentary resolution passed on March 28, 1643, and carried into effect by an ordinance of the same date. 2 Dowell, History of Taxation, 9. Many of these excises were imposed with reference to the supposed ability of the *party whose property, office, etc., was assessed to pay the same. Thus, in 1747, a duty of excise was imposed upon coaches and other carriages kept for personal use. 20 Geo. II. chap. 10; 19 Stat. 31. In 1756 a duty of excise was imposed upon the possessor of plate over a certain weight. — Geo. II., chap. 14; 21 Stat. 388. In 1758 all offices of profit, other than naval and military, were subjected to the payment of duty when the salary exceeded 100 pounds. 30 Geo. II., chap. 22. In 1777 a duty was imposed upon employers of coachmen and other men servants. 15 Geo. III., chap. 29; 31 Stat. 372. In 1779 a duty was imposed, not upon all forms of locomotion, but upon traveling by post, the usual method of locomotion among the wealthier classes. 19 Geo. III., chap. 51; 32 Stat. 279. In 1784 a duty was laid, not uniformly with respect to all horses kept by a person, but in respect to horses kept for the saddle or driving in carriages. 24 Geo. III., chap. 31; 34 Stat. 535.

It is accurate to say that in the colonies prior to the confederation, and in the states prior to the time of the adoption of the Constitution, the wisdom of restraining the levy of duties, imposts, and excises by an express requirement of inherent equality and uniformity had likewise nowhere found expression. The state constitutions of the revolutionary period (except, perhaps, those of Massachusetts and New Hampshire) contained no provisions indicating an intent to control the bodies authorized to levy taxes and raise money in the exercise of a sound discretion as to the mode to be adopted in levying taxation. The people were content to commit to their representatives the enactment of reasonable and wholesome laws, being satisfied with the protection afforded by a representative and free government and by the general principles of the common law protecting the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and property.

[91] The Massachusetts Constitution of 1780 and that of 1788 of New Hampshire merely required that the assessments of rates and taxes should be proportional and reasonable and with a view to equality, but there was no such qualification expressed as to the authority conferred "to impose and levy reasonable duties and excises upon any produce, goods, wares, merchandise, *and commodities 178 U. S.

whatsoever, brought into, produced, manufactured, or being within the same."

In taxing laws of the original states prior to the convention of 1787, exemptions were allowed from a consideration of what was deemed best for the general welfare, and taxes were frequently laid from a consideration of the presumed ability of the owner to pay the tax. Discriminations and exemptions were also contained in various state taxing laws, which illustrate the discretion vested in the legislative bodies of the states in the latter part of the eighteenth century. We print in the margin a few examples.†

†In chapter 5 of the Pennsylvania Statutes of March 27, 1782, a tax was laid upon "negro and mulatto servants above the age of twelve years; horses, mares, and cattle above three years old; coaches and carriages kept by any person for his or her own use, and for the purpose of traveling or pleasure." The chaises or riding chairs of ministers of the gospel, the president, professors, or tutors of Harvard College, or grammar school masters, were exempt from duty of excises laid upon certain described coaches and other carriages, by an act passed in Massachusetts on July 10, 1783.

In a law of 1784, at page 131, of the Laws of Connecticut, the listers were required in the list of polls and ratable assets of the inhabitants of the respective counties to list polls from twenty-one to seventy years of age at 18 pounds, and polls from sixteen to twenty-one years old at nine pounds; houses were to be listed, not uniformly, but according to the number of fire-places; attorneys at law and physicians and surgeons were to be listed, the least practitioner at a certain sum, and larger practitioners higher in proportion; shopkeepers or traders, the lowest class at 25 pounds, and all others in due proportion; and each allowed and licensed tavern keeper was to be set at 15 pounds, and to be added to in proportion to their situation and profits, according to the best judgment of the listers; and persons following any "mechanical art or mystery, such as blacksmiths, shoemakers, tanners, goldsmiths, or silversmiths," and all other works and occupations followed or pursued by any person by which profits arise, except business in any public office, husbandry, and common labor for hire, were to be assessed by the best judgment of the listers.

The general assembly of New Jersey, by the act (chap. 400) December 22, 1783, for the purpose of raising 10,000 pounds for the support of government and the contingent expenses for the year 1784, enumerated a large number of items of persons and articles which were made taxable by the act, to be valued and rated by the assessors within stated sums. Single men who kept a horse were to be rated at not exceeding 10 shillings, while single men who did not keep a horse were to be rated at not exceeding 5 shillings. Male slaves were to be taxed at not exceeding 5 shillings, but it was provided "that no slave is to be taxed who is unable to work, or that may appear to the assessors to be no profit to his master or mistress." Fisheries where fish were caught for sale, and sawmills that sawed timber for sale or hire, were to be rated not exceeding 2 pounds.

In South Carolina, by an act passed March 28, 1787 (6 Stat. at L. 24), entitled "An Act for Raising Supplies for the Year 1787," a tax of 9 shillings and 4 pence was laid upon free negroes and mulattoes from sixteen to fifty years of age, while the tax upon free white men was upon those neither lame nor disabled, and who were between twenty-one to fifty years of age, while the tax was to be 10 shillings per head.

[92] *It cannot be therefore supposed that the framers of the Constitution, in using the words "uniform throughout the United States," contemplated to confer the power to levy duties, imposts, and excises, and yet to accompany this grant of authority with a restriction which had never found expression as to such taxes at that time anywhere, and which was contrary to the practice which had uniformly obtained both in the mother country and in the colonies and in the states prior to the adoption of the Constitution. But one of the most satisfactory answers to the argument that the uniformity required by the Constitution is the same as the equal and uniform clause which has since been embodied in so many of the state constitutions, results from a review of the practice under the Constitution from the beginning. From the very first Congress down to the present date, in laying duties, imposts, and excises the rule of inherent uniformity, or, in other words, intrinsically equal and uniform taxes, has been disregarded, and the principle of geographical uniformity consistently enforced. Take, for a general example, *specific import duties, by which particular specific rates are imposed on enumerated articles, without reference to their value. It is manifest that all such duties are void, if intrinsic equality and uniformity be the rule, and yet in all the great controversies which have arisen over the policy of impost duties generally, and particularly as to the economic wisdom of specific duties, never has it been contended that the power to impose them did not exist because of the uniformity clause of the Constitution. So, also, mention may be made of the common form of the excises on distilled spirits with the tax per gallon, without reference to the value thereof.

[93] Indeed, tariff duties have not only varied with different articles, but have varied with the different valuations of the same article. We cite a few instances of the latter character, found in the tariff acts of August 5, 1861 (12 Stat. at L. 293, chap. 45), and August 27, 1894 (28 Stat. at L. 530, chap. 349), respectively. In the act of 1861 a duty was imposed—

"On all silks valued at not over one dollar per square yard, thirty per centum ad valorem; on all silks valued over one dollar

And a tax of 1 per cent was laid on the profits of faculties and professions, clergymen, schoolmasters, and schoolmistresses excepted.

In Delaware, by a law passed in the sixteenth year of the reign of Geo. II. (Laws of Delaware, Adams' ed., pub. 1797, p. 257), and apparently in force when the Constitution of 1792 was adopted (Id. pp. 396, 429), unsettled tracts and parcels of land were exempted from taxation, and the assessors were directed in assessing persons to have due regard "to such as are poor and have a charge of children," the poorest sort of such not to be rated under 8 pounds. Single men without visible estate were to be rated at not less than 12 pounds nor more than 24 pounds, excepting, however, single men under twenty-one years of age, and apprentices and such as had not been out of apprenticeship more than six months.

990

per square yard, forty per centum ad valorem; on all silk velvets or velvets of which silk is the component material of chief value, valued at three dollars per square yard or under, thirty per centum ad valorem; valued at over three dollars per square yard, forty per centum ad valorem."

In the act of 1894 occurs the following paragraph:

"280. On woolen and worsted yarns made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca or other animals, valued at not more than forty cents per pound, thirty per centum ad valorem; valued at more than forty cents per pound, forty per centum ad valorem."

So also a single paragraph of the tariff acts has frequently contained an elaborate system of minimum classifications and compound duties, as well as exemptions for importations below a certain value. See provisions discussed in Arthur v. Vietor, 121 U. S. 572, 575, 32 L. ed. 201, 202, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Hedden v. Robertson, 151 U. S. 520, 521, 38 L. ed. 257, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 434; Arthur v. Morgan, 112 U. S. 495, 498, 28 L. ed. 825, 826, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 241.

Nor can it be said that these illustrations relate to legislation enacted long after the adoption of the Constitution, when by *lapse [94] of time an erroneous conception as to the meaning of the Constitution had arisen, for the examples to which we have just referred are but types of many forms of taxation by way of duties, imposts, and excises which were enacted without question from the very beginning, and have continued in an unbroken line to the present time, sanctioned by the founders of our institutions and approved in practical execution by all the illustrious men who have directed the public destinies of the nation. Excise taxes were largely used during the administration of President Washington, and again during and after the war of 1812. It may properly be said of these excises that none of them were uniform according to the principles now contended for, yet no constitutional question in this regard was ever raised about them. A partial list of some of the earlier acts is inserted in the margin.† We do not cite from †Federal excises during the first generation after the Constitution.

I. Washington's administration.

March 3, 1791, chap. 15, §§ 14, 15, on distilled spirits; not uniform or proportionate to strength. No tax on country distilleries using homemade materials.

May 8, 1792, chap. 32, § 1, on distilled spirits; country distillers taxed differently from those in cities, towns, and villages; § 11, no drawback on any quantity less than 100 gallons.

June 5, 1794, chap. 45, § 1, on carriages. Contain some exemptions. (Discussed in Hyton v. United States, 3 Dall. 171, 1 L. ed. 536.)

June 5, 1794, chap. 48, on licenses for making certain sales of wines or foreign distilled spirituous liquors.

June 5, 1794, chap. 51, §§ 1, 2, on snuff and refined sugar; § 14, no drawback on any quantity less than $12 worth. (Discussed in Pennington v. Cox, 2 Cranch, 33, 2 L. ed. 199.)

June 9, 1794, chap. 65, § 1, on auction sales:

178 U. S.

[95] the latter revenue acts, *because of the numerous and familiar instances of such legislation which abound therein.

The necessities which gave birth to the Constitution, the controversies which preceded its formation, and the conflicts of opinion which were settled by its adoption, may properly be taken into view for the purpose of tracing to its source any particular provision of the Constitution in order thereby to be enabled to correctly interpret its meaning. Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 558, 39 L. ed. 811, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673.

[96] The paralysis which the Articles of Confederation produced upon the Continental Congress because of the want of power in that body to enforce necessary taxation to sustain the government needs no more than statement. And the proceedings of the Congress during the confederation afford abundant evidence of the constant effort which was made to overcome this situation by attempts to obtain authority from the states for Congress to levy the taxes deemed by it essential, and thus relieve it from the embarrassment occasioned by the fact that all demands for revenue depended for fulfilment wholly upon the action of the respective states. Despite the constant agitation as to the subject and the abundant discussions which took place *in relation to it during the period of the confederation, in the whole of the proceedings not a word can be found which can give rise to even the suggestion that there was then any thought of restraining the taxing power with reference to the intrinsic operation of a tax upon individuals. On the contrary, the sole and the only question which was ever present and in every form was discussed, was the operation of any taxing power which might be granted to Congress upon the respective states; in other words, the discrimination as regards states which might arise from a greater or lesser proportion of any tax being paid within the geographical limits of a particular state.

The proceedings of the Continental Congress also make it clear that the words "uniform throughout the United States," which were afterwards inserted in the Constitution of the United States, had, prior to its adoption, been frequently used, and always with reference purely to a geographical uniformity and as synonymous with the expression "to operate generally throughout the United States." The foregoing situation so thoroughly permeated all the proceedings of the Continental Congress that we might well rest content with their mere statement. We shall, however, make a few references on the subject.

The view that intrinsic uniformity was not then conceived is well shown by remarks by Mr. Wilson upon a proposition submitted by him to the Continental Congress on March 18, 1783 (5 Elliot, Debates, 67), that Congress be empowered to lay and impose "a tax of one quarter of a dollar per hundred acres on all located and surveyed lands within each of the states." He said, speaking of the proposed tax, "that it was more moderate than had been paid before the Revolution, and it could not be supposed the people would grudge to pay, as the price of their liberty, what was formerly paid to their oppressors."

As early as February, 1781, a resolution was proposed authorizing Congress to levy certain taxes and duties, which resolution contained the proviso, "and the same articles shall bear the same duty and impost throughout the said states without exemption." 1 Elliot, Debates, p. 92.

Though this resolution failed of passage, a report of the committee of the whole was agreed to on the same day, in the form *of a [97] resolution recommended to the several states to levy for the use of the United States a duty of 5 per cent upon imports, with certain exceptions, and a duty of 5 per cent upon all prizes and prize goods. As late as December, 1782, however, some of the states had failed to comply with this resolution. 5 Elliot, Debates, 13.

On January 25, 1783 (5 Elliot, Debates, 31), a resolution was proposed declaring that Congress would "make every effort in their power to obtain, from the respective states, general and substantial funds ade-with exemption of judicial sales, sales of goods distrained or in insolvency; and of sales of produce of land, when sold on the land where produced, etc.; and of sales "of any farming utensils, stock, or household furniture by persons removing from the place of their former residence, where the amount . . . shall not exceed $200."

March 3, 1795, chap. 43, § 1, on mortars and pestles, etc., in snuff mills; § 8, no drawback on any exports of snuff less than 300 lbs.

May 28, 1796, chap. 37, § 1, on carriages, with exemptions.

II. Period of war of 1812.

July 24, 1813, chap. 21, § 1, on refined sugar.

July 24, 1813, chap. 24, § 1, on carriages, with exemptions.

July 24, 1813, chap. 25, § 1, on licenses for distilling liquors.

July 24, 1813, chap. 26, § 1, on auction sales; $\frac{1}{4}$ of 1 per cent on sales of vessels; 1 per cent on other sales of goods, etc., with exemptions.

August 2, 1813, chap. 39, § 4, on licenses for retailing wines, etc.; one rate for cities, towns, and villages, another for the country.

August 2, 1813, chap. 53, §§ 1, 2, on bank notes, etc., graduated but not ad valorem; commutable at $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on dividends.

December 15, 1814, chap. 12, § 1, on carriages, graduated but not ad valorem.

December 21, 1814, chap. 15, § 1, on distilled spirits.

December 23, 1814, chap. 16, § 1, on auction sales; § 3, on retailers' licenses.

January 18, 1815, chap. 22, § 1, on domestic manufactures. Various specific and ad valorem rates, with exemptions, as umbrellas under $2, boots under $5 a pair.

January 18, 1815, chap. 23, § 1, on household furniture kept for use (annual duty) with minimum of $200, graduated but not ad valorem. The unit is the family: § 13, exemption of books, etc.; § 14, exemption of certain charitable, religious, or literary institutions.

February 27, 1815, chap. 61, on plate.

April 19, 1816, chap. 58, § 4, on licenses for distilling liquors.

quate to the object of funding the whole debt of the United States; . . .” The word “general” was stricken out, because susceptible of being considered as implying that every object of taxation within the states should be embraced. That is to say, in order to remove any impression that the word “general” might imply the obligation to levy on all articles, the phraseology of the previous resolution was changed so as to cause the word to have merely a geographical significance, viz., to require that whatever subject of taxation was assessed, the same subject should be taxed in every state, or, in other words, that the particular tax should operate generally throughout the United States. Two days later, a new resolution having been introduced declaring it to be the opinion of Congress that general funds should be established, to be collected by Congress, the same objection was repeated (5 Elliot, Debates, 34), and the proposition was amended so as to read “establishment of permanent and adequate funds to operate generally throughout the United States.” There being controversy as to whether Congress should be allowed to collect the taxes (5 Elliot, Debates, 34), the debates record the following proceedings:

“On the motion of Mr. Madison, the whole proposition was new modeled, as follows:

“That it is the opinion of Congress that the establishment of permanent and adequate funds to operate generally throughout the United States, is indispensably necessary for doing complete justice to the creditors of the United States, for restoring public credit, and for providing for the future exigencies of the war.”

“The words ‘to be collected under the authority of Congress’ were, as a separate question, left to be added afterwards.”

[98] *Mr. Madison, after commenting on the demerits of the plans just referred to, prefaced his subsequent remarks with the following (5 Elliot, Debates, p. 36): “It remains to examine the merits of a plan of general revenue operating throughout the United States, under the superintendence of Congress.”

On March 11, 1783 (5 Elliot, Debates, 64), a vote was taken upon three questions, the first being: “Shall any taxes to operate generally throughout the states, be recommended by Congress, other than duties on foreign commerce?” The matter culminated on April 18, 1783, in the adoption of a resolution by nine states, recommending to the several states that Congress be vested with the power to levy, for the use of the United States, certain duties, as well specific as ad valorem, upon goods imported into the states from any foreign port, island, or plantation. 5 Elliot, Debates, 93.

In an address which submitted the resolution to the states it was observed (5 Elliot, Debates, 97):

“To render this fund as productive as possible, and, at the same time, to narrow the room for collusions and frauds, it has been judged an improvement of the plan to recommend a liberal duty on such articles as are most susceptible of a tax according to their quantity, and are of most equal and general consumption; leaving all other articles, as heretofore proposed, to be taxed according to their value.”

It was also stated in the address that “to bring this essential resource (a tax on imposts) into use . . . a concerted uniformity was necessary;” and “that this uniformity cannot be concerted through any channel so properly as through Congress.”

Thus it is apparent that the expression “uniform throughout the United States” was at that time considered as purely geographical, as being synonymous with the expression “general operation throughout the United States,” and that no thought of restricting Congress to intrinsic uniformity obtained, since the powers recommended were absolutely in conflict with such theory.

The reasons advanced by those who opposed the various resolutions to which we have referred are, if anything, more decisive *than are the matters to which we have called [99] attention. Those reasons were predicated upon the inequality among the states which might arise from the granting to Congress the power to lay duties, imposts, and excises. That is, if a particular article was levied on generally throughout the various states by an excise or duty, as a greater quantity of that article might be found in one state than in other states, it was asserted the burden would be unequal because the former state would pay a greater proportion of the tax. This form of objection is well illustrated by what was said by Mr. Rutledge and Mr. Lee against the grant of power to Congress to lay duties or excises to operate generally throughout the United States. We quote from 5 Elliot, Debates, p. 34, as follows:

“Mr. Rutledge objected to the term ‘generally,’ as implying a degree of uniformity in the tax which would render it unequal. He had in view, particularly, a land tax, according to quality (quantity? See note p. 37), as had been proposed by the office of finance.

“Mr. Lee seconded the opposition to the term ‘general.’ He contended that the states would never consent to a uniform tax, because it would be unequal.”

Again (5 Elliot, Debates, p. 37), Mr. Rutledge complained “that those who so strenuously urged the necessity and competency of a general revenue, operating throughout all the United States at the same time, declined specifying any general objects from which such a revenue could be drawn.” And the same reason was urged for refusing the authority to lay imposts throughout the United States, as is shown by the objections made, to which we shall now refer. Thus, with respect to duty on imported salt, it was argued that it would bear injuriously on the eastern states “on account of salt consumed in the fisheries, and that, besides, it would be injurious to the national interest by adding to the cost of fish.” 5 Elliot, Debates, 61. So, also, Rhode Island protested against the grant of the power to impose duties recommended by the resolution of April 18, 1783, previously referred to, on the ground "that the proposed duty would be unequal in its operation, bearing hardest upon the [100] most commercial states, *and so would press peculiarly hard upon that state which draws its chief support from commerce." 1 Elliot, Debates, 101. And the nature of this objection caused it to come to pass that in the subsequent discussions in Congress, the claim that it was essential to confer upon Congress the authority to lay duties, imposts, and excises to be uniform throughout the United States, became associated in the discussion with the asserted necessity that Congress should have the power to establish uniform regulations of commerce to prevent the discrimination resulting from the laying of duties, imposts, and excises by the respective states. 1 Elliot, Debates, 112. The association of the two subjects evolved by their natural relation is well shown by a resolution of Mr. Madison, introduced in the Virginia house of delegates in 1784 (5 Elliot, Debates, 114), "wherein it was proposed that the delegates from the state of Virginia should be instructed to propose in Congress a recommendation to the states in Union, to authorize that assembly to regulate their trade," on principles and under qualifications stated in the following paragraphs:"

"1st. That the United States in Congress assembled be authorized to prohibit vessels belonging to any foreign nation from entering any of the ports thereof, or to impose any duties on such vessels and their cargoes which may be judged necessary; all such prohibitions and duties to be uniform throughout the United States, and the proceeds of the latter to be carried into the treasury of the state within which they shall accrue.

"2d. That no state be at liberty to impose duties on any goods, wares, or merchandise, imported, by land or by water, from any other state, but may altogether prohibit the importation from any state of any particular species or description of goods, wares, or merchandise, of which the importation is at the same time prohibited from all other places whatsoever."

It will be noticed that the words "uniform throughout the United States" are the same which were subsequently adopted in the clause of the Constitution under consideration, and that the term uniformity, in the resolution of Mr. Madison, was applied not only to duties, but to regulations and prohibitions respecting external commerce, which were designed to be the same all over the Union.

[101] *Though the resolution of Mr. Madison was not adopted, it led to the sending by Virginia of commissioners to Annapolis to meet commissioners from the other states, the result of which meeting was the Federal convention of 1787.

Considering the proceedings of the convention, the same observation is pertinent which we have previously made as to the Continental Congress, viz., that, despite the struggles and controversies which environed the final adoption of the Constitution, not a single word is found in any of the debates, or in 178 U. S.

any of the proceedings or historical documents contemporaneous and concurrent with the adoption of the Constitution, which give slightest intimation that any suggestion was ever made that the grant of power to tax was considered from the point of view of its operation upon the individual. The struggles which were flagrant in the Continental Congress were transferred to the convention. The question of the undue proportion of taxation which might fall upon one or more states if direct taxes were laid was solved by the principle of apportionment of direct taxes; duties, imposts, and excises were only subjected to the requirement of uniformity throughout the United States, these words, as we have shown, having acquired at that time an unquestioned meaning.

Without going into minute detail, the mention of a few salient particulars will serve to show how the result of the convention brought together the provisions as to the uniformity of duties, imposts, and excises throughout the United States and the restriction against discriminating commercial regulations by Congress, just as they had by the force of circumstances been drawn together in the Continental Congress, and how their solution in the Constitution was substantially in accord with the resolution of Mr. Madison, introduced into the Virginia house of delegates, to which we have referred.

The draft of a Federal Constitution, submitted to the convention by Mr. Pinckney, provided in the first and second paragraphs as follows (5 Elliot, Debates, p. 130):

"Art. VI. The legislature of the United States shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises;

*"To regulate commerce with all nations [102] and among the several states;

"The proportion of direct taxation shall be regulated by the whole number of inhabitants of every description; which number shall, within — years after the first meeting of the legislature, and within the term of every — year after, be taken in the manner to be prescribed by the legislature.

"No tax shall be laid on articles exported from the states; nor capitation tax, but in proportion to the census before directed."

No other provision was made respecting taxation.

The plan of Mr. Paterson, of New Jersey, provided, in addition to the powers vested in Congress by the Articles of Confederation (p. 191), that Congress should be authorized—

"to pass acts for raising a revenue, by levying a duty or duties on all goods and merchandise of foreign growth or manufacture, imported into any part of the United States; by stamps on paper, vellum, or parchment, and by a postage on all letters and packages passing through the general postoffice—to be applied to such Federal purposes as they shall deem proper and expedient; to make rules and regulations for the collection thereof; and the same from time to time to alter and amend, in such manner as they shall think proper; to pass acts for the regulation of trade and commerce, as well with foreign nations as with each other."

By another section of the Paterson plan, it was provided that whenever requisitions upon the states should be necessary, they should be made by the rule of numbers and not by value of land, as under the confederation; and the Congress was to be authorized "to devise and pass acts" directing and authorizing the collection of requisitions when not complied with. It is thus seen that both of the plans referred to made no provision for uniformity of taxation in the sense contended for by the opponents of the tax now under consideration. The committee of detail, in the first section of article VII. of their draft of a proposed Constitution, reported the two clauses of the plan of Mr. Pinckney first quoted, substituting the word "foreign"

[103] *for the word "all" before the word "nations." (5 Elliott, Debates, 378.)

On August 25, 1787, the following occurred (5 Elliot, Debates, 478):

"Mr. Carroll and Mr. L. Martin expressed their apprehensions, and the probable apprehensions of their constituents, that, under the power of regulating trade, the general legislature might favor the ports of particular states, by requiring vessels destined to or from other states to enter and clear thereat, as vessels belonging or bound to Baltimore, to enter and clear at Norfolk, etc. They moved the following proposition:

"The legislature of the United States shall not oblige vessels belonging to citizens thereof, or to foreigners, to enter or pay duties or imposts in any other state than in that to which they may be bound, or to clear out in any other than the state in which their cargoes may be laden on board; nor shall any privilege or immunity be granted to any vessel on entering or clearing out, or paying duties or imposts in one state in preference to another."

On the same day Mr. McHenry and General Pinckney submitted a proposition (which was referred nem. con. to a committee) relating to the establishment of new ports in the states for the collection of duties or imposts, which concluded as follows (p. 479):

"All duties, imposts, and excises, prohibitions or restraints, laid or made by the legislature of the United States, shall be uniform and equal throughout the United States."

The fourth section of the seventh article of the proposed Constitution reported by the committee on detail on August 6, 1787, read as follows (p. 379):

"Sec. 4. No tax or duty shall be laid by the legislature on articles exported from any state; nor on the migration or importation of such persons as the several states shall think proper to admit; nor shall such migration or importation be prohibited."

The committee to whom these propositions were referred made a report on August 28, in effect embodying both propositions in one paragraph, as follows (5 Elliott, Debates, 483):

[104] "That there be inserted, after the fourth clause of the seventh *section, 'nor shall any regulation of commerce or revenue give preference to the ports of one state over those of another, or oblige vessels bound to or from any state to enter, clear, or pay duties, in another; and all tonnage, duties, imposts, and excises, laid by the legislature, shall be uniform throughout the United States.'"

It will be noticed that the committee recommended, not merely that preferences between ports should be forbidden by "any regulation of commerce," but also that such preferences should not be made by "any regulation of revenue." This, obviously, rendered it unnecessary to include, in the latter part of the clause, "prohibitions or restraints," as proposed by Mr. McHenry and General Pinckney. The substantial effect of the first clause of the paragraph was to require that all regulations of commerce or of revenue affecting commerce through the ports of the states should be the same in all ports.

It follows from the collocation of the two clauses that the prohibition as to preferences in regulations of commerce between ports and the uniformity as to duties, imposts, and excises, though couched in different language, had absolutely the same significance. The sense in which the word "uniform" was used is shown by the fact that the committee, whilst adopting in a large measure the proposition of Mr. McHenry and General Pinckney, "that all duties, imposts, excises, prohibitions, or restraints . . . shall be uniform and equal throughout the United States," struck out the words "and equal." Undoubtedly this was done to prevent the implication that taxes should have an equal effect in each state. As we have seen, the pith of the controversy during the confederation was that even although the same duty or the same impost or the same excise was laid all over the United States, it might operate unequally by reason of the unequal distribution or existence of the article taxed among the respective states.

On August 31, 1797, the report of the committee was acted upon as follows (5 Elliot, Debates, 507): The provision, "Nor shall any regulation of commerce or revenue give preference to the ports of one state over those of another," was adopted nem. con. After discussion the clause, "or oblige vessels bound to or from any state to enter, clear, [105] or pay duties in another," was agreed to. Quoting from the Debates at page 503:

"The word 'tonnage' was struck out nem. con., as comprehended in 'duties.'

"On the question on the clause of the report—'and all duties, imposts, and excises, laid by the legislature, shall be uniform throughout the United States'—it was agreed to nem. con."

In a footnote it is said:

"In the printed journal, New Hampshire and South Carolina entered in the negative."

On September 4, 1787, the committee to whom sundry resolutions, etc., had been referred on August 31, recommended, among others, the following addition and alteration to the report before the convention (pp. 506 to 507) :

"1. The first clause of article 7, section 1, to read as follows: 'The legislature shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.'

"2. At the end of the second clause of article 7, section 1, add, 'and with the Indian tribes.'

The committee of style, on September 12, 1787, reported a plan of the Constitution (p. 535), the foregoing provision conferring authority to lay taxes, etc., being designated as section 8 of article 1.

On September 14, 1783, the words "but all such duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States," which, in their adoption, had been associated with and formed but a part of the clause forbidding a preference in favor of the port of one state over the port of another state—in other words, had been a part of another clause—were shifted, by a unanimous vote, from that paragraph, and were annexed to the provisions granting the power to tax.

[106] Thus, it came to pass that although the provisions as to preference between ports and that regarding uniformity of duties, imposts, and excises were one in purpose, one in their adoption, they became separated only in arranging the Constitution for the purpose of style. The first now stands in the Constitution as a part of the sixth clause of section 7 of article 1, and the *other is a part of the first clause of section 8 of article 1. By the result, then, of an analysis of the history of the adoption of the Constitution it becomes plain that the words "uniform throughout the United States" do not signify an intrinsic but simply a geographical uniformity. And it also results that the assertion to which we at the outset referred, that the decision in the Head Money Cases, holding that the word "uniform" must be interpreted in a geographical sense, was not authoritative, because that case in reality solely involved the clause of the Constitution forbidding preferences between ports, is shown to be unsound, since the preference clause of the Constitution and the uniformity clause were, in effect, in framing the Constitution, treated, as respected their operation, as one and the same thing, and embodied the same conception.

We add that those who opposed the ratification of the Constitution clearly understood that the uniformity clause as to taxation imported but a geographical uniformity, and made that fact a distinct ground of complaint. Thus, in the report made to the legislature of Maryland by Luther Martin, attorney general of the state, detailing and commenting upon the proceedings of the convention of 1787, of which convention Mr. Martin was a delegate, in the course of comments upon the tax clause of the Constitution Mr. Martin said (1 Elliot, Debates, p. 369) :

"Though there is a provision that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform—that is, to be laid to the same amount on the same articles in each state—yet this will not prevent Congress from having it in their power to cause them to fall very unequally and much heavier on some states than on others, because these duties may be laid on articles but little or not at all used in some other states, and of absolute necessity for the use and consumption of others; in which case, the first would pay little or no part of the revenue arising therefrom, while the whole or nearly the whole of it would be paid by the last, to wit, the states which use and consume the articles on which imposts and excises are laid."

Having disposed of the question of uniformity, we are next brought to consider certain contentions which relate to that subject. It is argued that even although it be conceded that *the uniformity required by the Constitution is only a geographical one, the particular law in question does not fulfil the requirements of even geographical uniformity, since it does not apply to the District of Columbia. We think this contention is without merit.

The proposition is predicated upon the fact that the statute purports to lay the tax upon legacies and distributive shares "passing, after the passage of this act, from any person possessed of such property, either by will or by the intestate laws of any state or territory;" and provides that the receipt for the tax will entitle an administrator, etc., to credit to the amount of the payment made to the collector "by any tribunal which, by the laws of any state or territory, is, or may be, empowered to decide and settle the accounts of executors and administrators."

This, it is asserted, does not embrace the District of Columbia. Without attempting to determine whether the necessary construction of the statute would require the inclusion of the District of Columbia within its terms, aside from any special provision bearing upon the question, we think the provisions of section 31 of the act makes the objection untenable. That section provides as follows (30 Stat. at L. 466, chap. 448) :

"Sec. 31. That all administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment of taxes, not heretofore specifically repealed, are hereby made applicable to this act."

The result of this provision is to carry into the law under review the provisions of section 3140 of the Revised Statutes, relating to internal revenue laws generally. It is as follows:

"3140. The word 'state,' when used in this title, shall be construed to include the territories and the District of Columbia, where such construction is necessary to carry out its provisions."

It is yet further asserted that the tax does not fulfil the requirements of geographical uniformity, for the following reason: As the primary rate of taxation depends upon the degree of relationship or want of relationship to a deceased person, it is argued that it cannot operate with geographical uniformity, inasmuch as testamentary and intestacy laws may differ in every *state. It is certain that the same degree of relationship or want of relationship to the deceased, wherever existing, is levied on at the same rate throughout the United States. The tax is hence uniform throughout the United States, despite the fact that different conditions among the states may obtain as to the objects upon which the tax is levied. The proposition in substance assumes that the objects taxed by duties, imposts, and excises must be found in uniform quantities and conditions in the respective states, otherwise the tax levied on them will not be uniform throughout the United States. But what the Constitution commands is the imposition of a tax by the rule of geographical uniformity, not that in order to levy such a tax objects must be selected which exist uniformly in the several states. Indeed, the contention was substantially disposed of in the License Tax Cases, 5 Wall. 472, 18 L. ed. 497, previously referred to. It was there urged that, as the several states had the right to forbid the carrying on of the liquor traffic, therefore Congress had no power to license such traffic, because it would interfere with the authority of the state. It was held that the license was validly imposed, that it did not interfere with the power of the states to prevent the liquor traffic, because in a state where such traffic was forbidden the license would be inoperative; but in the states where such traffic was allowed, the license would be effective. The argument, however, is additionally fully answered by the review which we have made of the origin and meaning of the expression "uniform throughout the United States." From that review it appears that the very objection upon which the proposition now advanced must rest was urged in the Continental Congress as the reason why the levy of uniform duties, imposts, and excises throughout the United States should not be authorized. This is shown by the objection of Mr. Rutledge and the suggestion of Mr. Lee. It is further shown by the protest of Rhode Island, and the reasons advanced why a duty on salt should not be levied. But it was seen that if it were required, not only that the duties, imposts, and excises should be uniform throughout the United States, but that in imposing them objects should be selected existing in equal quantity in the [109] several states, the *grant of power to levy duties, imposts, and excises would be a failure. In the convention which framed the Constitution the same argument was used without success, and, as we have seen, the only ground upon which the striking out of the words "and equal" after the word "uniform," in the adoption of the clause as now found in the Constitution, can be reasonably explained, is that it was done to prevent the implication that the duties, imposts, and excises which were to be uniform throughout the United States were to be placed upon rights equally existing in the several states. To now adopt the proposition relied on would be virtually, then, to nullify the action of the convention, and would relegate the taxing power of Congress to the impotent condition in which it was during the confederation.

Lastly, it is urged that the progressive rate feature of the statute is so repugnant to fundamental principles of equality and justice that the law should be held to be void, even although it transgresses no express limitation in the Constitution. Without intimating any opinion as to the existence of a right in the courts to exercise the power which is thus invoked, it is apparent that the argument as to the enormity of the tax is without merit. It was disposed of in Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 293, 42 L. ed. 1043, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

The review which we have made exhibits the fact that taxes imposed with reference to the ability of the person upon whom the burden is placed to bear the same have been levied from the foundation of the government. So, also, some authoritative thinkers, and a number of economic writers, contend that a progressive tax is more just and equal than a proportional one. In the absence of constitutional limitation, the question whether it is or is not is legislative, and not judicial. The grave consequences which it is asserted must arise in the future if the right to levy a progressive tax be recognized involves in its ultimate aspect the mere assertion that free and representative government is a failure, and that the grossest abuses of power are foreshadowed unless the courts usurp a purely legislative function. If a case should ever arise, where an arbitrary and confiscatory exaction is imposed bearing the guise of a progressive or any other form of tax, it will be time enough to consider *whether the [110] judicial power can afford a remedy by applying inherent and fundamental principles for the protection of the individual, even though there be no express authority in the Constitution to do so. That the law which we have construed affords no ground for the contention that the tax imposed is arbitrary and confiscatory is obvious.

It follows from the foregoing opinion that the court below erred in denying all relief, and that it should have held the plaintiff entitled to recover so much of the tax as resulted from taxing legacies not exceeding $10,000, and from increasing the tax rate with reference to the whole amount of the personal estate of the deceased from which the legacies or distributive shares were derived. For these reasons the judgment below must be reversed, and the case be remanded, with instructions that further proceedings be had according to law and in conformity with this opinion, and it is so ordered.

Mr. Justice Brewer dissents from so much of the opinion as holds that a progressive rate of tax can be validly imposed. In other respects he concurs.

Mr. Justice Peckham took no part in the decision.

Mr. Justice Harlan dissenting:

While I concur in the construction placed by the court upon the clause of the Constitution declaring that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be "uniform throughout the United States," I dissent from that part of the opinion construing the 29th and 30th sections of the revenue act. In my judgment, the question whether the tax presented by Congress shall or shall not be imposed is to be determined with reference to the whole amount of the personal property out of which legacies and distributive shares arise. If the value of the whole personal property held in charge or trust by an administrator, executor, or trustee exceeds $10,000, then every part of it constituting a legacy or distributive share, except the share of *a husband or wife, is taxed at the progressive rate stated in the act of Congress. I do not think the act can be otherwise interpreted without defeating the intent of Congress.

Construed as I have indicated, the act is not liable to any constitutional objection.

Mr. Justice McKenna concurs in this dissent.

SHIRLEY T. HIGH and Jessie M. High,
Appts.,
v.

F. E. COYNE, as Collector of the United States Internal Revenue, and Ellen T. High, as Executrix of James L. High, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 111, 112.)

War revenue act—legacy tax—erroneous construction of statute.

The affirmance of a decree sustaining the constitutionality of the provisions of the war revenue act of 1898, relating to legacy taxes, is made without prejudice to the right to resist so much of the tax as may have arisen from the wrong interpretation of the statute, although the only questions raised by the assignments of error related to the constitutionality of the act, where the officers charged with the administration of the law have adopted and enforced an erroneous interpretation of it, by which an excessive tax is imposed.

[No. 225.]

Argued December 5, 6, 7, 1899. Decided May 14, 1900.

APPEAL from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois to review a decision sustaining the constitutionality of the war revenue act. Affirmed.

See same case below, 93 Fed. Rep. 450.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

[111] *The complainants, who are appellants here, filed their bill to enjoin the executrix of their father's estate from paying the legacy taxes levied by §§ 29 and 30 of the war revenue act of 1898. The collector of internal revenue was also made a defendant, and an injunction was asked against him to prevent his collecting or attempting to collect the taxes in question, which, it was asserted, he was about to enforce against the executrix, who, it was averred, would pay unless by the writ of injunction she was forbidden to do so. As heirs of their father and as beneficiaries of his estate, the complainants asserted they were entitled to prevent the executrix from making payment of taxes which were unconstitutional and hence void. The reasons relied on to show that the taxing law was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States were that the taxes were direct, and not apportioned, were not uniform, and were levied on objects *beyond the scope [112] of the authority of Congress. The bill was demurred to as not stating ground for relief. The demurrers were sustained, and from a decree dismissing the suit this appeal is prosecuted.
178 U. S.

Mr. Abram M. Pence argued the cause and, with Messrs. George A. Carpenter and Shirley T. High, filed a brief for appellants.

Mr. John G. Carlisle also argued the cause and, with Messrs. Peter B. Olney, William Edmond Curtis, Henry M. Ward, Ward B. Chamberlin, George F. Chamberlin, Julien T. Davies, Frederic R. Coudert, Jr., E. S. Mansfield and W. S. B. Hopkins, filed a brief for appellants.

Mr. Henry M. Ward filed a separate brief for appellants.

Messrs. Richard C. Dalc, Samuel Dickson, and John C. Bullitt filed a brief in behalf of the Fidelity Trust and Safe Deposit Company.

Messrs. Thomas B. Reed and Thomas Thacher also filed a brief for appellants.

Solicitor General Richards argued the cause and filed a brief for appellees.

*Mr. Justice White delivered the opinion [112] of the court:

As the court below did not grant an injunction, but dismissed the bill, it is unnecessary to consider whether the right would have existed to enjoin the collector of internal revenue, even had the court concluded that the averments of the bill disclosed a cause of action. Rev. Stat. 3226.

Every ground relied on to maintain that the taxes levied by §§ 29 and 30 of the war revenue act are repugnant to the Constitution has been decided adversely in the opinion this day announced in Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, ante, 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747.

This disposes of this case, as the assignments of error raised only the constitutionality of the taxes, and there is nothing in the record to enable us to see that the statute was, by the collector, mistakenly construed.

As, however, the interpretation of the statute, which was held to be unsound in No. 387 (Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, ante, 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747) was the one which was adopted and enforced by the officers charged with the administration of the law, the impression naturally arises that such erroneous construction must have been applied in assessing the tax in controversy. The ends of justice therefore require that the right to resist so much of the tax as may have arisen from the wrong interpretation of the statute above referred to be not foreclosed by our decree.

Decree affirmed, without prejudice to any such right.

[113] *FIDELITY INSURANCE, TRUST, & SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY, Executor under the Will of Daniel Craig, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,

v.

PENROSE A. McCLAIN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 113, 114.)

War revenue act—taxing legacy or inheritance—affirmance without prejudice.

An affirmance of a judgment sustaining the constitutionality of the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, when no other question was raised by the plaintiff in error, may be made without prejudice to his right to relief as to so much of the tax, if any, as may have arisen from the wrong interpretation of the statute, where the officers charged with its administration have adopted and enforced an unsound interpretation of the statute, by which an excessive amount of tax has been imposed.

[No. 451.]

Argued December 5, 6, 7, 1899. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania to review a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action against a collector of internal revenue. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Richard C. Dale argued the cause and, with Messrs. Samuel Dickson and John C. Bullitt, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Solicitor General Richards argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

[113] Mr. Justice White* delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was begun in a court of common pleas for the county of Philadelphia, state of Pennsylvania, to recover from the defendant, a collector of internal revenue, the sum of $168.75, with interest, being the amount of an assessment made by the defendant under the authority of §§ 29 and 30 of the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, which we have just considered. The statement of claim filed on behalf of the plaintiff contained an averment of the amount of the tax paid without any particular description of the mode in which it had been levied. It was averred that the payment of the tax had been made under protest, and because of threats to distrain, etc. It was also further stated that an application for refunding had been refused, and judgment was prayed for the amount of the tax. The demand was based solely on the ground of the unconstitutionality of the statute, which was asserted to ex-

[114] ist because the tax was direct *and had not been apportioned, and, if not direct, was wanting in uniformity.

The cause was removed into the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. The defendant demurred on the ground that no cause of action was stated, and the demurrer was sustained. A judgment having been entered in favor of the defendant, the present writ of error was prosecuted.

The record contains the protest made at the time of the payment of the tax, and the petition for refunding. Both of these documents disclose that the sole ground urged against the assessment and collection of the tax was the unconstitutionality of the statute in the particulars above mentioned. This constitutional objection, as we have already said, was the only ground alleged in the statement of the case. The assignment of errors here made also confines the issue solely to the constitutional questions already referred to. There is nothing in the record to show the amount of the estate, the legacies or distributive shares therein, or upon what basis the collector proceeded in assessing the tax. It contains, therefore, nothing from which it can be said that, if the law under which the tax was laid be constitutional, an excessive tax was imposed. In Knowlton v. Moore, No. 387 of this term, just decided (178 U. S. 41, ante, 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747), it was held that the law in question was constitutional. As, however, the interpretation of the statute which was held to be unsound in No. 387 was the one which was adopted and enforced by the officers charged with the administration of the law, the impression naturally arises that such erroneous construction may have been applied in assessing the tax in controversy. The ends of justice therefore require that the right to relief as to so much of the tax, if any, as may have arisen from the wrong interpretation of the statute above referred to, be not foreclosed by our judgment.

Judgment affirmed, without prejudice to the right to any such relief.

*HARRY PLUMBER, as Executor of the [115] Last Will and Testament of Joseph Plumber, Plff. in Err.,

v.

BIRD S. COLER, Comptroller of the City of New York.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 115-139.)

Inheritance tax law—exemption of United States bonds—state power to regulate succession to property of decedent—impairment by state of power of government to borrow money.

1. A legacy of United States bonds is not ex-

NOTE.—As to taxes on successions and collateral inheritances—see Re Howe (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 825, and note; Wallace v. Myers (C. C. S. D. N. Y.) 4 L. R. A. 171, and note; Com. v. Ferguson (Pa.) 10 L. R. A. 240, and note; Re Romaine (N. Y.) 12 L. R. A. 401, and note. And see note to Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 42 L. ed. U. S. 1037.

empted from the inheritance tax laws of a state by the provisions of the act of Congress of July 14, 1870, and the declaration on the face of the bonds issued thereunder, exempting them from taxation in any form by or under state authority, since the inheritance tax is not imposed on the bonds, but on the privilege of acquiring property by will or inheritance, which is a right and privilege created and regulated by the state.

2. The right of an individual citizen and resident of the state to direct the descent of his property by will or permit its descent to be regulated by the statute, as well as the right to receive the property of his testator or ancestor as legatee, devisee, or heir, is derived from and regulated by the state.
3. The impairment of the borrowing power of the government as the remote effect of a state statute imposing a tax upon the transfer of a decedent's property, when the statute is applied to property consisting of United States bonds, is not sufficient to render such statute unconstitutional.

[No. 489.]

Argued February 27, 28, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Surrogate's Court of the County of New York, State of New York, to review a decision sustaining an inheritance tax law. Affirmed.

For report of case in Surrogate's Court, see 30 Misc. 19, 62 N. Y. Supp. 1024.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

- [115] *Joseph Plummer, a citizen and resident of New York, died October 28, 1898, leaving a last will whereby he bequeathed to Harry Plummer, his executor, $40,000 in United States bonds, issued under the funding act of 1870, in trust, to hold the same during the lifetime of Ella Plummer Brown, daughter of the testator, and to pay the income thereof to her during her life, and at her death to divide the same between and amongst her issue then living.

The value of this life interest was computed by the appraisers at the sum of $16,120, and a tax of $161.20 was imposed thereon by the surrogate of the county of New York. From this appraisal and the order imposing the tax an appeal was taken to the surrogate's court of the county and state of New York, where the following stipulation was filed:

- "It is stipulated and agreed by and between the attorneys for the respective parties to the above-entitled proceedings that [116] *the $40,000 in amount at par of bonds of the United States of America, of which the said Joseph Plummer died possessed, and upon the interest in which of Ella Plummer Brown a tax of $161.20 was fixed, assessed, and determined by the order appealed from consist of 4 per cent bonds issued in the year 1877 and due in the year 1907, under and by virtue of and pursuant to the statute of the United States, passed July 14, 1870, entitled 'An Act to Authorize the Refunding of the National Debt,' which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury, among other things, to issue various classes of bonds in the sums therein mentioned, including 'a sum or sums not exceeding in the aggregate 178 U. S.

one thousand million dollars of like bonds, . . . payable at the pleasure of the United States after thirty years from the date of their issue, and bearing interest at the rate of four per cent per annum; all of which said several classes of bonds and the interest thereon shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority; and the said bonds shall have set forth and expressed upon their face the above-specified conditions;' and that pursuant to said statute there is set forth on the face of each of said bonds the following clause, that is to say: 'The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority.'"

On December 22, 1899, the surrogate's court affirmed the appraisal and the order imposing a tax. Thereupon Harry Plummer, executor, appealed to the appellate division of the supreme court of the state of New York, which court on January 5, 1900, affirmed the order of the surrogate and the decree of the surrogate's court. From this decree of the appellate division of the supreme court an appeal was taken to the court of appeals of the state of New York, where, on January 8, 1900, the proceedings and order of the surrogate and the decree of the appellate division were affirmed.

In the notice of appeal to the surrogate's court and in that of the appeal to the court of appeals the grounds of appeal were stated to be the invalidity of the statute of New York purporting *to impose a tax upon a [117] transfer by legacy of bonds of the United States, and the invalidity of the statute of the state of New York and of the authority exercised thereunder by the appraiser and the surrogate, in so far as United States bonds were concerned. And the appellant specially set up and claimed a title, right, privilege, and immunity under the Constitution of the United States, and under the statute of the United States in respect to the exemption of said bonds from state taxation in any form.

On January 9, 1900, a writ of error was sued out from this court.

Messrs. William V. Rowe and Treadwell Cleveland argued the cause and, with Messrs. Evarts, Choate, & Beaman, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Congress, in providing that the full amount of principal and interest on the bonds shall be paid without diminution by state taxation, has, as in the case of the exercise of other Federal powers,—as, for instance, in the establishment of salaries of all Federal officers, or in enactments under the power to regulate commerce,—created a supreme law of the land, absolutely binding as a prohibition upon the states.

Dobbins v. Erie County Comrs. 16 Pet. 435, 10 L. ed. 1022; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hefley, 158 U. S. 102, 39 L. ed. 911, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 802.

common law of England, were part of the exemption of these bonds by statute from state taxation, cannot be burdened by the states.

Harman v. Chicago, 147 U. S. 396, 37 L. ed. 216, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306.

The tax in question is unconstitutional because impairing and burdening the borrowing power of the United States.

Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481; People ex rel. Leonard v. Tax & A. Comrs. 90 N. Y. 63.

It makes no difference however inconsiderable may be the amount of the tax burden imposed by the state tax.

Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 468, 7 L. ed. 488.

It makes no difference in respect of the unconstitutionality of the imposition of a tax by a state upon, or in respect of, the bonds or the loans of the United States, that the tax is not at all discriminating, but is merely the inclusion of United States bonds in a general tax upon taxpayers at precisely the same rate imposed upon other property.

New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. New York City & County Tax Comrs. 2 Black, 629, 17 L. ed. 451.

The provision for payment to assigns has always been held to include devisees, legatees, and executors or administrators, and every species of assignee, whether voluntary or by act of law.

Spencer's Case, 5 Coke, 16; Baily v. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B. 180, 10 Best & S. 1; Titley v. Wolstenholme, 7 Beav. 425; Hamilton v. Kingsbury, 15 Blatchf. 64, Fed. Cas. No. 5,984; New York Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Thurber v. Carpenter, 18 R. I. 782, 31 Atl. 5; Douglas v. Hennessy, 15 R. I. 272, 3 Atl. 213, 7 Atl. 1, 10 Atl. 583; Cumberland v. Graves, 7 N. Y. 305.

The right to dispose of personal property by will was a right existing at common law.

1 Chitty's Bl. pt. 2, pp. 490 et seq.

A legacy is a bequest or gift of goods and chattels by testament; and the person to whom it is given is styled the legatee; which every person is capable of being, unless particularly disabled by the common law or statutes, as traitors, papists, and some others.

1 Chitty's Bl. pt. 2, p. 512.

The rights and privileges of testators and legatees in respect of disposing of personal property by will, and receiving the benefit of such disposition as that existing in the common law of England, were part of the common law of the colony of New York so long as it remained a colony.

1 Kent, Com. 472, 473.

Up to the 1st day of January, 1830, the right to dispose of personal property by will in the state of New York rested upon the common law, and upon nothing else.

Watts v. Public Administrator, 4 Wend. 168.

The only provisions of the Revised Statutes applicable to this subject constitute an affirmance of the common-law right to dispose of personal property by will, with the addition of some new restrictions imposed upon its exercise in respect of matters of form only, and not in respect of the power to make such a will.

2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. '60, chap. 6, art. 2, § 21; chap. 6, art. 3, § 40.

A correlative of the right to acquire and use property during life is the right to dispose of it at death.

The franchise-tax cases are inapplicable in respect to exactions by the state upon natural persons, whose creator it is not, and who are subject to no such despotic or absolute authority as are corporations created by it.

So far as respects the question at issue, the opinion in United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073, is merely a dictum which, when uttered, had no reference or intended reference to any question of taxation of the borrowing power of the United States under the Constitution.

The only question involved in Magor v. Grima, 8 How. 493, 12 L. ed. 1170, related to the validity of the Louisiana act imposing a succession tax on aliens.

We confidently submit to the court that it is entirely plain that the legislative act of the state of New York, under which this tax is claimed, is a taxing act, and nothing else. That is all it pretends or purports to be, and it, and similar statutes, have been repeatedly so treated and construed.

Re McPherson, 104 N. Y. 306, 58 Am. Rep. 502, 10 N. E. 685; Re Vassar, 127 N. Y. 1, 27 N. E. 394; Sala's Succession, 50 La. Ann. 1009, 24 So. 674; State ex rel. Garth v. Switzler, 143 Mo. 287, 40 L. R. A. 280, 45 S. W. 245; Cope's Estate, 191 Pa. 1, 45 L. R. A. 316, 43 Atl. 79.

A state cannot impose a tax upon a privilege granted by itself, where such tax is an interference with a constitutional right or power of the Federal government.

Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678; Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 347; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. ed. 1015; Guy v. Baltimore, 100 U. S. 434, 25 L. ed. 743; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 565; Almy v. California, 24 How. 169, 16 L. ed. 644; Philadelphia & S. S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1118; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 382, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Brennan v. Titusville, 153 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 658, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829; McCall v. California, 130 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 391, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 181, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881.

Messrs. Jabish Holmes, Jr., and Edgar J. Levey argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law of the state, and not a natural right; a privilege, and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it.

United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073, Affirming 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594.

The courts of New York have uniformly construed its transfer law as not imposing a tax on property, but on the value of the privilege of succession created by the state.

Re Sherman, 153 N. Y. 5, 46 N. E. 1032; Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 329, 38 N. E. 311; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 6, 34 L. R. A. 238, 44 N. E. 707; Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L. R. A. 709, 32 N. E. 1096; Re Davis, 149 N. Y. 546, 44 N. E. 185.

The same construction has uniformly been given by other states to similar inheritance laws.

Re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 281, 49 Pac. 181; State v. Alston, 94 Tenn. 674, 28 L. R. A. 178, 30 S. W. 750; State v. Hamlin, 86 Me. 495, 25 L. R. A. 632, 30 Atl. 76; State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 3 L. R. A. 372, 17 Atl. 82; Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259, 38 N. E. 512; Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 125, 41 L. R. A. 446, 47 N. E. 321.

That the right of a person to take by inheritance or will is a favor conferred by a state, and is subject to its power of regulation, is conceded in the following additional cases:

Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; Carpenter v. Pennsylvania, 17 How. 456, 15 L. ed. 127; Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99; United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. ed. 192; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 440; Norman v. Heist, 5 Watts & S. 171, 40 Am. Dec. 493; 2 Bl. Com. 211; Lavery v. Egan, 143 Mass. 392, 9 N. E. 747; Brettun v. Fox, 100 Mass. 234, 97 Am. Dec. 95; Gillis v. Weller, 10 Ohio, 464; Sturgis v. Ewing, 18 Ill. 176; Edwards v. Pope, 4 Ill. 465.

Every case that can be found, where this question is raised, has decided that United States bonds can be appraised to determine the value of the privilege of succession, in order to fix the tax or bonus to be paid the state for the privilege it confers.

Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Clymer v. Com. 52 Pa. 185; Wallace v. Myers, 38 Fed. Rep. 184, 4 L. R. A. 171; Re Sherman, 153 N. Y. 1, 46 N. E. 1032; Re Whiting, 150 N. Y. 31, 34 L. R. A. 232, 44 N. E. 715; Re Whiting, 2 App. Div. 590, 38 N. Y. Supp. 131; Carver's Estate, 4 Misc. 592, 25 N. Y. Supp. 991; Re Tuigg, 2 Connoly, 633, 15 N. Y. Supp. 548; United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 629, 41 L. ed. 288, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Re Howard, 5 Dem. 483.

The amount of capital of a foreign corporation, invested in imported articles in their original packages, can be included in assessing the tax upon a foreign corporation doing business in the state of New York, where the tax is based upon the amount of capital stock employed in this state, although the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that no state can impose a tax, directly or indirectly.

upon imported articles in their original packages.

New York v. Roberts, 171 U. S. 658, sub nom. New York ex rel. Parke, D. & Co. v. Roberts, 43 L. ed. 323, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58, Affirming 149 N. Y. 608, 44 N. E. 1127, 91 Hun, 158, 36 N. Y. Supp. 368.

The privilege of succession granted by a state is more like the grant of a franchise to a corporation than anything else. The principle of cases where United States bonds have been appraised in determining the value of franchises or privileges conferred by the state cannot be distinguished from that of the case at bar.

Monroe County Sav. Bank v. Rochester, 37 N. Y. 365; People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328, Affirmed in 134 U. S. 598, 33 L. ed. 1029, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. 594, 18 L. ed. 897; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 631, 18 L. ed. 913.

The same principle is illustrated by the cases in the United States Supreme Court upholding a tax upon the value of bank shares.

Van Allen v. The Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, sub nom. Churchill v. Utica, 18 L. ed. 229; New York v. The Commissioners, 4 Wall. 244, sub nom. New York ex rel. Duer v. New York City & County Tax & A. Comrs. 18 L. ed. 344.

The possibility that the borrowing power of the government may be affected by subjecting government bonds to the transfer tax laws is too remote to be considered.

Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 953, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532; Adams Exp. Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S. 194, 41 L. ed. 683, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305.

*Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion [117] of the court:

In this case we are called upon to consider the question whether, under the inheritance tax laws of a state, a tax may be validly imposed on a legacy consisting of United States bonds issued under a statute declaring them to be exempt from state taxation in any form.

It is not open to question that a state cannot, in the exercise of the power of taxation, tax obligations of the United States. Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. 449, 7 L. ed. 481; New York ex rel. Bank of Commerce v. Commissioners of Taxes, 2 Black, 620, 17 L. ed. 451; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 598, 33 L. ed. 1029, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593.

So, likewise, it is settled law that bonds issued by a state, or under its authority by its public municipal bodies, are not taxable by the United States. Mercantile Bank v. New York, 121 U. S. 138, 30 L. ed. 895, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826; Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 429, 583, 39 L. ed. 759, 820, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673.

The reasoning upon which these two lines of decision proceed is the same, namely, as was said by Mr. Justice Nelson, in The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 124, sub nom. Buffington v. Day, 20 L. ed. 122, 126: "The general government and the states, although both exist within the same territorial limits, are separate and distinct sovereignties, acting separately and independently of each other within their respective spheres. The former in its appropriate sphere is supreme; but the states within the limits of their powers not granted, or, in the language of the Tenth Amendment, 'reserved,' are as independent of the general government as that government within its sphere is independent of the states;" and, as was said by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 157 U. S. 537, 39 L. ed. 763, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673: "As the states cannot tax the powers, the operations, or the property of the United States, nor the means which they employ to carry their powers into execution, so it has been held that the United States have no power under the Constitution to tax either the instrumentalities or the property of a state."

As, then, for the reasons advanced and applied in the previous cases, it is not within the power of a state to tax Federal securities, it was not necessary for Congress, in order to secure such immunity, to declare in terms, in the act of July 14, 1870, and on the face of the bonds issued thereunder, that the principal and interest were exempt from taxation in any form by or under state, municipal, or local authority. Such a declaration did not operate to withdraw from the states any power or right previously possessed, nor to create, as between the states and the holders of the bonds, any contractual relation. It doubtless may be regarded as a legitimate mode of advising purchasers of such bonds of their immunity from state taxation, and of manifesting that Congress did not intend to waive this immunity, as it had done in the case of national banks, which are admittedly governmental instrumentalities.

With these concessions made, we are brought to the pivotal question in the case, and that question is thus presented in the second point discussed in the brief filed for the plaintiff in error. "If the question of the right of the state to impose the tax now in question be considered merely with reference to the inherent lack of power of the state to impose such a tax, because of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States bearing upon *that question, without any aid from the statute of the United States under which these bonds were issued, or the exemption clause contained in the bonds, we conceive it to be entirely clear that the tax in question is unconstitutional, because impairing and burdening the borrowing power of the United States." Or, as stated elsewhere in the brief: "The states have no power to impose any tax or other burden which would have the effect to prevent or hinder the government of the United States from borrowing such amounts of money as it may require for its purposes, on terms as beneficial and favorable to itself, in all respects, as it could do if no such tax were imposed by the state."

It will be observed that these propositions concede that the tax law of the state of New York in question does not expressly, or by necessary implication, propose to tax Federal securities. It is only when and if, in applying that law to the estates of decedents, such estates are found to consist wholly or partly of United States bonds, that the reasoning of the plaintiff in error, assailing the validity of the statute, can have any application. And the contention is that individuals, in forming or creating their estates, will or may be deterred from offering terms, in the purchasing of such bonds, as favorable as they otherwise might do, if they are bound to know that such portion of their estates as consists of such bonds is to be included, equally with other property, in the assessment of an inheritance tax.

Before addressing ourselves directly to the discussion of these propositions we shall briefly review the decisions in whose light they must be determined.

And, first, what is the voice of the state courts?

A detailed examination of the state decisions is unnecessary, because it is admitted in the brief of the plaintiff in error that in many, if not in most, of the states of the Union inheritance or succession tax laws, similar to the New York statute in question, are and have been long in operation, and that the question of their validity, in cases like the present, has always heretofore been determined by the state courts against the United States. We cannot, however, accede to the suggestion in the brief that *the state decisions are entitled to but little consideration, for the reason that "they are the determinations of a distinct sovereignty, adjudicating upon the rights of the nation, and naturally jealous of their own." Undoubtedly, in a case like the present, the national law is paramount, and its final exposition is for this court. Still, for reasons too obvious to require statement, the decisions of the state courts, particularly if they are uniform and concur in their reasoning, are worthy of respectful consideration, even if the question be, at last, a Federal one.

Without attempting a rehearsal of the state decisions, we may profitably examine the reasons and conclusions of several of the leading state courts.

A statute of Massachusetts of 1802 provided that every institution for savings, incorporated under the laws of that state, should pay a tax on account of its depositors, on the average amount of its deposits. The Provident Institution of Savings, a corporation having no property except its deposits and the property in which they were invested, and authorized by the general statute of Massachusetts to receive money on deposit and to invest its deposits in securities of the United States, had on deposit on the 1st day of May, 1865, $8,047,652—of which $1,327,000 stood invested in public funds of the United States, exempt by law of the United States from taxation under state authority. The company declined to pay that portion of the tax on its property invested in United States bonds. On suit brought by the commonwealth to recover the same, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts, regarding the [119] States bearing upon *that question, without any aid from the statute of the United States under which these bonds were issued, or the exemption clause contained in the bonds, we conceive it to be entirely clear that the tax in question is unconstitutional, because impairing and burdening the borrowing power of the United States." Or, as stated elsewhere in the brief: "The states have no power to impose any tax or other burden which would have the effect to prevent or hinder the government of the United States from borrowing such amounts of money as it may require for its purposes, on terms as beneficial and favorable to itself, in all respects, as it could do if no such tax were imposed by the state."

[20]

tax as one on franchise, and not on property, held the tax to be lawful. Com. v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 12 Allen, 312.

[121] By a subsequent statute of 1864, chap. 208, corporations having capital stock divided into shares were required to pay a tax of a certain percentage upon "the excess of the market value" of all such stock over the value of its real estate and machinery. The Hamilton Manufacturing Company refused to pay the tax upon that portion of its property which was invested in United States securities, because, by the act of Congress authorizing their issue, they were exempt from taxation by state authority. *It was held by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts that the tax was to be regarded as a tax on the franchise and privileges of the corporation, and was lawful so far as related to Federal securities. Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 12 Allen, 300.

The legislature of Connecticut in 1863 enacted that the savings banks in the state should annually pay to the treasurer of the state a sum equal to $\frac{3}{4}$ of 1 per cent on the total amount of deposits. The "Society for Savings," a corporation of Connecticut, refused to pay the tax upon that portion of its deposits which was invested in United States bonds declared by act of Congress to be exempt from taxation by state authority.

On a suit brought by Coite, treasurer of the state, to recover the tax thus withheld, the supreme court of Connecticut decided that the tax in question was not a tax on property, but on the corporation as such, and rendered judgment accordingly for the plaintiff. Coite v. Society for Savings, 32 Conn. 173.

In Pennsylvania it has been repeatedly held that the collateral inheritance law of that state, imposing a tax upon the total amount of the estates of decedents, is valid, although the estate may consist in whole or in part of United States bonds; and this upon the principle that what is called a collateral inheritance tax is a bonus, exacted from the collateral kindred and others, as the conditions on which they may be admitted to take the estate left by a deceased relative or testator; that the estate does not belong to them, except as a right to it is conferred by the state; that the right of the owner to transfer it to another after death, or of kindred to succeed, is the result of municipal regulation, and must, consequently, be enjoyed subject to such conditions as the state sees fit to impose. Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Clymer v. Com. 52 Pa. 186.

In Virginia the highest court of the state has construed a similar statute as imposing the tax, not upon the property, but upon the privilege of acquiring it by will or under the intestate laws. Eyre v. Jacob, 14 Gratt. 422, 73 Am. Dec. 367; Miller v. Com. 27 Gratt. 110.

[122] *The supreme court of Illinois has held valid a statute of that state, entitled "An Act to Tax Gifts, Legacies, and Inheritances in Certain Cases, and to Provide for the Collection of the Same." Ill. Rev. Stat. 1895, chap. 120. The constitutionality of the act 178 U. S.

was denied, because of the alleged want of reasonableness in its classification of those subject to the tax and the want of equality in the amounts imposed. But the supreme court held that an inheritance tax is a tax, not upon property, but on the succession, and that the right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law, a privilege, and that the authority which confers the privilege may impose conditions upon it. Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L. R. A. 446, 47 N. E. 321.

By an act of the legislature of New York (Laws 1881, chap. 361, § 3), it was enacted that "every corporation, joint-stock company, or association whatever, now or hereafter incorporated or organized under any law of this state, . . . shall be subject to and pay a tax, as a tax upon its corporate franchise or business, into the treasury of the state, annually, to be computed as follows: If the dividend or dividends made or declared by such corporation, joint-stock company, or association during any year ending with the first day of November, amount to six or more than six per centum upon the par value of its capital stock, then the tax to be at the rate of one quarter mill upon the capital stock for each one per centum of dividends so made or declared," etc.

The Home Insurance Company, a corporation of the state of New York, having a capital stock of $3,000,000, declared a dividend of 10 per cent for the year 1881. During the year 1881 the company had part of its capital invested in United States bonds, exempt from state taxation. The amount so invested changed from $3,000,000 to $1,940,000 in such bonds during the year 1881. The company, in tendering payment of its tax, claimed that so much of the laws of New York as required a tax to be paid upon the capital stock of the company, without deducting from the amount so to be paid that part invested in bonds of the United States, was unconstitutional and void. In an action brought to recover such unpaid portion of the tax, the supreme court of New York, at general term, adjudged *that [123] the company was liable to pay such tax; and this judgment was affirmed by the court of appeals. The view of those courts was that, the tax being upon the franchise of the company, it mattered not how its capital stock or property may be invested, whether in United States securities or otherwise. People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 328.

In Monroe County Sav. Bank v. Rochester, 37 N. Y. 365, it was said:

"It is true that where a tax is laid upon the property of an individual or a corporation, so much of their property as is vested in United States bonds is to be treated, for the purposes of assessment, as if it did not exist, but this rule can have no application to an assessment upon a franchise, where a reference to property is made only to ascertain the value of the thing assessed. It is, however, argued with great ingenuity and skill that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs, among other powers given them, have the right to invest their money in United States bonds.

their franchises and privileges cannot be taxed by the state. The power thus to invest their moneys, it is contended, is a franchise for lending to the United States, and therefore cannot be taxed, because such taxation would trench on the power of the United States to borrow. This is stretching the argument too far. It cannot be pretended that the state would violate any obligation resulting from the power of the United States to borrow money, if the law conferring the power upon the plaintiffs to invest their moneys in United States stocks and bonds were repealed. The state is under no obligation, express or implied, to legislate to enhance the credit of the general government, and should it adopt a system of legislation which indirectly produces such a result, its power of repeal cannot be doubted. The position that a franchise granted by the bounty of the state is not taxable, because coupled with that franchise is the privilege of loaning money to the general government, is not more untenable than to argue that, because such a franchise enhances the credit of the United States, therefore the legislature could not repeal the law granting the franchise without violating its constitutional obligation. Suppose the legislature had limited the amount in which the plaintiffs [124]*could invest its moneys in the securities of the United States, it will not be contended that such limitation would be void because it impaired the power of the United States to borrow money. It must therefore be regarded as sound doctrine to hold that the state, in granting a franchise to a corporation, may limit the powers to be exercised under it, and annex conditions to its enjoyment, and make it contribute to the revenues of the state. If the grantee accepts the boon it must bear the burden."

In Re Sherman, 153 N. Y. 1, 46 N. E. 1032, it was said by the court of appeals of New York, per Chief Judge Andrews, that—

"This court has not been called upon to consider the question of the power of the state to prescribe that in ascertaining the value of the property of a decedent for the purpose of fixing the tax, under the collateral inheritance or transfer tax laws, the value of Federal securities owned by the decedent shall be included. But we apprehend that the existence of the power cannot be denied upon reason or authority. The tax imposed is not, in a proper sense, a tax upon the property passing by will, or under the statutes of descents or distribution. It is a tax upon the right of transfer by will, or under the intestate law of the state. Whether these laws are regarded as a limitation on the right of a testator to dispose of property by will, or upon the right of devisees to take under a will, or the right of heirs or next of kin to succeed to a property of an intestate, is not material. The so-called tax is an exaction made by the state in the regulation of the right of devolution of property of decedents, which is created by law, and which the law may restrain or regulate. Whatever the form of the property, the right to succeed to it is created by law, and if the property consists of government securities, the transferee derives his right to take them as he does his right to take any other property of the decedent, under the laws of the state, and the state by these statutes makes the right subject to the burden imposed."

And in the case in hand, the very matter of complaint is that the courts of the state of New York held that, under the laws of that state, an inheritance tax can be validly assessed *against the entire estate of a decedent, although composed in greater part of United States bonds; and the language of the surrogate, affirmed by the court of appeals, was as follows:

"It is almost unnecessary to state that the theory on which the courts have held this kind of security taxable is that the tax is not upon the bonds themselves, but upon the transfer thereof. This distinction is firmly established in this state. See, besides the Sherman Case, Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; Re Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1, 34 L. R. A. 238, 44 N. E. 707; and it seems to have been recognized in the Supreme Court of the United States, United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073, in which Re Merriam was affirmed."

The decisions of the state courts may be summarized by the statement that it is competent for the legislature of a state to impose a tax upon the franchises of the corporations of the state, and upon the estates of decedents resident therein, and in assessing such taxes and as a basis to establish the amount of such assessments, to include the entire property of such corporations and decedents, although composed, in whole or in part, of United States bonds; and that the theory upon which this can be done consistently with the Constitution and laws of the United States is that such taxes are to be regarded as imposed, not upon the property, the amount of which is referred to as regulating the amount of the taxes, but upon franchises and privileges derived from the state.

Let us now proceed to a similar survey of the Federal authorities on this subject.

Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168, was a case where, by the law of Louisiana, a tax of 10 per cent was imposed on legacies, when the legatee is neither a citizen of the United States nor domiciled in that state, and the executor of the deceased or other person charged with the administration of the estate was directed to pay the tax to the state treasurer. Felix Grima was the executor of John Mager, and retained the amount of the tax in order to pay it over as the law directed. Suit was brought by a legatee to recover it, upon the ground that the act of Louisiana was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. The validity of the act was sustained by *the state courts, and the [126] cause was brought to this court. The judgment of the state courts was here affirmed, and it was said, in the opinion delivered by Chief Justice Taney:

"Now the law in question is nothing more than an exercise of the power which every state and sovereignty possesses, of regulating the manner and term upon which property, real or personal, within its dominion may be transmitted by last will and testament, or by inheritance, and of prescribing who shall and who shall not be capable of taking it. Every state or nation may unquestionably refuse to allow an alien to take either real or personal property situated within its limits either as heir or legatee, and may, if it thinks proper, direct that property so descending or bequeathed shall belong to the state. In many of the states of this Union at this day real property devised to an alien is liable to escheat. And if a state may deny the privilege altogether, it follows that, when it grants it, it may annex to the grant any conditions which it supposes to be required by its interests or policy. This has been done by Louisiana. The right to take is given to the alien, subject to a deduction of 10 per cent for the use of the state."

In Van Allen v. The Assessors, 3 Wall. 573, sub nom. Churchill v. Utica, 18 L. ed. 229, it was held that it was competent for Congress to authorize the states to tax the shares of banking associations organized under the act of June 3, 1864, without regard to the fact that a part or the whole of the capital of such association was invested in national securities declared by the statutes authorizing them to be "exempt from taxation by or under state authority." This decision has ever since been acted upon, and its authority has never been questioned by any court, and from it we learn that there is no undeviating policy that, at all times and in all circumstances, the tax system of the states shall not extend to Federal securities.

The next cases to be noted are: Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. 594, 18 L. ed. 897; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 611, 18 L. ed. 907; and Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, 18 L. ed. 904.

[127] In these cases this court affirmed the supreme courts of Connecticut and Massachusetts in holding that state taxes may be imposed, the amount of which may be determined by the aggregate *amount of the property or capital stock of banking and manufacturing companies, even if such property or capital stock includes United States bonds issued under a statute declaring them exempt from taxation under state authority.

As we have already seen, when referring to the state decisions, the reasoning upon which the state courts proceeded in the case of corporations was that such taxes were to be deemed as laid, not upon the bonds as property, but upon the franchise to do business as a corporation or association derived from the state. This reasoning was approved by this court; and it may be observed in passing that, as appears in the reports of the arguments of counsel, the contention so strongly pressed in the present case, namely, that under no form can Federal securities be practically rendered by state legislation less valuable, was fully argued. See also the case of Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99.

Next worthy of notice is the case of Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 33 L. ed. 1025, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593. It came here on 178 U. S.

error to the supreme court of the state of New York, whose judgment had been affirmed by the court of appeals, and was twice argued. The question considered was whether a statute of the state of New York was valid in respect to imposing a tax upon a New York corporation, measured and regulated by the amount of its annual dividends, where those dividends were partly composed of interest of United States bonds owned by the corporation.

As we have heretofore stated, the state courts answered this question in the affirmative, basing their decision upon the proposition that the tax was imposed as a tax upon corporate franchises or privileges, and that such a tax was not invalidated by the circumstance that the measure of its amount was fixed by the amount of the annual dividends of the company partly derived from the interest of United States bonds. 92 N. Y. 328.

In this court the question was elaborately argued, as may be seen in the first report of the case in 119 U. S. 129, 30 L. ed. 350, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1385; and it was again contended that the case fell within the principle of public policy that the states have no power, by taxation or otherwise, to retard, impede, burden, or in any manner control the operations *of the instrumentalities of the [128] national government, and also that the tax in question was repugnant to the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

The reasoning of the state court was substantially approved and their judgment sustaining the validity of the state statute was affirmed. Some of the observations of the opinion of the court, delivered by Mr. Justice Field, may be appropriately quoted:

"Looking now at the tax in this case, . . . we are unable to perceive that it falls within the doctrines of any of the cases cited, to which we fully assent, not doubting their correctness in any particular. It is not a tax in terms upon the capital stock of the company, nor upon any bonds of the United States composing a part of that stock. The statutes designate it a tax upon the 'corporate franchise or business' of the company, and reference is only made to its capital stock and dividends for the purpose of determining the amount of the tax to be exacted each year.

"By the term 'corporate franchise or business,' as here used, we understand is meant (not referring to corporations sole, which are not usually created for commercial business) the right or privilege given by the state to two or more persons of being a corporation, that is, of doing business in a corporate capacity, and not the privilege or franchise which, when incorporated, the company may exercise. The right or privilege to be a corporation, or to do business as such body, is one generally deemed of value to the corporators, or it would not be sought in such numbers as at present. It is a right or privilege by which several individuals may unite themselves under a common name and act as a single person, with a succession of members, without dissolution or suspension of business, and with a limited individual liability. The granting of such right or privilege rests entirely in the discretion of the state, and, of course, when granted, may be accompanied with such conditions as its legislature may judge most befitting to its interests and policy. It may require, as a condition of the grant of the franchise, and also of its continued exercise, that the corporation pay a specific sum to the state each year or month, or a specific portion of its gross receipts, or of the profits of its business, or a sum to be *ascertained in any convenient mode which it may prescribe. The validity of the tax can in no way be dependent upon the mode which the state may deem fit to adopt in fixing the amount for any year which it will exact for the franchise. No constitutional objection lies in the way of a legislative body prescribing any mode of measurement to determine the amount it will charge for the privilege it bestows. It may well seek in this way to increase its revenue to the extent to which it has been cut off by exemption of other property from taxation. As its revenues to meet its expenses are lessened in one direction, it may look to any other property, as sources of revenue, which is not exempt from taxation. . . . The tax in the present case would not be affected if the nature of the property in which the whole capital stock is invested were changed, and put into real property or bonds of New York, or of other states. From the very nature of the tax, being laid upon a franchise given by the state, and revocable at pleasure, it cannot be affected in any way by the character of the property in which its capital stock is invested. The power of the state over the corporate franchise and the conditions upon which it shall be exercised is as ample and plenary in the one case as in the other."

And, after citing and commenting upon the previous cases from Connecticut and Massachusetts, the court said: "In this case we hold, as well upon general principles as upon the authority of the first two cases cited from 6 Wallace, that the tax for which the suit is brought is not a tax on the capital stock or property of the company, but upon its corporate franchise, and is not therefore subject to the objection stated by counsel, because a portion of its capital stock is invested in securities of the United States."

In United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073, the question was whether personal property bequeathed by will to the United States was subject to an inheritance tax under the law of the state of New York.

The facts of the case were that one William W. Merriam, a resident of the state of New York, left a last will and testament, by which he devised and bequeathed all his estate, real and personal, to the United States. [130] The surrogate assessed an *inheritance tax of $3,964.23 upon the personal property included in said bequest. Upon appeal to the general term of the supreme court the order of the surrogate's court was affirmed, and upon a further appeal to the court of appeals the judgment of the supreme court was affirmed, and the cause was brought to this court.

1006

It was contended that, upon principle, property of the United States was not subject to state taxation; but it was held by this court, affirming the judgment of the courts below, that the tax was not open to the objection that it was an attempt to tax the property of the United States, since the tax was imposed upon the legacy before it reached the hands of the legatee; that the legacy became the property of the United States after it had suffered a diminution to the amount of the tax, and that it was only upon such a condition that the legislature assented to a bequest of it.

The reasoning of the court may be manifested by the following excerpts from the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Brown:

"Though the general consent of the most enlightened nations has from the earliest historical period recognized a natural right in children to inherit the property of their parents, we know of no legal principle to prevent the legislature from taking away or limiting the right of testamentary disposition, or imposing such conditions upon its exercise as it may deem conducive to public good. In this view the so-called inheritance tax of the state of New York is in reality a limitation upon the power of a testator to bequeath his property to whom he pleases: a declaration that, in the exercise of that power, he shall contribute a certain percentage to the public use; in other words, that the right to dispose of his property by will shall remain, but subject to a condition that the state has a right to impose. Certainly, if it be true that the right of testamentary disposition is purely statutory, the state has a right to require a contribution to the public treasury before the bequest shall take effect. Thus, the tax is not upon the property, in the ordinary sense of the term, but upon the right to dispose of it, and it is not until it has yielded its contribution to the state that it becomes the property of the legatee. This was the view taken of a similar *tax by [131] the court of appeals of Maryland in State v. Dalrymple, 70 Md. 294, 3 L. R. A. 372, 17 Atl. 82, in which the court observed:

"Possessing, then, the plenary power indicated, it necessarily follows that the state in allowing property . . . to be disposed of by will, and in designating who shall take such property where there is no will, may prescribe such conditions, not in conflict with or forbidden by the organic law, as the legislature may deem expedient. These conditions, subject to the limitations named, are, consequently, wholly within the discretion of the general assembly. The act we are now considering plainly intended to require that a person taking the benefit of a civil right secured to him under our law should pay a certain premium for its enjoyment. In other words, one of the conditions upon which strangers and collateral kindred may acquire a decedent's property, which is subject to the dominion of our laws, is, that there shall be paid out of such property a tax of 2½ per cent into the treasury of the state. This, therefore, is not a tax upon the property itself, but is merely the price exacted by the state for the privilege accorded in permitting property so situated to be transferred by will or by descent or distribution.'

178 U. S.

"That the tax is not a tax upon the property itself, but upon its transmission by will or by descent, is also held both in New York and in several other states (Re Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, 18 L. R. A. 709, 32 N. E. 1096), in which it said . . . that 'the effect of this special tax is to take from the property a portion, or percentage of it, for the use of the state, and I think it quite immaterial whether the tax can be precisely classified with the taxation of property or not. It is not a tax upon persons.' Re Hoffman, 143 N. Y. 327, 38 N. E. 311; Schoolfield v. Lynchburg, 78 Va. 366; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; Re Cullum, 145 N. Y. 593, 40 N. E. 165. In this last case, as well as in Wallace v. Myers, 38 Fed. Rep. 184, it was held that, although the property of the decedent included United States bonds, the tax might be assessed upon the basis of their value, because the tax was not imposed upon the bonds themselves, but upon the estate of the decedent, or the privilege of acquiring property by inheritance. [132] Eyre v. Jacob*, 14 Gratt. 422; Dos Passos, Inheritance Tax Law, chap. 2, § 8, and cases cited.

"Such a tax was also held by this court to be free from any constitutional objection in Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 493, 12 L. ed. 1168, 1170, Mr. Chief Justice Taney remarking that 'the law in question is nothing more than the exercise of the power which every state and sovereignty possesses, of regulating the manner and terms within which property, real and personal, within its dominion may be transferred by last will or testament, or by inheritance, and of prescribing who shall and who shall not be capable of taking it. . . . If a state may deny the privilege altogether, it follows that when it grants it, it may annex to the grant any conditions which it supposes to be required by its interests or policy.' To the same effect is United States v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. ed. 192.

"We think it follows from this that the act in question is not open to the objection that it is an attempt to tax the property of the United States, since the tax is imposed upon the legacy before it reaches the hands of the government. The legacy becomes the property of the United States only after it has suffered a diminution to the amount of the tax, and it is only upon this condition that the legislature assents to a bequest of it."

One of the propositions recognized in that case applicable to the present one is that a state tax that would be invalid if imposed directly on a legacy to the United States may be valid if the amount of the tax is taken out of the legacy before it reaches the hands of the government—the theory of such a view apparently being that the property rights of the government do not attach until 178 U. S.

after the tax has been paid, or until the condition imposed by the tax law of the state has been complied with. Such is also the case in respect to the legacy to Ella Plummer Brown, as the statute in question distinctly makes it the duty of the executor to pay the amount of the tax before the legacy passes to the legatee.

In New York v. Roberts, 171 U. S. 658, 43 L. ed. 323, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 58, an effort was made to have a tax imposed against corporations based upon "capital employed within the state" declared invalid, in that particular case, because a portion of such capital [133] consisted of imported goods in original packages; and this court said:

"Again, it is said that, even assuming that the importation of crude drugs and their sale in the original packages constituted a portion of the corporate business, no tax could be imposed by the state under the doctrine of Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 419, 6 L. ed. 678. But that case is inapplicable. Here no tax is sought to be imposed directly on imported articles or on their sale. This is a tax imposed on the business of a corporation, consisting in the storage and distribution of various kinds of goods, some products of their own manufacture and some imported articles. From the very nature of the tax, being laid as a tax upon the franchise of doing business as a corporation, it cannot be affected in any way by the character of the property in which its capital stock is invested."

In Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594, the validity of the inheritance tax law of Illinois was assailed because of inequalities and discriminations so great as to amount to a deprivation of property and to a denial of the equal protection of the laws. The law in question had been upheld by the supreme court of the state in the case of Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122, 41 L. R. A. 446, 47 N. E. 321, hereinbefore referred to.

This court held that the law was one within the competency of the legislature of the state to make, and that it did not conflict in any wise with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. In the course of the discussion, Mr. Justice McKenna, who delivered the opinion of the court, said:

"The constitutionality of the [inheritance] taxes has been declared, and the principles upon which they are based explained, in United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Strode v. Com. 52 Pa. 181; . . . Re Merriam, 141 N. Y. 479, 36 N. E. 505; . . . Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L. R. A. 259, 38 N. E. 512; . . . and in Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99.

"It is not necessary to review these cases, or state at length the reasoning by which they are supported. They are based on two principles: 1. An inheritance tax is not one on property, but one on the succession. 2. The right to take property by devise or descent is the creature of the law, and not a natural *right—a privilege; and therefore [134] the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it. From these principles it is deduced that the states may tax the privilege, discriminate between relatives and between these and strangers, and grant exemptions; and are not precluded from this power by the provisions of the respective state constitutions requiring uniformity and equality of taxation."

In closing our review of the Federal decisions the case of Wallace v. Myers, 38 Fed. Rep. 184, may be properly referred to,—especially as it has been cited with approval by this court in United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 629, 41 L. ed. 287, 288, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073.

The question involved was the very one we are now considering, namely, the validity of the inheritance tax law of the state of New York when applied to a legacy consisting of United States bonds. In his opinion Circuit Judge Wallace reviewed many of the state and Federal decisions heretofore referred to, and reached the conclusion that the tax was to be regarded as imposed, not on the bonds, but upon the privilege of acquiring property by will or inheritance, and that where the property of the decedent included United States bonds, the tax may be assessed upon the basis of their value.

We think the conclusion fairly to be drawn from the state and Federal cases is that the right to take property by will or descent is derived from and regulated by municipal law; that, in assessing a tax upon such right or privilege, the state may lawfully measure or fix the amount of the tax by referring to the value of the property passing; and that the incidental fact that such property is composed, in whole or in part, of Federal securities, does not invalidate the tax or the law under which it is imposed.

Passing from the authorities, let us briefly consider some of the arguments advanced in the able and interesting brief filed in behalf of the plaintiff in error.

The propositions chiefly relied on are, first, that an inheritance tax, if assessed upon a legacy or interest composed of United States bonds, is within the very letter of the United States statute which declares that such bonds "shall be exempt from taxation in any form [135] by or under state, municipal, or local "authority;" and, second, that the tax in question is unconstitutional, because impairing and burdening the borrowing power of the United States.

But if the first proposition is sound and decisive of the question in this case, then it must follow that the cases in which this court has held that, in assessing a tax upon corporate franchises, the amount of such a tax may be based upon the entire property or capital possessed by the corporation, even when composed in whole or in part of United States bonds, must be overruled. Plainly in those cases, as in this, there was taxation in a form, and in them, as in this, the amount of the tax was reached by including in the assessment United States bonds.

So that we return to the authorities, by which it has been established that a tax upon a corporate franchise, or upon the privilege of taking under the statutes of wills and of descents, is a tax, not upon United States bonds if they happen to compose a part of the capital of a corporation or a part of the property of a decedent, but upon rights and privileges created and regulated by the state.
1008

The second proposition relied on, namely, that to permit taxation of the character we are considering would operate as a burden upon the borrowing power of the United States, cannot be so readily disposed of. Still, we think some observations can be made which will show that the mischief which it is claimed will follow if such statutes be sustained as valid is by no means so great or important as supposed.

And here, again, it is obvious that to affirm the second proposition will require an overruling of our previous cases. For, on principle, if a tax on inheritances, composed in whole or in part of Federal securities, would, by deterring individuals from investing therein, and, by thus lessening the demand for such securities, be regarded as therefore unlawful, it must likewise follow that, for the same reasons, a tax upon corporate franchises measured by the value of the corporation's property, composed in whole or in part of United States bonds, would also be unlawful.

To escape from this conclusion, it is contended, in the argument of the plaintiff in error, that, conceding that such taxes "may be [136] valid as imposed on corporate franchises, and permitting our decisions in such cases to stand, yet that the case of the estates of decedents is different; that individual persons will be driven to consider, when making their investments, whether they can rely on their legatees or heirs receiving United States bonds unimpaired by state action in the form of taxation; and that if it should be held by this court that such taxation is lawful, capital would not be invested in United States on terms as favorable as if we were to hold otherwise.

This is only to state the proposition over again. For, if it were our duty to hold that taxation of inheritances, in the cases where United States bonds pass, is unlawful because it might injuriously affect the demand for such securities, it would equally be our duty to condemn all state laws which would deter those who form corporations from investing any portion of the corporate property in United States bonds.

In fact, the mischief, if it exists at all and is not merely fanciful, might be supposed to be much greater in the case of state laws taxing franchises than the case of taxing the estates of decedents. So small now is the income derivable from Federal securities that few individuals, and those only of great wealth, can afford to invest in them; and the demand for them is mostly confined to banking associations and to large trading and manufacturing companies which invest their surplus in securities that can be readily and quickly converted into cash. Moreover, no inconsiderable portion of the United States loans is taken and held, as everyone knows, in foreign countries, where doubtless it is subjected to municipal taxation.

While we cannot take judicial notice of the comparative portions of the government securities held by individuals, by corporations, and by foreigners, we still may be permitted to perceive that the mischief to our national credit, so feelingly deplored in the briefs, caused by state taxation upon estates of decedents, would be inappreciable, and too remote and uncertain to justify us now in condemning the tax system of the state of New York.

[137] It is further contended that there is a vital difference between the individual and the corporation; that the individual exists *and carries on his operations under natural power and of common right, while the corporation is an artificial being, created by the state and dependent upon the state for the continuance of its existence, and subject to regulations and to the imposition of burdens upon it by the state, not at all applicable to natural persons.

Without undertaking to go beyond what has already been decided by this court in Mauger v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L. ed. 1168; in Scholey v. Rew, 23 Wall. 331, 23 L. ed. 99, and in United States v. Perkins, 163 U. S. 625, 41 L. ed. 287, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073, and in the other cases heretofore cited, we may regard it as established that the relation of the individual citizen and resident to the state is such that his right, as the owner of property, to direct its descent by will, or by permitting its descent to be regulated by the statute, and his right, as legatee, devisee, or heir, to receive the property of his testator or ancestor, are rights derived from and regulated by the state, and we are unable to perceive any sound distinction that can be drawn between the power of the state in imposing taxes upon franchises of corporations, composed of individual persons, and in imposing taxes upon the right or privilege of individuals to avail themselves of the right to grant and to receive property under the statutes regulating the descent of the property of decedents. And, at all events, the mischief apprehended, of impairing the borrowing power of the government by state taxation, is the same whether that taxation be imposed upon corporate franchises or upon the privilege created and regulated by the statutes of inheritance.

Again, it is urged that the pecuniary amount of the state tax which is to be set aside is of no legal consequence; that any amount, however inconsiderable, is an interference with the constitutional rights of the United States, and must therefore be annulled by the judgment of this court. Of course, nobody would attempt to affirm that an unconstitutional tax could be sustained by claiming that, in a particular case, the tax was insignificant in amount.

[138] But when the effort is made, as is the case here, to establish the unconstitutional character of a particular tax by claiming *that its remote effect will be to impair the borrowing power of the government, courts, in overturning statutes long established and within the ordinary sphere of state legislation, ought to have something more substantial to act upon than mere conjecture. The injury ought to be obvious and appreciable. It may be opportune to mention that, even while we have been considering this case, the United States government has negotiated a public loan of large amount at a lower rate of interest than ever before known. From this it may be permissible to infer that the existence of legislation, whether state or Federal, including Federal securities as part of the mass of private property subject to inheritance taxes, has not practically injured or impaired the borrowing power of the government.

178 U. S.

The contention of the plaintiff in error that taxation of the estates of decedents, in any form, and however slight, is invalid, if United States bonds are included in the appraisement, seems to be unreasonable. Suppose a decedent's estate consisted wholly of United States securities, could it reasonably be claimed that the charges and expenses of administration, imposed under the laws of the state, would not be payable out of the funds of the estate? If the estate were a small one, such expenses might require the application of all the Federal securities. If the estate were a large one, the expenses attendant upon administration would be proportionately large, to be raised out of the Federal securities. It is not sufficient to say that such expenses are in the nature of statutory debts, and that the question of the exemption of United States bonds cannot arise until after the debts of the estate shall have been paid. For, after all, what is an inheritance tax but a debt exacted by the state for protection afforded during the lifetime of the decedent? It is often impracticable to secure from living persons their fair share of contribution to maintain the administration of the state, and such laws seem intended to enable to secure payment from the estate of the citizen when his final account is settled with the state. Nor can it be readily supposed that such obligations can be evaded or defeated by the particular form in which the property of the decedent was invested.

*Upon the whole, we think that the decision of the courts below was correct, and the judgment is therefore affirmed. [139]

Mr. Justice White dissents.

Mr. Justice Peckham took no part in the decision.

GEORGE T. MURDOCK, as Executor of Jane H. Sherman, Deceased, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOHN G. WARD, United States Collector of Internal Revenue.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 139-149.)

War revenue act—tax on legacy or inheritance—exemption of United States bonds.

1. United States bonds included in a legacy or distributive share of a decedent's estate are not exempted from the tax on the transmission of such property, imposed by the war revenue act of 1898, §§ 29, 30, by reason of the declaration in the Federal statutes and on the face of the bonds to the effect that they are exempt from taxation, since the tax is not upon the bonds, but on the right of transfer by will or under the intestate law.

2. A judgment dismissing a complaint against an internal revenue collector to recover the amount of a tax alleged to have been unlawfully exacted may be reversed at the cost of the plaintiff in error, although the only contention on his part was that the statute under which the tax was collected was unconstitutional, while the court holds that it was constitutional, where it appears that the tax was computed at an excessive amount by reason of an erroneous construction of the law.

[No. 458.]

Argued December 5, 6, 7, 1899. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review a decision dismissing a complaint against an internal revenue collector in a suit to recover an amount paid as internal revenue taxes. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

- [139] *In October, 1899, George T. Murdock, as executor of the last will and testament of Jane H. Sherman, brought an action in the supreme court of the state of New York against John G. Ward, collector of internal revenue for the fourteenth district of the state of New York, wherein the plaintiff sought to recover the sum of $36,827.53, which the plaintiff alleged had been unlawfully exacted from him as executor of said estate.

On petition of the defendant the cause was removed into the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York.

The complaint contained the following allegations:

"I. Jane H. Sherman, late of the village of Port Henry, in the county of Essex and state of New York, died on or about the 30th day of September, 1898, leaving certain property, and also leaving a last will and testament, in and by which said will this *plaintiff, George T. Murdock, was appointed to be, and by due order of the surrogate of the county of Essex, in the state of New York, to whom jurisdiction in that behalf pertained, he has become and is, the sole executor of the said last will and testament of said Jane H. Sherman.

"II. The plaintiff further alleges and states that the said Jane H. Sherman, deceased, upon her death left a very considerable amount of personal property, amounting to upwards of one million of dollars.

"III. That the defendant, John G. Ward, at all the times mentioned in this complaint, was and he is collector of internal revenue for the fourteenth district of the state of New York, having his office and official place of residence at the city of Albany, in the state of New York.

1010

"IV. That said John G. Ward, assuming to act as such collector, and assuming and pretending to act under and by virtue of the laws of the United States, which he assumed conferred authority upon him therefor, and particularly under and in pursuance of the provisions of an act of the Congress of the United States commonly known as the 'war revenue law' of June 13, 1898, and being an act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes, passed by the Congress of the United States, and becoming a law on the 13th day of June, 1898, did, on or about the 4th day of April, 1899, by force and duress, exact, demand, and collect from this plaintiff and from the estate represented by him as such executor the sum of thirty-six thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven dollars and fifty-three cents ($36,827.53) and upon the claim and under the pretext that the same was a lawful assessment as an internal revenue tax upon the estate of said deceased and against this plaintiff, as executor of said deceased, on account of the legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property, being in charge or trust of this plaintiff, as such executor as aforesaid, the properties assumed to be assessed for such tax being properties passing from the said Jane H. Sherman.

"V. That on or about the 8th day of April, 1899, this plaintiff, under protest, and protesting that he was not, nor was the estate represented by him, liable to pay said tax, involuntarily *and under duress, because of the illegal demand made upon by said defendant, did pay to the said defendant as such collector, as aforesaid, the said sum of $36,827.53. [141]

"VI. That thereafter, believing the imposition of said tax and its collection to be unlawful, this plaintiff did appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and to the Treasury Department of the United States of America from the action and decision of said defendant in holding this plaintiff to be liable for the payment of said tax and in collecting the said tax in manner aforesaid, and did state and represent to said Commissioner that the collection of said tax was unlawful, and that the amount thereof should be refunded for the following reasons:

"First. The imposition of said tax was unconstitutional, unlawful, and void.

"Second. The imposition and collection of said tax deprived this deponent of his property and the estate represented by him of its property without due process of law.

"Third. That the law imposing said tax is not uniform, and does not afford equal protection of the laws to persons throughout the United States.

"Fourth. That the law imposing said tax denied and does deny to persons throughout the United States and within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

"Fifth. That the law under which said tax was imposed denies to this deponent the equal protection of the laws.

"Sixth. The tax so imposed is a direct tax, and is void because not apportioned among the states in proportion to their population and in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States.

178 U. S.

"Seventh. If said tax is an impost, excise, or duty, the law imposing the same is unconstitutional and void because the tax levied is not uniform throughout the United States, as required by the Constitution of the United States; and

"Eighth. It is not within the province of the constitutional powers of the United States to levy a tax upon a right of inheritance or disposition by will, provided for by the laws of the state of New York."

[142] *And this plaintiff did, in and by such appeal, claim that he was entitled to have the sum of money so paid and the amount thereof refunded, and he did then and there ask and demand the return of the same moneys to him, and did appeal from the act of said defendant, as such collector, in imposing said tax and exacting from plaintiff payment of the amount thereof.

"VII. On the 21st day of October, 1899, the said Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the Treasury Department of the United States, represented by the said Commissioner of Internal Revenue, did disallow the appeal of this plaintiff in the behalf above stated, and did reject the claim of the plaintiff to have refunded the amount of the tax paid as aforesaid.

"VII. A very large proportion and at least one third of the personal estate upon account of which said tax was exacted from and paid by this plaintiff consisted in the bonds and interest-bearing evidences of debt issued by the government of the United States, and which by contract between the United States and the holders thereof were and are not subject or liable to assessment or taxation; nor was or is this plaintiff subject or liable to assessment or taxation by means of his ownership or holding, as executor, as aforesaid, or otherwise, of such bonds and certificates of indebtedness.

"IX. This plaintiff claims and charges that by reason of the premises the amount of said tax has been unlawfully exacted from him as executor of said estate; that each and every of the grounds stated by him in the above-mentioned appeal to the said Commissioner of Internal Revenue states and represents a true and lawful reason why the imposition of said tax is unlawful, and why the said tax should be refunded.

"Wherefore this plaintiff demands judgment against the said defendant for the sum of thirty-six thousand eight hundred and twenty-seven dollars and fifty-three cents ($36,827.53) with interest from the 8th day of April, 1899, with the costs of this action."

The defendant, appearing by Henry L. Burnett, United States attorney for the southern district of New York, demurred to the complaint upon the ground that the complaint did not state facts to constitute a cause of action.

[143] *On November 14, 1899, after hearing, the circuit court sustained the demurrer and ordered the complaint to be dismissed, with costs to the defendant. Thereupon a writ of 178 U. S.

error was allowed to the judgment, and the cause was brought to this court.

Mr. Charles E. Patterson argued the cause and, with Mr. Alpheus T. Bulkeley, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Evarts, Choate, & Beaman, with Messrs. Charles F. Southmayd and William V. Rowe, submitted a brief by leave of court on behalf of the holders of United States bonds.

Mr. John G. Milburn filed a brief for various legatees.

Solicitor General Richards argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

*Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion [143] of the court:

That the tax imposed under the provisions of the revenue act of June 13, 1898, is a direct tax, and therefore void because not apportioned among the states in proportion to their population; that if not a direct tax, but an impost, excise, or duty, it is void because the tax levied is not uniform throughout the United States; and that it is not within the province of the constitutional power of the United States to levy a tax upon a right of inheritance or disposition by will, provided for by the laws of the state of New York,—are contentions of the plaintiff in error which have been determined against him in the case of Knowlton v. Moore, 178 U. S. 41, ante, 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747, just decided by this court. The opinion in that case so fully discusses the arguments urged in support of those propositions that their further consideration is unnecessary.

The remaining question is that presented by the following assignment of error:

"The court erred in refusing to find that, in so far as the estate of the deceased consisted of the government bonds of the United States mentioned in said complaint, the Congress had not right or authority to impose or assess any tax upon the same, and in refusing to find that the plaintiff in error was entitled to recover back from the defendant in error in this action the amount of the tax mentioned in his complaint, and which was assessed against the plaintiff in error because of his ownership as executor, as aforesaid, of such bonds of the government of the United States."

*The only allegation in the complaint respecting bonds of the United States is contained in the eighth paragraph, which is as follows: [144]

"A very large proportion and at least one third of the personal estate upon account of which said tax was exacted from and paid by this plaintiff consisted in the bonds and interest-bearing evidences of debt issued by the government of the United States, and which by contract between the United States and the holders thereof were and are not subject or liable to assessment or taxation; nor was or is this plaintiff subject or liable to assessment or taxation by means of his ownership or holding as executor, as aforesaid, or otherwise, of such bonds and certificates of indebtedness."

The complaint does not set forth the terms of the will, nor attach a copy of it as an exhibit. And it is suggested in the brief of the solicitor general, filed on behalf of the United States, that, as presented by the record, this is not a case where United States bonds have passed from the testatrix to legatees, but where a personal estate of a certain value in money has passed to the executor, to be charged against him as money to be distributed among the beneficiaries under the will; and that, therefore, for aught that appears, the executor may have sold every bond and distributed the proceeds in money; and that, even if legatees entitled to certain sums of money shall have accepted United States bonds in lieu of money, they would take the bonds, not under the will, but as purchasers.

However, the complaint does allege that the money which is sought to be recovered was assessed against the plaintiff as executor of the deceased "on account of legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property being in his charge or trust, as such executor as aforesaid, the properties assumed to be assessed for such tax being properties passing from the said Jane H. Sherman," and was paid by him under duress. Such allegations, taken in connection with that contained in the eighth paragraph, above quoted, to the effect that, of the property taxed, at least one-third part consisted of United States bonds, makes it to sufficiently appear that United States bonds in the hands of the plaintiff as executor or trustee under a will [145] were *included as a portion of the estate passing to the executor, and were assessed and taxed as such portion. It may also be observed that it is the executor or trustee who has in charge the legacies or distributive shares arising from personal property, passing after the passage of the act, from any person possessed of such property, who is the person taxed in respect to such property. Accordingly, we think there is room in this record for the contention of the plaintiff in error that, as matter of fact, bonds of the United States formed a portion of the property actually assessed; and that, consequently, the court is called upon to determine whether it was obligatory on the executor of Jane H. Sherman to include in his statement to the collector bonds of the United States in his possession and charge as such executor, and whether it was the right and duty of the collector to demand and receive from the executor a sum of money measured by the value of the property in his hands, although composed in part of United States bonds.

Putting aside, as already disposed of in the case of Knowlton v. Moore, the claims that inheritance and legacy taxes imposed by the United States in the act of June 13, 1898, are invalid because, as direct taxes, not apportioned, or, as duties, for want of uniformity, or because the taxing power of the United States does not reach such property transmissible under the laws of the states, it is conceded, as we understand the argument of the plaintiff in error, that United States bonds would be properly included in estimating the amount of an inheritance or legacy tax, were it not for the clauses contained in the United States statutes exempting such bonds from state and Federal taxation. On the other hand, it is not denied by the counsel for the government that it was the intention of those clauses to exempt the bonds and interest thereon from any Federal tax, direct or indirect. What is denied is that there was any intention on the part of Congress, by the clauses mentioned, to exempt the portion of an estate invested in United States bonds from either a state or Federal inheritance tax.

It is claimed by the plaintiff in error, and conceded by the government, that the exemption clause was incorporated into the bonds and became a subsisting contract between the government *and the bondholders. It is further [146] contended on the one side and conceded on the other, that this contract extends to the assigns of the holders. But a legal issue is joined when it is affirmed by the plaintiff in error and denied by the government, that assigns must be interpreted to include those whose title is derived under the inheritance and legacy laws of the states.

It has recently been decided by this court, in the case of Plummer v. Coler, 178 U. S. 115, ante, 998, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 829, where the question involved was the validity of the inheritance tax law of the state of New York when applied to a legacy consisting of United States bonds containing a clause of exemption from state and Federal taxation, that the conclusion fairly to be drawn from the state and Federal cases is that the right to take property by will or descent is derived from and regulated by municipal law; that, in assessing a tax upon such right or privilege, the state may lawfully measure or fix the amount of the tax by referring to the value of the property passing; and that the incidental fact that such property is composed, in whole or in part, of Federal securities, does not invalidate the tax or the law under which it is imposed.

It may be said that in that case we were dealing with the sovereign power of a state to tax property within her own limits; but still the contention had to be met that Federal bonds were not within the taxing power of the state, not only because they were declared to be exempt from state taxation in any form, but because they were means devised by the government to raise money, and that such a purpose might be defeated if the states were permitted to tax the bonds in the hands of their holders. The conclusion, however, was reached, following state and Federal cases cited, that the inheritance or legacy tax law of the state of New York did not expressly, or by necessary implication, propose to tax Federal securities; that the tax was not imposed on the property passing under the state laws, but on the right of transfer by will or under the intestate law of the state; that, whatever the form of the property, the right to succeed to it is created by law, and if it consists of United States bonds the transferee derives his right to take them, as *he does his right to take any other prop- [147]

erty of the decedent, under the laws of the state, and the state by its statutes makes the right subject to the burden imposed.

A similar distinction has been recognized by several of the state courts, which have held that, while a tax imposed on United States bonds by a state statute would be invalid because beyond the reach of the state's power to tax, yet that a tax upon the franchises or capital stock of a state corporation, measured by the value of its entire property, would be valid, even if the property was composed in whole or in part of Federal securities, because the tax can be regarded as imposed, not on specific property, but on the rights and privileges bestowed by the state. Com. v. Provident Inst. for Savings, 12 Allen, 312; Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 12 Allen, 300; Coite v. Society for Savings, 32 Conn. 173.

The judgments in those cases, holding that state taxes may be lawfully imposed, the amount of which may be determined by the aggregate amount of the property or capital stock of banking or manufacturing companies, even if such property or capital stock includes United States bonds issued under a statute declaring them exempt from taxation under state authority, were affirmed by this court. Society for Savings v. Coite, 6 Wall. 594, 18 L. ed. 897; Provident Inst. for Savings Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 611, 18 L. ed. 907; Hamilton Mfg. Co. v. Massachusetts, 6 Wall. 632, 18 L. ed. 904.

Without repeating the discussion in the opinion in Plummer v. Coler, and following the conclusion there reached, we are unable to distinguish that case from the present one.

If a state inheritance law can validly impose a tax measured by the amount or value of the legacy, even if that amount includes United States bonds, the reasoning that justifies such a conclusion must, when applied to the case of a Federal inheritance law taxing the very same legacy, bring us to the same conclusion. We must therefore hold that if, as held in Knowlton v. Moore, the tax imposed under the act of June 13, 1898, is not invalid as a direct, unapportioned tax, nor for want of uniformity, nor as an infringement upon the laws of the states regulating wills and descents, then the tax upon [148] legacies or bequests *descendible under and regulated by state laws is valid, even if such legacies incidentally are composed of Federal bonds.

It cannot be denied that the government of the United States has, and has heretofore exercised, the power to tax its own bonds. By the act of July 1, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 474, chap. 119), there was imposed a tax upon the interest on United States bonds at one half the rate of the tax imposed upon the income of other property; and by the act of June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 281, chap. 173, and 479, chap. 78), the discrimination in favor of the holders of United States bonds was abandoned, and the interest on them was taxed at the like rates as other income.

The argument in this case turns, at last, upon the proposition that, by the exempting clauses in the statutes and on the face of the 178 U. S.

bonds, the United States entered into a contract with those who should buy and hold the bonds that neither principal nor interest should be taxed.

Whether the United States, in the exercise of the power of taxation, can be estopped by a contract that such power shall not be exercised, we need not consider, because the contract in this case does not, as we view it, mean that a state may not, or the United States may not, tax inheritances and legacies, regardless of the character of the property of which they are composed. That some of the holders of United States bonds may have paid franchise taxes to the states, and others may have paid state or Federal inheritance and legacy taxes, has nothing to do with the contract between the United States and the bondholders. The United States will have complied with their contract when they pay to the original holders of their bonds, or to their assigns, the interest, when due, in full, and the principal, when due, in full.

These views demand an affirmance of the judgment of the circuit court sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the complaint.

We observe that it appears in the schedule of legacies prepared by the executor in this case, on a form apparently furnished by the collector of internal revenue, that several of the legacies under Mrs. Sherman's will were for sums under $10,000, and which were therefore, under the construction *put by this [149] court on the statute in Knowlton v. Moore, not taxable. It also appears that the theory on which the taxes were computed in respect to legacies over $10,000 was by measuring the tax by the amount of the entire estate, instead of by the amount of each legacy. This method of construing and applying the statute we have held, in Knowlton v. Moore, to be erroneous. Therefore the executor, representing the respective legatees, is entitled to recover back the amount of taxes paid on legacies under $10,000 and likewise such excess of taxes as was paid by reason of the erroneous interpretation of the statute.

We here meet the formal difficulty that neither the complaint in the circuit court nor the assignments in error in this court apparently questioned the correctness of the construction put upon the statute by the collector. The questions raised and considered only involved the validity of the act, and not its construction if valid.

As, however, the parties proceeded on a mutual mistake of law, we think the practical injustice that might result from an affirmance of the judgment may be avoided by reversing the judgment at the cost of the plaintiff in error, and sending the cause back to the circuit court, with directions to proceed therein according to law. And accordingly it so ordered.

Mr. Justice White dissents in respect to the taxability of the bonds.

Mr. Justice Peckham took no part in the decision of the case.

[150] *GEORGE D. SHERMAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 150-152.)

War revenue act—excessive tax—reversal of judgment.

A judgment dismissing an action by a legatee against the United States to recover an alleged illegal tax under the war revenue act, where the statute is held constitutional, but on a proper construction thereof is held not to justify the imposition of the whole amount of the tax that was collected, will be reversed, although in another action the executor has established his right to recover the illegal excess from the internal revenue collector, in order that judgment of dismissal in the present case may not embarrass the plaintiff's right to claim indemnity from the executor.

[No. 459.]

Argued December 5, 6, 7, 1899. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York dismissing a complaint against the United States. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

[150] *In the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of New York, on November 20, 1899, George D. Sherman filed a complaint against the United States, seeking to recover from said defendant the sum of $8,969.02, which he claimed had been unjustly exacted by John G. Ward, collector of internal revenue for the fourteenth district of New York, from George T. Murdock, executor of the last will of Mrs. Jane H. Sherman, the mother of complainant, as a duty or tax imposed by virtue of the provision of the act of June 13, 1898; that said sum of $8,969.02 was deducted by the said executor from the income due and payable under the provisions of said will to the complainant; that the income, of which the complainant was entitled to receive an annual portion during his life, was composed in part of United States bonds, which the complainant avers to be, by virtue of the acts of Congress under which they were issued, nontaxable and non-assessable for the purposes of taxation.

The complaint further alleged, among other things, that the tax so imposed was void because a direct tax not apportioned among the states in proportion to their population; that if said tax was not direct, but an impost, excise, or duty, the same was void because not uniform throughout the United States; and that it is not within the constitutional power of Congress to levy a tax upon a right of inheritance or disposition by will, provided for by the laws of the state of New York, or to require the payment of a larger or different amount of tax from or imposed upon a legacy or a legatee, because of the greater wealth of the donor of such legacy, than is required when the legacy is a gift of a testator of smaller means.

1014

*The United States, appearing by Charles H. Brown, United States attorney for the northern district of New York, demurred to the complaint upon the ground that the same did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. On hearing, the circuit court sustained the demurrer, and ordered that the complaint be dismissed. A writ of error was allowed to this judgment, and the cause was brought to this court.

Mr. Charles E. Patterson argued the cause and, with Mr. Alpheus T. Bulkeley, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Evarts, Choate, & Beaman, with Messrs. Charles F. Southmayd and William V. Rowe, submitted a brief by leave of court on behalf of the holders of United States bonds.

Solicitor General Richards argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

*Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion of the court: [151]

In so far as the contentions urged in this action are based on the allegation that the tax imposed on the legacies left in the will of Mrs. Jane H. Sherman is void because it is an unapportioned direct tax, or, if not a direct tax, but a duty or excise, the same is void because not uniform throughout the United States, or void because it is not competent to levy an inheritance or legacy tax upon property passing to legatees under the laws of the state of New York, they have been disposed of adversely to the plaintiff, in the case of Knowlton v. Moore, recently decided by this court (178 U. S. 41, ante, 969, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 747).

So, too, the proposition that bonds of the United States and the income therefrom are not lawfully taxable under an inheritance-tax law of the United States, because exempted by contract from such tax, has just been decided not to be well founded, in the case of Murdock v. Ward, 178 U. S. 139, ante, 1009, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 775.

The allegation in the complaint, that "it is not within the constitutional power of Congress to require the payment of a larger or different amount of tax from or imposed upon a legacy or a legatee, because of the greater wealth of the donor of such legacy, than is required when the legacy is the gift of a testator of smaller means," need not be considered, because this court has held in the case of Knowlton v. Moore that upon a proper construction of the act of June 13, 1898, the amount of the inheritance or legacy tax levied thereunder is measured by the amount of the legacy or distributive share passing under the laws of the state, and not by the amount of the estate of the testator or of the deceased owner.

As, however, it appears in this record that the taxes actually levied and paid on the legacies left by the will of Mrs. Sherman were computed upon the mistaken assumption that the amount of the estate of the testatrix was the measure of the tax, and not the amount of the respective legacies, the complainant is entitled to be repaid the excess thus imposed upon his legacy. As we have reversed the judgment in the case of Murdock v. Ward, and have remanded that case to the circuit court of the southern district of New York, in order that the erroneous computation may be corrected, and as thus what is coming to the plaintiff in error, upon such correction being made, will be recovered by Murdock as executor and trustee under the will of Mrs. Sherman, and thereby and in that case the plaintiff in error will be indemnified, he needs no further proceeding in his suit in the circuit court for the northern district of New York. Lest, however, the judgment dismissing his complaint may embarrass his right to claim indemnity from the executor, we shall reverse this judgment, and it is so ordered.

178 U. S.

Mr. Justice White dissents in respect to the taxability of the bonds.

Mr. Justice Peckham took no part in the decision of the case.

[153]*CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

WILLIAM HOWARD and Others.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 153-167.)

Carriers—liability for injury to passenger on leased railroad—illegality of arrangement under which train runs.

1. The existence of a lease by a railroad company of its road for an annual rental will not relieve a company which is running a train over the road from liability for injury to a passenger caused by the negligence of its own agents or servants in charge of the train.
2. The illegality of an agreement or arrangement under which a train is run by a railroad company over the track of another company will not relieve the owner of the train from liability for damages to a passenger caused by the negligence of its agents or servants.

[No. 247.]

Argued April 17, 18, 1900. Decided May, 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia to review a decision affirming a judgment against a railroad company in an action for damages. Affirmed.

NOTE.—As to liability of lessor of railroad for injuries caused by negligence of another company using the road under a lease, license, or other contract—see Caruthers v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. (Kan.) 44 L. R. A. 737, and note.

As to lease as affecting liability of railroads—see Chollette v. Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. (Neb.) 4 L. R. A. 135, and note; Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Washington (Va.) 7 L. R. A. 344, and note; Hart v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. (S. C.) 10 L. R. A. 794, and note.

179 U. S.

See same case below, 14 App. D. C. 262.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

*The railroad company seeks by this writ [153] of error to reverse a judgment obtained against it at a trial term of the supreme court of the District of Columbia in favor of defendants in error, which judgment has been affirmed by the court of appeals of the District.

The defendants in error are husband and wife, and the action was brought by them to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the wife because the car in which she was riding ran off the track while forming part of a train in transit from Louisville, Kentucky, to the city of Washington, D. C. The accident occurred during the night of November 16, 1886, at a place called Soldier, in the state of Kentucky, and about 60 miles west of the east line of the state, and while the train was running on the rails of the Elizabethtown, Lexington, & Big Sandy Railroad Company, which was a Kentucky corporation.

The amended declaration of the plaintiffs below alleged that the train on which the wife was a passenger was operated and conducted by the agents of the plaintiff in error, and that the plaintiff in error was managing and operating a line of railway *between [154] the cities of Louisville, in the state of Kentucky, and Washington city, in the District of Columbia, and upon said line of railway it was a common carrier of passengers for hire; that on the 18th of November, 1886, the plaintiff, Laura P. Howard, purchased from the agents of the defendant, at the city of Louisville, a ticket entitling her to a passage upon the railway from the city of Louisville to the city of Washington, and the defendant, it was alleged, thereupon became bound to safely carry and transport her from the city of Louisville to the city of Washington, but the defendant did not carry or transport her safely, and that near the town of Soldier, in the state of Kentucky, by the unskilfulness, carelessness, and wrongful neglect and mismanagement of defendant's agents in charge of said train, the sleeping car in which she was riding left the track, and went down an embankment and was demolished, and she was badly wounded and injured, and that by reason of these injuries she suffered great pain, and has been rendered permanently unable to do any business.

The defendant took issue upon these allegations, and the case went to trial. It has been twice tried, and upon the first trial, when all the evidence was in, the court directed a verdict for the defendant on the ground that no liability on its part had been shown for the accident in question. Upon appeal to the court of appeals of the District that court reversed the judgment (11 App. D. C. 300), and granted a new trial. A retrial was had, and the jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, upon which judgment was entered, and on appeal it has been affirmed by the court of appeals. (14 App. D. C. 262.)

1015

Mr. Leigh Robinson argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. R. Ross Perry argued the cause and, with Messrs. James Francis Smith and R. Ross Perry, Jr., filed a brief for defendants in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

[154] Mr. Justice Peckham, after stating the above facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

The injuries sustained by Mrs. Howard, as [155] shown by the evidence, *are very serious, and undoubtedly permanent. The accident happened at night, the car in which she was sleeping left the rail and went over an embankment about 30 feet high, and was broken to pieces. She was released from the car and taken to a cottage by the wayside, and subsequently was given a berth in a sleeping car and brought to Washington.

On the trial she was sworn as a witness, and testified that the disease was evidently progressing, because she could not sit up as long; that she could not walk any distance; could not ride in the street cars without great suffering; that she suffered in various ways a great deal, in her head and in her spine, and was never free from pain. The suffering in her head was at the base of the brain, and if she wanted to see anything back of her she had to turn her entire body; she could not turn her head either way. She said she had been under the doctor's care most of the time during the past eleven years up to the time of the trial.

Dr. Chrystie, a specialist in spinal diseases, testified on the trial that Mrs. Howard placed herself under his treatment early in 1887, and had been under his treatment ever since. He said that she was suffering from an incurable spinal affection, which was progressive, occasioning great suffering and almost total disability. The witness had contrived, and made for her an apparatus grasping the hip and extending up to the shoulders and giving support in front, which steadies the back as a broken bone would be steadied, and this gives her partial relief, but the disease is located so low down, so much superincumbence of weight above, that it does not give her complete relief. The apparatus is made of steel, and, the doctor said, should be worn constantly, and she should sleep in it at night. It is necessary for her to wear it every hour for comfort, as well as for protection of her backbone. The disease is progressing slowly, and if it had not been for this spinal assistance, he thought she would have had complete paralysis.

At the time of the accident she was a clerk in the Agricultural Department at Washington, but since that time has been compelled to give up her position, and has been unable to do any work.

[156] *The probable cause of the accident, as shown by the evidence given by the plaintiffs, was an imperfect flange on one of the wheels of the sleeping car in which Mrs. Howard was riding. It did not appear that a careful inspection could not have discovered the defect. There was evidence also given as to the train being driven at a reckless rate of speed at the time. We think there was sufficient evidence of negligence to carry the case to the jury.

The most important question, that of the liability of the defendant company for the consequences of an accident on the road of another company, arises upon the evidence now to be considered.

In order to sustain their claim the plaintiffs gave evidence showing the following facts: The Elizabethtown, Lexington, & Big Sandy Railroad Company, hereinafter called the Kentucky company, was incorporated by an act of the legislature of Kentucky, approved January 29, 1869, for the purpose of building a railroad from Elizabethtown to a point on the Big Sandy river at or within 20 miles of its mouth, all within the state of Kentucky. By a subsequent act the company was authorized to sell the railroad or lease the same whenever it might be to the interest of the company to do so. The Big Sandy river is the boundary line between the states of West Virginia and Kentucky.

At this time the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, the plaintiff in error (hereinafter called the Virginia company), or its predecessor, had been incorporated by an act of the legislature of Virginia, and was operating its railroad from Phœbus, a station about a mile east of Fortress Monroe, in Virginia, to Huntington, in the state of West Virginia, and about 8 miles east of the Big Sandy river.

In 1877 the legislature of West Virginia passed an act providing for a terminus for the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway on that river, and for the building of a bridge over it so as to connect with the road of the Kentucky corporation. That corporation had not then built its road east of Mount Sterling, a place some distance west of the river, and on November 12, 1879, the Virginia and Kentucky corporations entered into an [157] agreement, by which the Kentucky corporation was to complete its railroad from Mount Sterling east to the river, and thereby form a connection with the road of the Virginia company, and in consideration thereof the latter company was to complete its road from the station at Huntington to and across the river, and allow the Kentucky corporation the free and undisputed use of its railroad from the westerly bank, and across the river to the depot of the Virginia corporation in the city of Huntington, for the term of five years from the date of the completion of the road as stated.

Pursuant to the agreement this extension from Huntington west to the river was completed early in 1882, and at that time the Kentucky corporation had also completed its road from Mount Sterling east to the river, and had also a running arrangement over the Louisville & Nashville Railroad into the city of Louisville.

During these times Mr. C. P. Huntington was very largely interested, and was the controlling spirit, in a number of railroads situated both east and west of the Mississippi. He had built many new lines and extended many old ones, and had a plan for bringing into practically one management a line of railroad extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. He was also desirous of organizing into one line his lines east of the Mississippi river, consisting of the Virginia company, the Kentucky company, and the Chesapeake & Ohio and Southwestern Railroad Company.

After the completion of the road of the Virginia company from Huntington to the west side of the river and its connection with the Kentucky corporation at that point, an arrangement was made between the two corporations by which they were operated substantially as a continuous system. They were operated together by one general manager, under verbal directions from Mr. Huntington, who was president of the Virginia company, and owned a controlling amount of the stock of the Kentucky company. Under that arrangement the Virginia company "operated and maintained the line of railroad for and on account of the Elizabethtown, Lexington, & Big Sandy Railroad Company, mostly west of the Big [158] Sandy river, *to Lexington, and included in that also the 8 miles of track between the west bank of the river and Huntington. They operated it for and on account of the Elizabethtown, Lexington, & Big Sandy Railroad Company, keeping an account on the books of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company of all receipts of every character between Lexington and Huntington, including also the Louisville connection." This was in the early part of 1882. The arrangement continued, as testified to by one of the witnesses, who was an officer of the defendant, until the organization of the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Railroad Company (hereinafter spoken of), after which it is said that its officers operated the properties under the leases hereinafter mentioned. (This statement appears to be merely the conclusion of the witness from the other facts in the case.) The duration of the contract or arrangement under which the Virginia and Kentucky roads were operated as a continuous system was to be five years from the date of the completion of the road, which was in the early part of 1882, and that would have made the arrangement continue until 1887, a period subsequent to the happening of the accident. The witness supposed that the organization of the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Railroad Company terminated the contract by force of the lease above referred to. He stated that it was terminated in the same manner in which it was made, by the direction of Mr. Huntington; that Mr. Huntington directed Mr. Smith, the general manager, to operate the properties in accordance with the leases after they had been made. Mr. Huntington desired to extend, complete, and bring his different railroads under one management, that of himself.

For the purpose of being able the more easily to accomplish this object, Mr. Huntington procured from the legislature of the state of Connecticut an act, approved March 27, 1884, incorporating the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, which was therein authorized and empowered to contract for and acquire, by purchase or otherwise, and buy, hold, own, lease, etc., railroads, railroad bridges, engines, cars, rolling stock, and other railway equipment, etc., in any state or territory; "Provided, however, that said corporation shall not have power to *make [159] joint stock with, lease, hold, own, or operate any railroad within the state of Connecticut."
178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

On March 10, 1885, the legislature of Connecticut changed the name of the Southern Pacific Company to that of the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Company, with all the powers and privileges and subject to all the liabilities existing under the former name.

On January 29, 1886, the Kentucky corporation and the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Company (the Connecticut corporation), entered into an agreement of lease, by which the Kentucky corporation leased its road to the Connecticut corporation for 250 years from the 1st day of February, 1886, at a rental of $5,000 per annum, and on June 15, 1886, the Virginia corporation and the Connecticut corporation also entered into an agreement, by which the railroad of the former was leased to the latter corporation from July 1, 1886, for 250 years, at a yearly rental of $5,000.

As Mrs. Howard's injuries were sustained in November, 1886, on the railroad in Kentucky which had been leased to the Connecticut corporation the January previous, the plaintiff in error herein makes the claim that it is not liable for the results of that accident, because it did not occur on its road nor on the road of any company for the negligent acts of whose agents it was responsible.

Assuming that the Kentucky railroad had been leased to the Connecticut corporation, and that the latter was, at the time the accident occurred, actually engaged in the management of the former, and that the train to which the accident happened was conducted and managed by the agents of the Connecticut company, it might then be assumed that this plaintiff in error could not be held responsible for the result of such accident; but the simple fact that at the time when it occurred the lease spoken of was in existence would not conclusively bar a recovery in this case. If, notwithstanding the execution of the lease, the plaintiff in error in fact, through its agents and servants, managed and conducted and controlled the train to which the accident happened, it would be responsible for that accident, notwithstanding the existence of the lease. The evidence was *sufficient to show that prior to [160] the execution of the lease the Kentucky corporation was controlled and managed by the plaintiff in error, and it was so controlled and managed by the direction of Mr. Huntington, the president of plaintiff in error. It is claimed that this arrangement was wholly illegal, as beyond the powers of the Virginia corporation. But if, while the Kentucky corporation was managed under such agreement, an accident had occurred by reason of the negligence of the agents and servants of the Virginia company, it would have been liable for the damages arising therefrom, notwithstanding the agreement or arrangement under which such control was maintained was illegal. If the agents and servants of a corporation commit a wrong in the course of their employment and while in the performance of an agreement of the corporation which is ultra vires, the company is liable for the wrong thus committed, notwithstanding the illegality of the agreement. First Nat. Bank v. Graham, 100 U. S. 699, 702, 25 L. ed. 750, 751; Salt Lake City v. Hollister, 118 U. S. 256, 260, 30 L. ed. 176, 177, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1055; Bissell v. Michigan S. & N. I. R. Cos. 22 N. Y. 258; Buffett v. Troy & B. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 168; Nims v. Mount Hermon Boys' School, 160 Mass. 177, 22 L. R. A. 364, 35 N. E. 776; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Haring, 47 N. J. L. 137, 54 Am. Rep. 123.

We are therefore brought to a consideration of the evidence in the record, tending to show that this train was a train of the plaintiff in error, controlled and managed by its agents and servants, for whose negligence it is liable.

The circumstances attending and leading up to the arrangement made between the Virginia and Kentucky companies in 1882, by which arrangement the former took upon itself the management of the Kentucky company, have been set forth somewhat in detail in order that such facts might be viewed in connection with the evidence as to the leases and the manner in which the affairs of the roads were thereafter conducted, so that the whole case could be examined to determine whether it was proper to submit to the jury the main question of fact: Who had the management and control of the train to which the accident happened?

[161] Evidence was given that many years prior to the execution of the lease above referred to the Virginia company had established *offices and an agency in the city of Washington for the purpose of obtaining business for that company and its connections, and it had entered into some kind of running arrangements with the Virginia Midland Railway Company, whose road extended from the city of Washington through the city of Charlottesville, in the state of Virginia, a station on the line of the Chesapeake & Ohio Company. After the arrangement between the Virginia and Kentucky companies above mentioned, if not before, the Virginia company sold tickets at Washington through to Louisville, and vice versa, and advertised the route in various newspapers throughout the country, especially in Washington and Louisville, in which the route was designated as the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, or Route, and it also advertised that it ran through or "solid" trains over this route. Such advertisements were continued after the execution of the lease up to and after the happening of this accident. There is room in the evidence for the inference, which a jury might draw, that the Chesapeake & Ohio Company, by these various facts, and by such advertisements, and by the tickets which it sold, held itself out to the public as a carrier of passengers between the two cities. There was no substantial change in the character either of the advertisements or of the tickets after the execution of the leases.

If the Virginia company did in fact thus hold itself out as a carrier of passengers between the two cities without change of cars and by a solid train, the inference that such train was its own, and that the servants in charge thereof were its servants, might be based upon that fact together with the other evidence in the case, and such inference would be for the jury.

For the sole purpose of organization, and the more readily to enable Mr. Huntington to work out his scheme for one continuous line from the Atlantic to the Pacific, he procured the acts of the Connecticut legislature incorporating the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Railroad Company. The capital stock of the corporation was fixed at $1,000,000 divided into shares of $100 each, and the act provided that whenever $500,000 should be subscribed and 10 per centum of the subscription paid in cash, the stockholders *might [162] organize the corporation, which might then proceed to do the business authorized by the act. An affidavit of the secretary of the company attached to the copy of the articles of association, filed in the office of the secretary of state of West Virginia, showed the acceptance of this charter by the vote of a majority of the corporation and the subscription of $500,000 to the capital stock on May 10, 1884, and the payment in cash of 10 per centum at the time of such subscriptions. There was no proof of a dollar's worth of the capital stock ever having been issued, although officers of the company seem to have been elected. Mr. Huntington was the president of the corporation, and the officers of the Virginia corporation appear to have been also elected or to have acted as officers of the Connecticut corporation. After the execution of the leases already mentioned there seems to have been no actual change in the personnel of the officers of the leased road, nor in the actual management or control thereof. The same hands continued apparently in the same employment. There is no proof of the payment of a single dollar on account of these leases, but nevertheless a formal transfer was alleged to have been made to the lessee of the rolling stock and equipment of the Virginia and Kentucky corporations. The evidence is sufficient to admit the inference that it was a merely formal, although possibly valid, lease for the purpose of organization, which would render it easier to accomplish the formation of a continuous line, which Mr. Huntington had at heart. The same offices in the city of Washington were retained after the lease as before. The same individuals remained in the same relative positions therein, and substantially the same advertisements and the same kind of tickets were inserted in the newspapers and sold at the offices after as before the execution of the leases. The sign at the Washington office was "Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Ticket Office," at the windows where the tickets were sold and over the doors, and no change was made after the execution of the leases, and after that time, as well as prior thereto, they continued to use the name of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway and Chesapeake & Ohio Route, and the general passenger agent said that from the time he commenced in 1882 he *did not think the sign was ever changed. He was under the impression that the tickets had been changed after the execution of the leases, and that they were then issued in the name of the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Company, but that was a mere impression. The ticket of the plaintiff was issued by the Virginia company, and provided for a passage from Louisville to Washington. She had taken this route to and from Washington several times before, and her ticket, of the same description, had always been honored over the whole length of road between the two cities.

From all these facts it does not necessarily follow as a legal conclusion that the execution of a lease from the Kentucky to the Connecticut corporation changed the status of the former company, and effected in and of itself a change in the operation and management of that company, so that the Virginia company no longer managed or controlled the Kentucky company. The lease might exist, and the Virginia company might still manage the Kentucky company or some particular through train over that road.

Evidence was also given showing that some time after the execution of these leases, and after the happening of the accident, the Virginia company went into the hands of a receiver at the instance of Mr. Huntington, and after it came out the Connecticut corporation went out of existence, and transferred all the property which had come to it from the Virginia company back to that corporation; and during all that period there was actually no change in the manner of conducting the business of the roads other than as a matter of bookkeeping, nor in the persons who filled the offices and did the work of the companies. The Connecticut corporation simply disappeared from view. During the whole period it was the Chesapeake & Ohio Route or the Chesapeake & Ohio Road that was advertised as forming a continuous line from Washington to Louisville and carrying passengers thereon without change of cars and in a solid train.

Coming to the particular case of the defendants in error, the evidence showed that the wife purchased the ticket upon which she entered the car at Louisville; that it [164] was a ticket headed "Chesapeake & Ohio Railway," and that it stated that it was good for one continuous, first-class passage from Louisville, Kentucky, to Washington, 178 U. S.

D. C., and was signed by the same person who had theretofore been the general passenger and ticket agent of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway. The ticket contained a notice that the company acted only as agent in selling for passage over other roads; but we think it plain that a passage over a road or on a train which was controlled or managed by it would not be included in such exception. The ticket was not purchased at the regular ticket office of the company, but from what is termed in the evidence a "scalper," and was the half of a round trip or excursion ticket from Washington to Louisville and return. When Mrs. Howard came to the station at Louisville for the purpose of commencing her journey she entered the train which was lettered or had a card attached to it signifying that it was the Chesapeake & Ohio train for Washington, and she supposed she was on a train of that company, and after entering the sleeping car she surrendered her ticket to the conductor, and the same was received as a good and sufficient ticket entitling her to transportation from Louisville to Washington. After the accident happened, and while she was on her way to Washington in the train which had been procured for the passengers, she was attended by a doctor, who stated that he was the chief of the corps of surgeons of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway, and when she told the doctor she was afraid she would lose her position on account of the injury, she testified that the doctor said to her, "The company will see you through," and although he did not say the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, yet from the conversation she had with him she understood that it was that company for which he spoke.

Other evidence was given on this subject which it is not necessary to refer to, and when the judge came to charge the jury he stated upon this point as follows:

"It is not enough, to render the defendant liable or to justify you in finding that it was operating the road, to find that it sold tickets over it. If the defendant simply sold a through ticket from Louisville to Washington or sold a round-trip ticket from *Wash-[165] ington to Louisville and return to Washington, and the plaintiff, Mrs. Howard, had the return part of that ticket, that alone would not be sufficient evidence to establish the fact that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company was operating this Elizabethtown, Lexington, & Big Sandy road. We all know that railroad companies habitually sell tickets over their own roads and, in connection with them, over other roads; so that the mere sale of such a ticket, and that in itself, would not be sufficient. It must appear from all the evidence, to your satisfaction, not only that this defendant sold a ticket over that road, upon the faith of which this lady was riding at the time, but in order to hold the defendant liable you should find that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, as a corporation, by its officers and agents, was operating this road; that that corporation, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, controlled this road, operated it, ran it, and that the trains which ran over it were the trains of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company; that they were manned by their employees and controlled by their officers and agents; and, unless you find that the evidence establishes that state of facts, you would find for the defendant upon that point, because, in order to render the defendant liable for this accident, if it was caused by negligence, it must appear to your satisfaction by a preponderance of evidence that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company controlled and was running its trains over this road.

[166] "Perhaps I may aid you a little further upon that question without touching upon your province, for the fact is all for you. There is evidence here tending to show that state of facts. The plaintiffs claim that the evidence is sufficient to establish it; that is, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company controlled this particular road, and was running trains over it at the time of this accident. The defendant denies that the evidence is sufficient to establish those facts, and it is for you to determine which one of them is right in relation to it. The defendant also says that even if the evidence is sufficient to establish that state of facts at any time, that state of facts did not exist at the time of this accident; that it was ended in January, 1886, some months prior to this accident, by the lease which the Elizabethtown, *Lexington & Big Sandy Railroad Company made to the Newport News & Mississippi Valley Railroad Company. That lease is in evidence. I suggest that you divide that subject into two heads. First, determine whether the evidence is sufficient, when you take it all together, to establish to your satisfaction the fact that the defendant here, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, was controlling and running the Elizabethtown, Lexington, & Big Sandy road prior to the execution of this lease to which I have just referred. If you find the evidence insufficient to establish that, you might dismiss that subject, I should say, without looking any further, and find for the defendant. But if you find from the evidence that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, immediately before the execution of this lease just mentioned, was operating and controlling this Elizabethtown road, then you would naturally pass to the next step, which is, whether the execution of this lease and the facts and circumstances attendant upon it ended that arrangement, so that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company ceased at the time of the execution of that lease to control and run the trains upon that road."

We think this charge was in substance correct, although we do not suppose it was necessary, in order to hold the Virginia company liable, that it should have had the complete control and management of the road of the Kentucky corporation. If it had the control and management of that train it would have been sufficient, even though the Kentucky or the Connecticut company managed and controlled other and local trains over the road of the Kentucky company.

The point would be whether there was evidence enough to submit the question to the jury as to the management and control of the train by the plaintiff in error. Upon a careful consideration of the whole case and all the various circumstances prior to and connected with the making of these leases, we think there was evidence sufficient to allow the jury to pass upon that question as one of fact, and the decision of the jury in favor of the plaintiff ought not to be disturbed.

The circumstances of the case are quite unusual. The evidence shows that in each of the three corporations there was *but one [167] controlling and guiding hand; that all the steps taken were steps in the direction of establishing, organizing, and maintaining a continuous line of road from one ocean to the other, and that the various contracts, arrangements, and leases were but means to accomplish this one purpose; that the Virginia company, under the guidance and direction of Mr. Huntington, held itself out to the world as a carrier or transporter, and not a mere forwarder, of passengers from Washington to Louisville or the reverse, and that it issued tickets as evidence or tokens of its contract to so carry. The mere formal existence of these leases does not change the actual facts in the case. Assuming their validity, they are not conclusive against the defendants in error. They could exist, and the train in question in this case might still have been under the general control of or managed by the Virginia corporation. If so, it was responsible for the neglect of the agents employed by it. The fact that the Kentucky road had immediately prior to the lease been in the actual control and management of the Virginia company, when taken in connection with the other evidence in the case, is an important one in determining the main question as to the continuation of such management of the road or of the train after the execution of the lease to the Connecticut corporation. In our judgment a submission of the question as one of fact for the jury was not error.

Another question was argued relating to the alleged release of the cause of action by Mrs. Howard upon the payment of $200. The evidence adduced by the plaintiffs in regard to the release was sufficient, if believed, to render it unavailable as a defense. The question was submitted to the jury under instructions quite as favorable to the defendant as it was entitled to, and the finding in favor of the invalidity of the paper ought not to be disturbed.

We have carefully examined the other questions made by the plaintiff in error, including that in regard to the want of jurisdiction because of an alleged insufficient service of process, but we are satisfied that no error has been committed, and the judgment must therefore be affirmed.

[168]*SAMUEL CASTNER et al., Petitioners,
v.

W. H. COFFMAN, etc.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 168-186.)

Trademark—in name of coal—geographical name—name adopted by selling agents who inspect and grade the coal.

1. The use of the name "Pocahontas Coal" by the selling agents for the owners of coal mined at or near a town called Pocahontas will not create an exclusive right in such agents to the use of the name for all the coal from that field, or deprive the mine owners of the right to use the same name.
2. A final decree dismissing a bill for an injunction may be directed by a circuit court of appeals in reversing a decree for a temporary injunction, where the bill is devoid of equity upon its face and no supplementary evidence can be offered which will change the result.
3. The enhancement of the reputation of coal from a certain field by the careful inspection and grading thereof by the selling agents, who sell it under the name of the place where it is mined, gives them no exclusive right to such name as a trademark.

[No. 113.]

Argued January 23, 24, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit to review a decree reversing that of the Circuit Court allowing a temporary injunction against the use of an alleged trademark for coal. Affirmed.

See same case below, 59 U. S. App. 35, 87 Fed. Rep. 457, 31 C. C. A. 55; 59 U. S. App. 67, 87 Fed. Rep. 468, 31 C. C. A. 65.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

[168] *This suit was commenced on March 12, 1897, in the United States circuit court for the district of West Virginia, sitting in equity. On the date mentioned a bill of complaint was filed on behalf of Samuel Castner, junior, and Henry B. Curran, copartners, trading under the firm name of Castner & Curran. The defendant named in the bill was W. H. Coffman, doing business under the name of Pocahontas Coke & Coal Company and W. H. Coffman Coke Company. The relief prayed was substantially that the defendant might be perpetually restrained from using or imitating the name "Pocahontas" in connection with the selling, advertising, or offering for sale, of coal. The relief thus asked

NOTE.—As to use of geographical name as trademark—see Gato v. El Modelo Cigar Mfg. Co. (Fla.) 6 L. R. A. 823, and note; New York & R. Cement Co. v. Coplay Cement Co. (C. C. E. D. Pa.) 10 L. R. A. 833, and note; Hoyt v. J. T. Lovett Co. 17 C. C. A. 652, and note; Illinois Watch Case Co. v. Elgin Nat. Watch Co. 35 C. C. A. 237, and note. See also note to Alff v. Radam (Tex.) 9 L. R. A. 145.

As to jurisdiction of circuit court of appeals on appeals from interlocutory decrees—see note to United States Freeland & Emigration Co. v. Gallegos, 32 C. C. A. 481.

178 U. S.

for was based upon the averment that the word "Pocahontas" was a trademark for coal, which trademark was owned by the complainant firm, and, besides, that the word in question had come in the course of business to designate the coal offered for sale by the complainants, and that the use of the name by the defendant was calculated to deceive the public into believing that the coal dealt in by him was coal which had been inspected and graded by the complainants, would thus operate to defraud the complainants, and constitute undue and unlawful competition in trade.

Affidavits and exhibits were filed with the bill in support of a motion for an injunction. A demurrer to the bill having been overruled, the defendant filed an answer accompanied by affidavits and exhibits in opposition to the motion for an injunction. Several affidavits in rebuttal were thereupon filed on behalf of the complainants. Upon the record thus made the motion for *an injunction was [169] heard, and, after consideration by the court, it was decreed as follows:

"That the defendant in his own name, and in the name of the Pocahontas Coke & Coal Company, and in the name of the W. H. Coffman Coke Company, and his servants, attorneys, associates, confederates, agents, and workmen, and each and every of them, be and the same are restrained and inhibited from using the name 'Pocahontas' or 'Pocahontas Flat Top' in connection with his business, the court being of the opinion that the complainants have a right to use the said word 'Pocahontas' for the purpose of indicating that the coal was from the Pocahontas field, and that the complainants have the sole right to use said word as indicating the character of coal they sell. But this injunction is not to restrain or inhibit the defendant or his agents from advertising, offering for sale, or selling coal from what is known in Virginia, or West Virginia, as the Pocahontas coal field, or advertising the coal as so mined and produced from that field, and this injunction shall not apply to transactions of the defendant already concluded by actual shipments of coal."

The defendant appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the fourth circuit. Among the assignments of error filed was the following:

"II. The court erred in rendering any decree at all until the merits of the said cause, as put in issue by the pleadings, were fully developed by proofs adduced in the proper order of chancery proceeding and practice."

The circuit court of appeals reversed the decree of the circuit court and remanded the cause, with directions to dismiss the bill. It was held that the complainants had no trademark in the word "Pocahontas;" that they were not entitled to the exclusive use of that word to designate the coal sold by them, or its character or quality, but, on the contrary, that the word "Pocahontas" indicated coal mined in the Pocahontas coal field, and that all the producers of that region had the right to use it in common with the complainants. The court held that the proof did not show [170] that the defendant had practised any deception on the public, or that he had perpetrated any fraud upon the appellees. *Before the mandate issued, however, a rehearing was applied for, and the reviewing court was asked to provide in the mandate, after reversing the order granting a preliminary injunction, that the parties should "proceed to take their proofs in order that the cause may thereafter be heard upon pleadings and proofs, to the end that a final decree may be entered." This petition for a rehearing was denied, the court stating:

"We are clearly of the opinion, not only that complainants below are not entitled to an injunction, but also that there is no equity in their bill, and that therefore it will be a useless expenditure of time and money, and cause fruitless delay, to take the evidence mentioned in the petition for a rehearing."

The cause was then brought to this court by writ of certiorari.

Messrs. Arthur V. Briesen and Frederick P. Fish argued the cause and, with Mr. Henry E. Everding, filed a brief for petitioners:

The English equity practice adopted in the better-considered equity decisions in this country is adverse to dismissing a bill upon motion for preliminary injunction.

Brooke v. Clarke, 1 Swanst. 550; Blow v. Taylor, 4 Hen. & M. 159; Cole v. Sands, 1 Overt. 183; Porter v. Moffett, 1 Morris (Iowa) 108; Brown v. Wilson, 56 Ga. 534; Strong v. Harrison, 62 Miss. 61. See also Proprietors of Charles River Bridge v. Proprietors of Warren Bridge, 6 Pick. 376; Basche v. Pringle, 21 Or. 24, 26 Pac. 863; Lynn v. Mount Savage Iron Co. 34 Md. 603; Cheney v. Jones, 14 Fla. 587.

Where the court of appeals has dismissed the complainant's bill upon an appeal from an interlocutory decree, it is strongly intimated that the ex parte affidavits and imperfect record in the case of an appeal from a preliminary injunction would preclude the court from dismissing the bill or finally disposing of the suit.

Richmond v. Atwood, 5 U. S. App. 151, 52 Fed. Rep. 10, 2 C. C. A. 596, 17 L. R. A. 615; Marden v. Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. 33 U. S. App. 123, 67 Fed. Rep. 809, 15 C. C. A. 26; Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co. v. Goshen Sweeper Co. 43 U. S. App. 47, 72 Fed. Rep. 545, 19 C. C. A. 25.

It has been decided in some cases that upon a motion for preliminary injunction, if there is nothing to be decided but a question of law the court will decide that question, and so finally dispose of the suit.

Knoxville v. Africa, 47 U. S. App. 74, 246, 77 Fed. Rep. 501, 23 C. C. A. 252; Ohio Brass Co. v. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. 54 U. S. App. 1, 80 Fed. Rep. 712, 26 C. C. A. 107; Green v. Mills, 25 U. S. App. 383, 69 Fed. Rep. 852, 16 C. C. A. 516, 30 L. R. A. 90.

However clear the facts may seem to be, nevertheless if there is a question of fact involved, the court may not dismiss the bill or finally dispose of the suit upon an appeal from a preliminary injunction.

Curtis v. Overman Wheel Co. 20 U. S. App. 146, 58 Fed. Rep. 784, 7 C. C. A. 493; Andrews v. National Foundry & Pipe Works, 18 U. S. App. 458, 24 U. S. App. 81, 61 Fed. Rep. 782, 10 C. C. A. 60; Knoxville v. Africa, 47 U. S. App. 74, 77 Fed. Rep. 501, 23 C. C. A. 252.

Mr. E. B. Stocking argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.

Mr. A. G. Safford filed a brief for respondent, with the answer to the petition for writ of certiorari.

Mr. Justice White, after making the [170] foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainants in their bill predicate their asserted right to the sole and exclusive use of the name "Pocahontas," as applying to coal, upon two grounds: First, the ownership of the alleged trademark, which it is averred the complainants acquired from the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company in April, 1895; and, second, upon a use by the complainants and their predecessors in right of the word "Pocahontas" as a trademark or name to designate the character and the quality of the coal dealt in by them. In other words, the complainants contend that for many years prior to the period when they assert they were vested by the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company with the ownership of the alleged trademark they, as licensees of said company, used the word "Pocahontas" to designate the coal sold by them, to such an extent that that word, as applied to coal, came to represent in the public mind the coal of the complainants; that this continued up to the time the trademark was acquired, and from that time down to the filing of the bill.

*Whilst the propositions above stated por-[171] tray the rights asserted by the complainants in their bill, in their proof, and in the argument at bar, a wider contention is advanced, that is, that the complainants have a right to the name "Pocahontas," not only because they acquired it whilst acting under a license from the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company and as the assignees of a trademark owned by that company, but that they have a right to the name "Pocahontas" independently of the existence of any such right in the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, or of the ownership by that company of a trademark embracing that name. Without stopping to consider the conflict which is engendered by this latter view, we shall at once proceed to an analysis of the evidence in the record, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the complainants have the exclusive right claimed by them, derived either as licensees or assignees of the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, or in any other way.

The coal which was the subject of the dealings had by the complainants, as averred in their bill, was the product of what is known as the Great Flat Top coal region of Virginia and West Virginia. It is referred to in the bill of complaint as "a tract or field of smokeless bituminous or semi-bituminous coal." The initial operations in the development of the region were begun in 1881 by a Virginia corporation styled the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company. Some surface work was done in the fall of that year. In March, 1882, the first blast was put in what was termed the east mine; a contract was closed to run that mine one mile; also the air course and the No. 1 west mine. These mines were situated respectively east and west of a stream called Coal Branch. As early as March, 1882, a contract was made to supply coal from these mines to the Norfolk & Western Railway Company. The branch of that road to the mines, however, was not completed until March, 1883, and the first shipment of coal was made in that month. As a result of the operations referred to, a mining town was located near to the mines, and was called Pocahontas. It was made a postoffice in 1882. It had a population in January, 1883, of 1,000 souls, and was incorporated by the legislature *of Virginia in 1884 under the name of "Pocahontas." The Improvement Company also named its mines the Pocahontas mines, and from the beginning appears to have sold the product of its mines as Pocahontas coal.

[172]

Without minutely tracing the development of the coal field in question, it may suffice to say that either by acquiring coal lands from the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, or from other sources, a land company known as the Flat Top Association became interested in lands within the coal field in question and by 1885 several mines additional to those owned by the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company were being worked by other operators. The connection of the complainants or their predecessors with the mines or coal field in question arose as follows:

While it is alleged in the bill that "some time prior to January, 1884," Castner & Company, Limited, a corporation, "dealt in, inspected, and sold coal from such region or field aforesaid," there is no proof in the record even tending to show that Castner & Company had any connection with Pocahontas coal prior to January 1, 1885. Indeed, as it will hereafter develop, the fact that they did not represent that article is clearly inferable from a statement made by them in an application for the registry of an alleged trademark.

It is established that in July, 1883, one William Lamb was the agent of the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, at Norfolk, Virginia, and that the general sales agent of the company was one Edward S. Hutchinson, who was located in Philadelphia, at which place the general offices of the company were established. Castner & Company, Limited, became the general tidewater coal agent on January 1, 1885, for the product of all the mines then in operation in the Great Flat Top coal region, including the product of the original Pocahontas mines. This appointment was the outgrowth of an agreement entered into between the Norfolk & Western Railroad, the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, the Flat Top Coal Company, and three lessees of the latter company operating coal mines in the region referred to. This agreement was made on the 29th of December, 1884. It provided for the handling of the entire *coal output of all the then producers,[173] and of any subsequent operators in said region, by a general coal agent, to be appointed by the railroad company. The contract, moreover, provided for the appointment by the railroad company of another person, to be known as the general tidewater coal agent, and who was to be subject to the general direction and management of the general coal agent. It was also stipulated in the contract that the general coal agent should perform outstanding contracts of the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company for the delivery of coal. Castner & Company, Limited, were appointed the general tidewater coal agent under the agreement.

In passing, it is proper to notice the fact that the coal mined in the various collieries in operation at the date of this agreement, as is the case with the mines now being operated, was from the same seam as that mined at the original Pocahontas mines, which seam was then known as the "Nelson or Pocahontas bed, No. 3." It clearly appears from the record that prior to the date of the contract above mentioned, at a time when the predecessors of the complainants appear to have had nothing to do with the product at the Pocahontas mines, the coal mined from the Pocahontas vein had become well and favorably known as a coal of high grade. Thus, in a letter from sales agent Hutchinson, dated July 5, 1883, he states: "We are all especially pleased with the testimonial from Mr. McCarrick, and it confirms the view we have all along entertained, that the Pocahontas coal is the best steam coal in the market." So, also, in the eighth article of the contract between Castner & Company, Limited, and the railroad company, by which the former was appointed the general tidewater coal agent, it was recited that "the coal from the Great Flat Top coal region has proved to be of superior quality, and suitable for steam purposes, and especially for the use of ocean steamships, as well as for sale in the West Indian and South American markets." That the coal supplied by the producers might, however, in some instances, be of inferior quality, was recognized in a stipulation contained in the coal producers' contract, providing for an allowance to be made to purchasers of coal because of inferiority of quality, such allowance to be deducted from any amount found due or that might become due to the producer.

*While the contract between the coal pro-[174]ducers and the agreement appointing the general tidewater coal agent are contained in the record, the agreement appointing the general coal agent was not put in evidence. One of the complainants, in an affidavit dated March 18, 1897, attached as an exhibit a monthly statement rendered by the coal agent, which is headed "Office of the General Coal Agent, Roanoke, Virginia, February 15, 1885." Nowhere in the statement, however, is there an intimation as to who was such coal agent. It is plainly inferable, however, from the excerpt which we now make, who was the appointee to that responsible position. The extract we make is from the issue of October, 1891, of a publication styled The Iron Belt. It reads as follows:

"Pocahontas Company.

"The Pocahontas Coal Company, organized January 1, 1895 (1885?). Officers: William C. Bullitt, president; D. H. Matson, secretary and treasurer; H. N. Claxton, general agent; John Twohy, superintendent piers, Norfolk; general office, Roanoke, Va.; branch office, Norfolk, Va.; shipping office, Bluefield, W. Va. This company, who makes all sales for the entire output of the region, assuming all liabilities, shipped during the year 1890, 1,807,716 tons, and has shipped during the present year to date (October 10th), 1,628,927 tons. 'From present indications,' says Mr. Matson, secretary of the company, 'we estimate that for the year 1891 we will ship 2,300,000 tons.'

"The Pocahontas Coal Company makes a uniform price for all coal mined, furnishes inspectors for each tippie where the coal is loaded, thus guaranteeing to purchasers coal free from bone, slate, and other impurities. This company pays the operators by check the fifteenth day of each month, thus securing them against losses by reason of bad debts, storage and freight rates. The company employs twenty-six subinspectors, who are under the supervision of Mr. W. D. Milne, chief inspector. Mr. Milne's headquarters are at Bramwell, and he makes a tour of inspection of each tippie at least once a week."

[175] So, also, there is contained in the record a letter, headed with the names of the then officers of what is termed "Pocahontas *Coal Company, shippers of celebrated Pocahontas coal." On this letter head was a vignette, presumably the figure of Pocahontas. This letter was addressed to the proprietors of the Indian Ridge Colliery, and referred to the handling by the Pocahontas Coal Company of the product of that colliery. The Indian Ridge Colliery, referred to in this letter, is one of the mines represented by the defendant in this cause. The operation of this mine was commenced about the date of the letter, and its product, in accordance with the general agreement already stated, was shipped through the general coal agent, the Pocahontas Coal Company.

In the article in The Iron Belt, above referred to, there is also a statement of the production from 1883 to 1891 of the various mines controlled in October, 1891, by the Pocahontas Company, as the general coal agent of all the mine owners or operators. This statement showed that from one colliery operating in 1883 the number of collieries had increased to nineteen in October, 1891.

Under the coal producers' agreement, as we have seen, the entire product of the mines in the Great Flat Top coal region, intended for rail transportation other than that used for coke, was to be consigned to the general coal agent, and only a portion of such product was to be handled by the general tide-water coal agent, whose operations were to be "subject to the exclusive control, supervision, and direction of the general coal agent."

We have already referred to the fact that when the combination referred to was formed, the coal mined from the Pocahontas or No. 3 bed had, under that name, an established reputation. Further confirmatory evidence of this fact will now be referred to. Andrew S. McCreath, chemist to the State Geological Survey, of Pennsylvania, embodied the results of much research and personal investigation during part of 1882, and the fall of 1883, and the spring of 1884, in a work entitled "Mineral Wealth of Virginia," extracts from which are contained in the record. At page 110 he mentions the existence of numerous openings on the "Nelson or Pocahontas coal bed (No. 3 of the section)," and also of some few openings "on the upper [176] beds, No. 5 and No. 6. He further says (p. 110):

"On Coal Branch, the Pocahontas bed (No. 3) has been extensively mined at the Pocahontas mines of the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company."

At page 150 he says:

"The section at Pocahontas shows the presence of at least three workable beds above water level, although almost the entire output of the region at present comes from the No. 3 Nelson or Pocahontas bed.

"This handsome coal bed is everywhere present, so far as explored, with a workable thickness, being 11' 3" in the vicinity of Pocahontas, and holding its workable dimensions through the field for 5 miles eastward to the waters of Flipping creek, where it becomes split into two beds, about 4½ and 5½ feet thick.

"To the west of Pocahontas, along Laurel creek, for a distance of 8 miles, the bed carries its full thickness fairly well, and shows nearly the same section for a long distance north of the dividing ridge on the waters of the Elkhorn and the Tug Fork of Sandy.

"The good quality of this coal has been well established by numerous tests, both in the laboratory and in actual practice."

The Pocahontas Coal Company appears to have continued to act as general coal agent of the producers' combination until the spring of 1895, about the time of the appointment of a receiver for the Norfolk & Western Railroad, which company, as will be remembered, was a party to the original agreement of the combination. By this time the development of the coal field in question had largely progressed, and a number of additional mines were being operated. A new company, called the Pocahontas Company, was chartered on March 12, 1895, and in 1896 this company was handling the coal produced from numerous mines in the Pocahontas field. Agreements were made, however, by the complainants in March, 1895, directly with some of the mine owners [177] formerly represented by the Pocahontas Coal Company (among them the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company), by which agreements complainants *were constituted the general factors and selling agents for the product of the mines of such owners.

The product of the Indian Ridge mine, now represented, as we have said, by the defendant, and which was opened in the spring of 1894, when it ceased to be shipped through the Pocahontas Coal Company as general agent, was marketed through the agency of the complainants until January 1, 1896. From this last-mentioned date until November 1, 1896, the product of the mine was shipped through the Pocahontas Company, the complainants having become the sole agents of the latter company for tidewater and lins trade.

It is plainly inferable from the averments of the bill, as it is unquestionably established by the evidence in the record, that from January 1, 1885, the date of the coal producers' combination referred to, the product of the various collieries controlled by the combination was uniformly termed Pocahontas coal, and the evidence shows that this appellation was made use of as well upon bill heads and advertising matter of the general coal agent, and of some, at least, of the producers, as upon the stationary and advertising matter of Castner & Company, Limited, the general tidewater coal agent.

It is by the light of the facts just stated that we come to consider the claim made in the bill that the complainants are the exclusive owners of the trademark or the tradename "Pocahontas," as applied to all coal coming from the Pocahontas coal field, because prior to April 1, 1895, they had used the same by the license and permission of the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, and subsequent to that date had used it as owner under an assignment of said trademark or tradename to them from the Improvement Company. There is no evidence whatever in the record tending to show any express license to complainants or their predecessors from the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, authorizing them to use the name "Pocahontas" as an exclusive tradename or trademark for coal; and the facts which we have above stated render it absolutely impossible that there should have been any such valid license. It is patent that the word "Pocahontas," prior to the formation of the coal producers' combination on January 1, 1885, [178] indicated *all the coal coming from a particular seam of coal known as the Pocahontas vein. When the combination was entered into, creating a general coal agent to dispose of all the coal to be marketed from all the collieries which were then being worked or might thereafter be worked in the Pocahontas region, it is undoubted that the name "Pocahontas" was applied by everybody concerned, including the Southwest Virginia Company, as indicating coal coming from the region, without reference to the particular mine from which it was taken, for all the coal was advertised by the owners and general coal agent under the name of Pocahontas coal, and was contracted for and shipped under the same name. Indeed, during the existence of the original combination the complainants, or their predecessors, who now assert that they have an exclusive right to the name "Pocahontas" as designating the coal sold by them, were acting as tidewater agents, under the supervision and control of the general coal agent, for all the mine owners and were themselves selling the coal under the name referred to as agents of the owners, and dealing in such coal, on behalf of the owners of all the mines, as Pocahontas coal. When the Pocahontas Coal Company ceased to act as the general coal agent, on the appointment of a receiver of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, the complainants, who now assert the exclusive right in themselves to the name "Pocahontas," became the principal agent for the sale of the coal from some of the mines, among the number one of the mines controlled by the defendant, putting the product of that mine upon the market, as agent of the owner, as Pocahontas coal.

Destructive as is this state of the proof of the assertion that there was a license to the complainants prior to 1895 by the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, the existence of such a license is further rebutted by the fact that there is no evidence of any want of knowledge by the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company of the use by the Pocahontas Coal Company, or by the producers generally of the designation Pocahontas as the name of the coal mined in any and all of the collieries in operation in the region. Indeed, the exaggerated character of the assertion of the complainants, that prior to 1895 they *used the trademark as [179] the licensees of the Improvement Company, is shown by the record. In August, 1885, Castner & Company, Limited, was under the contract the general tidewater coal agent, that is, such agent for all the mine owners in the Pocahontas region. Although thus representing the owners, this corporation, on the 25th of August, 1885, filed an application for the registry of a trademark, in which it was recited that Castner & Company, Limited, had adopted for its use as a trademark for coal the word "Pocahontas," and that the same had been continuously used by said corporation "since about January 1, 1885." This date, it will be remembered, was when the corporation referred to became the general tidewater coal agent for the producers of Pocahontas coal. In an affidavit deposing to the truth of the statements contained in the application, it was stated: "That said corporation (Castner & Co., Limited), has a right to the use of the trademark therein described; that no other person, firm, or corporation, has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as might be calculated to deceive."

The conflict between the claim of license made in the bill and these sworn assertions in the application to register a trademark requires no comment. The record, however, shows a further contradiction. Turning to

178 U. S.

Exhibit B, attached to the bill, which is the alleged assignment of trademark made in 1895 by the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company to Castner & Company, Limited, and under which complainants claim to be the owners of the trademark "Pocahontas," as applied to all coal, we find it recites that Castner & Company, Limited, had been appointed on March 26, 1895, the agents to sell all the output of coal of the mines of the Improvement Company, which coal "has become known under the trade name or mark, 'Pocahontas,' by adoption and continuous use thereof by the said corporation, the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company." Besides this, the document states that the assignor, the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, "did adopt, on or about the 1st day of July, 1882, as a trade name, or mark, the word 'Pocahontas' for [180] coal mined in a region or *field opened up and operated in Tazewell county, Virginia, in the year 1882, by the said corporation, the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, and which trade name, or mark, it continued to use thereafter in its coal-mining operations in said region, or field, from the date aforesaid, as the trade name or mark, for all coal mined and sold by it up to the present time."

Thus we have Castner & Company, Limited, becoming by contract an agent of the mine owners to sell their coal, putting it upon the market as Pocahontas coal, and dealing with it as such, yet filing a claim for a trademark by which it was sought to deprive the owners of the designation which appropriately belonged to their product. We find the bill verified by both complainants, one of whom made oath to the application for a trademark. In such bill it is asserted that at the time the trademark was applied for Castner & Company, Limited, were not the owners of the trademark, but were mere licensees of the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company.

And also it appears that, when in 1895 the complainants became the principal agents of certain of the mine owners, a monopoly of the name of "Pocahontas" as against all the mine owners was again sought to be obtained by taking a transfer of an alleged trade mark or name from the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company. The statements in the paper reciting such transfer being in irreconcilable conflict with the affidavit to the application for a trademark.

But putting out of mind these contradictions, it is manifest that, long prior to the purported assignment by the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company of the alleged trademark or tradename, by the acts of all the parties concerned in the production and marketing of the coal (including the Southwest Virginia Improvement Company, Castner & Company, Limited, and the complainants), the name "Pocahontas" indicated the region from which the coal in question came and the natural quality thereof, and applied indiscriminately to the product of all the mines in that region, producing that character of coal.

Although the facts which we have referred to make inevitable the foregoing deductions, nevertheless we state a few additional facts which make the situation, if possible, yet clearer.

*In the issue of October, 1891, of The Iron [181] Belt, already referred to, the region in question was termed the Pocahontas Flat Top coal region, and the product thereof was frequently referred to as Pocahontas coal or Pocahontas Flat Top coal. So, also, in the agreements made by complainants in March, 1895 (after the producers' combination had ceased to be operative), to act as sales agent for the product of certain of the mines, there is contained express recognition of the fact that the products of all the mines in that region, whether those products were inspected and controlled by the complainants or not, were usually designated and generally known as Pocahontas coal. Thus, in a stipulation numbered 3 in an agreement made by complainants with the Pulaski Iron Company on March 26, 1895, it is recited:

"It is agreed by the parties hereto that the parties of the second part may act as selling agents for other producers of Pocahontas coal, provided they shall become and continue to be the exclusive agents of such producers, and provided, further, that the aggregate amount of coal sold during any year for the party of the first part shall be less than 2.615 per cent of the total amount of Pocahontas coal sold by the parties of the second part during that year."

And in a supplementary agreement with the same company, dated December 28, 1895, it is said:

"That, until the expiration of the said contract of 26th March, 1895, according to the terms thereof, the party of the first part will sell or dispose of no Pocahontas coal whatever save through the agency of the parties of the second part.

"The parties of the second part hereby promise and agree that in the event of the sale or disposition of any Pocahontas coal by any producer for whom they may at any time be acting as sales agent, except through the agency of the said parties of the second part, that they will at once, on receipt of written notice of the particulars of such sale or disposition from the party of the first part, and upon its written request, forthwith terminate its agency for such producer," etc.

Again, in a supplement to The Daily Telegraph, a publication *at Bluefield, West Vir- [182] ginia, such supplement being entitled "Pocahontas Flat Top Coal Field Industrial Edition," the product of the region referred to is frequently spoken of as Pocahontas coal or Pocahontas coke, etc. And, as bearing upon the claim made in the bill, that the coal from this field had acquired a great reputation in the markets of the world by reason of the expenditures of time and money made by complainants "in inspecting, selecting, grading, and otherwise maintaining the superior quality and purity of the said coal," we call attention to a lengthy advertisement of the complainants contained in the publication just referred to, in which appeared no allusion to an inspection of the product, but wherein it was clearly recognized that the wide reputation of Pocahontas coal was the result of making known the inherent excellent quality of the article itself. The product of the mines represented by the complainants, among which mines was the Indian Ridge mine, now represented by the defendant, is frequently referred to in the card as Pocahontas coal. We excerpt portions of the card in the margin.†

{183} *Now, this advertisement of the complainants makes it clear that they were offering for sale, not the particular product of any one mine, but that the Pocahontas coal which they advertised was derived from numerous collieries within the Pocahontas region. Indeed, when it is considered that coal from the Indian Ridge mine, which the defendant now represents, was for a time represented by the complainants, and the coal therefrom sold by them as Pocahontas coal, the contention now advanced amounts but to this, that an agent can deprive the principal of his property by appropriating it to himself, and that complainants, because they were intrusted, first, in a subordinate capacity as tidewater agents by many of the mine owners, and then in a more enlarged capacity as general agent, with power to represent and act for the producers, have come into the position where they can virtually exercise a monopoly of sale as to the product of all

†CASTNER & CURRAN.

Are the General Agents for the sale of Pocahontas Flat Top Smokeless Semi-Bituminous Coal.

Having satisfied themselves by exhaustive analyses and tests that Pocahontas coal was unequaled as a steam fuel, they determined to leave nothing undone to demonstrate this fact and establish its reputation as second to no other coal, and, owing to their energetic efforts and judicious advertising, Pocahontas coal to-day enjoys the unique distinction of being the only coal in the world that has been officially indorsed by the governments of Great Britain and the United States. It is always used in testing the speed of government cruisers built on the Atlantic seaboard, the Secretary of the Navy having issued an order to this effect several years ago. The Cunard and White Star Steamship Companies use it exclusively on their eastern voyages, and with it have made all their great speed records of recent years. It is conceded to be the best fuel for locomotives and stationary engines, and its supremacy as a steam fuel is now established beyond dispute.

THE RECORD OF POCAHONTAS COAL IS THE MOST REMARKABLE IN THE HISTORY OF THE TRADE.

The first mine was opened in 1883, the shipments for that year amounting to only 75,000 tons.

In 1895 there were thirty-eight collieries in operation, whose output (including tonnage converted into coke) aggregated 3,500,000 tons.

Not only is this coal famous for the immense growth of its tonnage, but its reputation has also increased, until to-day it enjoys the distinction of having been officially indorsed as the best American steam coal by the United States Navy Department, the United States War Department, the British Minister at Washington, all the leading steamship, railroad, and manufacturing companies," etc.

178 U. S.

the mines in the Pocahontas region by compelling every mine owner in the Pocahontas field to offer no coal on the market unless the description be qualified, or unless the coal be confided for sale to the complainants.

It is insisted, however, that the appellate court should have complied with the request contained in the petition for a rehearing, and remanded the cause to permit further proofs in support of the material allegations of the bill. In Mast, F. & Co. v. Stover Mfg. Co. 177 U. S. 485, ante, 856, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 706, we considered the question as to the power of a circuit court of appeals, in reviewing the action of a circuit court in allowing a temporary injunction pendente lite, upon affidavits; to consider the case upon the merits and direct a final decree dismissing the bill. It was held that the propriety of the exercise of such a power must be determined from the circumstances of the particular case. And it was added:

*"If the showing made by the plaintiff be [184] incomplete; if the order for the injunction be reversed because injunction was not the proper remedy, or because under the particular circumstances of the case it should not have been granted; or if other relief be possible, notwithstanding the injunction be refused,—then, clearly, the case should be remanded for a full hearing upon pleadings and proofs. But if the bill be obviously devoid of equity upon its face, and such invalidity be incapable of remedy by amendment; or if the patent manifestly fail to disclose a patentable novelty in the invention,—we know of no reason why, to save a protracted litigation, the court may not order the bill to be dismissed."

As respects the case at bar, we are satisfied from the averments of the bill and the proof that no supplementary evidence could be offered which would alter the indubitable conclusion that no exclusive right to the trademark or tradename "Pocahontas" exists in the complainants. Further, we concur in the conclusion of the circuit court of appeals that the bill, upon its face, is devoid of equity. It is fairly to be inferred from the averments of the bill that it charges that, while acting as agents of the owner of one of the mines represented by the defendant, and of the owners of many other mines in the same region or field, there was applied by the complainants to the product of all the mines the appropriate designation Pocahontas coal, a description which applied to all the coal produced by the operators in that region, and which was correctly descriptive of such product. Whether, as claimed, the reputation of the coal was enhanced by careful inspection and grading by the complainants or their predecessors, is left conjectural by the record. But if it be conceded that the proof on this branch of the case was certain, it could operate no change of result. In inspecting and grading the coal, complainants and their predecessors were but agents of the mine owners. Certainly, the agent cannot be heard to say that he may appropriate to himself the name belonging to the product of his principal, or that he may affix the name to coal for his own purposes, and not for the benefit and advantage of his principal.

[185] Keeping in mind the circumstances under which the complainants *made whatever use they did make of the appellation "Pocahontas," as applied to coal produced from the Pocahontas coal region, we can perceive no just ground for the claim that there was unfair competition in trade, by reason of the acts averred to have been committed by the defendant. In substance, the alleged wrongful acts were averred to consist in the advertising in various forms by the defendant of the coal handled by him, as "Pocahontas" coal, when in fact such coal is a "very inferior and very impure coal." It was also averred, in the alternative, that such acts were done with the intent to cause the purchasers of said coal to believe "that the same was sold by your orators, or is of the quality of that sold by your orators." The effect of the advertising of the coal handled by the defendant, as "Pocahontas" coal, it is also asserted, is that purchasers of the coal dealt in by the defendant are liable to and will be deceived by such representations into purchasing such coal "as your orators' superior and specially selected coal." It is further averred that purchasers have in fact been so deceived, and that the "reputation of your orators' 'Pocahontas' coal has thereby been tainted." Leaving out of view the emphatic denial of the defendant, that the coal handled by him is in any wise inferior to that handled by the complainants, it is plain from the averments in the bill that the alleged inferiority in the coal is grounded upon the supposition of a want of careful inspection and grading. We do not think, however, that if it were a fact that it had become generally known and recognized by the public that the complainants, while in the employ of the coal producers of the Pocahontas coal field, inspected and graded the product of the mines in such manner as that thereby the reputation of the coal was enhanced, that the owners of mines producing Pocahontas coal thereby lost their right to designate their coal by its appropriate name, because of the possibility that some person, by reason of the coal being termed what it really was, might be induced to believe that it was still inspected by complainants.

As we have already said, in its final analysis, the right which the complainants assert amounts but to the contention that because at one time they were the agents of the owners of coal *mined from the Pocahontas field, and had sold the same as agents for the owners under its correct name, they thereby divested the owners of their property, and have acquired a monopoly of selling all the coal from the Pocahontas field under its appropriate name. We think there was no error in the decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and it is therefore affirmed.

HENRY P. CLARKE, Plff. in Err.,
v.

NANCY B. CLARKE, John H. Perry, Guardian ad Litem of Nancy B. Clarke, and Henry P. Clarke, as Administrator of the Personal Estate of Julia Clarke, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 186-195.)

Conversion of real property by will—effect of probate in other state—determination by court where land lies.

1. The equitable conversion of real property into personalty by will is a matter within the exclusive province of the courts of the state in which the land lies to determine, although the will was made and has been probated at the domicile of the testator in another state, where it is construed to work such conversion of the real property wherever situated, and it is immaterial that the executor has not assumed to make any conveyance of the property.
2. The local law of a state is taken by the Supreme Court of the United States as announced by the state court of last resort.
3. The interest of a minor devisee in land situated in another state cannot be determined in a suit to construe the will, in which a guardian ad litem is appointed for the infant, as neither the executor nor trustee under the will nor the guardian ad litem, nor any other person assuming to represent the minor in that state, has authority to act for the minor in respect to real estate beyond the jurisdiction of the court and situated in another state.
4. A decision by the courts of the domicile of a testatrix, that her will worked a conversion into personalty of all her real property, wherever situated, is not conclusive upon the courts of a sister state in respect to the effect of the will upon the title to real property in that state.

[No. 216.]

Argued April 9, 10, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Errors of the State of Connecticut to review a decision affirming a decree which refused to accept a probate decision in another state as conclusive upon the title to real property in that state. Affirmed.

See same case below, 70 Conn. 195, 39 Atl. 155, and 70 Conn. 483, 40 Atl. 111.

Statement by Mr. Justice White:

*This writ of error was procured for the purpose of obtaining the reversal of a judgment of the supreme court of errors of the state of Connecticut, which, as respected real estate situated in the state of Connecticut, refused to follow and apply a judgment of the supreme court of South Carolina interpreting and construing the will of Julia H. Clarke. [186]

NOTE.—As to effect of probate of will in another state—see Martin v. Stovall (Tenn.) 48 L. R. A. 130, and note.

As to equitable conversion of real property into personalty—see Cottman v. Grace (N. Y.) 3 L. R. A. 145, and note. See also note to Bullard v. Chandler (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 104.

The facts from which the legal questions presented arise are as follows:

Henry P. Clarke and Julia Hurd intermarried in New York in 1886, and immediately thereafter went to South Carolina, where they afterwards continuously resided. Mrs. Clarke died on February 10, 1894, owning real and personal property in South Carolina, and also real estate situated in Connecticut. Two daughters survived, one Nancy B., aged five years, the other, Julia, aged about two months.

[187] *A will and codicil executed by Mrs. Clarke were duly established in the court of probate for Richland county, in the state of South Carolina. The will contained the following provisions:

"Fifth. The rest, residue, and remainder of my estate, real and personal, of whatever description or wheresoever situated, I give, devise, and bequeath as follows: One half thereof to my husband, Henry P. Clarke, and one half thereof to my said husband in trust for my daughter, Nancy, until she becomes twenty-five years of age, and then to pay the whole sum over to her. But if she shall marry before that age with the consent and approval of her father, or, in case of his death, with the consent and approval of her then guardian, then I direct that one half of her share shall be paid to her upon her marriage and the other half when she becomes twenty-five.

"In case I shall leave surviving me one or more children beside my daughter Nancy, then I direct that the said rest, residue, and remainder of my estate shall be divided equally among my said husband and all of my children, share and share alike, my husband and my children sharing per capita, and the shares of said children to be held in trust as above provided in the case of Nancy as being the only one.

"And I give, devise, and bequeath the said rest, residue, and remainder as aforesaid, to each and to their heirs and each of them forever."

The infant daughter Julia died shortly after her mother, in the month of May, 1894, owning no property in Connecticut except such as had devolved on her under the will of her mother.

Henry P. Clarke, as executor of the last will and testament of his wife, Julia H. Clarke, and trustee of the estate of Nancy B. Clarke, his infant daughter, brought suit in June, 1895, against said Nancy B. Clarke, in the circuit court for the fifth judicial circuit of South Carolina, praying for the "judgment and direction of the court in regard to the true construction of said will, and especially the fifth and residuary paragraph thereof, and as to his powers and duties as such executor and trustee under said will in the premises and for such further relief as may be just and proper."

[188] *A guardian ad litem was appointed for the infant defendant, who duly answered, and, after hearing, the court decreed that the will of the testatrix, Julia H. Clarke, worked an equitable conversion into personalty at the time of her death of all her real estate of whatsoever description and wheresoever situated; that the plaintiff as executor should receive, administer, and account for the same as personalty; that he was, by the said will, authorized and empowered to sell and convey the same for the purpose of executing the will, and leave was given to apply for further orders and directions upon the foot of the decree. This judgment was, upon appeal, affirmed by the supreme court of South Carolina. 46 S. C. 230, 24 S. E. 202.

The controversy in the courts of Connecticut was commenced by the filing, in the probate court for the district of Bridgeport, of a petition on behalf of Henry P. Clarke as administrator of the estate of his deceased daughter Julia Clarke, he having been appointed such administrator by the proper court in Connecticut. In the petition it was recited that Julia had died intestate, leaving real estate in the district, and that divers persons claimed to be entitled to have the said real estate set apart and distributed to them, and the court was asked to hear the claims of said parties and ascertain to whom the estate should be apportioned. A guardian ad litem having been appointed by the court for Nancy B. Clarke, the application was heard, and a decree was entered finding that she was the sole heir and distributee of her deceased sister Julia. The Connecticut law, which devolved on Nancy the whole of the real estate of Julia, differed from the law of South Carolina, by which the estate of Julia, both real and personal, passed equally to the father and to Nancy the surviving sister.

Henry P. Clarke, individually, appealed from the decision of the probate court to the superior court of the county of Fairfield. That court filed its findings stating the facts concerning the controversy, and reserved the resulting questions of law to the supreme court of errors of the state, which court recommended that the decree of the probate court be affirmed. 70 Conn. 195, 39 Atl. 155. Thereupon the superior court of Fairfield county entered a decree in conformity to the mandate to it directed. *In the body of the [189] decree the court referred to the contention between the parties, and stated the one pertinent to the issue now before us, as follows:

"Upon the facts aforesaid the appellant claimed and contended that the decision and decree of the circuit court for the fifth judicial circuit of the state of South Carolina, being the court of common pleas and general sessions for Richland county, affirmed by the supreme court of said state (46 S. C. 230, 24 S. E. 202), in the case of Henry P. Clarke, executor and trustee, against Nancy B. Clarke, in its interpretation and construction of the will of the said Julia H. Clarke, to the effect that said will worked an equitable conversion into personalty at the time of her death of all the real estate of the testatrix, wherever situated, was binding and conclusive on the courts of this state in his favor in this proceeding, and that to hold otherwise would be to deny full faith and credit to the judicial proceedings and judgment of the state of South Carolina, and would be in contravention of section 1, article 4, of the Constitution of the United States."

An appeal was taken from the decree of the superior court. The supreme court of errors of Connecticut, although it remarked that the appeal was unnecessary, as its prior judgment had settled the controversy between the parties, yet entertained the appeal, and affirmed the decree below. 70 Conn. 483, 40 Atl. 111.

Mr. Le Roy F. Youmans argued the cause and, with Mr. John S. Verner, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Where a person occupies a representative capacity, and has a personal interest under the instrument giving him the representative character, he is bound by a judgment to which he was a party in either capacity.

Manigault v. Holmes, Bail. Eq. 283; Small v. Small, 16 S. C. 64; Verner v. Bookman, 53 S. C. 398, 31 S. E. 283; Morton v. Packwood, 3 La. Ann. 173; Denegre v. Denegre, 33 La. Ann. 689; Pouché v. Harison, 78 Ga. 410, 3 S. E. 330; Donifelser v. Heyl, 7 Kan. App. 606, 52 Pac. 468; Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 58 Am. Rep. 556, 10 Pac. 395; Stewart v. Montgomery, 23 Pa. 410; Kerrison v. Stewart, 93 U. S. 155, 23 L. ed. 843; Corcoran v. Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. 94 U. S. 741, 24 L. ed. 190.

In South Carolina a bill for the distribution of an infant's estate may proceed without making an administrator of the infant a party.

Markley v. Singletary, 11 Rich. Eq. 393.

Where the judgment is conclusive between the parties in the state where it was rendered, it is equally so in every other state and court in the United States.

Christinas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290, 18 L. ed. 475.

The will being the will of a South Carolinian, and all the beneficiaries under the residuary clause being domiciled in that state, we submit that the courts of that state, which assumed jurisdiction, had jurisdiction of the parties and the question as to meaning of that will, although it indirectly affected lands outside of that state.

Massie v. Watts, 6 Cranch, 160, 3 L. ed. 185; Kildare v. Eustace, 1 Vern. 419; Toller v. Carteret, 2 Vern. 494; Penn v. Baltimore, 1 Ves. Sr. 444.

It has been held that a suit for specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of lands proceeds in personam, and may be maintained in any court of equity which has jurisdiction of the parties, even if the land lies in another state or foreign country.

Brown v. Desmond, 100 Mass. 269.

The law of the domicile governs in the interpretation of wills.

Story, Conf. Laws, §§ 479a, 479c; Van Stenwyck v. Washburn, 59 Wis. 510, 17 N. W. 289; Harrison v. Nixon, 9 Pet. 484, 9 L. ed. 202; Trotter v. Trotter, 4 Bligh N. R. 502; Chamberlain v. Napier, L. R. 15 Ch. Div. 614; Caruthers v. Corbin, 38 Ga. 86; Stoff v. McGinn, 178 Ill. 46, 52 N. E. 1048; Brown v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 277, 6 S. W. 869, 7 S. W. 648; Black, Judg. § 922.

Actions or proceedings to set aside wills or test their validity are generally proceedings in rem, while suits for their construction are in personam.

Freeman, Judg. § 608; Brown v. Brown, 86 Tenn. 277, 6 S. W. 869, 7 S. W. 640; Freeman v. Alderson, 119 U. S. 187, 30 L. ed. 373, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165.

Mr. S. F. Phillips also argued the cause and, with Mr. F. D. McKenney, filed a further brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Le Roy F. Youmans also filed a separate brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John H. Perry argued the cause and, with Mr. Winthrop H. Perry, filed a brief for defendants in error:

The courts of one state will not recognize the rights of courts in other states to affect directly the title to real estate in the former. The most that can be done is to allow foreign courts having jurisdiction of the parties to compel conveyances by the owner, and recognize as valid title so acquired.

Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Postal Teleg. Co. 55 Conn. 334, 11 Atl. 184.

The law of the domicile has no efficacy when the subject is real estate.

Lamar v. Scott, 3 Strobb. L. 562; Beall v. Lowndes, 4 S. C. N. S. 258; Abrams v. Moseley, 7 S. C. N. S. 150; Cureton v. Mills, 13 S. C. 409, 36 Am. Rep. 700.

The judgment of the South Carolina court, so far as it was intended to affect Connecticut land by determining that the will lawfully directed and empowered the executor to sell and convert that land, was beyond the power of the South Carolina court to render, because it was confessedly beyond its power to enforce.

Johnson v. Mallory, 74 Cal. 430, 16 Pac. 228; Dacey, Conf. Laws (1896) pp. 215, 365.

The element of consent would have been necessary to bind the parties as to the Connecticut land, and the infant could not give any such consent.

Whitesides v. Barber, 24 S. C. 373.

And even if Nancy Clarke could have lawfully consented to the action taken, the Connecticut court might properly refuse to be bound thereby because of the considerations of public policy involved.

Springer v. Shavender, 118 N. C. 33, 23 S. E. 976; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 538, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269.

Mr. Justice White, after making the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court:

The supreme court of errors of Connecticut held that the will of Julia H. Clarke, wife of the plaintiff in error, did not at the time of her death work an equitable conversion into personalty *of the real estate situated in the state of Connecticut, and, consequently, that though personal property might be governed by the law of the domicile, real estate within Connecticut was controlled by the law of Connecticut, and hence that Nancy B. Clarke, as surviving sister of Julia Clarke, inherited, under the laws of Connecticut, to the exclusion of the father, the interest of the deceased sister Julia in the real estate in Connecticut which had passed to Julia by the will of her mother. It is assigned as error that in so deciding the Connecticut court refused full faith and credit to the decree of the courts of South Carolina, wherein it was adjudged that the will of Mrs. Clarke had the effect of converting her real estate, wherever situated, into personalty; the deduction being that as under the South Carolina decision the real estate situated in Connecticut became personal property, it was the duty of the Connecticut court to have decided that the land passed by the law of South Carolina and not according to the law of Connecticut, and hence, that instead of treating the daughter Nancy as the owner of the whole of the real estate, it should have recognized the father as having a half interest therein. And the correctness of this proposition is really the only question which the assignment of errors presents for our decision.

The argument at bar has taken a wide range, and the various legal principles by which it was deemed that a solution of the controversy might be facilitated have been supported by a very elaborate reference to authority. We do not deem it necessary, however, to critically review the cases cited and the observations of text writers which were relied on in argument, nor to analyze all the contentions which it is asserted those authorities sustain. We say this, because, in our opinion, the matter at issue may be disposed of by the application of two well-defined and elementary legal principles.

It is a doctrine firmly established that the law of a state in which land is situated controls and governs its transmission by will or its passage in case of intestacy. This familiar rule has been frequently declared by this court, a recent statement thereof being contained in the opinion delivered in De Vaughn v. Hutchinson, 165 U. S. 566, 41 L. ed. 827, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, where the court said (p. 570, L. ed. p. 829, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 462):

[191] "It is a principle firmly established that to the law of the state in which the land is situated we must look for the rules which govern its descent, alienation, and transfer, and for the effect and construction of wills and other conveyances. United States v. Crosby, 7 Cranch, 115, 3 L. ed. 287; Clark v. Graham, 6 Wheat. 577, 5 L. ed. 334; McGoon v. Scales, 9 Wall. 23, 19 L. ed. 545; Brine v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 96 U. S. 627, 24 L. ed. 858.*

Now, in the case at bar, the courts of Connecticut, construing the will of Mrs. Clarke, have declared that, by the law of Connecticut, land situated in that state, owned by Mrs. Clarke at her decease, continued to be, after her death, real estate for the purpose of devolution of title thereto. The proposition relied on, therefore, is this, although the court of last resort of Connecticut (declaring the law of that state) has held that the real estate in question had not become personal property by virtue of the will of Mrs. Clarke, nevertheless it should have decided to the contrary, because a court of South Carolina had so decreed. This, however, is but to argue that the law declared by the South Carolina court should control the passage by will of land in Connecticut, and therefore is equivalent to denying the correctness of the elementary proposition that the law of Connecticut where the real estate is situated governed in such a case. It is conceded that had the will been presented to the courts of Connecticut in the first instance and rights been asserted under it, that the operative force of its provisions upon real estate in Connecticut would have been within the control of such courts. But it is said a different rule must be applied where the will has been presented to a South Carolina court and a construction has been there given to it; for, in such a case, not the will, but the decree of the South Carolina court construing the will, is the measure of the rights of the parties as to real estate in Connecticut. The proposition, when truly comprehended, amounts but to the contention that the laws of the respective states controlling the transmission of real property by will, or in case of intestacy, are operative only so long as there does not exist in a foreign jurisdiction a judgment or decree which in legal effect has changed the law of the situs of the real estate. This is but to contend that what cannot be *done directly can be accomplished by indi- [192] rection, and that the fundamental principle which gives to a sovereignty an exclusive jurisdiction over the land within its borders is in legal effect dependent upon the nonexistence of a decree of a court of another sovereignty determining the status of such land. Manifestly, however, an authority cannot be said to be exclusive, or even to exist at all, where its exercise may be thus frustrated at any time. These conclusions are not escaped by saying that it is not the law of Connecticut which conflicts with the interpretation of the will adopted by the South Carolina court, but the decision of the court of Connecticut which does so. In this forum, the local law of Connecticut as to real estate is the law of that state as announced by the court of last resort of that state.

As correctly observed in the course of the opinion delivered by the supreme court of errors of Connecticut, the question as to the operative effect of the will of Mrs. Clarke, upon the status of land situated in Connecticut, was one directly involving the mode of passing title to lands in that state. This resulted from the fact that in the will worked a conversion into personalty immediately upon the death of Mrs. Clarke, as contended, it necessarily vested her executor with authority at once to sell and convey the real estate in Connecticut by a deed sufficient, under the laws of that state, to transfer title to real estate—a power which was held by the courts of Connecticut not to have been conferred. Had the executor assumed to exercise such a power, however, the validity or invalidity of a conveyance thus executed would have been one exclusively for the courts of Connecticut to determine, just as would have been the question of the sufficiency of the will to vest title. Such being the case, there is no basis for the contention that it was not the exclusive province of the courts of Connecticut to determine, prior to the execution of such a conveyance, whether or not the power to do so existed.

[193] As further observed by the Connecticut court, whether Mr. Clarke, as executor and trustee under the will of his wife, had any power, duty, or estate with respect to lands situated in Connecticut, depended upon the laws of that state. The courts of *the domicile of Mrs. Clarke could properly be called upon to construe her will so far as it affected property which was within or might properly come under the jurisdiction of those tribunals. If, however, by the law as enforced in Connecticut, land in Connecticut owned by Mrs. Clarke at her decease was real estate for all purposes, despite the provisions contained in her will, that land was a subject-matter not directly amenable to the jurisdiction of the courts of another state, however much those courts might indirectly affect and operate upon it in controversies where the court, by reason of its jurisdiction over persons and the nature of the controversy, might coerce the execution of a conveyance of or other instrument encumbering such land.

And the cogency of the reasons just given is further demonstrated by considering the case from another, though somewhat similar, aspect. The decree of the South Carolina court, which, it is contended, had the effect of converting real estate situated in Connecticut into personal property, was not one rendered between persons who were sui juris. Nancy B. Clarke, one of the parties to the suit in South Carolina, and whom the Connecticut court has held inherited, to the exclusion of the father, under the laws of Connecticut, the whole of the real estate belonging to her sister, was a minor. She was therefore incompetent, in the proceedings in South Carolina, to stand in judgment for the purpose of depriving herself of the rights which belonged to her under the law of Connecticut as to the real estate within that state. Neither the executor nor trustee under the will, nor the guardian ad litem, nor any other person assuming to represent the minor in South Carolina, had authority to act for her quoad her interest in real estate beyond the jurisdiction of the South Carolina court, and which was situated in Connecticut.

It cannot be doubted that the courts of a state where real estate is situated have the exclusive right to appoint a guardian of a nonresident minor, and vest in such guardian the exclusive control and management of land belonging to said minor, situated within the state. This court had occasion to consider and pass upon this doctrine in the case of Hoyt v. Sprague, 103 U. S. 613, 26 L. ed. 585, and, in the course of the opinion, it was said (p. 631, L. ed. p. 592):

[194] *"One of the ordinary rules of comity exercised by some European states is to acknowledge the authority and power of foreign guardians, that is, guardians of minors and others appointed under the laws of their domicile in other states. But this rule of comity does not prevail to the same extent in England and the United States. In regard to real estate it is entirely disallowed, and is rarely admitted in regard to personal property. Justice Story, speaking of a decision which favored the extraterritorial power of a guardian in reference to personal property, says: 'It has certainly not received any sanction in America, in the states acting under the jurisprudence of the common law. The rights and powers of guardians are considered as strictly local; and not as entitling them to exercise any authority over the person or personal property or their wards in other states, upon the same general reasoning and policy which have circumscribed the rights and authorities of executors and administrators.' Story, Conf. L. §§ 499, 504, 504a. And see Whart. Conf. L. 2d ed. §§ 259-268; 3 Burge, Colonial & Foreign Laws, 1011. And some of those foreign jurists who contend most strongly for the general application of the ward's lex domicilii admit that, when it comes to the alienation of foreign assets, an exception is to be made in favor of the jurisdiction within which the property is situate, for the reason that this concerns the ward's property, and not his person. Whart. Conf. L. 2d ed. §§ 267, 268."

Of what efficacy, however, would be the power of one state to control the administration, through its own courts, of real estate within the state, belonging to minors, without regard to the domicile of the minor, if all such real estate could be disposed of and the administration thereof be controlled by the decree of the court of another state. Here, again, the argument relied on must rest upon the false assumption that an exclusive power which confessedly exists in the courts of one jurisdiction may be wholly destroyed or rendered nugatory by the action of the courts of another jurisdiction in whom is vested no authority whatever on the subject. It results that no person before the South Carolina court, assuming to speak for the estate of Nancy B. Clarke, represented any real property of said Nancy which *was not with-[195] in the territorial jurisdiction of South Carolina, and the decree, therefore, could not affect land in Connecticut, an interest which was not before the court.

When, therefore, Henry P. Clarke, as administrator, appointed in Connecticut, of the estate of his deceased daughter, Julia Clarke, applied to the Connecticut probate court to determine who was entitled to the "real estate" owned by the intestate, it was the province of the Connecticut court to decide such question solely with reference to the law of Connecticut. Its power in this regard was not limited by the fact that in order to determine who owned the real estate, it was necessary for the court to construe the will of the mother of the intestate, and to determine what effect it had upon the status of the real estate under the law of Connecticut. Having a right to decide these questions, it was not constrained to adopt the construction of the will which had been announced by the court of South Carolina. From these conclusions, it follows that because the court of Connecticut applied the law of that state in determining the devolution of title to real estate there situated, thereby no violation of the constitutional requirement that full faith and credit must be given in one state to the judgments and decrees of the courts of another state was brought about, as the decree of the South Carolina court, in the particular under consideration, was not entitled to be followed by the courts of Connecticut, by reason of a want of jurisdiction in the court of South Carolina over the particular subject-matter which was sought to be concluded in Connecticut by such decree. Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. 457, 21 L. ed. 897; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 538, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269; Grover & B. Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 137 U. S. 287, 34 L. ed. 670, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 92; Simmons v. Saul, 138 U. S. 439, 34 L. ed. 1054, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 35 L. ed. 464, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 773; Cooper v. Newell, 173 U. S. 555, 43 L. ed. 808, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 506.

Judgment affirmed.

[196]*WILLIAM C. BROWNING, et al., Plffs. in Err. & Appts.,
v.

CHARLES H. DEFORD.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 196-205.)

Chattel mortgage—mortgagee's knowledge of mortgagor's fraud as to creditors—validity of mortgage as against attachment by defrauded vendor.

1. Proof that the agent of the mortgagees of chattels was a lawyer of long standing and considerable practice, and that a debt to him-

NOTE.—Effect of election of remedies in case of fraudulent purchase.

An action to enforce a contract procured by fraud is not a bar to a subsequent action for the alleged fraud, as the remedies are consistent and concurrent, both proceeding upon the theory of an affirmation of the contract. Bowen v. Mandeville, 95 N. Y. 237; Wanzer v. DeBaun, 1 E. D. Smith, 261; Whittier v. Collins, 15 R. I. 90, 23 Atl. 47; Morgan v. Skidmore, 55 Barb. 263.

It is otherwise as to any subsequent action which attacks the conclusiveness of the contract. Lehman v. Van Winkle, 92 Ala. 443, 8 So. 870; Lloyd v. Brewster, 4 Paige, 537, 27 Am. Dec. 83; Acer v. Hotchkiss, 97 N. Y. 395; Bank of Beloit v. Beale, 34 N. Y. 473; Bryan-Brown Shoe Co. v. Block, 52 Ark. 458, 12 S. W. 1073; Bulkley v. Morgan, 46 Conn. 393; Bach v. Tuch, 126 N. Y. 53, 26 N. E. 1019; Sanger v. Wood, 3 Johns. Ch. 416; Horner v. Boyden, 27 Ill. App. 573; Seavey v. Potter, 121 Mass. 297.

But an action on a contract, brought without knowledge of fraud, will not prevent a subsequent action to disaffirm the contract for fraud. Hays v. Midas, 104 N. Y. 602, 10 N. E. 141; Equitable Co-Operative Foundry Co. v. Hersee, 103 N. Y. 25, 9 N. E. 487.

On the same principle, an action to recover property on the ground that it was obtained self which had been already partially paid was secured by the mortgage, and that he was the son-in-law of the head of the firm which gave the mortgage, and who had previously given deeds to members of his family, one of them being to the lawyer's wife, which deeds had been long withheld from record, and that the mortgagors were merchants, constantly buying and replenishing their stock, and standing in need of credit, is sufficient to go to the jury on the question of his connection with the scheme of the mortgagors to execute the mortgage for the purpose of defrauding their unsecured creditors.

2. A chattel mortgage taken by an antecedent creditor who knows that the debtor has procured the goods fraudulently cannot be sustained against defrauded vendors of the property, whether they elect to rescind the sale and replevin the goods or to sue for the purchase price and attach the goods.

[No. 245.]

Argued April 16, 17, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to and APPEAL from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma to review a decision affirming a judgment for defendant in an action of trover by chattel mortgagees. Affirmed.

See same case below (Okla.) 60 Pac. 534.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

*This was an action in the nature of trover [196] by the surviving partners of the firm of Henry W. King & Company, and four other creditors, as chattel mortgagees, against Charles H. DeFord, sheriff of Oklahoma county, to recover the value of a stock of goods seized by the defendant and sold under writs of attachment issued against the property of the firm of W. F. Wolfe & Son, in suits instituted by general creditors of that firm. Defendant justified under these writs of by fraud will prevent a subsequent action on the contract of sale. Moller v. Tuska, 87 N. Y. 166; Morris v. Rexford, 18 N. Y. 552; Thompson v. Fuller, 28 N. Y. S. R. 4, 8 N. Y. Supp. 62.

An attachment to enforce a claim on contract, made with full knowledge of fraud therein, is a conclusive election to affirm the contract. Conrow v. Little, 115 N. Y. 387, 5 L. R. A. 693, 22 N. E. 346; Benedict v. National Bank of the Commonwealth, 4 Daly, 171; Wright v. Pierce, 4 Hun, 351; Lloyd v. Brewster, 4 Paige, 537, 27 Am. Dec. 83; Sickman v. Abernathy, 13 Colo. 174, 23 Pac. 447; Butler v. Hildreth, 5 Met. 49; Bulkley v. Morgan, 46 Conn. 393.

For a full review of the cases above cited and others bearing on this question, see note to Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. v. Scheldler (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 89.

A vendor by electing to sue for the contract price, with knowledge of the fraud in the sale, waives his right to rescind the contract and recover the property sold. First Nat. Bank v. McKinney, 47 Neb. 149, 66 N. W. 280.

The commencement of a suit for the purchase price is a binding election to affirm the sale, notwithstanding a voluntary nonsuit is taken. Lowenstein v. Glass, 48 La. Ann. 1422, 20 So. 890.

And the original petition in an action to recover the purchase price cannot be amended attachment, and alleged that the indebtedness of each of the attaching plaintiffs was procured by W. F. Wolfe & Son by means of false and fraudulent representations as to their financial standing and credit; that the mortgage was executed by such firm in pursuance of a conspiracy between the firm and the mortgage creditors, who had knowledge of the fraudulent acts of the firm, and knew that the mortgage was given with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud their general creditors; that the mortgage was neither given nor accepted in good faith for the purpose of securing a bona fide indebtedness; but that the indebtedness was in part, if not wholly, false, fictitious, and trumped up to suit the occasion, and that the real intent of Wolfe & Son in executing the mortgage was to place their property beyond the reach of their creditors.

[197] The case was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant, which was affirmed by the *supreme court of the territory; whereupon plaintiffs brought the case to this court both by writ of error and appeal. Another suit in attachment brought by E. S. Jaffray & Co. against Wolfe & Son, in which the mortgage was set up as a defense and the facts were the same, so as to set out an election to avoid the sale for fraud, and to recover the goods. Wachsmuth v. Sims (Tex. Civ. App.) 32 S. W. 821.

In order to bind himself by his election to sue for the contract price, the vendor must know at the time whether the goods can be found and identified, or be put upon notice or inquiry which, if prosecuted with reasonable diligence, will lead to such knowledge. White v. Beal & F. Grocer Co. 65 Ark. 278, 45 S. W. 1060.

An action for the purchase price, brought without knowledge of the fraud, does not interfere with the vendor's right to rescind immediately upon discovery of the fraud, and to bring an action in replevin to recover possession of the property. Rochester Distilling Co. v. Devendorf, 72 Hun, 428, 25 N. Y. Supp. 200.

And the prosecution of a suit for the purchase price by a vendor, without knowledge of the fraud, does not bar an action to recover damages for the fraud. Albany Hardware & Iron Co. v. Day, 11 App. Div. 230, 42 N. Y. Supp. 971.

Nor need the judgment recovered in the former suit be discharged before the second may be maintained. Ibid.

The pendency of an action in replevin instituted by the vendor against the assignee or transferee of the fraudulent purchaser forms a complete defense to an action against the purchaser himself to recover the purchase price. Seeman v. Bandler, 26 Misc. 372, 56 N. Y. Supp. 210.

But an action of replevin brought by a vendor against the chattel mortgagee of a portion of the property sold, which was settled, with the vendee's consent, for a stipulated sum, is not such an election of remedies as will bar a suit for the fraudulent representations inducing the sale, in which the amount unpaid on the original contract is claimed as damages. Shaut v. Schauoth, 46 App. Div. 450, 61 N. Y. Supp. 767.

An action for the recovery of damages for obtaining goods under false pretenses with the preconceived design not to pay for them is not inconsistent with a replevin action previously also resulted in a judgment that the mortgage was fraudulent. Jaffray v. Wolfe, 4 Okla. 303, 47 Pac. 496.

Mr. John W. Shartel argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error and appellants.

Mr. Arthur A. Birney argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error and appellee:

All papers executed in pursuance of an original design, contemplated and determined upon in the beginning, are in law deemed to constitute one transaction, and are construed together, whether made on the same day or on different days. Whether the instruments constitute one transaction is a question for the jury.

Bump, Fraud. Convey. § 339.

If the act or declaration is so connected with the main fact under consideration as to explain its character, further its object, or to form, in conjunction with it, one continuous transaction, the evidence is admissible without regard to the time when the act was done or the declaration was made.

Bump, Fraud. Convey. 590, 594, 595; Cooke v. Cooke, 43 Md. 522.

An antecedent creditor who knows that brought. Welch v. Seligman, 72 Hun, 138, 25 N. Y. Supp. 363.

And the filing of a complaint for the rescission of a contract on the ground of fraud is not such a conclusive election of remedy as to preclude an abandonment of that cause of action by amending the complaint so as to demand damages on account of the same fraud. Cohon v. Fisher, 146 Ind. 583, 36 L. R. A. 193, 44 N. E. 664, 45 N. E. 787; Nysewander v. Lowman, 124 Ind. 584, 24 N. E. 355.

See, however, Stuart v. Hayden, 169 U. S. 1, 42 L. ed. 639, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 274, in which an action to recover damages for fraudulent misrepresentations as to the value of property at the time of a trade was held to be in effect an action for part of the purchase price, and, while pending, to constitute an election to ratify the trade, so as to preclude the remedy by rescission.

An antecedent creditor who knows that his debtor procured goods and merchandise by fraudulent means cannot, by chattel mortgage, secure a lien on such fraudulently procured goods adverse to the innocent vendors who have attached the property, having elected to waive the tort and to bring an action to recover the value of the goods. Wafer v. Harvey County Bank, 46 Kan. 597, 26 Pac. 1032; Browning v. Deford.

To the contrary is Stokes v. Burns, 132 Mo. 214, 33 S. W. 460, in which a vendor by attaching the property is held to waive the fraud in the sale, and to have no standing to avoid a trust deed executed by the vendees to secure a bona fide indebtedness, notwithstanding the knowledge of the beneficiaries that the deed was executed with the intention to defraud the vendees' other creditors.

So, an attachment of goods in an action for the purchase price thereof is based on an affirmation of the contract, so as to waive any fraud in purchase as between the seller and a subsequent purchaser who obtained the goods in payment of an honest debt, although with knowledge of the fraud by the original purchaser. Gray v. St. John, 35 Ill. 222.

his debtor procured goods by fraudulent means cannot by a chattel mortgage secure a lien upon such goods adverse to the innocent vendor thereof.

Stearns v. Gage, 79 N. Y. 102; Wafer v. Harvey County Bank, 46 Kan. 597, 26 Pac. 1032.

Of the three things which must occur to protect the title of the purchaser, the first is: He must buy without notice of the bad intent on the part of the vendor.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 287.

The decisions of this court are conclusive upon this point.

Blennersssett v. Sherman, 105 U. S. 100, 26 L. ed. 1080; Kempner v. Churchill, 8 Wall. 362, 19 L. ed. 461; Clements v. Moore, 6 Wall. 312, sub nom. Clements v. Nicholson, 18 L. ed. 788.

[197] *Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a contest between mortgage creditors suing as plaintiffs and attaching creditors representing the defendant sheriff.

The facts are that on December 15, 1890, the firm of W. F. Wolfe & Son, retail merchants, and conducting a store at Oklahoma city, executed a joint chattel mortgage to one Vance and several other creditors for whom he acted, and by whom he was authorized to take any security he could get, of their stock of goods at Oklahoma city, and another stock at the city of Guthrie, not involved in this case. The mortgagees immediately took possession of the mortgaged property by one Harvey, their agent, and a brother-in-law of Vance, who proceeded to take an inventory. Shortly after the execution of the mortgage, a number of other creditors brought suits in attachment against Wolfe & Son, and through the defendant De Ford, sheriff of Oklahoma county, levied upon the goods, and dispossessed the mortgagees, who brought suits for the conversion of the property. These suits were subsequently consolidated into two cases, in one of which all the mortgage creditors appear as plaintiffs, and the sheriff of Oklahoma county as defendant. The defense was that the goods were fraudulently obtained of the attaching creditors by false representations made by W. F. Wolfe & Son

[198] as to their assets, and that *Vance, one of the mortgage creditors, acting for himself and as agent and attorney for the others, not only had full knowledge that such goods were wrongfully and fraudulently obtained, but actively participated in obtaining the same, and that he had full knowledge that the mortgage was executed by Wolfe & Son for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding their creditors, and actively participated in such fraudulent device. In other words, in brief, that the goods were purchased in the pursuance of a conspiracy that when a large stock had been obtained by Wolfe & Son by means of fraudulent statements as to their assets, certain deeds of their real estate which had been previously made, but which had remained unrecorded, should be placed of record, and the goods and merchandise obtained upon such fraudulent statements should be mortgaged to the plaintiffs in satisfaction of their claims.

178 U. S.

In this connection the court charged the jury that, "in order to invalidate the chattel mortgage, it is not enough for the defendant to show simply that the firm of W. F. Wolfe & Son fraudulently purchased goods of the attaching creditors, but it must also appear from the evidence that the plaintiffs in this case were parties to such fraud; that they were either active participants in such fraud, or that they aided or abetted in such fraud, or that said plaintiffs at the time they took said mortgage actually knew that Wolfe & Son had fraudulently incurred a liability and debt for the goods or a portion thereof described in the chattel mortgage."

Though there are many assignments of error, there are really but two which require our consideration: First, that there was no evidence of knowledge on the part of Vance, who acted for the mortgage creditors, of the fraudulent character of the purchases made by Wolfe & Son of the attaching creditors; second, that the court erred in holding the mortgagees liable simply upon proof that the mortgage was taken with knowledge of such fraudulent representations.

1. To make out their case the attaching creditors were bound to show, first, that the goods were fraudulently purchased, and, second, that the mortgagees, or Vance, their agent, was a party to or cognizant of such frauds. There was ample evidence that *the [199] goods were fraudulently purchased. The firm of W. F. Wolfe & Son was composed of William F. Wolfe, the father, and Louis H. Wolfe, the son. On January 5, 1887, Louis H. Wolfe dede to his wife Winifred, in consideration of love and affection, a certain lot of land, No. 15, in Topeka, Kansas, by deed, which was not recorded until December 17, 1890. On July 26, 1890, William F. Wolfe and his wife Georgia H. dede to Laura V. Vance, their daughter, and the wife of A. H. Vance, another lot in the city of Topeka, No. 20, in consideration of the sum of $6,500, and subject to a mortgage of $4,000. This deed was also filed for record December 17, 1890. On September 8, Georgia H. Wolfe, wife of William F. Wolfe, made application to the townsite trustees of Oklahoma city for a deed to four lots of land in that city, being the site of their business house, stating that she had purchased the same on May 17, 1890, of Louis H. Wolfe, her son, and William F. Wolfe, her husband, who had given her a quitclaim deed to the same. This deed was also recorded the same day (December 17). Notwithstanding these deeds, the Wolfes, in their statement of assets furnished the attaching creditors, included all this real estate, putting an estimate of $20,000 upon that in Topeka and $12,000 upon that in Oklahoma. This amount added to the value of the Oklahoma store stock $17,000 and the Guthrie store stock $35,000, made their total assets $84,000, less $27,000 liabilities, net assets $57,000. Sundry letters were produced from the firm, written during the summer and fall of 1890 to several of the attaching creditors, in which this real estate was included as a part of their assets, notwithstanding that most of it had already been conveyed to different members of their families. These facts, which were not denied, and which were scarcely susceptible of denial, were fully established, and were clearly sufficient to lay before the jury as to the fraudulent character of the purchases of the attaching creditors.

1035

The facts that Vance was a lawyer of long standing and considerable practice, and, as already stated, was the son-in-law of William F. Wolfe; that one of the deeds was to his wife, and was withheld from record for several months, and until a day or two after the chattel mortgage was made; that he could [200] *scarcely have failed to know that other deeds had been made to the wives of William F. and Louis H. Wolfe, which were also withheld from record; that these men were merchants who were constantly buying and replenishing their stock and stood in need of credit; and that he was himself one of the creditors secured by the mortgage—for a debt, too, which had been already partially paid—were, we think, sufficient evidence to open to the jury the question of his connection with the scheme of Wolfe & Son to execute this mortgage for the purpose of defrauding their unsecured creditors. The very fact that one of these deeds was withheld from record for three years and a half, another for eight months, and another for about six months was, unexplained, sufficient to indicate that they were withheld for no good purpose. While evidence was lacking of a direct participation by Vance in these plans to defraud the creditors of Wolfe & Son, his intimate connection with the family and the fact that the mortgage was given, partially at least, to secure him for his liability as surety for the firm, was not too remote to justify the court in laying the whole matter of his connection with the fraudulent scheme before the jury, and as he was acting as agent and attorney for the other secured creditors, they were equally chargeable with himself.

2. Upon the second point, the jury were instructed, in substance, that to defeat the mortgage it was necessary for the attaching creditors to show that Wolfe & Son were guilty of fraud in contracting the debts, to satisfy which the writs of attachment were levied; and also to show that the mortgagees were parties to such fraud; or that at the time they took the mortgage they knew that Wolfe & Son had fraudulently incurred a liability for the goods described in the mortgage. The objection of the plaintiffs to this instruction is stated in their fourth assignment of error, that the court “erred in holding, as a principle of law, that where goods have been fraudulently obtained by means of false representations as to the financial standing of a debtor, and where such creditors elect to sue for the purchase price of such goods, and proceed by the attachment of the property claimed to belong to the debtor, that a party previously taking a mortgage on [201] such goods to secure an *antecedent debt, with knowledge of such false representations, must surrender such property to such attachment creditors.”

The theory of the plaintiff is that the attaching creditors had an election of remedies—either to rescind the sale and replevy the goods, in which case it would have been sufficient as against the mortgagees to prove that they took the mortgage with the knowledge that the goods had been fraudulently purchased, and that the mortgagors had no title to them; or to sue for the purchase money and thereby affirm the sale, and to attach the goods as the property of the mortgagors, in which case the mortgagees would stand only as preferred creditors, and their mortgage would be valid, notwithstanding their knowledge that the goods had been fraudulently purchased.

It is entirely true that, upon being satisfied that the goods had been purchased upon fraudulent representations, the attaching creditors had an election of remedies. They might rescind the sale and replevy the goods, or they might affirm the sale, sue for the purchase price, and attach the goods upon the ground that they had been fraudulently purchased. Had it not been for the mortgage, it would only have been necessary for the attaching creditors to show that the debts were fraudulently contracted, to sustain their attachment; but in order to attack the mortgage, and to show that they had a title superior to that of the mortgage creditors, it was necessary to go further, and prove that the mortgage was fraudulent. This might be done by evidence that the mortgage was taken in pursuance of a scheme to defraud the general creditors, or that the mortgagees took their security with the knowledge that it covered goods which had been purchased upon fraudulent representations, and that the purchases were made under such circumstances as would entitle the vendors to rescind the sale and reclaim the goods. They chose, it is true, to treat the sale as valid, sue for the purchase price, and thereby affirm the title of the vendees, but they did not thereby affirm the mortgage. Their approbation went no farther than the sale from themselves to Wolfe & Son. Their reprobation went to the mortgage, and to that alone. There was, indeed, an election of remedies, and having made an election the attaching creditors *were bound thereby. [202] But such election went no farther than to affirm the sale, under which they were at liberty to attach the goods as still belonging to the vendees. They were bound no farther by the fraudulent mortgage of such goods than they would have been by the fraudulent assignment of them, and no class of cases is more common than that of attachments sued out for goods which are claimed to have been fraudulently assigned.

The instruction complained of is fully supported by the recent case in the supreme court of Kansas of Wafer v. Harvey County Bank, 46 Kan. 597, 26 Pac. 1032, which holds directly that an antecedent creditor, who knows that his debtor procured goods and merchandise by fraudulent means, cannot by a chattel mortgage secure a lien upon such fraudulently procured goods, adverse to the innocent vendors of such goods. This was also an action by a chattel mortgagee against the sheriff who had seized under attachments a stock of goods belonging to the attachment debtor. The distinction relied upon by the plaintiffs in this case was noticed in that, the court remarking that these goods having been obtained from the attaching creditors by fraudulent means, the debtor acquired no title to them, and the attaching creditors would be justified in retaking the goods, or they could waive the tort and bring an action for their value, in which case knowledge of the plaintiffs, that the goods had been fraudulently obtained, did not put them in a position of bona fide purchasers, or enable them to set up the mortgage against attaching creditors.

[203] In the cases relied upon by the plaintiff, but one (Stokes v. Burns, 132 Mo. 214, 33 S. W. 460) is in point. In that case it was held that where defendants procured goods by fraud, and transferred the same in trust for a bank, to secure a bona fide indebtedness, the mere knowledge of the bank that the goods were so procured, and that the defendants intended to defraud their other creditors, is not sufficient to avoid the trust deed at the suit of a creditor, who did not seek to disaffirm the sale of property by him to defendants. The suit was by attachment for the recovery of an amount for flour sold by plaintiff to the defendants, under which the sheriff seized certain property. The grantee *under the deed of trust filed an interplea, claiming the property so seized under his deed. The court held that the plaintiff, by suing upon his account, waived the fraud in the sale, and treated it thereby as the property of the defendants, with the same power of disposition in the defendants over it as of any other property owned by them. It was said: "If the debts secured by the deed of trust were honest debts, and the property conveyed was not excessive, and no collusive agreement shown between the defendants and the bank and Ayr Lawn Company or the trustee in the deed of trust . . . for the use of the defendants, the deed of trust must be maintained, and there was nothing to submit to the jury. No proof was offered or claim made at the trial that any part of the property conveyed by the deed of trust was, by agreement between defendants and the beneficiaries, to be held for the use of defendants. Then proof of fraud on the part of defendants in procuring the property would have no tendency to prove such a result. If the debt secured was honest, the dishonest methods of defendants in gathering to themselves the property, and the knowledge of that fact by the beneficiaries, together with a knowledge of defendants' intention to defraud their other creditors in making the deed, all would not invalidate the deed or make availing to plaintiff the property thus conveyed in this character of suit." It was admitted in the case that the plaintiff had an election of remedies, but it was said that "the action of plaintiff in that case was based upon a contract of sale, and was a confirmation of it and a waiver of all fraud involved in it, so far as the rights of the intervening interpleader are concerned in the contest for the property. The sole inquiry, then, was as to the alleged fraudulent disposition of the property by the deed of trust to the interpleader, with the burden of its establishment upon the plaintiff."
178 U. S.

We are unable to accept this view of the law. We think it makes no difference as to the rights of the mortgagee whether the action be in replevin or assumpsit. In either case the mortgagee can hold them if he be a bona fide purchaser, without notice, but not otherwise. If the attaching creditors rescind the sale and sue in replevin, the mortgagees, having knowledge of *the fraudulent [204] purchase, are in the position of taking a mortgage upon property to which they knew the mortgagor had no title. If, upon the other hand, the creditors proceed by attachment, the mortgagees, knowing that the goods were fraudulently purchased, stand in the position of taking advantage themselves of the debtor's fraud, and obtaining a preference to which they are not justly entitled. If, as the evidence had some tendency to show, they actively participated in the fraud, their position is even worse.

It is consonant neither with good morals nor sound sense to hold that one may take a mortgage upon the property of another, which he knows to have been fraudulently acquired, and to which the purchaser has no valid title, whether the vendor elect to pursue the purchaser by a retaking of the property, or by an action for the price and an attachment of the property to secure the debt. Whichever remedy be pursued, the fact remains that, at the time the mortgage was taken, the mortgagor had a voidable title to the property mortgaged; and while an election to sue in assumpsit recognizes this title as between him and the vendor, such recognition does not redound to the validity of the mortgage, which must be judged of by the circumstances under which it was taken. In other words, the suit in assumpsit affirms the title of the vendee, but not the title of his mortgagee.

It is at least open to doubt whether, if the mortgagees had disposed of these goods, an action might not have lain against them for their value, upon the same principle that supports an action, where the seller is induced by fraudulent representations to sell goods to an insolvent third person, from whom the misrepresenting third person afterwards obtains them. An action lies on the assumption either of a fraudulent conspiracy rendering such participant liable, or upon the ground that the nominal purchaser was only a secret agent for the misrepresenting party, who finally bought the goods. Biddle v. Levy, 1 Stark. 20; Hill v. Perrott, 3 Taunt. 274; Phelan v. Crosby, 2 Gill, 462; State use of Steinberger v. Schulein, 45 Mo. 521; 2 Schouler, Pers. Prop. § 612; Benjamin, Sales, 4th ed. § 445.

The other cases cited by the plaintiffs are not in point. In O'Donald v. Constant* 92 [205]

Ind. 212, the evidence showed that the debtor who purchased the goods fraudulently turned them over to certain preferred creditors, who had no knowledge of the fraudulent purchases. The case of Bach v. Tuck, 126 N. Y. 53, 26 N. E. 1019, merely holds that a suit for the price brought with knowledge of the fraud was a ratification of the sale, and estopped the vendor from rescinding it and suing in replevin. The cases of First Nat. Bank v. McKinney, 47 Neb. 149, 66 N. W. 280, and Thomason v. Lewis, 103 Ala. 426, 15 So. 830, are to the same effect.

Upon the whole, we see no error in the judgment of the Supreme Court, and it is therefore affirmed.

PATRICK MORAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

JOSEPH HORSKY, JR.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 205-215.)

Writ of error to state court—decision based on laches as independent of Federal question.

A decision by a state court sustaining the defense of laches against the assertion of a right to a mining claim after it had been abandoned for fourteen years, during which an apparent title had been obtained under a patent to a probate judge for the property as part of a town site, is based on a ground independent of any Federal question.

[No. 177.]

Argued and Submitted March 12, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Montana to review a decision affirming a decree quieting title. Dismissed. See same case below, 21 Mont. 345, 53 Pac. 1064.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

The facts in this case are as follows: On June 15, 1872, a patent was issued to the probate judge of Lewis and Clarke County, Montana territory, for the townsite of Helena, in trust *for the benefit of the occupants. In 1874 Joseph Horsky, Jr., the plaintiff below, defendant in error, became by purchases from prior occupants and conveyances from the probate judge the holder of the legal title to certain lots, shown on the plat of the town. He entered into occupation at the date of his purchase, and has been in undisturbed and peaceful possession from that time to the present. Among these lots are two known and described as lots Nos. 19 and 20, in block 37, on the original plat of the townsite.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois ex rel Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what is a Federal question; when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

1038

Subsequent surveys disclosed that, measured by the description on the plat and the calls of the deed, there was an extra area of ground 22 feet front by 103 feet deep. When that fact was discovered the grantor of the plaintiff applied to the probate judge for a conveyance of this extra ground, and paid him the requisite price therefor. However, he received no deed at that time, apparently supposing the deeds for lots 19 and 20 would carry the ground; but afterwards, and on December 15, 1888, on application of the plaintiff, and upon the basis of the prior application and the payment of the necessary price, the probate judge made a deed to him of that extra area known and described on a subsequent plat as lot 31, block 37. In 1891 he filed his complaint in the district court of the first judicial district of the state of Montana, setting forth these facts, and that the defendant, Patrick Moran, had, on December 11, 1888, obtained from the probate judge a deed for this lot 31, alleging that it was wrongfully obtained, and praying for a decree quieting his title.

The case thus presented was litigated in the state courts for two or three years, passed to the supreme court of the state (13 Mont. 250, 34 Pac. 360), where a decree in favor of the plaintiff was reversed, and finally came on for hearing in the district court upon the bill of plaintiff, setting forth the facts, as above stated, and an amended answer of the defendant, containing these averments: That on the 2d day of March, 1869, the probate judge of Lewis and Clarke county made an entry of the tract of land for the benefit of the occupants of the townsite of Helena; that prior to the entry of said townsite a certain placer mining claim had been located within the exterior limits of the tract so entered, which included within its boundaries the lot in controversy; *that the location had been made pursuant to the laws of the United States, the local laws, and the rules and regulations of the mining district, and all had been done required thereby to make a perfectly valid location of said placer mining claim, and that the title to this mining claim thus located passed to the defendant: that it was a valid and subsisting mining claim at the time of the entry of the land by the probate judge and of the patent to him; that after the entry of the townsite, and prior to 1874, the defendant left the state of Montana, leaving the mining claim in possession of an agent; that during his absence the plaintiff obtained his deeds for the premises referred to, and entered into possession; that when the defendant returned to Montana he found the plaintiff in possession; that he had ever since been, by the action of the plaintiff, prevented from entering upon or working such mining claim; and that in December, 1888, finding that no deed had ever been made to the plaintiff for this portion of the property, he obtained in furtherance and protection of his own title a deed from the probate judge, which was the deed referred to in plaintiff's complaint.

Upon these pleadings a decree was entered by the district court in favor of the plaintiff, quieting his title to the premises. On appeal to the supreme court of the state this decree was affirmed (21 Mont. 345, 53 Pac. 1064), whereupon the case was brought on error to this court.

178 U. S.

Mr. Thomas J. Walsh argued the cause and, with Mr. Rufus C. Garland, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Every valid mining claim existing within the exterior limits of a town site at the time of its entry is expressly excepted from the operation of the town-site patent; and it is not possible by such a patent to obtain any interest or title thereto.

Silver Bow Min. & Mill. Co. v. Clark, 5 Mont. 378, 5 Pac. 570; Talbott v. King, 6 Mont. 76, 9 Pac. 434; Butte City Smoke-House Lode Cases, 6 Mont. 397, 12 Pac. 858; King v. Thomas, 6 Mont. 409, 12 Pac. 865.

These cases never came before this court for determination, but the conclusion reached in them was approved in the case of Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628.

The view of the law taken in these cases has been accepted by all the local courts having had occasion since to consider the questions involved.

Richards v. Dower, 81 Cal. 44, 22 Pac. 304; The Tombstone Town-Site Cases (Ariz.) 15 Pac. 26; Moyle v. Bullene, 7 Colo. App. 308, 44 Pac. 69. See also Lindley, Mines, 177.

Mr. Thomas J. Walsh also filed a separate brief for plaintiff in error in reply:

Jurisdiction will be taken by this court where a state court has applied the statute of limitations while the legal title was in the United States.

Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. ed. 534.

It has been repeatedly determined that where title is claimed under an act of Congress, and the highest court of a state rules against the title so asserted, the decision may be reviewed by this court.

Pollard v. Kibbe, 14 Pet. 353, 10 L. ed. 490; Lytle v. Arkansas, 22 How. 193, 16 L. ed. 306; Berthold v. McDonald, 22 How. 334, 16 L. ed. 318; Silver v. Ladd, 6 Wall. 440, 18 L. ed. 828.

Mr. Edwin W. Toole submitted the cause for defendant in error.

[207] Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The supreme court of the state affirmed the decree of the trial court primarily on the ground of laches. If this be an independent ground, involving no question under the Federal [208] *statutes, the decision of the supreme court must be sustained and the writ of error dismissed. Eustis v. Bolles, 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131.

Indeed, if the matter of laches can be recognized at all, it is difficult, independently of the question of jurisdiction, to perceive any error in the ruling of the state supreme court. One who, having an inchoate right to property, abandons it for fourteen years, permits others to acquire apparent title, and deal with it as theirs, and as though he had no right, does not appeal to the favorable consideration of a court of equity. We need only refer to the many cases decided in this court and elsewhere, that a neglected right, if neglected too long, must be treated as an abandoned right which no court will enforce. See, among others, Felix v. Patrick, 145 U. S. 317, 36 L. ed. 719, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Gallagher v. Cadwell, 145 U. S. 368, 36 L. ed. 738, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 873, and cases cited in the opinion. There always comes a time when the best of rights will, by reason of neglect, pass beyond the protecting reach of the hands of equity, and the present case fully illustrates that proposition.

We therefore pass to an inquiry whether the question of laches is so intermingled with that of Federal right that the former cannot be considered an independent matter. As this case was disposed of upon bill and answer, we must take the facts to be as they are presented by the pleadings.

At the time of the commencement of the several proceedings referred to in the bill and answer, the entire area of ground compassed within the limits of the townsite of Helena was public land of the United States, subject to be taken under the pre-emption, homestead, townsite, or mineral laws. There was no reservation in behalf of any railroad company, or for military or other purposes. The whole tract was subject to private appropriation. Under those circumstances, the probate judge of the county made an application for an entry of the tract, as a whole, as a townsite. His application was entertained, the entry made, and thereafter a patent issued to him for the entire tract, including the premises in controversy. Apparently, therefore, by the terms of the patent the legal title to this land had passed to the probate judge in trust for the several occupants. But we are referred by counsel to Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 393, 29 L. ed. 423, 424, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95, 96, in which it was held that a patent under "the townsite act is "inopera-[209] tive as to all lands known at the time to be valuable for their minerals, or discovered to be such before their occupation and improvement for residences or business under the townsite title;" and this by virtue of the express provisions of the law relating to the disposition of lands for town sites, as follows: "No title shall be acquired under the foregoing provisions of this chapter to any mine of gold, silver, cinnabar, or copper, or to any valid mining claim or possession held under existing laws." Rev. Stat. § 2392.

The ruling in this case was qualified in Davis v. Weibbold, 139 U. S. 507, 35 L. ed. 238, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 628, and it was held that the title of a lotowner holding a deed from the probate judge who had entered the lands under the townsite act could not be defeated because after the issue of the patent there was a subsequent discovery of minerals and an issue of a patent therefor to the discoverer, the court saying, on p. 524, L. ed. p. 244, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 634, after referring to some decisions of the land department:

"It would seem from this uniform construction of that department of the government specially intrusted with supervision of proceedings required for the alienation of the public lands, including those that embrace minerals, and also of the courts of the mining states, Federal and state, whose attention has been called to the subject, that the exception of mineral lands from grant in the acts of Congress should be considered to apply only to such lands as were at the time of the grant known to be so valuable for their minerals as to justify expenditure for their extraction."

The allegations of the answer, are to the effect that there was a known mining claim, actually located and worked, at the time of the entry and patent of the townsite, and the argument is that the mining claim was excepted from the scope of the townsite patent as completely as though the exception had been in terms named on the face of the instrument and the boundaries claimed described. The probate judge, therefore, never took title, and, having none, conveyed none to the plaintiff; the title remained in the government, and neither laches nor limitation run against the rights and title of the government. The mining claim existed, and [210] although defendant had *abandoned it for years, yet as no one had taken steps to relocate it, he had the right to resume possession and continue his work in the way of perfecting his title.

In an opinion by the judge of the state district court, delivered in deciding this case, is an interesting discussion of the difference between a void and voidable patent, and many authorities from this court are quoted. We shall not attempt to refer to all of them, but content ourselves with noticing one or two. In United States v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 26 L. ed. 167, it was held that mandamus would lie to compel the delivery of a land patent which had been duly signed, sealed, countersigned, and recorded; that by those acts the title had passed to the patentee, and nothing remained but the ministerial duty of delivering the instrument. In that case there was a matter of dispute between the patentee, who had made a homestead entry, and other parties who claimed that the land was within the incorporated limits of the town of Grantsville, and that the entry had been wrongfully sustained. In the course of a very careful opinion by Mr. Justice Miller, it was said (pp. 400, 401, L. ed. p. 173):

"It is argued with much plausibility that the relator was not entitled to the land by the laws of the United States, because it was not subject to homestead entry, and that the patent is therefore void, and the law will not require the secretary to do a vain thing by delivering it, which may at the same time embarrass the rights of others in regard to the same land.

"We are not prepared to say that if the patent is absolutely void, so that no right could possibly accrue to the plaintiff under it, the suggestion would not be a sound one.

"But the distinction between a void and a voidable instrument, though sometimes a very nice one, is still a well-recognized distinction on which valuable rights often depend. And the case before us is one to which we think it 'is clearly applicable. To the officers of the land department, among whom we include the Secretary of the Interior, is confided, as we have already said, the administration of the laws concerning the sale of the public domain. The land in the present case had been surveyed, and, under their control, the land in that district generally had been opened to pre-emption, homestead entry, and *sale. The question whether any particular [211] tract, belonging to the government, was open to sale, pre-emption, or homestead right, is in every instance a question of law as applied to the facts for the determination of those officers. Their decision of such question and of conflicting claims to the same land by different parties is judicial in its character.

"It is clear that the right and the duty of deciding all such questions belong to those officers, and the statutes have provided for original and appellate hearings in that department before the successive officers of higher grade up to the Secretary. They have, therefore, jurisdiction of such cases, and provision is made for the correction of errors in the exercise of that jurisdiction. When their decision of such a question is finally made and recorded in the shape of the patent, how can it be said that the instrument is absolutely void for such errors as these? If a patent should issue for land in the state of Massachusetts, where the government never had any, it would be absolutely void. If it should issue for land once owned by the government, but long before sold and conveyed by patent to another who held possession, it might be held void in a court of law on the production of the senior patent. But such is not the case before us. Here the question is whether this land had been withdrawn from the control of the land department by certain acts of other persons, which include it within the limits of an incorporated town. The whole question is one of disputed law and disputed facts. It was a question for the land officers to consider and decide before they determined to issue McBride's patent. It was within their jurisdiction to do so. If they decided erroneously, the patent may be voidable, but not absolutely void."

Now, as we have heretofore noticed, the patent in the case before us for the townsite purported to convey the entire tract. On the face of the instrument there was nothing to suggest any exception. While it may be conceded, under the authorities which are referred to, that, in an action at law by a claimant under that patent, the existence of a mining claim at the time of its issue might be shown and be a valid defense to a recovery of so much of the ground as was included within the mining *claim, and in that view [212] it may perhaps be not inaptly said that the patent was to that extent void. But be this as it may, whenever the invalidity of a patent does not appear upon the face of the instrument, or by matters of which the courts will take judicial notice, and the land is apparently within the jurisdiction of the land department as ordinary public land of the United States, then it would seem to be technically more accurate to say that the patent was voidable and not void. Even in cases where it has been called void the right of the United States to maintain a bill to set aside the patent has been sustained. Thus, in United States v. Stone, 2 Wall. 525, 17 L. ed. 765, patents had been issued for certain lands (which were in fact within the limits of Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation), and a bill in equity was filed by the United States to set them aside. Mr. Justice Grier, delivering the opinion of the court, sustaining the decree of the circuit court in favor of the government, uses this language (pp. 535, 537, L. ed. p. 767):

"Nor is fraud in the patentee the only ground upon which a bill will be sustained. Patents are sometimes issued unadvisedly or by mistake, where the officer has no authority in law to grant them, or where another party has a higher equity and should have received the patent. In such cases courts of law will pronounce them void. The patent is but evidence of a grant, and the officer who issues it acts ministerially and not judicially. If he issues a patent for land reserved from sale by law, such patent is void for want of authority. But one officer of the land office is not competent to cancel or annul the act of his predecessor. That is a judicial act, and requires the judgment of a court.

"It is contended here, by the counsel of the United States, that the land for which a patent was granted to the appellant was reserved from sale for the use of the government, and, consequently, that the patent is void. And although no fraud is charged in the bill, we have no doubt that such a proceeding in chancery is the proper remedy, and that if the allegations of the bill are supported, that the decree of the court below canceling the patent should be affirmed.

[213] *"We are of opinion, therefore,—

"1. That the land claimed by appellant never was within the tract allotted to the Delaware Indians in 1829 and surveyed in 1830.

"2. That it is within the limits of a reservation legally made by the President for military purposes.

"Consequently, the patents issued to the appellant were without authority and void."

Suppose the United States had brought a bill to set aside so much of this townsite patent as included the mining claim referred to, as, under the authority last referred to and many others, it might have done, it would, under the circumstances disclosed, have been a suit in the interest of and for the benefit of the defendant, and in order to enable him to perfect his inchoate title to this mining property. But it is well settled that when the government proceeds to set aside its patent, not for the sake of establishing its own right to the property, but in the interest of some person who has an equitable claim thereto, or to whom the government owes the duty of protecting his interests, it is subjected to the same defenses of laches, limitation, and want of equity that would attach to a like suit by an individual. United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 338, 32 L. ed. 121, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1083, in which it was said by Mr. Justice Lamar, on page 347, L. ed. p. 125, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 1088:

178 U. S.

"When the government is a mere formal complainant in a suit, not for the purpose of asserting any public right or protecting any public interest, title, or property, but merely to form a conduit through which one private person can conduct litigation against another private person, a court of equity will not be restrained from administering the equities existing between the real parties by any exemption of the government designed for the protection of the rights of the United States alone. The mere use of its name in a suit for the benefit of a private suitor cannot extend its immunity as a sovereign government to said private suitor, whereby he can avoid and escape the scrutiny of a court of equity into the matters pleaded against him by the other party, nor stop the court from examining into and deciding the case according to the principles governing courts of equity in like cases between private litigants.

*"These principles, so far as they relate to [214] general statutes of limitation, the laches of a party and the lapse of time, have been rendered familiar to the legal mind by the oft-repeated enunciation and enforcement of them in the decisions of this court. According to these decisions, courts of equity in general recognize and give effect to the statute of limitations as a defense to an equitable right, when at law it would have been properly pleaded as a bar to a legal right."

See also United States v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 510, 33 L. ed. 1099, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Curtner v. United States, 149 U. S. 662, 37 L. ed. 890, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 985, 1041.

Now, if the government, seeking, in order to discharge its duty to the defendant, to avoid so much of the patent as included this mining claim, is bound by the ordinary rules of equity in respect to laches, etc., a fortiori it is true that when he is the party to the litigation the same equitable rules are binding on him. The government cannot, when acting for him, avail itself of those principles of law which are designed simply for its own protection, and no more can he, in his own litigation, shelter himself behind those principles. It is a private right which he is relying upon, although a right created under the laws of the United States, and as to this private right he is subjected to the ordinary rules in respect to the enforcement and protection of such a right.

Carothers v. Mayer, 164 U. S. 325, 41 L. ed. 453, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106, is worthy of notice, for in that case, although not under precisely similar circumstances, it was held that a question arising under the statute of limitations as against a title asserted under the Federal law presented no Federal question, and so also as to equitable rights asserted as against an original right under the laws of Congress. See also Pittsburgh & L. A. Iron Co. v. Cleveland Iron Min. Co. 178 U. S. 270, post, 1065, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 931.

1041

[215] Neither does this case in any of its aspects come within Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. ed. 534. In that case it was held that one who acquired a legal title from the government could not be defeated in respect to that title on the ground that the party in possession had while the title was in the government acquired some equitable rights by possession or otherwise, which might *have been enforced against one who, during all the time, had as an individual held the legal title. In other words, that as no equitable rights could be asserted against the government while it held the legal title, so when it passed the legal title to an individual he acquired all the rights which the government had at the time of the passage of such legal title. So far as that case has any bearing upon this, it tends to support the conclusions of the supreme court of the state of Montana, because here at least the apparent legal title passed to the probate judge, and thereafter to the plaintiff, and it was only an equitable and inchoate right which the defendant was trying to assert.

We conclude, therefore, that the defense of laches, which in its nature is a defense conceding the existence of an earlier legal or equitable right, and affirming that the delay in enforcing it is sufficient to deny relief, is the assertion of an independent defense. It proceeds upon the concession that there was, under the laws of the United States, a prior right, and, conceding that, says that the delay in respect to its assertion prevents its present recognition. For these reasons we are of the opinion the decision of the supreme court of Montana was based upon an independent non-Federal question, one broad enough to sustain its judgment, and the writ of error is dismissed.

D. P. TARPEY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

ANDREW MADSEN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 215-229.)

Public lands—conflict between entry and railroad grant—questions determined by records.

1. The right of one who has actually occupied public lands, with an intent to make a homestead or pre-emption entry, cannot be defeated by the mere lack of a place in which to make a record of his intent, if he makes his entry as soon as an office is opened where he can do so.
2. The rule that "the law deals tenderly with one who, in good faith, goes upon the public lands with a view of making a home thereon," does not apply to one who, after the original

NOTE.—As to conflicting rights of claimant and railroad—see note to Sweesey v. Sparling (Iowa) 9 L. R. A. 777.

1042

entryman abandons his claim, attempts to dispossess a railroad company of its title under a land grant which has remained apparently perfect and unquestioned for many years.

3. It is matter of common knowledge that many people go on to the public domain, build cabins, and establish themselves, temporarily at least, as occupants, but have in view simply prospecting for minerals, hunting, trapping, etc., and with no thought of acquiring title to land.
4. The relative rights of a railroad company and an individual entryman in respect to public lands must be determined by record evidence; on the one part the filing of the map in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and on the other, the declaration or entry in the local land office; and the mere occupancy of an entryman who does not file his declaratory statement is insufficient to protect his claim against a land grant.

[No. 119.]

Argued January 25, 26, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Utah to review a decision affirming a decree for defendant in a suit to establish title to land. Reversed.

See same case below, 17 Utah, 352, 53 Pac. 996.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

*This case comes on error to the supreme [216] court of the state of Utah, and involves the title to the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, township 11 north, of range 2 west. This tract is within the place limits of the grant to the Central Pacific Railroad of California. The map of definite location of that part of the road opposite this land was filed and approved by the Secretary of the Interior on October 20, 1868, and the entire road was constructed and accepted prior to 1870. The land is not mineral nor swamp land, nor was it returned or denominated as such; was agricultural in character; and at the date of the filing of the map of definite location there was nowhere any record evidence of a private claim. At that time no local land office had been established in the district in which this land is situated. Such office was opened some time in April or May, 1869. On May 29, 1869, this declaratory statement was filed:

Declaratory Statement for Cases Where the Lands are Not Subject to Private Entry.

I, Moroni Olney, of Box Elder county, Utah territory, being a citizen of the United States and the head of a family, have on the 23d day of April, 1869, settled and improved the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, township 11 north, of range 2 west, in the district of lands subject to sale at the land office in Salt Lake City, Utah, and containing 160 acres, which land has not yet been offered at public sale, and thus rendered subject to private entry, and I do hereby declare my intention to claim said *tract of land as [217] 178 U. S.

pre-emption right under the provisions of said act of 4th September, 1841.

Given under my hand this 29th day of May, 1869.

(Signed) Moroni Olney.

In the presence of—Abraham Hunsaker.

Nothing further was done by Olney. He abandoned the land, and nothing appears to have been heard of him since the date of the entry. On June 20, 1896, Andrew Madsen, the defendant in error, who alleged that he had been a settler and in occupation of the tract since 1888, filed a homestead entry thereof in the local office. A contest had previously and in 1893 been instituted between the railroad company and Madsen, which was heard and decided by the register and receiver, whose decision was affirmed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the finding of the register and receiver, as appears from the record in this case, being—

"We find that the tract in question, which is the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 29, township 11 north, of range 2 west, of the Salt Lake meridian, was settled upon and occupied and claimed by a qualified entryman, to wit, Moroni Olney, prior to October 20, 1868, which therefore excepted the land from the operation of the grant of Congress to the Central Pacific Railroad Company."

A certified copy of that decision in full was filed by counsel for defendant in error on the hearing in this court, and that certified copy reads as follows:

"This case arises upon an application to enter a tract of land covered by a railway selection which it is sought to cancel, for the reason that a valid settlement had been made on the land prior to the date of the attachment of the grant to the railway company.

"Our decision is that the motion of the Central Pacific Railway Company to strike out, dismiss, and expunge the depositions from the records should be denied. We therefore find the issues in favor of Andrew Madsen, and that the tract of land in dispute was reserved and excepted from the grant to the railroad company because, 1st, a pre-emption claim had attached *to the land in dispute at the time the line of said road was definitely fixed.

"2d. There was a qualified pre-emption claimant upon the land at that time, which brought it within the first portion of the excepting clause of the act of 1864, which provides that any lands granted by that act, or the act to which it is an amendment, shall not defeat or impair any pre-emption claim.

"3d. On the 20th day of October, 1868, the land in dispute contained the improvements of a bona fide settler, which also excepted the land from the provisions of the grant.

"We further find that Central Pacific Railway selection No. 3 should be canceled as to the tract in dispute, and that Andrew Madsen should be permitted, if he so desires, to make pre-emption entry covering this land.

"We decide that he should be permitted to enter the land under the pre-emption law, 178 U. S.

because his right to do so, i. e., his settlement upon the land, was initiated long prior to the act of March 3, 1891, repealing the pre-emption law, which repealing act expressly excepted all bona fide claims lawfully initiated before the passage of the act."

After the decision of the Commissioner affirming that of the register and receiver, the entry was made and a patent was issued to Madsen.

Prior thereto and on January 12, 1894, this action was brought in the fourth judicial district of the territory of Utah, county of Box Elder, by the plaintiff in error, grantee from the railroad company, to establish his title to the tract and to recover possession. In the trial court, after the issue of the patent and the admission of Utah as a state, a decree was entered in favor of the defendant. The case was taken by appeal to the supreme court of the state, and by that court the decree of the district court was affirmed (17 Utah, 352, 53 Pac. 996), to review which decree this writ of error was brought.

Mr. L. E. Payson argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

No pre-emption claim attaches to public land, so as to except it from a railroad grant, by mere occupation with qualification to enter on the part of the entryman at definite location of railroad line.

Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. ed. 1122, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. ed. 363, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 85, 39 L. ed. 906, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 796; Lansdale v. Daniels, 100 U. S. 113, 25 L. ed. 587; Maddox v. Burnham, 156 U. S. 544, 39 L. ed. 527, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448.

The status of the land at the time of the definite location of the road constitutes the criterion by which the lands to which the company is entitled are to be determined.

Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 360, 27 L. ed. 201, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. ed. 1122, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566.

A notice of claim, or declaratory statement, is indispensably necessary to give the claimant any standing as a pre-emptor; the rule being that settlement alone is not sufficient for that purpose.

Lansdale v. Daniels, 100 U. S. 113, 25 L. ed. 587.

Mr. L. R. Rogers also filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. B. Howell Jones argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error:

The fact that the survey was not approved or filed, and the fact that the land office was not opened until 1869, did not destroy any pre-emption claim; it merely extended the time to make the filing until the land office was opened.

Lytle v. Arkansas, 9 How. 314, 13 L. ed. 153; The Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 77, sub nom. Hutchings v. Low, 21 L. ed. 82; Baty v. Sale, 43 Ill. 351, 92 Am. Dec. 128; Kile v. Tubbs, 23 Cal. 432.

The ruling of the land office, which shows that at the date of definite location the lands were settled and occupied, is unassailable except by direct proceedings for its annulment or limitation.

Steel v. St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. 106 U. S. 447, 27 L. ed. 226, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 389; Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98; Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 288, 38 L. ed. 992, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030.

The ruling of the Department allowing the declaratory statement to be filed on this land, thereby deciding that it was not railroad land, is not subject to review. It was never appealed from, so far as the record shows. Nothing is shown as to the grounds on which the Land Department acted at the time.

Durango Land & Coal Co. v. Evans, 49 U. S. App. 305, 80 Fed. Rep. 425, 25 C. C. A. 523; Moore v. Northern P. R. Co. 18 Mont. 290, 45 Pac. 215.

Conceding that pre-emption or homestead claim means a filed claim, the words, "any other lawful claim," must mean something else than such claims as are filed. A lawful claim is not one contrary to law. It may well be that the government is not compelled to recognize the right of a mere settler without entry. Yet such a claim is lawful, and Congress has always, as its settled policy shows, tried to protect such claims. In that sense they are lawful and meritorious.

United States v. Tithing Yard, 9 Utah, 280, 34 Pac. 55.

If these lands were within the proviso of the act of July 2, 1864, they did not pass. And the fact that Moroni Olney's claim lapsed or failed did not cause the lands to revert to the railroad company.

Bardon v. Northern P. R. Co. 145 U. S. 535, 36 L. ed. 806, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 856; Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. ed. 363, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112; Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. ed. 1122, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98.

The Colburn Case, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98, is not in point. In that case it was claimed that the land was excepted from the grant because of the occupation of one Horace F. Kelly on the date of definite location, unaccompanied by a filing, "then or thereafter." The land was surveyed, and the survey filed, and the land office was open.

In Barden v. Northern P. R. Co. 154 U. S. 315, 38 L. ed. 997, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1030, the court says that the case of Deseret Salt Co. v. Tarpey, 142 U. S. 241, 35 L. ed. 999, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 158, is not in point. This case did not decide anything whatever respecting the exceptions in the land grant, "but only that the title to the lands granted took effect, with certain designated exceptions, as of the date of the grant." It never decided anything else.

Not only are prior reservations made by the government and rights of pre-emption excepted, but the improvements of bona fide settlers, and any other lawful claim, are unaffected by the grant. Of course this means any honest claim evidenced by improvements or other acts of possession.

Broder v. Natoma Water & Min. Co. 101 U. S. 277, 25 L. ed. 791.

*Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court: [219]

A narrow but important question is presented by this record. The land in controversy is an odd-numbered section within the place limits of the grant to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. The identification of the lands which passed by that grant was made at the time the map of definite location was filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and by him approved, to wit, October 20, 1868; and the question is whether there was anything in the occupation or entry by Olney to defeat the title apparently then passing to the railroad company. That there was nothing of record affecting the validity of that title is conceded. No one, by an investigation of any public record, could have ascertained at that time that there was any doubt in respect thereto.

It is true that there was then no local land office in which those seeking to make pre-emption or homestead entries could file their declaratory statements or make entries, and the want of such an office is made by the supreme court of the state one of the main grounds for holding that the land did not pass to the railroad company. We agree with that court fully in its discussion of the general principles involved in the failure of the government to provide a local land office. The right of one who has actually occupied, with an intent to make a homestead or pre-emption entry, cannot be defeated by the mere lack of a place in which to make a record of his intent. In many states the statutory provision in respect to suits is that the defendant, on receiving service of summons, must within a certain time file his answer in the office of the clerk of the court. It cannot be doubted that if before he is thus called upon to file his answer the office is burned and the clerk dies, and there is no place or individual at which or with whom his answer can be filed, such accident or omission will not defeat his right to make a defense, or give to the plaintiff a right to take judgment by default. Where the accident or omission is not the fault of the party, but of the government, or some official of the government, such accident or omission cannot defeat the right of the individual, and in all that is said in respect to this by the supreme court of the state of Utah we fully agree. If Olney was in possession of this tract before October 20, 1868, with a view of entering it as a homestead or pre-emption claim, and was simply deprived of his ability to make his entry or declaratory statement by the lack of a local land office, he could undoubtedly, when such office was established, have made his entry or declaratory statement in such way as to protect his rights. But when the office was opened he filed his declaratory statement, and in that he did not suggest that he had been in the occupation of the premises prior to October 20, 1868, but declared that on the 23d of April, 1869, he settled and improved the tract. Assume that such declaration was subject to correction by him, that he could thereafter have corrected the mistake (if it was a mistake) and shown that he occupied the premises prior to October 20, 1868, with an intent to enter them as a homestead or pre-emption claim, he never did make the correction, and there is nothing in the record to show that his occupation prior to April 23, 1869, was with any intent to acquire title from the United States.

And in this respect we must notice the oft-repeated declaration of this court, that "the law deals tenderly with one who, in good faith, goes upon the public lands with a view of making a home thereon." Ard v. Brandon, 156 U. S. 537, 543, 39 L. ed. 524, 526, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 406; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amacker, 175 U. S. 564, 567, ante, 274, 275, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 236. With this declaration, in all its fulness, we heartily concur, and have no desire to limit it in any respect; and if Olney, the original entryman, was pressing his claims, every intendment should be in his favor in order to perfect the title which he was seeking to acquire. But when the original entryman, either because he does not care to perfect his claim to the land, or because he is conscious that it is invalid, abandons it, and a score of years thereafter some third party comes in and attempts to dispossess the railroad company (grantee of Congress) of its title,—apparently perfect and unquestioned during these many years,—he does not come in the attitude of an equitable appellant to the consideration of the court.

[221] It must be remembered that mere occupation of the public *lands gives no right as against the government. It is a matter of common knowledge that many go on to the public domain, build cabins, and establish themselves, temporarily at least, as occupants, but having in view simply prospecting for minerals, hunting, trapping, etc., and with no thought of acquiring title to land. Such occupation is often accompanied by buildings and inclosures for housing and care of stock, and sometimes by cultivation of the soil with a view of providing fresh vegetables. These occupants are not in the eye of the law considered as technically trespassers. No individual can interfere with their occupation, or compel them to leave. Their possessory rights are recognized as of value and made the subjects of barter and sale. Lamb v. Davenport, 18 Wall. 307, 21 L. ed. 759. In that case it appeared that certain individuals settled on what is now the city of Portland, Oregon, and, laying off a town site, distributed among themselves the lots. Thereafter they bought and sold those lots as things of value, and although such settlement was antecedent to any act of Congress authorizing it, their contracts in respect to the lots were sustained, the court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, saying (314, L. ed. 761):

"And though these rights or claims rested on no statute or any positive promise, the general recognition of them in the end by the government, and its disposition to protect the meritorious actual settlers, who were the pioneers of emigration in the new territories, gave a decided and well-understood value to these claims. They were the subjects of bargain and sale, and, as among the parties to such contracts, they were valid."
178 U. S.

But notwithstanding this recognition of the rights of individual occupants as against all other individuals, it has been uniformly held that no rights are thus acquired as against the United States. In Camfield v. United States, 167 U. S. 518, 42 L. ed. 260, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 864, this court sustained a bill filed by the United States to compel by mandatory injunction certain parties to vacate public lands which they were occupying without any intent to purchase, and whose occupancy therefore stood in the way of others who might wish to enter and acquire title under the land laws of the United States. See also Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 187, 19 L. ed. 668; The Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 77, sub nom. Hutchings v. Low, 21 L. ed. 82.

*It is undoubtedly true that one occupying [222] land with a view of pre-emption is given thirty days within which to file with the register of the land office his declaratory statement (Rev. Stat. § 2264); and since 1880 the same right has been possessed by one desiring to make a homestead entry (21 Stat. at L. 141, chap. 89, § 3). So that any controversy between two occupants of a tract open to pre-emption and homestead entry is not determined by the mere time of the filing of the respective claims in the land office, but by the fact of prior occupancy; and these controversies are of frequent cognizance. Oral evidence, therefore, of the date of occupancy, may be decisive of the controversy between such individual applicants for a tract of public land, but by decisions of this court running back to 1882, as between a railroad company holding a land grant and an individual entryman the question of right has been declared to rest, not on the mere matter of occupancy, but upon the state of the record. All the cases in this court, in which this question has been discussed and the conclusion announced, have been, since the act of 1880, giving to persons seeking a homestead the same rights in respect to occupancy as to persons intending a pre-emption.

The original Union Pacific Railroad act (12 Stat. at L. 492, chap. 120, § 3) excepted from the grant of the odd sections to the railroad company all those tracts to which an adverse right had attached "at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed." The act does not in terms prescribe how or by what evidence it shall be determined that the line of said road has become definitely fixed, and for many years after its passage, interpreting this and other like railroad land grants, the ruling of the Land Department was that the line was definitely fixed whenever it was surveyed, staked out, and marked on the face of the earth (United States v. Wiona & St. P. R. Co. 165 U. S. 463, 473, 41 L. ed. 789, 794, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 368), and that if at that time there was no adverse right the title of the railroad company was settled. Of course, this left such date one to be determined by oral testimony, and so as to each individual odd-numbered tract within the place limits of the grant the question of title was determined by evidence of the time of surveying, staking, and marking on the face of the earth the line of *the railroad, and corresponding evidence of occupancy by an individual with a view to entry under the general land laws. No title, therefore, certainly passed to the railroad company until a patent had been issued to it; and, indeed, under the settled ruling that land which was held by a prior claim did not pass to the railroad company under its grant it was doubtful whether even then it had received a title beyond challenge. This unfortunate uncertainty and instability of title continued until the decisions of this court in Van Wyck v. Knevals, 106 U. S. 360, 27 L. ed. 201, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 336; and Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. ed. 1122, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566,—the first decided in October, 1882, and the latter in March, 1885. By those cases it was settled that the time at which the title of the railroad company passed beyond question was that of the filing of an approved map of definite location in the office of the Secretary of the Interior. This eliminated all oral testimony, and established a date at which, by record, the title of the railroad company could be considered as definitely ascertained. In the latter of the two cases, Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, the same elimination of oral testimony, the same reference to the record as determining all opposing rights of the individual entryman, was also declared. That was a case of a homestead entry, but as, five years prior thereto, homestead and pre-emption entries had been placed in the same category so far as respects the right of preliminary occupation, it is not strange that the court in that opinion spoke generally of pre-emption and homestead entries.

After referring to the rule in reference to the filing of the map of definite location in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Justice Miller, announcing the conclusions of the court, said (640, L. ed. 1126, Sup. Ct. Rep. 571):

"This filing of the map of definite location furnished also the means of determining what lands had previously to that moment been sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a pre-emption or homestead claim had attached; for, by examining the plats of this land in the office of the register and receiver, or in the General Land Office, it could readily have been seen if any of the odd sections within 10 miles of the line had been sold, or disposed of, or reserved, *or a homestead or pre-emption claim had attached to any of them."

And again (641, L. ed. 1126, Sup. Ct. Rep. 571):

"It is not conceivable that Congress intended to place these parties as contestants for the land, with the right in each to require proof from the other of complete performance of its obligation. . . . The reasonable purpose of the government undoubtedly is that which it expressed; namely, while we are giving liberally to the railroad company, we do not give any lands we have already sold, or to which, according to our laws, we have permitted a pre-emption or homestead right to attach. No right to such land passes by this grant."

And finally (644, L. ed. 1127, Sup. Ct. Rep. 573):

"Of all the words in the English language, this word 'attached' was probably the best that could have been used. It did not mean mere settlement, residence, or cultivation of the land, but it meant a proceeding in the proper land office, by which the inchoate right to the land was initiated. It meant that by such a proceeding a right of homestead had fastened to that land, which could ripen into a perfect title by future residence and cultivation. With the performance of these conditions the company had nothing to do. The right of the homestead having attached to the land, it was excepted out of the grant as much as if in a deed it had been excluded from the conveyance by metes and bounds."

The doctrine thus announced, that rights on either side as between the railroad company and the entryman are determined by the facts appearing of record, has been repeatedly recognized since. In Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. ed. 363, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112, these rights were discussed by Mr. Justice Lamar, who, by reason of his experience as Secretary of the Interior, was pre-eminently qualified to speak in reference thereto. And an entry which was clearly open to challenge by the government was held to be effective to withdraw the land from the operation of the railroad grant. On page 361, L. ed. 365, Sup. Ct. Rep. 114, Mr. Justice Lamar observed:

"In the light of these decisions the almost uniform practice of the department has been to regard land upon which an entry of record valid upon its face has been made, as appropriated *and withdrawn from subse-[225]quent homestead entry, pre-emption settlement, sale, or grant until the original entry be canceled or declared forfeited; in which case the land reverts to the government as part of the public domain, and becomes again subject to entry under the land laws."

And then, after referring to the contention that the Dunmeyer Case was not conclusive because in that case the entry was valid on its face, while this was defective, he added (364, L. ed. 366, Sup. Ct. Rep. 115):

"But these defects, whether they be of form or substance, by no means render the entry absolutely a nullity. So long as it remains a subsisting entry of record, whose legality has been passed upon by the land authorities, and their action remains unreversed, it is such an appropriation of the tract as segregates it from the public domain, and therefore precludes it from subsequent grants. In the case before us, at the time of the location of the company's road an examination of the tract books and the plat filed in the office of the register and receiver, or in the land office, would have disclosed Turner's entry as an entry of record, accepted by the proper officers in the proper office, together with the application and necessary money,—an entry the imperfections and defects of which could have been cured by a supplemental affidavit or by other proof of the requisite qualifications of the applicant. Such an entry attached to the land a right which the road cannot dispute for any supposed failure of the entryman to comply with all the provisions of the law under which he made his claim. A practice of allowing such contests would be fraught with the gravest dangers to actual settlers, and would be subversive of the principles upon which the munificent railroad grants are based."

Still later, in Whitney v. Taylor, 158 U. S. 85, 39 L. ed. 906, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 796, in which the validity of a pre-emption entry was challenged as against a railroad grant, we said (94, L. ed. 909, Sup. Ct. Rep. 800):

[226] "But it is also true that settlement alone, without a declaratory statement, creates no pre-emption right. 'Such a notice of claim or declaratory statement is indispensably necessary to give the claimant any standing as a pre-emptor, the rule being that his settlement alone is not sufficient for that purpose.' Lansdale v. Daniels, 100 U. S. 113, 116, 25 L. ed. 587, 588. And the acceptance of such declaratory statement, and noting the same on the books of the local land office, is the official recognition of the pre-emption claim. While the cases of Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, 113 U. S. 629, 28 L. ed. 1122, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; and Hastings & D. R. Co. v. Whitney, 132 U. S. 357, 33 L. ed. 363, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 112, involved simply homestead claims, yet, in the opinion in each, pre-emption and homestead claims were mentioned and considered as standing in this respect upon the same footing."

And in Northern P. R. Co. v. Colburn, 164 U. S. 383, 41 L. ed. 479, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 98, we held distinctly that no mere occupation of a tract of public land in and of itself excepted that tract from the operation of a railroad grant; that a settler could not dispute the claim of a railroad company until, and unless, he had filed his entry in the proper land office. Still later, in Northern P. R. Co. v. Sanders, 166 U. S. 620, 630, 41 L. ed. 1139, 1143, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 671, 674, we said:

"Any other interpretation would defeat the evident purpose of Congress in excepting from railroad grants lands upon which claims existed of record at the time the road to be aided was definitely located. What that purpose was has been frequently adverted to by this court."

And subsequently, on page 631, L. ed. 1143, Sup. Ct. Rep. 674, we quoted, as the settled law in this respect, from Kansas P. R. Co. v. Dunmeyer, the first of the quotations therefrom heretofore given in this opinion.

If it be said that this rule ignores the privileges given to temporary occupants of land to make entry within a short time, it must be said that it also denies the personal right of the railroad company to fix definitely its line of road. For when the company has by resolution of its directors established such line, and that has been marked on the ground by posts and stakes, it has done all required by the letter of the statute. If it be said that the railroad company may, notwithstanding its personal action thereafter, vote to locate its road on a different line, so on the other hand may it be said that the individual occupant of a tract may abandon his thought of entry; and by making each of the parties' rights, to wit, those of the railroad company, and the individual, turn on a matter of record, the court simply gave definiteness and certainty to the congressional grant. It was said in *Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Kansas P. R. Co. 97 U. S. 491, 497, [227] 24 L. ed. 1095, 1097, repeated in United States v. Southern P. R. Co. 146 U. S. 570, 598, 36 L. ed. 1091, 1098, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152, 157: "It is always to be borne in mind, in construing a congressional grant, that the act by which it is made is a law as well as a conveyance, and that such effect must be given to it as will carry out the intent of Congress. That intent should not be defeated by applying to the grant the rules of the common law, which are properly applicable only to transfers between private parties." And surely Congress in making a grant to a railroad company intended that it should be of present force, and of force with reasonable certainty. It meant a substantial present donation of something which the railroad company could at once use, and use with knowledge of that which it had received. It cannot be supposed that Congress contemplated that, as in this case, a score of years after the line of definite location had been fixed and made a matter of record, someone should take possession of a tract apparently granted, and defeat the company's record title by oral testimony that at the time of the filing of the map of definite location there was an actual though departed occupant of the tract, and therefore that the title to it never passed. The conditions are very different from those which exist between two individual occupants and claimants of a particular tract, for each is there in possession to watch and know the action of the other, and the question of right is subject to immediate and certain determination. In the present case, on the other hand, years after the title of the railroad company had apparently vested, this defendant comes in and says that this tract was excluded from the grant because somebody was in occupation, and if this can be said at the end of twenty years, equally well can it be said at the end of half a century. So it is that, interpreting the act making the grant as a law as well as a grant, and recognizing that Congress must have intended a present donation with reasonable certainty of identification, this court properly held that the records made in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and in the local land offices should be conclusive as between the company and the individual entryman. And if the ruling [228] at times may operate *against an individual entryman, it does so more frequently against the railroad company in preventing it from claiming rights existing at the time that it in fact definitely locates its line of road.

It will be noticed that the third finding of the register and receiver states that on the 20th day of October the land in dispute contained "the improvements of a bona fide settler," which, as they held, also excepted the tract from the grant. This matter is also referred to in the opinion of the supreme court of Utah. But the exception in the amendatory act of 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 358, chap. 216, § 4), of "the improvements of any bona fide settler," so far from sustaining the conclusion of the local officers, makes against it, for specifically exempting improvements contemplates cases in which the settler shall have a right to remove his improvements, although he may not have a right to perfect his title to the land. The exception is not of land on which are improvements of a bona fide settler, but simply the improvements of a bona fide settler, thus distinguishing between a right to the land and a right to be protected in respect to the improvements.

Recapitulating, we are of opinion that a proper interpretation of the acts of Congress making railroad grants like the one in question requires that the relative rights of the company and an individual entryman must be determined, not by the act of the company in itself fixing definitely the line of its road, or by the mere occupancy of the individual, but by record evidence, on the one part the filing of the map in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and, on the other, the declaration or entry in the local land office. In this way, matters resting on oral testimony are eliminated, a certainty and definiteness is given to the rights of each, the grant becomes fixed and definite; and while, as repeatedly held, the railroad company may not question the validity or propriety of the entryman's claim of record, its rights ought not to be defeated, long years after its title had apparently fixed, by fugitive and uncertain testimony of occupation; for if that be the rule, as admitted by counsel for defendant in error on the argument, the time will [229] never come at which *it can be certain that the railroad company has acquired an indefeasible title to any tract.

For these reasons we are of the opinion that the judgment of the Supreme Court of the State of Utah is erroneous, and it must be reversed, and the case remanded to that court for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Dissenting: The CHIEF JUSTICE; Mr. Justice Harlan; Mr. Justice White.

ADA F. McDONNELL, Plff. in Err.,
v.

LLEWELLYN JORDAN.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 229-239.)

Removal of causes—for prejudice or local influence—application too late.

An application for the removal of a will contest to a circuit court of the United States for "prejudice or local influence," if authorized by the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888, providing for the removal of causes "at any time before the trial thereof," comes too late when first made after a mistrial of the cause in a state probate court.

[No. 253.]

Argued April 19, 20, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Alabama to review a decision in a cause removed from a state court. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

*Mattie Lee Fennell, a citizen of the county of Madison, state of Alabama, died on the 5th day of August, 1897, leaving a will executed by her December 17, 1895, in which she devised and bequeathed all her property, real, personal, or mixed, to her mother, Mrs. M. E. Fennell, for life, and on her death to Llewellyn Jordan of the state of Mississippi. The will specifically provided that if the mother should die before the death of the testatrix, Llewellyn Jordan should take. Said Llewellyn Jordan and Walter E. Jordan, a citizen of Madison county, Alabama, were nominated and appointed executors of the will, *to act as such without bond. [229] The mother died in 1896. February 9, 1897, Walter E. Jordan, one of the executors named, presented his petition to the probate court of Madison county, Alabama, together with the original will, to have said will admitted to probate. The petition stated that the sister of testatrix, Ada F. McDonnell, resident of Madison county, was her next of kin, and would have been her only heir had she died intestate; that Llewellyn Jordan was temporarily residing at Washington, District of Columbia; that the attesting witnesses resided at Huntsville, Alabama; and prayed that a date might be set for the hear- [230]

NOTE.—As to removal of causes for prejudice or local influence—see Schwenk v. Strang, 3 C. C. A. 95, and note. See also notes to Gaines v. Fuentes, 23 L. ed. U. S. 524; Jefferson v. Driver, 29 L. ed. U. S. 897.

As to removal of causes generally—see notes to Butler v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 36 L. ed. U. S. 346; Torrence v. Shedd, 36 L. ed. U. S. 528.

As to time within which application must be made—see Huskins v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (C. C. N. D. Tenn.) 3 L. R. A. 545 and note, Brodhead v. Shoemaker (C. C. N. D. Ga.) 11 L. R. A. 567 and note. And see note to Bierbower v. Miller (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 230.

ing of the petition and due notice thereof be given as required by law to the next of kin of said deceased, and that such decrees, orders, and other proceedings might be had and made in the premises as might be necessary to effect the due probate of said will according to law.

On the 11th day of February, 1897, Ada F. McDonnell, a sister, and only heir at law, of Mattie Lee Fennell, filed in the probate court her written contest of the alleged will, based on certain grounds therein set forth, and demanded a trial by jury. April 1, 1897, a jury was impaneled to try the contest, and an issue was then made up by the court between Walter E. Jordan, as plaintiff, and Ada F. McDonnell as defendant, and the trial entered upon. On April 15, 1897, after having considered the case, the jury came into court and reported that they were unable to agree upon a verdict, whereupon the jury were discharged, and the case was continued.

May 28, 1897, Walter E. Jordan applied to the probate court to amend his petition by alleging "that the said Llewellyn Jordan is the sole legatee and devisee under said will, and is the person really interested in defending the validity of said will and in answering and defending the contest filed in said court to annul and make invalid said will;" and to add to the prayer of his petition the following: "Petitioner prays that citation and all proper notice be given the said Llewellyn Jordan of this case and contest, and that he be made a party defendant to this petition."

[231] The following order was entered thereon by the probate court, August 3, 1897: "In the matter of the petition of W. E. *Jordan to make Llewellyn Jordan party defendant to this case, and that citation and all proper notice be given said Llewellyn Jordan as such, heretofore filed with the papers in this case, May 28th, 1897, was set for hearing this August 3d, 1897. This day argued by Shelby and Walker for proponent and Richardson and Cooper for contestant. Motion overruled and amendment not allowed and for reason good and satisfactory to this court the further hearing of this contest continued to Sept. 3d, 1897."

On the 4th of August, Llewellyn Jordan, without leave, filed with the clerk of the probate court a paper styled an "answer," which commenced as follows: "In the matter of the contest of the probate of the will of Mattie Lee Fennell comes Llewellyn Jordan, named in the amendment to the petition in this cause filed by Walter E. Jordan, and intervenes in said proceeding and files this his answer to the contest of Ada F. McDonnell;" and on that day the probate court entered the following order: "In this cause a paper, purporting to be an intervention on behalf of Llewellyn Jordan, having been indorsed 'filed' by the clerk of this court, without the knowledge of the court, and said paper being so indorsed filed without an order authorizing said Llewellyn Jordan to intervene herein, and the motion made by Walter E. Jordan, the proponent, praying that said Llewellyn Jordan be made a party defendant hereto, on the 3d day of August, 1897, being overruled and disallowed, it is therefore ordered that said paper purporting to be an intervention of said Llewellyn Jordan be stricken from the files in this cause."

August 5, 1897, Walter E. Jordan, the proponent of the will, filed in the probate court a renunciation of his right to have letters testamentary issued to him, and asked that the same be issued to Llewellyn Jordan, couched in these terms: "The undersigned, Walter E. Jordan, named in the will of Mattie Lee Fennell as one of her executors, renounces his right to have letters testamentary issued to him. He desires that the said will shall be probated, but that letters testamentary should issue alone to the coexecutor named in said will, Llewellyn Jordan."

August 12, 1897, Llewellyn Jordan filed his petition in the *circuit court of the United States for the northern division of the northern district of Alabama to remove to that court the matter of the proceedings to probate and to contest the will of Mattie Lee Fennell, then pending in the probate court, on the ground that from prejudice and local influence he could not obtain justice in the probate court, or any other state court. The circuit court, on the same day, entered an ex parte order removing the cause from the probate court of Madison county, Alabama, to that court. Mrs. McDonnell made motions in the circuit court to remand the cause to the probate court, and to dismiss and strike from the files the petition of Llewellyn Jordan for the removal of the proceedings and cause from the state court.

Among the grounds assigned for the motion to remand were that the circuit court had no jurisdiction of a proceeding to probate a will; that Llewellyn Jordan was not a party defendant "in any suit, proceeding, or controversy in the probate court of Madison county, Alabama, relating to the matter of the probate of the will of Mattie Lee Fennell, deceased," and the circuit court had no jurisdiction by virtue of the petition for removal; that the proceeding to establish the will was not a separate, but a single, controversy; that the application for removal was not made in time, or before the trial of the cause in the state court; and that the application for removal was made too late.

The circuit court maintained jurisdiction, and overruled each of the motions.

A trial was subsequently had in the circuit court, which directed a verdict in favor of Llewellyn Jordan, contestee. A verdict was returned accordingly, and thereupon the court, November 8, 1898, entered this judgment: "It is therefore considered by the court that the contest of Ada F. McDonnell of the last will and testament of Mattie Lee Fennell, deceased, and the several grounds of said contest be, and the same are hereby, overruled and denied. It is further considered and adjudged by the court that the contestee, Llewellyn Jordan, have and recover of the contestant, Ada F. McDonnell, the costs in this behalf expended, for which, if not otherwise paid, an execution may issue."

[233] *Under the same date the court certified to this court the following questions of jurisdiction:

"1. Whether this court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters of controversy shown in the record between said Llewellyn Jordan and Ada F. McDonnell.

"2. Whether this court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause removed to this court from the state court, wherein it is sought to establish and probate the will of Mattie Lee Fennell, deceased, late a resident citizen of the county of Madison, state of Alabama.

"3. Whether this court has jurisdiction to remove the proceedings shown in the record from the state probate court upon the petition of the said Llewellyn Jordan.

"4. Whether this court acquired jurisdiction of the matters in controversy between the said Llewellyn Jordan and Ada F. McDonnell upon the petition of the said Llewellyn Jordan to remove the said proceedings from the state probate court to this court.

"5. Whether this court has jurisdiction to entertain the petition of the said Llewellyn Jordan for the removal of said proceeding to this court after the mistrial of said cause in the state probate court as shown by the record filed herein.

"6. Whether this court has jurisdiction to entertain the petition of said Llewellyn Jordan to remove said cause from the state probate court to this court after a jury had been impaneled in the state probate court, the trial entered upon, the failure of the jury to agree, and a mistrial of said cause entered in said probate court.

"7. Whether this court has jurisdiction of the petition of said Llewellyn Jordan to remove said cause from said probate court to this court after filing in said probate court an answer to the contest of said will."

A writ of error was applied for and allowed March 15, 1899, and the record showed an order on March 16 adjourning "the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northern district and northern division" sine die. On the 4th of April, 1899, the judge of the circuit court entered on the certificate a statement that though it was [234] dated November 8, 1898, *it was actually signed "on the 15th day of March, 1899, at Birmingham, Alabama."

Mr. Lawrence Cooper argued the cause and, with Mr. William Richardson, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A mistrial is a trial of a cause within the meaning of the provision of the act of Congress of 1888, authorizing a petition for removal to be filed "at any time before the trial thereof."

Fisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 35 L. ed. 1079, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. Schuster, 52 U. S. App. 612, 86 Fed. Rep. 161, 29 C. C. A. 649; Gregory v. Boston Safe-Deposit & T. Co. 88 Fed. Rep. 3; Young v. Andes Ins. Co. 1 Flipp. 599, Fed. Cas. No. 18,151; Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 687, 38 L. ed. 316, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v.
1050

Burns, 124 U. S. 165, 31 L. ed. 333, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 421; Edrington v. Jefferson, 111 U. S. 770, 28 L. ed. 594, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 683; Fox v. Southern R. Co. 80 Fed. Rep. 945; Ayers v. Watson, 113 U. S. 594, 28 L. ed. 1093, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 641; Gurnee v. Brunswick County, 1 Hughes, 270, Fed. Cas. No. 5,872; Alley v. Nott, 111 U. S. 472, 28 L. ed. 491, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; American Bible Soc. v. Grove, 101 U. S. 610, 25 L. ed. 847; Holland v. Chambers, 110 U. S. 59, 28 L. ed. 70, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Babbitt v. Clark, 103 U. S. 606, 26 L. ed. 507; Myers v. Swann, 107 U. S. 546, 27 L. ed. 583, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 685; Rosenthal v. Coates, 148 U. S. 142, 37 L. ed. 399, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576.

Mr. Richard W. Walker argued the cause and, with Mr. Heber J. May, filed a brief for defendant in error:

A removal is never too late when the application is made as soon as the proceeding assumes the shape of a removable cause in the court in which it originated.

Powers v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 169 U. S. 101, 42 L. ed. 676, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 264; Speckart v. German Nat. Bank, 85 Fed. Rep. 12; Burdick v. Peterson, 2 McCrary, 135, 6 Fed. Rep. 840; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 990, note; Hack v. Chicago G. S. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 356; Snow v. Texas Trunk R. Co. 4 Woods, 394, 16 Fed. Rep. 1.

After the time for removal is out, if the complaint is amended so as to create a new cause of action the case may then be removed.

Bailey v. Mosher, 95 Fed. Rep. 223; Mattoon v. Reynolds, 62 Fed. Rep. 417.

The same principle would authorize a removal when a new party appears, whose presence then for the first time injects into the case the features which gives the right of removal.

*Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the [234] opinion of the court:

The question of jurisdiction was certified before the adjournment of the term of the circuit court of the United States for the northern district and northern division of Alabama, at which term the judgment was entered, and we decline, under the circumstances disclosed, to discuss what the effect might have been if the certificate had shown on its face that it was in fact signed in the southern division of the district within which the presiding judge had jurisdiction.

Petitions for removal and motions to remand are matters of record proper. Ordinarily papers filed in support thereof are not so unless made part thereof by bill of exceptions, though sometimes this is otherwise. England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502, 28 L. ed. 811, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287; Bronson v. Schulten, 104 U. S. 410, 26 L. ed. 797; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. ed. 643.

We are not concerned here with the proofs as to prejudice or local influence.

By § 4272 of the Civil Code of Alabama, it is provided that, "upon the death of a testator, any executor, devisee, or legatee named in the will, or any person interested in the estate, may have the will proved before the proper probate court." As Mrs. Fennell was an inhabitant of Madison county at the time of her death, the probate court of that county was the proper probate court (§ 4273); and as Walter E. Jordan and Llewellyn Jordan were named executors, and Llewellyn Jordan was the sole devisee and legatee, either of them could propound the will for probate. By § 4284 it was [235] provided that, "whenever *an application is made to prove a will in this state, at least ten days' notice must be given to the widow and next of kin, or to either of them, residing and being within the state, before such application is heard." In this case Mrs. McDonnell was the next of kin and sole heir at law, and was duly notified.

Section 4287 provides that "a will, before the probate thereof, may be contested by any person interested therein, or by any person who, if the testator had died intestate, would have been an heir or distributee of his estate, by filing in the court where it is offered for probate allegations in writing that the will was not duly executed, or of the unsoundness of mind of the testator, or of any other valid objections thereto; and thereupon an issue must be made up, under the direction of the court, between the person making the application, as plaintiff, and the person contesting the validity of the will, as defendant; and such issue must, on application of either party, be tried by a jury."

Section 4298 reads that "any person interested in any will, who has not contested the same under the provisions of this article, may, at any time within eighteen months after the admission of such will to probate in this state, contest the validity of the same by bill in chancery, in the district in which such will was probated, or in the district in which a material defendant resides."

Mrs. McDonnell filed her allegations in writing contesting the will on the grounds that it was not signed by the subscribing witnesses in the presence of the alleged testatrix; nor by testatrix in the presence of the subscribing witnesses; nor was the alleged will signed by the witnesses at the request of the testatrix; nor by the subscribing witnesses in the presence of each other and in the presence of testatrix; that the testatrix at the time the alleged will was signed and executed was of unsound mind and memory, and not mentally capable of making a will; that the execution of the will was procured by fraud and undue influence of Llewellyn Jordan; and that the paper propounded was not the last will and testament of Mrs. Fennell; and she demanded a jury trial. The cause was duly set down for trial as between [236] W. E. Jordan, proponent, and *Ada F. McDonnell, contestant, and was subsequently tried, the trial continuing some days, and on April 15, 1897, the jury being unable to agree upon a verdict, was discharged.

After this mistrial Walter E. Jordan applied to the probate court to allow him to make Llewellyn Jordan a party defendant to his petition that the will be admitted to probate. As Llewellyn Jordan was a coexector, and the sole devisee and legatee, the probate court, on the 3d of August, declined to grant the application. If Llewellyn Jordan had applied to be formally admitted as co-proponent, it must be assumed that he would have been permitted to become such of record, but he made no such application. Then, on August 4, the paper purporting to be an "answer" of Llewellyn Jordan was filed by the clerk, without leave, or knowledge of the court, and on the same day was struck from the files as improvidently placed thereon. The succeeding day, August 5, Walter E. Jordan renounced the executorship, and asked that letters issue to his coexecutor, Llewellyn Jordan. August 12 the order of removal was entered by the circuit court.

The contention of plaintiff in error is that the proceeding in the probate court of Madison county was simply a proceeding to establish and probate the will, and as such was not a "suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity," and therefore not removable; that if the proceeding were otherwise removable, Llewellyn Jordan was not a defendant and could not remove; and that the application for removal came too late.

The decisions of the supreme court of Alabama recognize that an application for the probate of a will is a proceeding in rem, but it is held that it becomes a suit inter partes where there is a contest, that is, "a suit between the party alleging the existence of the will and the contestant." And that the result of the statutory provisions is to afford two modes of contest, in the probate court before the will has been proved, or in the chancery court after probate by the institution of a suit by those who were not parties to a contest in the probate court. Knox v. Paull, 95 Ala. 505, 11 So. 156, and cases cited.

Undoubtedly the courts of the United States possess no jurisdiction over an ex parte application for the probate of a will, *that [237] is, for the proof thereof in common form, which is purely a proceeding in rem; but it is insisted by defendant in error that, by the institution of a contest, a case of controversy inter partes arises, which may be removed to the circuit court just as such a contest may be under the state statute removed by change of venue from the probate court, where the will is propounded, to the probate court of another county, and that the judgment of the Federal court in such a case must be recognized by the probate court of original jurisdiction, just as by statute the judgment of another probate court to which the proceeding has been remitted is certified to that court that the will may be probated or rejected as that judgment is for or against the validity. Code 1896, § 4296.

Assuming, without deciding, this to be so, the question presents itself as to the position occupied by the proponent and the contestant, respectively, and the statute says that on a contest on admission to probate, "an issue must be made up, under the direction of the court, between the person making the application as plaintiff, and the person contesting the validity of the will, as defendant."

And the issue on this contest was made up by the probate court of Madison county accordingly.

Notwithstanding this, defendant in error contends that the contestant is the real plaintiff, and that, within the meaning of the act of Congress in respect of removals, "the contestee is a defendant because he is brought into court against his will by the necessity of defending his right under the will, and his involuntary presence there subjects him to the local prejudice and influence, protection against which is the object of the statute."

[238] In this connection it is proper to say that it is obvious on the face of these proceedings that the effort of Llewellyn Jordan to become a party to the record was so limited to being made such in a particular capacity as to clearly indicate that it was with the object of making the application for removal. But whether as coexecutor or as sole legatee and devisee, his appearance in the cause would be as proponent of or on behalf of the will, and not against it, and without going into the authorities *as to where the burden of proof lies when a contest is initiated as to the validity of a will, when it is presented for probate, and even conceding that the specific provision of this state statute may be disregarded, we are nevertheless of opinion that the application to remove came too late.

Under the statutes of Alabama, Llewellyn Jordan might have propounded the will, either as executor or legatee. He might have intervened as interested, if he had feared that his coexecutor, who did propound the will, would not do justice, of which there is no pretense here. But he could not lie by, permit the will to be propounded, a contest to be initiated, and a trial had, and at that stage intervene and remove the case.

This was a will and testament, disposing of personal as well as of real property; and was propounded by one of two executors named therein. The statute required notice only to the widow and next of kin, and not to beneficiaries under the will.

There is nothing whatever in the evidence to indicate that Llewellyn Jordan was in fact ignorant of the will, of its presentation for probate, or of the initiation of the contest. The presumptions are against him, and he was at least so far represented by his coexecutor that when he applied to come in, and treating the case as if he had come in, he took his place by intervention subject to such disabilities as to the right of removal as then existed.

In Hanrick v. Hanrick, 153 U. S. 192, 197, 38 L. ed. 685, 687, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835, 837, it was said: "The act of March 3, 1887, chap. 373, corrected by the act of August 13, 1888, chap. 866, was intended, as this court has often recognized, to contract the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, whether original over suits brought therein, or by removal from the state courts. It not only amends the act of 1875, but it allows to none but defendants the right to remove any case whatever, and, by new regulations of removals for prejudice or local influence, supercedes and repeals the earlier statutes upon this subject. 24 Stat. at L. 553; 25 Stat. at L. 434; Smith v. Lyon, 133 U. S. 315, 33 L. ed. 635, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 303; Fisk v. Henarie, 142 U. S. 459, 35 L. ed. 1079, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Tennessee v. Union & P. Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654."

In Fisk v. Henarie, there cited, this court ruled that the words in the act of March 3, 1887, as corrected by the act of *August 13, [239] 1888, "at any time before the trial thereof," used in regard to removals "from prejudice or local influence," require the application to remove to be filed before or at the term at which the cause could first be tried and before the trial thereof. Tested by that ruling this application to remove came too late.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court with directions to remand it to the Probate Court of Madison County, Alabama.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY, Appl.,

v.

ANN ARBOR RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 239-244.)

Removal of causes—allegation that suit arose under Constitution and laws of the United States—jurisdiction.

A bill does not show that the suit arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States by an averment in a suit by a telegraph company for specific performance of a contract for the use of a railroad right of way and for an injunction against interference with its rights, to the effect that it has a right to maintain its telegraph line on the railroad "under the provisions of the statute of the United States," as it has long been settled that the statute does not confer on telegraph companies the right to enter on private property without the consent of the owner.

[No. 202.]

*Argued and Submitted March 19, 20, 1900.
Decided May 21, 1900.*

APPEAL from a decree of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit affirming a decree of the Circuit Court dismissing a bill for an injunction against interfering with a telegraph line along a railroad. Reversed.

See same case below, 61 U. S. App. 741, 90 Fed. Rep. 379, 33 C. C. A. 113.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

*This was a bill filed in the circuit court [239] of Benzie county, Michigan, by the Western

NOTE.—As to removal of causes from state to Federal courts when United States Constitution, Act of Congress, or treaty comes in question—see note to Little York Gold Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 24 L. ed. U. S. 656.

As to removal of causes generally—see notes to Butler v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 36 L. ed. U. S. 346; Torrence v. Shedd, 36 L. ed. U. S. 528.

[240] Union Telegraph Company against the Ann Arbor Railroad Company, to restrain defendant from interfering with the rights of complainant in a certain telegraph line along defendant's railroad. The bill stated the Western Union Telegraph Company to be "a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York, and a citizen of the said state of New York," and the Ann Arbor Railroad Company to be "a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Michigan and a citizen of said state of Michigan." The bill alleged that on the 25th day of September, 1890, the Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad Company, a corporation of the state of Michigan, owned and operated a railroad from Frankfort to near Copemish, Michigan; that on that day complainant entered into a contract with the Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad Company for the construction and maintenance of a telegraph line along the entire length of its road; that in pursuance of the contract and in May, June, and July, 1891, complainant built the telegraph lines provided for therein; that one wire was erected for the joint use of the railroad company and complainant, and a loop to Frankfort and back was put on the poles for the exclusive use of complainant. It was further alleged that the railroad of the Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad Company was sold some time in May, 1892, and transferred to the Toledo, Ann Arbor, & North Michigan Railroad Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Michigan; that afterwards said last-mentioned company mortgaged their entire railroad to the Farmers' Loan & Trust Company as trustee, and said mortgage being in default a bill was filed to foreclose it in September, 1893, in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Michigan, to which foreclosure suit complainant was not a party; that the whole road was sold under order of court and conveyed to the Ann Arbor Railroad Company, and the sale and conveyance were confirmed; that the last-mentioned company now claimed to be in possession and operating the road formerly known as the Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad. And, further, that the Ann Arbor Railroad Company purchased the road with full knowledge of complainant's rights, but that it insisted that it was not bound by the contract made with the Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad Company, and had given complainant written notice to that effect.

The sixth and seventh paragraphs of the bill were as follows:

[241] "6th. Your orator is now and long has been doing an extensive telegraph business in many parts of the United States. On January 7, 1867, it filed with the Postmaster General its acceptance of the provisions of the act of the United States passed July 24, 1866.

"7th. It avers that the provisions of the contract with said Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad Company are binding on said Ann Arbor Company, and that, independent of said contract, it has a right to maintain its telegraph line on what was formerly said Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad under the provisions of the statute of the United States."
178 U. S.

It was further averred that about October 1, 1895, the Ann Arbor Railroad Company took possession of complainant's wires between Thompsonville, near Copemish, and Frankfort, and cut off their connection with its other wires, and deprived complainant of telegraphic connection with Frankfort; that the value of the telegraph lines was at least the sum of $3,000, and the damages arising through loss of business large, but incapable of accurate calculation; that October 14, 1895, complainant reconnected the telegraph lines running from Thompsonville to Frankfort, and so again opened telegraphic communication with the latter place, and was now in full possession and use of said lines; but that complainant was justly apprehensive that, unless restrained by injunction, defendant would again seize said telegraph lines and deprive complainant of their use.

The prayer was for process and answer, "and that an injunction, both preliminary and final, may be issued out of and under the seal of this court, commanding the said Ann Arbor Railroad Company and all its officers and agents to absolutely desist and refrain from in any way interfering with the rights of complainant as alleged in this bill, in the telegraph wires and poles running from Thompsonville to Frankfort, or its possession of the same, and that said defendant allow said complainant to reconnect said wires to its main line on the Chicago & West Michigan Railroad, and to use said wires for its telegraph business in the same way as it was accustomed to use them before its rights were disturbed by said defendant, and that defendant be required to carry out said contract in good faith and for such other and further or different relief, or both, as may be agreeable to equity and good conscience."

Defendant filed its petition and bond for the removal of the cause into the circuit [242] court of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan, alleging that it was a citizen of the state of Michigan, and that complainant was a citizen of New York, and then stating: "Your petitioner further shows to the court that the matter and amount in dispute in the above-entitled cause exceeds, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum and value of two thousand dollars ($2,000); that this suit is one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and especially under the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, now contained in § 5263 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the amendments thereto." The cause having been removed, defendant filed an answer and cross bill, setting up the existence of a mortgage prior to the alleged contract and its foreclosure, and other matters. Certain facts were stipulated, and the cause submitted. The circuit court decreed a dismissal of the bill. From this decree an appeal was taken to the circuit court of appeals, and that court affirmed the decree. 61 U. S. App. 741, 90 Fed. Rep. 379, 33 C. C. A. 113. From the decree of the circuit court of appeals the Western Union Telegraph Company appealed to this court.

Mr. John F. Dillon argued the cause and, with Messrs. Rush Taggart and George H. Fearons, filed a brief for appellant.

Mr. Alexander L. Smith submitted the cause for appellee.

[242] *Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The Western Union Telegraph Company might have instituted its suit in the circuit court, but it sought the state tribunals, as it had the right to do, and the defendant could not remove the case on the ground of diverse citizenship, although that fact existed, because it was itself a resident of the state. Defendant's application to remove, therefore, was based on the averment that the suit arose "under the Constitution and laws of the United States." Whether it did so arise depended on complainant's statement of its own case. Tennessee v. Union & P. Bank, 152 U. S. 454, 38 L. ed. 511, 14 Sup.

[243] Ct. Rep. 654. *And the 6th and 7th paragraphs of the bill contain all that defendant could have relied on as bringing the case within that category. These paragraphs were to the effect that complainant had accepted the provisions of the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, and that, independent of the contract, it had "a right to maintain its telegraph line on what was formerly said Frankfort & Southeastern Railroad, under the provisions of the statute of the United States."

The bill was in legal effect a bill for the specific performance of the contract set up in the pleadings, and the prayer was for injunction against interference with complainant's alleged rights, and that defendant allow complainant to reconnect its said wires, and use them in the same way as before they were disturbed by defendant, "and that defendant be required to carry out said contract in good faith," and for general relief.

It was not argued by counsel for the telegraph company that the telegraph company had any right under the statute, and independently of the contract, to maintain and operate this telegraph line over the railroad company's property; and it has been long settled that that statute did not confer on telegraph companies the right to enter on private property without the consent of the owner, and erect the necessary structures for their business; "but it does provide that, whenever the consent of the owner is obtained, no state legislation shall prevent the occupation of post roads for telegraph purposes by such corporations as are willing to avail themselves of its privileges." Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 1, 24 L. ed. 708. In that case Mr. Chief Justice Waite further said: "No question arises as to the authority of Congress to provide for the appropriation of private property to the uses of the telegraph, for no such attempt has been made. The use of public property alone is granted. If private property is required, it must, so far as the present legislation is concerned, be obtained by private arrangement with its owner. No compulsory proceedings are authorized."

When a suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy as to the effect or construction of the Constitution or laws of the United States, upon the determination *of which the result depends, it is [244] not a suit arising under the Constitution or laws. And it must appear on the record, by a statement in legal and logical form, such as is required in good pleading, that the suit is one which does really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy as to a right which depends on the construction of the Constitution or some law or treaty of the United States, before jurisdiction can be maintained on this ground. Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 24 L. ed. 656; Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, ante, 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222.

We are unable to perceive that paragraphs 6th and 7th meet this requirement, and it does not appear to us that they were intended to do so by the pleader. As we have said, it was not asserted in argument that the telegraph company had the right independently of the contract to maintain its line on the railroad company's property, and in view of the settled construction of the statute we could not permit such a contention to be recognized as the basis of jurisdiction. But it was argued that by virtue of the statute the telegraph company was possessed of a public character and was discharging public duties, and that, although the interest it acquired by its contract was subject to the prior mortgage, it could not be absolutely deprived thereof by foreclosure, but that the circuit court should have so framed its decree as to preserve the occupancy of the telegraph company, subject to making compensation to the railroad company, the value of the alleged easement to be ascertained by the court. It is sufficient to say that the bill was not framed in that aspect, and, though there was a prayer for general relief, relief cannot be awarded under that prayer unless it is such relief as is agreeable to the case made by the bill. And it is entirely clear that there were no averments in the bill in respect of this contention, which would bring the case within the category of cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States so that jurisdiction could be held to have rested on that ground.

The result is that the decrees of the Circuit Court of Appeals and of the Circuit Court must be reversed, and the cause be remanded to the latter court with a direction to remand it to the state court. And it is so ordered.

[245]*CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY and S. H. H. Clark et al., Receivers of the Union Pacific Railway Company, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

LISSA MARTIN, Administratrix of the Estate of William Martin, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 245-251.)

Removal of causes—necessity that defendants must unite in petition.

All the defendants must unite in a petition for the removal to a Federal court, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1887, as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888, of a cause arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, where a joint cause of action is alleged against all the defendants for causing the death of a person.

[No. 135.]

Submitted January 31, 1900: Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas to review a decision affirming a judgment rendered in a state court after refusing a petition for its removal to a Federal court. Affirmed.

See same case below, 59 Kan. 437, 53 Pac. 461.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

[245] *This was an action brought by Lissa Martin as administratrix of William Martin, deceased, against the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railroad Company, and Clark and others, receivers of the Union Pacific Railway Company, in the district court of Clay county, Kansas, to recover damages for the death of the decedent. Plaintiff's petition was filed January 26, 1894, and on February 14, 1894, the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railroad Company filed its separate answer thereto. February 20, 1894, defendants Clark and others, as receivers, presented their petition and bond, praying for the removal of the cause to the United States circuit court for the district of Kansas, on the ground that the case arose under the Constitution and laws of the United States, which application was overruled by the district court, and the receivers duly excepted. The cause was tried, the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff and against all the defendants, and judgment was entered thereon. The cause was taken on error to the supreme court of Kansas by the defendants, and the judgment was by that court affirmed. 59 Kan. 437, 53 Pac. 461.

NOTE.—As to removal of causes from state to Federal courts when United States Constitution, Act of Congress, or treaty come in question—see note to Little York Gold Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 24 L. ed. U. S. 656.

As to removal of causes generally—see notes to Butler v. National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 56 L. ed. U. S. 346; Torrence v. Shedd, 36 L. ed. U. S. 528.

As to removal by one of two or more defendants—see note to Sloane v. Anderson, 29 L. ed. U. S. 899.

178 U. S.

*The refusal of the state court to remove the cause to the circuit court of the United States on the application of the receivers was relied on as error throughout the proceedings, and the supreme court of Kansas held, among other things, that the application for removal was properly denied because all the defendants were charged with jointly causing the death of plaintiff's intestate, and all did not join in the petition for removal.

Messrs. Winslow S. Pierce, A. L. Williams, W. R. Kelly, N. H. Loomis, M. A. Low, and W. F. Evans submitted the cause for plaintiffs in error:

As the removal was sought on the ground that the case was one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the requirements of the law were satisfied by having the application made by the parties entitled to raise the Federal questions involved, without joining their codefendant.

Fisk v. Union P. R. Co. 6 Blatchf. 362, Fed. Cas. No. 4,827; Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 406, 35 L. ed. 442, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 819, 840; Southern P. R. Co. v. Townsend, 62 Fed. Rep. 161; Landers v. Felton, 73 Fed. Rep. 311; Lund v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 78 Fed. Rep. 385.

A person having a defense arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States cannot be deprived of his right to maintain his defense in the Federal courts, by joining other defendants not affected by the Federal question.

Sonnenheil v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co. 172 U. S. 401, 43 L. ed. 492, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233.

Mr. A. A. Godard submitted the cause for defendant in error. Mr. F. B. Dawes was with him on the brief.

Even if a Federal question was involved, it was absolutely necessary for the defendant railroad company to join in the application, to effect the removal to the Federal court.

Dillon, Removal of Causes, 5th ed. § 80; Shearing v. Trumbull, 75 Fed. Rep. 33; Chesapeake, O. & S. W. R. Co. v. Smith, 101 Ky. 707, 42 S. W. 538.

The courts are unanimous that this is the law in all cases where removal is on the grounds of diverse citizenship.

Thompson v. Chicago, St. P. & K. C. R. Co. 60 Fed. Rep. 773, and cases cited; Guarantee Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 95 Va. 480, 28 S. E. 909; Kane v. Indianapolis, 82 Fed. Rep. 770; Ruohs v. Jarvis-Conklin Mortg. Trust Co. 84 Fed. Rep. 513; Deere v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 85 Fed. Rep. 876; Carr v. Kansas City, 87 Fed. Rep. 1.

*Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the [246] opinion of the court:

Assuming that as to the receivers the case may be said to have arisen under the Constitution and laws of the United States, the question is whether it was necessary for the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railroad Company, defendant, to join in the application of its codefendants, the receivers of the Union Pacific Railway Company, to effect a removal to the circuit court.

The Rock Island Company was not a corporation of Kansas, and all the receivers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company were citizens of some other state than the state of Kansas. But the receivers applied for removal, after the Rock Island Company had answered, on the ground that the suit was, as to them, "one arising under the laws of the United States," in that they were appointed receivers by the circuit court of the United States for the districts of Nebraska and Kansas, to take charge of and to operate a corporation created by the consolidation, under acts of Congress, of a corporation of the United States, a corporation of Kansas, and a corporation of Colorado.

The act of March 3, 1887, as corrected by the act of August 13, 1888 (25 Stat. at L. 433, chap. 866, § 2), provides:

[247] "That any suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, arising *under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by the preceding section, which may now be pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any state court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the circuit court of the United States for the proper district. Any other suit of a civil nature, at law or in equity, of which the circuit courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by the preceding section, and which are now pending, or which may hereafter be brought, in any state court, may be removed into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that state. And when in any suit mentioned in this section there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different states, and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district. And where a suit is now pending, or may be hereafter brought, in any state court, in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the state in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another state, any defendant, being such citizen of another state, may remove such suit into the circuit court of the United States for the proper district, at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be made to appear to said circuit court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such state court."

It thus appears on the face of the statute that if a suit arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or if it is a suit between citizens of different states, the defendant, if there be but one, may remove, or the defendants if there be more than one; but where the suit is between citizens of different states, and there is a separable controversy, then either one or more of the defendants may remove.

Under the 1st clause of § 2 of the act of 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 470, chap. 137), which applied to "either party," but in its re-enactment in the 2d clause of § 2 of the act of 1887, *above quoted, is confined to the defend- [248] ant or defendants, it was well settled that a removal could not be effected unless all the parties on the same side of the controversy united in the petition; and so as to the 2d clause of the 2d section of the act of 1875, which corresponds with the 3d clause of the 2d section of the act of 1887, it was held that that clause only applied where there were two or more controversies in the same suit, one of which was wholly between citizens of different states. Hanrick v. Hanrick, 153 U. S. 192, 38 L. ed. 685, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 835, and cases cited; Torrence v. Shedd, 144 U. S. 527, 36 L. ed. 528, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726, and cases cited. In the latter case Mr. Justice Gray said: "As this court has repeatedly affirmed, not only in cases of joint contracts, but in actions for torts, which might have been brought against all or against any one of the defendants, 'separate answers by the several defendants sued on joint causes of action may present different questions for determination, but they do not necessarily divide the suit into separate controversies. A defendant has no right to say that an action shall be several which a plaintiff elects to make joint. A separate defense may defeat a joint recovery, but it cannot deprive a plaintiff of his right to prosecute his own suit to final determination in his own way. The cause of action is the subject-matter of the controversy, and that is for all the purposes of the suit, whatever the plaintiff declares it to be in his pleadings.'" And see Whitcomb v. Smithson, 175 U. S. 635, ante, 303, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 248.

There was no separable controversy here. The case presented a joint cause of action against all the defendants, and, indeed, the removal was applied for on the ground that the suit arose under the Constitution and laws of the United States. It therefore came within the first clause of the section quoted, and if the same rule governs proceedings under that clause that obtains in respect of the second clause, the judgment of the supreme court of Kansas must be affirmed. And in view of the language of the statute we think the proper conclusion is that all the defendants must join in the application under either clause.

We do not regard Sonnenheil v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co. 172 U. S. 401, 43 L. ed. 492, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233, as in point. There an action had been brought in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district *of Texas by a citizen of Texas, [249] against an Ohio corporation and a United States marshal, the jurisdiction depending as to one defendant on diverse citizenship, and as to the other on the case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, and the question was whether the judgment of the circuit court of appeals was made final by the act of March 3, 1891, which we held it was not, as the jurisdiction was not dependent entirely upon the opposite parties to the suit being citizens of different states.

Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 406, 35 L. ed. 442, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 819, 840, is, however, justly pressed on our attention as of weight in the disposition of the particular question raised in this case.

The case was this: Mitchell was a citizen of Illinois, and commenced an action of ejectment in the circuit court of Cook county, in that state, against three defendants, Jabez G. Smale, and John J. and Frank I. Bennett. The Bennetts, who were attorneys, appeared specially for Conrad N. Jordan, and moved that he be substituted as sole defendant. The motion was made upon an affidavit of Jordan that the Bennetts had no interest, having conveyed the property to him before the suit was commenced, and that Smale was a mere tenant under him, Jordan, and had no other interest. The court denied the motion, and thereupon Jordan was admitted to defend the cause as landlord and codefendant. Afterwards, and in due time, Jordan filed a petition, under the act of 1875, for the removal of the cause into the circuit court of the United States, alleging as ground of removal that the plaintiff was a citizen of Illinois, and that he, Jordan, was a citizen of New York, and was the owner of the property, and that the sole controversy in the case was between him, Jordan, and the plaintiff, stating the facts previously affirmed in his affidavit as to the want of interest in the Bennetts, and the tenancy of Smale. Subsequently Jordan obtained leave to amend his petition, and amended it so as to set up that as between him and plaintiff the controversy involved the authority of the Land Department of the United States to grant certain patents, under which he claimed the right to hold the land in dispute, after and in view of the patent under which plaintiff claimed the same [250] land. As Smale was merely a tenant, *the court held that there was no good reason why the contest respecting the title might not have been carried on between Jordan and plaintiff alone so far as Smale was concerned; but as to the Bennetts the court thought there was greater difficulty in sustaining a removal, because they were made defendants apparently in good faith, and were not acknowledged to be tenants of Jordan, and plaintiff might well insist on prosecuting his action against them, as well as against Jordan, in order that, if he should be successful, there might be no failure of a complete recovery of the land claimed by him, but inasmuch as Jordan exhibited a claim under the authority of the United States, which was contested by Mitchell on the ground of the want of that authority, while it was true that laws of the state of Illinois might be invoked by the parties, still it was no less true that the authority of the United States to make the grant relied on would be necessarily called in question. In view of that defense the jurisdiction was sustained apparently on the ground that there [250] 178 U. S.

was a separable controversy, and the particular terms of the different clauses of the statute were really not discussed.

The case was a peculiar one, and we must decline to allow it to control the determination of that before us.

In Little York Gold-Washing & Water Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S. 199, 203, 24 L. ed. 656, 658, Mr. Chief Justice Waite said: "A cause cannot be removed from a state court simply because, in the progress of the litigation, it may become necessary to give a construction to the Constitution or laws of the United States. The decision of the case must depend upon that construction. The suit must, in part at least, arise out of a controversy between the parties in regard to the operation and effect of the Constitution or laws upon the facts involved. . . . Before, therefore, a circuit court can be required to retain a cause under this jurisdiction, it must in some form appear upon the record, by a statement of facts, 'in legal and logical form,' such as is required in good pleading, . . . that the suit is one which 'really and substantially involves a dispute or controversy' as to a right which depends upon the construction or effect of the Constitution, or some law *or treaty of the [251] United States." Blackburn v. Portland Gold Min. Co. 175 U. S. 571, ante, 276, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 222.

In Mitchell v. Smale the claim of Jordan was treated by the court as coming within that ruling, but the case before us does not. This was an ordinary action under a state statute for wrongfully causing the death of plaintiff's intestate. No Federal question was in fact presented by the pleadings nor litigated at the trial. The liability depended on principles of general law applicable to the facts, and not in any way upon the terms of the order appointing the receivers. Whatever the rights of the receivers to remove the cause if they had been sued alone, the controversy was not a separable controversy within the intent and meaning of the act. This being so, the case came solely within the first clause of the section, and we are of opinion that it was not intended by Congress that, under such circumstances, there should be any difference between the rule applied under the 1st and the 2d clauses of § 2 of the act of 1887-8.

Judgment affirmed.

FRANK M. RIDER, John F. Burgess, and Samuel M. Rutledge, Commissioners of Muskingum County, Ohio, Plffs. in Err.,
v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 251-261.)

Bridges—order of Secretary of War to alter—liability of municipal officers.

1. Failure to comply with an order of the Secretary of War directing an alteration in a bridge to facilitate navigation will not subject municipal officers to criminal prosecution under the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888, as amended by the act of Congress of September 19, 1890, where such officers have not in their hands the funds to do the work, and under the laws of the state cannot obtain them within the time fixed by the Secretary's order for the completion of the work.

2. The failure of municipal officers to suggest any want of public moneys in their hands for the alteration of a bridge, or any want of power to obtain the funds, until after the Secretary of War has made an order for such alteration, does not preclude them from setting up those facts in defense of their criminal liability under the river and harbor act of August 11, 1888, as amended by the act of Congress of September 19, 1890.

[No. 40.]

Argued January 26, 27, 1899. Ordered for reargument February 20, 1899. Reargued November 1, 1899. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio to review a judgment of conviction in a prosecution for failure to comply with an order of the Secretary of War as to the alteration of a bridge. Reversed.

For report of case in District Court, see United States v. Rider, 50 Fed. Rep. 406.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Frank H. Southard and Simon M. Winn argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. George Hines Gorman argued the cause and, with Solicitor General Richards, filed a brief for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

[253] This is a prosecution under a criminal information filed on *behalf of the United States against the plaintiffs in error as commissioners of the county of Muskingum, Ohio, having power under the laws of Ohio to control, alter, and keep in repair all necessary bridges over streams and public canals on all state and county roads.

The information was based upon the 4th and 5th sections of the river and harbor act, approved September 19th, 1890.

Those sections are as follows:

"§ 4. That section 9 of the river and harbor act of August 11th, 1888, be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows: That whenever the Secretary of War shall have good reason to believe that any railroad or other bridge now constructed or which may hereafter be constructed over any of the navigable water ways of the United States is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waters on account of insufficient height, width of span, or otherwise, or where there is difficulty in passing the draw-opening or the draw-span of such bridge by rafts, steamboats, or other water craft, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary, first giving the parties reasonable opportunities to be heard, to give notice to the persons or corporations owning or controlling such bridge so to alter the same as to render navigation through or under it reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed; and in giving such notice he shall specify the changes required to be made, and shall prescribe in each case a reasonable time in which to make them. If at the end of such time the alteration has not been made, the Secretary of War shall forthwith notify the United States district attorney for the district in which such bridge is situated, to the end that the criminal proceedings mentioned in the succeeding section may be taken.

"§ 5. That section 10 of the river and harbor act of August 11th, 1888, be amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows: That if the persons, corporation, or association owning or controlling any railroad or other bridge shall, after receiving notice to that effect as hereinbefore required from the Secretary of War and within the time prescribed by him, wilfully fail or refuse to remove the same, or to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War in the premises, such persons, corporation, *or associa- [254] tion shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such persons, corporation, or association shall remain in default in respect to the removal or alteration of such bridge shall be deemed a new offense, and subject the persons, corporation, or association so offending to the penalties above described." 26 Stat. at L. 426, 453, chap. 907.

Under power conferred by an act of the general assembly of Ohio, approved March 9th, 1836, the authorities of the state, between 1836 and 1840, constructed a series of locks and dams on the Muskingum river between Marietta and Zanesville.

About the year 1838, under the authority of the state, a dam was constructed across the main channel of the Muskingum river at the rapids, which entirely obstructed navigation at that point, but locks and a side-cut canal were constructed so that boats could pass southward to the river below the rapids. Immediately below that dam the commissioners of Muskingum county, about the year 1874, under the authority of the state, constructed a bridge across the river,—the bridge here in question,—whereby the town of Duncan Falls and Taylorsville on opposite sides of the river were connected.

On the 2d day of May, 1885, the state of Ohio made a cession to the United States of the Muskingum river with its improvements. The act of cession contained this provision: "And for the purpose of enabling the United States to expend any sum of money that is or may hereafter be appropriated by Congress for the improvement of the Muskingum river, the state of Ohio hereby transfers and cedes to the United States the eleven locks and dams heretofore constructed by said state on said river, together with all the grounds, canals, and appurtenances belonging to the same, subject to the provisions of the preceding sections of this act as to the jurisdiction of the United States over the lands and buildings authorized to be acquired and constructed by said sections, and imposing penalties for injuries to said work which shall extend and apply to the said eleven locks and dams and their appurtenances hereby transferred and ceded to the United States, but the custody and ownership of said Muskingum river improvement shall remain [255] in the state of Ohio until such time as the United States appropriates sufficient money to properly improve and operate the same." 82 Laws of Ohio, 220, 221.

The cession was accepted by the United States, as is shown by the river and harbor act of August 5th, 1886, which contained this clause: "And the United States hereby accepts from the state of Ohio the said Muskingum river improvement, and all the locks, dams, and their appurtenances, and the canals, belonging to said improvement, and all the franchises and property of every kind, and rights, in said river, and its improvements, now owned, held, and enjoyed by the state of Ohio, including all water leases and rights to use water under and by virtue of any lease of water now running and in force between the state of Ohio and all persons using said water, hereby intending to transfer to the United States such rights in said leases and contracts as are now owned, held, or reserved by the state of Ohio; but not to affect any right to the use of the water of said river now owned and held by the lessees of any water rights under any lease or contract with the state of Ohio. And the United States hereby assumes control of said river, subject to the paramount interest of navigation. The provisions of this act, so far as they relate to the Muskingum river, shall not take effect, nor shall the money hereby appropriated be available, until the state of Ohio, acting by its duly authorized agent, turns over to the United States all property ceded by the act of the general assembly aforesaid, and all personal property belonging to the improvement aforesaid and used in its care and improvement, and any balance of money appropriated by said state for the improvement of said river, and which is not expended on the 15th day of July, 1886. 24 Stat. at L. 310, 324, chap. 929.

By deed of January 31st, 1887, the board of public works of Ohio, under legislative sanction, conveyed to the United States all the lands and tenements, with the rights and appurtenances thereto belonging, then owned, held, and enjoyed by the state, and theretofore occupied and used for canal and other purposes, and known as the Muskingum river improvement.

[256] *During the years 1890 and 1891 the United States caused to be constructed a lock at the head of the rapids in the dam which the local authorities had maintained, and constructed from that lock down the river, under the bridge and through the rapids, an artificial canal outside of the main channel of the river, and raised the locks and dam on the river below, thus providing a new means of navigation at that point.

In the judgment of the United States en- 178 U. S.

gineer having in charge the improvement of the Muskingum river, the construction by the government of the new lock at Taylorsville made it necessary to place a draw in the Taylorsville bridge just below that lock. Of this fact the county commissioners were informed, and they were given an opportunity to submit such statements, propositions, and evidence bearing upon the matter as they might deem pertinent. Finally the following notice was issued from the War Department and served upon the commissioners:

War Department,
Washington City, February 25th, 1891.
To the County Commissioners of Muskingum County, Ohio:

Take notice that—

Whereas the Secretary of War has good reason to believe that the bridge owned and controlled by Muskingum county, Ohio, across the Muskingum river, between Taylorsville and Duncan Falls, is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of said river (which is one of the navigable waters of the United States) on account of not being provided with a draw-span below the new United States lock No. 9 in said river; and

Whereas the following alteration will render navigation through it reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed; to wit, the construction of a draw span in said bridge below the said lock in accordance with the span shown on the map hereto attached; and

Whereas to the 30th day of September, 1891, is a reasonable time in which to alter the said bridge as described above:

Now, therefore, in obedience to and by virtue of the 4th *and 5th sections of an act of [257] the Congress of the United States, entitled "An Act Making Appropriations for the Construction, Repair, and Preservation of Certain Public Works on Rivers and Harbors, and for Other Purposes," approved September 19th, 1890, Redfield Proctor, Secretary of War, does hereby notify the said county commissioners of Muskingum county, Ohio, to alter the said bridge as described above, and prescribes that said alteration shall be made and completed on or before the 30th day of September, 1891. L. A. Grant, Assistant Secretary of War.

No alteration of the bridge having been made by the commissioners within the time limited by the Secretary of War, the present information was filed against them on the 23d day of November, 1891. The information, after referring to the official character of the defendants and setting out the facts showing the action of the War Department touching the proposed alteration of the bridge, charged that the defendants as county commissioners of Muskingum county "did unlawfully, on, to wit, the 15th day of October, 1891, at the place aforesaid, and after receiving notice to that effect, as hereinbefore required, from the Secretary of War, and within the time prescribed by him, wilfully fail and refuse to comply with the said order of the Secretary of War, and to make the alterations set forth in said notice, contrary to the form of sections 4 and 5 of an act of Congress approved September 19th, 1890."

A trial was had which resulted in a verdict of guilty. A motion for new trial having been entered, the judges before whom it was argued differed in opinion, and certified the following points of disagreement to this court: 1. Whether Congress has the power to confer upon the Secretary of War the authority attempted to be conferred by said sections 4 and 5 of the act of September 19th, 1890, to determine when a bridge is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of a river. 2. Whether the failure to comply, by persons owning and controlling the said bridge, with the order of the Secretary of War, could lawfully subject them to a penalty for a misdemeanor. *This court held that since the passage of the judiciary act of March 3d, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), certificates of division of opinion in criminal cases, according to §§ 651 and 697 of the Revised Statutes, were not authorized. United States v. Rider, 163 U. S. 132, 139, 41 L. ed. 101, 103, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 983. The certificate of division of opinion in this case was accordingly dismissed. Upon such dismissal the motion for new trial was denied in the circuit court in accordance with the opinion of the presiding judge, and it was adjudged that each of the defendants be fined in the sum of $10. From that judgment the present writ of error has been prosecuted.

We have seen that by the 4th section of the river and harbor act of 1890 the Secretary of War was authorized, after due notice to the parties interested and after hearing them, to require persons or corporations owning or controlling any bridge over a navigable waterway of the United States, which he had good reason to believe was an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waterway, to so alter the bridge as to render the navigation through or under it reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed; and that by the 5th section of the same act it was made a misdemeanor for any person, corporation, or association to wilfully fail or refuse to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary.

The plaintiffs in error contend that those provisions are inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, in that Congress has assumed to give the Secretary of War authority to determine matters that are legislative in their nature.

On behalf of the government it is contended that the act of Congress has not delegated legislative power to the Secretary, but has only given to that officer authority to determine the existence of certain facts as the foundation of such action by him as might be necessary to give effect to the declared purpose of Congress to remove unreasonable obstructions to the free navigation of the waterways of the United States. Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 693, 36 L. ed. 294, 310, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495.

The discussion of counsel also involved the question whether, assuming the act in question not liable to the objection that it delegated legislative power to the head of an executive department, *the expense to be incurred in the alteration of the bridge in question, which was originally constructed in accordance with law, must not be borne by the United States, which by its own agents made the proposed alteration of the bridge necessary for the purposes of navigation.

These are questions of very considerable importance. But in the view we have taken of the case their determination is not now necessary. The record presents another question which, being determined in favor of the plaintiffs in error, requires a reversal of the judgment upon grounds that will protect them altogether against the present prosecution for not complying with the order issued from the War Department.

At the trial in the circuit court it was proved that the notice from the War Department to the county commissioners to make and complete the required alteration of the bridge between Taylorsville and Duncan Falls on or before September 30th, 1891, was served in March of that year; that there were then no funds in the hands of the commissioners legally available for the purpose of making the proposed changes in the bridge, and that, under the laws of Ohio defining and limiting the powers of the commissioners, it was not possible for them by any levy of taxes to raise the money necessary to alter the bridge within the time limited by the notice from the Secretary of War, or before the commencement of this prosecution.

It has not been suggested, nor could it reasonably be held, that the county commissioners were bound, in any case, to provide out of their own private estates the money (several thousand dollars) necessary for the proposed alteration of the bridge, or that they could be made liable criminally for not so doing. The notice was addressed to them in their official capacity, and the prosecution against them was for failing to perform the duty alleged to be imposed upon them by the act of Congress. What they could or could not lawfully do, in the execution of the powers conferred upon them, must of course be determined by the laws of the state under whose authority they acted.

Assuming, for the purposes of the present decision, that the words "the persons, corporation, or association owning or controlling *any railroad or other bridge" may, under some circumstances, apply to officers of municipal corporations charged generally with the control and repairing of bridges owned by such corporations, the question remains whether any error of law was committed at the trial to the prejudice of the plaintiffs in error. The court charged the jury, among other things: "Congress had the constitutional power to confer upon the Secretary of War the authority to determine when a bridge such as the bridge in question is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of a river, and that the failure to comply by the person owning and controlling any such bridge, as by the defendants in this case, if they should so find, with such a determination by the Secretary of War, after due notice and otherwise full compliance with the act of Congress in that behalf, lawfully subjected them to prosecution for a misdemeanor, as provided by the act of Congress."

To this instruction the defendants duly excepted. Assuming the act of 1890 not liable to any constitutional objection, we think that the court, in view of the evidence, erred in saying, as in effect it did, that the mere failure of the defendants to comply with the order of the Secretary brought them within the act of Congress and subjected them to prosecution. The charge ignored altogether the proof showing that the defendants had no public moneys which they could have applied to the alteration of the bridge, and that under the laws of the state no money could be obtained, by way of taxation, so as to make the required alteration within the time fixed by the Secretary of War. The court made the guilt of the accused depend alone upon the inquiry whether they had complied with the order of the Secretary of War. This was error. It ought not to be supposed that Congress intended, even if it had the power, to subject officers of a state to criminal prosecution for not doing that which it was impossible for them to do consistently with the laws of the state defining and regulating their powers and duties.

[261] It is said that the record does not show that the commissioners, prior to the order of the Secretary of War, suggested any want of public moneys in their hands that could be used in *altering the bridge, or any want of power under the laws of the state to raise money for such a purpose by taxation, within the time limited for doing the work ordered. This is an immaterial circumstance. The record does show that the Commissioners from the outset protested against the expense of the proposed alteration being put upon the county, and insisted that the United States, acting by its officers, having made that alteration necessary, it should bear such expense. Nothing done or omitted to be done by the commissioners estopped them from making any defense which the facts in the case justified. The liability of the commissioners to criminal prosecution could not depend upon their mere failure to state to the engineer in charge of the Muskingum river improvements all that might have been urged against the demand made upon them by that officer.

We are of opinion that, however broadly the act of 1890 may be construed, it ought not to be construed as embracing officers of a municipal corporation owning or controlling a bridge, who had not in their hands, and under the laws of their state could not obtain, public moneys that could be applied in execution of the order of the Secretary of War within the time fixed by that officer to complete the alteration of such bridge. If the court on its own motion had instructed the jury, under the evidence in this case, to find for the defendants, it could not be held to have erred.

The judgment is reversed, with directions for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.
178 U. S.

Reversed.

*NORTH AMERICAN TRANSPORTATION [262] & TRADING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.

DONALD MORRISON.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 262-269.)

Federal courts—jurisdictional amount—effect of ad damnum clause—prospective wages or profits as damages—adding assigned claims to give jurisdiction—costs against plaintiff in error on reversal.

1. A mere ad damnum clause will not confer jurisdiction on a circuit court of the United States, where the plaintiff asserts as his cause of action a claim which he cannot be legally permitted to sustain by evidence, to the extent of the jurisdictional amount.
2. The amount of wages or profits which plaintiff alleges he could have earned by securing employment at the place of destination cannot be included in the damages recoverable for a carrier's breach of contract of transportation, where plaintiff did not know what his occupation or business would be at the place of destination.
3. Claims assigned to plaintiff by those whose citizenship and residence do not appear either in the complaint or in the petition for removal cannot be added to his own cause of action in order to give jurisdiction to a Federal court on removal from a state court on the ground of diverse citizenship.
4. Costs may be imposed on plaintiff in error where a judgment is reversed for lack of jurisdiction of the circuit court, if the cause was removed into that court at his instance.

[No. 203.]

Submitted March 20, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Washington to review a judgment in a cause removed from a state court. Reversed.

See same case below, 85 Fed. Rep. 802.

Statement by Mr. Justice Shiras:

*This was an action originally brought in [262] December, 1897, in the superior court of the state of Washington for King county, by

NOTE.—As to diverse citizenship as ground for Federal jurisdiction—see Shipp v. Williams, 10 C. C. A. 247, and note; Mason v. Dullaghan, 27 C. C. A. 296, and note; Seddon v. Virginia, T. & C. Steel & Iron Co. (C. C. W. D. Va.) 1 L. R. A. 108, and note; Myers v. Murray, N. & Co. (C. C. S. D. Iowa) 11 L. R. A. 216, and note. And see note to Roberts v. Lewis, 36 L. ed. U. S. 579.

As to jurisdiction of United States circuit court as dependent upon amount—see Auer v. Lombard, 19 C. C. A. 72, and note; Tennent-Stribbling Shoe Co. v. Roper, 36 C. C. A. 455, and note.

As to damages for carrier's default or delay as to transportation of passenger—see Hansley v. Jamesville & W. R. Co. (N. C.) 32 L. R. A. 543, and note.

Donald Morrison against the North American Transportation & Trading Company, and subsequently, on petition of the defendant company, removed to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Washington. To the declaration, containing several counts, the defendant demurred. The demurrer was overruled, and the cause was tried before the district judge and a jury. After verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the district judge certified the following statement of facts and questions of jurisdiction to this court:

"I, C. H. Hanford, district judge, presiding in the circuit court, aforesaid, and the judge before whom the above-entitled cause was tried, do now, on the 29th day of December, 1898, being the December term, at which the judgment and verdict were entered herein, certify as follows:

"Morrison, the plaintiff, alleging himself to be a citizen and resident of the state of Minnesota, began this action in the superior court of King county, state of Washington, against the defendant, alleging it to be a corporation organized and existing *under the laws of the state of Illinois, and engaged in business in the state of Washington. The suit was upon eight causes of action, the first on plaintiff's own account, the other on account of seven alleged assignors of plaintiff. The citizenship of these assignors was nowhere alleged.

"Defendant removed the case to this court on the ground of diversity of citizenship between it and plaintiff Morrison, and the involving of a sum exceeding $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs. After removal defendant demurred to each cause of action in the complaint as not sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and as to the last seven causes of action on the additional ground that the court had no jurisdiction to hear it, and this was overruled, with exception to defendant. Issue was then joined, and, after two trials, judgment was entered as now complained of in error in the sum of $2,119.50. After the verdict and before judgment defendant moved to dismiss or remand the whole cause and each cause of action on the ground that as to the first cause of action it did not involve $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and as to the second and each subsequent cause of action—that is to say, as to the assigned causes of action—that each of these did not involve $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and because, also, it did not appear that proper diversity of citizenship existed at the time of the commencement of the action, or at the time of its removal, between the assignors of plaintiff and defendant so as to confer jurisdiction upon the Federal court; which said motion to dismiss and remand was denied, with exception to defendant.

"The original complaint shows that the aggregate sum sued for by Morrison was $18,173.50, divided, as already stated, into eight causes of action. The suit was upon eight contracts of carriage, between defendant as a carrier and plaintiff and his seven assignors, from Seattle to Dawson City, by way of St. Michaels and the Yukon river, which contracts were alleged to have been broken by the carrier by 'failure and refusal to transport the passengers farther than Fort Yukon on the river.

"The first cause of action—that of plaintiff himself—alleged himself to be a citizen and a resident of Minnesota and defendant *a[264] corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of Illinois. The contract was alleged to have been made at Seattle on the 30th day of July, 1897, and the agreed date of the delivery of the plaintiff at Dawson by the carrier was alleged to be September 15, 1897, and this suit was brought on the 17th day of November, 1897. On the breach of the contract at Fort Yukon, plaintiff alleged himself compelled to return to Seattle. The damages claimed by him were as follows: (a) The price of his ticket from Seattle to Dawson City, $200; (b) $72.50, returning to Seattle after the breach of contract at Fort Yukon; (c) expense of $1 a day and loss of time at $3 a day at Seattle since his return there, the 18th day of October, 1897; (d) $3 a day from the 30th day of July, 1897, which he could have earned if he had not started on the journey at all; (e) $15 a day which he could have earned for a year at Dawson after the 15th day of September, 1897; (f) lost baggage, $29.50; the total prayer of this cause of action being $2,301.75.

"The second and subsequent causes of action, being the assigned causes, arose on exactly similar contracts of carriage. The citizenship of the respective assignors was not averred. The damages claimed were exactly the same as those claimed by plaintiff himself, excepting that none of the assignors claimed the item of lost baggage, and that the item of cost in returning from Fort Yukon to Seattle was as low as $61.50 in some instances, and as high as $103.25 in others. The lowest sum claimed by any of the assignors as his total damage was $2,261.25, and the highest claimed was $2,303.25.

"Neither in the original nor the assigned causes of action was it alleged that any of these passengers had ever lived in Dawson before, had any previous engagement or business there, or any promise of employment. the allegation in each cause of action as to the passenger's damage in this respect being that 'he could have obtained employment and engaged in business by him competent to perform and transact at or about said Dawson City, and thereby secured wages and profits at the rate of $15 per day continuously from September 15, 1897, for the period of the year thence next ensuing,' and that 'he *has wholly lost all of said employment and time, and all of said wages and profits, to his damage in the sum of $2,000.' It was not alleged what, if any, occupation either plaintiff or any of his assignors had before departure on the journey, nor was it alleged what occupation was expected at the point of destination, or that any expected occupation was communicated to the defendant.

"Now, therefore, I do certify to the Supreme Court the following question of jurisdiction, as follows:
178 U. S.

"Whether the motions to dismiss and to remand should have been granted because at the time of removal to this court the cause was one of which this court could not take jurisdiction—that is to say, whether—

"(a.) In each of the causes of action the sum or value of the matter actually in dispute, as shown in the pleadings, was less than $2,000, exclusive of interest and costs, and a controversy was involved substantially within the jurisdiction of this court; and whether—

"(b.) If the foregoing be answered in the affirmative, the amounts claimed in the assigned causes of action could be united to that in the first to make up the jurisdictional amount, the citizenship of the assignors not being alleged; and whether—

"(c.) Supposing the jurisdictional amount was sufficient in each cause of action, the case was even then removable to this court when the necessary diversity of citizenship was alleged only in the first cause of action, and was not alleged in those assigned."

Mr. Frederick Bausman submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

The passenger here cannot recover for lost time at Dawson.

Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341.

Where a passenger is delayed in his journey, and ultimately completes it, he cannot recover for any loss of time, though he may recover what are often his heavy expenses in finishing the journey.

1 Fetter, Carriers, § 124; Le Blanche v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 286, 45 L. J. C. P. N. S. 521, 34 L. T. N. S. 667, 24 Week. Rep. 808; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Hall, 124 U. S. 444, 31 L. ed. 479, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 577; Howard v. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. 139 U. S. 199, 35 L. ed. 147, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 500.

The jurisdictional objection on assigned claims applies under the existing statutes to removed causes, like the present, as well as to original.

Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 201, 39 L. ed. 672, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563.

If, then, this was a case solely of assigned causes of action, it is not to be doubted that the removal was improper because the citizenship and residence of the assignors nowhere appeared, either in the complaint or in the petition for removal. Their citizenship must affirmatively appear.

Parker v. Ormsby, 141 U. S. 81, 35 L. ed. 654, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912.

Messrs. John Arthur and L. H. Wheeler submitted the cause for defendant in error.

[265] Mr. Justice Shiras delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit by Donald Morrison, alleging himself to be a citizen of the state of 178 U. S.

Minnesota, against the North American *Transportation & Trading Company, a corporation of the state of Illinois, for damages arising out of a breach of a contract whereby the transportation company had agreed to carry the plaintiff and his baggage from Seattle in the state of Washington to Dawson City in the Northwest Territory, in the Dominion of Canada. [266]

It is conceded that the defendant company failed, without sufficient excuse, to fulfil its engagement, and the question upon which the jurisdiction of the court below depended is as to the nature and amount of the damages to which the plaintiff is entitled. The allegations in the complaint in that respect were, first, the sum paid by the plaintiff as a fare being $200; second, the expenses caused by having to return to Seattle, amounting to $72.50; third, the wages which he could and would have earned at Seattle if he had not proceeded upon the attempted journey, being wages at the rate of $3 per day during all the time intervening between August 3, 1897, and November 17, 1897, amounting to about $320; fourth, the loss of a certain portion of plaintiff's baggage, amounting to $29.25; and, fifth, the loss occasioned plaintiff by the defendant's failure to transport him to Dawson City, "where the plaintiff could have obtained employment and engaged in business which he was competent to perform and transact, at or about Dawson City and thereby have secured wages and profits at the rate of $15 per day continuously from September 15, 1897, for the period of the year next ensuing;" "by reason whereof there is due and owing the plaintiff from the defendant by reason of the premises, for said expenditures, outlay, and damages, the sum of $2,301.75."

It was obvious, on the face of the plaintiff's complaint, that if he was not entitled to recover the money which he alleged "he could have earned and secured by obtaining employment and engaging in business at or about Dawson City," the amount necessary to give the circuit court jurisdiction was not involved.

While it has sometimes been said that it is the amount claimed by the plaintiff in his declaration that brings his case within the jurisdiction of the circuit court, that was in suits for unliquidated *damages, in which [267] the amount which the plaintiff was entitled to recover was a question for the jury; an inspection of the declaration did not disclose and could not disclose but that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the amount claimed, and hence, even if the jury found a verdict in a sum less than the jurisdictional amount, the jurisdiction of the court would not be defeated. Barry v. Edmunds, 116 U. S. 550, 29 L. ed. 729, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 501; Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S. 58, 89, 41 L. ed. 632, 638, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265.

But where the plaintiff asserts, as his cause of action, a claim which he cannot be legally permitted to sustain by evidence, a 1063 mere ad damnum clause will not confer jurisdiction on the circuit court, but the court on motion or demurrer, or of its own motion, may dismiss the suit. And such, we think, was the present case.

We do not consider it necessary to enter upon a discussion of the rule that a person is not to be held responsible in damages for the remote consequences of every negligent act, but only for those which are proximate or natural, and shall content ourselves by stating our conclusion that, in the circumstances disclosed by the plaintiff's declaration and in the certificate of the trial judge, the defendant company, though liable in a court of competent jurisdiction for the other claims asserted, cannot be held for the amount of wages or profits which the plaintiff suggests he might have earned had he reached Dawson City.

In the district judge's certificate it is stated that the plaintiff did not allege that he had ever lived in Dawson City before, or had any previous engagement or business there or any promise of employment; that it was not alleged what, if any, occupation the plaintiff had before his departure on the journey, nor what occupation was expected at the point of destination, or that any expected occupation or employment was communicated to the defendant company.

The plaintiff was traveling to a land of promise, hoping to there procure some occupation, he knew not what, or to engage in some business, he knew not what. The result of such an adventure cannot be foretold, and the plaintiff's anticipations afford no safe ground on which to base a claim for damages.

If, then, the plaintiff, in respect to his own [268] claim, did not disclose *a case of which the circuit court had jurisdiction, did he overcome that difficulty by the additional counts in which he alleged himself to be the assignee of several other voyagers who had suffered loss and damages similar to those claimed by him on his own behalf? The citizenship of the assignors was not alleged, and the greater portion of the respective claims consisted of matter which we have held in reference to plaintiff's own claim to be too remote and uncertain to be allowed.

It is somewhat uncertain, upon the facts alleged in the declaration and those stated to us in the certificate of the district judge, whether, if all the claims, as well those assigned as those held by the plaintiff in his own right, omitting those which we have held to be too remote and uncertain, were aggregated, they would reach the necessary jurisdictional amount. But however that may be, as it is not alleged that the assignors could have themselves prosecuted suit in the circuit court, it is the settled construction of the statutes of the United States that the suit cannot maintain in favor of the assignee.

Seré v. Pitot, 6 Cranch, 332, 3 L. ed. 240, was an action commenced to foreclose a mortgage given by a citizen of Louisiana to another citizen of the same state. The language of the judiciary act of 1789 was as follows: "Nor shall any district or circuit court have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment had been made." 1 Stat. at L. 78, chap. 20, § 11. The plaintiff was the general assignee in insolvency of the mortgagor, and was an alien; and it was said by Chief Justice Marshall, delivering the opinion of the court:

"Without doubt assignable paper, being the chose in action most usually transferred, was in the mind of the legislature when the law was framed, and the words of the provision are, therefore, best adapted to that class of assignments. But there is no reason to believe that the legislature was not equally disposed to except from the jurisdiction of the Federal courts those who could sue in virtue of equitable assignments and those who could sue in virtue of legal assignments. The assignee of all the open accounts of a merchant might, under certain circumstances, be *permitted to sue in equity in his own [269] name, and there would be as much reason to exclude him from the Federal courts as to exclude the same person when the assignee of a particular note. The term 'other chose in action' is broad enough to comprehend either case, and the word 'contents' is too ambiguous in its import to restrain that general term. The 'contents' of a note are the sum it shows to be due, and the same may, without much violence to language, be said of an account."

And the same construction was put upon the language of the act of August 13, 1888, chap. 866 (25 Stat. at L. 433). Mexican Nat. R. Co. v. Davidson, 157 U. S. 201, 39 L. ed. 672, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 563.

We do not think that it was competent for the plaintiff to add to his own cause of action in order to obtain jurisdiction in the circuit court, claims assigned by those whose citizenship and residence did not appear either in the complaint or in the petition for removal. As, however, the plaintiff brought his action in the state court, where he was entitled to join the assigned claims with his own, and as the case was removed into the Federal court at the instance of the defendant company, whose motion to remand the case we are now obliged to sustain, we impose the costs in the circuit court and in this court on the North American Transportation & Trading Company, the plaintiff in error.

These views render it needless to answer severally the questions certified.

Accordingly the judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court, with directions to remand the cause to the state court.

It is so ordered.

[270]*PITTSBURGH & LAKE ANGELINE
IRON COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CLEVELAND IRON MINING COMPANY and Lake Superior Iron Company.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 270-280.)

Error to state court—Federal question—independent ground of decision.

A decision by a state court holding that the rights of parties who make conflicting claims under United States patents are determined by a contract which they have made, and also that plaintiff's claim is defeated by estoppel, does not involve a Federal question for review by the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error.

[No. 260.]

Argued April 24, 25, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan to review a decision affirming a decree dismissing a bill in a suit to determine rights in the bed of a lake. Dismissed.

See same case below, 118 Mich. 109, 76 N. W. 403.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. O. Clark argued the cause and, with Mr. Alfred Russell, filed briefs for plaintiff in error.

Mr. James H. Hoyt argued the cause and, with Mr. George Hayden, filed a brief for the Cleveland Iron Mining Company.

Mr. A. C. Dustin, with Messrs. Hoyt, Dustin, & Kelly, also filed a brief for the Cleveland Iron Mining Company.

Mr. Benton Hanchett argued the cause and, with Mr. Dan H. Ball, filed a brief for the Lake Superior Iron Company.

[270] *Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error and the defendants in error were respectively plaintiff and defendant in the court below, and we will so designate them. They were riparian owners on a body of water called Lake Angeline, in the state of Michigan, and this suit is to determine the extent of their respective ownerships to the bed of the lake. They all derived title through United States patents, and the controversy is claimed by plaintiff to arise from their construction and effect.

The trial court dismissed plaintiff's bill, and its action was affirmed by the supreme court of the state (118 Mich. 109, 76 N. W. 403), and this writ of error was then sued out.

A motion is made to dismiss for want of jurisdiction in this court, on the ground that no Federal question was raised in the state court, or, if one was raised, the decision of the state court was rested on a question not Federal, which was sufficient to sustain the judgment.

NOTE.—As to Federal jurisdiction over state courts; necessity of Federal question—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kitley v. Illinois ex rel. Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what is a Federal question; when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

Under the circumstances of this case it will be more orderly *to consider the latter[271] ground first, and its proper determination requires a consideration of the opinion of the supreme court, of its statement of facts (which we condense), and of its conclusions from those facts:

"Lake Angeline was situated on sections 10, 11, and 15, township 47 N., range 27 W., and was within the corporate limits of the city of Ishpeming, in Marquette county. It contained 148.61 acres within the government meander lines. It was a mile in length east and west, and 1,690 feet in width on the center line of section 10, which was its widest point.

"The three parties to this litigation own all the lands surrounding this lake,—the complainant owning that part of section 15 bordering upon the lake; the defendant, Cleveland Iron Mining Company, owning that part of sections 10 and 11 bordering on the lake east of the center line of section 10; and the defendant, Lake Superior Iron Company, owning that part west of said center line. These three mining corporations have owned this land about thirty years, and have been engaged in mining upon their respective properties for more than twenty years. For the sake of brevity, these companies will be designated by their initial letters."

No ore was known to exist in the bed of the lake until the winter of 1886 and 1887, when it was discovered on territory not owned by plaintiff, but plaintiff was informed of the discovery. Afterwards ore was discovered on its territory. The extent and locality of the ore beds were not exactly known, and negotiations were entered into for pumping out the lake, and ended in a contract between the parties.

It recited the discovery of the ore and the necessity of pumping out the lake, in order to "economically mine such ore as lies under such portions of said bed as each of said parties is respectively entitled to."

It provided for the purchase of a pumping apparatus which one B. C. Howell had, and in consideration of the "mutual considerations received each from each, the receipt of which is hereby respectively acknowledged."

The agreement then provided what proportion of the cost of *the pumping appar- [272] atus and plant should be respectively borne by the parties both for its purchase and maintenance, and the expenses of the work. And it was found by the supreme court that the agreement was formally executed. The acknowledgment by plaintiff recited that it was done by its president and secretary, and also that it was done on behalf of the corporation.

The total cost of draining and keeping water out of the lake until January 1, 1897, was $76,488.38. "Of this the C. I. M. Co.

1065

paid $44,149.68; the L. S. I. Co. $17,147.18; and the complainant $7,601.38. . . . The water under the southeast arm of the lake was comparatively shallow. A vast body of mud was found in the bottom of the lake, and the two defendants incurred an expense, in attempting to remove it, of $20,227.53."

"After the execution of this contract, each party worked upon its own property as defined thereby. The complainant mined out all the valuable ore under the southeast arm, and afterwards filled its opening with the waste rock. The L. S. I. Co. made explorations at considerable expense, and the C. I. M. Co. made the five drill holes above referred to from the complainant's mine, and ran a drift through the rock underneath the lake nearly to the south line of section 10, and, after reaching ore, ran drifts and crosscuts with a view of determining the value of the ore and ascertaining if there was sufficient to open and equip a mine. All this involved large expense.

"The section line was regarded as the line dividing these properties. Nails were driven in the timbers underground to indicate the line. In 1894 complainant made an innocent trespass north of the line, for which an amicable settlement was made. In 1896 the C. I. M. Co. trespassed upon complainant's property south of the line, and amicably settled for it. Maps were frequently exchanged with each other. Complainant asked and obtained permission from the C. I. M. Co. for the construction of a railroad track north of the section line, which was constructed and has ever since been in operation by complainant. On March 21, 1894, the C. I. M. Co. executed a lease to complainant, granting it the right to use land north of the section line for stock-pit [273] grounds and the erection of temporary structures for mining purposes. Other acts also were done by the respective parties in recognition of the fact that the south line of section 10 was the boundary line as stated in the above agreement. This state of affairs continued until November, 1896, when complainant served a notice upon the defendants that it claimed title to certain lands north of the section line.

"Complainant commenced mining on lots four and five in 1863. The hill was very near the shore of the lake, and complainant dumped its waste rock into the lake and filled in several acres north of the section line. Upon this made land north of the line it erected some buildings, the most of which it removed to the south of the line in 1887. Complainant filed its bill of complaint November 23, 1896."

Chief Justice Grant, delivering the opinion of the court, stated the theory of the plaintiff's bill to be—

"That the territory formerly covered by the waters of this lake should be divided among the shore owners in proportion to the amount of shore frontage owned by each; that such ownership extends to the center of the lake to be equitably established by the court; and that such territory should be partitioned by convergent lines drawn from the outside limits of each frontage to a convergent point called the 'equitable center.' To the bill is attached a map purporting to contain such equitable division."

And after stating in what apportionment of the bed of the lake this would result, stated the claims of the defendants as follows:

"(1) The patent under which the defendant, the Cleveland Iron Mining Company, claims title, gave it title to the whole east half of section ten (10) to the south line thereof, and complainant is barred from objecting to this claim because it has treated a body of water covering a portion of that territory as of no value, and joined in the draining of the water as if the land was merely swampy ground valuable only when reclaimed and made dry land.

"(2) Because it has title by adverse possession for more than fifteen (15) years.

"(3) Because the south section line of [274] section ten (10) was fixed as a boundary by agreement between the parties, that agreement being recognized and evidenced by the pumping contract and its written adjuncts, and was followed by continuous acts of recognition thereof and expenditures based thereon by both parties.

"(4) Because the pumping contract is an estoppel by deed against the complainant from now asserting title.

"(5) Because the complainant is estopped by matter in pais from asserting title to the land.

"(6) Because the complainant is estopped by its laches.

"(7) Because as a tenant of a portion of the premises in dispute complainant is estopped to deny defendant's title."

That of Lake Superior Iron Company as follows:

"1. That there has been a practical division of the lake bed between the parties; that contracts, explorations, and mining operations have been carried on on the strength of such division for many years, in which large sums of money have been expended, without any certainty at the time of such expenditures that returns would be realized by the defendants therefrom, and that, by such division and long course of construction between the parties, the complainant is estopped to claim any portion of the lake bed lying north of the section line.

"2. That the pumping contract, executed by the several parties, under their corporate seals, and expressly providing that it shall be binding upon the successors and assigns of the several parties, making it a contract running with the land, amounts to a division of the lake bed by deed duly executed by the several parties.

"3. That the pumping contract is so entirely based upon the division of the lake bed above mentioned, and said division forms so essential a part of the contract, that, if such division be set aside or disregarded, the contract itself must fall; that in such case, not only is the agreement to continue the drainage of the lake at an end, but either party [275] has a right to demand that the drainage of the lake must stop and the water allowed to rise to its original level—a result which, after all that has *been done under the pumping contract, and in reliance upon it, would work great injustice to the defendants.

"4. That if the original division of the lake be disregarded and a new division must be made, such division must be made by the middle line or thread of the lake, in accordance with the common-law rule for division of the bed of fresh-water streams."

Commenting on the claims the learned Chief Justice said:

"The situation is anomalous, and the books present no similar case. In March, 1892, the parties entered into an agreement to extinguish the lake by pumping out the water, leaving the territory dry ground. They agreed upon an apportionment of expense substantially according to the territory within the lines of the government survey. The lake no longer exists. Nearly five years after this suit is planted upon the theory that the lake exists, and that the court must make an equitable division from a common equitable center. All the parties, however, seem to have discussed the question as of a lake actually in existence."

The difficulties of apportionment on plaintiff's theory were stated, and the opinion proceeded as follows:

"The above statement is sufficient to show the difficulty in making an equitable apportionment, and while nothing was said during the negotiations leading up to the agreement, or in the agreement itself, in regard to the difficulty, it may have had much to do in the minds of the officers and agents of the respective parties in fixing the terms of that agreement. That contract was a deliberate settlement of the boundary line between the lands of the three companies, and was so understood. It was of the utmost importance to these parties that the boundary line be settled beyond any possible doubt. Complainant had discovered a mine on its territory south of the line, and extending under an arm of the lake. At that time it was the only one which it was known would be benefited by the removal of the water. No ore of sufficient value to mine had been found under the lake north of the line. After the removal of the water would come extensive and very expensive explorations to determine whether there existed under the [276] bed of the *lake ore worth mining. The contract, if valid, established the line beyond dispute.

"The first obstacle for the complainant to remove, before resorting to an equitable apportionment, is this contract, recognized as valid, and acted upon for nearly five years by all the parties. It attempts to do this by asserting that in making that contract it relied upon the case of Clute v. Fisher, 65 Mich. 48, 31 N. W. 614, as establishing the rule that the territory should be divided by the government lines, and that it rested upon that case as the established law until the decision of Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co. v. South Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co. 102 78 U. S.

Mich. 227, 25 L. R. A. 815, 60 N. W. 681, claiming that the latter overruled the former, and that in making that contract there was a mutual mistake which entitles it to the relief prayed. The former case was decided in February, 1887, and the latter in September, 1894."

The case of Clute v. Fisher was discussed, and disposing of the question raised upon the theory that plaintiff relied upon that case in its negotiations and contract with the defendant, and that all the parties so understood it, it was said:

"We will first discuss and dispose of the question raised upon the theory that complainant relied upon the decision of Clute v. Fisher as an authoritative enunciation of the law in its negotiations and contract with the defendants, and that all the parties so understood it. The following then is the situation: We find that the parties in reliance upon that case entered into a deliberate contract establishing their boundary lines and determining the amount of territory belonging to each. Complainant made the contract with knowledge that it gained territory south of the line, known to be valuable, while it surrendered territory north of the line, not then known to possess any value. All parties are chargeable with knowledge that each was to incur risks of its own, make its own expenditures upon its own land according to the agreement, and, by reason of its expenditures and improvements, would be placed in such a position that it could not be restored to its former status quo.

"The anticipated result came. The explorations, expenditures, and improvements were made, each company making them at its own risk. It is impossible to restore the status quo or to *render exact justice be- [277] tween the parties, because the data are not in existence. It is doubtful if a result approximately correct could be reached upon an accounting. It would be impossible to determine its correctness within many thousands of dollars.

"The result of complainant's contention would be that, whenever any case had been overruled, every transaction or agreement based upon that decision may be set aside by the courts, if not barred by the statute of limitations. The agreements and settlements of parties, made with full knowledge of the facts and in reliance upon the law, ought to be as binding as the judgment of the court in a particular case. If ten other similar suits had been pending when Clute v. Fisher was decided, and judgments had been rendered in reliance upon that decision, the courts could not now set them aside. The law is not so unstable as to permit such results. Judgments rendered and contracts made upon the faith of the law as enunciated in the decision of the court, in the absence of fraud or misrepresentation, must stand. When that decision is overruled, the overruling decision controls only subsequent transactions. Such is the rule recognized by the decisions and text writers."

The opinion then proceeded to say that the mistake of plaintiff was one of law, and the case was "stripped of all other circumstances. It contains no element of misrepresentation, imposition, suppression, undue influence, undue confidence, imbecility, or surprise. Neither said or did anything to mislead the others. Each acted with deliberation and with complete knowledge of all the facts. The sole basis of complainant's claim is that the decision of this court, upon the faith of which the contract was made, was subsequently overruled."

And it was decided that the case did not come "within any exception to the rule that a mistake of law does not furnish any ground for relief."

[278] It was then considered if the contract settling the boundary line and acquiescence therein and the acts done thereunder estopped plaintiff from asserting a different line, and it was held that it did against the claim that the statute of frauds prevented estoppel—against the claim that a corporation could not settle a boundary line without a meeting and vote of its stockholders. "The contract was the act of the three parties to it;" the court said:

"It was introduced by the complainant as a valid contract. It was executed with all the formalities of a deed. It had the seal of the corporation. Complainant, as well as the defendants, paid out large sums of money under it. All are now estopped to deny its due execution and validity.

"Complainant is entirely without equity. It doubted the correctness of the rule of Clute v. Fisher, and thought that a different rule might some time prevail. It was then its duty to take steps to test the question before permitting defendants to enter into a contest and explorations involving over $100,000. It should at least have informed the defendants of its claim, and given them the opportunity to make a contract with that in view.

"This claim would not have been heard of unless the C. I. M. Co. had developed a valuable mine. The fact that the venture proved successful after large expenditure creates no equity for this complainant. The skill, energy, and money of that company developed a valuable property. It ought in justice to reap the benefit, and the complainant ought to be estopped to participate in the benefit, unless an unbending rule of law prevents. Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 592, 23 L. ed. 331; Clegg v. Edmondson, 8 De G. M. & G. 787.

"It would not have offered to bear its share of the loss if unsuccessful, nor could it have been compelled to.

"Furthermore, it was guilty of laches in keeping silence when it ought to have spoken. Everyone is presumed to know the law. Therefore, it must be presumed to have known of the law enunciated in Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co. v. South Grand Rapids Ice & Coal Co. 102 Mich. 227, 25 L. R. A. 1068

815, 60 N. W. 681. It had an able attorney, who keeps well versed in the decisions of the courts of this state. Yet it waited two and a half years before asserting its claim, and still nine months after obtaining the opinion of its attorney that Clute v. Fisher was no longer the law. It waited until "circumstances and conditions have so changed that it is impossible to restore the status quo." [279]

It is manifest that the supreme court rested its decision on the grounds (1) that the pumping contract was a settlement of boundaries between the contestants; (2) that what was done and expended under it worked an estoppel against the plaintiff; (3) laches of the plaintiff, in asserting its claim whereby the status quo could not be restored.

It requires no argument to demonstrate that neither of these grounds involve a Federal question. But plaintiff in error contends that they were all made to depend upon a Federal question, which the court erroneously decided, and therefore that they necessarily involve such question.

It is claimed to arise under conflicting claims under United States patents. "This," counsel for plaintiffs say, "presents the fundamental Federal questions [the italics are counsel's] involved in this case, viz.: Did the complainant acquire title to the center of the lake by virtue of its ownership of said government lots 2, 3, 4, and 5; or did defendants obtain title by virtue of their several patents, to a point where the south line of section 10, if projected east and west through the water of the lake, would run?" And this asserted Federal question is said to have been decided by the supreme court of Michigan in the following language of its opinion: "The Cleveland Iron Mining Co. claimed title by virtue of the original patent. Complainant owned no specific piece of land north of the section line, even under its own theory, which could be measured by metes and bounds. How much, if any, it owned could only be determined by agreement or the decree of a court of equity."

What this language means we do not think the opinion of the court leaves in doubt. But whether plaintiff did or did not own land of section 10 which could be or could not be measured by metes and bounds, whatever its rights and the rights of the other parties were, they could be settled by agreement, and could be made the foundation of business transactions and enterprises. The supreme court determined they were so made and could be so made under the laws of Michigan.

But again, and whatever the error in that conclusion (we do not assert there was any), [280] the court decided, as an independent ground of estoppel, that plaintiff was guilty of laches, and that was sufficient to sustain its judgment.

The case must therefore be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

And it is so ordered.

CORRALITOS COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES and The Apache Indians.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 280-289.)

Indian depredations—claims for—depredations in Mexico.

Indian depredations committed in Mexico on property of a citizen of the United States, although the property was taken by Indians in amity with the United States and brought by them into the United States, do not create any claim against the United States under the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, giving jurisdiction to the court of claims for depredations by Indians in amity with the United States.

[No. 267.]

Submitted April 24, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decision of the Court of Claims dismissing a petition in an action for Indian depredations. Affirmed.
See same case below, 33 Ct. Cl. 342.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

- [280] *The appellant herein filed its original petition in the court of claims, against the United States and the Apache Indians, on September 6, 1892. Subsequently, and by leave of court, an amended petition was filed
- [281] March 2, 1894, from which it appears *that the petitioner is a corporation chartered under the laws of the state of New York and doing business in the state of Chihuahua, county of Guleana, Republic of Mexico, and that property to the value of nearly $75,000, belonging to the petitioner, and situated at the time in the Republic of Mexico, was taken therefrom in 1881 and 1882, and stolen and carried off by the Apache Indians, then in amity with the United States, and brought from the Republic of Mexico into the United States. By virtue of the act of Congress, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Adjudication and Payment of Claims Arising from Indian Depredations," approved March 3, 1891, judgment for the value of the property thus taken by the Indians was demanded.

The United States filed a plea in bar, alleging that the claimant ought not to have and maintain its suit, "because the depredation complained of is alleged to have occurred in the Republic of Mexico, beyond the jurisdiction of the United States and the courts thereof; and that the court therefore had no jurisdiction to entertain this suit."

The plaintiff demurred to the plea in bar as bad in substance.

The court of claims overruled the demurrer, sustained the plea in bar, and dismissed the petition. 33 Ct. Cl. 342. The petitioner appealed from that judgment to this court.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction to punish crimes committed by or against Indians—see State v. Campbell (Minn.) 21 L. R. A. 169, and note. 178 U. S.

Mr. John Critcher submitted the cause for appellant:

This is a statutory remedy,—a civil action to recover the value of property taken. It is a transitory action and follows the person. Any court of the United States which has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties to the suit may take cognizance of such action.

Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 115, 14 L. ed. 75.

This is a case of trespass de bonis asportatis, and, being a transitory action, it is only necessary to lay the place of trial under videlicet.

McKenna v. Fisk, 1 How. 241, 11 L. ed. 117; Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. ed. 439.

An action may be maintained for a trespass committed out of the limits of the United States, in a circuit court for any district in which the defendant may be found, upon process against him, where the citizenship of the respective parties gives jurisdiction to a court of the United States.

Mitchell v. Harmony, 13 How. 115, 14 L. ed. 75.

The judiciary power of every government looks beyond its local or municipal laws, and in civil cases lays hold of all subjects of litigation between parties within its jurisdiction, though the causes of dispute are relative to the laws of the most distant part of the globe.

The Federalist, No. 82.

There is nothing in the act of 1891 so ambiguous as to make it necessary to turn back to the act of 1834 to ascertain the claims within the jurisdiction of the court.

Assistant Attorney General Thompson submitted the cause for appellees. Mr. Lincoln B. Smith was with him on the brief.

The statute should be construed strictly because it is a statute granting jurisdiction to a court of limited jurisdiction; because the liability which it enforces is of an extraordinary character, unknown to the common law; because it is a statute giving the right to sue the United States in derogation of sovereignty.

Leighton v. United States, 161 U. S. 291, 40 L. ed. 703, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

Another reason for a strict construction of the statute is found in the fact that it is legislation by Congress affecting the rights of Indian tribes.

Marks v. United States, 161 U. S. 297, 40 L. ed. 706, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 476.

The act of March 3, 1891, is purely remedial in its nature; it provides a forum where certain alleged rights may be litigated; but it creates no rights except in so far as it imposes a liability on the United States for plaintiff's benefit. To find a wrong which it hopes to remedy we must turn to the act of 1834.

Leighton v. United States, 29 Ct. Cl. 288.

*Mr. Justice Peckham, after stating the foregoing facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

The very satisfactory opinion of the court of claims in this case leaves little to be said by us in affirming the judgment of that court.

[282] It would require very plain language from Congress by which to impose a liability on the part of the United States for the seizure or stealing by Indians of property belonging to a citizen *of the United States, but situated at the time of such seizure or stealing within the confines and jurisdiction of a foreign sovereignty. Generally the government admits no liability for the destruction of the property of its citizens by third parties, even when it occurs within the limits of the United States. Still less reason would exist for the acknowledgment of any such liability for property of its citizens destroyed or stolen within the limits and under the jurisdiction of a foreign nation.

Upon proof of the existence of certain facts the United States, however, at an early day, admitted an exceptional liability in favor of its citizens whose property within the United States had been destroyed by friendly Indians. By chapter 30 of the act of 1796 (1 Stat. at L. 469, chap. 30), provision was made for a boundary line to be established between the United States and various Indian tribes, which was to be clearly ascertained and distinctly marked; and by section 14 of that act it was provided: "That if any Indian or Indians belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States shall come over or across the said boundary line, into any state or territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy any horse, horses, or other property, belonging to any citizen or inhabitant of the United States, or of either of the territorial districts of the United States," then, in such case, it was made the duty of such citizen to make application to the superintendent, or such other person as the President of the United States should authorize for that purpose, who, being furnished with the necessary documents and proofs, and under the direction of the President, was to make application to the nation or tribe to which the Indian or Indians belonged, for satisfaction, and provision was made for obtaining the same, if possible.

The section contained a provision that, "in the meantime, in respect to the property so taken, stolen, or destroyed, the United States guarantee to the party injured an eventual indemnification."

No particular method was provided for obtaining such indemnification, and it rested with Congress when and how to make it.

[283] The property mentioned in this section, it will be seen, is *property in any state or territory of the United States; and it must have been stolen or destroyed by Indians belonging to a tribe in amity with the United States, who had come over or across the boundary line mentioned in the first section of the statute. The language of the statute is plainly confined to the destruction or stealing of property situated at the time within a state or territory of the United States. The statute acknowledges and provides for no responsibility or liability for property of citizens of the United States situated within the domain of a foreign state at the time of its seizure or destruction.

By the act approved March 30, 1802 (2 Stat. at L. 139, chap. 13), a boundary line was again established between the United States and various Indian tribes; and the 14th section of that act again provided for an eventual indemnification by the United States for property lost under the same conditions as were stated in the act of 1796; and no liability was acknowledged, or provided, for any loss or destruction of property outside and beyond the jurisdiction of the United States.

Although there was, subsequent to the act of 1802, frequent legislation by Congress upon the subject of trading with the Indians, yet the liability of the government for property stolen or destroyed remained the same.

No change in regard to such liability was made by the act approved June 30, 1834 (4 Stat. at L. 729, chap. 161). Section 17 of that statute provided that, "if any Indian or Indians, belonging to any tribe in amity with the United States, shall, within the Indian country, take or destroy property of any person lawfully within such country, or shall pass from the Indian country into any state or territory inhabited by citizens of the United States, and there take, steal, or destroy" certain property, substantially the same proceedings as in the former statutes should be taken against the tribe to which the Indians belonged, for recovering the value of the property so taken; and the United States guaranteed eventual indemnification to the citizen whose property was taken, the same as in the former statutes. The "Indian country" mentioned in the act included the country contained within the boundary lines mentioned in *the preceding[284] acts above referred to. The liability of the government for property was still limited, by the act of 1834, to that taken or destroyed in the Indian country or in a state or territory of the United States.

By section 8 of the act approved February 28, 1859, making appropriations for the expenses of the Indian department, so much of the act of 1834 as provided that the United States should make indemnification out of the Treasury for property taken or destroyed in certain cases by Indians trespassing on white men, was repealed, thus taking away the obligation of the government to eventually indemnify the citizen for property taken by the Indians, as provided in the former statutes.

By a general resolution approved June 25, 1860 (12 Stat. at L. 120), the repeal of the indemnity provision by the act of 1859 above mentioned was directed to be so construed as not "to destroy or impair any right to indemnity which existed at the date of said repeal." Citizens whose property had been taken or destroyed under the circumstances provided for in the statute of 1834 had generally been paid by deducting the value of the property destroyed from annuities due the respective tribes, without any specific appropriation having been made therefor, though there were some acts passed prior to 1859 for the payment of such claims out of the Treasury of the United States.

These various acts are referred to, and a history of the legislation upon the subject of claims for Indian depredations is given, in the opinion delivered in the court of claims in the case of Leighton v. United States, 29 Ct. Cl. 288.

It is evident from the legislation enacted that claims for Indian depredations had prior to 1872 become quite frequent. By section 7 of the Indian appropriation act, approved May 29, 1872 (17 Stat. at L. 165, 190, chap. 233), it was provided that the Secretary of the Interior should prepare and cause to be published such rules and regulations as he deemed necessary to prescribe the manner of presenting claims "arising under existing laws or treaty stipulations, for compensation for depredations committed by the Indians, and the degree and character of the evidence necessary to support such claims." By existing laws or treaty stipulations there was no pretense of any obligation of the government "to guarantee the eventual payment for property destroyed or stolen beyond the limits of the United States. It was further provided in the act of 1872, that the Secretary should carefully investigate such claims as might be presented, subject to the rules and regulations prepared by him, and report to Congress at each session the nature, character, and amount of such claims, whether allowed by him or not, and the evidence upon which his action was based; and it was provided that no payment on account of any claim should be made without a specific appropriation therefor by Congress.

It will be seen that the claims which the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to investigate were claims "arising under existing laws or treaty stipulations." That act did not enlarge the character of the responsibility of the government beyond what it was prior to its passage.

By the Indian appropriation act, approved March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 362, 376, chap. 341), an appropriation was made for the investigation of certain Indian depredation claims, which, it is obvious, were claims of the description included in the former statutes upon the subject; and the appropriation was plainly not meant to provide for the investigation of claims for property destroyed outside the limits of the United States.

Pursuant to the provisions in these appropriation acts, it seems that the Secretary of the Interior had caused to be examined, and allowed, numerous claims for the loss or destruction of property by Indians, and had reported the same to Congress; but Congress had made no appropriation to pay them. In addition to the claims thus approved by the Secretary of the Interior and reported to Congress, it is said that a still greater number were pending in the department for investigation; and in this state of affairs

Congress passed the act of 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 851, chap. 538), providing as follows:

"That in addition to the jurisdiction which now is, or may hereafter be, conferred upon the court of claims, said court shall have and possess jurisdiction and authority to inquire into and finally adjudicate, in the manner provided in this act, all claims of the following classes, namely:

"First. All claims for property of citizens of the United States *taken or destroyed [286] by Indians, belonging to any band, tribe, or nation in amity with the United States, without just cause or provocation on the part of the owner or agent in charge, and not returned or paid for.

"Second. Such jurisdiction shall also extend to all cases which have been examined and allowed by the Interior Department, and also to such cases as were authorized to be examined under the act of Congress making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1885, and under subsequent acts, subject, however, to the limitations hereinafter provided."

Here, for the first time, jurisdiction is conferred upon a court to inquire into and finally adjudicate in regard to the validity of claims against the government arising out of Indian depredations, as described in this act. Up to the time of its passage, and since the passage of the act of 1872, claimants had been compelled to rely for compensation for losses so incurred upon a special application to Congress, made in each case to that body directly or through the Secretary of the Interior.

The purpose of Congress in enacting the statute of 1891 undoubtedly was to provide thenceforth a judicial tribunal for the hearing of such claims, and for their payment in accordance with the judgment of the court. It is true that the language of the provision in the act of 1891, which confers jurisdiction upon the court of claims, differs somewhat from that used in the various prior statutes, which had guaranteed the eventual indemnification of the claimant by the government; but such difference is not in our judgment at all significant of an intention to enlarge the liability of the government to a greater extent than had ever before been recognized.

Considering the prior legislation of Congress in regard to claims for Indian depredations, none of which recognized any liability of the nature of the claim now made, is it reasonably possible for us to say that Congress intended by the act of 1891 to increase the liability of the government, and to extend it to property destroyed within the limits and jurisdiction of a foreign *state, when [287] it has failed to use any language to plainly signify so extraordinary a departure from its past policy? Up to 1891 there is not the slightest ground for asserting that any such obligation had ever been acknowledged on the part of Congress in any legislation enacted by that body. Up to that time it had always confined the liability of the government, in any event, to a claim for the stealing or destruction of property within the limits of the United States; and we think that, if any such radical and material departure from the policy of the government from its foundation had been intended by the act of 1891, plain language to accomplish such a change would have been found in that act. We look in vain for any such language.

Instead of enlarging its liability beyond that which it provided for in the earlier statutes, we find that in 1859 Congress repealed the law by which the government became a guarantor for eventual indemnification to the owner for property destroyed by Indians. The act of 1891 again altered that liability, and provided for the rendition of judgment against the government for the value of the property taken or destroyed, and also against the tribe of Indians committing the wrong, if it were possible to identify such tribe; and the judgment in that case was to be deducted from the annuities due the tribe from the United States, as provided in the 6th section; and if payment could not be procured from the tribe, then the amount of the judgment was to be paid from the Treasury of the United States, which payment was to remain a charge against the tribe, and was to be deducted from any annuity fund or appropriation which might thereafter become due from the United States to such tribe.

By this act of 1891 the obligation of the United States as a substantial guarantor is again acknowledged, notwithstanding the act of 1859; but it is acknowledged in the plain language contained in the 6th section, which provides a means of payment of the judgment obtained pursuant to the provisions of the act. Correspondingly plain language would have been used in this act had it been intended to enlarge the general scope of the liability of the government so as to include Indian depredations committed within the borders of a foreign state.

[288] *A decision of the question of what would be the nature of an action like this, if between private individuals, whether transitory or not, would give us no aid in determining the meaning of this act of Congress. The jurisdiction of the court depends wholly upon the act, and we must construe its meaning from the language used in connection with the previous legislation on the subject. In so construing the act we have no doubt that it does not include claims for property destroyed or stolen within the limits of a foreign country.

It was said by the court of claims, in the opinion delivered in this case, as follows:

"The United States (unless for some express agreement between the two nations) may not discipline or control Indian tribes within the Mexican territory; and being without power to enter that territory in time of peace, without Mexico's consent, is without direct responsibility for what may there occur. Wrongs sustained by a citizen of the United States while in Mexico can only be remedied through the executive branch of the government, and do not present causes of action in the courts. If citizens of the United States resort to Mexico, they may expect, and their government may demand for them, equality of safety and protection with the citizens of that country, an unbiased administration of the laws in relation to them and their property, and any special advantages (if such there happen to be) expressly reserved by treaty. Beyond this there is no right.

"It is not alleged that this plaintiff was subjected to any loss other than that which occurred at the hands of Indians within the territorial jurisdiction of Mexico; to remedy that loss he must resort to the Mexican courts, if the law of that Republic happen to provide a remedy through its judiciary for such misfortunes. Failing that, an appeal might possibly be made upon the Mexican government through the executive department of the government of the United States, if the facts so authorize and that department deem such an appeal advisable and wise. In any event, the matter in dispute does not fall within the jurisdiction of this court."

For these reasons, among others, the court came to the conclusion that Congress did not intend by the act of 1891 to enlarge *the liability of the government so as to include property destroyed or stolen in foreign territory. [288]

We agree with the results arrived at by the court of claims, and think it unnecessary to add to what has been so well said by that court.

The judgment is right, and must be affirmed.

WILBERFORCE SULLY, Trustee, etc., and Others, Plffs. in Err.,

v.

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 289-304.)

Error to state court—who may be heard—time for raising question—citizenship of party—constitutional law—discrimination against nonresident creditors of foreign corporations—nonresident mortgagee—due process of law—equal protection of laws.

1. In order to be heard in the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error to a NOTE.—As to equality of rights and privileges—see Louisville Safety Vault & T. Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 14 L. R. A. 579, and note.

As to validity of class legislation—see State v. Goodwill (W. Va.) 6 L. R. A. 621, and note; State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 789, and note.

As to what constitutes due process of law—see Kuntz v. Sumption (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 655, and note; Re Gannon (R. I.) 5 L. R. A. 359, and note; Ulman v. Baltimore (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 224, and note; Gilman v. Tucker (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 304, and note. And see notes to Peo- state court on a question as to a right to share in the distribution of a fund, the party who seeks to raise the question must have raised it in the state court, and cannot avail himself of the fact that someone else has raised it there, if he failed to do so.

2. A question raised in the supreme court of a state, and there decided, not on the ground that it was not raised in the lower court, but on its merits, is not raised too late for the purpose of review on writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States.
3. The citizenship of a party who claims that his constitutional rights as a citizen have been infringed by the decision of a state court sufficiently appears, for the purpose of a review by the Supreme Court of the United States, when he is described in the pleadings as a "resident" of a certain state and city, and no question as to his citizenship seems to have been made throughout the litigation.
4. An unsecured nonresident creditor of a foreign corporation is entitled, under U. S. Const. art. 4, giving equal privileges and immunities to the citizens of the several states, to share in the distribution of its assets upon the same level as like creditors of the company who reside within the state.
5. A preference in favor of resident creditors of a foreign corporation over a nonresident mortgagee whose mortgage is not registered when their debts are created, when such preference is not given them over a resident mortgagee, constitutes an illegal discrimination against the nonresident.
6. The fact that there are no resident mortgagees in a particular case does not make the question of discrimination between nonresident and resident mortgagees by a statute a merely abstract or moot question, so as to preclude a decision against the validity of the statute, if it makes a discrimination against nonresident mortgagees with respect to sharing in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent foreign corporation.
7. No discrimination is made between nonresident and resident mortgage creditors by Tenn. act 1877, § 5, providing for a preference of the creditors of an insolvent foreign corporation "over mortgage . . . creditors" for debts made before registration of the mortgages.
8. A nonresident mortgagee is not deprived of property without due process of law by Tenn. act 1877, § 5, simply because his claim is subordinated to the claims of Tennessee creditors of an insolvent foreign corporation.
9. A nonresident mortgagee is not within the jurisdiction of the state merely because he has a mortgage on property therein, so as to be deprived of the equal protection of the laws in violation of U. S. Const. 14th Amend. by denying him the right to participate on terms of equality in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent foreign corporation.

[No. 266.]

Argued April 26, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee to review a decision modifying a decree of the court of chancery appeals in a case involving the question of discrimination against nonresident creditors in distributing the assets of a foreign corporation. Reversed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Peckham:

*The contest in this case arises out of the [291] insolvency of the Carnegie Land Company, a Virginia corporation doing business at the time of its insolvency in the state of Tennessee, under the provisions of the act of the legislature of that state passed in 1877, and which was under review in this court in Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; 176 U. S. 59, ante, 371, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 307.

The contest is between creditors of the company above named, who are nonresidents of the state of Tennessee, both those who are unsecured, as well as those who are secured, by mortgages upon the property of the company in that state, and creditors of such company who are residents of the state.

The questions to be decided arise out of the provisions of the fifth section of the above-mentioned act, the material portion of which reads as follows:

"Sec. 5. That the corporations, and the property of all corporations coming under the provisions of this act, shall be liable for all the debts, liabilities, and engagements of the said corporations, to be enforced in the manner provided by law, for the application of the property of natural persons to the payment of their debts, engagements, and contracts. Nevertheless, creditors who may be residents of this state shall have a priority in the distribution of assets, or subjection of the same, or any part thereof, to the payment of debts over all simple contract creditors, being residents of any other country or countries, and also over mortgage or judgment creditors, for all debts, engagements, and contracts which were made or owing by the said corporations previous to the filing and registration of such valid mortgages or the rendition of such valid judgments. But all such mortgages and judgments shall be valid, and shall constitute a prior lien on the property on which they are or may be charged, as against all debts which may be incurred subsequent to the date of their registration or rendition." Acts of Tennessee, 1877, p. 44.

On November 27, 1893, the American National Bank and *others filed their bill [292] against the Carnegie Land Company and various named creditors of that company, and prayed that the bill might be taken as a general creditors' bill against the company on behalf of the complainants and of all the other creditors of the company, and that those named as creditor defendants might represent the class, their number being too great to make them all parties to the bill. The complainants alleged that they were creditors of the land company; that the com-ple v. O'Brien (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 258; Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; Wilson v. North Carolina ex rel. Caldwell, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

As to Federal jurisdiction over state courts; necessity of Federal question—see notes to 178 U. S.

Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois ex rel. Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what is a Federal question; when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

pany was insolvent; that it had a large amount of property in the state; that it had assigned the same for the benefit of its creditors without giving preferences, which was in disregard of the statute of the state (above referred to), and asked that the creditors of the company should prove their claims in that suit; that a receiver should be appointed, the assets marshaled, and the creditors paid according to law.

To this bill the land company made answer, denying its insolvency, or that it had ceased to do business, or had abandoned its franchises, and claimed that its assignment was good and valid, and that the trust should not be taken out of the hands of its assignee.

During the pendency of this suit, Wilberforce Sully and A. B. Carhart, residents of the state of New York, filed a bill against the land company and certain corporations in the state of Connecticut, called the Travelers' Insurance Company and the Connecticut Trust & Safety Deposit Company. The complainants alleged that the Carnegie Land Company had duly determined to issue $300,000 worth of bonds, secured by mortgage upon its property in the state of Tennessee, and of that amount of bonds but $85,000 had actually been issued; that Sully was the mortgagee in trust in the mortgage executed by the company for securing the payment of the bonds, and that Carhart was the bona fide holder of all of the $85,000 of such bonds; that the mortgage was executed on January 2, 1893, and was duly registered in the office of the register of Washington county, Tennessee, on February 10, 1893; that the interest had not been paid as it became due; and that, by virtue of a provision of the mortgage, the whole principal sum had become due [293] and payable; and that the land company was in default in the payment of the principal and interest due on such bonds. The bill alleged the commencement of the suit already spoken of, brought by the American National Bank and others against the land company; and it alleged that nearly all of the assets, if not all of them, in the hands of the assignee of the company, and sought to be impounded by the bill filed by the American National Bank, were covered and conveyed to the complainant Sully, as trustee, and that the complainant Carhart, the holder of the outstanding bonds, was entitled to priority over all other creditors of the defendant in the appropriation of the assets covered by the deed of trust executed to Sully, as above stated. Complainants prayed that they might be allowed to file this bill as a general bill against the land company; or, if for any reason this could not be done, that they should be allowed to file the same in the above cause of the bank against the land company and others as a petition in the nature of a cross-bill against the said company.

To this bill the complainants in the first bill, the American National Bank and others, made answer, and denied that the land company had ever executed any mortgage, or that any bonds were ever issued under any mortgage, and denied that the land company ever in any way or manner, either in law or in fact, authorized the issuing of any bonds under such mortgage, or to be secured thereby, and they denied that any such bonds constituted any binding obligation as against the land company.

The bank also alleged that if the bonds to the extent of $85,000 had in fact been issued, yet still the debts sued on by the bank and its coplaintiffs in the first bill above mentioned were contracted by the land company, and were incurred long before the execution and registration of the mortgage securing such bonds, and therefore they claimed that the debts owing to citizens and residents of Tennessee prior to the execution and registration of the mortgage above mentioned should have priority under the law over any debts secured or pretended to be secured by the mortgage.

The Travelers' Insurance Company and the Connecticut Trust & Safety Deposit [294] Company also filed an answer to the bill of Sully and Carhart, in which the Travelers' company alleged that the land company was indebted to it in the sum of $30,000 and three years' interest, and in other sums amounting to several thousand dollars, which amount was secured by a mortgage or deed of trust to the Connecticut Trust & Safety Deposit Company, on what is known as the Carnegie hotel property, which is a portion of the property of the land company, and is situated in the state of Tennessee. It also denied the existence of the bonded indebtedness claimed on the part of complainants, and alleged that in any event the debt of the Travelers' company against the land company was older than, and the mortgage to the Trust company was prior to, that of the complainants Sully and Carhart, and it denied that these last-named parties had any debt as claimed by them, or a lien of any kind on the property of the land company.

The insurance company also filed a petition in the suit brought by the bank, in which it set up the existence of its mortgage, and also prayed to be allowed to become a party to that cause, and to have its note, which was secured by the mortgage, declared a preferred claim, and decreed to be paid in full out of the proceeds of the sale of the property specifically mortgaged to it.

An amended petition was filed by it, in which it alleged that it was the owner of another claim against the land company in favor of P. Fleming & Company, for a little less than $2,000, under the circumstances mentioned in the petition.

October 11, 1895, Mary P. Myton and A. B. Carhart filed a petition in each of the above suits, in which they described themselves as Mary P. Myton, a resident of the state of New York, and A. B. Carhart, a resident of the city of Brooklyn. In that petition Mary P. Myton alleged a claim against the land company, as existing on November 27, 1894, in the sum of $4,094.54, with interest from November 27, 1892; while A. B. Carhart alleged a claim as of the date of November 27, 1894, of $2,248.66; and they asked [295] to become parties to the above-named causes, for the purpose of setting up these demands, and for a decree against the company for their amounts, with interest.

(It is stated that the two debts represented by these notes were actually in existence prior to the execution of the mortgage to secure the bonds owned by Carhart; the notes being, in truth, renewals of other ones executed prior to that time.)

These various proceedings were consolidated into one action, and the case was referred to a master to take proof of all the facts. The master made his report, upon which a final decree by the chancellor was entered. It was decreed that the land company, by its deed of general assignment of June 3, 1893, in making disposition therein for the payment of its creditors, without any preferences, attempted to defeat the preferences given by law to creditors, residents of Tennessee, over nonresident creditors and mortgagees whose mortgages were made subsequent to the creation of the debts due resident creditors; and that such deed was fraudulent in law, and void; that the making of the deed was an act of insolvency by the land company; and that the bill filed by the bank was properly filed, and should be sustained as a general creditors' bill; and that the assets of the company under the jurisdiction of the court were subject to distribution under the law relating to foreign corporations doing business in Tennessee, and as such should be decreed in the action then pending.

The decree further adjudged that Carhart was a bona fide holder of the bonds mentioned in his bill, and that he was entitled to recover thereon as provided for in the decree, but subject to the payment of debts due residents of Tennessee prior to the registration of such mortgage. It was also decreed that the Travelers' Insurance Company, by its mortgage, acquired a valid lien upon the property covered by it, subordinate, however, to debts due residents of Tennessee contracted prior to the registration thereof, and also subject to some other liabilities of the land company.

The case was taken to the court of chancery appeals, which modified in some particulars the decree of the chancellor, and after such modification it was affirmed. Upon writ of error from the supreme court the [296] case was there heard, and that *court held that the statute in question, providing for the distribution of assets of foreign corporations doing business in that state, was constitutional, and was not in contravention of any provision of the Constitution of the United States. The decree of the court of chancery appeals was modified in some respects, and after modification it was affirmed, and the cause remanded to the chancery court for execution.

The case has been brought here on writ of error in behalf of certain unsecured creditors, nonresidents of Tennessee, and also in behalf of the Travelers' Insurance Company and of the holder of the bonds issued by the land company.

178 U. S.

Mr. R. E. L. Mountcastle argued the cause and, with Mr. Quincy Ward Boese and Messrs. Shields & Mountcastle, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. T. S. Webb argued the cause and, with Mr. H. H. Carr and Messrs. Webb & McClung, filed a brief for the Travelers' Insurance Company.

Mr. Samuel C. Williams argued the cause and, with Mr. John H. Bowman, filed a brief in behalf of certain defendants in error.

Mr. E. J. Baxter argued the cause and, with Messrs. Deaderick & Epps, filed a reply brief for other defendants in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Peckham, after stating the [296] foregoing facts, delivered the opinion of the court:

There are two classes of creditors before the court, both of whom insist upon the erroneous character of the decree of the supreme court of the state. They are (a) general unsecured and nonresident creditors, and (b) nonresident creditors who are also mortgagees. The creditors suing out this writ of error are all nonresidents of the state of Tennessee, and they claim to have been illegally discriminated against in the courts below by reason of the statute of Tennessee providing for preferences to Tennessee creditors.

In regard to the unsecured nonresident creditors, objection is first made that there is only one of them, A. B. Carhart, who can be heard upon the question of the validity of the act of 1877, because he is the only person who has raised the point in any of the state courts. It is also claimed that the question was raised too late, even by Carhart himself, inasmuch as it is alleged to have been raised by him for the first time in the supreme court of the state.

*In reply to the first objection, it is urged [297] on the part of creditors, other than Carhart, that they are general creditors in like class with him, and that if he can raise the question, they are entitled to participate with him in the benefits of a decision thereof in his favor, to the same extent as if they had each personally raised the same question in the state court.

Cases are cited by counsel for these creditors from the courts of Tennessee, in which they say it has been held that "a broad appeal by any one party from an entire chancery decree, where the matter is purely of equitable cognizance, carries up the whole case, so as to allow relief to be granted to those who do not appeal;" and it is said that Carhart made a broad appeal.

In reply, counsel for defendants in error say that the rule in Tennessee is that an appeal by an antagonistic party, even though a broad one, will not avail his opponent. It is also argued that the other creditors cannot be heard under Carhart's appeal, because the interests of such other creditors are not joint or common with him, but they are simply interested in the same question, which has never been held sufficient.

1075

However it may be in regard to the rights of parties on appeal in the state court, we think that, in order to be heard in this court, the question must have been raised in the state court by the individual who seeks to have it reviewed here. A plaintiff in error in this court must show that he has himself raised the question in the state court which he argues here; and it will not aid him to show that someone else has raised it in the state court, while he failed himself to do so.

The two plaintiffs in error here, Sully, as the assignee of Manning, and Mrs. Myton, failed to appeal from the decree of the chancellor, as well as from the decree of the court of chancery appeals; nor did they except to the report of the master, nor to the decree affirming it; and their first mention of the point in their own behalf is after the decision of the state supreme court.

This is not a case where, by the reversal of a decree at the instance of those who particularly raised the question in the courts below, the whole decree is opened and nullified so as to necessarily let in all parties standing in [298] the same position to *share in the benefits of the decision. The fund is to be distributed in this case according to the decision of the court; and, of the parties to this suit, those only can avail themselves of the benefits of the decree who have properly raised the question and in whose favor the decree is rendered.

We must hold, therefore, that neither Sully, as assignee of Manning, nor Mrs. Myton, is in a position to raise the question of the invalidity of the state statute.

In regard to the objection that even Carhart has raised the question too late, we think it is without foundation. He raised it in the supreme court, and that court decided it against him, not on the ground that he had not raised it in the lower court, but on its merits, and for the reason that in the judgment of the supreme court the statute was a valid and constitutional exercise of the legislative powers of the state.

The further objection made to Carhart is that it does not appear that he is a citizen of another state than Tennessee, and hence cannot avail himself of the fact of such citizenship in order to claim that his rights as such citizen have been infringed within the meaning of section 2 of article 4 of the Constitution, declaring that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states. We think the objection untenable.

In his original bill to foreclose the mortgage securing the $85,000 of bonds held by him, he described himself as a resident of the state of New York; and in the petition of Mrs. Myton and Mr. Carhart, filed October 11, 1895, in the two cases of the bank against the land company, and Sully, trustee, against the land company, Mrs. Myton is described as a resident of the state of New York, and A. B. Carhart is described as a resident of the city of Brooklyn. No question seems to have been made throughout the litigation as to the citizenship of those parties. The question does not seem to have arisen in any stage of the case up to the argument in this court. Although there may be some slight difference in the facts between this case and those which are stated in Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. at page 246, 43 L. ed. 434, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165, we yet think that Carhart brings himself within the principle decided in that case, and that his citizenship *in the [299] state of New York should be regarded as sufficiently proved.

Being entitled to raise the question, we must hold, in conformity to our decision in the Blake Case, that Carhart, as an unsecured creditor and a citizen of New York, is entitled to share in the distribution of the assets of the Carnegie Land Company upon the same level as like creditors of the company residents of the state of Tennessee; and as the decree denies him that right, it must be reversed for that reason.

The next question arises out of the mortgage given as security for the payment of the bonds of the land company, of which Carhart held all that had been issued,—$85,000.

Part of the 5th section of the act of 1877 provides—

"Nevertheless, creditors who may be residents of this state shall have a priority in the distribution of assets, or subjection of the same, or any part thereof, to the payment of debts over all simple contract creditors, being residents of any other country or countries, and also over mortgage or judgment creditors, for all debts, engagements, and contracts which were made or owing by said corporation previous to the filing and registration of such valid mortgages or the rendition of such valid judgments."

Under this provision of the section, creditors of the land company residing in Tennessee, whose debts accrued prior to the filing and registration of the Sully, trustee, mortgage, were by the decree of the court below preferred in payment over the mortgagee. By reason of such preference Carhart did not receive what he would have received, but for the preference so given. He claims that this preference in favor of resident creditors whose debts existed when his mortgage was registered is an illegal discrimination against him as a nonresident mortgagee, because the statute, as he says, while directing such a discrimination against a nonresident mortgagee, does not permit it as against a resident mortgagee. Such a discrimination, if it existed, is invalid within the decision of Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165.

It is objected, however, on the part of the defendants in error, that this is a merely abstract or moot question, because *there are [300] no resident mortgagees, and their rights have not, therefore, been determined. The objection is not well taken. Although there are no resident mortgagees in this case, yet the decree of the court below, following the statute, has postponed the payment of the mortgage in favor of resident creditors whose debts accrued prior to the registration of that mortgage. If the statute does not permit such postponement against a resident mortgagee, then the postponement in the case of a nonresident mortgagee would be invalid. The postponement has in fact been made as against the nonresident mortgagee, and whether that postponement was legal and valid is no mere abstraction because by reason thereof this nonresident mortgagee has actually suffered a loss in the payment of his mortgage. It is therefore entirely immaterial whether in this particular case there are or are not resident mortgagees. We are in this case necessarily brought to a decision of the question whether the postponement was valid; and that depends upon the question whether the act permits a similar postponement in the case of a resident mortgagee. If it does, it is conceded that the act is valid, so far as this particular question is concerned.

For us to hold that such postponement is not permitted in the case of a resident mortgagee is to condemn the statute on that point as a violation of the Constitution of the United States. Such a construction should not be adopted if the statute is reasonably susceptible of another which renders it valid. That rule applies, even though on some other point the statute has been already held to be a violation of the Federal Constitution.

We think the true construction of the statute requires us to hold that the resident owner of a mortgage would be postponed in its payment in favor of those debts made or owing by the corporation prior to the filing and registration of his mortgage. In other words, that the Tennessee general creditor has the same right of preference as against a resident mortgagee that he has against a nonresident, and the same burden that is placed upon nonresident mortgagees and judgment creditors is by the statute placed upon resident mortgagees and judgment *creditors. [301] We do not think that this construction leads to any absurd result.

It is urged that if it were to be so construed, a Tennessee creditor who had no mortgage or judgment would share with all other unsecured Tennessee creditors in the assets of the insolvent company, but that if he, being such creditor, took a judgment or mortgage as a security for the payment of his debt, he would thereby lose his right to share with the other resident nonsecured creditors, and the latter would have a preferred right of payment over him for all debts of the company existing at the time of the registration of the mortgage. The creditor, it is said, would thus lose his right as a general creditor, and he would obtain no lien by his mortgage or judgment as against those creditors of whom he was one before he took his mortgage.

We agree that a construction which leads to such a result would be absurd, but such a result does not follow from our construction of the statute. When the Tennessee creditor takes his mortgage or recovers his judgment to secure an existing indebtedness, a new debt is not thereby created, but he has simply received, or obtained, a security for its payment, and a preference as against all other creditors whose debts may accrue subsequently to the filing and registration of his mortgage or the recovery of his judgment. He gains no priority over existing creditors of his class by taking a mortgage or judgment. The debts existing at that time, including his own, are to be paid; and it is only against debts subsequently incurred that the mortgage, or the judgment, has a preferential lien. If the debt for which he took the mortgage existed prior to the execution thereof, the mortgagee did not, by taking his mortgage, lose his right to share with the other unsecured creditors; but he did not acquire the right to assert the lien of his mortgage in preference to and against those creditors whose debts existed at the time of its registration. His rights as a general creditor of the land company, existing prior to the registration of the mortgage, were not in any manner lost or affected by the mortgage. He cannot assert the lien of his mortgage against prior creditors, but he does not lose his own right as a prior creditor *by taking the mortgage. Although the [302] act was evidently passed for the purpose of awarding certain preferences to Tennessee over foreign creditors, yet we see nothing in its general purpose which requires us to consider the act as making a distinction in favor of a Tennessee mortgagee as against a nonresident mortgagee.

While the effect of this construction deprives both classes of mortgagees, in case of insolvency of the mortgagor, of any benefit from their mortgages as against resident nonsecured creditors, existing when the mortgages were registered, yet, at the same time, it permits such mortgagees to share in the distribution of assets with such unsecured creditors, provided their own debts existed prior to the taking of the mortgage, and did not spring into existence simultaneously with the mortgage.

The rights of Carhart as a secured creditor must be adjusted with reference to these views. If his secured debt, or any portion thereof, did in fact exist prior to his mortgage, he is entitled to share with other unsecured creditors who are residents of the state of Tennessee.

Plaintiff in error Carhart also insists that section 5 of the act of 1877 violates section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in that it deprives the nonresident mortgagee of his property without due process of law.

We are unable to perceive any foundation for the claim, and we think the question has been already so decided in Blake v. McClung, which we have so frequently referred to. It was stated in that case, at page 260, L. ed. p. 440, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 173:

"It does not follow that, within the meaning of that amendment [14], the judgment below deprived the Virginia corporation of property without due process of law, simply because its claim was subordinated to the claims of the Tennessee creditors. That corporation was not, in any legal sense, deprived [303] of its claim, nor was its right to reach the assets of the British corporation in other states or countries disputed. It was only denied the right to participate upon terms of equality with Tennessee creditors in the distribution of particular assets of another corporation doing business in that state. It had notice of the proceedings in the state court, became a party to those *proceedings, and the rights asserted by it were adjudicated. If the Virginia corporation cannot invoke the protection of the 2d section of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States relating to the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, as its coplaintiffs in error have done, it is because it is not a citizen within the meaning of that section; and if the state court erred in its decree in reference to that corporation, the latter cannot be said to have been thereby deprived of its property without due process of law within the meaning of the Constitution."

That language fits this case. The principle is not altered by the fact that in this case the creditor had a mortgage which was postponed, while in the case cited his debt was unsecured, but it was also postponed to the Tennessee creditor.

Nor can we see that there has been any denial by the state of Tennessee to any person within its jurisdiction of the equal protection of the laws. Upon this point also we refer to the same case of Blake v. McClung, where, at page 260, the question is decided.

These two last points would apply also to the mortgage of the Travelers' Insurance Company. That company, being a corporation of the state of Connecticut, could not raise the question of a denial of any privilege or immunity as such citizen, under the provision of section 2, article 4, of the Constitution. Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165. But the questions as to the deprivation of property without due process of law and of being denied the equal protection of the laws are raised by that corporation, and must be decided in a way similar to the case of Carhart.

With the exception of Carhart as a non-resident unsecured creditor, we do not see that the plaintiffs in error herein have any right to complain of the decree of the supreme court of Tennessee, but as such non-resident unsecured creditor he has the right to share in the distribution of the assets of the Carnegie Land Company upon the same level as like creditors of the company who are residents of the state of Tennessee; and as the decree below denies him that right, it must be reversed as to him for that reason, [304] and the case remanded to the supreme *court of the state for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

So ordered.

Mr. Justice Brewer and Mr. Justice White did not hear the argument, and took no part in the decision of this case.

JOHN FITZPATRICK, Plff. in Err.,

v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 304-316.)

Error to territorial court—sufficiency of indictment for murder—evidence to connect several persons with crime—cross-examination of accused—examination in rebuttal.

1. A conviction of murder, punishable with death, is a conviction of a capital crime within the meaning of the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, as amended by the act of January 20, 1897, providing for writs of error to a district court from the Supreme Court of the United States, although the jury are given the power by the act of January 15, 1897, to qualify the verdict by adding the words "without capital punishment," and by reason of their exercise of that power the punishment actually imposed is imprisonment for life.
2. An indictment for murder, which avers that defendants did, with deliberate and premeditated malice, inflict a mortal wound, of which the victim instantly died, and that they killed and murdered him in the manner and form aforesaid, is not insufficient as failing to aver deliberate and premeditated malice in the killing, under Hill's (Or.) Ann. Laws, § 1268, which provides that an indictment must contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended.
3. Evidence of any fact having a tendency to connect with a murder either one of several persons, some of whom are not on trial, is admissible in a murder trial, where there is some evidence tending to show a joint action on their part in committing the crime, although a statement by either of them after the commission of the crime would not be admissible against others who were not present when it was made.
4. An accused who waives his constitutional privilege of silence, takes the stand in his own behalf, and testifies to an alibi, may be asked on cross-examination as to every fact which has a bearing upon his whereabouts upon the night when the crime was committed, and as to what he wore, what he did, and the persons with whom he associated that night.
5. Witnesses are properly examined by the prosecution in rebuttal with respect to the effect of light from the flash of a revolver and its sufficiency for the identification of the person firing it, where the defense has put in a calendar, apparently for the purpose of showing the time when the moon rose that night, as having some bearing on this question.

[No. 499.]

Submitted April 30, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to review territorial decisions—see note to Miners' Bank v. Iowa ex rel. District Prosecuting Attorney, 13 L. ed. U. S. 867.

As to sufficiency of indictment for murder—see note to Bergemann v. Backer, 39 L. ed. U. S. 845.

As to cross-examination of defendant in criminal cases—see People v. Tice (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 669, and note.

IN ERROR to the District Court for the District of Alaska to review a conviction for murder. Affirmed.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

[305] *This was a writ of error to review the conviction of Fitzpatrick, who was jointly indicted with Henry Brooks and William Corbett for the murder of Samuel Roberts, on March 13, 1898, at Dyea, in the territory of Alaska.

The indictment, omitting the formal parts, was as follows:

The said John Fitzpatrick, Henry Brooks, and William Corbett, at or near Dyea, within the said district of Alaska, and within the jurisdiction of this court, and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, on the 13th day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight, did unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly, feloniously, purposely, and of deliberate and premeditated malice make an assault upon one Samuel Roberts; and that they, the said John Fitzpatrick, Henry Brooks, and William Corbett, a certain revolver, then and there charged with gunpowder and leaden bullets, which said revolver they, the said John Fitzpatrick, Henry Brooks, and William Corbett, in their hands then and there had and held, then and there feloniously, purposely, and of deliberate and premeditated malice did discharge and shoot off to, against, and upon the said Samuel Roberts; and that said John Fitzpatrick, Henry Brooks, and William Corbett with one of the bullets aforesaid out of the revolver aforesaid then and there by force of the gunpowder aforesaid by the said John Fitzpatrick, Henry Brooks, and William Corbett, discharged and shot off as aforesaid then and there feloniously, purposely, and deliberate and premeditated malice did strike, penetrate, and wound him, the said Samuel Roberts, in and upon the right breast of him, the said Samuel Roberts, then and there with the leaden bullet aforesaid so as aforesaid discharged and shot out of the revolver aforesaid by the said John Fitzpatrick, Henry Brooks, and William Corbett, in and upon the right breast of him the said Samuel Roberts one *mortal wound, of which said mortal wound he, the said Samuel Roberts, instantly died; and so the grand jurors duly selected, impaneled, sworn and charged as aforesaid upon their oaths do say: That said John Fitzpatrick, Henry Brooks, and William Corbett did then and there kill and murder the said Samuel Roberts in the manner and form aforesaid, contrary to the form of the statutes in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the United States of America. Burton E. Bennett,

U. S. District Attorney.

After a demurrer to the indictment, which was overruled, and a motion for a continuance, which was denied, Brooks and Corbett moved and obtained an order for separate trials. The court thereupon proceeded to the trial of Fitzpatrick, the jury returning a verdict of guilty "without capital punishment." Motions for a new trial and in arrest of judgment were entered, heard, and overruled, and defendant sentenced to hard labor for life in the penitentiary at San Quentin, California. To review such judgment a writ of error was sued in forma pauperis.

178 U. S.

Messrs. A. B. Browne, Alexander Britton, and Julius Kahn submitted the cause for plaintiff in error:

It is almost universally the rule that, in an indictment for murder, the purpose to kill must be specifically averred as a part of the description of the offense. Such purpose is an essential element of the statutory crime, although not essential at common law.

10 Enc. Pl. & Pr. p. 116; State v. Brown, 21 Kan. 38; Schaffer v. State, 22 Neb. 557, 35 N. W. 384.

Where an intent is to be proved in order to indicate the character of the act,—as, when there is an attempt or assault to commit an offense,—the intent must be averred and must be attached to all the material allegations.

Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. ¶ 163a, § 1063; Leonard v. Territory, 2 Wash. Terr. 381, 7 Pac. 872; Hagan v. State, 10 Ohio St. 459; State v. McCormick, 27 Iowa, 402; Com. v. Boynton, 12 Cush. 499; State v. Young, 55 Kan. 349, 40 Pac. 659; Jewell v. Territory, 4 Okla. 53, 43 Pac. 1075; Holt v. Territory, 4 Okla. 76, 43 Pac. 1083; Wright v. Territory, 5 Okla. 78, 47 Pac. 1069; Slover v. Territory, 5 Okla. 506, 49 Pac. 1009; Evans v. United States, 153 U. S. 584, 38 L. ed. 830, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 934, 939; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588.

The testimony of the witness Ballard was inadmissible against Fitzpatrick.

Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 39 L. ed. 343, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273.

When the fact of a conspiracy has been proved or established by reasonable inference, the acts and declarations of one conspirator in furtherance of, or made with reference to, the common design, are admissible in evidence against his associates.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. tit. Conspiracy, p. 866.

Until the conspiracy is found aliunde, the acts and declarations of an alleged conspirator are inadmissible to establish the connection with the conspiracy, of one charged as a co-conspirator.

2 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. tit. Conspiracy, p. 866.

The accused may, in his direct examination, stop at any point he chooses, and his constitutional privilege protects him from cross-examination on any point not touched upon in his examination in chief.

State v. Lurch, 12 Or. 99, 6 Pac. 408; State v. Bacon, 13 Or. 143, 57 Am. Rep. 8, 9 Pac. 393; State v. Gallo, 18 Or. 425, 23 Pac. 264; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 384, 386.

The cross-examination of the accused must be confined to the matters concerning which he testified in his direct examination.

State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 12 Pac. 441.

As murder is a capital offense which may be punishable with death, the jurisdiction of this court remains to review such conviction, even with a life sentence (under the verdict of the jury) so imposed.

Re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200, 35 L. ed. 409, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 735; Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 36 L. ed. 429, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617.

Solicitor General Richards submitted the cause for defendant in error:

The indictment was sufficient.

State v. Dougherty, 4 Or. 200; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588.

The testimony relating to Corbett was clearly competent, not for the purpose of connecting Corbett with the crime, but of showing the entire transaction.

People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367, 65 N. W. 216; Ryan v. State, 83 Wis. 486, 53 N. W. 836; State v. Struble, 71 Iowa, 11, 32 N. W. 1; Angle v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 427, 34 S. W. 116; State v. Shields, 45 Conn. 256; Phelps v. State, 15 Tex. App. 45; Fisher v. State, 73 Ga. 595.

[306] *Mr Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court:

1. A suggestion is made by the government of a want of jurisdiction in this case, upon the ground that it is not one of a "conviction of a capital crime" within § 5 of the court of appeals act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), as amended by act of January 20, 1897 (29 Stat. at L. 492, chap. 68), specifying the cases in which a writ of error may be issued directly to a district court. It is clear, however, that, as § 5339 of the Revised Statutes inflicts the penalty of death for murder, the power given [307] *the jury by the act of January 15, 1897 (29 Stat. at L. 487, chap. 29), to qualify the verdict of guilty by adding the words "without capital punishment," does not make the crime of murder anything less than a capital offense, or a conviction for murder anything less than a conviction for a capital crime, by reason of the fact that the punishment actually imposed is imprisonment for life. The test is not the punishment which is imposed, but that which may be imposed under the statute. As was observed in Re Claasen, 140 U. S. 200, 205, 35 L. ed. 409, 411, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 735, 737, with respect to infamous crimes under the court of appeals act prior to its amendment: "A crime which is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison or penitentiary, as the crime of which the defendant was convicted, is an infamous crime whether the accused is or is not sentenced or put to hard labor; and that, in determining whether the crime is infamous, the question is whether it is one for which the statute authorizes the court to award an infamous punishment, and not whether the punishment ultimately awarded is an infamous one." See also Ex parte Wilson, 114 U. S. 417, 426, 29 L. ed.

1080

89, 92, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 935; Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 308, 36 L. ed. 429, 445, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617; The Paquete Habana, 175 U. S. 677, 682, ante, 320, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 209; Motes v. United States, 178 U. S. 458, post, 1150, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 993.

conviction of murder, punishable with death, is not the less a conviction for a capital crime by reason of the fact that the jury, in a particular case, qualifies the punishment.

2. The first question raised by the plaintiff in error relates to the sufficiency of the indictment, which was for a violation of Rev. Stat. § 5339. This section, eliminating the immaterial clauses, declares that "every person who commits murder . . . within any fort . . . or in any other place or district of country under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States . . . shall suffer death." This section does not define the crime of murder, but prescribes its punishment.

By § 7 of an act providing a civil government for Alaska, approved May 17, 1884 (23 Stat. at L. 24, chap. 53), it is enacted "that the general laws of the state of Oregon now in force are hereby declared to be the law in said district, so far as the same may be applicable, and not in conflict with the provisions of this act or the laws of the United States." We are, therefore, to look to the law of Oregon and the interpretation put thereon *by the highest court of that state, [308] as they stood on the day this act was passed, for the requisites for an indictment for murder, rather than to the rules of the common law.

By Hill's Annotated Laws of Oregon, § 1268, relating to criminal procedure, an indictment must contain:

"1. The title of the action, specifying the name of the court to which the indictment is presented, and the names of the parties;

"2. A statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended."

In State v. Dougherty, 4 Or. 200, the supreme court of that state had held that "the indictment should contain such a specification of acts and descriptive circumstances as will, upon its face, fix and determine the identity of the offense, and enable the court, by an inspection of the record alone, to determine whether, admitting the truth of the specific acts charged, a thing has been done which is forbidden by law."

By § 1270, Hill's Laws, it is provided that "the manner of stating the act constituting the crime, as set forth in the appendix to this Code, is sufficient, in all cases where the forms there given are applicable, and in other cases forms may be used as nearly similar as the nature of the case will permit;" and in an appendix to this section the following form is given for murder: "And purposely and of deliberate and premeditated malice killed C. D. by shooting him with a gun or pistol, or by administering to him poison, or," etc.

It will be noticed that § 1270 only declares

178 U. S.

[309] that the form given in the appendix is sufficient in all cases where the forms there given are applicable, but it does not purport to be exclusive of other forms the pleader may choose to adopt. It does not declare the insufficiency of other forms, but merely the sufficiency of those contained in the appendix. We are therefore remitted to § 1268 to inquire whether the indictment contains "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, without repetition, *and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended." This section was doubtless intended to modify to a certain extent the strictness of the common-law indictment, and simply to require the statement of the elements of the offense in language adapted to the common understanding of the people, whether it would be regarded as sufficient by the rules of the common law or not. People v. Dolan, 9 Cal. 576; People v. Ah Woo, 28 Cal. 205; People v. Rodriguez, 10 Cal. 50. As was said by this court in United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 558, 23 L. ed. 593: "The object of the indictment is, first, to furnish the accused with such a description of the charge against him as will enable him to make his defense, and avail himself of his conviction or acquittal for protection against a further prosecution for the same cause; and, second, to inform the court of the facts alleged, so that it may decide whether they are sufficient in law to support a conviction, if one should be had."

The indictment in this case, omitting the immaterial parts, avers that the accused "did unlawfully, wilfully, knowingly, feloniously, purposely, and of deliberate and premeditated malice, make an assault upon one Samuel Roberts," and a certain loaded revolver "then and there feloniously, purposely, and of deliberate and premeditated malice did discharge and shoot off to, against, and upon the said Samuel Roberts," and one of the bullets aforesaid, discharged as aforesaid, "feloniously, purposely, and deliberate and premeditated malice did strike, penetrate, and wound him, the said Samuel Roberts, in and upon the right breast, . . . one mortal wound, of which he, the said Samuel Roberts, instantly died;" and further, that the defendants "did then and there kill and murder the said Samuel Roberts in the manner and form aforesaid, contrary," etc.

Defendant criticises this indictment as failing to aver deliberate and premeditated malice in killing Roberts, although it is averred that the defendants did, with deliberate and premeditated malice, inflict a mortal wound, of which he instantly died, and that they killed and murdered him in the manner and form aforesaid. If, as alleged in the indictment, they, with deliberate and premeditated malice, shot Roberts in the [310] breast with a *revolver, and inflicted a mortal wound, of which he instantly died, they would be presumed to contemplate and intend the natural and probable consequences of such act; and an additional averment that they, with deliberate and premeditated malice, intended to kill him, was quite unnecessary to apprise the common understanding of their purpose. If they purposefully inflicted a mortal wound, they must have intended to kill. No person could have a moment's hesitation as to what it was intended to aver, namely, that the defendants had been guilty of a deliberate and premeditated murder; and while a number of cases are cited which lend some support to the argument of the defendant, there was no such statute involved as § 1268 of the Oregon Code. We have no doubt the indictment furnished the accused with such a description of the charge as would enable him to avail himself of a plea of former jeopardy, and also to inform the court whether the facts were sufficient in law to support a conviction, within the ruling in the Cruikshank Case. While we should hold an indictment to be insufficient that did not charge in definite language all the elements constituting the offense, we have no desire to be hypercritical or to require the pleader to unduly repeat as to every incident of the offense the allegation of deliberateness and premeditation. We are bound to give some effect to the provisions of § 1268 in its evident purpose to authorize a relaxation of the extreme stringency of criminal pleadings, and make that sufficient in law which satisfies the "common understanding" of men.

3. Certain exceptions to the admission of testimony render it necessary to notice the more prominent facts of the case. The murder took place at Dyea, Alaska, just outside the cabin of Roberts. Roberts conducted certain games at the Wonder Hotel or saloon, and slept in his cabin across the street, about 150 feet from the saloon. Ross and Brennan, two of the government witnesses, were employed by Roberts in connection with the games. Ross testified that, about 2 o'clock in the morning, Roberts, the deceased, asked the witnesses to accompany him from the Wonder Hotel to the cabin, and to carry a sack of money used at the games. Roberts was *in the habit of going [311] to his cabin every night accompanied by a man carrying the sack. They entered the cabin, and, while Roberts struck a match, something suspicious seemed to occur, and both stepped outside the door. Instantly there was a report of a gun inside the cabin. Roberts crowded witness off the porch, the sack of money fell off witness's shoulder, and he fell off the steps. As he fell he heard the report of a pistol from outside the cabin, and soon heard hurried footsteps close to him. He then heard the report of a gun from inside the cabin, and in a few seconds a man came out, stood on the porch, raised his gun and fired two shots in the direction of the Wonder Hotel, turned to the right in a leisurely manner, got off the steps and disappeared behind the north side of the house. Witness recognized this man as Fitzpatrick, the defendant. As Fitzpatrick disappeared, witness called for help, and Brennan and others came over from the hotel with a lantern. Roberts was found lying on his back, fatally wounded, and almost immediately died.

Brennan, who was at the hotel, saw Roberts start with Ross, with the sack, to go to the cabin. In a few minutes he heard a shot, and started toward the door, but before he got to the door there was another shot, and, when he reached the pavement, still another, which seemed to come from the cabin. Witness ran back to the hotel, got a gun and lantern, ran across the street, found Ross first, and then Roberts on his back dying. There was some other testimony to the same general effect.

The testimony to which objection was made was that of Ballard, a soldier on guard duty at Dyea on the night of the occurrence, who testified that about 2 o'clock in the morning he heard four or five shots from the direction of Roberts' cabin and the Wonder Hotel, and that some fifteen or twenty minutes or half an hour thereafter, a man came to him. "I was in the cabin, and he rapped on the door, and I went and opened the door for him, and he said he would like to get a doctor. He was shot. . . . I directed him to the hospital in town, and he went that way." Witness said that he did not know the man, but was afterwards told that his name was Corbett. He was brought into court, but witness could not identify him with certainty.

[312] *Objection was also made to the testimony of Dr. Price, who swore that about 3 o'clock in the morning Corbett applied to him for medical assistance; that he was wounded in the right shoulder, and witness was in attendance upon him about three weeks or a month. Also to the testimony of John Cudihee, deputy United States marshal, who arrested Fitzpatrick, Brooks, and Corbett the day of the murder, and made an investigation. He found Roberts in his cabin dead, then went to Fitzpatrick and Corbett's cabin, and found there a lot of shoes and clothing covered with blood. The witness produced the shoes in evidence, pointed out which pair was Fitzpatrick's and which was Corbett's, explained that Fitzpatrick had identified the shoes in his office, and pointed out which pair was Corbett's and which was his. Witness also pointed out the blood stains on both shoes. Corbett's shoe fitted the footprints in the sand which the witness found in the rear of Roberts' cabin, where the shooting occurred. The shoe had hobnails in it, and the heel of one was worn off so the print in the sand was a peculiar one.

Objection was made to the admission of any testimony relating to the acts of Corbett, and especially that which occurred after the alleged crime had been committed. No direct testimony appears in the record showing the presence of Corbett at the cabin before, during, or after the commission of the crime for which Fitzpatrick was then on trial. Had the statement of Corbett, that he was shot, and inquiring for a doctor, tended in any way to connect Fitzpatrick with the murder, it would doubtless have been inadmissible against him upon the principle announced in Sparf v. United States, 156 U. S. 51, 34 L. ed. 343, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273, that statements made by one of two joint defendants in the absence of the other defendant, while admissible against the party making the statement, are inadmissible against the other party. In that case declarations of Hansen connecting Sparf with the homicide there involved, tending to prove the guilt of both, and made in the absence of Sparf, were held inadmissible against the latter. This is a familiar principle of law; but the statement of Ballard was not within this rule. Corbett had evidently been wounded, and was asking for a doctor. His accompanying statement that he was shot was clearly competent *to explain his condi- [313] tion, and had no tendency whatever to connect Fitzpatrick with the transaction. This statement, as well as that of Dr. Price, to the effect that he found Corbett with a wound in his right shoulder, and that of Cudihee as to finding a lot of shoes and clothing covered with blood, and connecting one pair of these shoes with the footprints found near Roberts' cabin, were all facts connected with the crime which the government was entitled to lay before the jury. Fitzpatrick and Corbett roomed together. Their bloody clothes and shoes were found in their cabin the morning after the murder. Brooks had roomed with them. Brooks and Corbett in their affidavit for a continuance swore in effect that they were together that night, and attempted to establish a joint alibi.

There was no doubt that a homicide had been committed, and it was the province of the jury to determine whether the defendant was a guilty party. Any fact which had a bearing upon this question, immediate or remote, and occurring at any time before the incident was closed, was proper for the consideration of the jury. Of course, statements made in the absence of Fitzpatrick implicating him with the murder would not be competent, but none such were admitted; but any act done, whether in Fitzpatrick's presence or not, which had a tendency to connect him with the crime, was proper for the consideration of the jury, and the fact that Corbett was not then on trial is immaterial in this connection. As there was some evidence tending to show a joint action on the part of the three defendants, any fact having a tendency to connect them with the murder was competent upon the trial of Fitzpatrick. The true distinction is between statements made after the fact, which are competent only against the party making the statement, and facts connecting either party with the crime which are competent as a part of the whole transaction. In the trial of either party it is proper to lay before the jury the entire affair, including the acts and conduct of all the defendants from the time the homicide was first contemplated to the time the transaction was closed. It may have a bearing only against the party doing the act, or it may have a remoter bearing upon the other defendants:

but such as it is, it is competent to be laid before the jury.

[314] *In People v. Cleveland, 107 Mich. 367, 65 N. W. 216, error was assigned by the defendant in permitting the prosecution to show the acts of one Mehan, jointly indicted with Cleveland in the affray; his appearance on the way to Jackson, and on the succeeding days; the excuse he gave for his then condition, and the result of an examination of his clothing. But the court said: "It is apparent from the testimony that the three parties, when they left Jackson, had arranged to engage in this robbery, . . . and the arrangement had been carried out so far as they were able to do so. It was therefore proper to show the condition of Mehan, who was not on trial for the purpose of establishing his identity as one of the men who accompanied the respondent Cleveland from Jackson to Somerset Center, thus identifying the latter's connection with the robbery."

So, in Angley v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 427, 34 S. W. 116, error was assigned upon the admission of testimony to show the character of shoes Rice (who was connected with the transaction but not jointly indicted) had on when arrested the day after the assault. One ground of the objection was that Rice was not jointly indicted with Angley. When Rice was arrested and his shoes examined it was found that one of them had a hole in the sole fitting a corresponding peculiarity in the track found upon the ground. The court held this testimony proper, though Rice was separately indicted, because the conspiracy had been shown. This was a circumstance tending to show that he was one of the parties present at the time the assault was committed.

4. Error is also assigned in not restricting the cross-examination of the plaintiff in error. Defendant himself was the only witness put upon the stand by the defense, who was connected with the transaction; and he was asked but a single question, and that related to his whereabouts upon the night of the murder. To this he answered: "I was up between Clancy's and Kennedy's. I had been in Clancy's up to about half-past twelve or one o'clock—about one o'clock, I guess. I went up to Kennedy's and had a few drinks with Captain Wallace and Billy Kennedy, and I told them I was getting kind of full and I was going home, and along about quarter past one Wallace brought me down about as far as Clancy's, and then he [315] took me down *to the cabin and left me in the cabin, and we wound the alarm clock and set it to go off at six o'clock, and I took off my shoes and lay down on the bunk and woke up at six o'clock in the morning, and went up the street."

On cross-examination the government was permitted, over the objection of defendant's counsel, to ask questions relating to the witness's attire on the night of the shooting, to his acquaintance with Corbett, whether Corbett had shoes of a certain kind, whether witness saw Corbett on the evening of March 178 U. S.

12, the night preceding the shooting, whether Corbett roomed with Fitzpatrick in the latter's cabin, and whether witness saw anyone else in the cabin besides Brooks and Corbett. The court permitted this upon the theory that it was competent for the prosecution to show every movement of the prisoner during the night, the character of his dress, the places he had visited, and the company he had kept.

Where an accused party waives his constitutional privilege of silence, takes the stand in his own behalf and makes his own statement, it is clear that the prosecution has a right to cross-examine upon such statement with the same latitude as would be exercised in the case of an ordinary witness, as to the circumstances connecting him with the alleged crime. While no inference of guilt can be drawn from his refusal to avail himself of the privilege of testifying, he has no right to set forth to the jury all the facts which tend in his favor without laying himself open to a cross-examination upon those facts. The witness having sworn to an alibi, it was perfectly competent for the government to cross-examine him as to every fact which had a bearing upon his whereabouts upon the night of the murder, and as to what he did and the persons with whom he associated that night. Indeed, we know of no reason why an accused person who takes the stand as a witness should not be subject to cross-examination as other witnesses are. Had another witness been placed upon the stand by the defense, and sworn that he was with the prisoner at Clancy's and Kennedy's that night, it would clearly have been competent to ask what the prisoner wore, and whether the witness saw Corbett the same night or the night before, and whether they were fellow *occupants of the same room. [316]

While the court would probably have no power of compelling an answer to any question, a refusal to answer a proper question put upon cross-examination has been held to be a proper subject of comment to the jury (State v. Ober, 52 N. H. 459); and it is also held in a large number of cases that when an accused person takes the stand in his own behalf, he is subject to impeachment like other witnesses. If the prosecution should go farther and compel the defendant, on cross-examination, to write his own name or that of another person, when he had not testified in reference thereto in his direct examination, the case of State v. Lurch, 12 Or. 99, 6 Pac. 408, is authority for saying that this would be error. It would be a clear case of the defendant being compelled to furnish original evidence against himself. State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 12 Pac. 441, is also authority for the proposition that he cannot be compelled to answer as to any facts not relevant to his direct examination.

5. Error is also assigned to the action of the court in permitting the government to call and examine witnesses in rebuttal with respect to the effect of light from the flash of a revolver, and whether such light would be sufficient to enable a person firing the revolver to be identified. One of the witnesses, Ross, testified on cross-examination that although the night was dark, he identified Fitzpatrick by the flash of the pistol shots.

Had the defense put in no evidence whatever upon the subject, the question would have been presented whether it was or was not a matter of discretion for the court to admit this testimony in rebuttal; but in view of the fact that the defense put in a calendar apparently for the purpose of showing the time that the moon rose that night as having some bearing upon this question, there was no impropriety in putting in this testimony.

There was no error committed upon the trial prejudicial to the defendant, and the judgment of the District Court is therefore affirmed.

[317]Ex parte* UNION STEAMBOAT COMPANY, Petitioner.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 317-320.)

Mandamus—to compel obedience to mandate—questions open under mandate.

1. The decision by an inferior court upon any matter left open by the mandate and opinion of a higher court can be reviewed only upon a new appeal, and not by mandamus.
2. A question as to the recoupment of one half the damages to a cargo from a moiety of damages awarded to one of the vessels in collision, if not raised or passed upon on an appeal which directs a decree for a division of the damages between the vessels which are held to be in fault, remains open for determination by the lower court under a mandate to enter a decree in conformity to the opinion on appeal.

[No. 12, Original.]

Submitted May 14, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

PETITION for writ of mandamus. Denied.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

[317] *This was a petition for a writ of mandamus to the district court for the eastern district of Michigan, commanding it to set aside a decree entered in the case of The New York, 175 U. S. 187, anti, 126, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 67, and enter a decree dividing the damages equally, so that petitioner would not be decreed to pay more than one half the total damages arising out of the collision between the New York and the Conemaugh, with interest thereon not exceeding 5 per cent per annum.

Upon the opinion of this court in the case of the New York being filed, a mandate is—

NOTE.—As to mandamus to inferior tribunal—see State ex rel. Bayha v. Kansas City Ct. of Appeals (Mo.) 3 L. R. A. 476, and note.

As to mandamus in aid of appeal—see note to Lewis v. Baltimore & L. R. Co. 10 C. C. A. 450.

As to mandamus, when the proper remedy and when not—see note to United States ex rel. International Contracting Co. v. Lamont, 39 L. ed. U. S. 303; McCluny v. Silliman, 4 L. ed. U. S. 263.

1084

sued that the decree of the court of appeals be reversed, and the case remanded to the district court, with direction "to enter a decree in conformity with the opinion of this court, with interest at the same rate per annum that decrees bear in the state of Michigan." Upon the case coming on to be heard in the district court, the petitioner, the Union Steamboat Company, owner of the propeller New York, submitted a decree to the effect that both vessels were in fault for the collision, and that the damages resulting therefrom be equally divided between the Erie & Western Transportation Company, owner of the Conemaugh, and the Union Steamboat Company, owner of the New York; that such damages amounted in all to the sum of $74,319.49, of which certain intervening underwriters of the cargo were entitled to, and recovered from the steamboat company, $19,841.56; that the transportation company, as trustees for the underwriters and owners of the cargo of the Conemaugh, not intervening, suffered damages in the sum of $19,627.67; that, as owner of the propeller, it had suffered damages in the sum of $30,508.46, aggregating the sum of $50,136.13; that the transportation company recover of the petitioner one half of $50,136.13, less one half the sum of $19,841.56, decreed to be paid to the intervening petitioners, etc.

The court, however, declined to enter this decree; refused to permit the petitioner to recoup any sum that it might pay to the owners or underwriters of the cargo of the Conemaugh, from any sum that was due from the steamboat company for damages sustained by the Conemaugh, so that such company was compelled to pay of the total damages about 76 per cent instead of 50 per cent thereof.

Messrs. C. E. Kremer, H. C. Wisner, F. C. Harvey, and O. W. Johnson submitted the cause for petitioner.

Messrs. Harvey D. Goulder, and F. S. Masten submitted the cause for respondent. Mr. S. H. Holding was with them on the brief.

Mr. Frank H. Canfield submitted the cause for intervening underwriters.

*Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion of the court: [318]

Petitioner applies for this writ of mandamus upon the ground that the district court refused to enter a decree in conformity with the opinion of this court dividing the damages, but in effect entered a decree imposing upon the Union Steamboat Company, the petitioner, about 76 per cent of the damages occasioned by the collision:

The duty of an inferior court upon receiving the mandate of this court is nowhere better described than by Mr. Justice Baldwin in an early case upon that subject (Sibbald v. United States, 12 Pet. 488, 492, 9 L. ed. 1167, 1169): "Whatever," said he, "was before the court, and is disposed of, is considered as finally *settled. The inferior court is bound by the decree as the law of the case, and must carry it into execution [319] according to the mandate. They cannot vary it or examine it for any other purpose than execution; or give any other or further relief; or review it upon any matter decided on appeal for error apparent; nor intermeddle with it, further than to settle so much as has been remanded. . . . If the special mandate directed by the 24th section [of the judiciary act] is not obeyed or executed, then the general power given to 'all the courts of the United States to issue any writs which are necessary for the exercise of their respective jurisdictions, and agreeable to the principles and usages of law,' by the 14th section of the judiciary act, fairly arises, and a mandamus or other appropriate writs will go," although an appeal will also sometimes lie. Perkins v. Fourniquet, 14 How. 328, 330, 14 L. ed. 441, 442; Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 2 Wall. 440, 443, 17 L. ed. 860, 861. See also Boyce v. Grundy, 9 Pet. 275, 9 L. ed. 127; Ex parte Dubuque & P. R. Co. 1 Wall. 69, sub nom. Dubuque & P. R. Co. v. Litchfield, 17 L. ed. 514; Durant v. Essex Co. 101 U. S. 555, 25 L. ed. 961; Re Washington & G. R. Co. 140 U. S. 91, 35 L. ed. 339, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 673; City Bank v. Hunter, 152 U. S. 512, 38 L. ed. 534, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 675; Re City Nat. Bank, 153 U. S. 246, 38 L. ed. 705, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 804; Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 160 U. S. 247, 40 L. ed. 414, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291; Re Potts, 166 U. S. 263, sub nom. Re C. & A. Potts & Co. 41 L. ed. 994, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 520.

178 U. S.

It is equally well settled, however, that such writ, as a general rule, lies only where there is no other adequate remedy, and that it cannot be availed of as a writ of error. Re Pennsylvania Co. 137 U. S. 451, 34 L. ed. 738, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Re Morrison, 147 U. S. 14, 26, 37 L. ed. 60, 65, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 246; Ex parte Des Moines & M. R. Co. 103 U. S. 794, 26 L. ed. 461; Ex parte Baltimore & O. R. Co. 108 U. S. 566, 27 L. ed. 812, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 876; Re Atlantic City R. Co. 164 U. S. 633, 41 L. ed. 579, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208. The inferior court is justified in considering and deciding any question left open by the mandate and opinion of this court, and its decision upon such matter can only be reviewed upon a new appeal to the proper court (Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 160 U. S. 247, 256, 40 L. ed. 414, 416, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291); and the opinion of this court may be consulted to ascertain exactly what was decided and settled. West v. Brashear, 13 Pet. 51, 10 L. ed. 350; Wayne County Supers. v. Kennicott, 94 U. S. 498, 24 L. ed. 260; Gaines v. Rugg, 148 U. S. 228, 238, 244, 37 L. ed. 432, 435, 437, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 611; Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co. 160 U. S. 247, 256, 40 L. ed. 414, 416, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 291.

[320] The libel in this case was for a collision between the Conemaugh* and the New York. The only questions decided were as to the respective faults of the two vessels, and the claim of the underwriters upon the Conemaugh's cargo, that they were entitled to a recovery to the full amount of their damages against the New York, notwithstanding 178 U. S.

the Conemaugh was also in fault for the collision. This claim was sustained, and directions given to enter a decree in conformity to the opinion of this court. Such decree was entered, dividing the damages between the two vessels, and awarding to the underwriters of the cargo a full recovery against the New York. It may be true that the decree holds the New York liable for 76 per cent of the entire damages, and not 50 per cent, but this results from the fact that she was primarily held for the entire value of the cargo. The equal division applied only to the vessels, and, upon the other hand, if petitioner be entitled to the recoupment claimed, it would apparently result in an affirmative decree in its favor. But no question of recouping one half of such damages to the cargo from the moiety of damages awarded the Conemaugh was made by counsel or passed upon by this court. It is now insisted that, under the cases of The Chattahoochee, 173 U. S. 540, 43 L. ed. 801, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 491; and The Albert Dumois, 177 U. S. 240, ante, 751, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 595, this should have been done. This may be so; but it is an entirely new question, quite unaffected by the case of the New York, and if the court erred in refusing to allow such recoupment, the remedy is by appeal, and not by mandamus. Perhaps a mandamus might lie to review the allowance of interest, but that may also be considered on appeal.

No disobedience of the mandate having been shown, the petition must be denied.

*JOHN M. WHEELER et al., Plffs. in Err., [321]
v.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN, & HARTFORD RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 321-326.)

Error to state court—Federal question—constitutionality of taking of land, to abolish grade crossing—due process of law.

1. A claim that property is taken without due process of law when condemned under a special statute for the abolition of grade crossings, because the act authorizes an increase

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois ex rel. Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what is a Federal question; when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

As to what constitutes due process of law—see Kuntz v. Sumption (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 655, and note; Re Gannon (R. I.) 5 L. R. A. 359, and note; Ulman v. Baltimore (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 224, and note; Gilman v. Tucker (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 304, and note. And see notes to People v. O'Brien (N. Y.) 2 L. R. A. 258; Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; Wilson v. North Carolina ex rel. Caldwell, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

As to liability for cost of changing grade of street to prevent the crossing of a railroad at grade—see Kelly v. Minneapolis (Minn.) 26 L. R. A. 92, and note.

in the number of tracks, and requires the city to pay part of the expense in violation of the state Constitution, which prohibits donations by a city to a railroad corporation, raises a Federal question for the purpose of a writ of error from the Supreme Court of the United States to a state court.

2. The condemnation of property under a special statute for the abolition of grade crossings is not a taking of the property of the owners, whether as property owners or as taxpayers, without due process of law, by reason of the fact that the statute authorizes an increase in the number of tracks, and provides for payment of part of the expense by the city in which the property is situated, whether the provision for payment by the city is valid under the state Constitution or not, since the condemnation of the property and the apportionment of the cost are distinct and separable portions of the statute.

[No. 534.]

Submitted May 14, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of Errors of the State of Connecticut to review a decision affirming an order for the appointment of appraisers under a statute for the abolition of grade crossings. Motion to dismiss or affirm. Affirmed.

See same case below, 70 Conn. 326, 39 Atl. 443.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brown:

- [321] *This was a motion to dismiss the writ of error, and in default thereof to affirm the judgment of the supreme court of errors of Connecticut.

The case originated in an application by the railroad company to the judge of the superior court to appoint appraisers to estimate the damages that might arise to the plaintiffs in error from the taking of certain real estate in the city of Bridgeport, for the purpose of carrying out an agreement between the railroad company and the city of Bridgeport for the abolition of grade crossings. This agreement, which was entered into under the provisions of an act of the general assembly, "providing for the abolition of grade crossings in Bridgeport," provided the manner, plans, method, and time in

- [322] *which the grade crossings should be abolished, and the proportion of the cost thereof to be borne by the city of Bridgeport and the railroad company—the proportion of such cost to be paid by the city being one sixth and that by the railroad company five sixths, provided the total cost to be paid by the city should not exceed the sum of $400,000.

A demurrer to the application of the railroad company having been overruled, and a special defense in the answer having been stricken out as irrelevant and impertinent, an order was made appointing the appraisers. An appeal was taken to the supreme court of errors, which affirmed the judgment of the judge of the superior court, and defendant sued out this writ of error, which defendant in error moves to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, or to affirm upon the ground that the question upon which the jurisdiction depends is frivolous.

1086

Messrs. Robert E. De Forest and George P. Carroll submitted the cause for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. William D. Bishop, Jr., submitted the cause for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Brown delivered the opinion [322] of the court:

Plaintiffs assign as error that, in view of the fact that, by the agreement between the city and the railroad company, it was provided that the city should pay one sixth of the entire cost of the land required for the construction of a four-track road, as well as of all damages resulting from the changes of grade, there would be a reimbursement to the company for expenses in doing work and acquiring land not necessary or germane to the work of eliminating crossings at grade of the two present main tracks over the highways; and that, under these circumstances, the condemnation of defendants' property will be in furtherance of a scheme whereby the city of Bridgeport will contribute and donate to such company the credit, money, and property of the city, and of its property owners and taxpayers, in aid of the railroad company, contrary to the provisions of twenty-fifth amendment to the Constitution of the state of Connecticut, and the taking [323] and condemnation of said Wheeler and Howes' said property will be a taking thereof without due process of law, etc.

1. We cannot say that there is no Federal question in this case. In their demurrer to the application of the railroad company plaintiffs in error relied upon the unconstitutionality of this special act of the Connecticut legislature as contravening the twenty-fifth amendment to the Constitution of the state, and the Fourteenth Amendment of the Federal Constitution. The amendment to the state Constitution provides as follows: "That no county, city, town, borough, or other municipality shall ever subscribe to the capital stock of any railroad corporation, or become a purchaser of the bonds, or make donation to, or loan its credit, directly or indirectly, in aid of, any such corporation."

The claim was, not that it was unconstitutional for the city of Bridgeport to pay for a part of the work for grade crossing elimination, but that the pay for work for the benefit of the company, in the construction of a four-track road, which was not necessary or germane to the work of grade crossing elimination, would be contrary to the above amendment to the state Constitution; and therefore that, as the land of Wheeler and Howes was to be taken to carry out a part of the project, to be paid for in part by the city, not necessary or germane to the work of grade crossing elimination, their property would be taken without due process of law. The substance of the defense seems to have been that the land was not taken solely for the purpose of abolishing grade crossings, but also for the purpose of laying two extra tracks, and making the road through the city of Bridgeport a four-track road instead of an

178 U. S.

[324] ordinary double track. It seems that the railroad company had laid a complete four-track road all the way from New York to New Haven, except in that section which lay in the city of Bridgeport—a distance of more than 4 miles, and crossing at grade twenty-four streets, some of them the most frequented in the whole city. There is no doubt that the special act did authorize an increase in the number of tracks, and there was some reason for saying that in requiring the city to pay one sixth of *the expenses incurred for this purpose, it was making a donation in aid of the railroad company in violation of the twenty-fifth amendment to the state Constitution, and as Wheeler and Howes were property owners and taxpayers of the city, they were incidentally affected by this, and therefore their lands were illegally taken.

2. But, assuming that there was color for the motion to dismiss, we are clearly of the opinion that the decree of the supreme court of errors should be affirmed. That court had already decided, not only that the legislature might compel the removal of grade crossings and the payment of the expenses therefor, either by the railroad company or by the city, or by both (Woodruff v. Catlin, 54 Conn. 277, 6 Atl. 849, a case arising under a former act), and that a statute compelling the removal of grade crossings, as well as imposing upon the railroad the entire expense of the change of grade, was constitutional (New York & N. E. R. Co.'s Appeal, 58 Conn. 532, 20 Atl. 670; New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 38 L. ed. 269, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 437); but the very act in question in this case has also been held to be constitutional. Mooney v. Clark, 69 Conn. 241, 37 Atl. 506, 1080. That court also held in this case that, whether the land be taken only for the purpose of abolishing grade crossings or to straighten its line and construct additional tracks, the taking is in either case for railroad purposes and for a public use. It also held that the right of the railroad company to condemn defendants' property did not depend upon the validity of any part of the special act of 1895, since by the resolution of the board of directors of the company in July, 1896, and by the approval of the commissioners in June, 1897, both of which were alleged in the application, the railroad company was entitled under section 3461 of the General Statutes to take the land for the uses named in the resolution.

The plaintiffs in error contended before the supreme court of errors, as they contend here, that the agreement and order made in pursuance thereof, imposing upon the city a proportion of the expense of constructing the two additional elevated tracks, not necessary to the work of eliminating grade crossings, violated the state Constitution as well as the Constitution of the United States. "But," [325] said the court, "if the railroad company *desires to take this property as one step in carrying out the proposed plan, the defendants cannot prevent it upon the ground that the company may not afterwards be able to obtain reimbursement from the city. The ability of the defendants to obtain payment of their damages does not depend upon the right of the railroad company to collect a part of it from the city. Before taking the land the company must compensate the defendants." It was further said that, even if the employment of appraisers had established the liability of the city to pay a proportion of the expense of laying the additional tracks, such a defense was not open to the defendants, because they had not alleged that they were taxpayers or had any right or authority to represent the city in such proceedings, or that they will be injured in any respect from the payment by the city of its part of the expense of the work as fixed by the agreement and order. "But," says the court, "the appointment of appraisers in this proceeding does not affect the question of the liability of the city to pay that part of the expense ordered by the commissioners. The right of the railroad company to have appraisers appointed and to take this property does not depend upon the obligation of the city to pay a one-sixth part of the expense of the whole, or of any portion of the work of this undertaking. The two purposes of the act of 1895 were: First, the removal of all existing grade crossings in Bridgeport, and the construction, in the most feasible manner, after considering the interest of the public, the rights, responsibilities, and duties of the railroad company and of the city, and the rights of other parties concerned, of a four-track railroad through the city, in such a way as to avoid crossing any highway at grade; and, second, a just apportionment of the cost among those who ought to bear the expense of performing the work in the manner determined. These two purposes are so far distinct and separable, and are so intended to be by the act, that neither the right of the railroad company to perform the work according to the plans approved by commissioners, nor the power of the commissioners to compel its performance, depends upon a previous apportionment of the expense between the parties who should bear it. Section 12, as we have already said, provides that if no agreement shall have been made as authorized by § 2, *the commissioners, [326] after the work shall have been completed, shall apportion the entire expense among the proper parties."

The court intimated no opinion as to whether the agreement and order fixing the proportionate part of the entire expense to be paid by the city was of doubtful validity. It thought the question was one which could not properly be raised in this proceeding.

The court held in substance (1) that the right to have appraisers appointed did not depend upon the obligation of the city to pay a part of the expense, and that defendants could not prevent a condemnation by showing that the company might not afterwards be able to obtain reimbursement from the city; and (2) that the defendants, not alleging that they were taxpayers, or specially interested, were not in a position to question the validity of the proceedings. If this be so, it requires no argument to show that they are not in a position to contend that their property has been taken without due process of law. If the court had gone farther, and held that the taking of defendants' property for the purpose, not only of abolishing grade crossings, but of enabling the railroad company to lay additional tracks, was not a violation of the twenty-fifth amendment to the state Constitution, that would have been exclusively a local question, and would have involved no question of an unlawful taking of defendants' property within the Fourteenth Amendment.

If the fact that the city of Bridgeport contributed to the expense of abolishing grade crossings, and, incidentally thereto, to the construction of additional tracks, does no violence to the constitutional provision that no city shall make a donation in aid of a railroad corporation, as held by the supreme court of Connecticut, much less does it make a case of taking the property of petitioners, whether as property owners or as taxpayers, without due process of law.

The decree of the Supreme Court of Errors of the State of Connecticut is therefore affirmed.

Mr. Justice Gray did not sit in this case, and took no part in the decision.

[327]*MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK, Petitioner,
v.

NELLIE PHINNEY, Executrix of Guy C.
Phinney, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 327-344.)

Appeal—failure of clerk to indorse filing on writ of error—insurance—abandonment and rescission of policy after default—presumption as to knowledge of law governing contract—expression of opinion as to matter of law—waiver of exception to instruction by asking court to repeat it.

1. The failure of a clerk of the circuit court of appeals to indorse a writ of error as filed cannot defeat the transfer of the case, when the judge has done all that is necessary for him to do, and the party has done all that is required of him.
2. An abandonment and rescission of a contract of life insurance by mutual agreement of the parties after the insured is in default by nonpayment of premiums will put an end to the contract, although a forfeiture could not have been declared, by reason of the failure of the insurer to give notices required by statute.
3. It is conclusively presumed that both parties to a contract know the law in respect to which they make it, when they agree that it shall be determined by the laws of a certain state.
4. A mere expression of opinion as to a condition of a contract, which is a matter of law, in respect to which both parties are equally chargeable with knowledge, cannot constitute a false representation or deceit.

NOTE.—As to expression of opinion as fraud—see Hedin v. Minneapolis Medical & Surgical Inst. (Minn.) 35 L. R. A. 417, and note. And see note to Fargo Gaslight & Coke Co. v. Fargo Gas & Electric Co. (N. D.) 37 L. R. A. 604.

5. An exception to instructions is not waived by subsequently asking the court to repeat them, in connection with certain answers made to questions propounded by the jury, as this merely asks the restatement so as to qualify those answers.

[No. 12.]

Argued January 22, 23, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decision dismissing a writ of error for lack of jurisdiction. Reversed.

See same case below, 48 U. S. App. 78, 76 Fed. Rep. 617, 22 C. C. A. 425.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

*On September 22, 1890, Guy C. Phinney, [328] a resident of the state of Washington, applied to the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York for a policy of insurance on his life for the sum of $100,000 payable to his executors, administrators, or assigns. This application was forwarded by the local agent at Seattle to the general agent of the company at San Francisco, and by him to the home office of the company in New York city. By reason of such application a policy was issued to Phinney, bearing date September 24, 1890, forwarded to the general agent at San Francisco, by him to the local agent at Seattle, and by the latter delivered to Phinney, who received it, and at the same time paid the first year's premium, amounting to $3,770. The policy provided that Phinney should pay the annual premium of $3,770 on September 24 of each year thereafter for twenty full years, provided he should live so long, and also "this policy shall become void by nonpayment of the premium; all payments previously made shall be forfeited to the company, except as hereinafter provided." This last exception referred to certain provisions as to surrender value and readjustment of the amount of insurance on the payment of a certain number of payments, none of which are material to the question at issue in this case. Prior to September 24, 1891, notices were sent by both the general agent at San Francisco and the local agent at Seattle to Phinney that his premium would be due on September 24, 1891. Twice between the time *of [329] the receipt of this notice and the 24th of September, 1891, Phinney met Stinson, and requested him to accept his notes for the payment of the premium. This proposition was declined by Stinson, who declared at the time that he was unable to advance the premium for Phinney. Some time after September 24, 1891 (the exact date being unknown, but, according to the testimony, from four to six weeks thereafter), Phinney again met Stinson, and stated that he was prepared to pay the premium, but was told that it could not be accepted unless a certificate of health was furnished. No certificate of health was ever furnished. Phinney stated that he could not obtain it, as he had been rejected by another company a few days before, nor was there ever any formal tender of the premium. In December, 1891, or January, 1892, Stinson requested Phinney to allow him to have the policy to use for canvassing purposes, and Phinney thereupon surrendered the policy to the agent, with the statement that as the same had lapsed he had no further use for it. Stinson received the policy, and never returned it to Phinney. On September 24, 1892, the premium falling due on that day was neither paid nor tendered by Phinney, nor did he after the surrender of the policy in December, 1891, or January, 1892, ever take any action in regard thereto, or pay, or offer to pay, any premium thereon. On September 12, 1893, Phinney died, leaving his last will and testament, wherein he nominated the plaintiff as executrix. Nothing was done by her under this policy until July, 1894, although Phinney held policies in two other companies at the time of his death, proofs in respect to which were presented by the executrix within one month after his death. At that time she wrote to the insurance company a letter, in which she stated as follows:

Seattle, Wash., July 11, 1894.

The Mutual Life Insurance Co. of New York:

Gentlemen: On September 24, 1890, my husband, Guy C. Phinney, took out a policy, No. 422,198, in your company in the sum of one hundred thousand dollars. He died in this city last September 12, 1893. Not being familiar with his affairs, and the policy being mislaid, I was not aware that he [330] held such *a policy until a few days ago, when the matter was brought to my attention.

In addition, it appears that on the 16th day of September, 1893, in her application for probate of her husband's will, she filed an affidavit, which contained these statements:

"Real estate, consisting of lands in said King county, of town lots in the city of Seattle, and of improved city property, the exact description of all which is at this time unknown to your petitioner, but which is entirely community estate, the value of which is about $300,000; that there is personal property of various kinds, all of the same being community property of the value of about $50,000; that the total estate of said deceased, including the community interest of your petitioner, who is the widow of the said deceased, does not exceed in value the sum of about $350,000."

In July, 1894 (evidently at the suggestion of counsel), she presented her claim under the policy, which was rejected, and thereupon this suit to recover thereon was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Washington.

At the time the application was made and the policy issued the following statute was in force in the state of New York:

"Section one of chapter 341 of the laws 178 U. S.

of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, entitled 'An Act Regulating the Forfeiture of Life Insurance Policies,' is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 1. No life insurance company doing business in the state of New York shall have power to declare forfeited or lapsed any policy hereafter issued or renewed by reason of nonpayment of any annual premium or interest, or any portion thereof, except as hereinafter provided. Whenever any premium or interest due upon any such policy shall remain unpaid when due, a written or printed notice stating the amount of such premium or interest due on such policy, the place where said premium or interest should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is assured, or the assignee of the policy, if *notice of the assignment has been given to the company, at his or her last-known postoffice address, postage paid by the company, or by an agent of such company, or person appointed by it to collect such premium. Such notice shall further state that unless the said premium or interest then due shall be paid to the company or to a duly appointed agent or other person authorized to collect such premium within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, the said policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void. In case the payment demanded by such notice shall be made within the thirty days limited therefor, the same shall be taken to be in full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the payment of said premium or interest, anything therein contained to the contrary notwithstanding; but no such policy shall in any case be forfeited or declared forfeited or lapsed until the expiration of thirty days after the mailing of such notice. Provided, however, that a notice stating when the premium will fall due, and that if not paid the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void, served in the manner hereinbefore provided, at least thirty and not more than sixty days prior to the day when the premium is payable, shall have the same effect as the service of the notice hereinbefore provided for.

"Sec. 2. The affidavit of anyone authorized by section one to mail such notice, that the same was duly addressed to the person whose life is assured by the policy, or to the assignee of the policy, if notice of the assignment has been given to the company, in pursuance of said section, shall be presumptive evidence of such notice having been given." Laws 1877, chap. 321.

In 1892, and after the first default in the payment of premium by Phinney and the surrender of his policy to the agent, Stinson, the following statute was substituted for the act of 1877:

"Sec. 92. No forfeiture of policy without notice.—No life insurance corporation doing business in this state shall declare forfeited, or lapsed, any policy hereafter issued or renewed, and not issued upon the payment of monthly or weekly premiums, or [332] unless the same is a term insurance contract for one year or less, nor shall any such policy be forfeited, or lapsed, by reason of non-payment when due of any premium, interest, or instalment or any portion thereof required by the terms of the policy to be paid, unless a written or printed notice stating the amount of such premium, interest, instalment, or portion thereof, due on such policy, the place where it should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is insured, or the assignee of the policy, if notice of the assignment has been given to the corporation, at his or her last-known postoffice address, postage paid by the corporation, or by an officer thereof, or person appointed by it to collect such premium, at least fifteen and not more than forty-five days prior to the day when the same is payable.

"The notice shall also state that unless such premium, interest, instalment, or portion thereof, then due, shall be paid to the corporation or to a duly appointed agent or person authorized to collect such premium by or before the day it falls due, the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void except as the right to a surrender value or paid-up policy as in this chapter provided.

"If the payment demanded by such notice shall be made within its time limited therefor, it shall be taken to be in full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the time of such payment; and no such policy shall in any case be forfeited or declared forfeited or lapsed, until the expiration of thirty days after the mailing of such notice.

"The affidavit of any officer, clerk, or agent of the corporation, or of anyone authorized to mail such notice, that the notice required by this section has been duly addressed and mailed by the corporation issuing such policy, shall be presumptive evidence that such notice has been duly given." Laws 1892, chap. 690.

[333] The application made by Phinney for the policy contained this statement: "This application is made to the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York, subject to the charter of the company and the laws of the state of New York." The policy stipulated that on its maturing the insurance company would "pay at its home office in the city of New York." It also stipulated that the annual premium should be payable "to the company *at its home office in the city of New York." The policy also contained this provision:

"Payment of premiums.—Each premium is due and payable at the home office of the company in the city of New York, but will be accepted elsewhere when duly made in exchange for the company's receipt, signed by the president or secretary. Notice that each and every such payment is due at the date named in the policy is given and accepted by the delivery and acceptance of this policy, and any further notice, required by any statute, is thereby expressly waived."

1090

In its answer the company pleaded that the contract was to be taken as a contract made in the state of Washington, and not controlled by the laws of the state of New York, because the application stipulated that the contract "shall not take effect until the first premium shall have been paid and the policy shall have been delivered." In fact, the policy was delivered and the premium paid in the state of Washington. It also pleaded the other provisions in reference to the failure to pay the annual premium, and the waiver, abandonment, and rescission of the contract by the assured under the circumstances hereinbefore named.

The case came on for trial on these pleadings before the court and a jury, and resulted in a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff for the amount of the policy, less the unpaid premiums. The case was thereupon taken on error to the United States circuit court of appeals for the ninth circuit, which court dismissed the writ of error on the ground that it had no jurisdiction by reason of a failure on the part of the plaintiff in error to file the writ of error in the office of the clerk of the trial court. 48 U. S. App. 78, 76 Fed. Rep. 617, 22 C. C. A. 425. Thereupon application was made to this court, and the case brought here on certiorari.

Mr. Julien T. Davies argued the cause and, with Messrs. Edward Lyman Short, John B. Allen, and Frederic D. McKenney, filed a brief for petitioner:

The lodging of the writ of error with the clerk for the purpose of the return constitutes the filing contemplated by law.

Re Norton, 34 App. Div. 79, 53 N. Y. Supp. 1093; Bailey v. Costello, 94 Wis. 87, 68 N. W. 663; Edwards v. Grand, 121 Cal. 254, 53 Pac. 796; Holman v. Chevallier, 14 Tex. 339; Gorham v. Summers, 25 Minn. 81; United States Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 49 U. S. App. 67, 79 Fed. Rep. 302, 24 C. C. A. 597; Ex parte Thorne, L. R. 8 Ch. 722; Irwin v. McGuire, 44 Ala. 499; Flinn v. Shackelford, 42 Ala. 202; King v. Wade, 1 Barn. & Ad. 861; Reed v. Acton, 120 Mass. 130; Adams v. Goodwin, 99 Ga. 138, 25 S. E. 24; First Nat. Bank v. Hatfield, 20 Wash. 224, 54 Pac. 1135, 55 Pac. 932; Watkins v. Bugge, 56 Neb. 615, 77 N. W. 83; Brooks v. Nevada Nickel Syndicate (Nev.) 52 Pac. 575.

An indorsement of filing affords the usual and convenient proof of what has been done, but it does not constitute the filing, nor does it afford the only proof thereof.

Powers v. State, 87 Ind. 144; Peterson v. Taylor, 15 Ga. 483, 60 Am. Dec. 706; Wheeling Pottery Co. v. Levi, 48 La. Ann. 777, 19 So. 752.

The most solemn contract under seal, when the statute of frauds is not involved, may be changed or abrogated by a new parol agreement, express or implied; and a contract within the statute may be taken out of it by the conduct of the parties.

Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Trimble, 10 Wall. 367, 19 L. ed. 948.

The representation by the agent that the default of the insured worked a forfeiture did not constitute fraud and deception on the ground that it was a misrepresentation of foreign law, and therefore a misrepresentation of fact. That a foreign law is to be proved as a fact is a proposition not to be disputed; but that is another and quite a different thing from the construction of a foreign statute.

178 U. S.

Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. 264, 8 L. ed. 120; Kline v. Baker, 99 Mass. 255.

Whether the statute of New York applied to work a forfeiture was merely a matter of opinion.

Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 1093, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99; Latham v. Smith, 45 Ill. 25.

Messrs. Robert Sewell, E. Lyman Short, and John B. Allen filed a brief in support of petition for certiorari.

Mr. Stanton Warburton argued the cause and, with Mr. A. F. Burleigh, filed a brief for respondent:

A writ of error, then, is not brought or sued out, in the legal meaning of the term, until filed in the court which rendered the judgment. It is the filing of the writ which removes the record from the inferior to the appellate court, and gives that court jurisdiction of the case.

Brooks v. Norris, 11 How. 204, 13 L. ed. 665; Mussina v. Cavazos, 6 Wall. 355, 18 L. ed. 810; Cummings v. Jones, 104 U. S. 419, 26 L. ed. 824; Scarborough v. Pargoud, 103 U. S. 567, 27 L. ed. 824, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Polleys v. Black River Improv. Co. 113 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 938, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Credit Co. v. Arkansas C. R. Co. 128 U. S. 258, 32 L. ed. 448, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 34 L. ed. 246, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771; United States v. Baxter, 10 U. S. App. 241, 51 Fed. Rep. 624, 2 C. C. A. 410; Union P. R. Co. v. Colorado Eastern R. Co. 12 U. S. App. 110, 54 Fed. Rep. 22, 4 C. C. A. 161; Warner v. Texas & P. R. Co. 2 U. S. App. 647, 54 Fed. Rep. 920, 4 C. C. A. 670; Stephens v. Clark, 18 U. S. App. 584, 62 Fed. Rep. 321, 10 C. C. A. 379; Threadgill v. Platt, 71 Fed. Rep. 1; Crippen v. Livingston, 12 Fla. 638; Wright v. Hughes, 2 G. Greene, 142.

To file a paper on the part of a party is to place it in the official custody of the clerk. To file, on the part of the clerk, is to indorse upon the paper the act of its reception, and retain it in his office subject to inspection by whomsoever it may concern. The act of filing has these two branches, and a full and proper definition of filing embraces them both.

Burill, Law Dict.; Black, Law Dict.; Webster, Int. Dict.; Standard Dict.; 1 Foster, Fed. Prac. 598; Amy v. Shelby County, 1 Flipp. 104, Fed. Cas. No. 345; Erwin v. United States, 37 Fed. Rep. 470, 2 L. R. A. 229.

Filing signifies more than mere indorsement to that effect, and comprehends entries made by the clerk on the record.

Johnson v. Hodges, 65 Mo. 589.

Filing a paper is now understood to consist in placing it in the proper official custody.

today, on the part of the party charged with the duty of filing it, and in the making of the appropriate indorsement by the officer.

Phillips v. Beene, 38 Ala. 248.

Filing imports more than a mere reception into the custody of the clerk of the court; his indorsement is necessary.

Pinders v. Yager, 29 Iowa, 468; Moyer v. Preston (Wyo.) 44 Pac. 850.

The fact that neither clerk nor counsel deemed it necessary to file certain papers, or knew how to file them properly, would be no excuse for their not being properly filed.

Florida v. Charlotte Harbor Phosphate Co. 30 U. S. App. 535, 70 Fed. Rep. 883, 17 C. C. A. 472; Warner v. Texas & P. R. Co. 2 U. S. App. 647, 54 Fed. Rep. 920, 4 C. C. A. 670.

The only legitimate presumption that may be indulged in from the fact that the writ accompanied the record to the circuit court of appeals is that the writ was issued by the clerk of the lower court. The whole record bears out this presumption, and this alone.

Credit Co. v. Arkansas C. R. Co. 128 U. S. 258, 32 L. ed. 448, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; Farrar v. Churchill, 135 U. S. 609, 34 L. ed. 246, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771.

The affidavit of the clerk in the lower court, the recital in the citation that the writ had been filed, and the return of the clerk that the fees for transcribing the record had been paid, cannot supply the failure of the record to show that the writ had been filed.

Hudgins v. Kemp, 18 How. 530, 15 L. ed. 511, 514; Edmonson v. Bloomshire, 7 Wall. 306, 19 L. ed. 91; Lonkey v. Keyes Silver Min. Co. 21 Nev. 312, 17 L. R. A. 351, 31 Pac. 57; The Lindrup, 70 Fed. Rep. 718; 3 Enc. Pl. & Pr. pp. 292 et seq.

The statute of New York prescribes the condition on which a policy may be forfeited for the nonpayment of a premium. The statute is mandatory and controls the contract. Its provisions are not liable to be set aside or waived by the company, or the assured, or by both together.

Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Hicks v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 690, 9 C. C. A. 215; Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113; Warner v. National Life Asso. 100 Mich. 157, 58 N. W. 667; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Mullen v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 259, 34 S. W. 605; Rowe v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 16 Misc. 323, 38 N. Y. Supp. 625; Phelan v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 113 N. Y. 147, 20 N. E. 827; Carter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 15, 17 N. E. 396; Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 119 N. Y. 450, 7 L. R. A. 293, 23 N. E. 1048; McDougall v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 135 N. Y. 551, 32 N. E. 251; De Frece v. National L. Ins. Co. 136 N. Y. 144, 32 N. E. 556; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 680.

No party to a contract can rescind until he has returned, or offered to return, all consideration he has received under the contract.

Blackburn v. Smith, 2 Exch. 783, 18 L. J. Exch. N. S. 187; Beed v. Blandford, 2 Younge & J. 278; Pharr v. Bachlor, 3 Ala. 245; State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 458; Christy v. Arnold (Ariz.) 36 Pac. 918; Shively v. Semi-Tropic Land & Water Co. 99 Cal. 259, 33 Pac. 848; Cleary v. Folger, 84 Cal. 316, 24 Pac. 280; Moore v. Bare, 11 Iowa, 198; Murphy v. Lockwood, 21 Ill. 611; Gehr v. Hagerman, 26 Ill. 441; Wheeler v. Mather, 56 Ill. 241, 8 Am. Rep. 683; Wolf v. Dietsch, 75 Ill. 205; Colson v. Smith, 9 Ind. 12; Chance v. Clay County Comrs. 5 Blackf. 441, 35 Am. Dec. 131; Hendrickson v. Hendrickson, 51 Iowa, 68, 50 N. W. 287; Johnson v. Jackson, 27 Miss. 498, 61 Am. Dec. 522; Randlet v. Herren, 20 N. H. 102; Getchell v. Chase, 37 N. H. 110; Ayer v. Hawkes, 11 N. H. 148; Doughten v. Camden Bldg. & L. Asso. 41 N. J. Eq. 556, 7 Atl. 479; Pittsburgh & N. A. Turnpk. Road Co. v. Com. 2 Watts, 433.

The act of the company through its agent, in convincing the insured that his policy was forfeited, and in obtaining an admission of that fact from him, with the knowledge that it was false, clearly constitutes fraud.

Berry v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 132 N. Y. 58, 30 N. E. 254.

[334] *Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

The first question naturally is in respect to the jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals. The transcript filed in that court, in addition to the record of the proceedings on the trial, which trial culminated in a judgment on October 17, 1895, contained: First, a petition for a writ of error filed by counsel for the insurance company, on December 14, 1895; then an order by the trial judge, allowing the writ of error and fixing the supersedeas bond at $125,000; an assignment of errors; a supersedeas bond, approved by the trial judge; a citation signed by him, and service admitted by counsel for the plaintiff, all these on the same day. In addition, a return by the marshal, showing personal service on the plaintiff of the citation; the writ of error allowed by the trial judge, and an indorsement thereon by the clerk of the trial court (by deputy) in the following language:

"Received a true copy of the foregoing writ of error for defendant in error. Dated this 14th day of December, 1895. A. Reeves Ayres, Clerk of the United States Circuit Court for the Ninth Circuit, District of Washington. By R. M. Hopkins, Deputy Clerk."

On the hearing in the court of appeals an affidavit of the deputy clerk of the trial court was filed, which, after averring that the petition and assignment of errors, the orders granting the writ of error, and fixing the amount of the bond, and the bond, were each on file in his office and all bore the following indorsement: "Filed December 14, 1895. In the U. S. Circuit Court.

1092

A. Reeves Ayres, Clerk. By R. M. Hopkins, Deputy Clerk,"—stated that upon the filing of these papers he prepared a writ of error, issued and delivered it to R. C. Strudwick, one of the attorneys of the insurance company, who took the same from his office, and added:

"That a few minutes thereafter the said Strudwick returned to my office, and delivered to and lodged and filed with me said writ of error, with the allowance thereof indorsed thereon by the before-mentioned judge, and at the same time delivered to *and lodged and filed with me a copy of [335] said writ for the use of defendant in error.

"That said original writ of error remained in my office and in my custody from said 14th day of December, 1895, until the 4th day of January, 1896, at which time I transmitted the same, with my return thereto, to this honorable court.

"That the original citation herein, a copy of which appears on pages 395 and 396 of the printed record herein, was returned to and filed with me by a deputy marshal of the United States for the district of Washington, on the 18th day of December, 1895, and the same remained in my office and in my custody and control from said date until the same was transmitted to this honorable court, together with the writ of error and return thereto on the 4th day of January, 1896. It has not been my custom to indorse original citations and writs of error at the time they are filed with or served upon me, for the reason that I have deemed the same as writs of the circuit court of appeals to be indorsed by the clerk of said court upon his receipt of the same with my return thereto; but, as a matter of fact, the writ of error and citation herein were actually delivered to and filed and lodged with me as above stated."

Upon these facts we are clearly of opinion that jurisdiction was vested in the court of appeals. The majority of that court, in sustaining the motion to dismiss, relied on the following decisions of this court: Brooks v. Norris, 11 How. 204-207, 13 L. ed. 665, 666; Mussina v. Cavazos, 6 Wall. 355, 18 L. ed. 810; Scarborough v. Pargoud, 108 U. S. 567, 27 L. ed. 824, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Polleys v. Black River Improv. Co. 113 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 938, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Credit Co. v. Arkansas C. R. Co. 128 U. S. 258, 32 L. ed. 448, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 107; in the first of which it was said by Chief Justice Taney: "It is the filing of the writ that removes the record from the inferior to the appellate court, and the period of limitation prescribed by the act of Congress must be calculated accordingly. The day on which the writ may have been issued by the clerk or the day on which it is tested are not material in deciding the question."

In that case the question presented was one of limitations, and not what was necessary to constitute a filing. The statute requiring writs of error to be brought within a certain time, the question determined [336] was whether the mere allowance or issue of the writ constituted a bringing of the writ of error within the meaning of the statute, or whether, as was held, it was not brought, had not performed its office, until it had been filed with the clerk of the trial court. In this case there is no question of time. All the proceedings, with a view of taking the case to the appellate court, were had within less than three months from the date of the judgment. The transcript filed in the court of appeals made it clear that everything which the trial judge was required to do was done, the writ of error was allowed, the citation signed and bond approved, and also that the citation was duly served upon the counsel for the plaintiff, and service accepted. It also showed that a copy of the writ of error was received and filed by the clerk of the trial court, and while it is true that it did not show that the original writ of error was filed in his office, yet the affidavit made by the deputy clerk (which is not disputed) disclosed that it was so filed, and on the same day with the other proceedings for perfecting the transfer of the case to the court of appeals. Now, while it may be technically true, as said by the majority of the court of appeals, that the indorsement on the copy of the writ of error of its receipt for the benefit of the defendant in error, plaintiff below, was under § 1007 of the Revised Statute, with a view to a supersedeas, and may not itself be sufficient evidence of the filing of the original writ, yet the affidavit of the deputy clerk, who had charge of the office, shows positively that it was left with him and filed. If it was left with him and he failed to indorse it as filed, can it be that his omission defeats the party's right to transfer the case to the appellate court? Is it within the power of a clerk to overrule the action of the judge, and prevent an appeal or writ of error which he has allowed? When the judge has done all that is necessary for him to do to perfect the transmission of the case to the appellate court, and the party seeking review has done all that is required of him, can it be that the omission of a clerk (if there was such an omission) can prevent the jurisdiction attaching to the appellate court? Obviously not. "When deposited with the clerk of the court, to whose judges it is directed, it is served." Mussina v. Cavazos, 6 Wall. 355, 358, 18 L. ed. 810, 811. While we have always been careful to see that the required order of procedure has been complied with before any case shall be considered as transferred from a lower to a higher court, that the party seeking a review must act in time and must make a substantial compliance with all that the statute prescribes, at the same time we have been equally careful to hold that no mere technical omission which did not prejudice the rights of the defendant in error should be made available to oust the appellate court of jurisdiction. We are clear that upon the showing made the court of appeals had jurisdiction, and should have proceeded to dispose of the case upon its merits.

178 U. S.

Coming now to the merits, many questions have been exhaustively discussed by counsel in brief and argument. One is, to what extent, if at all, the law of New York controls in respect to the policy sued on.
178 U. S.

By the insurance company it is contended that it does not apply; that it operates only upon contracts of insurance consummated within the state of New York; that it commences, "No life insurance company doing business in the state of New York shall have power," etc.; that it thus includes foreign as well as local insurance companies, and, as it confessedly cannot control the operations or modify the contracts of foreign insurance companies made outside the state, the true construction is that it applies to both foreign and local companies only as to business done within the state; that as the application was signed by the insured in the state of Washington, and when received by the company in New York was there accepted only conditionally, and as the policy which was prepared and forwarded to an agent of the company in Washington contained an express stipulation that it should "not take effect until the first premium shall have been paid and the policy shall have been delivered," and as the premium was in fact paid and the policy delivered in the state of Washington, the contract was a Washington contract, and governed by the laws of that state, and not by the laws of New York (Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 232, 35 L. ed. 497, 498, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822); that the statement in the application signed by Phinney that it was made "subject* to the charter of the company and the laws of New York," by its terms refers only to the application, and does not make the laws of New York controlling in reference to the terms of the contract, which was evidenced by the policy subsequently issued; and that being a Washington contract, and there being no legislation in that state in respect to matter of forfeiture, by its terms it became forfeited on the nonpayment of the second annual premium.

On the other hand, it is contended by the executrix that, whatever may be the effect of the statute upon foreign companies which may happen to be doing business within the limits of New York, it is as to local companies practically a modification of their charters and a statutory rule thereafter controlling all contracts made by them, whether within or without the state; that even if this be not true, yet, as the policy refers to the application and makes it a part of the contract, and as there is no law of New York which affects in any way an application as such, the statement therein, that it is made subject to the charter of the company and the laws of New York, must be understood as directly incorporating the laws of New York into the contract, or at least referring to them as containing the rules for its construction and enforcement; and also, inasmuch as, by its terms, final performance (that is, the payment of the policy) is to be made in New York, the law of the place of performance is the law which governs as to the validity and interpretation of the contract. Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U.

S. 195, 197, 206, 32 L. ed. 370, 375, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150; Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. 142 U. S. 101, 109, 35 L. ed. 951, 954, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41, and cases cited in the opinion.

We are not insensible of the importance, as well as the difficulty, of the question thus presented in these various aspects, but think that the case may properly be disposed of without any consideration or determination thereof.

[339] We shall assume, without deciding, that the law of New York does control in respect to this contract, and still are of the opinion that the judgment must be reversed for error occurring on the trial, and error of such a character as in view of the testimony may render it unnecessary ever to consider the question to which we have referred. Confessedly, the insured did not pay *the annual premium due September 24, 1891, nor that due September 24, 1892, although he lived until September 12, 1893. It appears from the undisputed testimony that the insured knew when the premium became due in September, 1891. Twice he spoke to the local agent seeking to arrange for the payment of the premium by a note, and some three or four months thereafter he surrendered the policy to such agent. It is true that at the time of the surrender the agent told the insured that the policy was forfeited, or words to that effect, and that the insured said to him that as the policy had lapsed it was no good to him, and the agent might take it if he wanted it. But never thereafter until the time of his death, more than a year and a half, was anything done or said by the insured in respect to the policy; no suggestion of payment of premium or anything of any kind in respect to it. He treated the matter as abandoned, and gave up to the agent of the company the instrument by which the contract was evidenced. Further, after his death his widow, the plaintiff, filed an affidavit that the personal property of her husband's estate amounted only to $50,000, which, of course, was not true if she had a $100,000 policy in the defendant company. Not only that, she ignored the policy altogether for nearly ten months, although she promptly presented claims under other policies. As she testified that she knew of the existence of this policy her conduct is explainable only on the theory that she understood that, which the evidence affirms, her husband had abandoned the policy and surrendered it to the company. Upon these facts the defendant asked this instruction, which the court declined to give:

"If you find from the evidence in this case that the said Guy C. Phinney stated to the representative of the defendant in the state of Washington that he could not pay the premium falling due September 24, 1891, and that he did not pay nor tender the same, and that he thereafter surrendered said policy to the defendant's representative, they mutually believing and understanding that the same was of no force or validity then or thereafter, by reason of the nonpayment of the said premium, this would constitute an abandonment and rescission of this contract by both parties thereto, and would put an end to the *same; and if you find the facts so to be [340] you must find a verdict for the defendant."

In lieu thereof the court charged as follows:

"Now, it is contended that Mr. Phinney and this company, acting through Mr. Stinson as its agent, arrived at an understanding and agreement that the policy should not continue longer in force; Phinney was to pay no more money, and that his rights and the policy were abrogated. Notwithstanding the provision of the statute of New York, that a provision in the policy itself waiving notice has no effect, and that the company can only forfeit the policy for nonpayment of premium by mailing the prescribed notice, still it would be competent, and it was competent, for the parties mutually to agree to the cancellation of a life insurance policy if they saw fit to do so. And if the evidence in the case shows that Mr. Phinney did voluntarily, without being induced by any false representations or deceit to give up the policy, rescind the contract and give up the policy rather than to continue to pay the premiums provided for in the policy, that agreement would have the effect to terminate this policy so that it would no longer be a continuing contract. There is testimony in the case tending to prove that Mr. Phinney was unable to meet the second payment when it fell due, and by reason of his failure to make that payment, he voluntarily delivered up the policy to Mr. Stinson as an agent of the company, with the understanding, expressed at the time, that it was lapsed, that it was no longer a continuing contract in his favor. If there was a full and fair understanding between these two men in that matter, and they both treated it as an abrogated and annulled contract, and each relied upon that understanding, it would have the effect to terminate the policy, and the company would have the right to consider itself absolved from any obligation to give the statutory notice in order to forfeit the policy, because it would be unnecessary for the company to forfeit by legal proceedings what the opposite party had voluntarily relinquished. It is a question of fact, therefore, for you to determine from the evidence in the case, whether there was a full, complete understanding and meeting of minds between Mr. Phinney and Mr. Stinson, and such an *agreement and understand- [341] ing entered into between them, whether the policy was surrendered and delivered up to Mr. Stinson, with an understanding, and whether, relying upon that understanding, the defendant company subsequently acted."

In view of the facts heretofore narrated, it is obvious, not only that there was error in the action of the court in declining to give the instruction requested by the insurance company, and giving that which it did, but also that the error was material. The instruction given suggested a matter in respect to which there was no testimony, yet which, in view of other language in the charge, was quite sure to mislead. In reference to this matter of abandonment and rescission, the court in effect declared that it was binding, unless induced by false representation or deceit. There is not the slightest syllable in the testimony to suggest that the agent deceived the insured, nor that he made a false representation in the sense in which a false representation may avoid a contract. And yet, as the court had already ruled that the law of New York controlled, that there was no forfeiture until the notice prescribed by the statute of that state had been given, the jury must have understood that when the agent said that the policy had lapsed, he made a false representation, and, therefore, that the action of the insured, based upon that false representation, did not amount to an abandonment. But whether that statement of the agent was correct in matter of law is doubtful; whether true or false, or, more accurately, whether correct or not, in its interpretation of the law applicable to this contract, is immaterial. It was merely a statement of what he supposed the law was, and the insured was under the same obligations to know the law that the company, or its agent, was. The jury evidently proceeded upon the supposition that the insurance company, located in New York, knew what the law of that state was; the insured, residing in Washington, did not, and when the agent stated what the condition of the contract was, he misrepresented the law of New York, of which the insured was ignorant, and, being ignorant, was not bound by any act based thereon in the way of abandonment or rescission. But surely no such [342] rule as that obtains. When two parties *enter into a contract, and make it determinable by the law of another state, it is conclusively presumed that each of them knows the law in respect to which they make the contract. There is no presumption of ignorance on the one side and knowledge on the other. Reverse the situation. Suppose the insurance company had made this contract as a Washington contract, and there had been some peculiar provision of that state controlling all contracts made within the state: could the company, a corporation of New York, thereafter be permitted to say that it did not know what the law of Washington was; that the insured, as a resident of that state, must be presumed to have known it; that he did not communicate his information, and therefore it was not bound by that law, and that if he said anything in reference to it, it was a case of false representation or deceit? No one would contend this. And so when these two parties, the insurance company and the insured, dealing, as we are now supposing, in a contract which they mutually agreed should be determinable by the laws of New York, it is an absolute presumption that each knew those laws, and that neither one could be misled by any statement in respect thereto on the part of the other. Whatever opinion either might express in reference to those statutes was a mere matter of opinion. He was chargeable with knowledge, just exactly as the insurance company was. Sturm v. Boker, 150 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 1093, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 99, is decisive of this question. In that case the statement of the insured as to a question of law was insisted upon as conclusive, but this court said (p. 336, L. ed. p. 1102, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 107):

"Both the defendants and the insurance companies had the written contracts before them, and were presumed, as a matter of law, to know their legal effect and operation. What the complainant said in his testimony was a statement of opinion upon a question of law, where the facts were equally well known to both parties. Such statements of opinion do not operate as an estoppel. If he had said, in express terms, that by that contract he was responsible for the loss, it would have been, under the circumstances, only the expression of an opinion as to the law of the contract, and not a declaration or admission of a fact, *such as would estop [343] him from subsequently taking a different position as to the true interpretation of the written instrument.

"In Biant v. Virginia Coal & I. Co. 93 U. S. 326, 337, 23 L. ed. 927, 929, it was said: 'Where the condition of the title is known to both parties, or both have the same means of ascertaining the truth, there can be no estoppel.'

"So, in Brewster v. Striker, 2 N. Y. 19, and Norton v. Coons, 6 N. Y. 33, and approved in Chatfield v. Simonson, 92 N. Y. 209, 218, where it was ruled 'that the assertion of a legal conclusion, where the facts were all stated, did not operate as an estoppel upon the party making such assertion.'

So, whatever the local agent may have said as to the condition of the contract was a mere expression of opinion as to a matter of law in respect to which both parties were equally chargeable with knowledge. It seems to us clear that only because of the inference to be drawn from the rejection of the instruction asked by the defendant, and the giving of the instruction with this suggestion of false representation or deceit, can the verdict of the jury be accounted for.

Nor can we think that the action of the defendant in requesting, after the jury had returned and asked certain questions, which were answered by the trial judge, that he repeat the instructions theretofore given in respect to waiver and abandonment, is to be taken as an indorsement of those instructions. After it had once excepted to the refusal of an instruction which it had asked, and excepted to those that were given, it did not lose the benefit of such exceptions by a request that the court repeat the instructions excepted to in connection with certain answers made to questions propounded by the jury. It meant simply that if the court answered, as it did, the questions propounded by the jury, it ought to supplement those answers with a restatement of the instructions theretofore given, and asking that restatement was not an admission that they were correct, but simply a request that they should be restated so as to qualify the answers given to the questions.

In this connection we may be permitted to suggest that no afterthought of ingenious and able counsel should be permitted to disturb the understanding and agreement of the parties based *upon their belief as to what the law is, or to enforce a contract which both parties concluded to abandon.

A single further matter requires notice, and we mention it simply to indicate that we have considered, although we do not decide, the question involved therein: The contract of insurance is a peculiar contract, especially when made with a mutual insurance company, for although in terms a contract with a corporation it is in substance a contract between the insured and all other members of that company. The character of this contract was fully considered and discussed by this court in New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. ed. 789, and to that case we refer without quotation. Now, whether the insurance company, if the law of New York be applicable, could insist upon a forfeiture without giving the notice prescribed by the statutes of that state, and, enforcing it, forfeit all premiums paid, all obligation for the return of the surrender value, all right of the insured by subsequent payments to continue the policy in force, is one question. But it is a very different question whether the executrix of the insured, after his long delinquency in the payment of premiums, can enforce the contract as against the other insured parties, thereby diminishing their interest in the accumulated reserve. Ordinarily no one can enforce a contract unless on his part he performs the stipulated promise, and it may be that this rule is operative in this case. We do not care to decide the question, and only mention it for fear that it should be assumed we had overlooked it. It is a question which may never arise in the future litigation of this case, and until it necessarily arises we do not feel called upon to decide it.

For these reasons the judgments of the Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit and of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Washington are reversed, and the case remanded to the latter court with instructions to award a new trial.

Mr. Justice Peckham did not sit at the hearing, and took no part in the decision of this case.

[345]*MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK, Petitioner,
v.

BESSIE F. SEARS, as Executrix of Stephen
P. Sears, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 345-347.)

Insurance—abandonment of contract after default—effect of statute to prevent forfeiture.

A termination of a life insurance policy by mutual agreement, after default in the payment of premiums and the refusal of the insured to continue the policy, is conclusive against the insured, notwithstanding a statutory provision which precluded the forfeiture of the policy by reason of the default, because the notices required by the statute had not been given.

[No. 452.]

Argued March 14, 15, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment for the plaintiff in an action on a life insurance policy. Reversed.

See same case below, 97 Fed. Rep. 986, 38 C. C. A. 696.

Statement by Mr. Justice Brewer:

*This, like the case of Mutual L. Ins. Co. [345] v. Phinney, just decided, 177 U. S. 327, ante, 1088, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906, is an action on an insurance policy issued by the company, the premiums on which were unpaid for years before the death of the insured. The facts, as disclosed by the pleadings (and the case went off on the pleadings, without any testimony), are that on May 18, 1891, the insurance company issued a policy to Stephen P. Sears, he being the beneficiary named in the policy, as well as the insured. He paid the first annual premium and received the policy, but neglected to pay the premium due on May 18, 1892, and all subsequent premiums. He lived until March 30, 1898, and thereafter his widow, the plaintiff below, was appointed his executrix. The answer alleged nonpayment of the premiums from 1892 onward, and also "that subsequent to the failure of the said Stephen P. Sears to make payment of the said annual premium falling due on said policy May 18, 1893, and subsequent to the lapsing of said policy for failure to make said payment, and after the said Stephen P. Sears was fully informed and knew that said policy had been by it declared lapsed and *void for nonpayment of [346] premium, this defendant, through its agents, applied to said Stephen P. Sears to make restoration of said policy by making payment of said defaulted premium and having the said policy restored to force, but that said Stephen P. Sears refused to make such payment, and refused longer to continue said policy or make any further payments thereon, and then and there elected to have the same terminated, and this defendant, relying upon the said election and determination of said Stephen P. Sears, at all times subsequent thereto treated said policy as lapsed, abandoned, and terminated, and relying upon the said conduct of said Sears abstained from taking any further action or step in relation to said policy, by way of notice or otherwise, in order to effect the cancelation and termination thereof."

A demurrer to this answer was sustained, and judgment entered for the plaintiff, which was affirmed by the court of appeals (97 Fed. Rep. 986, 38 C. C. A. 696), and the case was thereupon brought to this court on certiorari.

Messrs. Julien T. Davies and John B. Allen argued the cause and, with Messrs. Edward Lyman Short and Frederic D. McKenney, filed a brief for petitioner.

Messrs. Edward Lyman Short, Julien T. Davies, John B. Allen, Frederic D. McKenney, and Robert C. Strudwick filed a brief in support of petition for certiorari.

Messrs. Stanton Warburton and Harold Preston argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent.

[346] *Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

In view of what has been already decided in the case of Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Phinney, 178 U. S. 327, ante, 1088, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906, it is needless to do more than note the fact that, as shown by the answer, after the insured had once defaulted in May, 1893, a second default had occurred in May, 1893, application was made to him by the company, through its agents, to restore the policy, and that he declined to make any further payments or to continue the policy, and elected to have it terminated, which election was accepted by the company, and the parties [347] *to the contract treated it thereafter as abandoned. As we held in the prior case, there is nothing in the New York statute (if controlling at all) to prevent the parties from dealing with that as any other contract; and if they choose to abandon it, that action is conclusive.

The judgments of the Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit and of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Washington are reversed, and the case remanded to the latter court, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to defendant's answer.

Mr. Justice Peckham did not sit in the hearing, and took no part in the decision of this case.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY
OF NEW YORK, Petitioner,
v.

GEORGE E. HILL, Ellen Kellogg Hill, Eugene C. Hill, by their Guardian, Eben Smith, and Eliza Maude Hill, in her own behalf.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 347-350.)

Life insurance—abandonment of contract—refusal of beneficiaries to continue policy.

An abandonment of a life insurance contract by the insured after default in payment of premiums, together with a refusal by the beneficiaries to keep the policy in life, will be conclusive against any claim on the policy.

[No. 453.]

Argued March 14, 15, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decision sustaining 178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

ing a demurrer to an answer in an action on a policy of life insurance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Julien T. Davies and John B. Allen argued the cause and, with Messrs. Edward Lyman Short and Frederic D. McKenney, filed a brief for petitioner.

Messrs. Edward Lyman Short, Julien T. Davies, John B. Allen, Frederic D. McKenney, and Robert C. Strudwick filed a brief in support of petition for certiorari.

Messrs. Stanton Warburton and Harold Preston argued the cause, and Messrs. Stanton Warburton and Eben Smith filed a brief for respondents.

*Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court: [347]

This case resembles the last three decided, in that it was an *action against the insurance company on a policy whose premiums had not been paid for some years before the death of the insured. The policy was issued April 29, 1886, to George Dana Hill for the benefit of his wife, if living at the time of his death, and, if not, for the benefit of their children. The insured paid the first annual premium, but none thereafter. He died on December 4, 1890. His wife died before him, and this action was brought in behalf of the children. The answer alleged, among other things— [348]

"That, pursuant to the conditions of the said policy, there became and was due to the defendant, as a premium upon said policy of insurance, on the 29th day of April, A. D. 1887, the sum of eight hundred and fourteen ($814) dollars and the said George Dana Hill and the said Ellen Kellogg Hill, his wife, and each and all of the plaintiffs herein failed, neglected, and refused to pay to the defendant, at the time aforesaid, the said sum of eight hundred and fourteen ($814) dollars or any part thereof, and ever since that time and up to the time of the death of the said George Dana Hill, on the 4th day of December, 1890, the said George Dana Hill and the said Ellen Kellogg Hill, his wife, during her lifetime, and each and all of the plaintiffs, neglected and refused to pay to defendant the said sum or any part thereof, or any other sum or other thing of value whatever; by reason whereof the said policy of insurance became and was on the 29th day of April, A. D. 1887, according to the conditions aforesaid, void and of no effect.

"That, at a time more than one year from the time of the issuance of the policy mentioned in the complaint, and during the lifetime of the said George Dana Hill mentioned in the complaint, it was mutually agreed between the defendant and the said George Dana Hill, that the said contract of insurance should be waived, abandoned, and rescinded, and the said George Dana Hill and the defendant then, by mutual consent, waived, abandoned, and rescinded the same accordingly, and all their mutual rights and obligations therein and thereunder.

"This defendant alleges that the said plaintiffs, and each of them, should be, and are, estopped from, and should not be permitted *to allege or prove that defendant did not mail, or cause to be mailed, or otherwise given, to said George Dana Hill a notice stating the amount of premium due on said policy on April 29, 1887, or at any other time, with the place where the same should be paid, the person to whom the same is payable, and stating that unless the premium then due should be paid to the company or its agents, within thirty days after the mailing of such notice, the policy and all payments made thereon should become forfeited, or any other notice prescribed by any statute or statutes of the state of New York, or any other notice than that hereinafter in this paragraph mentioned, for that, shortly prior to and after, and on said 29th day of April, 1887, this defendant, in writing, and also personally, notified and informed the said George Dana Hill, at said city of Seattle, that the premium of $814, necessary to be paid on said policy for the continuance of said policy of insurance, was due and payable, and said defendant duly demanded payment of said premium in said sum, and, at the same time and place, tendered the receipt of the defendant therefor, duly signed by its president and secretary; and the said Hill, being fully so informed and advised in the premises, refused to make payment of said premium, or any part thereof, and then and there, intending, and for the purpose of inducing defendant to rely upon the same, informed defendant that he, the said George Dana Hill, was unable to pay said premium, and did not intend to make payment thereof, or of any premium thereafter to accrue upon said policy of insurance, but, on the contrary, he, the said George Dana Hill, intended to allow the said policy to lapse and become forfeited for want of payment of said premium or of any future premium accruing on said policy; and the said defendant, then and there, and ever since, relying upon the said representations and conduct on the part of the said George Dana Hill, was thereby induced to, and did, declare the said policy and contract of insurance forfeited and abandoned, and, in good faith, relying upon said conduct and representations on the part of said George Dana Hill, this defendant was induced to, and did, fail and abstain from giving or mailing any notice, whether prescribed by statute or otherwise, *to the said George Dana Hill, or to any person interested in said policy, concerning the payment of any premium thereon."

[350] Here, as in the last two cases, is disclosed a distinct agreement on the part of the insured and the company to waive and abandon the policy and all rights and obligations on the part of the parties thereto.

But it is said that the insured was not the beneficiary; his wife, and in case of her death, their children, being named as such; and that it was not in his power, by nonpayment or waiver or abandonment, to relinquish or cancel her or their rights in the policy. It is doubtless an interesting question how far the action of the insured can affect or bind the beneficiaries in a life-insurance policy. If the answer in this case contained simply the allegation in respect to the insured's agreement with the company, we should be compelled to enter into an examination of that question; but it is alleged, not only that the insured and the company agreed to abandon the contract, but also that the beneficiary, his wife, and the plaintiffs, their children, "failed, neglected, and refused" to pay the premium. So we have a case in which, not only did the insured and the company abandon the contract, but also the beneficiaries neglected and refused to do that which was essential to keep the policy in life. The allegation in the answer does not disclose a mere omission, for it is "neglected and refused," and, of course, there can be no refusal unless with knowledge of the opportunity or duty. A party cannot be said to refuse to do a thing of which he knows nothing. Refusal implies demand, knowledge, or notice. The case, therefore, is one in which the beneficiaries refused to continue the policy, while the insured and the company abandoned it.

1098

Under those circumstances we think the case falls within the same rule as the preceding; and the judgments of the Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit and of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Washington are reversed, and the case remanded to the latter court, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to defendant's answer.

Mr. Justice Peckham did not sit at the hearing, and took no part in the decision of this case.

*MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY [351]
OF NEW YORK, Petitioner,
v.

WALTER B. ALLEN, as Administrator of Samuel B. Stewart, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 351-353.)

Insurance—agreement to terminate.

An agreement to terminate a policy of life insurance, made by the insured, who is also the beneficiary, after default in the payment of premiums, will end the contract.

[No. 455.]

Argued March 14, 15, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decision sustaining a demurrer to an answer on a policy of life insurance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Julien T. Davies and John B. Allen argued the cause and, with Messrs. Edward Lyman Short and Frederic D. McKenney, filed a brief for petitioner.

Messrs. Edward Lyman Short, Julien T. Davies, John B. Allen, Frederic D. McKenney, and Robert O. Strudwick filed a brief in support of petition for certiorari.

178 U. S.

Messrs. Stanton Warburton and Harold Preston argued the cause, and Messrs. Frederick Bausman, John H. Allen and Jay C. Allen filed a brief, for respondents.

[351] *Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is, in all material respects, similar to that of Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Sears, just decided, 178 U. S. 345, ante 1096, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 912. The answer of the company, which was demurred to, and the demurrer sustained, contained these allegations:

"That neither the said Samuel B. Stewart, nor anyone on his behalf, ever paid, or offered to pay, any premium, or any part of any premium due, or to become due or payable on said policy, save and except the first premium, which was paid upon the delivery of said policy, and which covered the period from the date of said policy until the 18th day of February, 1894. That the said Samuel B. Stewart was at all times advised and informed that default had been made by him in payment of each and every premium, and the whole thereof, due on said policy, subsequent to the said first annual premium paid at the delivery of said policy; and that the said Samuel B. Stewart in his lifetime never [352] paid or offered to pay any premium, *or any part of any premium, due upon said policy subsequent to that paid upon the delivery thereof as aforesaid. That it was expressly in said policy provided that the insurance thereon was payable to the insured, Samuel B. Stewart, or his assigns; that the said Samuel B. Stewart never made any transfer or assignment of said policy of insurance; that the said defendant entered and noted said policy of insurance upon its books as forfeited and lapsed for failure to pay the annual premium falling due on said policy on said 18th day of February, 1894. That the said Samuel B. Stewart was at all times advised that defendant had so treated said policy as lapsed and forfeited, and notwithstanding said notice, and notwithstanding the said Samuel B. Stewart was at all times advised he had not paid the premium due on said policy February 18, 1894, consented to the forfeiture and termination of said policy of insurance; and with a mutual knowledge and understanding on the part of defendant and said Samuel B. Stewart, the said policy was at all times by the said parties deemed terminated from and after the 18th day of February, 1894; and relying upon such knowledge and mutual understanding, the said defendant never subsequently mailed or served any notice of the due date of premiums to or upon said Samuel B. Stewart during his lifetime; and the said Samuel B. Stewart, at all times knowing that the defendant was treating said policy as forfeited and lapsed, and at all times knowing that he had not paid or tendered payment of any premium upon said policy subsequent to the first annual premium paid as aforesaid on the delivery of said policy, acquiesced in and 178 U. S.

agreed to the said mutual understanding that the said policy was lapsed and forfeited; and by mutual agreement and consent both the said defendant and said Samuel B. Stewart agreed and consented to the lapsing and forfeiture of said policy of insurance from and after the 18th day of February, 1894."

From this answer it distinctly appears that Stewart, who was both the insured and the beneficiary, knew when the second annual premium became due, was informed of his default in the matter of payment, and both he and the company agreed to the *ending [353] of the contract. Under these circumstances, and without considering any other question, the judgments of the Court of Appeals of the Ninth Circuit and of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Washington are reversed, and the case remanded to the latter court, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the answer of the defendant.

Mr. Justice Peckham did not sit in the hearing, and took no part in the decision of this case.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Petitioner,

v.

HEMAN CLARK.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 353-373.)

Appeal—review of referee's findings—conclusiveness of settlement—acceptance of part payment—effect of dispute as to items.

1. The question whether the judgment rendered was warranted by the facts found is open for consideration on appeal, where the cause was tried without a jury, after express waiver of jury trial, and a referee duly appointed by written consent, whose findings, rulings, and decisions were made those of the court.
2. The rule that payment of a less sum in satisfaction of a larger sum is not binding for want of consideration only applies when the larger sum is liquidated, and when there is no consideration whatever for the surrender of a part of it, and the rule itself is considered so far with disfavor as to be confined strictly to cases within it.
3. The payment of a specified sum conceded to be due, by including certain items but excluding disputed items, on condition that the sum so paid shall be received in full satisfaction, will be sustained as an extinguishment of the whole sum, where the aggregate amount is in dispute.
4. A referee's finding that a statement of account showed a credit to a contractor of an item not included in the contract, for extra work, without any express finding that it was liquidated, except by such statement, cannot be construed to find that this item was liquidated, for the purpose of affecting the conclusiveness of a settlement of the account on a partial payment thereof, merely because one finding was that the statement of account was "a correct, truthful, and undisputed account" of all dealings between the parties, except as to two other items named,—especially where the referee explicitly declares that no other account of the transactions was ever had or stated between the parties.

NOTE.—As to accord and satisfaction by part payment—see Fuller v. Kemp (N. Y.) 20 L. R. A. 705, and note; and note to Oglesby v. Attrill, 26 L. ed. U. S. 1186.

[No. 256.]

Argued April 20, 23, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment on a report of a referee. Reversed.

See same case below, 92 Fed. Rep. 968, 35 C. C. A. 120.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

[354] *Herman Clark constructed some 200 miles of railroad in the states of Iowa and Missouri, for the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company, under a written contract dated March 6, 1886, which is set forth in the findings hereafter referred to. During the period of construction the company paid Clark large sums of money on account. After the road was completed the chief engineer of the company, as was his duty under the contract, certified to the total amount that Clark had earned under the contract. This amount was $3,895,798.79. But Clark claimed also the further sum of $34,598.90 for material sold by him to the company, and certain rebates and other matters of that description, which would make the aggregate $3,930,397.69. As to the amount that should be credited to the company, the company claimed credits to the amount of $3,716,865.20, while Clark contended that the total amount that should be credited was $3,667,306.59, or $49,558.63 less than the amount claimed by the company. This latter amount was made up of two items: One of $40,000, for overtime forfeiture or penalty, and the other of $9,558.63, the amount paid by the company for nut locks furnished to Clark, and used by him in the construction of the road. The company prepared an account stated, which allowed the $34,598.50, on one side of the account, and included the $40,000 and the $9,558.63, on the other, and appended to it a release for Clark to sign, if he accepted the balance therein stated. The account [355] *stated and release were sent to him with notice that upon signing and returning the same to the vice president of the company, a check for the balance shown by the account to be due would be sent to him. Immediately thereupon, on March 9, 1888, the account and release were returned by Clark to the vice president, signed and witnessed, and a check for the full amount of such balance, $173,532.29, was at once delivered to Clark, who indorsed, and deposited it in his bank, and received the proceeds thereof.

August 5, 1893, Clark commenced this action against the railroad company to recover amounts which he claimed to be due him on account of the construction of the road, and for extra work and other claims growing out of the contract. The complaint originally contained three causes of action, but by amendment the number was increased to six. The second, third, fourth, and sixth causes of action, and part of the first cause, were eliminated from the case by the judgment, and Clark recovered on the two items of $40,000 and $9,558.63 under the first cause of action, and also under the fifth cause for $2,425, a matter arising subsequent to the release, and not included within it.

The action was originally brought in the state court, but was removed on the application of the company to the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York. After issue was joined, the cause came on for trial at a regular term of the circuit court. Trial by jury was waived by written consent of the parties, filed with the clerk, and the cause was referred to a referee, who in due time made his report and findings. The court adopted the findings of the referee and ordered judgment thereon for the sum of $80,479.35. This judgment was subsequently affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. 92 Fed. Rep. 968, 35 C. C. A. 120.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law of the referee were as follows:

"Findings of Fact.

"1. That in the month of March, 1886, the defendant, the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company, made and entered into a contract in writing with the plaintiff, dated the 6th day of March, 1886, for the [356] construction of a line of railroad from a point in the city of Ottumwa, Iowa, to a place called Harlem Station, in the state of Missouri, a distance of about 202.8 miles, to be completed on the 1st day of August, 1887, a copy of which contract is hereto annexed, marked 'A.'

"2. That immediately after the execution of the said contract the plaintiff proceeded to carry out and perform the same, and did carry out and perform the same, except a portion thereof otherwise agreed between the parties, and substantially completed the same on or about the 1st day of November, 1887, and the same was duly accepted by the defendant on or about the first part of March, 1888.

"3. That on or about the 3d day of March, 1888, the chief engineer in charge of said work under said contract made a final certificate and estimate, which is copied in full in the twentieth and twenty-first findings of fact last asked by the defendant, and by this reference is made part hereof.

"4. That said certificate and estimate were delivered to the defendant, but were never delivered to the plaintiff or any of his agents, and were not seen by the plaintiff or any of his agents or brought to his knowledge otherwise than by the reference thereto in the receipt of March 9, 1888, hereinafter referred to, until the trial of this action.

"5. That the consideration for the performance of said contract originally mentioned in said contract was $3,914,600, but before the execution of said contract by the plaintiff, by and with the consent of the defendant, the consideration was changed and made $3,954,600.

"6. That the plaintiff made and entered into a supplemental contract whereby he agreed with the defendant to complete his performance of said contract on or before June 1, 1887, and to allow the said defendant, by way of forfeiture, in case the said railway were not so completed by the 1st of June, 1887, the sum of $40,000.

[357] "7. That the defendant failed to furnish the plaintiff with rights of way as by said contract it had agreed to do in time to enable the plaintiff to complete his contract prior to the 1st of June, 1887, or prior to the 1st of August, 1887, but, on the contrary, *delayed the plaintiff in the performance of said contract at a point upon the said road, known as Minneville, until October 27, 1887, by reason of the neglect, failure, and omission of the defendant to obtain the necessary right of way at said point so as to permit the construction of the road and completion of the contract at said point.

"8. That the plaintiff was thereby prevented from completing his contract on or prior to August 1, 1887, and also on or prior to June 1, 1887, by the negligence, omission, and fault of the defendant.

"9. That during the progress of the work the defendant purchased and furnished to the plaintiff and charged him for patented nut locks, for which the defendant paid $9,558.63.

"10. That the said nut locks so furnished by the defendant were used by the plaintiff in the construction of the road.

"11. That there are no provisions in the contract which require that the plaintiff, and the plaintiff never agreed that he, should use in the construction of the railroad under said contract, any patented nut locks.

"12. That the plaintiff was ordered by defendant to put such nut locks on the road at the beginning of the work. That he protested against their use, and finally yielded and used them in track laying upon the promise that the matter of the charge for said nut locks should be adjusted after the completion of the contract.

"13. That upon the 9th day of March, 1888, the plaintiff signed and caused to be delivered to a representative of the defendant a paper, writing, or receipt presented to him by the defendant for signature, of which the following is a copy; and upon the signature thereof by said Clark, and its delivery by him to the defendant, the plaintiff was paid by the said defendant the said sum named therein of $213,532.49, less the sum of $40,000 claimed in said paper to be retained for forfeiture in not completing performance of his work under said contract on or prior to June 1, 1887, and the sum of $3,626,865.20 included therein embraces said sum of $9,558.63 claimed by defendant to be due for nut locks. Said $40,000 was deducted, and the actual amount so paid was $173,532.49.

[358] *Whereas, a final estimate has been made by D. J. Whittemore, chief engineer of the Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway
178 U. S.

Company, of all the work done and material furnished under the contract made between said railway company and Heman Clark, bearing date March 8, 1886, for the construction of the railroad from Ottumwa, in Iowa, to the Missouri river, including all extra work performed and material furnished of every kind and description, which estimate, with prior monthly estimates, less deductions made for work not done and work assumed by said company, amounts to $3,895,798.79;

"And whereas, the further sum of $34,598.90 should be credited to said Clark for materials sold by him to said company, and certain rebates and other matters of that description, making, with the amount of said estimates, the sum of $3,930,397.69;

"And whereas, the said Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company has paid the said Clark to apply on said contract, in money, material, labor, and transportation, the sum of $3,626,865.20;

"And whereas, by the terms of § 4, article 13, of said contract, said Clark was to be charged in addition for transportation the sum of $50,000;

"And by a supplemental contract was to allow the said railway company, by way of forfeiture in case said railway was not completed by the 1st day of June, 1887, the further sum of $40,000;

"Making the amount paid on said contract, together with the allowance of said transportation and the allowance of said forfeiture, the sum of $3,716,865.20;

"Leaving the amount still due said Clark on said contract the sum of $213,532.49.

"And whereas, in and by said contract it was provided that the said Heman Clark, party of the first part, should save the said railway company free and harmless from all claims that might be made against said railway company for liens of workmen and claims of subcontractors, and from all damages arising from not keeping sufficient fences to preserve crops and restrain cattle, and from all damages for cattle or other domestic *animals killed or injured, and from all dam- [359] ages suffered by said subcontractors and employees while engaged upon said work, of which said class of claims, about $40,000 in amount, have been made upon and are now pending in courts by divers claimants against said railway company, and the sum of $40,000 of the amount so due, as aforesaid, under said contract to the said Heman Clark, has been reserved and set aside by said railway company, as indemnity or security for the payment of said claims and of such other claims of the same class as may hereafter be made, in case said claimants, or any of them, recover judgments against said railway company, and the said $40,000, or the balance thereof, after paying and settling such claims as may be established against said railway company, is to be paid over to the said Heman Clark as soon as said claims are satisfied or said railway company suitably indemnified from any loss on account of the same, which $40,000 deducted from the sum of $213,532.49, so, as aforesaid, due said Clark, leaves due and owing by said railway company and now payable on said contract to said Heman Clark, the sum of $173,532.49:
1101

"Now, therefore, be it known, that I, the said Heman Clark, have received of and from the said Chicago, Milwaukee, & St. Paul Railway Company the sum of one hundred and seventy-three thousand five hundred and thirty-two and $\frac{49}{100}$ dollars (\$173,532.49), in full satisfaction of the amount due me on said estimates, and in full satisfaction of all claims and demands of every kind, name, and nature, arising from, or growing out of, said contract of March 6, 1886, and of the construction of said railroad, excepting the obligation of said railway company to account for said forty thousand dollars, as hereinbefore provided. Heman Clark.

"Wm. C. Edwards."

[360] "14. That said receipt and paper contained an accurate, truthful, and undisputed account of all dealings between said parties except in the matter of the $40,000 deducted for time forfeiture, the $9,558.63 for nut locks embraced in the $3,626,865.20, and the lumber hereinafter referred to, and herein valued at $2,425. *Besides the above, the defendant has paid the $40,000 reserved as indemnity or security for the payment of claims against Clark, and in addition thereto upon like accounts, the sum of $521.75.

"15. That at the time of the signing and delivery of said last-mentioned paper the final certificate or estimate of the chief engineer under the contract had not been delivered to the plaintiff or any of his agents by the defendant or the said engineer, and the contents thereof were not known to the plaintiff, other than by the reference thereto contained in said receipt of March 9, 1888.

"16. That no other final settlement of the accounts under said contract had been had between the plaintiff and the defendant at the time that the said last-mentioned paper was signed and delivered.

"17. That at the time of the signing and delivery of said last-mentioned paper, the question of the liability of the plaintiff for nut locks, which had been left by the parties to this action open for settlement and adjustment until after the completion of the work under said contract, and had been referred by the defendant to the chief engineer under the said contract; had not been passed upon by him; that the said chief engineer had referred the question for the opinion of the defendant's counsel, who had not at said time given his opinion in relation thereto.

"18. That no account was ever, otherwise than by said paper and the receipt of said money, stated of the transactions under and connected with said contract between the plaintiff and the defendant.

"19. That, in or about the months of March and April, 1888, the plaintiff was the owner of 97,000 feet B. M. bridge timber then in the yard of the defendant at Chillicothe and along the line of the railroad.

"20. That the said lumber did not conform to the standard of the defendant, and was not purchased by the defendant from the plaintiff, or allowed in the final certificate of the chief engineer, under the contract in this section to the plaintiff.

"21. That, in and about the month of June, 1888, the defendant *took possession of the said lumber and converted the same to their own use without assent or knowledge of the plaintiff. [361]

"22. That the value of the said lumber at the time of the taking, in June, 1888, was $2,425."

"Conclusions of Law.

"1. That the defendant is not entitled to charge the plaintiff, or to retain and deduct from the amount earned and payable to the plaintiff under the said contract the sum of $40,000 as a forfeiture or liquidated damages for not completing the contract upon June 1, 1887.

"2. That under the facts proved in this case, the plaintiff is not legally liable to the defendant for any damages for failure to complete the contract within the contract time or the time agreed upon, for the reason that the plaintiff was prevented by the negligence of the defendant and its omission to procure the necessary right of way, from completing the said work in such time.

"3. That the plaintiff is not liable to the defendant for the sum of $9,558.63, the cost of patent nut locks furnished by the defendant to the plaintiff and used by him in the performance of the said contract.

"4. That there was no obligation imposed by the contract upon the plaintiff to furnish and pay for patent nut locks to be used in the construction of the said road.

"5. That the plaintiff is not legally indebted to the defendant in any sum whatever for patent nut locks furnished by the defendant and used in the construction of the railroad under said contract.

"6. That the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the sum of $2,425, with interest from June 1, 1888, for the conversion by the defendant of lumber belonging to the plaintiff.

"7. That the signing and delivery by the plaintiff of the receipt on or about the 9th day of March, 1888, and the acceptance of the check of $173,532.49, under the facts and circumstances proved in this case were, as to the two sums of $9,558.63, charged for nut locks, and $40,000 charged by way of forfeiture for nonperformance *in time, wholly [362] without consideration, and in violation of the contract between the parties, and do not constitute any bar to the recovery of the plaintiff for the sums of $9,558.63 and $40,000 otherwise as due under the contract.

"8. That the signing and delivery of said receipt, and the acceptance of the check thereunder, do not constitute a legal payment or accord and satisfaction of the said sums of $9,558.63 and $40,000, or either of them, or any part or either of them.

"9. That no account of the transactions under this contract, and of the claims sued on in this action, was ever had or stated between the parties to this action, otherwise than by said receipt or paper of March 9, 1888.

"10. That the plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount certified by the chief engineer of $3,895,793.79 without the deduction claimed by the defendants for nut locks of $9,558.63, and without allowance to the defendant by way of forfeiture for noncompletion of the railway on the 1st day of June, 1887, said sums together amounting to $49,558.63 with interest from March 9, 1888, and is also entitled to recover for timber used by the defendant on the 30th day of June, 1888, to the amount of $2,425 with interest from June 30, 1888, the whole amounting at the date of this report, viz., the 4th day of December, 1897, to the sum of $81,305.88, for which with interest from this date and disbursements the plaintiff is entitled to judgment, less amount paid by the defendant in excess of the reserved $40,000, $521.75, with interest from and to the same date, being in all this day $826.53.

"There will be judgment, therefore, for the plaintiff for $80,479.35 with interest and costs, interest to be computed from December 4, 1897."

[363] In addition to the foregoing findings of fact, twenty-seven additional findings of fact were made at the request of defendant. They related to, or set forth, the execution of the contract for the construction of the road; a supplemental agreement by which the sum of $40,000 was to be deducted from the contract price if the road was not completed by June 1, 1887; the failure of Clark to complete the road in that time; the final estimate and certificate of the chief engineer of the company; *the sending of the statement of account and release to Clark, with the information that, on the same being signed and returned by him, a check for the balance due him, $173,549, would be sent to him; the return of said statement and release signed by Clark, and the sending to him of a check for such balance, March 9, 1888; the deposit by Clark of said check and his retention of the amount paid him thereon; the expenditure of the $40,000 (and the $521.75 besides), reserved by the company, with Clark's consent, at the time of the settlement, to meet unpaid claims against Clark, incurred in the construction of the road; the furnishing of nut locks to Clark by the company for the construction of the road; and that the company did not require Clark to furnish any material or perform the work of furnishing or erecting any structures of a more expensive design than required of him by the contract for the construction of the road, otherwise than as set forth in the final estimate of the chief engineer.

Amendments to the complaint were allowed by the referee over defendant's objection and exception, and approved by the court under like objection and exception.

The errors assigned were that: (1) The court below erred in holding that the findings of fact supported the judgment as to the item of $9,558.63 for nut locks, and the item of $40,000 for time forfeiture: (2) The court below erred in holding that there was no consideration for the settlement made by the parties as to the items of $9,558.63 for nut locks, and $40,000 for time forfeiture:

(3) The court below erred in holding that the question whether there was any evidence in the record to sustain the finding that the defendant in June, 1888, wrongfully took possession of certain lumber and converted it to its own use was not reviewable: (4) The court below erred in holding that it was proper to allow plaintiff to amend his complaint on the trial against defendant's objection, by adding thereto an action sounding in tort and to recover thereon.

Mr. Burton Hanson argued the cause and, with Mr. George R. Peck, filed a brief for petitioner:

Clark's acceptance of the amount agreed upon in his settlement as the balance due on the account and in full settlement of all claims and demands embraced therein is as binding upon him, in the absence of fraud or mistake, as if such balance had been determined by judicial proceedings to which he was a party.

Kingsley v. Melcher, 56 Hun, 547, 10 N. Y. Supp. 63.

An account cannot be said to be liquidated when any item thereof is in dispute; and when such is the case a release in full, even though it is given upon the payment of the amount of the undisputed items of the account only, is conclusive as against the right of the creditor to recover all or any portion of the amount of the disputed items, unless such release was procured by fraud, or was the result of mutual mistake.

Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 20 L. R. A. 785, 33 N. E. 1034; Nassoiv v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 42 N. E. 715; Komp v. Raymond, 42 App. Div. 32, 58 N. Y. Supp. 909; Goodrich v. Sanderson, 35 App. Div. 546, 55 N. Y. Supp. 881; Ostrander v. Scott, 161 Ill. 339, 43 N. E. 1089; Tanner v. Merrill, 108 Mich. 58, 31 L. R. A. 171, 65 N. W. 664; United States v. Child, 12 Wall. 232, 20 L. ed. 360; United States v. Justice, 14 Wall. 535, 20 L. ed. 753; United States v. Clyde, 13 Wall. 35, 20 L. ed. 479; Mason v. United States, 17 Wall. 73, 21 L. ed. 565.

An account is not liquidated until the balance due is agreed upon by the parties, or is fixed by operation of law. To liquidate an account is to adjust it, to settle it; and until the exact balance due is agreed upon, there can be no liquidation of an account.

Century Dict.; 2 Abbott, Dict. Terms & Phrases, 50; 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. 845, 846.

The courts regard the rule preventing a creditor from making a valid contract to take a less sum of his debtor in discharge of a greater as technical and unreasonable, and they are eager to find some element in the transaction which can be held as a consideration.

Jaffray v. Davis, 124 N. Y. 168, 11 L. R. A. 710, 26 N. E. 351; Henson v. Stever, 69 Mo. App. 136; Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. 119.

A finding without any evidence whatever to support it presents a question, and is an error, of law, and has always been regarded as a ruling upon a question of law.

Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 593; Pollock v. Pollock, 71 N. Y. 137; Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 165, 23 N. E. 482.

A similar rule prevails in the courts of the United States, where it is held to be the duty of the court to direct a verdict, one way or the other, where there is no evidence to sustain a verdict to the contrary, or where such a verdict would be set aside, if rendered.

Schuylkill & D. Improv. Co. v. Munson, 14 Wall. 447, 20 L. ed. 871; Pleasants v. Fant, 22 Wall. 116, 22 L. ed. 780; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; Griggs v. Houston, 104 U. S. 553, 26 L. ed. 840; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 358, 57 Am. Rep. 729, 8 N. E. 654; Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. 32 U. S. App. 577, 69 Fed. Rep. 810, 16 C. C. A. 435, 29 L. R. A. 695.

If the facts are found by the court they are conclusive only in case there is a conflict of evidence, or if there is any evidence to sustain them; and the appellate court will examine the evidence for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is any such evidence.

Lancaster v. Collins, 115 U. S. 222, 29 L. ed. 373, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 33; Runkle v. Burnham, 153 U. S. 217, 38 L. ed. 694, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; Beuttell v. Magone, 157 U. S. 154, 39 L. ed. 654, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 566; Chrystie v. Foster, 26 U. S. App. 67, 61 Fed. Rep. 551, 9 C. C. A. 606; Fisher v. United States Nat. Bank, 26 U. S. App. 448, 64 Fed. Rep. 710, 12 C. C. A. 413; Merwin v. Magone, 35 U. S. App. 741, 70 Fed. Rep. 776, 17 C. C. A. 361; Magone v. Origet, 35 U. S. App. 744, 70 Fed. Rep. 778, 17 C. C. A. 363; Kirtz v. Peck, 113 N. Y. 222, 21 N. E. 130; Barrow S. S. Co. v. Mexican C. R. Co. 134 N. Y. 20, 17 L. R. A. 359, 31 N. E. 261.

In an action in the circuit court submitted, by stipulation of the parties, in accordance with a practice prevailing in the state where the court is held, to the decision of the judge "as a referee," this court will, upon a writ of error, consider the question whether there was any error of law in the judgment rendered by the court upon the facts found by the referee.

Paine v. Central Vermont R. Co. 118 U. S. 152, 30 L. ed. 193, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019.

Where the findings of the referee have been ordered to stand as the findings of the court, as was done in the case at bar, this court will consider whether the facts found by the referee sustain the judgment.

Shipman v. Straitsville Cent. Min. Co. 158 U. S. 356, 39 L. ed. 1015, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 886; Sicard v. Buffalo, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 15 Blatchf. 525, Fed. Cas. No. 12,831; Tyler v. Angevine, 15 Blatchf. 536, Fed. Cas. No. 14,306; Lyons v. Lyons Nat. Bank, 8 Fed. Rep. 369; Sayward v. Dexter, H. & Co. 44 U. S. App. 376, 72 Fed. Rep. 758, 19 C. C. A. 176; North American Loan & T. Co. v. Colonial & U. S. Mortg. Co. 55 U. S. App. 157, 83 Fed. Rep. 796, 28 C. C. A. 88.

Messrs. Bangs, Stetson, Tracy, & Mc-
1104

Veagh, with Messrs. George R. Peck, Charles W. Bangs, and Burton Hanson, filed a brief in support of petition for certiorari.

Mr. L. Lafin Kellogg argued the cause and, with Mr. Alfred Petté and Messrs. Kellogg, Rose, & Smith, filed a brief for respondent:

The jurisdiction of the circuit court of appeals to review a judgment entered in a case tried in the Federal court otherwise than according to the strict course of the common law is limited to cases tried in accordance with U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 649, 700.

Merrill v. Floyd, 5 U. S. App. 224, 53 Fed. Rep. 172, 3 C. C. A. 494.

The appellate court cannot review exceptions to the admission or exclusion of evidence, or to findings of fact by the referee, or to his refusal to find facts as requested.

Shipman v. Straitsville Cent. Min. Co. 158 U. S. 356, 39 L. ed. 1015, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 886; Roberts v. Benjamin, 124 U. S. 64, 31 L. ed. 334, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 393; Boogher v. New York L. Ins. Co. 103 U. S. 90, 26 L. ed. 310; Bond v. Dustin, 112 U. S. 604, 28 L. ed. 835, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296; Paine v. Central Vermont R. Co. 118 U. S. 152, 30 L. ed. 193, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019; Andes v. Slauson, 130 U. S. 435, 32 L. ed. 989, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573.

To the same effect are the decisions of the circuit court of appeals in the various circuits.

Shipman v. Ohio Coal Exchange, 37 U. S. App. 471, 70 Fed. Rep. 652, 17 C. C. A. 313; Hamilton County Comrs. v. Sherwood, 27 U. S. App. 458, 64 Fed. Rep. 103, 11 C. C. A. 507; Abraham v. Levy, 30 U. S. App. 713, 72 Fed. Rep. 124, 18 C. C. A. 469; Merrill v. Floyd, 5 U. S. App. 224, 53 Fed. Rep. 172, 3 C. C. A. 494; Wesson v. Saline County, 34 U. S. App. 680, 73 Fed. Rep. 917, 20 C. C. A. 227; Shipman v. Straitsville Cent. Min. Co. 158 U. S. 356, 39 L. ed. 1015, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 886.

A receipt is simply prima facie evidence of payment.

Fire Ins. Asso. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; Harris v. Davis, 44 Fed. Rep. 172; Miller v. Coates, 66 N. Y. 609; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. p. 115; Ryan v. Ward, 48 N. Y. 207, 8 Am. Rep. 539.

Payment by a debtor of a part of his debt is not a satisfaction of the whole.

United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 24 L. ed. 65; Fire Ins. Asso. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; Ryan v. Ward, 48 N. Y. 204, 8 Am. Rep. 539; Gray v. Barton, 55 N. Y. 68, 14 Am. Rep. 181; Perkins v. Lockwood, 100 Mass. 249, 1 Am. Rep. 103; Curran v. Rummell, 118 Mass. 483; McKay v. Myers, 168 Mass. 312, 47 N. E. 98; Hodges v. Truax, 19 Ind. App. 651, 49 N. E. 1079; Meyer v. Green, 21 Ind. App. 138, 51 N. E. 942; Fletcher v. Wurgler, 97 Ind. 223; Marion v. Heimbach, 62 Minn. 214, 64 N. W. 386; McIntosh v. Johnson, 51 Neb. 33, 70 N. W. 522; Cincinnati v. Cincinnati Street R. Co. 6 Ohio N. P. 140; Fitch v. Sutton, 5 East, 230.

The authorities are uniform to the effect that the final certificate, in the absence of fraud or mistake, is an absolute bar, and binding upon both parties.

Kihlberg v. United States, 97 U. S. 398, 24 L. ed. 1106; Sweeney v. United States, 109 U. S. 618, 27 L. ed. 1053, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344; Mundy v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 31 U. S. App. 606, 67 Fed. Rep. 633, 14 C. C. A. 583; Breyman v. Ann Arbor R. Co. 85 Fed. Rep. 579; Sweet v. Morrison, 116 N. Y. 19, 22 N. E. 276; Smith v. New York, 12 App. Div. 391, 42 N. Y. Supp. 522.

Payment by a debtor of a liquidated amount presently due, and to which he has no defense that can be urged in good faith or with color of right, is not by itself a sufficient consideration to sustain a release by the creditor of other unliquidated claims against the debtor.

Fire Ins. Asso. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 35 L. ed. 860, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84; United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 24 L. ed. 65; McKay v. Myers, 168 Mass. 312, 47 N. E. 98; Curran v. Rummell, 118 Mass. 483; Perkins v. Lockwood, 100 Mass. 249, 1 Am. Rep. 103; Hodges v. Truax, 19 Ind. App. 651, 49 N. E. 1079; Meyer v. Green, 21 Ind. App. 138, 51 N. E. 942; Marion v. Heimbach, 62 Minn. 214, 64 N. W. 386; Fletcher v. Wurgler, 97 Ind. 223; McIntosh v. Johnson, 51 Neb. 33, 70 N. W. 522.

The doctrine of accord and satisfaction was carried to the extreme limit in Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 20 L. R. A. 785, 33 N. E. 1034, and Nassoig v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 42 N. E. 715, and the rule will not be further extended.

Eames Vacuum Brake Co. v. Prosser, 157 N. Y. 289, 51 N. E. 986.

[364] *Mr Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

The record shows that the cause came on before the district judge, holding the circuit court, for trial, "without a jury, and a trial by jury having been expressly waived by the written consent of the parties duly filed;" that a referee was appointed by written consent in accordance with the modes of procedure in such cases in the courts of record of New York, and with the rules of the circuit court; and that his findings, rulings, and decisions were made those of the court. Under these circumstances the question whether the judgment rendered was warranted by the facts found was open for consideration in the circuit court of appeals, and is so here, and that is sufficient for the disposition of the case. Shipman v. Straitsville Cent. Min. Co. 158 U. S. 356, 39 L. ed. 1015, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 886.

By the writing executed and delivered by him March 9, 1888, Clark acknowledged the receipt of $173, 532.49 "in full satisfaction of the amount due me on such estimates, and in full satisfaction of all claims and demands of every kind, name, and nature, arising from, or growing out of, said contract of March 6, 1886, and of the construction of said railroad, excepting an item not material here. Five years and nearly five months after the receipt of the money and the execution and delivery of the discharge, this action was instituted. There was no finding or contention that the settlement was procured by fraud or duress, or was the result of mutual mistake; nor was there any finding that Clark did not have full knowledge of all the facts at the time he signed and delivered the release, and the presumption was that he had such knowledge. But the proposition is that the release was given without consideration, and that Clark was entitled to recover so far as the items of $40,000 and $9,558.63 were concerned, on the principle that where a liquidated sum is due, the payment of a less sum in satisfaction thereof, though accepted as satisfaction, is not binding as such for want of consideration. Cumber v. Wane, 1 Strange, 426. The rule therein laid down has been much questioned and qualified. Goddard v. O'Brien, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 37; Sibree v. Tripp* 15 Mees. & W. 23; [365] Couldery v. Bartrum, L. R. 19 Ch. Div. 399; Foakes v. Beer, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 621; Notes to Cumber v. Wane, in Smith Lead. Cas. *146; 12 Harvard Law Review, 521.

The result of the modern cases is that the rule only applies when the larger sum is liquidated, and when there is no consideration whatever for the surrender of part of it; and while the general rule must be regarded as well settled, it is considered so far with disfavor as to be confined strictly to cases within it.

In Johnson v. Brannan, 5 Johns. 268, 271, it was referred to as "that rigid and rather unreasonable rule of the old law;" and in Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. 116, where the acceptance of a promissory note of a third party for a less sum was held to be a good accord and satisfaction, Mr. Justice Nelson, then a member of the supreme court of New York, said: "It is true there does not seem to be much, if any, ground for distinction between such a case and one where a less sum of money is paid and agreed to be accepted in full, which would not be a good plea. . . . The rule that the payment of a less sum of money, though agreed by the plaintiff to be received in full satisfaction of a debt exceeding that amount, shall not be so considered in contemplation of law, is technical and not very well supported by reason. Courts therefore have departed from it upon slight distinctions."

So, in Brooks v. White, 2 Met. 283, 37 Am. Dec. 95, the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts said that "the foundation of the rule seems therefore to be, that in the case of the acceptance of a less sum of money in discharge of a debt, inasmuch as there is no new consideration, no benefit accruing to the creditor, and no damage to the debtor, the creditor may violate, with legal impunity, his promise to his debtor, however freely and understandingly made. This rule, which obviously may be urged in violation of good faith, is not to be extended beyond its precise import; and whenever the technical reason for its application does not exist, the rule itself is not to be applied. Hence judges have been disposed to take out of its application all those cases where there was any new consideration, or any collateral [366]benefit *received by the payee, which might raise a technical legal consideration, although it was quite apparent that such consideration was far less than the amount of the sum due."

To same effect, Ranney, J., in Harper v. Graham, 20 Ohio, 115; Jaffray v. Davis, 124 N. Y. 164, 11 L. R. A. 710, 26 N. E. 351; Smith v. Ballou, 1 R. I. 496; Mitchell v. Wheaton, 46 Conn. 315, 33 Am. Rep. 24; Seymour v. Goodrich, 80 Va. 303.

In some of the states the contrary rule has been established by statute. Ala. Code, § 2774; Cal. Civ. Code, § 1524; Georgia Code, § 3735; Maine Rev. Stat. chap. 82, § 45; N. C. Code, § 574; Tenn. Code 1884, § 4539; Va. Code 1897, § 2858; Weymouth v. Babcock, 42 Me. 42; Memphis v. Brown, 1 Flipp. 188, Fed. Cas. No. 9,415; McArthur v. Dane, 61 Ala. 539.

The findings of fact bearing on the items of $40,000 for forfeiture, and $9,558.63 for nut locks, exclude any other inference than that there was a dispute between the parties in respect of those items as to the facts on which the claim for their allowance was based. This being so, it is insisted that the total balance of $223,091.02 (as it would have been if $9,558.63 had not been deducted) cannot be held to have been liquidated as a whole, that is, agreed upon by the parties or fixed by operation of law, and that the contention cannot be sustained that where there is a dispute as to an aggregate amount due, and the debtor offers to pay so much thereof as he concedes to be correct, and the creditor accepts, is paid, and releases, nevertheless the creditor can afterward assert the disputed part of his claim on the ground that he has only received what was undeniably due him.

In United States v. Bostwick, 94 U. S. 53, 67, 24 L. ed. 65, 66, it was said that "payment by a debtor of a part of his debt is not a satisfaction of the whole except it be made and accepted upon some new consideration;" while in Baird v. United States, 96 U. S. 430, 24 L. ed. 703, it was held that if the debt be unliquidated and the amount uncertain, this rule does not apply. "In such cases the question is whether the payment was in fact made and accepted in satisfaction."

In Fire Ins. Asso. v. Wickham, 141 U. S. 564, 577, 35 L. ed. 860, 866, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 84, 87, Mr. Justice Brown stated the doctrine thus: "The rule is *well established [367]that where the facts show clearly a certain sum to be due from one person to another, a release of the entire sum upon payment of a part is without consideration, and the creditor may still sue and recover the residue. If there be a bona fide dispute as to the amount due, such dispute may be the subject of a compromise and payment of a certain sum as a satisfaction of the entire claim, but where the larger sum is admitted to be due, or the circumstances of the case show that there was no good reason to doubt that it was due, the release of the whole upon payment of part will not be considered as a compromise, but will be treated as without consideration and void."

1106

In this case it cannot be said that at the time the release was executed there was no good reason to doubt that these items were open to dispute. The good faith of the company in claiming their allowance is not impugned, and as Judge Lacombe said: "Both items were legitimate matters of dispute, and, unless settled by agreement of the parties, might fairly be brought by either party into court."

And the cases are many in which it has been held that where an aggregate amount is in dispute, the payment of a specified sum conceded to be due, that is, by including certain items but excluding disputed items, on condition that the sum so paid shall be received in full satisfaction, will be sustained as an extinguishment of the whole.

In Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 20 L. R. A. 785, 33 N. E. 1034, where certain items of an account were disputed, and certain items were undisputed, and defendant paid plaintiff only the amount of the undisputed items, the court held that the dispute over certain of the items made the account an unliquidated one, and that plaintiff, by accepting the amount of the undisputed items with notice that it was sent as payment in full, was precluded from recovering the balance of his demand.

Nassoiv v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 330, 42 N. E. 715, 716, is to the same effect, and the court said: "A demand is not liquidated even if it appears that something is due, unless it appears how much is due, and when it is admitted that one of two specific sums is due, but there is a genuine dispute as to which is the proper *amount, the demand is [368] regarded as unliquidated, within the meaning of that term as applied to the subject of accord and satisfaction."

In Ostrander v. Scott, 161 Ill. 339, 43 N. E. 1089, plaintiff had an account against defendant amounting to $5,282.58, the items of which were not in dispute, but defendant claimed that he was entitled to be allowed the sum of $1,210 for commissions, and accordingly he sent his check for the difference to plaintiff, at the same time notifying him that it was sent in settlement of his account in full, and if not accepted as such to return it. The check was retained by plaintiff, and he afterwards brought suit against defendant to recover the amount withheld, but the supreme court of Illinois held that there could be no recovery, and that an account cannot be considered as liquidated, so as to prevent the receipt of a less amount as payment from operating as a satisfaction, where there is a controversy over a set-off and the amount of the balance.

In Tanner v. Merrill, 108 Mich. 58, 31 L. R. A. 171, 65 N. W. 664, plaintiff sought to recover a sum which had been deducted from his wages by defendants, his employers. The amount of his wages was not disputed, but the right to make any deduction was questioned. Plaintiff received the amount of his wages less the deduction, and gave a receipt in full, and afterwards brought suit to recover the balance on the ground that, having only received the amount admitted to be due, there was no consideration for the release as to that which was disputed. The supreme court of Michigan held that the plaintiff could not recover, and that the rule that a receipt of part payment to be effective in the discharge of the entire debt must be rested upon a valid consideration is limited to cases where the debt is liquidated by agreement or otherwise; that a claim any portion of which is in dispute cannot be considered to be liquidated within the meaning of the rule; and that a receipt in full, given upon payment of the undisputed part of the claim, after a refusal to pay another part which is disputed, is conclusive as against the right of the creditor to recover a further sum, in the absence of mistake, fraud, duress, or undue influence.

178 U. S.

[369] Without analyzing the cases, it should be added that it has *been frequently ruled by this court that a receipt in full must be regarded as an acquittance in bar of any further demand in the absence of any allegation and evidence that it was given in ignorance of its purport, or in circumstances constituting duress, fraud, or mistake. De Arnaud v. United States, 151 U. S. 483, 38 L. ed. 244, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 374; United States v. Garlinger, 169 U. S. 322, 42 L. ed. 764, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 364; United States v. Adams, 7 Wall. 463, 19 L. ed. 249; United States v. Child, 12 Wall. 232, 20 L. ed. 360; United States v. Justice, 14 Wall. 535, 20 L. ed. 753; Baker v. Nachtrieb, 19 How. 126, 15 L. ed. 528.

The general principle applicable to settlements was thus expressed by Mr. Justice Clifford, in Hager v. Thomson, 1 Black, 80, 93, 17 L. ed. 41, 44: "Much the largest number of controversies between business men are ultimately settled by the parties themselves; and when there is no unfairness, and all the facts are equally known to both sides, an adjustment by them is final and conclusive. Oftentimes a party may be willing to yield something for the sake of a settlement; and if he does so with a full knowledge of the circumstances, he cannot affirm the settlement and afterwards maintain a suit for that which he voluntarily surrendered."

But apart from the controversy over the two items of $40,000 and $9,558.63, which was composed by the release, there was an item of $34,558.90 credited to Clark in the final account, the allowance of which, the company contends, furnished ample consideration therefor, although the adequacy of the consideration is not, in such cases, open to inquiry.

The referee found: "That no other final settlement of the accounts under said contracts had been had between the plaintiff and the defendant at the time the said last-mentioned paper was signed and delivered." "That no account was ever, otherwise than by said paper and the receipt of said money, stated of the transactions under and connected with said contract between the plaintiff and the defendant;" and also as a conclusion: "That no account of the transactions under this contract, and of the claims sued on in this action, was ever had or stated between the parties to this action, otherwise than by said receipt or paper of March 9, 1888." The release in question allowed to Clark, that is, debited the company with, the sum of $34,598.90, "for materials sold by [370] him to said company, and certain rebates and matters of that description;" and charged Clark, that is, credited the company, with $40,000 by way of forfeiture, and $9,558.63 for nut locks. It was in this respect, in effect, a statement of cross-demands. The $40,000 was specifically described and the $9,558.63 was included in the total credits stated.
178 U. S.

That this contractor, carrying on the work of building 200 miles of railroad, and receiving payments on vouchers from time to time, must have been aware from his own books and papers that the $9,558.63 was thus included, can hardly be reasonably denied, especially as he had objected to being charged with it. Indeed we do not understand that there is any suggestion that Clark was ignorant of any part of the account.

As to the $34,558.90, it appears from the contract and final certificate and estimate, which are set forth in the principal or additional findings, that this item represented no part of the work specified under the contract, nor extra work, nor materials ordered by the company, and that it was not included in the contract or in the certificate and final estimate.

As was said by Lacombe, J., who delivered the principal opinion below: "Indeed it is plain to a demonstration from the findings, that the item in question was not included either in the original contract or in the extra work, and must represent an additional and independent contract of sale." And the learned judge further said: "From what has been said before, it is plain that, if at the time of the transactions relied upon as showing accord and satisfaction, this sum of $34,598.90 so allowed to Clark represented an unliquidated item, the amount of which he would have to establish by evidence in case he had sued to recover it, its allowance to him upon the settlement of March 9, 1888, would be a sufficient consideration to uphold that settlement against him as an accord and satisfaction of all his claims." There was no finding that this amount had ever been agreed upon or liquidated by the parties in a manner that would have entitled Clark to have recovered the amount from the company as an independent item, otherwise than by the statement of it in the account preceding, and which formed a part of, the receipt and acknowledgment of satisfaction *which [371] Clark executed and delivered to the company March 9, 1888. Nor was there any finding showing, or tending to show, that the company would have placed that sum to Clark's credit except as an item in an account which credited the company with the two charges for nut locks and forfeiture.

But the circuit court of appeals held that because of the fourteenth finding of fact, it must be assumed that the referee was satisfied from the testimony, though he did not so find in terms, that the prior transactions between the parties were such that this sum of $34,558.90 was as much liquidated as was the sum of $3,895,798.79, to which the chief engineer had certified. Judge Lacombe said, referring to this particular item and to the fourteenth finding of fact: "By what process it was so liquidated does not appear in the findings. . . . We must take his finding, therefore, as conclusive upon the question, and assume that either by agreeing for a price in advance, or subsequently by entering into some binding agreement as to the sum to be paid, the defendant had lost its right to throw the plaintiff into court as to that item."

The fourteenth finding of fact was "that said receipt and paper contain a correct, truthful, and undisputed account of all dealings between said parties except in the matter of the $40,000 deducted for time forfeiture, the $9,558.63 for nut locks embraced in the $3,626,865.20, and the lumber hereinafter referred to, and herein valued at $2,425." If this finding means that the statement of account was incorrect, untruthful, and disputed as to the two items, it does not affirmatively say so, and if construed as amounting to that, it was not found that Clark did not have full knowledge thereof at the time he received the money and made the settlement. If it means that the statement of account as to these items was disputed, then the contention is a reasonable one that such dispute was a sufficient consideration to support the settlement in its entirety. But we must decline to accept the view that because of this finding it should be assumed, without any finding to that effect, that there had been prior transactions between Clark and the company, by which the item of $34,558.90, was liquidated, for it is explicitly declared by the referee that no account of the transactions *under the contract, and of the claims sued on in this action, was ever had or stated between the parties, otherwise than by the paper of March 9, 1888. The value of the materials, rebates, and other matters covered by this item may not have been disputed, but it did not follow that the company was obliged to purchase the materials or to allow the rebates, or that the amount thereof had been previously agreed to; nor that liability therefor might not have been contested if Clark had declined to sign the proposed acknowledgment of satisfaction. We must remember that Clark knew all about the account; he knew what the company claimed, and what he claimed, yet he accepted the check and signed the release without even a protest.

The word "liquidated" is used in different senses, and as applicable here means made certain as to what and how much is due; made certain by agreement of parties or by operation of law. We are of opinion that it would be going altogether too far to treat the fourteenth finding, segregated from the others, as equivalent to a determination that the $34,558.90 had been liquidated independently of the whole account as stated.

And, on the face of the findings, we think the credit in Clark's favor, taken in connection with the credits in the company's favor, put this adjustment beyond the reach of this belated attempt to overhaul it, and that Clark was barred by his release from recovering in this action the $40,000 and the $9,558.63, as having been improperly deducted.

1108

As to the sum of $2,425, that was the amount of a claim arising after the release was signed, and not included within it. There was some evidence tending to sustain the findings of the referee in support of this item, and we agree with the circuit court of appeals that no error was committed in the matter of amending the complaint, and in holding that a recovery could be had for this amount under the complaint as amended.

The judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit is reversed, with costs; the judgment of the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York is also reversed, and the cause remanded to the latter court, with a direction to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff and against defendant, for $2,425, *with interest from [373] June 30, 1888, less the sum of $521.78, with interest from the same date; the costs of the Circuit Court of Appeals to be paid by defendant in error therein; and the costs in the Circuit Court to be adjusted as to that court may seem just under the circumstances.

Ordered accordingly.

MOFFETT, HODGKINS, & CLARKE COMPANY, Petitioner,

v.

CITY OF ROCHESTER, George W. Aldridge, William W. Barnard, and John W. Sehroth, Composing the Executive Board of the City of Rochester.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 373-388.)

Contract with city—mistake in bid—right to correct.

1. A mistake in the proposals by a bidder for a contract with a city, which is promptly declared by an agent of the bidder as soon as it is discovered and before the city has done anything to alter its condition, will not bind the bidder by reason of a provision in the city charter that a bid shall not be withdrawn or canceled until the board shall have let the contract.
2. A city cannot claim that a bidder who has made a mistake in his proposals did not intend to give the executive board of the city an opportunity to correct the mistake, where, before the time expressed in the resolutions of the board for the bidder to appear and execute a contract or be regarded as abandon-

NOTE.—As to reformation in equity of deeds, contracts, insurance policies, and other written instruments—see note to Wasatch Min. Co. v. Crescent Min. Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 455.

As to equity jurisdiction to reform written instrument—see Rosenbaum Bros. v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co. (C. C. N. D. Iowa) 3 L. R. A. 189, and note.

As to relief obtainable in equity for mistake—see Page v. Higgins (Mass.) 5 L. R. A. 152, and note; Miller v. Powers (Ind.) 4 L. R. A. 483, and note; German Ins. Co. v. Gueck (Ill.) 6 L. R. A. 835, and note; Riegel v. American L. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 11 L. R. A. 857, and note; Butler v. Barnes (Conn.) 12 L. R. A. 273, and note.

ing any intention to do so, the bidder filed a bill in a court of equity to determine the rights of the parties, and the city made a reformation of the proposals impossible by letting the contract to another party.

[No. 217.]

Argued April 10, 11, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit to review a decree of the Circuit Court for the cancelation of proposals for a contract with a city. Reversed.

See same case below, 62 U. S. App. 392, 91 Fed. Rep. 28, 33 C. C. A. 319.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

[374] *This suit grows out of alleged errors in the proposals of the complainant for the execution of certain improvements conducted by the city of Rochester, N. Y.

The proposals of the complainant were accepted, but it declined to enter into a contract in accordance therewith, on the grounds hereafter stated, and the city, it is claimed, threatened to enforce the bond given with the proposals.

The bill prays for a reformation of the proposals to conform to the asserted intention in making them and their execution as reformed, or their rescission. Also an injunction against the officers of the city declaring complainant in default, its bond forfeited or enforced.

The substance of the bill is that the city of Rochester, through its proper executive board, determined to make improvements and extensions in the city's waterworks, and, among other things, to construct a masonry conduit for a distance of 12,000 feet from Hemlock lake northward, and proposed to enter into a contract therefor. The contract was known as contract No. 1.

Also, to construct a riveted steel pipe conduit 38 inches or 40 inches in diameter, commencing at the north end of the masonry conduit, and terminating at Mount Hope reservoir, in the city; length, about 140,000 feet. The contract was known as contract No. 2.

[375] Voluminous specifications were prepared by the city, in printed form, aggregating about 300 printed pages, *elaborately specifying, with infinite detail, the requirements of the executive board, the method in which the work was to be performed, the character of the materials required to be furnished, and the tests to which the materials were to be subjected. A copy of the schedule, with other schedules, was attached to the bill.

On December 10, 1892, public notice was given to contractors that proposals would be received for such work until 12 o'clock noon of December 23, 1892, at which time the bids were to be publicly opened by the chairman of the executive board.

The complainant was a contractor having an office in New York, and employed engineers to prepare proposals of the character contemplated by the city of Rochester, and complainant's officers were engaged in important and distracting occupations, and connected with other business which required them to delegate the duties ordinarily performed by them in connection with the work, such as described, to their subordinates. The agents of complainant, though they exercised due diligence, were unable to procure the forms of the proposals for such contracts until on or about the 15th of December, 1892, and its engineer proceeded to Rochester on the 20th of December, 1892, having attempted in the meantime to familiarize himself with the terms of such contracts, and there conferred with the engineers of the city, visited the line of the proposed conduit, and proceeded with the preparation of the proposals of the contracts Nos. 1 and 2.

The labor devolving upon him in the period of time allowed him for preparing the proposals made him nervous and confused, and in transcribing the figures prepared by him he accidentally made certain clerical errors.

Contract No. 2 submitted for consideration two routes, over 8,000 feet of the 140,000 of the proposed steel conduit. They were respectively designated in the proposals and specifications route "A" and route "B," and the city reserved the right of electing either of them, and further electing to require a 38-inch pipe or a 40-inch pipe to be furnished by contractors.

Route A was located in alluvial flats through which the creek meanders, and in- [376] volved several crossings of its existing and former channels. Route B was located wholly west of the creek, and required the construction of a tunnel with the necessary shafts, inlet and overflow chambers, manholes, and their appurtenances.

The specifications of route A involved sixty-one different items and quantities of work and materials, route B seventy-five. Among the items of route B was that known as "d," and described in the specifications as follows:

"For all earth excavations in open trenches or pits, for the masonry and pipe conduit, entrance and overflow chambers, gate vaults, blow offs, pipe overflows, bridges, railroad crossings, creek crossings, and culverts carried under said conduit, including bracing and sheeting, back filling of trenches, and masonry, making embankments, and other final disposal of the excavated material with haul of 1,000 feet or less, bailing and draining and all incidental work."

That item in route A was in precisely the same language, and the quantity of excavation contemplated by said items was 184,000 cubic feet of earth, and referred to precisely the same work. The complainant and its engineer intended to bid for said work the sum of 70 cents per cubic yard, and which sum was a fair and reasonable price for the work, and such sum was inserted in the proposal for route A, but by accident and mistake 50 cents was inserted in the proposal for route

B, and the price intended to be proposed therefor was some $36,800. The sum of 50 cents per cubic yard was a wholly insufficient price for such work. The proposal in route B also contained an item in the following language, to wit: "h." For all earth excavation in tunnel, including all necessary bracing, timbering, lighting, ventilating, removal and back filling and other final disposal of the excavated material with haul of 1,000 feet or less, pumping, bailing, and draining and all incidental work."

[377] The defendants' engineer estimated the quantity of excavation under this item at 2,000 cubic yards, and it was intended to charge for such work $15 per cubic yard, which was a fair and reasonable charge. In haste and confusion the engineer, *who is extremely nearsighted, in transcribing his figures, by accident and mistake inserted the sum of $1.50 per cubic yard, which was grossly inadequate and far below what would be the actual cost of the work under the most favorable circumstances. The difference between the bid as inserted and that which was intended to be inserted was the sum of $27,000.

A bond was required with proposals in the penal sum of $90,000, conditioned upon the performance of the work if the bid should be accepted and the making of the contract with the city in accordance with the notice to contractors. Complainant executed the bond with Henry D. Lyman and the American Surety Company as sureties, but at the time of its execution the proposal annexed thereto was entirely in blank, and in the time which elapsed between the time the bond was taken to the city and the presentation of the proposals it was impossible to insert in the pamphlet containing the bond the proposals for the work contemplated by contracts Nos. 1 and 2, or either of them.

The prices were inserted in other and different pamphlets of the same general character, but were not signed or in any way executed by complainant or by any of its officers. The pamphlets containing the bond and the pamphlet containing the proposals were placed in a single package.

The complainant was led to believe by the defendants and their officers that, although the masonry conduit and the riveted steel conduit were separately described, they constituted a continuous piece of work, and any person bidding upon both sections whose bid was lower in the aggregate than any other for the same work should be awarded the contract. With this understanding and for the purpose of making a single proposition for the entire work, complainant deposited the package containing the proposals for the work upon both sections with the executive board. The notice to contractors provided that every bid for the masonry conduit should be indorsed "Proposal for performing contract No. 1, Rochester Waterworks Conduit," and that every bid for the riveted steel pipe conduit should be inclosed in a sealed envelope and indorsed "Proposal for performing of contract No. 2, Rochester Water-

[378]works Conduit." *Complainant did not comply with the provisions, but addressed its proposals in one package to the executive board. The proposals were immediately opened by the chairman of the board and declared informal, and not in compliance with the requirements of the board, but they were nevertheless read, together with other proposals. That for line B, in contract No. 2, was read by the clerk in the presence of the members of the board before any other proposals for work on said line were read, and immediately upon reading item "d," relating to earth excavation in open trenches, the engineer of complainant, who prepared the proposals, informed the board that the price of 50 cents per cubic yard was a clerical error, and that it was the intention to charge 70 cents per cubic yard, the same price charged for the identical work on line A.

There were six bidders on contract No. 1, including complainant. Its bid was $473,790. The lowest bidder was W. H. Jones & Son, whose bid was $262,518.

The bids on contract No. 2, with items, were tabulated in a statement and annexed to the bill.

The complainant's bid on earth excavation, in open trench on route A, was 70 cents per cubic yard. The other bids ranged from 75 cents to 85 cents.

For the same work on route B complainant's bid was 50 cents per cubic yard. The other bids from 75 cents to 85 cents.

The complainant's bid for earth excavations in tunnel upon route B, contract No. 2, was $1.50 per cubic yard. The other bids were, respectively, $12 and $15.

The complainant's aggregate bid for work on route B was $857,552.50. The lowest was $1,130,195, that of Whitmore, Rauber, & Co.

If complainant was allowed the amount of its error, viz., $63,800, its proposal for route B. would be $921,354.50, which sum was $208,842.50 less than the next lowest bid, which was that of Whitmore, Rauber, & Vicinus.

The aggregate bids of complainant as corrected were $1,395,142.50, which were considerably less than the aggregate of any other contractor. For 38-inch pipe on line B *its [379] aggregate bid was $1,331,342.50, which was largely below that of any other contractor.

In order to take an improper and unconscionable advantage of complainant and the clerical errors made by it, the executive board on the 10th of January, 1893, notified complainant that the defendants intended to enter into a contract for the work of contract No. 1 with W. H. Jones & Son, although complainant's proposals for the work on both contracts were the lowest in the aggregate for the entire work contemplated. Thereupon on the 11th of January, 1893, before any official action with respect to letting the contracts were taken, complainant protested against the division of the proposals and letting the work of contract No. 1 and No. 2 separately, and insisted that the defendants were bound to enter into a contract with it for the entire work described in both contracts, or none at all, and informed the defendants of the clerical errors for the work on line B, and requested to correct them. And further demanded the contract for both sections at the corrected prices, or that it be permitted to withdraw its proposals.

On the 12th of January, 1893, the executive board, acting in bad faith and to take an unfair and unconscionable advantage of the clerical errors which had been committed, the commission of which the defendants conceded, adopted the resolution annexed to the bill and marked schedule B, and caused copies to be served on the complainant.

The defendants proposed, in conformity with the resolutions, to insist upon the execution of the contract for laying a 38-inch pipe on route B for the prices inserted in complainant's proposals, and intended, if complainant refused, to declare it in default, the bond executed by it forfeited, and to proceed to enforce the bond.

The said threatened action was contrary to good conscience, the contents of the proposals, and the rights of complainant, and, unless restrained, would cause it irreparable injury, for which there was no adequate remedy at law. The matter in dispute, exclusive of interest and cost, exceeded the sum or value of $2,000.

The following are the resolutions marked "Schedule B:"

[380]

*Office of the Executive Board,
Rochester, N. Y., January 12, 1893.

By Mr. Schroth:

Resolved, That the proposal of the Moffett, Hodgkins, & Clarke Company, of New York, N. Y., submitted on December 23, 1892, for the construction of a riveted steel pipe conduit 38 inches in diameter, and all the required appurtenances thereto, commencing at the north end of the contemplated masonry conduit near the village of Hemlock Lake, Livingston county, N. Y., and terminating at Mt. Hope reservoir, in the city of Rochester, N. Y., and by route B as described in the notice of letting for said work be, and the same is hereby, accepted, and that said work be and hereby is awarded to said Moffett, Hodgkins, & Clarke Company.

By Mr. Schroth:

Resolved, That the Moffett, Hodgkins, & Clarke Company, of New York, be and they are herewith required to attend at the office of this board, along with the sureties to be offered by said company, on or before Thursday, January 19, 1893, and to execute at that time the contract for the performance of the work of constructing a riveted steel pipe conduit 38 inches in diameter, and all the required appurtenances thereto, by route B from the north end of the contemplated masonry conduit near the village of Hemlock Lake, Livingston county, N. Y., to Mt. Hope reservoir in the city of Rochester, N. Y., and that the failure of such attendance and execution will be regarded as an abandonment of intention on the part of said Moffett, Hodgkins, & Clarke Company to perform said work.

178 U. S.

By Mr. Schroth:

Resolved, That the clerk be, and he is hereby, directed to cause immediate legal service of notice of award of contract to be made on the Moffett, Hodgkins, & Clarke Company, of New York, N. Y., in accordance with the foregoing resolutions.

The answer admitted the allegations of the bill in regard to the powers of the executive board, and that it determined to enter into a contract set forth in the bill; that it prepared specifications *and gave notice as [381] stated, and required bond to accompany proposals conditioned as alleged; that the complainant had such bond executed and annexed the same to its proposal of contract No. 2.

The answer alleged that the defendants did not know and could not set forth their belief or otherwise whether complainant was a corporation or employed engineers, or what their duties were, or that the officers of the complainant had to delegate important duties to subordinates, or whether its agents could procure firms to contract and make proposals before the 15th of December, 1892; or whether its engineer was nervous or made mistakes as alleged or in the way alleged, or the prices bid were inadequate, or that complainant was led to believe by the defendants that contracts Nos. 1 and 2 would be let jointly and not separately, or its bid declared informal and cannot be received, or that its engineer when the bids were opened notified the board that the prices which had been read for item "d" of route B in contract No. 2 of 50 cents per cubic yard was a clerical error.

The answer then proceeded in substance as follows:

The notice for bids required that all bids should state the prices for every separate item of work named in the proposals, should be plainly stated and distinctly written in ink, both in words and figures, in the proposed blanks left therefor; that the complainant's engineer received all communications requested by him from the executive board and its engineer, and all the plans and specifications and information were at the complainant's command before its submission of the proposals for the contract.

On account of the treacherous subsoil disclosed of borings along route B in contract No. 2, the latter route would be the least expensive, and the prices complained of by complainant were reasonable and fair values for the work set forth, and it was denied that clerical errors were entertained in the proposals, or that they were less than the average bids by competitive bidders, and averred that the amounts were knowingly and intentionally inserted to make complainant's bid what is known as an "unbalanced bid," to wit, in which the contractor will *give a "low price for one kind of work or [382] materials in the same contract with the hope that the quantity of work and materials for which a low price is bid will be reduced, while the quality of materials or work for which a high price is bid will be increased, thus making up on the high price bid sufficient to give the contractor a large profit upon the whole work."

1111

The complainant bid upon some items in contract No. 2 in excess of a reasonable price, thus making its bid for route B, contract No. 2, an unbalanced bid, enabling complainant to realize upon the completion of the work far in excess of the amount based upon the estimates of defendants' engineer.

In pursuance of the notice to contractors the board awarded to W. H. Jones & Sons contract No. 1, they being the lowest bidders, and to complainant contract No. 2, it being the lowest bidder, but this was not done to take undue and unconscionable advantage of the manner in which the proposals were made under contracts Nos. 1 and 2, and presented to the board, nor did the board act in bad faith and award the contract for the purpose of taking advantage of the alleged clerical errors.

On the 12th of December, 1892, by the resolution marked schedule B, the board duly and legally awarded to the complainant the contract for the construction of the conduit of route B in contract No. 2, and the complainant was notified to attend at the office of the board with its sureties to execute the proposed contract, and the complainant "without sufficient reason or excuse, and with intent to defraud said defendants, did refuse and neglect to enter into said contract, and said defendants deny that said complainant is entitled to the relief, or any part thereof, in the said complaint demanded, and they respectfully submit that the injunction awarded against them by this honorable court on the 15th day of February, 1893, ought to be dissolved, and that the said bill ought to be dismissed, with costs."

Evidence was submitted on the issues, including the specifications, proposals, and bond.

A decree was entered adjudging the proposals of the complainant for the conduit on line or route B to be "rescinded, canceled, and declared null, void, and of no effect," [383] and ordering "an injunction to be issued restraining the city and its officers from declaring complainant in default with respect to its bids and proposals, "or from declaring forfeited the bond executed by and on behalf of said complainant, and accompanying the aforesaid bids and proposals, or from in any manner suing upon or attempting to enforce or collect the said bond."

Commenting on the facts the learned trial judge said:

"The question in this controversy is plain and simple: Shall the complainant be held to an erroneous bid by which it agreed to do certain work for the city of Rochester for $63,800 less than was intended? The work related to a construction of a conduit to convey the water of Hemlock lake to the city. By a mistake of Mr. Burlingame, its engineer, the complainant bid 50 cents per cubic yard for earth excavation in open trenches when it intended to bid 70 cents, and $1.50 for earth excavation in tunnel when it intended to bid $15.

1112

"The proof of these mistakes is clear, explicit, and undisputed. As soon as the item proposing to do the work for 50 cents, as aforesaid, was read at the meeting of the executive board, and before any action was taken thereon, Mr. Burlingame stated that it was an error, and that complainant intended to bid for route B the same as for route A, viz., 70 cents.

"There is some testimony of a negative character that this prompt repudiation of the bid did not take place, but the great weight of testimony is in favor of the complainant. Had the errors been corrected the complainant's bid would still have been $200,000 below the next lowest bid. On route A the complainant's bid was $903,324. The mistakes all occurred on route B, and yet route A was selected, and the work awarded to other bidders for $1,123,920, or $220,596 more than the complainant's proposal.

"Upon the principal issue there is no disputed question of fact. Counsel for the defendants, though not admitting the mistakes, which are the basis of the action, do not dispute them. The oral argument proceeded upon the theory that the mistakes were made precisely as alleged.

"In order that no injustice may be done to the defendants, *their position in this regard is stated in the language of their brief, as follows: [384]

"We admit that the evidence of the complainant shows that Mr. Burlingame entered in his proposal sheets certain figures and numbers different from those which he intended to make, and that the defendants have no evidence to contradict his testimony." 82 Fed. Rep. 255.

On appeal to the circuit court of appeals the decree was reversed, with instructions to the circuit court to dismiss the bill. 62 U. S. App. 392, 91 Fed. Rep. 28, 33 C. C. A. 319. The case is here on writ of certiorari.

Other facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Louis Marshall argued the cause and, with Mr. Thomas H. Carter, filed a brief for petitioner:

A court of equity has the power to relieve a party against the consequences of a clerical error by the remedy of cancelation and rescission, although such error was unilateral and fraud cannot be predicated of any act of the other party.

2 Poin. Eq. Jur. § 870; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. tit. Mistake, p. 647; Adam, Eq. § 171; Rider v. Powell, 28 N. Y. 310; Smith v. Mackin, 4 Lans. 41; Jackson v. Andrews, 59 N. Y. 244; Crowe v. Lewin, 95 N. Y. 423; Dulany v. Rogers, 50 Md. 533; Diman v. Providence, W. & B. R. Co. 5 R. I. 130; Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 35 L. ed. 678, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972, 999; Hearne v. Marine Ins. Co. 20 Wall. 488, 22 L. ed. 395; Mortimer v. Shortall, 2 Dru. & W. 372.

It is well settled at common law that until the moment of acceptance an offer is revocable.

Schenectady Stove Co. v. Holbrook, 101 N. 178 U. S.

Y. 45, 4 N. E. 4; Cooke v. Oxley, 3 T. R. 653; Dickinson v. Dodds, L. R. 2 Ch. Div. 463.

The equitable jurisdiction to relieve a party from the consequences of accident, mistake, or fraud cannot be taken away by statute.

De Hart v. Hatch, 3 Hun, 375; People ex rel. New York v. Nichols, 79 N. Y. 590.

No contract may be entered into in fact, although all the forms of a contract exist, where the minds of the parties have not met.

Webster v. Cecil, 30 Beav. 62; Wood v. Searth, 2 Kay & J. 33; Neap v. Abbott, Cooper Pr. Cas. 333; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 7491; Pollock, Contr. § 427; Harris v. Pepperell, L. R. 5 Eq. 1; Garrard v. Frankel, 50 Beav. 445; Bloomer v. Spittle, L. R. 13 Eq. 427; Mummenhoff v. Randall, 19 Ind. App. 44, 49 N. E. 40; Rupley v. Daggett, 74 Ill. 351; Cundy v. Lindsay, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 465; McCotter v. New York, 37 N. Y. 325; Saltus v. Pruyn, 18 How. Pr. 512; Kyle v. Kavanagh, 103 Mass. 356, 4 Am. Rep. 560; Goodrich v. Lathrop, 94 Cal. 56, 29 Pac. 329; Hartford & N. H. R. Co. v. Jackson, 24 Conn. 514; Rowland v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 61 Conn. 103, 23 Atl. 755.

The respondents are not now in a position to enable the petitioner to perform its contract, if it should now be ready and willing to enter into such a contract. By the respondents' acts, therefore, performance by the petitioner of their requirements has been rendered impossible, and they should be enjoined from seeking to impose a forfeiture on the petitioner, and to enforce a penal bond, under such circumstances as those here disclosed.

United States v. Peck, 102 U. S. 64, 26 L. ed. 46; Shaw v. Republic L. Ins. Co. 69 N. Y. 286; Mansfield v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 211, 6 N. E. 386; Bogardus v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 N. Y. 328, 4 N. E. 522; Taylor v. Risley, 28 Hun, 144.

To withhold relief under these circumstances, and to place the respondents in a position to insist upon the enforcement of the penal liability on the bond, would not only be unjust and inequitable, but would smack of confiscation.

2 Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 1013.

The assertion that the petitioner's error was due to Burlingame's negligence, even if true, would not debar it from relief under the circumstances disclosed by the record.

Albany City Sav. Inst. v. Burdick, 87 N. Y. 40; Keister v. Myers, 115 Ind. 312, 17 N. E. 161; Palmer v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 54 Conn. 488, 9 Atl. 248; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 856; Onondaga County Sav. Bank v. United States, 26 U. S. App. 377, 64 Fed. Rep. 704, 12 C. C. A. 407; Mayer v. New York, 63 N. Y. 455; Kelly v. Solari, 9 Mees. & W. 54; Townsend v. Crowdy, 8 C. B. N. S. 477; Bell v. Gardiner, 4 Mann. & G. 11.

Mistakes in written instruments have been corrected in equity, although such mistakes were occasioned by the ignorance, mistake, or negligence of the draughtsman.

Drury v. Hayden, 111 U. S. 223, 28 L. ed. 408, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 405; Elliot v. Sackett, 108 U. S. 132, 27 L. ed. 678, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

375; Crippen v. Baumes, 15 Hun, 136; Wheeler v. Kirkland, 23 N. J. Eq. 13; Candey v. Marey, 13 Gray, 373.

It does not matter whether the draughtsman who was guilty of negligence was the agent of the party seeking the correction, or of the other party.

Menomonee Locomotive Mfg. Co. v. Langworthy, 18 Wis. 444.

A mistake made by a clerk in computing the amount due on a promissory note may be corrected in a court of chancery.

Barthell v. Roderick, 34 Iowa, 517.

The petitioner did not have an adequate remedy at law, and had the right to resort to equity for relief.

Griswold v. Hazard, 141 U. S. 260, 35 L. ed. 678, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 972, 999; Clute v. Knies, 102 N. Y. 377, 7 N. E. 181; Martin v. Melville, 11 N. J. Eq. 222; Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 550; Hay v. Star F. Ins. Co. 77 N. Y. 235, 33 Am. Rep. 607; Fink v. Queens Ins. Co. 24 Fed. Rep. 318; Muldrow v. Norris, 2 Cal. 74, 56 Am. Dec. 313.

Whatever may be the rule in the state courts, it is well settled that equitable defenses will not be permitted to be pleaded in an action at law brought in the Federal courts. There the distinction between law and equity has never been abolished, and there can be no mingling of equitable and legal remedies or causes of action.

Bennett v. Butterworth, 11 How. 669, 13 L. ed. 859; Foster v. Mora, 98 U. S. 425, 25 L. ed. 191; Northern P. R. Co. v. Paine, 119 U. S. 561, 30 L. ed. 513, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323; Johnson v. Christian, 128 U. S. 374, 32 L. ed. 412, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 87; Montejo v. Owen, 14 Blatchf. 324, Fed. Cas. No. 9,722; Buller v. Sidell, 43 Fed. Rep. 116; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bonner Mercantile Co. 44 Fed. Rep. 155.

In this case the Federal court has jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter, and such jurisdiction cannot be limited, restrained, or affected by any state legislation by virtue of which respondents assert existence of an adequate remedy at law.

Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 19 L. ed. 260.

Mr. Porter M. French argued the cause and filed a brief for respondent:

The alleged mistakes are of such a nature that petitioner ought not to be heard, on account of them, in a court of equity to ask for a rescission and the cancelation of its bid.

Dambmann v. Schulting, 75 N. Y. 64; Cleveland v. Richardson, 132 U. S. 318, sub nom. Cleveland v. Smith, 33 L. ed. 384, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100; Diman v. Providence, W. & B. R. Co. 5 R. I. 130; McCobb v. Richardson, 24 Me. 86, 41 Am. Dec. 374; Taylor v. Fleet, 4 Barb. 95; Wood v. Patterson, 4 Md. Ch. 335; Deeves v. Richardson & B. Co. 27 Jones & S. 423, 14 N. Y. Supp. 633; Langley v. Harmon, 97 Mich. 353, 56 N. W. 761; Reilly v. New York, 111 N. Y. 473, 18 N. E. 623.

An agreement cannot be affected by a mistake of either party in expressing his intention, or in his motives, of which the other party has no knowledge; and the party who has entered into an agreement under such mistake is bound by the agreement actually made, and cannot assert his mistake in avoidance of the agreement.

Chitty, Contr. 11th Am. ed. p. 1022.

Where the mistake is unilateral, and the party by whom it was made is the sufferer, relief will not be granted unless there has been some undue influence, misrepresentation, surprise, or abuse of confidence.

Addison, Contr. § 1182.

Where each party is equally innocent, and there is no concealment of facts which the other party has a right to know, and no surprise or imposition exists, the mistake or ignorance, whether mutual or unilateral, is treated as laying no foundation for equitable interference.

Story, Eq. Jur. § 151.

Mistakes, to be available in equity, must not have arisen from negligence where the means of knowledge were easily accessible. The party complaining must have at least exercised the degree of diligence which may fairly be expected of a reasonable person.

Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 55, 23 L. ed. 798.

Petitioner was guilty of such negligence as to debar it from relief under the circumstances as disclosed by the record.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 839; Beach, Modern Eq. Jur. § 54; Capehart v. Mhoon, 58 N. C. (5 Jones' Eq.) 178; Kearney v. Sascor, 37 Md. 276; Glenn v. Statler, 42 Iowa, 107; Toops v. Snyder, 70 Ind. 560; Conner v. Welch, 51 Wis. 431, 8 N. W. 260; Moran v. McLarty, 75 N. Y. 28; Brown v. Fagan, 71 Mo. 563.

The negligence of petitioner's president and engineer will not excuse the petitioner. They were acting for it, and not for respondents. In this respect the case is to be distinguished from cases where a scrivener failed to reduce to writing an agreement actually made; such as the cases of Drury v. Hayden, 111 U. S. 223, 28 L. ed. 408, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 405; Wheeler v. Kirtland, 23 N. J. Eq. 13; Menomonee Locomotive Mfg. Co. v. Langworthy, 18 Wis. 444.

Respondents cannot be restored to their position as it existed when the bid was presented, and therefore there should be no rescission. A water supply for the city of Rochester was necessary. Respondents could not be expected to await the results of this litigation before making the improvement.

Grymes v. Sanders, 93 U. S. 62, 23 L. ed. 801.

Messrs. Guggenheimer, Untermyer, and Marshall, with Mr. Thomas H. Carter, filed the petition for certiorari.

Mr. John F. Kinney filed an answer to such petition.

[384] *Mr. Justice McKenna, after stating the case as above, delivered the opinion of the court:

Both of the lower courts agree that there was a mistake. The circuit court said that the proof of it was "clear, explicit, and undisputed." The circuit court of appeals, while expressing no dissent as to the fact, said "that one of the alleged mistakes, that in respect to the tunnel excavation, was not a mistake in any legal sense, but was a negligent omission arising from an inadequate calculation of the cost of the work."

We do not think the negligence was sufficient to preclude a claim for relief if the mistakes justified it.

This court said in Hearne v. Marine Ins. Co. 20 Wall. 488, 22 L. ed. 395, by Mr. Justice Swayne:

"The reformation of written contracts for fraud or mistake is an ordinary head of equity jurisdiction. The rules which govern the exercise of this power are founded in good sense and are well settled. Where the agreement as reduced to writing omits or contains terms or stipulations contrary to the common intention of the parties, the instrument will be corrected so as to make it conform to their real intent. The parties will be placed as they would have stood if the mistake had not occurred.

*"The party alleging the mistake must[385] show exactly in what it consists and the correction that should be made. The evidence must be such as to leave no reasonable doubt upon the mind of the court as to either of these points. The mistake must be mutual, and common to both parties to the instrument. It must appear that both have done what neither intended. A mistake on one side may be a ground for rescinding, but not for reforming a contract. Where the minds of the parties have not met there is no contract, and hence none to be rectified."

The last two propositions may be claimed to be pertinent to the case at bar, even though the transactions between the parties be considered as a completed contract.

There was no doubt of the mistake, and there was a prompt declaration of it as soon as it was discovered and before the city had done anything to alter its condition. Indeed, according to the testimony of one witness, the clerk of the board, before the mistake was declared by complainant's engineer, expressed the thought that 50 cents per cubic yard for earth excavation was too low, "and there was some discussion about it at the time, but Mr. Aldridge (he was chairman of the board) said he (the clerk) might as well go on and read it, as the bid was informal." The reading proceeded, and subsequently the board let the work on contract No. 1 to Jones & Son, and accepted complainant's proposals containing the mistakes for the work on line B, contract No. 2, although complainant protested that there was a mistake in the price of earth excavation and also in tunnel excavation. This was inequitable, even though it was impelled by what was supposed to be the commands of the charter. It offered or forced complainant the alternative of taking the contract at an unremunerative price, or the payment of $90,000 as liquidated damages. We do not think such course was the command of the statute or the board's duty.

The rule between individuals is that until a proposal be accepted it may be with-[386] drawn, and if this principle cannot be applied in the pending case, on account of the charter of the city, there is *certainly nothing in the charter which forbids or excuses the existence of the necessary elements of a contract.

The charter of the city provides that "neither the principal nor sureties on any bid or bond shall have the right to withdraw or cancel the same until the board shall have let the contract for which such bid is made, and the same shall have been duly executed." A perfectly proper provision, but, as was said by the learned circuit court:

"The complainant is not endeavoring 'to withdraw or cancel a bid or bond.' The bill proceeds upon the theory that the bid upon which the defendants acted was not the complainant's bid; that the complainant was no more responsible for it than if it had been the result of agraphia or the mistake of a copyist or printer. In other words, that the proposal read at the meeting of the board was one which the complainant never intended to make, and that the minds of the parties never met upon a contract based thereon. If the defendants are correct in their contention there is absolutely no redress for a bidder for public work, no matter how aggravated or palpable his blunder. The moment his proposal is opened by the executive board he is held as in a grasp of steel. There is no remedy, no escape. If, through an error of his clerk, he has agreed to do work worth $1,000,000 for $10, he must be held to the strict letter of his contract, while equity stands by with folded hands and sees him driven into bankruptcy. The defendants' position admits of no compromise, no exception, no middle ground." [82 Fed. Rep. 256.]

These remarks are so apposite and just it is difficult to add to them. The transactions had not reached the degree of a contract,—a proposal and acceptance. Nor was the bid withdrawn or canceled against the provision of the charter. A clerical error was discovered in it and declared, and no question of the error was then made or of the good faith of complainant.

It is true it is now urged by counsel that there was no mistake, but that the prices were deliberately and consciously inserted for the purpose of making an "unbalanced bid," in which low prices in some items are compensated by high prices in others. The circuit court and the circuit court of appeals [387] *found against this view, and this court usually accepts such concurrence as conclusive.

The circuit court of appeals, however, found that while there was a clerical error for the earth excavation in contract No. 2, route B, that the alleged mistake in tunnel excavation "was not a mistake in any legal sense, but was a negligent omission arising from an inadequate calculation of the cost of the work." Further, the court said:

"It is also manifest that the complainant did not intend to give the board an opportunity to correct the mistakes and award the contract on the corrected basis. There was no color of foundation for the assertion that the proposals were to be treated as a single bid for contracts No. 1 and No. 2, and that both contracts must be awarded to the complainant or neither. The position thus taken by the complainant was well calculated to excite distrust on the part of the board and induce its members to believe that the alleged mistakes were an afterthought, conceived when the complainant had become convinced by studying the proposals of its competitors that it could not profitably carry out the contract on the terms proposed." [62 U. S. App. 397, 91 Fed. Rep. 31, 33 C. C. A. 322.]

We are unable to concur in either of these conclusions. The mistake in tunnel excavations arose from inadvertently making the cost of one item—mere earth digging and putting the dirt into cars—the total cost without making "any allowance for any work preparatory to it or connected with it," to quote the testimony of complainant's engineer. And it seems impossible for the error to have escaped the notice of the board. Other contractors charged for the same work $12 and $15.

The conclusion that the complainant did not intend to give the board an opportunity to correct the mistakes is based on a letter addressed to the board, in which it claimed unity in the contracts and bids, and demanding that "the contract in its entirety for both sections of the work be awarded to us at the corrected price, or that we may be allowed to withdraw our proposal and have our bid returned to us."

But before the time expressed in the resolutions of the executive board of the city for the complainant to appear and execute a contract, or it would be regarded as abandoning its intention *to do so, complainant filed [388] its bill in this case, and appealed to a court of equity to determine its rights and obligations.

On filing the bill and supporting affidavits, on the 18th of January, 1893, an order was issued temporarily restraining the officers of the city from declaring the complainant in default or from forfeiting or suing on its bond, until a motion for an injunction pendente lite could be heard. Subsequently, after hearing and argument, an injunction pendente lite was issued.

Prior to its issuing, but after the restraining order, the executive board accepted the bid of Whitmore, Rauber, & Vicinus, and entered into a contract with them for the construction for the riveted steel pipe conduit, 38 inches in diameter, for route A, for 8,000 feet. That is on a different route and claimed to be the subject of a different contract from that awarded to the complainant.

This action made a reformation of the proposals impossible—made any action of the circuit court impossible, except to annul the proposals or dismiss the bill and subject the complainant to a suit on its bond. If the decree was narrowed to this relief it was the fault of the city, not of the complainant. Whatever its prior claims and pretensions may have been, by submitting itself to a court of equity complainant submitted it—self to abide by what that court should decree, and the alternative of a reformation of the proposals was certainly not their execution unreformed.

By letting the contract to Whitmore, Rauber, & Vicinus, the city, in effect, evaded the restraining order, forestalled the action of the circuit court, and prevented the reformation of the proposals; and by preventing that justified the decree which was entered.

The decree of the Circuit Court of Appeals is reversed, and that of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

[389]*NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,
v.
FANNIE CRAVENS.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 389-401.)

Courts—following construction of state statute—insurance—by foreign company—statute declaring policy nonforfeitable—stipulation that laws of other state shall govern—power of state to regulate contract.

1. The Interpretation of a state statute by the state courts with respect to its application to policies issued by a foreign insurance company is binding on the Supreme Court of the United States.
2. An exemption of policies of life insurance issued by corporations of other states, which stipulate that they shall be governed by the law of another state, from the operation of the Missouri statute (§ 5983) making policies nonforfeitable for default in payment of premiums, cannot be claimed by virtue of the Constitution of the United States, and on the ground that it interferes with the contractual liberty of the corporation, since the state has power to compel such corporations to be subject to such statute as a condition of the right to do business in the state.

NOTE.—That the United States Supreme Court will not review decisions of state courts construing state statutes, unless specially authorized—see note to Commercial Bank v. Buckingham, 12 L. ed. U. S. 169.

As to effect of decisions of state courts in Federal courts—see note to Forepaugh v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (Pa.) 5 L. R. A. 508.

As to when United States courts do not follow state decisions—see note to United States ex rel. Butz v. Muscatine, 19 L. ed. U. S. 490.

That foreign corporations are amenable to local law—see Talbott v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. (Md.) 13 L. R. A. 584, and note.

As to regulation of business of foreign corporation by state—see Boulware v. Davis (Ala.) 9 L. R. A. 601, and note.

As to recognition or exclusion of foreign corporation by state—see Cone Export & Commission Co. v. Poole (S. C.) 24 L. R. A. 289, and note.

As to exclusion and regulation of foreign corporations—see McCanna & F. Co. v. Citizens' Trust & Surety Co. 24 C. C. A. 11, and note.

As to exclusion of foreign corporation as regulation of interstate commerce—see note to Kindel v. Beck & P. Lithographing Co. (Colo.) 24 L. R. A. 311.

3. The Interstate character of a contract of life insurance made by a resident of one state with a corporation of another state does not give it immunity from the control of the state in which the insured resides and in which the corporation does business.
4. The business of life insurance is not commerce, and therefore a state statute regulating contracts of life insurance made between residents of the state and corporations of other states is not invalid as a regulation of interstate commerce.

[No. 262.]

Argued April 25, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Missouri to review a decision reversing a judgment in an action upon a policy of life insurance. Affirmed.

See same case below, 148 Mo. 583, 50 N. W. 519.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

*The controversy in this case is as to the amount due upon a policy of insurance issued by the plaintiff in error, upon the life of John K. Cravens, husband of the defendant in error. [389]

The contention of the plaintiff in error is that there is only due on the policy, if anything, the sum of $2,670; that of defendant in error is that she is entitled to the full amount of the policy, to wit, $10,000, less unpaid premiums.

These contentions depend chiefly for solution on the statute of Missouri, inserted in the margin, † and *the issue arising is whether [390]

†Sec. 5983. Policies nonforfeitable, when.—No policies of insurance on life hereafter issued by any life insurance company authorized to do business in this state, on and after the first day of August, A. D. 1879, shall, after payment upon it of two full annual premiums, be forfeited or become void by reason of the nonpayment of premium thereon, but it shall be subject to the following rules of commutation, to wit: The net value of the policy when the premium becomes due and is not paid shall be computed upon the American experience table of mortality, with four and one half per cent interest per annum, and after deducting from three fourths of such net value any notes or other indebtedness to the company, given on account of past premium payments on said policy issued to the insured, which indebtedness shall then be canceled, the balance shall be taken as a net single premium for temporary insurance for the full amount written in the policy, and the term for which such temporary insurance shall be in force shall be determined by the age of the person whose life is insured at the time of default of premium, and the assumption of mortality and interest aforesaid; but if the policy shall be an endowment, payable at a certain time, or at death if it should occur previously, then if what remains as aforesaid shall exceed the net single premium of temporary insurance for the remainder of the endowment term for the full amount of the policy, such excess shall be considered as a net single premium, for a pure endowment of so much as such premium will purchase, determined by the age of the insured at date of defaulting the payment of premium on the original policy, and the table of mortality and interest as aforesaid, which amount shall be paid at end of the original term of endow-

[391] the defendant in error, as beneficiary in the policy, because of the payment of *four annual premiums, and notwithstanding the omission to pay the fifth and sixth annual premiums, is entitled to extended insurance as provided in § 5983, that is, to the full amount of the policy less unpaid premiums, or is entitled to the amount of commuted insurance tendered by plaintiff in error.

The case was submitted upon an agreed statement of facts substantially as follows:

That the defendant is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of New York as a mutual life insurance company, without capital stock, having its chief office in the city of New York, and was at the date of issuing the policy in question, and since has been, engaged in the business of insuring lives through branch offices in the different states and territories of this country and certain foreign countries; and that it maintains agents and examiners in the state of Missouri.

[392] On May 2, 1887, the local agent of the company solicited John K. Cravens, at his residence in Missouri, to insure his life in the *company, and thereupon Cravens signed and delivered to the local agent a written application for the policy in suit. The application was made a part of the policy, and contained the following provisions:

"That inasmuch as only the officers of the home office of the said company in the city of New York have authority to determine whether or not a policy shall issue on any application, and as they act on the written statements and representations referred to, no statements, representations, promises, or information made or given by or to the person soliciting or taking this application for a policy, or by or to any other person, shall be binding on said company, or in any manner affect its rights, unless such statements, representations, or information be reduced to writing and presented to the officers of said company, at the home office, in the application. . . .

"That the entire contract contained in said policy and in this application shall be construed according to the laws of the state of New York, the place of said contract being agreed to be the home office of said company in the city of New York."

The application was signed by the agent of the company and forwarded to the latter's home office in New York, and thereupon the policy in suit was issued and transmitted to Kansas City by the company to its agent, who there received the same, and there delivered it to Cravens on the 20th of May, 1887, and collected the first premium provided to be paid.

Four annual premiums of $589.50 each were paid in Missouri. The fifth and sixth premiums were not paid. Cravens died November 2, 1892, in Missouri, and proof thereof was duly made.

The company had different forms of policies, and Cravens selected a nonforfeiting limited tontine policy, fifteen years endowment, with the limited premium return plan ment, if the insured shall then be alive. [Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5856.]

Sec. 5984. A paid-up policy may be demanded, when.—At any time after the payment of two or more full annual premiums, and not later than sixty days from the beginning of the extended insurance provided in the preceding section, the legal holder of the policy may demand of the company, and the company shall issue, its paid-up policy, which, in case of an ordinary life policy, shall be for such an amount as the net value of the original policy at the age and date of lapse, computed according to the American experience table of mortality, with interest at the rate of four and a half per cent per annum, without deduction of indebtedness on account of said policy, will purchase, applied as a single premium upon the table rates of the company, and in case of a limited payment life policy, or of a continued payment endowment policy payable at a certain time, or of a limited payment endowment policy, payable at a certain time, or at death, it shall be for an amount bearing such proportion to the amount of the original policy as the number of complete annual premiums actually paid shall bear to the number of such premiums stipulated to be paid: Provided, that from such amount the company shall have the right to deduct the net reversionary value of all indebtedness to the company on account of such policy; and provided further, that the policy holder shall, at the time of making demand for such paid-up policy, surrender the original policy, legally discharged, at the parent office of the company. [Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5857.]

Sec. 5985. Rule of payment on commuted policy.—If the death of the insured occur within the term of temporary insurance covered by the value of the policy as determined in section 5983, and if no condition of the insurance other than the payment of premiums shall have been violated by the insured, the company shall be bound to pay the amount of the policy, the same as if there had been no default in payment of premiums, anything in the policy to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, however, that notice of the claim and proof of the death shall be submitted to the company in the same manner as provided by the terms of the policy, within ninety days after the decease of the insured; and, provided, also, that the company shall have the right to deduct from the amount insured in the policy the amount compounded at six per cent interest per annum of all the premiums that had been forborne at the time of the decease, including the whole of the year's premium in which the death occurs, but such premiums shall in no case exceed the ordinary life premium for the age at issue, with interest as last aforesaid. [Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5858.]

Sec. 5986. The foregoing provisions not applicable, when.—The three preceding sections shall not be applicable in the following cases, to wit: If the policy shall contain a provision for an unconditional cash surrender value at least equal to the net single premium for the temporary insurance provided hereinbefore, or for the unconditional commutation of the policy to nonforfeitable paid-up insurance for which the net value shall be equal to that provided for in section 5984, or if the legal holder of the policy shall, within sixty days after default of premium, surrender the policy and accept from the company another form of policy, or if the policy shall be surrendered to the company for a consideration adequate in the judgment of the legal holder thereof, then, in any of the foregoing cases, this act shall not be applicable. [Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5859.]

of insurance. This plan is described in the policy as follows:

"This policy is issued on the nonforfeiting limited tontine policy plan, the particulars of which are as follows:

"That the tontine dividend period for this policy shall be completed on the 11th day of May, in the year nineteen hundred and two.

[393] "That no dividend shall be allowed or paid upon this policy *unless the person whose life is hereby insured shall survive until completion of its tontine dividend period, and unless this policy shall then be in force.

"That surplus or profits derived from such policies on the nonforfeiting limited tontine policy plan as shall not be in force at the date of the completion of their respective tontine dividend periods, shall be apportioned among such policies as shall complete their tontine dividend periods."

At the end of the tontine period certain benefits were to be allowed, which are stated in the policy, but which need not be repeated.

The policy also contained the following provision:

"That if the premiums are not paid, as hereafter provided, on or before the days when due, then this policy shall become void, and all payments previously made shall be forfeited to the company, except that if this policy, after being in force three full years, shall lapse or become forfeited for the nonpayment of any premium, paid-up policy will be issued on demand within six months after such lapse, with the surrender of this policy, under the same conditions as this policy, except as to payments of premiums, but without participation in profits, for an amount equal to as many fifteenth parts of the sum above insured as there shall have been complete annual premiums paid hereon when said default in the payment of premium shall be made; and all right, claim, or interest arising, under statute or otherwise, to or in any other paid-up policy or surrender value, and to or in any temporary insurance; whether required or provided for by the statutes of any state, or not, is hereby expressly waived and relinquished."

The total number of policies, of the plan of the policy in suit, issued in the year 1887 to the residents of all states and countries where the company was doing business was 5,172, covering an aggregate of insurance of $20,154,981.

The amount of paid-up insurance to which the policy was entitled, at the date of lapsing, was $2,670. No demand was made for it within six months after default, or at any time. Upon the death of Cravens the company offered to waive the failure to make such demand, and tendered defendant in error, *and still tenders her, the amount of such paid-up policy, which she declined, and still declines.

[394]

On the 11th of May, 1891, Cravens was fifty-three years old, "and the term of temporary insurance procured at that date by three fourths of the net value of the policy, taken as a single premium for the amount written in the policy, was six years and forty-six days from the 11th day of May, 1891, making said policy, if subject to said extended insurance, in force at the death of the said Cravens."

1118

The defendant in error claims under the policy $10,000, less the amount of unpaid premiums, with interest thereon, which left a balance of $8,749.21, with interest at 6 per cent from November 30, 1892. The plaintiff in error admitted and offered to pay the sum of $2,670, which plaintiff in error declined to receive.

The trial court rendered a judgment for the plaintiff (defendant in error) for the sum of $2,670.

On appeal to the supreme court of the state the judgment was reversed, and the case was remanded with directions to enter judgment for plaintiff (defendant in error) for the sum of $8,749.21, with interest at 6 per cent from November 30, 1892.

The case was then brought here.

It is urged as error against the judgment of the supreme court of the state that it makes the law of Missouri, and not the law of New York, the law of the contract, as provided in the application for the policy, thereby denying to the plaintiff in error a contractual liberty without due process of law, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and that the statute of Missouri is an attempted regulation of interstate commerce.

Mr. Frederick N. Judson argued the cause and, with Mr. George W. Hubbell, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

The statute of Missouri, as construed by the supreme court of that state, denying the contractual liberty of the parties to an interstate contract of mutual life insurance, in determining in good faith the applicatory law of that contract, was violative of the contractual liberty secured by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and a Federal question is thereby presented to this court.

Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 585, 41 L. ed. 834, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427.

The judgment of the supreme court of Missouri, directing judgment by the circuit court, was final within the meaning of the judiciary act.

Mower v. Fletcher, 114 U. S. 127, 29 L. ed. 117, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799.

The applicatory law of an interstate contract is that with reference to which the parties contract, and in the case at bar the law of New York was made the applicatory law of the policy by the express agreement of the parties.

Wharton, Conf. Laws, §§ 12, 426; Story, Conf. Laws, § 272; Dicey, Conf. Laws, § 567; Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1077; 4 Phillimore, International Law 469; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 253; Scudder v. Union Nat. Bank, 91 U. S. 406, 23 L. ed. 245; Cox v. United States, 6 Pet. 172, 8 L. ed. 359; Lamar v. Micou, 114 U. S. 218, 29 L. ed. 94, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 857; Watts v. Camors, 115 U. S. 353, 29 L. ed. 406, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 91; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed.

178 U. S.

104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469; Coghlan v. South Carolina R. Co. 142 U. S. 109, 35 L. ed. 954, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150; Shattuck v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 4 Cliff. 598, Fed. Cas. No. 12,715; Desmazes v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 7 Ins. L. J. 928, Fed. Cas. No. 3,821; Lamb v. Bowser, 7 Biss. 315, Fed. Cas. No. 8,008; Parkin v. Royal Exchange Co. 8 Ct. Sess. 465; Ruse v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 23 N. Y. 516; Hyde v. Goodnow, 3 N. Y. 269; Voorheis v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc. 91 Mich. 469, 51 N. W. 1109; Thompson v. Ketchum, 8 Johns. 189, 5 Am. Dec. 332; Griesemer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 10 Wash. 203, 38 Pac. 1031, 1034; Penn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & T. Co. 37 U. S. App. 692, 72 Fed. Rep. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 38 L. R. A. 33; American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. 95 Fed. Rep. 111, 36 C. C. A. 671.

This principle of universal law, that the applicatory law of an interstate contract is that with reference to which the parties have contracted, has been uniformly adopted and enforced by the courts of the different states, and also by the Federal courts, against life insurance companies doing business in such states, construing the provisions of the statutory law of the state of incorporation as entering into the policy contracts of the parties.

Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Phinney, 178 U. S. 327, ante, 1088, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 906; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Redding, 48 U. S. App. 565, 83 Fed. Rep. 85, 27 C. C. A. 404; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 97 Fed. Rep. 263, 38 C. C. A. 159; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Dingley, 93 Fed. Rep. 153, 35 C. C. A. 245; McConnell v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 92 Fed. Rep. 769, 34 C. C. A. 663; Rosenplanter v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. 96 Fed. Rep. 721, 37 C. C. A. 568, 46 L. R. A. 473; Hathaway v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 99 Fed. Rep. 534; Mullen v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 89 Tex. 261, 34 S. W. 605; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Smith (Tex. Civ. App.) 41 S. W. 680; Harrington v. Home L. Ins. Co. (Cal.) 58 Pac. 180; Griffith v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Cal. 627, 36 Pac. 113; Osborne v. Home L. Ins. Co. 123 Cal. 610, 56 Pac. 616; Johnson v. New York L. Ins. Co. (Iowa) — L. R. A. —, 78 N. W. 905; Trimble v. New York L. Ins. Co. 20 Wash. 386, 55 Pac. 429; Warner v. National Life Assn. 100 Mich. 157, 58 N. W. 667; Banholzer v. New York L. Ins. Co. 74 Minn. 387, 77 N. W. 295, 78 N. W. 244; Nall v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc. (Tenn. Ch.) 54 S. W. 109; Fidelity Mut. Life Assn. v. Picklin, 74 Md. 172, 21 Atl. 680, 23 Atl. 197; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Frommhold, 75 Ill. App. 43; Seiders v. Merchants' Life Assn. (Tex.) 54 S. W. 753, Reversing (Tex. Civ. App.) 51 S. W. 547; Linn v. New York L. Ins. Co. 78 Mo. App. 192; American Credit Indemnity Co. v. Carrollton Furniture Mfg. Co. 95 Fed. Rep. 111, 36 C. C. A. 178 U. S.

671; Rorer, Interstate Law, pp. 110, 111; Wharton, Confl. Laws, § 427.

Parties to an interstate contract may contract in good faith for the law of the state of either, and the law thus agreed upon will be enforced in the other state as the law of the contract, although the domestic law of such state, which, but for such agreement, would have been the law of the contract, may be incapable of waiver. This is clearly illustrated in the case of usury laws in interstate contracts.

Freeland v. Heron, 7 Cranch, 147, 3 L. ed. 297; Andrews v. Pond, 13 Pet. 65, 10 L. ed. 61; Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. 298, 17 L. ed. 540; Junction R. Co. v. Bank of Ashland, 12 Wall. 226, 20 L. ed. 385; Story, Confl. Laws, § 304, a, b; McAllister v. Smith, 17 Ill. 328, 65 Am. Dec. 651; Smith v. Muncie Nat. Bank, 29 Ind. 158; 2 Kent, Com. 459; Smith v. Parsons, 55 Minn. 521, 57 N. W. 311; Hubble v. Morristown Land & Improv. Co. 95 Tenn. 585, 32 S. W. 965; Dygert v. Vermont Loan & T. Co. 94 Fed. Rep. 913, 37 C. C. A. 389; 2 Parsons, Contr. 95; United States Sav. & Loan Co. v. Shain, 8 N. D. 136, 77 N. W. 1006; Bank of Louisville v. Young, 37 Mo. 407; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Simons, 52 Mo. App. 357; Hysinger v. Supreme Lodge, K. & L. of H. 42 Mo. App. 627.

This analogy of cases involving usury laws in interstate contracts was applied to an interstate mutual life insurance contract in Seiders v. Merchants' Life Assn. (Tex.) 54 S. W. 753.

The selection of the law of New York as the applicatory law of the interstate contract, evidenced by the policy in suit, was reasonable and in furtherance of, and indeed necessitated by, the purposes of the contract, and was in no wise an attempted evasion of the laws of Missouri.

Wharton, Confl. Laws, 465; 2 May, Ins. § 568; Smith v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 336; Relfe v. Rundle, 103 U. S. 222, sub nom. Life Assn. of America v. Rundle, 26 L. ed. 337; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 31, 23 L. ed. 791.

The selection of the New York law as the applicatory law of the contract was necessitated by the nature of the contract, and emphasized by the plan of insurance embodied therein, whereunder the other members of the tontine class acquired interests therein in consideration of the contingent interest enjoyed by the insured during his life in the policy contracts of his associates in the same class; and defendant in error, as his representative, is therefore now estopped from asserting any other or different claim from that fixed under the law thus selected.

Century Dict. title Tontine; Bogardus v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 N. Y. 329, 4 N. E. 522.

As the selection of the New York law was necessary to the contract made by the parties,—that is, to the tontine plan of insurance duly selected and adopted,—it follows that, even if there had been no express reference to the New York law, the parties would be presumed to have contracted with reference to that law.

4 Phillimore, International Law, 469; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Wharton, Conf. Laws, § 507; Gibson v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 77 Fed. Rep. 561.

The selection of the New York law as the applicatory law of the contract, being thus in furtherance of, and necessitated by, the contract and the plan of insurance embodied therein, was in no wise in violation of Missouri law, or prejudicial to the interests of the state.

Mo. Sess. Acts 1895, p. 97; Kerwin v. Doran, 29 Mo. App. 397.

Conceding that plaintiff in error, as a life insurance company of New York, was doing business in Missouri through the comity of the state, this did not disable the parties to this interstate contract from contracting in good faith, under the foregoing rules of universal law, in furtherance of the purposes of their contract, as to the applicatory law thereof. This admission by comity did not make plaintiff in error a domestic corporation, and its contracts with the citizens of Missouri are interstate contracts, governed by the foregoing rules of universal law.

Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1137, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Santa Clara County v. Southern P. R. Co. 118 U. S. 396, 30 L. ed. 118, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1132; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Fields (Tex. Civ. App.) 26 S. W. 280; Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Louisville Trust Co. 174 U. S. 552, 43 L. ed. 1081, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 817.

The right of choice of the applicatory law, subject to the foregoing qualifications is inherent in the conception of an interstate contract; and the statute of Missouri, as construed by the supreme court of that state, deprives the parties to an interstate mutual life insurance contract of this essential element of the right of interstate contract.

Dacey, Conf. Laws, p. 570; Hubble v. Morristown Land & Improv. Co. 95 Tenn. 585, 32 S. W. 965; Wayman v. Southard, 10 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 253; Horton v. New York L. Ins. Co. 151 Mo. 604, 52 S. W. 356.

The statute of Missouri, as construed by the supreme court, not only denies to the contracting parties in making an interstate contract the right of choice of the applicatory law, but makes a new contract for the parties, which they would not have made, and contrary to their intent.

Ogden v. Saunders, 12 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 621; Keating v. Kansas, 84 Mo. 415; Ashbrook v. Dale, 27 Mo. App. 649; State use of Wolf v. Berning, 74 Mo. 87; Reed v. Painter, 129 Mo. 680, 31 S. W. 919; Straube v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 123 Cal. 677, 56 Pac. 546.

The selection in good faith of the applicatory law is an essential incident to the right of interstate contract, and the Missouri statute, construed by the supreme court as denying this liberty of contract in this essential incident of interstate contract, and making a new contract for the parties, violative of their intent, is violative of the constitutional guaranty of liberty of contract in the 14th Amendment which includes the right thus denied, as essential to the right of interstate contract.

Algeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 585, 41 L. ed. 834, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 39 L. ed. 657, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 586; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789, 22 S. W. 350; State v. Julow, 129 Mo. 163, 29 L. R. A. 257, 31 S. W. 781; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869, 7 N. E. 631; Fraser v. People use of School Fund, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492, 31 N. E. 395; Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 17 L. R. A. 853, 32 N. E. 364; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 340, 35 N. E. 62; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79, 40 N. E. 454; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325, 28 N. E. 1126; Ex parte Kubaek, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 482, 24 Pac. 737; Johnson v. Goodyear Min. Co. (Cal.) 47 L. R. A. 338, 59 Pac. 304; Godcharles v. Wigman, 113 Pa. 431, 6 Atl. 351; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 17 N. E. 343; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, 10 S. E. 285; Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702, 59 N. W. 362; State v. Seougal, 3 S. D. 55, 15 L. R. A. 477, 51 N. W. 858; Harding v. People, 160 Ill. 459, 32 L. R. A. 445, 43 N. E. 624.

There is no judicial precedent sustaining the contention of defendant in error.

Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 29 L. ed. 934, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 837; Maier v. Fidelity Mut. Life Asso. 47 U. S. App. 322, 78 Fed. Rep. 566, 24 C. C. A. 239; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Seiders v. Merchants' Life Asso. (Tex.) 54 S. W. 753.

The Missouri statute, as construed by the supreme court of that state, denying the right to select in good faith the applicatory law of a contract of a mutual interstate life insurance, and making a new official contract violative of the intent of the parties, thus essentially denying the right to make interstate contracts of life insurance,—was in effect an attempted regulation of commerce between the states.

Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. 573, sub nom. Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Oliver, 19 L. ed. 1031; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. ed. 136, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 96; Story, Conf. Laws, § 242; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 39 L. ed. 1092, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 900.

The assertion of the constitutional protection of the right of interstate contract in mutual life insurance, and of the right of choice therein, in good faith, of the proper law of such contract under the rules of universal law, in no wise impairs the just authority of the state in the exercise of its legitimate police power, or in its control over foreign corporations doing business, through comity, in the state.

Mr. William B. C. Brown argued the cause and, with Messrs. James H. Cravens and J. V. C. Karnes, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The contract is a Missouri contract.

Giddings v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 102 U. S. 108, 26 L. ed. 92; Rae v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 690, 9 C. C. A. 215; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Elliott, 7 Sawy. 17, 5 Fed. Rep. 225; Pomeroy v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 40 Ill. 400; Great Western Ins. Co. v. Thwing, 111 Mass. 109; Wood, Fire Ins. 189, note 2; Hardie v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 26 La. Ann. 242; St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Kennedy, 6 Bush, 450; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Hiatt, 19 U. S. App. 173, 58 Fed. Rep. 541, 7 C. C. A. 359; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, sub nom. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Pettus, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Berry v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 440; Price v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 48 Mo. App. 281; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Robison, 54 Fed. Rep. 580; Kendall v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 10 U. S. App. 256, 51 Fed. Rep. 689, 2 C. C. A. 459; Weinfeld v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assn. 53 Fed. Rep. 208; Daggs v. Orient Ins. Co. 136 Mo. 392, 35 L. R. A. 227, 38 S. W. 85; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Knights' Templar & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Berry, 4 U. S. App. 353, 50 Fed. Rep. 511, 1 C. C. A. 561.

A foreign insurance company cannot withdraw itself from the operation of the statutes of a state in which it does business, by the insertion of clauses in its policies.

Wall v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 32 Fed. Rep. 273; Fletcher v. New York L. Ins. Co. 4 McCrary, 440, 13 Fed. Rep. 526.

The policy in suit was delivered in Missouri after the passage of the Missouri non-forfeiture law, and its provisions are to be treated as incorporated in the policy.

Missouri Non-Forfeiture Law (Rev. Stat. 1879, §§ 5983-5986); White v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 4 Dill. 182, Fed. Cas. No. 17,545; Rae v. National L. Ins. Co. 20 U. S. App. 410, 60 Fed. Rep. 692, 9 C. C. A. 215; Havens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 123 Mo. 403, 26 L. R. A. 107, 27 S. W. 718; Central Nat. Bank v. Hume, 128 U. S. 195, 32 L. ed. 370, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 41; Christian v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 143 Mo. 460, 45 S. W. 263; Daggs v. Orient Ins. Co. 136 Mo. 382, 35 L. R. A. 227, 38 S. W. 85; Reed v. Painter, 129 Mo. 680, 31 S. W. 919; Reilly v. Franklin Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 449, 28 Am. Rep. 552; Queen Ins. Co. v. Leslie, 47 Ohio St. 409, 9 L. R. A. 45, 24 N. E. 1072; Carter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 110 N. Y. 15, 17 N. E. 396; Phelan v. 178 U. S.

Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 113 N. Y. 147, 20 N. E. 827; Baxter v. Brooklyn L. Ins. Co. 119 N. Y. 450, 7 L. R. A. 293, 23 N. E. 1048; McDougall v. Provident Sav. L. Assur. Soc. 135 N. Y. 551, 32 N. E. 251.

The statute cannot be upset by direct waiver.

Wall v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 32 Fed. Rep. 273, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Price v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 48 Mo. App. 294.

Resting, as they do, upon public policy, these statutes cannot be abrogated by the device of indirection.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Russell, 40 U. S. App. 530, 77 Fed. Rep. 94, 23 C. C. A. 43; National Union v. Marlow, 40 U. S. App. 95, 74 Fed. Rep. 775, 21 C. C. A. 89; Price v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 48 Mo. App. 286; Wall v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 32 Fed. Rep. 273; S. C. 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822; Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. v. Robison, 54 Fed. Rep. 580; Berry v. Knights Templars' & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 441; Keller v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 58 Mo. App. 561; Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822.

When the policy of the state in which a foreign corporation is doing business does not forbid, such corporation may make the law of the state of its creation the applicable law.

Equitable L. Assur. Soc. v. Nixon, 48 U. S. App. 482, 81 Fed. Rep. 796, 26 C. C. A. 620; Penn Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank & T. Co. 37 U. S. App. 692, 72 Fed. Rep. 413, 19 C. C. A. 286, 38 L. R. A. 33; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Hill, 97 Fed. Rep. 263, 38 C. C. A. 159.

Where the policy of the state in which a foreign insurance corporation is doing business subjects the contracts of such corporation to the control of a statute, such corporation cannot withdraw its contracts then made, from the control of such statute, by providing in such contracts that such contracts shall be controlled by the laws of a different state.

New York L. Ins. Co. v. Russell, 40 U. S. App. 530, 77 Fed. Rep. 94, 23 C. C. A. 43; Price v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 48 Mo. App. 286; National Union v. Marlow, 40 U. S. App. 95, 74 Fed. Rep. 775, 21 C. C. A. 89; Wall v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc. 32 Fed. Rep. 273; S. C. 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822.

A corporation is not a citizen within the meaning of the provision, and hence has not "privileges and immunities" secured to citizens against state legislation.

Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 586, 10 L. ed. 306; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 24, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 737.

Consequently, the right of a state to prescribe conditions upon which foreign corporations, not agencies of the general government and not engaged in interstate commerce, may be admitted to transact business within its borders, has been frequently asserted and uniformly sustained.

Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, and cases cited.

The business of life insurance is not commerce between the states, and hence cannot be carried on in a state by a foreign corporation without complying with all the conditions imposed by the legislation of that state.

Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. 566, sub nom. Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Oliver, 19 L. ed. 1029; Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727, 28 L. ed. 1137, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 739; Philadelphia Fire Asso. v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 342, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 172 U. S. 602, 43 L. ed. 569, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308.

[395] *Mr. Justice McKenna, after stating the case, delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in error presents its contentions in many forms, but they are all reducible to one, to wit, that the statute of Missouri has been decided to supersede the terms of the policy, and to be the rule and measure of the rights and obligations of the parties, notwithstanding the application for the policy declares "that the entire contract contained in the said policy and in this application, taken together, shall be construed and interpreted as a whole and in each of its parts and obligations, according to the laws of the state of New York, the place of the contract being expressly agreed to be the principal office of the said company, in the city of New York."

What, then, is the meaning of the Missouri statute, or, rather, what meaning did the supreme court declare it to have?

It declared that the statute did not have the meaning the trial court decided it to have. In other words, it declared that the policy did not come within the exception of the statute providing for paid-up insurance, in lieu of temporary insurance, which was one of the contentions of the plaintiff in error, and on account of which it had tendered the sum of $2,670, and sustaining which the trial court rendered its judgment.

With this part of the opinion, however, we have no concern. Our review is only invoked of that part of the opinion which decides that the Missouri statute is the law of the policy, and which annuls the provisions of the policy which contravene the statute. And even of this part our inquiry is limited. If we are bound by the interpretation of the statute we need not review the reasoning by which that interpretation was reached. And we think we are bound by it.

The court said, though more by inference than by direct expression, that the statute was a condition upon the right of insurance companies to do business in the state.

1122

This conclusion it fortified by the citation of cases, and said:

"Foreign insurance companies which do business in this state do so, not by right, but by grace, and must in so doing conform to its laws; they cannot avail themselves of its benefits without bearing its burdens; moreover, the state may prescribe conditions upon which it will permit foreign insurance companies to transact business within its borders or exclude them altogether, and in so doing violates no contractual rights of the company. State v. Stone, 118 Mo. 388, 25 L. R. A. 243, 24 S. W. 164; Daggs v. Orient Ins. Co. 136 Mo. 382, 35 L. R. A. 227, 38 S. W. 85; S. C. 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281."

And further:

"As the nonforfeiture clause in § 5983 does not come within the exceptions specified in § 5986, it would seem that the provision in the policy with respect to its forfeiture or lapse after being in force three full years, by the nonpayment of premiums, is void and of no effect, and that such statutory provision cannot be waived.

"It is well settled that the legislature of the state has the power to pass laws regulating and prescribing rules by which foreign insurance companies may do business in this state, and to prohibit them from doing so altogether if inclined. Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; State v. Stone, 118 Mo. 388, 25 L. R. A. 243, 24 S. W. 164; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207; Daggs v. Orient Ins. Co. 136 Mo. 382, 35 L. R. A. 227, 38 S. W. 85. This case has recently been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. [172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281.]

"It logically follows that in passing the sections of the statute quoted the legislature did not exceed the powers conferred upon it by the state Constitution, and that such legislation is not in conflict with any provision of the Constitution of the United States."

From the Missouri law as thus established, may the plaintiff in error claim exemption by virtue of the Constitution of the United States?

What the powers of a corporation are in relation to the state of its creation, what the powers of a corporation are in relation to a state where it is permitted to do business, was declared early in the existence of this court, and has been repeated many times since. What those powers are we took occasion to repeat in Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, decided at the present term. 177 U. S. 28, ante, 657, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 518.

*The case arose from a liberty of contract asserted by the Waters-Pierce Oil Company against certain statutes of the state of Texas prohibiting contracts in restraint of competition in trade. The statute was not only assailed because it took away the liberty of contract, but because it discriminated between persons and classes of persons. The latter ground we declined to consider, because it did not arise on the record. Of the former we said:

178 U. S.

"The plaintiff in error is a foreign corporation, and what right of contracting has it in the state of Texas? This is the only inquiry, and it cannot find an answer in the rights of natural persons. It can only find an answer in the rights of corporations and the power of the state over them. What those rights are and what that power is has often been declared by this court.

"A corporation is the creature of the law, and none of its powers are original. They are precisely what the incorporating act has made them, and can only be exerted in the manner which that act authorizes. In other words, the state prescribes the purposes of a corporation and the means of executing those purposes. Purposes and means are within the state's control. This is true as to domestic corporations. It has even a broader application to foreign corporations."

And as the state court had held that the statute was a condition imposed upon the oil company doing business within the state, we said of the statute that, "whatever its limitations were upon the power of contracting, whatever its discriminations were, they became conditions of the permit and were accepted with it."

We stated the exceptions of the rule to be "only cases where a corporation created by one state rests its right to enter another and engage in business therein upon the Federal nature of its business."

Is the plaintiff in error within the exception? If not, the pending controversy must be determined against it.

It is difficult to give counsel's contentions briefly and at the same time clearly, nor are we sure that we can distinguish by precise statement the arguments directed to the [398] invalidity of *the statute of Missouri as an unconstitutional interference with the contractual liberty of the plaintiff in error, from the arguments which assail the statute as an attempted regulation of commerce between the states. This, however, not on account of any want of clearness in counsel's argument, but on account of the many ways in which they have presented and illustrated the argument, and which cannot be noticed in detail without making this opinion too long. We realize the propositions are not the same and should not be confused, though made somewhat dependent upon a common reasoning.

(1) A policy of mutual life insurance, it is contended, is an interstate contract, and the parties may choose its "applicatory law." Instances under the law of usury, instances under private international law, are cited as examples of authority. But if such cases apply at all, they necessarily have limitation in the policy of the state. This is not denied, but it is contended that contracting for New York law to the exclusion of Missouri law was "in no wise prejudicial to the interests of the state of Missouri or violative of its public policy."

But the interests of the state must be deemed to be expressed in its laws. The public policy of the state must be deemed to be authoritatively declared by its courts. Their evidence we cannot oppose by speculations or views of our own. Nor can such interests and policy be changed by the contract of parties. Against them no intention will be inferred or be permitted to be enforced.

In passing on the statute in controversy we said, by Mr. Justice Gray, in Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Clements, 140 U. S. 226, 35 L. ed. 497, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 822:

"The manifest object of this statute, as of many statutes regulating the form of policies of insurance on lives or against fires, is to prevent insurance companies from inserting in their policies conditions of forfeiture or restriction, except so far as the statute permits. The statute is not directory only, or subject to be set aside by the company with the consent of the assured; but it is mandatory, and controls the nature and terms of the contract into which the company may induce the assured to enter. This clearly appears from the unequivocal words of command *and of prohibition above quoted, by [399] which, in § 5983, 'no policy of insurance' issued by any life insurance company authorized to do business in this state 'shall, after the payment of two full annual premiums, be forfeited or become void by reason of the nonpayment of premium thereon; but it shall be subject to the following rules of commutation;' and in § 5985, that if the assured dies within the term of temporary insurance, as determined in the former section, 'the company shall be bound to pay the amount of the policy,' 'anything in the policy to the contrary notwithstanding.'"

And after stating the cases in which the terms of the policy are permitted to differ from the plan of the statute, it was further said:

"It follows that the insertion in the policy of a provision for a different rule of commutation from that prescribed by the statute, in case of default of payment of premium after three premiums have been paid, as well as the insertion in the application of a clause by which the beneficiary purports to 'waive and relinquish all right or claim to any other surrender value than that so provided, whether required by a statute of any state or not,' is an ineffectual attempt to evade and nullify the clear words of the statute."

In Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281, the insurance company contended it had the constitutional right to limit by contract its liability to actual damages caused by fire against the provision of the statute which made, in case of total loss, the amount for which the property was insured the measure of damages. We sustained the statute independently of the ground that it was a condition of the permission of the company to do business in the state. We sustained it on the ground of the clear right of the state to pass it, and to accomplish its purpose by limiting the right of the insurer and insured to contract in opposition to its provisions.

Further comment on this head may not be necessary, and we only continue the discussion in deference to the insistence of counsel upon the interstate character of the policy in suit. It is the basis of every division of their argument, and an immunity from control is based upon it for plaintiff in error, [400] which, it *seems to be conceded, the state can exert over corporations of its own creation.

An interstate character is claimed for the policy, as we understand the argument, because plaintiff in error is a New York corporation and the insured was a citizen of Missouri, and because, further, the plaintiff in error did business in other states and countries. Does not the argument prove too much? Does it depend upon the residence of plaintiff in error in New York? If so, it would seem that every contract between citizens of different states becomes at once an interstate contract, and may be removed from the control of the laws of the state at the choice of parties. If the argument does not depend on the residence of the plaintiff in error, but on the other elements, a Missouri insurance corporation can have the same relation to them as plaintiff in error, and can be, as much as plaintiff in error claims to be, "the administrator of a fund collected from the policy holders in different states and countries for their benefit"—the condition which plaintiff in error claims demonstrates the necessity of a uniform law to be stipulated by the parties exempt from the interference or the prohibition of the state where the insurance company is doing business. And yet plaintiff in error seems to concede that such power of stipulation Missouri corporations do not have, while it, a foreign corporation, and because it is a foreign corporation, does have.

After stating the necessity of a uniform law and an equal necessity that parties may stipulate for it, counsel for plaintiff in error say:

"It necessarily follows, therefore, that the insurance policy contracts of foreign insurance companies, as contracts of other foreign corporations, made by them with the citizens of a state, when doing business in that state through the comity of the state, are like the contracts of natural persons, subject to the limitations of their own charters, and the situs of such contracts is to be determined by the fundamental rules of 'universal law.'

"As will be hereafter seen, this status as foreign corporations does not mean that they were not subject to the laws of the state enacted in the full plenitude of the police power of the state. The state doubtless could limit their contractual power by prohibiting the making of certain contracts. [401] But unless the *foreign corporation is reincorporated as a domestic corporation, it remains a foreign corporation, and its contracts with citizens of the state are interstate contracts, subject to the right of choice of law thereof, which is inherent in the law of interstate contracts."

1124

A foreign corporation undoubtedly is not a domestic corporation, and the distinction must often be observed, but the deduction from it by plaintiff in error cannot be maintained.

The power of a state over foreign corporations is not less than the power of a state over domestic corporations. No case declares otherwise. We said in Orient Ins. Co. v. Daggs, 172 U. S. 557, 43 L. ed. 552, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281:

"That which a state may do with corporations of its own creation it may do with foreign corporations admitted into the state. This seems to be denied; if not generally, at least as to plaintiff in error. The denial is extreme and cannot be maintained. The power of a state to impose conditions upon foreign corporations is certainly as extensive as the power over domestic corporations, and is fully explained in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207, and need not be repeated."

2. Is the statute an attempted regulation of commerce between the states? In other words, is mutual life insurance commerce between the states?

That the business of fire insurance is not interstate commerce is decided in Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. 168, 19 L. ed. 357; Liverpool & L. L. & F. Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall. 566, 19 L. ed. 1029; Philadelphia Fire Asso. v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 30 L. ed. 342, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 108. That the business of marine insurance is not is decided in Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 610, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 207. In the latter case it is said that the contention that it is "involves an erroneous conception of what constitutes interstate commerce."

We omit the reasoning by which that is demonstrated, and will only repeat: "The business of insurance is not commerce. The contract of insurance is not an instrumentality of commerce. The making of such a contract is a mere incident of commercial intercourse, and in this respect there is no difference whatever between insurance against fire and insurance against 'the perils of the sea.'" And we add, or against the uncertainty of man's mortality.

Judgment affirmed.

*LOUISA BANHOLZER, Plff. in Err., [402]

NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 402-408.)

Error to state court—Federal question—denying credit to statute of other state.

NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts; necessity of Federal question—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Kipley v. Illinois ex rel. Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what constitutes a Federal question; when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

178 U. S.

A decision by a court of another state that the premium notice required by N. Y. Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 92, in order to justify a forfeiture for nonpayment, is not required on the maturity of a note given for an instalment of the premium, when this decision is based on the authority of a New York decision, does not deny full faith and credit to the statute so as to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error.

[No. 277.]

Argued and Submitted April 27, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota to review a decision affirming a judgment dismissing an action on a policy of life insurance. Dismissed.

See same case below, 74 Minn. 387, 77 N. W. 295, 78 N. W. 244.

Statement by Mr. Justice McKenna:

[402] *This action was brought in the district court of the second judicial district of the state of Minnesota upon a life insurance policy for $20,000, issued by defendant in error to William Banholzer, husband of the plaintiff in error, dated the 16th of September, 1895, payable upon the death of Banholzer to plaintiff in error, or to Banholzer himself on the 16th of September, 1915, if he should be living then.

The premiums were to be paid annually in advance on the 16th day of September of every year, until twenty full years' premiums should be paid.

The first premium was paid, which continued the policy in force until the 16th of September, 1896.

The policy contained the following provisions:

"If any premium is not paid on or before the day when due, this policy shall become void, and all payments previously made shall remain the property of the company, except as hereinafter provided.

"A grace of one month will be allowed in payment of subsequent premiums after this policy shall have been in force three months, subject to an interest charge at the rate of 5 per cent per annum for the number of days during which the premium remains due and unpaid. During the month of grace this policy remains in force, the unpaid premium, with interest, as above, remains an indebtedness to the company, which will be deducted from the amount payable under this policy if the death of the insured shall occur during the month."

[403] *On the 6th day of October, 1896, Banholzer paid the defendant the sum of $286 in cash, and executed and delivered to the defendant the following note:

St. Paul, Minn., 9-16, 1896.

Without grace, six months after date, I promise to pay to the order of the New York Life Insurance Company, eight hundred and sixty dollars, at Second National Bank, St. Paul, Minn. Value received, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

178 U. S.

This note is given in part payment of the premium due 9-16-'96, on the above policy, with the understanding that all claims to further insurance and all benefits whatever which full payment in cash of said premium would have secured, shall become immediately void and be forfeited to the New York Life Insurance Company, if this note is not paid at maturity, except as otherwise provided in the policy itself.

(Signed) William Banholzer.

The following receipt was given for the note:

St. Paul, Minn., 10-6-'96.

Note six months, after date 9-16-'96, due 3-16-'97, without grace, made by William Banholzer, payable at Second National Bank, St. Paul, Minn. Received from the owner of policy No. 692,465, $286 in cash, and his note at six months for $860, which continues said policy in force until the 16th day of September, 1897, at noon, in accordance with its terms and conditions, provided the above note is paid at maturity, and this receipt signed by J. A. Campbell, Cashier.

The note matured March 16, 1897, when it was surrendered to Banholzer, and he paid to the defendant $241.50 in cash, and executed and delivered to the defendant a new note in terms exactly similar to the first note, except that it was payable in sixty days from date. This note was never paid.

On May 28, 1897, Banholzer was taken sick, and died on July 5, 1897.

On June 18, 1897, Banholzer, through his attorney, sent a *draft to the defendant for [404] the sum of $690, being the amount due on the note of March 16 of that year, in tender of its payment. The defendant returned the draft, writing by its comptroller that "as policy No. 692,465—Banholzer—stands lapsed on the books of the company for nonpayment of the note described above, we return herewith the draft forwarded in your letter of above date. We shall thank you for an acknowledgment of this inclosure. When writing please refer to this letter by file number."

By the application for the policy the latter was to be construed according to the laws of New York. The statute which is claimed to be applicable is inserted in the margin.†

†No life insurance corporation doing business in this state shall declare forfeited or lapsed any policy hereafter issued or renewed, and not issued upon the payment of monthly or weekly premiums, or unless the same is a term insurance contract for one year or less, nor shall any such policy be forfeited or lapsed by reason of nonpayment when due of any premium, interest, or instalment or any portion thereof required by the terms of the policy to be paid, unless a written or printed notice stating the amount of such premium, interest, instalment or portion thereof due on such policy, the place where it should be paid, and the person to whom the same is payable, shall be duly addressed and mailed to the person whose life is insured, or the assignee of the policy. If notice of the assignment has been given to the corporation, at his or her last known postoffice address, postage

The notice required by the statute was duly given more than fifteen and less than forty-five days prior to September 16, 1896, but no notice was given prior to the maturity of the notes, except the ordinary bank notice.

[405] *The insurance company has not returned the note of March 16, 1897, and the record does not show that it has ever been demanded.

By stipulation of the parties, the printed record in Conway v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 140 N. Y. 79, 35 N. E. 520, together with briefs of counsel, were made part of the record, as though they had been introduced in evidence, and it was also stipulated that they should be certified to this court.

At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the case was dismissed. Subsequently a motion for a new trial was made and denied, and an appeal was then taken to the supreme court of the state, which affirmed the decision of the trial court. A reargument was granted, and the court adhered to its opinion. 74 Minn. 387, 77 N. W. 295, 78 N. W. 244.

The case is here on writ of error, and defendant in error moves to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, or to affirm the judgment.

Mr. Christopher Dillon O'Brien submitted the cause for plaintiff in error.

Mr. George C. Squires argued the cause and, with Mr. F. W. M. Cutcheon, filed a brief for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

[405] *Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

The case is here on a single question. The counsel for plaintiff in error says:

"While originally other questions were raised by the plaintiff they were determined adversely to her and her case made to stand or fall solely upon the interpretation of the New York statute, and the question now before this court is, Did the court below in the case at bar give to the statute such full faith and credit as is secured to it by the Constitution of the United States."

[406] That question, therefore, is made the ground of our jurisdiction. The defendant in error challenges its sufficiency, and *moves to dismiss because the supreme court of Minnesota did not deny the validity of the New York statute, but only construed it, and, even granting the construction was erroneous, faith and credit were not denied to the statute. Glenn v. Garth, 147 U. S. 360, 37 L. ed. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, and Lloyd v.

Matthews, 155 U. S. 222, 39 L. ed. 128, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 70, are cited.

Those cases sustain the distinction which defendant in error makes, and the deduction from it, and our inquiry will therefore be: Did the supreme court of the state of Minnesota deny the validity of the New York statute or only consider its operation and effect? The claim of the defendant in error is that each of the notes was an "instalment or portion of the premium," and that therefore the supreme court of Minnesota, in holding that the notice prescribed by § 92 was not necessary to be given prior to the maturity of the notes, denied full faith and credit to the statute.

We dispute the conclusion without passing on the premises. The ruling was a construction of the statute, not a denial of its validity, and that the court meant no more, and meant to follow, not oppose, the decisions of the state, is evident from its opinions.

The first opinion was put on the authority of Conway v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 140 N. Y. 79, 35 N. E. 420, on the assumption that its facts were not different from those of the case at bar. In the second opinion the construction of the New York statute was considered as res integra, and it was held that "the notice required by it was not applicable to the notes given by Banholzer for part of the September premium."

In the first opinion, the contention that the "premium notice" required by the statute applied to the note, which fell due March 16, 1897, and that the policy could not be forfeited without such notice, the learned justice who spoke for the court said:

"Even if the question was res nova, I am clearly of the opinion that, upon the facts, this statutory provision has no application to this note. But as my brethren do not agree with me in this, it would be useless for me to enter into any discussion of the reasons for my opinion. The parties mutually agreed *that this should be deemed a New York contract and construed according to the laws of that state. The decisions of the highest court of that state as to the construction of such a contract and of the statutes of New York must therefore be accepted as conclusive upon the parties. In Conway v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 140 N. Y. 79, 35 N. E. 420, upon a state of facts and under a statute which, in our opinion, are in no way distinguishable from those involved in the present case, the court of appeals held that the notice required by statute did not apply to the notes; that the company having served that notice before the premium became due, no further notice was required.

paid by the corporation or by an officer thereof or person appointed by it to collect such premium, at least fifteen and not more than forty-five days prior to the day when the same is payable.

The notice shall also state that unless such premium, interest, or instalment or portion thereof then due shall be paid to the corporation or to a duly appointed agent or person authorized to collect such premium, by or before the date it falls due, the policy and all payments thereon will become forfeited and void except as the right to a surrender value or paid-up policy, as in this chapter provided.

If the payment demanded by such notice shall be made within its time limited therefor, it shall be taken to be in full compliance with the requirements of the policy in respect to the time of such payment, and no such policy shall in any case be forfeited or declared forfeited or lapsed until the expiration or thirty days after the mailing of such notice. Laws 1892, chap. 690, § 92.

Counsel for the plaintiff do not claim that the facts of the two cases are in any respect distinguishable, but they seek to draw a distinction between the language of the statute considered in the Conway Case and the statute applicable to the present case. The statute under consideration in the former was Laws of N. Y. 1876, chap. 341, as amended by Laws 1877, chap. 321; the statute applicable to the present case is Laws of N. Y. 1892, chap. 690, § 92. This last act appears to be a compilation and revision of all the insurance laws of the state, and § 92 thereof is but an embodiment (with certain amendments) of the provisions of the act of 1876 as amended in 1877. We have compared the language of the two acts, and are unable to discover any difference between them that at all affects the question now under consideration.

"Even if the 'one month's grace' allowed by the policy for the payment of the premium was applicable to the notes (which I do not think is so), that fact would not aid the plaintiff, for the insured did not offer to pay the last note until thirty-three days after it matured."

In the second opinion the court said that it had overlooked that counsel had claimed the case to be distinguishable on the facts from the Conway Case; but on re-examining the Conway Case it further said that the question of notice might have been disposed of on the ground of want of power of the agent of the insurance company to accept a note—

[408] "But we are now equally well satisfied that in what the court said on the subject of notice in the last part of the opinion it intended to and did decide the question upon the assumption* that the company was bound by the agent's acceptance of a time note for the premium. This is made quite clear to our minds from an examination of the record and briefs in the case, copies of which have been furnished us by counsel for the defendant.

"While this shows the views of the court of appeals upon the construction of the statute, the doubt in our minds is whether, under the circumstances, it is a decision of the question which is binding on us. See Carroll v. Carroll, 16 How. 275-286 and 287, 14 L. ed. 936-941.

"We shall not decide that question, as we are satisfied that if the construction of the New York statute is to be considered as res integra the notice required by it was not applicable to the notes given by Banholzer for part of the September premium. The statute was no doubt enacted for the benefit of the insured, recognizing the fact that very often they were people who were neither experts nor systematic in business matters, and therefore liable to overlook or forget the due days of their premiums according to the terms of their policies, issued perhaps years before, laid away and seldom examined or referred to; and while courts are usually liberal in protecting the assured against forfeitures, this is always done in the interest of justice, and is no reason why any strained or forced construction should be placed upon this statute which would be unreasonable or operate oppressively upon the insurers, or which was not within the legislative intent."

The plaintiff in error, however, assails the conclusions of the court. It asserts the court erred in its construction of the Conway Case, and erred in its independent construction of the New York statute.

Granting, arguendo, the correctness of both assertions, the validity of the statute was not denied. Its validity and authority were declared and its meaning was first sought in a decision of the New York courts, and then confirmed by an independent care and construction.

We think, therefore, that the cases of Glenn v. Garth, 147 U. S. 360, 37 L. ed. 203, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 350, and Lloyd v. Matthews, 155 U. S. 222, 39 L. ed. 128, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 70, apply, and on their authority the action should be dismissed for want of jurisdiction.

And it is so ordered.

*JOSEPHINE DESERANT, Administratrix[409] of the Estates of Henri Deserant, Jules Deserant, and Henri Deserant, Jr., Plff. in Err.,

v.

CERILLOS COAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 409-421.)

Question for jury—as to mine explosion—erroneous instructions—duty as to ventilation of mine and keeping it clear of standing gas—effect of act of Congress.

1. The place of an explosion in a mine, and its cause, and what, if any, negligence the owner is guilty of, are questions for the jury, when the evidence offered requires their submission to the jury.
2. Instructions as to the duty of a mine owner with respect to ventilation of the mine and keeping it clear from standing gas are erroneous, when they are so inconsistent with other instructions that they tend to confusion and

NOTE.—As to the statutory duty for the protection and safety of workmen in mines—see Consolidated Coal & Min. Co. v. Floyd (Ohio) 25 L. R. A. 848, and note.

Statutory duty to ventilate and keep mine clear from gas.

Where an old mine has the statutory outlets, and is then worked further several hundred feet along the seams, it becomes a new mine, and an outlet for ventilation and escape is required by the Pennsylvania act of 1870. Com. v. Wilkesbarre Coal Co. 15 Mining Rep. 31, 29 Phila. Leg. Int. 213.

The word "mine," in Ill. Sess. Laws 1883, p. 114, providing for examination for fire damp, with safety lamp, applies to a place where the miners are working in a mine, although not actually mining coal at the time. Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones, 19 Ill. App. 365, Reversed in 127 Ill. 379, 8 N. E. 865, 20 N. E. 89.

The ventilation law of Pennsylvania of March 3, 1870, does not apply to an air shaft until a communication is formed between it and misapprehension, and when they make his duty relative instead of absolute, as required by the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, making the test what a reasonable person would do, instead of the command of the statute.

3. The duty of a mine owner as to ventilation of his mine and keeping it clear of standing gas is made imperative by the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, and the consequence of neglecting it cannot be excused because some workmen may disregard instructions.

[No. 269.]

Argued April 27, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico to review a decision affirming a judgment for defendant in an action for damages caused by the explosion of the mine. Reversed.

the mine, where such shaft is being constructed by an independent contractor, and the mine owner only supervises to see if it is according to contract. Welsh v. Lehigh & W. Coal Co. (Pa.) 3 Cent. Rep. 386.

Omission of a corporation operating a coal mine, to provide the means of ventilation and to adopt the precautions required by W. Va. Code 1891, p. 999, and Acts 1887, chap. 250, to keep the mine free of standing gas, is negligence which renders it liable to an employee for injury resulting from such omission of duty. Graham v. Newburg Orrel Coal & Coke Co. 38 W. Va. 273, 18 S. E. 584.

And the neglect of a mine owner, in the absence of any excuse, so to ventilate his mine "as to dilute, render harmless, and expel all noxious and poisonous gases in all working parts," as required by Iowa Code, § 2488, is negligence entitling an employee to recover for injuries caused thereby, although no penalties are provided for its violation. Mosgrove v. Zimbleman Coal Co. (Iowa) 81 N. W. 227.

So, a mining company wilfully neglecting to prevent accumulation of gas, as required by the Illinois act of July 1, 1887, is liable for injuries to an employee caused thereby. Muddy Valley Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Phillips, 39 Ill. App. 376.

And that the ventilation required by 35 & 36 Vict. chap. 73, would have cost an outlay of £200, will not excuse the agent unless he pointed out the alterations required, to the owners, and demanded the same. Hall v. Hopwood, 15 Mining Rep. 42, 49 L. J. M. C. N. S. 17, 41 L. T. N. S. 797.

Under 18 & 19 Vict. chap. 108, § 4, requiring ventilation constantly if a colliery "be worked," the suspension of actual work from Saturday to Monday will not suspend the requirements as to ventilation during that time. Knowles v. Dickinson, 2 El. & El. 705, 29 L. J. M. C. N. S. 135, 6 Jur. N. S. 678, 8 Week. Rep. 411.

And under 23 & 24 Vict. chap. 151, an act for the regulation and inspection of mines, so much of the mine must be kept ventilated as to render the working places safe. Brough v. Homfray, 15 Mining Rep. 6, L. R. 3 Q. B. 771, 37 L. J. M. C. N. S. 177, 16 Week. Rep. 1123, 9 Best & S. 492.

The duty imposed on operators of coal mines by Wash. Laws 1891, chap. 81, to take the measures therein prescribed to secure proper ventilation, is a positive one, and cannot be delegated to a subordinate so as to relieve the

See same case below, 9 N. M. 495, 55 Pac. 290.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Neill B. Field argued the cause, and, with Mr. Frank W. Clancy, filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

Instruction No. 1 utterly ignores the existence of the statutory duty to keep the mine free from standing gas, and, taken in connection with other instructions given at the request of the defendant, licensed the jury to substitute its judgment for that of Congress, and to decide that it would not be negligence on the part of the defendant to permit any quantity of standing gas to accumulate in the mine, provided it was marked with a fire mark.

Sommer v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 59 U. S. App. 519, 89 Fed. Rep. 56, 32 C. C. A. 156.

The master owed to the deceased the positive duty to make reasonable efforts to supply a safe mine, with proper appliances for master from liability for injuries to another servant caused by its omission. Sommer v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 59 U. S. App. 519, 89 Fed. Rep. 54, 32 C. C. A. 156.

But a mining company providing a competent boss, as required by Pa. act March 3, 1870, is not liable for the death of a miner from an explosion caused by the negligence of such boss in failing to ventilate, as he was a fellow servant. Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374.

And the same was held under Pa. act April 28, 1877. Redstone Coke Co. v. Roby, 115 Pa. 364, 8 Atl. 593.

Under Pa. act 1870, for ventilation of mines, where a competent superintendent and proper machinery were provided, the company was held not liable for the death of one boss through the act of another boss in slowing down the ventilator, causing fire damp, as this was the act of a fellow servant. Lehigh Valley Coal Co. v. Jones, 86 Pa. 432.

An employee in a mine has the right to assume, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, that his employer has complied with the provisions of Iowa Code, § 2488, requiring sufficient ventilation to render harmless all noxious gases, or to expel them from the mine. Mosgrove v. Zimbleman Coal Co. (Iowa) 81 N. W. 227.

But the failure of an employee to exercise ordinary care will preclude him from maintaining the cause of action given by Ohio Rev. Stat. § 301, for any direct damage occasioned by any violation of, or wilful failure to comply with, the statute making it the duty of the operator of a coal mine to keep the same free from standing gas, and requiring working places to be carefully examined every morning, with a safety lamp, before the workmen are allowed to enter. Krause v. Morgan, 53 Ohio St. 26, 40 N. E. 886.

Where the men had worked at the place some two or three hours with an open lamp before an accident occurred, this showed that the failure to examine the place with a safety lamp in the morning, as required by statute, in no manner contributed to the accident. Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones, 127 Ill. 379, 8 N. E. 865, 20 N. E. 89.

Workmen stopping up an airway of a mine for their employer, who is contesting the right of property with another, were not guilty of felony under 7 & 8 Geo. IV. chap. 30, if they did not know that the act of their master was malicious. Reg. v. James, 8 Car. & P. 131.

ventilation, in which to do the work of the master, and to make like efforts to keep the mine and the ventilating appliances in a safe condition.

Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 218, 25 L. ed. 615; Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 652, 29 L. ed. 760, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Mather v. Rillston, 156 U. S. 398, 39 L. ed. 470, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464; Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Ingraham, 36 U. S. App. 1, 70 Fed. Rep. 219, 17 C. C. A. 71; Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Berberich, 94 Fed. Rep. 333, 36 C. C. A. 364; Gowen v. Bush, 40 U. S. App. 349, 76 Fed. Rep. 349, 22 C. C. A. 196; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Barrett, 166 U. S. 617, 41 L. ed. 1136, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 707.

Where there is combined negligence of employer and fellow servant, the employer is liable for injury inflicted in the course of the employment.

Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 701, 27 L. ed. 267, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493.

If there are increased perils in the business by reason of defective appliances, or otherwise, known to the master, or for which he is responsible, and unknown to the servant, if the latter is injured thereby and the latter is free from negligence, the master is liable.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 672, 42 L. ed. 1191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777; Behn v. Armour, 58 Wis. 1, 15 N. W. 806; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 701, 27 L. ed. 267, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493; Cerillos Coal R. Co. v. Deserant, 9 N. M. 49, 49 Pac. 810; The Joseph B. Thomas, 81 Fed. Rep. 578; Monsarrat v. Keegan, 58 U. S. App. 377, 87 Fed. Rep. 849, 31 C. C. A. 255; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. O'Leary, 93 Fed. Rep. 741.

Instruction No. 11 is clearly erroneous because it was based on a supposed or conjectural state of facts of which there is no evidence.

Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Baring, 20 Wall. 161, 22 L. ed. 251; Michigan Insurance Bank v. Eldred, 9 Wall. 553, 19 L. ed. 766; Jones v. Van Benthuyssen, 103 U. S. 87, 26 L. ed. 477; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Spencer, 36 U. S. App. 229, 71 Fed. Rep. 93, 18 C. C. A. 114; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542; Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 36 U. S. App. 401, 71 Fed. Rep. 263, 18 C. C. A. 107; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Blessing, 35 U. S. App. 208, 67 Fed. Rep. 281, 14 C. C. A. 394; Boston & M. R. Co. v. McDuffey, 51 U. S. App. 111, 79 Fed. Rep. 942, 25 C. C. A. 247; Chicago v. Robbins, 2 Black, 429, 17 L. ed. 304; Keyser v. Hitz, 133 U. S. 147, 33 L. ed. 536, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 290; Blackburn v. Crawford, 3 Wall. 194, 18 L. ed. 194; Northern P. R. Co. v. Paine, 119 U. S. 561, 30 L. ed. 513, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323.

Mr. Robert Dunlap argued the cause and, with Messrs. E. D. Kenna and R. E. Twitchell, filed a brief for defendant in error:

It is not proper to single out any one clause or paragraph, but the charge should be examined as a whole, and one instruction or paragraph must be viewed in the light of others given.

Congress & E. Spring Co. v. Edgar, 99 U. S. 659, 25 L. ed. 491.

Instruction No. 1, set out in the 14th assignment, was proper in itself and is in accordance with the well-settled law. It is also to be read in connection with the other instructions given. It is correct as a general proposition.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wagner, 33 Kan. 660, 7 Pac. 204; Hayden v. Smithville Mfg. Co. 29 Conn. 548.

The 11th instruction is proper under plaintiff's theory and contentions. Examined in connection with the undisputed facts, it could not be held erroneous. It was established that gas was likely to accumulate in different places, and that the precaution adopted against danger was the fire signals, and this was well known to the deceased, and was the usual precaution.

Berns v. Gaston Gas Coal Co. 27 W. Va. 285, 55 Am. Rep. 304; Perigo v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 276, 3 N. W. 43; Wells v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 56 Iowa, 520, 9 N. W. 364; Assop v. Yates, 2 Hurlst. & N. 768.

*Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the[409] opinion of the court:

This action is consolidated of three, brought by plaintiff in error, who was plaintiff in the court below and may be so called *here, as administratrix of the estates re-[410] spectively of her husband, Henri Deserant, and her sons Jules Deserant and Henri Deserant, Jr.

The actions were for damages for the deaths of her said intestates by an explosion in a mine owned by defendant, and which explosion was alleged to have been caused by the negligence of plaintiff in error. The action was based upon a statute of New Mexico, which gives an action for damages to the personal representatives of a person whose death is caused by the wrongful act of another, if the person causing the injury would have been liable to an action for damages if death had not ensued.

There were two trials, both by jury, in the district court of the territory. The first resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff. They were reversed by the supreme court of the territory. 9 N. M. 49, 49 Pac. 807. The second resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant. They were affirmed by the supreme court of the territory. 9 N. M. 495, 55 Pac. 290. This writ of error was then sued out.

There is no dispute about the explosion or that the deaths of plaintiff's intestates were caused by it. The dispute is as to the cause of the explosion and the responsibility of defendant for it.

The evidence presents long and elaborate descriptions of the mine, with its "slopes, air shafts, entries, cross cuts, air courses, conduits, and break throughs."

We do not think that it is necessary to repeat the descriptions. There is no controversy about them. The issue between the parties is as to the amount and sufficiency of ventilation, its obstruction, the accumulation of explosive gases, their negligent ignition, whether by a fellow servant of plaintiff's intestates or by a representative of the defendant, making it liable, or whether the explosion was of powder accidentally ignited.

The method of ventilation was by machinery causing a circulation of air through the mine and up to the face of the working places, for the purpose of rendering harmless or expelling the noxious gases.

It is contended by plaintiff that the machinery was insufficient for that purpose, the employees of the defendant inefficient [411] *and negligent, and that the air shafts had been permitted to become obstructed, whereby gases accumulated, and stood in the mine and exploded on the 27th of February, 1895, causing the deaths of plaintiff's intestates.

The means of ventilation was a fan at the entrance of the mine, which by its revolutions exhausted the air in the mine, and outside air rushed in and through the passages of the mine, and was directed where desired by means of curtains called "brattices."

It is claimed there were defects in those appliances, whereby there were leaks in the circulation of the air, and, besides that, water had been allowed to accumulate in the fourth left air course, which so interrupted the quantity of air which passed into room 8 of the fourth left entry that the air did not go to the face of that room, but feebly passed around the brattice at a distance of 12 or 14 feet, thus permitting the accumulation of a dangerous body of gas, until it passed beyond the danger signals, which may have been put into the room by the fire boss, and that Donahoe, the day foreman, and Flick and Kelly, all miners, entered the room on the day of the explosion, with naked lamps, and ignited the gas before they saw or had an opportunity to see the danger signal. The employees of the mine consisted of miners, rope riders, mule drivers, track men, and "company men." The latter were paid by the day, and worked under the order and immediate supervision of the foreman or pit boss, while the miners were paid by the ton, and were subject to general supervision by the foreman. Besides these, there was a mine superintendent, day foreman or pit boss, night foreman or pit boss, day fire boss and night boss. There was also a mine inspector, who lived in Kansas, and periodically visited the mine and other mines owned by defendant.

It is claimed that the mine foreman and fire bosses knew of the gas in room 8, and that the deceased miners did not know it, nor have means of knowing it.

The mine was inspected day and night respectively by the day and night fire bosses, and it was the duty of each to advise each miner as he came in of the condition of his working place, and no miner was permitted into the mine to work until so advised.

[412] *The gas is explosive when mixed with certain proportions of atmospheric air. It is lighter than air, and therefore dispelled by a current of air, and this was the means necessary to be employed to disperse the gas. The gas when it explodes moves against the opposing current of air. In other words, expends its force in the direction from which the air comes.
1130

On Sunday night Kilpatrick, the foreman, discovered enough gas in room 8 to crack his safety lamp, but he did not regard it as sufficient to mark the place dangerous.

On Monday morning (the explosion was on Wednesday) the day fire boss found gas in room 8, and put a danger mark above the last cross cut, but did not go back to the room again, although he knew that it was one of the worst rooms in the mine for gas. He testified that he considered the danger mark sufficient.

On Monday night before the explosion, Ray, the night fire boss, was at the face of room 8, and found no fire marks, but found a little gas, and put fire marks in the room. He inspected the mine on Tuesday, but did not visit room 8.

Donahoe, mine foreman, Flick and Kelly, two "company men," were killed by the explosion, and their bodies were found in or near room 8.

The conclusion which plaintiff claimed to be established by the evidence is, that Flick and Kelly went with Donahoe, under whose direction they worked, into room 8 with naked lights, and that an explosion was caused by the gas in the room coming in contact with the lights.

The defendant, on the contrary, contended that the "explosion was of some kind or other at or in the neighborhood of room 16 in the fourth left entry of the mine, where the deceased were working as coal miners." It is claimed that the cause of the explosion is altogether of conjecture and surmise, and that the greatest evidence or effect of explosion and fire appeared in the neighborhood of rooms 16 and 17, in the entry way thereabout, and that some powder cans were found exploded, and coal dust was found coked on some of the pillars on the back of a car, and a car loaded with coal was moved several feet off the track. It is hence conjectured that the explosion *was caused by some negligent or accidental ignition of powder which instantly set fire to the coal dust, which more or less impregnated the air and the entry ways, and of particles of gas which might be found in the hollows and crevices; so that death would be caused by concussion, or by the after damp caused by the explosion. Or it is conjectured again that the explosion might have been caused by some miner, while working, suddenly striking a seam or body of gas, which was ignited by his light, and thus ignited powder near at hand.

At the close of the testimony the plaintiff and the defendant asked for peremptory instructions for their respective sides, which was refused.

The assignments of error are based on exceptions to evidence and on exceptions to instructions.

In passing on the case the supreme court of the territory said that it was "unnecessary for us to consider the objections urged to the instructions given by the court below. In our opinion they were all in favor of the plaintiff, as the court should have granted the motion of the defendant, and instructed the jury to find the defendant not guilty."

In support of this conclusion it stated the theory of the plaintiff to be that the explosion was caused by an "accumulation of water previous to the explosion in a low place in the fourth left air course,—a sufficient quantity of pure air was not going to the face of the workings in the fourth left entry to remove and expel the noxious gases; that Kelly and Flick, who were company men, that is, men who were paid by the day and not according to what work they did, acting under instructions from Donahoe, the day pit-boss, went with him or by his direction into room 8 to remove a railroad track, carrying naked lights, and that such lights set fire to the gas which had accumulated there by reason of the insufficiency of air, and caused the explosion. This theory is purely speculative, and is not supported by the evidence. It cannot be positively proved what was the initial point of the explosion or what caused it. In fact, the evidence goes to show, from measurements taken at various times by the superintendent of the mine, the pit-boss, and the United States inspector, that sufficient [414] air was going through the fourth air course and mine to make it safe. Indeed, the evidence goes further, and shows that after the explosion and on the day of the investigation by the coroner's jury, and while much of the débris caused by the explosion was still in the fourth left air course, a sufficiency of air was passing through it over the water and débris through the low place, which is claimed by the plaintiff to have been obstructed by water, for the proper ventilation of the entry and its rooms and the expulsion of all harmful gases, and for the men and animals working there at the time of the explosion. There is no evidence that the condition of the fourth left air course was the direct or proximate cause of the explosion, and for the plaintiff to recover this must be proved by a preponderance of evidence."

The court also held that Flick, Kelly, and Donahoe were fellow servants of the deceased; therefore, if the contention of the plaintiff was true, that the gas was ignited by their negligence, the defendant had no cause of action.

We have read the evidence, and we cannot concur with the supreme court of the territory that the trial court "should have granted the motion of the defendant, and instructed the jury to find the defendant not guilty." It was for the jury to determine from the evidence the place of the explosion and its cause, and what, if any, negligence the defendant was guilty of, and the evidence offered on the issues required the submission of those questions to the jury.

The effect of the act of Flick, Kelly, and Donahoe we will consider hereafter.

The trial court, in giving instructions to the jury, read section 6 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1891, which is as follows:

"By section 6 of an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1891 [26 Stat. at L. 1104, chap. 564], it is provided as follows:

"Sec. 6. That the owners or managers of every coal mine at a depth of one hundred feet or more shall provide an adequate amount of ventilation of not less than fifty-five cubic feet of pure air per second, or thirty-three hundred cubic feet per minute, for every fifty men at work in said mine and in like proportion for a greater number, which air shall by proper *appliances or machinery be forced through such mine to the face of each and every working place so as to dilute and render harmless and expel therefrom the noxious or poisonous gases, and all workings shall be kept clear of standing gas."

The court then instructed the jury as follows:

"If, therefore, the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant, the Cerillos Coal Railroad Company, was operating a coal mine at a depth of more than 100 feet below the surface of the earth, and that the plaintiff's intestates respectively were employed by the defendant in the operation of said coal mine, it was, by reason of said act of Congress, the duty of the defendant to provide an adequate amount of ventilation of not less than 35 cubic feet of pure air per second and 3,300 cubic feet per minute for every fifty men who worked in said mine, which air should have been, by proper appliances or machinery, forced through such mine to the face of each and every working place therein, so as to dilute and render harmless and expel therefrom the noxious or poisonous gases, and all workings of such mine should have been kept clear of standing gas in dangerous quantities; and if the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant, the Cerillos Coal Railroad Company, failed or neglected to provide an adequate amount of ventilation so as to dilute and render harmless and expel from the said mine the noxious poisonous gases which were generated therein, or to keep the working places of said mine clear of standing gas, such failure on the part of the defendant may be considered by the jury as evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant.

"9. Negligence is defined to be the omission to do something which a reasonable man, guided by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs, would do, or the doing something which a prudent and reasonable man would not do. It must be determined in all cases by reference to the situation and knowledge of the parties and all the attending circumstances. If an occupation attended with danger can be prosecuted by proper precautions without fatal results, such precautions must be taken by the promoters of the pursuit *or employers of laborers therein. All [416] occupations producing articles or works of necessity, utility, or convenience may undoubtedly be carried on, and competent persons, familiar with the business and having sufficient skill therein, may properly be employed upon them, but in such cases where the occupation is attended with danger to life or limb, it is incumbent on the promoters thereof, and the employers or others thereon, to take all reasonable and needed precautions to secure safety to the persons engaged in their prosecution, and for any negligence in this respect from which injury follows to the persons engaged, such promoters and employers may be held responsible and mulcted to the extent of the injury inflicted, if any. Occupations, however important, which cannot be conducted without necessary danger to life, body, or limb, should not be prosecuted at all without reasonable precautions against such dangers afforded by science. The necessary danger attending them should operate as a prohibition of their pursuit without such safeguards. Indeed, it may be laid down as a legal principle that in all occupations attended with great and unusual danger there must be used all appliances readily attainable known to science for the prevention of accidents, and that a neglect to provide such readily attainable appliances, and to keep the same in fit and suitable condition, will be regarded as proof of culpable negligence.

"10. I charge you, gentlemen, that it is the duty of the master to use reasonable care and diligence to provide a reasonably safe place in which his servants shall perform their respective duties, and also to use reasonable care and diligence to provide reasonably safe appliances for the protection of his servants, and to use reasonable care and diligence to keep such appliances in a reasonably safe condition for the protection of his servants; and the master cannot, by the delegation of any part of his duty to an agent or servant, relieve himself of responsibility for injuries to his servants arising from the neglect of this duty. Any agent or servant of the master, appointed by him for the purpose of looking to the safety of such appliances without regard to the rank or station of such agent or servant, is the representative of the master for such purpose, and the negligence of any such agent or servant in such matters is, in contemplation of the law, the negligence of the master, and the master is liable for any damage occasioned thereby.

"11. Although you may believe from the evidence that the fellow servants of the deceased by their negligence contributed to the bringing about of the explosion in which deceased were killed, yet, if you also believe from the evidence that the negligence of defendant also contributed to the same result, you must find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, unless you believe from the evidence that plaintiff's intestates, or one of them, knew, or had means of knowledge, of such negligence of defendant, and, notwithstanding such knowledge or means of knowledge, continued to work in the mine of defendant.

"12. The law requires that the defendant shall keep the workings in its mine clear of standing gas, and if you believe from the evidence the defendant failed to keep the workings in its mine clear of standing gas, and that such failure contributed to the deaths of the deceased, then you are justified in believing defendant guilty of negligence, and you must find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, unless you believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's intestates or one of them knew of the existence of such gas and continued to work in the mine of defendant with such knowledge.

"13. If the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff's intestates knew or had reason to know that dangerous bodies of gas were permitted to accumulate in the open places of defendant's mine and to remain for a period of thirty-six hours or more, without any effort on the part of the agents and the servants of defendant to move the same, and that no precautions against the explosion of such gases were accustomed to be taken except to mark the open place where such gas might be with a danger mark, and plaintiff's intestates, notwithstanding such knowledge or means of knowledge, continued to work in said mine, the plaintiff's intestates thereby assumed the risk incident to such method, and cannot recover if their fellow servants ignited such gas by going over or disregarding such fire mark.

"14. If you believe from the evidence that [418] the explosion originated in room 8 of the fourth left entry of the mine in consequence of the accumulation in said room of a body of dangerous gas, merely guarded by a fire mark or danger signal for thirty-six or forty-eight hours before the explosion, and that plaintiff's intestates did not consent or agree to work in said mine with places dangerous because of gas merely guarded by fire marks or danger signals for thirty-six or forty-eight hours, then plaintiff is entitled to recover in each case, although you may also believe that said body of dangerous gas was ignited by the negligence of fellow servants of plaintiff's intestates."

The main charge of the court was not objected to. The objections were to certain instructions given at the request of the defendant.

They were as follows:

"1. The jury are instructed that what was required of the defendant in the conduct of its mining business, in caring for the miners employed by and engaged in working its mine, was the adoption and use of appliances and methods reasonably sufficient for the protection of the miners against any dangers attending the operation of its mine that were obvious or might with reasonable diligence have become known; and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is presumed that the defendant performed its entire duty towards the miners in that respect."

"6. Although the jury may believe from the evidence that gas of the quantity mentioned in the evidence had accumulated and was allowed to remain in room 8 for the time stated in the evidence, and believe from the evidence that the explosion testified to originated in room 8, and further believe from the evidence that signals of the kind described in the evidence warning against entry into said room were placed in such a manner as to be observed by the deceased Flick and Kelly, and the meaning and significance of such signal was understood by them, and such signal was known to be in use by the miners engaged in working in said mine, and that the use of such signal was understood by such miners to inform them of the presence of gas in dangerous quantity; then, if the jury believe from the evidence that such explosion was caused by Flick and Kelly [419] *entering said room with a naked light, the defendant is entitled to, and you should render, a verdict in its favor."

"10. The burden of showing negligence on the part of the defendant, that caused the death of the persons for which this action is brought, is upon the plaintiffs, and evidence has been introduced for the purpose of showing an obstruction of the air course through which that portion of the mine where the deceased persons worked was ventilated. The presumption is that the mine was properly and sufficiently supplied with air, unless the evidence offered establishes the contrary, and to do this the jury must find, not only a partial obstruction of the air course, but that the obstruction was of such a nature and to such an extent as to prevent the passage of the necessary quantity of air; and if, upon the whole testimony, the jury believe that, notwithstanding the partial obstruction existed, there still was space enough in the air course unobstructed to allow the proper and sufficient ventilation of the mine and of the fourth left entry where such deceased persons were at work, you will find a verdict for the defendant, unless you find from the evidence that the negligence of the defendant in some other way caused or contributed to the death of such persons.

"11. If the jury shall believe from the evidence that the defendant permitted fire gas to accumulate in room 8 of its mine, and that such gas would not produce any injury until ignited, and that it was ignited by Flick and Kelly, or either of them, by going into the said room with a naked light (contrary to the rules and orders of the defendant), and by such naked light the fire gas was ignited and exploded, causing the death of plaintiff's intestates, such explosion and injury were directly and immediately caused by the act of the fellow servants of plaintiff's intestates, and not by the negligence of defendant, and defendant is not liable therefor; and a verdict should be rendered for the defendant."

The act of Congress makes three requirements—

(1) Ventilation of not less than 55 feet of pure air per second, or 3,300 cubic feet per minute, for every fifty men at work, and in like proportions for a greater number;

[120] (2) proper appliances and machinery to force the air through the mine *to the face of working places; (3) keeping all workings free from standing gas. If either of these three requirements was neglected, to the injury of plaintiff's intestates, the defendant was liable.
178 U. S.

We think the instructions numbered 1, 6, and 11, given at the request of the defendant, ignored the obligations of the act of Congress, and are so far inconsistent with the other instructions that they tended to confusion and misapprehension—making the duty of the mine owner relative, not absolute, and its test what a reasonable person would do, instead of making the test and measure of duty the command of the statute. The act of Congress does not give to mine owners the privilege of reasoning on the sufficiency of appliances for ventilation or leave to their judgment the amount of ventilation that is sufficient for the protection of miners. It prescribes the amount of ventilation to be not less than 55 cubic feet per second; it prescribes the machinery to be adequate to force that amount of air through the mine to the face of every working place. Nor does it allow standing gas. It prescribes, on the contrary, that the mine shall be kept clear of standing gas. This is an imperative duty, and the consequence of neglecting it cannot be excused because some workman may disregard instructions. Congress has prescribed that duty, and it cannot be omitted and the lives of the miners committed to the chance that the care or duty of someone else will counteract the neglect and disregard of the legislative mandate.

But, aside from the statute, it is very disputable if the instructions were correct. It is undoubtedly the master's duty to furnish safe appliances and safe working places, and if the neglect of this duty concurs with that of the negligence of a fellow servant, the master has been held to be liable. Clark v. Soule, 137 Mass. 380; Cowan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 80 Wis. 284, 50 N. W. 180; Sherman v. Menominee River Lumber Co. 72 Wis. 122, 1 L. R. A. 173, 39 N. W. 365. See also Hayes v. Michigan C. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 369; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reesman, 19 U. S. App. 596, 60 Fed. Rep. 370, 9 C. C. A. 20, 23 L. R. A. 768; Sommer v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 59 U. S. App. 519, 89 Fed. Rep. 54, 32 C. C. A. 156; Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 550, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Cummings*, 106 U. S. 700, 27 L. ed. 266, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493. [421]

This principle was stated in the general charge of the court, but it was materially modified in the application, and not at all considered in giving the instructions requested by the defendant.

No exceptions, however, were taken to any portion of the general charge of the court, and no question arising thereon is open to our review on this writ of error. But as we remand the case for a new trial on account of the errors which we have pointed out irrespective of the general charge, we deem it best to say that we must not be understood as affirming anything contained in instructions numbered 11 and 12, or any other instruction which conflicts with the principles announced in Texas & P. R. Co. v. Archibald, 170 U. S. 665, 671, 42 L. ed. 1188, 1191, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 777.

We do not intend to express an opinion as to the facts of the case, or of any fact, or of any of the theories of the explosion. We only mean to decide that on the issues made and on the evidence, and regarding the provisions of the act of Congress, the instructions given by the trial court to the jury were erroneous.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of the Territory is reversed, and the case remanded, with instructions to reverse the judgment of the District Court and direct a new trial.

Ex parte: In the Matter of W. P. CONNAWAY, Receiver of the Moscow National Bank of Moscow, Idaho, Petitioner.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 421-435.)

Mandamus—directing court to bring in a party—death of defendant before service of process—bringing in executor under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 955.

1. Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a court to bring in a party to an action, when it has erroneously declined to make him a party on the ground that it has no jurisdiction to do so.
2. An executor or administrator of a defendant who dies after the filing of a complaint, which is declared by statute to constitute the commencement of the action, may be made a party by scire facias under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 955, although such defendant dies before summons is served upon him,—especially if there is another defendant in the case, against whom the cause of action survives.

[No. 9, Original.]

Submitted April 9, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

PETITION for writ of Mandamus to compel the Circuit Court of the United States for the Ninth Circuit and District of California to take jurisdiction and proceed against a certain party as executor. Rule for mandamus made absolute.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. L. Hillyer submitted the cause for petitioner. Messrs. Curtis Hillyer and S. 700, 27 L. ed. 266, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 493.

The order setting aside the order of substitution and service of the summons not being a final judgment, no writ of error could be taken thereon, and plaintiff in the action below is compelled to seek his remedy by application to this court for a writ of mandamus.

NOTE.—As to mandamus to inferior tribunal—see State ex rel. Bayha v. Kansas City Ct. of Appeals (Mo.) 3 L. R. A. 476, and note.

As to when mandamus is the proper remedy, and when not—see notes to United States ex rel. International Contracting Co. v. Lamont, 39 L. ed. U. S. 160; M'Cluny v. Silliman, 4 L. ed. U. S. 263.

1134

Davis & R. Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Barber, 18 U. S. App. 476, 60 Fed. Rep. 465, 9 C. C. A. 79; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Myers, 18 U. S. App. 569, 62 Fed. Rep. 367, 10 C. C. A. 485; Re Mudsill Min. Co. 31 U. S. App. 112, 65 Fed. Rep. 647, 13 C. C. A. 77; Re Iron County, 37 U. S. App. 622, 71 Fed. Rep. 768, 18 C. C. A. 314; Cabot v. McMaster, 24 U. S. App. 571, 65 Fed. Rep. 533, 13 C. C. A. 39; The Alliance, 44 U. S. App. 52, 70 Fed. Rep. 273, 17 C. C. A. 124; Carson v. Powers, 52 U. S. App. 622, 86 Fed. Rep. 202, 29 C. C. A. 660; Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Roberts, 141 U. S. 690, 35 L. ed. 905, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 123.

Mandamus is the proper proceeding to compel a tribunal to take jurisdiction of a matter when, believing that it has no jurisdiction, it has refused to do so.

Ex parte Russell, 13 Wall. 664, 20 L. ed. 632; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wiswall, 23 Wall. 507, 23 L. ed. 103; Ex parte Schollenberger, 96 U. S. 369, 24 L. ed. 853; Harrington v. Holler, 111 U. S. 796, 28 L. ed. 602, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 697; Ex parte Parker, 120 U. S. 737, 30 L. ed. 818, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 767; Parker, Petitioner, 131 U. S. 221, 33 L. ed. 123, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708; Beguhl v. Swan, 39 Cal. 411; Temple v. Los Angeles County Super. Ct. 70 Cal. 211, 11 Pac. 699; Stanquist v. Hebbard, 122 Cal. 268, 54 Pac. 841; People ex rel. Miller v. Bay County Circuit Ct. Judge, 41 Mich. 327, 2 N. W. 26; People ex rel. Robison v. Swift, 59 Mich. 529, 26 N. W. 694; Queen v. Goodrich, 19 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 414.

It is regular and proper to suggest the death of a party in any court, at any stage of the proceedings.

Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 463; Taylor v. Western P. R. Co. 45 Cal. 323; Campbell v. West, 93 Cal. 653, 29 Pac. 219.

Service of process need not be made on a person in his lifetime, in order that the action may be revived against his representatives.

Lavell v. Frost, 16 Mont. 93, 40 Pac. 146; Gordon v. Tyler, 53 Mich. 630, 19 N. W. 560, 20 N. W. 70; Stevenson v. Kurtz, 98 Mich. 493, 57 N. W. 580; Lyle v. Bradford, 7 T. B. Mon. 112; Hubbard v. Johnson, 77 Me. 139; Heard v. March, 12 Cush. 580.

Mr. William H. Anderson submitted the cause for respondent. Mr. Jesse W. Lienthal was with him on the brief.

Mandamus is not the proper remedy for every order of an inferior court in the progress of a cause pending before it, which rightly or erroneously retards the progress of that cause to the inconvenience or detriment of the plaintiff.

American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. 148 U. S. 379, 37 L. ed. 489, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 758; Bank of Columbia v. Sweeney, 1 Pet. 567, 7 L. ed. 265; Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Adams, 9 Pet. 573, 9 L. ed. 234; Re Rice, 155 U. S. 396, 39 L. ed. 198, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 149; Ex parte Whitney, 13 Pet. 404, 10 L. ed. 221.

As the cause is still retained by the circuit court (never having been dismissed), it may go to final judgment or decree, and the reason assigned for mandamus in the case of dismissal does not exist.

178 U. S.

Ex parte Hoard, 105 U. S. 578, 26 L. ed. 1176.

This court might, by mandamus, have compelled the circuit court to pass upon the motion in question, had it refused to do so, but not to decide the motion in a particular way.

Ex parte Burtis, 103 U. S. 238, 26 L. ed. 392; Ex parte Many, 14 How. 24, 14 L. ed. 311.

The death of a party against whom an action is pending, before jurisdiction of him is acquired, does not open a short cut to acquire jurisdiction of his representative by process other and less than that required to bring him into court in the first instance.

Hyde v. Leavitt, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 170.

The circuit court was without jurisdiction to make the order of substitution which was subsequently set aside.

White v. Johnson, 27 Or. 282, 40 Pac. 511; Auerbach v. Maynard, 26 Minn. 421, 4 N. W. 816; United States v. Fields, 4 Blatchf. 326, Fed. Cas. No. 15,089, and authorities cited.

[422] *Mr. Justice McKenna delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for a writ of mandamus to the judges of the circuit court of the United States for the ninth circuit and district of California, which substantially shows as follows:

The Moscow National Bank of Moscow, Idaho, was a corporation organized under the national banking laws of the United States, with its place of business at Moscow, Idaho.

The bank, becoming insolvent, was closed by order of the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States, and taken control of by that officer.

On January 3, 1898, he appointed petitioner receiver of the bank's assets.

[423] *On June 14, 1897, the Comptroller made an assessment of $100 on each share of the capital stock of the bank, and ordered the stockholders to pay the same on or before July 14, 1897. O. P. Overton and C. A. Hoffer were owners of one hundred shares, and by the assessment became indebted to petitioner in the sum of $10,000, with interest from June 14, 1897.

On March 28, 1898, petitioner commenced an action in that court against said Overton and Hoffer for the said sum of $10,000, and caused a summons to be issued, directed to them as defendants, and placed it in the hands of the marshal for service.

Service was made in the usual form by the marshal on Hoffer personally, in Santa Rosa, in said district.

As to Overton, the marshal made the following return on the 5th of April, 1898: "I hereby certify that I was unable to make personal service on O. P. Overton, as he was very sick, and was not permitted to see anyone, under instructions of his physicians."

On April 13, 1898, O. P. Overton died without service having been made upon him. 178 U. S.

He made a last will and testament, appointing John P. Overton executor thereof, which was duly probated, and letters testamentary were duly issued.

On March 15, 1899, these facts were brought to the notice of the circuit court, and petitioner moved for and obtained an order directing that a writ of scire facias issue to said John P. Overton, which concluded as follows: "You are hereby commanded within twenty days after the service upon you of this writ to appear and become a party to this suit, according to the provisions of § 955 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or show cause why you should not, otherwise judgment may be taken against the estate of said deceased in like manner as if you had voluntarily made yourself a party."

The writ was duly served and a motion was noticed for April 17, 1899, for an order setting aside the scire facias "and the attempted service thereof."

The ground of the motion was that "Overton died before the *service upon him of any[424] process, that no process was ever served upon him herein, and that this action was never pending against him; and upon such other grounds as to the court may seem proper."

The motion was granted, and the petitioner allowed an exception.

On June 12, 1899, upon the suggestion of the death of defendant O. P. Overton, the court made an order substituting John P. Overton as executor of the last will and testament of O. P. Overton, deceased, as defendant, and ordered an alias summons to issue to him as executor.

The summons was duly served, and on August 11, 1899, he, by his attorneys, filed and served a notice of motion to set aside the order of substitution and quash the alias summons, on the ground "that said O. P. Overton died before the service upon him of any process herein; that said alleged alias summons is not in the form required by law, and upon such other grounds as to the court may seem proper."

The matter coming on to be heard on November 20, 1899, and having been submitted, it was granted on December 4, 1899, and petitioner was allowed an exception.

The petition for a writ of mandamus alleges that the ground upon which said court set aside the service of summons was that the action had abated by the death of O. P. Overton before the service of process upon him; and prays that a writ of mandamus be issued to the judges of the circuit court of the United States aforesaid to take jurisdiction and proceed against John P. Overton as executor as aforesaid.

A rule to show cause was granted. The return thereto by the learned judge of the circuit court admits that the allegations of the petition as to the proceedings had in the circuit court are true, except that the court "has not refused to take jurisdiction of the action therein referred to, but only of the person of John P. Overton, executor of the last will and testament of O. P. Overton, the deceased defendant in said action." And the return alleged that the grounds upon which the court set aside the service of the alias summons were stated in the opinion of the court. 98 Fed. Rep. 574.

[425] *The basis of the opinion is that the court had acquired no jurisdiction over the deceased defendant O. P. Overton, and could acquire none over his executor, John P. Overton.

1. It is objected that mandamus is not the proper remedy. Counsel say: "This is not a case in which the court refuses to entertain jurisdiction. The action has not been dismissed. It is still pending in the circuit court, and may, and doubtless will, proceed to final judgment." But final judgment against whom? Not against O. P. Overton, for he is deceased. Not against John P. Overton or the estate he represents, because he has not been made a party to the action, and judgment against Hoffer alone may not be all of petitioners' remedy. If the court's ruling is erroneous, how can it be redressed by an appeal from the judgment, Overton not being a party to the action? The court declined to make him a party on the ground that it had no jurisdiction to do so. If it has jurisdiction, mandamus is the proper remedy. Re Grossmayer, 177 U. S. 48, ante, 665, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 535. Whether the court had jurisdiction we will proceed to consider.

2. The return of the rule to show cause is confined to the action of the circuit court on the alias summons. But its action for setting aside the writ of scire facias is also here for review.

Section 955 of the Revised Statutes of the United States provides as follows:

"When either of the parties, whether plaintiff or petitioner or defendant, in any suit in any court of the United States, dies before final judgment, the executor or administrator of such deceased party may, in case the cause of action survives by law, prosecute or defend any such suit to final judgment. The defendant shall answer accordingly; and the court shall hear and determine the cause, and render judgment for or against the executor or administrator, as the case may require. And if such executor or administrator, having been duly served with a scire facias from the office of the clerk of the court where the suit is pending, twenty days beforehand, neglects or refuses to become party to the suit, the court may render judgment against the estate of the deceased party in the same manner as if [426] *the executor or administrator had voluntarily made himself a party. The executor or administrator who becomes a party as aforesaid shall, upon motion to the court, be entitled to a continuance of the suit until the next term of said court."

It is preliminarily urged against this section that it "applies only where an action is 'brought in a Federal court, and is based upon some act of Congress, or arises under some rule of general law recognized in the courts of the Union;' that in such an action 'the question of revival will depend upon the statutes of the United States relating to the subject;' but that otherwise it depends upon the laws of the state in which it is commenced." Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 673, 38 L. ed. 311, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Joy, 173 U. S. 226, 43 L. ed. 677, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 387, are cited.

In those cases the controversy was over the survival of the action; in the pending case that is not the controversy. It is not contended that the action does not survive. It is only contended that personal jurisdiction was not obtained of O. P. Overton before his death, and that, therefore, his executor, John P. Overton, could not be brought into the action, either by scire facias, under § 955, Rev. Stat., or by motion suggesting the death of his testate and by alias summons.

In Schreiber v. Sharpless [110 U. S. 76, 28 L. ed. 65, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423], cited in Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 673, 38 L. ed. 311, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 533, it was decided that "whether an action survives depends on the substance of the cause of action, not on the forms of proceeding to enforce it." And that a cause of action on a penal statute of the United States did not survive, even though causes of action on state penal statutes could be prosecuted after the death of the offender.

In Martin v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., however, the action was for personal injuries, and it was said: "Whether the administrator has a right of action depends upon the law of West Virginia, where the action was brought and the administrator was appointed. Rev. Stat. § 721; Henshaw v. Miller, 17 How. 212, 15 L. ed. 222. The mode of bringing in the representative, if the cause of action survived, would also be governed by the law of the state, except so far as Congress has regulated the subject." It was determined upon consideration that the cause of action did not survive.

*In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Joy, the question [427] was presented in an unique aspect. The action was for personal injuries, which occurred in Indiana, and suit was brought in Ohio. By the laws of the former state the action did not survive; by the laws of the latter, the cause of action did survive. If suit had not been brought before the death of the person injured, the cause of action abated in both states.

The cause was removed to the circuit court of the United States, and it was held that the cause of action survived the death of the person injured, and could be revived in the name of his personal representative. We said: "We think that the right to revive attached, under the local law, when Hervey [the person injured] brought his action in the state court. It was a right of substantial value, and became inseparably connected with the cause of action, so far as the laws of Ohio were concerned." And it was denied that the right to revive was lost by the removal of the case to the circuit court of the United States, or affected by § 955, Rev. Stat. We said further: "Whether a pending action may be revived upon the death of either party and proceed to judgment depends primarily upon the laws of the jurisdiction in which the action was commenced. If an action be brought in a Federal court, and is based upon some act of Congress, or arises under some rule of general law recognized in the courts of the Union, the question of revivor will depend upon the statutes of the United States relating to that subject. But if at the time an action is brought in a state court the statutes of that state allow a revivor of it on the death of the plaintiff before final judgment,—even where the right to sue is lost when death occurs before any suit is brought,—then we have a case not distinctly or necessarily covered by § 955."

By § 955 an executor or administrator of "plaintiff or petitioner or defendant in any suit in any court of the United States," may be made a party by "scire facias served from the office of the clerk of the court where the suit is pending."

[428] When can a suit be said to be "in any court of the United States," or said to be "pending" therein? Is not the answer inevitable, from the time the suit is commenced? It cannot be *pending until it is commenced, and if it continue until the death of the "plaintiff or petitioner or defendant," the requirements of the section seem to be satisfied.

Another inquiry becomes necessary—When is a suit commenced? For an answer we must go to the California statutes. By § 405 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is provided: "Civil actions in the courts of this state are commenced by filing a complaint." By § 406 summons may be issued at any time within a year, and if necessary to different counties. The defendant may appear, however, at any time within a year. The filing of the complaint, therefore, is the commencement of the action and the jurisdiction of the court over the case. The jurisdiction would undoubtedly continue for a year, and probably afterwards, and a motion to dismiss would probably be necessary to get rid of the case. Dupuy v. Shear, 29 Cal. 242; Reynolds v. Page, 35 Cal. 300.

3. It is said, however, that jurisdiction of the person of O. P. Overton had not been obtained prior to his death, and this is undoubtedly true. Service of summons was necessary for that. It was so decided in Dupuy v. Shear, 29 Cal. 242; and § 416 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "From the time of the service of the summons and of a copy of the complaint in a civil action, where service of a copy of the complaint is required, or of the completion of the publication when service by publication is ordered, the court is deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the parties, and to have control of all the subsequent proceedings. The voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons and copy of the complaint upon him."

It is claimed that this section precludes jurisdiction of "the subsequent proceedings" in the action, unless the summons was served, or, to quote counsel, "the circuit court in this instance lacked 'jurisdiction' and 'control' of the 'proceedings,' so far as the defendant Overton was concerned. It was therefore absolutely powerless to lay its hands upon the deceased defendant's representative." The contention is claimed to be supported by the construction of similar statutes in Oregon and Minnesota made by their courts. White v. Johnson, 27 Or. 282, 40 Pac. 511; *and Auerbach v. Maynard, 26 Minn. 421, 4 N. W. 816. The latter case sustains the contention, and proceeds to the extent of denying the court any jurisdiction to proceed further in the action. White v. Johnson does not go so far. It cites and follows the Minnesota case to the extent of holding "that the court is without power or authority to take any action looking to the rendition of a personal judgment merely without first obtaining jurisdiction through the service of a summons upon the defendant." But the court did not decide that it had no control of subsequent proceedings, but reduced the question to one of procedure and the necessity of service of the summons before a personal judgment could be taken. The court admitted that the statute provided that no action abated upon the death of the party, and provided that the court might allow the action to be continued on motion, and that such was the practice in New York and in California under similar statutes, and then said: "The statute provides that the court may, at any time within one year after the death of a party, on motion, allow the action to be continued against the personal representative, but no provision is made in a case of this kind as to the manner of bringing in the substituted party. The court could, therefore, adopt any reasonable procedure that might seem proper, but the service of a valid summons could not be dispensed with. Probably the better practice would have been for the lower court to have required the plaintiff to file a supplemental complaint in the action, showing the death of defendant and the appointment of an executrix, and thereupon to issue an alias summons containing the title of the action after substitution made, and have the same directed to the said Cordelia Johnson. A service of such a summons, together with a copy of the complaint, would undoubtedly suffice to require her appearance, in default of which judgment might have been entered against her. Such a practice and procedure seems reasonable, and well calculated to effect the desired result in an orderly manner." The case was reversed, and sent back for such other proceedings as might be deemed advisable.
178 U. S.

It is certain that this case is not authority for the contention that the court had no jurisdiction or control over subsequent *proceedings. It asserted such jurisdiction, and held that in its exercise "the court could therefore adopt any reasonable procedure that might seem proper," provided a summons was served.

But even if White v. Johnson and Auerbach v. Maynard concurred in holding that upon the death of a defendant the court could not proceed further in the action, we should, nevertheless, be unable to assent to the doctrine. At common law all actions abated by the death of parties before judgment, and to prevent the application and effect of that principle, § 955, preceded by § 31 of the judiciary act of 1789, was enacted, and provisions like that of § 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure of California were also enacted. The section is as follows:

"Sec. 385. An action or proceeding does not abate by the death or any disability of a party, or by the transfer of any interest therein, if the cause of action survive or continue. In case of the death or any disability of a party, the court, on motion, may allow the action or proceeding to be continued by or against his representative or successor in interest. In case of any other transfer of interest, the action or proceeding may be continued in the name of the original party, or the court may allow the person to whom the transfer is made to be substituted in the action or proceeding."

This section does not make distinctions dependent upon the stages of the action or proceeding. The action or proceeding only needs to exist, and to distinguish its degrees of progress is certainly to add to the letter of the section.

We are therefore disposed to the construction of a similar provision in the Code of Montana, made by the supreme court of Montana in Lavell v. Frost, 16 Mont. 93, 40 Pac. 146, not only because the construction is in consonance with the purpose of the statute, but accurate as to its letter.

The action was upon a bill of exchange. Frost, the defendant's intestate, died after the complaint was filed, and the defendant, his administratrix, was substituted in his stead.

[431] The court said: "It does not appear whether Frost was served with summons before his death, but the action was commenced before his death. An action is commenced by filing a *complaint. (Code Civ. Proc. § 66.) 'An action or defense shall not abate by the death of a party, but shall survive and be maintained by his representatives.' (Id. § 22.) . . . So far as we are of opinion, there was no error in the case."

The procedure in California in case of the death of the defendant before service has not been ruled upon, but in case death occur after service, it was said in Taylor v. Western P. R. Co. 45 Cal. at page 337: "It has been the uniform practice in this state from its organization, so far as we are advised, to permit the substitution to be made, or a suggestion of the death of the former party and satisfactory proof, on an ex parte motion, of the appointment and qualification of the administrator."

The same ruling was made in Campbell v. West, 93 Cal. 653, 29 Pac. 219. And the practice was emphasized by contrast with that in case of a transfer of interest otherwise than by death. In such case the court said when the proceedings were set in motion by the plaintiff or the person to whom the transfer is made, or by the defendant if for any reason he desires to avail himself of such transfer for any purpose, it must be made by supplemental complaint or answer.

We see no reason why the representative of a deceased party should not be brought in by the same procedure, whether the death of a party occur before or after service, and the language of the statute so expresses. The court would undoubtedly take care that ample notice was given, and nothing more can be necessary.

The cases in equity cited by petitioner contain some pertinent remarks as to when a suit may be considered as having been commenced, and in what stage of the suit it can be revived against the representatives of a deceased party. The cases cannot be said to be inapplicable to the statutes of states which, like California, have abolished the difference between legal and equitable forms of action, and which, under one form of action and the method of procedure of the state, intend to give, not less, but greater, remedial facilities, and, while accommodating the relief to the circumstances of the case, expedite the relief by freeing it from the delays and expense of the old procedure, *both in common law and equity, and to ob-[432]tain the good in both by a simpler practice.

In Gordon v. Tyler, 53 Mich. 629, 19 N. W. 560, 20 N. W. 70, the original defendants not having been served before their deaths, the court said, in passing on a motion to set aside the service and dismiss the bill: "The basis of this objection is that until a defendant has appeared the suit cannot be treated as having actually been commenced against him; so that if he dies before appearance it is as if he had never been in the case, and an original bill is necessary to reach his representatives. The citation from Daniell's Chancery Practice seems to favor that idea. But the authorities and practice have uniformly held that the filing of a bill is the commencement of suit for most purposes, and we can see no reason for adopting any exceptional rule in such cases as the present. An affidavit can always be made in a cause as soon as the bill is filed, and sometimes becomes necessary to support an order for the appearance of an absentee. A notice of lis pendens may always be filed at once, and it would lead to very serious mischief if a failure to serve process at once on a defendant could nullify the effect of such filing. For many purposes it is not always important whether a bill is a bill of revivor or an original bill in the nature of one. But for some purposes the difference is very material, and rights may be seriously jeopardized by holding a failure to get a defendant in before his death equivalent to a failure to implead him. The evident object of our statute is to hasten the proceedings by allowing a petition to stand in lieu of a bill of revivor, and we do not see any good reason for holding that a suit, if regarded as commenced for any substantial purpose, should not be regarded as commenced, so as to save all rights as against the estates of a deceased defendant, appearing or not appearing. No one's rights are injured by so holding, and important rights may be jeopardized by holding otherwise."

This ruling was reaffirmed in Stevenson v. Kurtz, 98 Mich. 493, 57 N. W. 580.

[433] In Maine, an executor of the deceased defendant may be brought in by bill of revivor. In declaring the practice the court said, in Hubbard v. Johnson, 77 Me. 139: "The general *rule in equity is that, strictly speaking, there is no cause in court as against a defendant until his appearance. 2 Dan. Ch. 5th ed. 1523. But in this state, since a bill may be inserted in a writ of attachment (Rev. Stat. chap. 77, § 11), as this was, and a suit is commenced when the writ is actually made with intention of service (Rev. Stat. chap. 81, § 95), an executor may be brought in by a revivor, although no service has been made on the testator. Heard v. March, 12 Cush. 580."

The same ruling was made in Massachusetts in Heard v. March, and, while there was no opinion of the court, from the argument of counsel the ruling was apparently based on the same grounds as in Hubbard v. Johnson, 77 Me. 139, to wit, that an action was commenced on the day of the date of the writ, that being the process in chancery.

It was said in Lyle v. Bradford, 7 T. B. Mon. 116: "That the suing out process has at all times been held the commencement of an action or suit, and that as to the person against whom process has been issued there must necessarily be a pending suit from the date of the process, so as to abate and require a revival upon his death."

There is nothing in Lewis v. Outlaw, 1 Overt. 140, which opposes these views. Indeed, it affirms them. The court said: "Agreeably to the practice in the courts of law in England, all suits abated by the death of either party; nor could they be revived by scire facias." The court then proceeded to say that the practice of chancery in England was upon the death of either plaintiff or defendant to file a bill of revivor against the representatives of the deceased, and, applying this practice to Kentucky under a statute which provided no abatement should occur by the death of either the plaintiff or defendant, but might be "proceeded upon by application of the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of either party," said: "It seems clear that all revivals, to comport with the principles of reason and the English practice, should be made by causing appropriate process to issue so as to make the representatives of the deceased parties in a legal manner. To revive a dormant judgment a scire facias is necessary. To revive in chancery the authorities show that a bill must be filed, and process issued thereon, to [434] *which the representatives may make such answer as the nature of the case may require."

Hyde v. Leavitt, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 170, cited by respondent's counsel, must be considered as peculiar to the practice in Vermont.

The statute of the state was very similar to § 955 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

ed States, supra, and it was held, reversing the lower court, that notwithstanding Griffin, the deceased, had been personally served with the writ, as it was made returnable June term, 1801, and as Griffin died before essoin day, his administrator could not be made a party under the statute. The ground of the decision seemed to be that the suit could not be considered as pending until it was entered in court. The contrary was held in Clindenin v. Allen, 4 N. H. 385. The same contention was made which was made in Hyde v. Leavitt. The court decided that, "as the term 'pending' means nothing more than 'remaining undecided,' an action may, without doubt, be considered as pending from the commencement." And we may say that Hyde v. Leavitt did not long remain law in Vermont. At their October sessions, 1804, the general assembly amended the statute to make the commencement of the suit, in case of the death of either party, the same as to rights for and against executors as existed in a suit which was "pending," using this word, no doubt, to meet the ruling of the court.

However, the discussion to the extent we have carried it may not be necessary. Section 955, Rev. Stat., determines when the representative of a deceased party may be brought into an action, and that scire facias is the procedure whereby he may be brought in. And it is not confined to a case where a judgment has been obtained. It is a process of notice to the executor or administrator to come in, and, if he should not come in, gives jurisdiction to the court to "render judgment against the estate of the deceased party, in the same manner as if the executor or administrator had voluntarily made himself a party." This is the language of the section. If doubt there can be of its construction, it is removed by the case of Green v. Watkins, 6 Wheat. 260, 5 L. ed. 256, and Macker v. Thomas, 7 Wheat. 530, 5 L. ed. 515.

*In Green v. Watkins, the court, passing on [435] § 31 of the judiciary act of 1789, of which §§ 955 and 956, Rev. Stat., are reproductions, pointed out the distinction between the death of parties before judgment and after judgment, and said: "In the former case all personal actions by the common law abate; and it required the aid of some statute like that of the 31st section of the judiciary act of 1789, chap. 20, to enable the action to be prosecuted by or against the personal representative of the deceased, when the cause of action survived."

The enactment of the section was to provide against the abatement of actions which would otherwise abate at common law, and we cannot confine its remedy to the cases where death occurs after judgment. In other words, confine its remedy to the cases where the common law already afforded a remedy. See also M'Coul v. Lekamp, 2 Wheat. 111, 4 L. ed. 197, and Hyde v. Leavitt, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 170.

Except when considering the objection made here to the remedy by mandamus, we have treated the case as if O. P. Overton, the deceased party, was the sole defendant, and that the action necessarily abated unless there was a saving statute. But he was not the sole defendant, and the action did not abate at common law if the cause of action survived against the other defendant. We assume (the record does not enable us to determine absolutely) that it did, and the reason for bringing in the representatives of the deceased defendant is the stronger.

We think, therefore, that the Circuit Court erred in setting aside the scire facias and the rule for mandamus is made absolute.

[436]*C. W. SMITH, as Receiver of the Atlantic & Pacific Railway Company, Plff. in Err.,
v.

TRUMAN REEVES, as Treasurer of the State of California.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 436-449.)

Action against state—consent of state to be sued in its own courts—suit by Federal corporation.

1. An action against a state treasurer in his official capacity, which is in effect to compel the state, through him, to perform its promise to return to taxpayers money that may be adjudged to have been taken under an illegal assessment, is in substance an action against the state itself, within the meaning of U. S. Const. 11th Amend.
2. The consent of the state to be sued, which is given by Cal. Pol. Code, § 3669, providing that the state treasurer may demand trial in the superior court of Sacramento county, must be deemed to be limited to actions in the state court, and not to authorize such action in a Federal court.
3. A state has a right to couple with its consent to be sued on account of taxes alleged to have been exacted under illegal assessments a condition that the suit be brought in one of its own courts.
4. An action against a state by a corporation created by Congress is not authorized by U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2, as a case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, although the 11th Amendment in terms prohibits actions against a state "by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state."

[No. 242.]

Argued April 16, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit to review a decision affirming a judgment of dismissal in an action against a state treasurer. Affirmed.

See same case below, Smith v. Rackliffe,

NOTE.—As to suits against states—see note to Hans v. Louisiana, 33 L. ed. U. S. 842.

As to state immunity from suit—see Murdock Parlor Grate Co. v. Com. (Mass.) 8 L. R. A. 399, and note; Carr v. State ex rel. Jean Baptiste Maurice Du Coetlosquet (Ind.) 11 L. R. A. 370, and note.

1140

59 U. S. App. 428, 87 Fed. Rep. 964, 31 C. C. A. 328.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. N. Stern argued the cause and filed a brief for plaintiff in error:

A corporation created by act of Congress has the right to assert any cause of action, where the amount in value exceeds $2,000, in any circuit court of the United States, against any party, regardless of citizenship of the parties to such action.

Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; Pacific Railroad Removal Cases, 115 U. S. 1, sub nom. Union P. R. Co. v. Myers, 29 L. ed. 319, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1113; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 465, 36 L. ed. 506, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 740; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Briscoe, 144 U. S. 133, 36 L. ed. 377, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 538.

The Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company having the right to invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, the receivers appointed to take possession of its property and rights in action were invested with the right to invoke the same jurisdiction.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; McNulta v. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327, 35 L. ed. 796, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 11.

These receivers, having been appointed by the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California to take possession of all the property and rights in action within that district, had the right to bring any suit for the collection of the assets of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company in that court which appointed them, regardless of citizenship, amount, or anything else.

Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 473, 37 L. ed. 815, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1008; White v. Ewing, 159 U. S. 36, 40 L. ed. 67, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1018.

The grant to the Federal courts of a jurisdiction "concurrent with the courts of the several states, of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity," prevents any state from confining the right, created by statute or otherwise, to bring a suit of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, in the state courts alone, where a party having the right to bring such suit can invoke the aid of a Federal court.

Suydam v. Broadnax, 14 Pet. 67, 10 L. ed. 357; Union Bank v. Vaiden, 18 How. 503, 15 L. ed. 472; Hyde v. Stone, 20 How. 170, 15 L. ed. 874; Cowles v. Mercer County, 7 Wall. 118, sub nom. Mercer County Supers. v. Cowles, 19 L. ed. 86; Re Broderick, 21 Wall. 503, 22 L. ed. 599; Ex parte McNeil, 13 Wall. 236, 20 L. ed. 624; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 21 L. ed. 447; Lincoln County v. Luning, 133 U. S. 529, 33 L. ed. 766, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 363; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. ed. 524; Cowley v. Northern P. R. Co., 159 U. S. 569, 40 L. ed. 263, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127; Chicot County v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 529, 37 L. ed. 546, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 695; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co., 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep.

178 U. S.

418; Blake v. McClung, 172 U. S. 239, 43 L. ed. 432, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 165; Thompson v. Searey County, 12 U. S. App. 618, 57 Fed. Rep. 1030, 6 C. C. A. 674; Edwards v. Hill, 19 U. S. App. 493, 59 Fed. Rep. 723, 8 C. C. A. 233.

A suit against the state treasurer in his official capacity is in fact a suit against a statutory trustee of funds, and in such capacity he does not represent the state in an action like the present,—one to recover a sum of money which he, as state treasurer, had neither the right to collect, nor to hold after collection for anyone but the owner.

Ex parte Tyler, 149 U. S. 165, 37 L. ed. 689, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 785.

Immunity from suit, belonging to a state, which is protected by the Constitution, is a personal privilege which it may waive at pleasure.

Beers v. Arkansas, 20 How. 527, 15 L. ed. 991; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 33 L. ed. 842, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504; Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 27 L. ed. 780, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 878.

While it is true that a state when consenting to be sued may base such consent upon such conditions as it may choose to make, and such conditions must be observed, yet it cannot make, as one of such conditions, a condition that it can be sued only in its own courts upon a right of action given to all.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 271, 20 L. ed. 571; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 476, 42 L. ed. 837, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

Messrs. William M. Abbott and Tirey L. Ford argued the cause and, with Mr. George A. Sturtevant, filed a brief for defendant in error:

Where the record discloses the fact that the nominal defendants have no personal interest in the subject-matter of the suit, but defend only as representing the state, the state is the real party in interest and the party against whom the relief is sought.

Georgia v. Madrazo, 1 Pet. 110, 7 L. ed. 73; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 16 L. ed. 717; Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 27 L. ed. 448, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 29 L. ed. 805, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 608; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Louisiana ex rel. New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Steele, 134 U. S. 230, 33 L. ed. 891, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 849, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; United States v. Beebe, 127 U. S. 344, 32 L. ed. 124, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1083; Pennoyer v. McConaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 363, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 388, 38 L. ed. 1020, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 40 L. ed. 599, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443.

It has been uniformly held that where an officer of a state has been sued, in his representative capacity, to enforce an obligation alleged to be due from the state, the courts of the United States, under the 11th Amendment, have no jurisdiction to hear or determine the cause without the consent of the state.

Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 27 L. ed. 448, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 29 L. ed. 805, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 608; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Louisiana ex rel. New York Guaranty & Indemnity Co. v. Steele, 134 U. S. 230, 33 L. ed. 891, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 511; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 388, 38 L. ed. 1020, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 40 L. ed. 599, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 443.

The state cannot, without its consent, be sued in a circuit court of the United States, even though the case is one which arises under the Constitution and laws of the United States.

Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 33 L. ed. 842, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504; North Carolina v. Temple, 134 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 849, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 509; United States v. Texas, 143 U. S. 644, 36 L. ed. 292, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 488.

The state has the unquestioned right to select the forum in which it shall be sued, to prescribe the manner in which the suit shall be conducted, and to impose upon the prosecution of the action any condition that may be deemed proper. It may even retract its permission to be sued, after an action has been commenced.

South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Alabama, 101 U. S. 832, 25 L. ed. 973; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 505, 31 L. ed. 229, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 18, 33 L. ed. 848, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504; Ball v. Halsell, 161 U. S. 83, 40 L. ed. 625, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554.

The conditions imposed by Cal. Pol. Code, § 3669, are wholly incompatible with a consent to be sued in the United States courts, and could have no application in such court.

Van Stone v. Stillwell & B. Mfg. Co. 142 U. S. 133, 35 L. ed. 963, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 181; Fishburn v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 137 U. S. 60, 34 L. ed. 585, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 132 U. S. 191, 33 L. ed. 309, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 65; Hudson v. Parker, 156 U. S. 281, 39 L. ed. 425, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 450; Deland v. Platte County, 155 U. S. 221, 39 L. ed. 128, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 82; Chatcaugay Ore & Iron Co., Petitioner, 128 U. S. 545, 32 L. ed. 509, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 150.

*Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court: [436]

This action was brought in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California by the receivers of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation created under an act of Congress approved July 27, 1866, *with authority to [437] construct and maintain a railroad and telegraph line beginning at or near Springfield, Missouri, thence by a specified route to the Pacific Ocean. 14 Stat. at L. 292, chap. 278.

The original defendant was J. R. McDonald, as treasurer of the state of California. He was succeeded in office by Levi Rackliffe, W. S. Green, and Truman Reeves in the order named.

The relief sought was a judgment against the defendant "as treasurer of the state of California," for the sum of $2,272.80 with interest thereon from the date of the payment of that sum or any portion thereof to the state treasurer, together with the costs of the action.

Before bringing suit the receivers of the railroad company gave written notice to the comptroller of the state that they intended to bring an action against the state treasurer to recover from him the amount of the "taxes paid by the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company, and by the receiver for it, to the state treasurer as and for taxes assessed against the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company in the state of California for the year 1893, by the state board of equalization."

The action was brought under § 3669 of the Political Code of California, which is as follows:

"Each corporation, person, or association assessed by the state board of equalization must pay to the state treasurer, upon the order of the Comptroller, as other moneys are required to be paid into the treasury, the state and county and city and county taxes each year levied upon the property so assessed to it or him by said board. Any corporation, person, or association dissatisfied with the assessment made by the board, upon the payment of the taxes due upon the assessment complained of, and the five per cent added, if to be added, on or before the first Monday in June, and the filing of notice with the Comptroller of an intention to begin an action, may, not later than the first Monday in June, bring an action against the state treasurer for the recovery of the amount of taxes and percentage so paid to the treasurer, or any part thereof, and in the complaint may allege any fact tending to show the illegality of the tax, or of the assessment upon which the taxes are levied, in whole or in part. A copy of the complaint [438] and of the summons *must be served upon the treasurer within ten days after the complaint has been filed, and the treasurer has thirty days within which to demur or answer. At the time the treasurer demurs or answers, he may demand that the action be tried in the superior court of the county of Sacramento. The attorney general must defend the action. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to pleadings, proofs, trials, and appeals are applicable to the proceedings herein provided for. If the final judgment be against the treasurer, upon presentation of a certified copy of such judgment to the Comptroller, he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer, who must pay to the plaintiff the amount of the taxes so declared to have been illegally collected; and the cost of such action, audited by the board of examiners, must be paid out of any money in the general fund of the treasury, which is hereby appropriated, and the Comptroller may demand and receive from the county, or city and county interested, the proportion of such costs, or may deduct such proportion from any money then or to become due to said county, or city and county. Such action must be begun on or before the first Monday in June of the year succeeding the year in which the taxes were levied, and a failure to begin such action is deemed a waiver of the rights of action."

The state treasurer, represented by the attorney general of the state, demurred to the complaint upon various grounds affecting the merits of the case, and also moved to dismiss the case upon the ground that the circuit court had no jurisdiction of the defendant or of the action.

The demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, and the motion to dismiss was denied. Reinhart v. McDonald, 76 Fed. Rep. 403.

An amended complaint was filed, but a demurrer to it was sustained, with leave to amend. No further amendment having been filed, the action was dismissed by the circuit court. Smith v. Rackliffe, 83 Fed. Rep. 983. That judgment was affirmed in the circuit court of appeals. 59 U. S. App. 428, 87 Fed. Rep. 964, 31 C. C. A. 328.

Is this suit to be regarded as one against the state of California? The adjudged cases permit only one answer to this question. Although the state, as such, is not made a party defendant, *the suit is against one of [439] its officers as treasurer; the relief sought is a judgment against that officer in his official capacity; and that judgment would compel him to pay out of the public funds in the treasury of the state a certain sum of money. Such a judgment would have the same effect as if it were rendered directly against the state for the amount specified in the complaint. This case is unlike those in which we have held that a suit would lie by one person against another person to recover possession of specific property, although the latter claimed that he was in possession as an officer of the state and not otherwise. In such a case, the settled doctrine of this court is that the question of possession does not cease to be a judicial question—as between the parties actually before the court—because the defendant asserts or suggests that the right of possession is in the state of which he is an officer or agent. Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 204, 221, 42 L. ed. 137, 143, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770, and authorities there cited. In the present case the action is not to recover specific moneys in the hands of the state treasurer, nor to compel him to perform a plain ministerial duty. It is to enforce the liability of the state to pay a certain amount of money on account of the payment of taxes alleged to have been wrongfully exacted by the state from the plaintiffs. Nor is it a suit to enjoin the defendant from doing some positive or affirmative act to the injury of the plaintiffs in their persons or property, but one in effect to compel the state, through its officer, to perform its promise to return to taxpayers such amount as may be adjudged to have been taken from them under an illegal assessment.

The case, in some material aspects, is like that of Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 726-728, 27 L. ed. 448, 453, 454, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128, 140-142. That was a proceeding by mandamus against officers of Louisiana to compel them to use the public moneys in the state treasury for the retirement of certain bonds issued by the state, but which it subsequently refused to recognize as valid obligations, and directed its officers not to pay. This court said: "It may be, without doubt, easily ascertained from the accounts how much of the money on hand is applicable to the payment of this class of debts; but the law nowhere requires the setting [440] apart of this fund any more than *others from the common stock. In the treasury all funds are mingled together, and kept so until called for to meet specific demands. . . . The remedy sought, in order to be complete, would require the court to assume all the executive authority of the state, so far as it related to the enforcement of this law, and to supervise the conduct of all persons charged with any official duty in respect to the levy, collection, and disbursement of the tax in question until the bonds, principal and interest, were paid in full, and that, too, in a proceeding in which the state, as a state, was not and could not be made a party. It needs no argument to show that the political power cannot be thus ousted of its jurisdiction and the judiciary set in its place. When a state submits itself, without reservation, to the jurisdiction of a court in a particular case, that jurisdiction may be used to give full effect to what the state has by its act of submission allowed to be done; and if the law permits coercion of the public officers to enforce any judgment that may be rendered, then such coercion may be employed for that purpose. But this is very far from authorizing the courts, when a state cannot be sued, to set up its jurisdiction over the officers in charge of the public moneys, so as to control them as against the political power in their administration of the finances of the state. In our opinion, to grant the relief asked for in either of these cases would be to exercise such a power."

We are clearly of opinion that within the meaning of the constitutional provisions relating to actions instituted by private persons against a state, this suit, though in form against an officer of the state, is against the state itself. Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 10, 35 L. ed. 363, 365, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 699.

But it is contended that by the section of the Political Code of California above quoted the state has consented that its treasurer may be sued in respect of the matters specified in that section, and it is argued that this case comes within the decision in Beers v. Arkansas, 20 How. 527, 529, 15 L. ed. 991, 992, in which it was said to be an established principle of jurisprudence in all civilized nations that while the sovereign cannot be sued in its own courts or in any other without its consent and permission, a state "may, if 178 U. S.

it thinks proper, waive this privilege, and permit itself to be *made a defendant in a [441] suit by individuals or by another state." So, in Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 447, 27 L. ed. 780, 785, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 878, 883: "The immunity from suit belonging to a state, which is respected and protected by the Constitution within the limits of the judicial power of the United States, is a personal privilege which it may waive at pleasure; so that in a suit, otherwise well brought, in which a state had sufficient interest to entitle it to become a party defendant, its appearance in a court of the United States would be a voluntary submission to its jurisdiction; while, of course, those courts are always open to it as a suitor in controversies between it and citizens of other states."

It is quite true the state has consented that its treasurer may be sued by any party who insists that taxes have been illegally exacted from him under assessments made by the state board of equalization. But we think that it has not consented to be sued except in one of its own courts. This is not expressly declared in the statute, but such, we think, is its meaning. The requirement that the aggrieved taxpayer shall give notice of his suit to the comptroller, and the provision that the treasurer may at the time he demurs or answers "demand that the action be tried in the superior court of the county of Sacramento," indicates that the state contemplated proceedings to be instituted and carried to a conclusion only in its own judicial tribunals. If a circuit court of the United States can take cognizance of an action of this character, the right given to the treasurer by the local statute to have the case tried in the superior court of Sacramento county would be of no value; for, as the jurisdiction and authority of a circuit court of the United States depends upon the Constitution and laws of the United States, it could not refuse to take cognizance of the case if rightfully commenced in it, and to proceed to final decree, nor could it, merely in obedience to the laws of the state, transfer it to a state court upon the demand of the state treasurer. A Federal court can neither take nor surrender jurisdiction except pursuant to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

In Beers v. Arkansas, above cited, it was further said: "As this permission [to be sued] is altogether voluntary on the part of the sovereignty, it follows that it may prescribe the terms *and conditions on which it [442] consents to be sued, and the manner in which the suit shall be conducted, and may withdraw its consent whenever it may suppose that justice to the public requires it. Arkansas, by its Constitution, so far waived the privilege of sovereignty as to authorize suits to be instituted against it in its own courts, and delegated to its general assembly the power of directing in what courts, and in what manner, the suit might be commenced. And if the law of 1854 had been passed before the suit was instituted, we do not understand that any objection would have been made to it. The objection is that it was passed after the suit was instituted, and contained regulations with which the plaintiff could not conveniently comply. But the prior law was not a contract. It was an ordinary act of legislation, prescribing the conditions upon which the state consented to waive the privilege of sovereignty. It contained no stipulation that these regulations should not be modified afterwards, if, upon experience, it was found that further provisions were necessary to protect the public interest; and no such contract can be implied from the law, nor can this court inquire whether the law operated hardly or unjustly upon the parties whose suits were then pending. That was a question for the consideration of the legislature. They might have repealed the prior law altogether, and put an end to the jurisdiction of their courts in suits against the state, if they had thought proper to do so, or prescribe new conditions upon which the suits might still be allowed to proceed. In exercising this latter power the state violated no contract with the parties; it merely regulated the proceedings in its own courts, and limited the jurisdiction it had before conferred in suits when the state consented to be a party defendant."

In support of the broad proposition that the state could not restrict its consent to be sued to actions brought in its own courts, counsel refer to Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 286, 20 L. ed. 571, 576; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 391, 38 L. ed. 1014, 1022, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047, 1052; and Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 516, 42 L. ed. 819, 838, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418, 422.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton related to a statute of Wisconsin, giving a right of action, in certain circumstances, where the death of a person was caused by [443] the wrongful act, neglect or default of another person or of a corporation, and which statute provided that the action should be brought in some court established under the Constitution and laws of the state. This court held that in all cases where a general right was thus conferred, "it can be enforced in any Federal court within the state having jurisdiction of the parties. It cannot be withdrawn from the cognizance of such Federal court by any provision of state legislation that it shall only be enforced in a state court. . . . Whenever a general rule as to property or personal rights, or injuries to either, is established by state legislation, its enforcement by a Federal court in a case between proper parties is a matter of course, and the jurisdiction of the court, in such case, is not subject to state limitation."

Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. was an action by a New York corporation against the railroad commissioners of Texas and others to enjoin the enforcement of certain railroad rates established by the statutes of Texas. This court said: "Nor can it be said in such a case that relief is obtainable only in the courts of the state. For it may be laid down as a general proposition that, whenever a citizen of a state can go into the courts of the state to defend his property against the illegal acts of its officers, a citizen of another state may invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, to maintain a like defense. A state cannot tie up a citizen of another state, having property rights within its territory invaded by unauthorized acts of its own officers, to suits for redress in its own courts. Given a case where a suit can be maintained in the courts of the state to protect property rights, a citizen of another state may invoke the jurisdiction of the Federal courts."

Smyth v. Ames was a suit in the circuit court of the United States against the members of the state board of transportation of Nebraska and other persons and corporations, to enjoin the enforcement of certain rates established by a statute of that state for railroads. In that case it was insisted that the relief sought could only be had in an action brought in the supreme court of Nebraska, such being the remedy provided by the statute there in question. That provision, it was contended, took from the circuit court of the United States its *equity [444] jurisdiction in respect of the rates prescribed, and required the dismissal of the bills. This court said: "We cannot accept this view of the equity jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States. The adequacy or inadequacy of a remedy at law for the protection of the rights of one entitled upon any ground to invoke the powers of a Federal court is not to be conclusively determined by the statutes of the particular state in which suit may be brought. One who is entitled to sue in the Federal circuit court may invoke its jurisdiction in equity whenever the established principles and rules of equity permit such a suit in that court, and he cannot be deprived of that right by reason of his being allowed to sue at law in a state court on the same cause of action. It is true that an enlargement of equitable rights arising from the statutes of a state may be administered by the circuit courts of the United States. Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. 503, 520, sub nom. Kieley v. McGlynn, 22 L. ed. 599, 606; Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S. 15, 24, 28 L. ed. 52, 55, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 495; Dick v. Foraker, 155 U. S. 404, 415, 39 L. ed. 201, 205, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; Bardon v. Land & River Improv. Co. 157 U. S. 327, 330, 39 L. ed. 719, 720, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Rich v. Braxton, 158 U. S. 375, 405, 39 L. ed. 1022, 1032, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1006. But if the case in its essence be one cognizable in equity, the plaintiff,—the required value being in dispute,—may invoke the equity powers of the proper circuit court of the United States whenever jurisdiction attaches by reason of diverse citizenship or upon any other ground of Federal jurisdiction. Payne v. Hook, 7 Wall. 425, 430, 19 L. ed. 260, 261; McConihay v. Wright, 121 U. S. 201, 205, 30 L. ed. 932, 933, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 940. A party, by going into a national court, does not, this court has said, lose any right or appropriate remedy of which he might have availed himself in the state courts of the same locality; that the wise policy of the Constitution gives him a choice of tribunals. Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. 203, 221, 21 L. ed. 447, 452; Cowley v. Northern P. R. Co. 159 U. S. 569, 583, 40 L. ed. 263, 267, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 127." In Smyth v. Ames the court distinctly reaffirmed what was said upon this point in Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co.

[445] These cases do not control the determination of the present question. The Whitton suit was wholly between private parties, and involved no question as to the state or the powers or acts of state officers. In the Reagan and Smyth Cases the relief sought was against the proposed action of state officers or *agents, and they were not in any sense suits against the state—the relief asked being protection against affirmative action about to be taken by state officers in hostility to the rights of the respective plaintiffs.

In the present case the suit is one to compel an officer of the state, by affirmative action on his part, to perform or comply with the promise of the state as defined in its Political Code, and therefore, as we have said, it is a suit against the state. Nothing heretofore said by this court justifies the contention that a state may not give its consent to be sued in its own courts by private persons or by corporations, in respect of any cause of action against it and at the same time exclude the jurisdiction of the Federal courts—subject always to the condition, arising out of the supremacy of the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof, that the final judgment of the highest court of the state in any action brought against it with its consent may be reviewed or re-examined, as prescribed by the act of Congress, if it denies to the plaintiff any right, title, privilege, or immunity secured to him and specially claimed under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

In our judgment it was competent for the state to couple with its consent to be sued on account of taxes alleged to have been exacted under illegal assessments made by the state board, the condition that the suit be brought in one of its own courts. Such legislation ought to be deemed a part of the taxing system of the state, and cannot be regarded as hostile to the general government, or as trenching upon any right granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States. If the California statute be construed as referring only to suits brought in one of its own courts, it does not follow that injustice will be done to any taxpayer whose case presents a Federal question. For, if he be denied any right, privilege, or immunity secured by the Constitution or laws of the United States and specially set up by him, the case can be brought here upon writ of error from the highest court of the state.

[446] Again, it is contended that a state cannot claim exemption from suit by a corporation created by Congress—as was the *Atlantic & Pacific Railroad Company—for purposes authorized by the Constitution and laws of 178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

the United States. This contention rests upon the ground that the Eleventh Amendment—which was passed because of the decision in Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 1 L. ed. 440—only declares that the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States "by citizens of another state, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state," and does not forbid an action against a state by a corporation created by Congress. It is further said that although the present case may not be embraced by the clause of § 2, article 3, of the Constitution, extending the judicial power of the United States to controversies "between a state and citizens of another state" and to controversies "between a state, or the citizens thereof, and foreign states, citizens, or subjects," this suit having been brought by a Federal corporation created for national purposes (Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; California v. Central P. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 750, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 153, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1073; Northern P. R. Co. v. Amato, 144 U. S. 465, 36 L. ed. 506, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 740), is embraced by the clause of the same article extending the judicial power of the United States, in express words, "to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority."

If the Constitution be so interpreted it would follow that any corporation created by Congress may sue a state in a circuit court of the United States upon any cause of action, whatever its nature, if the value of the matter in dispute is sufficient to give jurisdiction. We cannot approve this interpretation.

This question is controlled by the principles announced in Hans v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 1, 10, 14, 16-21, 33 L. ed. 842, 845, 846, 848, 849, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 504, 505, 507-509. That was an action brought in the circuit court of the United States by a citizen of Louisiana against that state. It was a case that could be said to have arisen under the Constitution of the United States; and the contention was that the Eleventh Amendment did not exclude from the jurisdiction of the circuit court a suit brought against a state by one of its own citizens, provided it was one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States.

*In the opinion in that case, delivered by [447] Mr. Justice Bradley, reference was made to the question involved in Chisholm v. Georgia, and to what had been said by leading statesmen, prior to the adoption of the Constitution, in support of the general proposition that sovereignty could not, without its consent, be brought to the bar of any court at the suit of private parties or corporations. This court said: "That a state cannot be sued by a citizen of another state, or of a foreign state, on the mere ground that the case is one arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, is clearly established by the decisions of this court in several recent cases. Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711, 27 L. ed. 448, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128; Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52, 29 L. ed. 805, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 608; Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443, 31 L. ed. 216, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164. Those were cases arising under the Constitution of the United States, upon laws complained of as impairing the obligation of contracts, one of which was the constitutional amendment of Louisiana complained of in the present case. Relief was sought against state officers who professed to act in obedience to those laws. This court held that the suits were virtually against the states themselves, and were consequently violative of the Eleventh Amendment of the Constitution, and could not be maintained. It was not denied that they presented cases arising under the Constitution; but, notwithstanding that, they were held to be prohibited by the Amendment referred to."

Referring to certain observations made by Hamilton, Madison, and Marshall, in refutation of the doctrine that states were liable to suits, the court also said: "It seems to us that these views of those great advocates and defenders of the Constitution were most sensible and just; and they apply equally to the present case as to that then under discussion. The letter is appealed to now, as it was then, as a ground for sustaining a suit brought by an individual against a state. The reason against it is as strong in this case as it was in that. It is an attempt to strain the Constitution and the law to a construction never imagined or dreamed of. Can we suppose that, when the Eleventh Amendment was adopted, it was understood to be left open for citizens of a state to sue their own state in the Federal courts, whilst [448] the idea of suits by citizens of other states, or of foreign states, was indignantly repelled? Suppose that Congress, when proposing the Eleventh Amendment, had appended to it a proviso that nothing therein contained should prevent a state from being sued by its own citizens in cases arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, can we imagine that it would have been adopted by the states? The supposition that it would is almost an absurdity on its face."

Again: "The suability of a state without its consent was a thing unknown to the law. This has been so often laid down and acknowledged by courts and jurists that it is hardly necessary to be formally asserted.

... 'It may be accepted as a point of departure unquestioned,' said Mr. Justice Miller, in Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co. 109 U. S. 446, 451, 27 L. ed. 992, 994, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 292, 609, 'that neither a state nor the United States can be sued as defendant in any court in this country without their consent, except in the limited class of cases in which a state may be made a party in the Supreme Court of the United States by virtue of the original jurisdiction conferred on this court by the Constitution.' Undoubtedly a state may be sued by its own consent, as was the case in Curran v. Ar- kansas, 15 How. 304, 309, 14 L. ed. 705, 708, and in Clark v. Barnard, 108 U. S. 436, 447, 27 L. ed. 780, 784, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 878. The suit in the former case was prosecuted by virtue of a state law which the legislature passed in conformity to the Constitution of that state. But this court decided, in Beers v. Arkansas, 20 How. 527, 529, 15 L. ed. 991, 992, that the state could repeal that law at any time; that it was not a contract within the terms of the Constitution prohibiting the passage of state laws impairing the obligation of a contract. . . . It is not necessary that we should enter upon an examination of the reason or expediency of the rule which exempts a sovereign state from prosecution in a court of justice at the suit of individuals. This is fully discussed by writers on public law. It is enough for us to declare its existence."

The present plaintiffs, as did the plaintiffs in Hans v. Louisiana, base the argument in support of their right to sue the state in the circuit court of the United States upon a mere letter of the Constitution. We deem it unnecessary to repeat *or enlarge upon the [449] reasons given in Hans v. Louisiana why a suit brought against a state by one of its citizens was excluded from the judicial power of the United States, even when it is one arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States. They apply equally to a suit of that character brought against the state by a corporation created by Congress. Such a suit cannot, consistently with the Constitution, be brought within the cognizance of a circuit court of the United States without the consent of the state. It could never have been intended to exclude from Federal judicial power suits arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States when brought against a state by private individuals or state corporations, and at the same time extend such power to suits of like character brought by Federal corporations against a state without its consent.

The Circuit Court entertained jurisdiction of the cause and dismissed the bill. The Circuit Court of Appeals held that the Circuit Court erred in holding jurisdiction, but affirmed the order of dismissal upon the ground of want of jurisdiction in the latter court to take cognizance of such a case as is here presented. We approve the action of the Circuit Court of Appeals, and its judgment is affirmed.

GEORGE H. EARLE, Jr., Receiver of the Chestnut Street National Bank, Plff. in Err.,

v.

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, at the Suggestion and to the Use of the COMMONWEALTH TITLE, INSURANCE, & TRUST COMPANY, Trustee for Mary Rodgers under the Will of Benjamin Milnes, Deceased.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 449-456.)

National banks—attachment of, as guar-
178 U. S.

nishce, in state court—appointment of receiver—order for execution.

1. An attachment against a national bank as garnishee is not an attachment against the bank or its property nor a suit against it, within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5242, prohibiting suit against such bank in a state court, with a view to acquiring a preference over other creditors, after insolvency or in contemplation thereof.
2. The suspension of a national bank and the appointment of a receiver do not defeat a right previously acquired by service of an attachment against the bank as garnishee, but the assets pass to the receiver burdened with a lien in favor of the plaintiff in the attachment, which cannot be disregarded or displaced by the Comptroller of the Currency.
3. A state court has no authority to order execution against a national bank in the hands of a receiver, for the enforcement of a lien obtained before the receiver's appointment by an attachment against the bank as garnishee, although the rights thus acquired must be recognized by the Comptroller of the Currency.

[No. 218.]

Argued April 11, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania to review a decision affirming a judgment against a national bank in the hands of a receiver. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Asa W. Waters argued the cause and, with Mr. W. H. Addicks, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John G. Johnson argued the cause and filed a supplemental brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Alfred Day Wiler argued the cause and, with Messrs. Crawford, Laughlin, & Dallas, filed a brief for defendant in error.

[450] Mr. Justice Harlan* delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 29th day of September, 1897, the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, at the suggestion and to the use of the Commonwealth Title, Insurance, & Trust Company, trustee for Mary Rodgers, obtained judgment upon a bond in the court of common pleas for the county of Philadelphia against one James Long for the sum of $31,499. A writ of attachment issued upon that judgment, and on the 5th day of October, 1897, an alias writ was issued against the Chestnut Street National Bank of Philadelphia, as garnishee. The writ was served on October 28, 1897, and commanded the bank to show cause in that court on a day named why the judgment against Long, with costs of writ, should not be levied of the effects of the defendant in the hands of the bank. Afterwards, on November 6, 1897, special interrogatories were filed by the plaintiff, and a rule was entered requiring the bank, as garnishee, to answer the same within a named time. Subsequently the bank filed its answer in the attachment proceedings, and November 24, 1897, it filed an answer to the special interrogatories; and, on December 15, 1897, a rule was entered by plaintiff for judgment against the bank, as garnishee, on its answers.

A few days later, on the 23d day of December, 1897, the bank suspended payment of its obligations, and by order of the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States closed its *doors to business; and, January 29, 1898, the present plaintiff in error, Earle, was appointed by that officer as receiver of the bank and duly qualified as such. [451]

Subsequently, May 5, 1898, Earle, as receiver, entered his appearance in the above action, and filed a suggestion of record setting forth his appointment and qualification, and on the following day filed an affidavit stating his appointment as receiver. On the succeeding day a motion was made and filed (entered as a rule) by the receiver to vacate and dismiss the attachment served upon the bank, garnishee, for want of jurisdiction in the court of common pleas under § 5242 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the receiver insisting that all the proceedings in attachment against the bank were null and void.

The rule entered December 15, 1897, for judgment against the bank, and the rule to vacate and dismiss the attachment for want of jurisdiction in the court of common pleas, were heard, and that court, on May 21, 1898, made absolute the rule for judgment, and entered the following: "And now, to wit, May 21, 1898, upon the hearing of the attachment in the above case and the interrogatories of the plaintiff and the answer of the garnishee thereto, it is adjudged that the above-named garnishee has a deposit in money belonging to the above-named defendant of $2,900, with interest from October 28, 1897; and also that the said garnishee has 77 shares of 'National Gas Trust stock' and 33 shares of the capital stock of the Eighth National Bank of Philadelphia belonging to the said defendant and pledged by him with the said garnishee for payment by him to it of the sum of $17,831, with interest thereon from April 22, 1897, and that the plaintiff have execution of any dividends on the said deposit of $2,900, with interest, in common with the other creditors of said garnishee, less $35 counsel fee for the said garnishee's counsel, and that if the said garnishee refuse or neglect, on demand by the sheriff, to pay the same, then the same to be levied of the said garnishee according to law, as in the case of a judgment against it for its proper debt, and also that the plaintiff have leave to issue a writ of fieri facias against the above-named defendant for the sale of the said 77 shares of 'National Gas Trust Stock' and 33 shares of the capital *stock of the Eighth National Bank of Phila- [452] delphia, pledged by the defendant with the garnishee, subject to the garnishee's claim under said pledge of the sum of $17,831, with interest thereon from April 22, 1897, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to satisfy the plaintiff's judgment against the defendant in this case, with costs."

The rule to vacate and dismiss the proceedings in attachment for want of jurisdiction in the court of common pleas was discharged.

The cause was carried to the supreme court of Pennsylvania, where the judgment of the court of common pleas was affirmed.

By the Revised Statutes of the United States it is provided:

"§ 5234. On becoming satisfied, as specified in §§ 5226 and 5227, that any [national banking] association has refused to pay its circulating notes as therein mentioned, and is in default, the Comptroller of the Currency may forthwith appoint a receiver and require of him such bond and security as he deems proper. Such receiver, under the direction of the Comptroller, shall take possession of the books, records, and assets of every description of such association, collect all debts, dues, and claims belonging to it, and, upon the order of a court of record of competent jurisdiction, may sell or compound all bad or doubtful debts, and, on a like order, may sell all the real and personal property of such association, on such terms as the court shall direct, and may, if necessary to pay the debts of such association, enforce the individual liability of the stockholders. Such receiver shall pay over all money so made to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the Comptroller, and also make report to the Comptroller of all his acts and proceedings.

"§ 5235. The Comptroller shall, upon appointing a receiver, cause notice to be given, by advertisement in such newspapers as he may direct for three consecutive months, calling on all persons who may have claims against such association to present the same and make legal proof thereof.

[453] "§ 5236. From time to time, after full provision has been first made for refunding to the United States any deficiency in *redeeming the notes of such association, the Comptroller shall make a ratable dividend of the money so paid over to him by such receiver on all such claims as may have been proved to his satisfaction or adjudicated in a court of competent jurisdiction, and, as the proceeds of the assets of such association are paid over to him, shall make further dividends on all claims previously proved or adjudicated; and the remainder of the proceeds, if any, shall be paid over to the shareholders of such association, or their legal representatives, in proportion to the stock by them respectively held."

"§ 5242. All transfers of the notes, bonds, bills of exchange, or other evidences of debt owing to any national banking association, or of deposits to its credit; all assignments of mortgages, sureties on real estate or of judgments or decrees in its favor; all deposits of money, bullion, or other valuable thing for its use, or for the use of any of its shareholders or creditors; and all payments of money to either, made after the commission of an act of insolvency, or in contemplation thereof, made with a view to prevent the application of its assets in the manner prescribed by this chapter, or with a view to the preference of one creditor to another, except in payment of its circulating notes, shall be utterly null and void; and no attachment, injunction, or execution shall be issued against such association or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, or proceeding in any state, county, or municipal court."

Sections 5234, 5235, and 5236, above quoted, have reference to the affairs and property of national banks in the hands of receivers, and the administration of its assets by the Comptroller; and the words in § 5242, "no attachment, injunction, or execution shall be issued against such association or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, or proceeding in any state, county, or municipal court," are to be construed in connection with the previous parts of the same section declaring null and void certain transfers, assignments, deposits, and payments made after the commission by the bank "of an act of insolvency, or in contemplation thereof," with the intent to prevent the application of the bank's assets in the manner prescribed by Congress, or with a view to the preference by the *bank of one [454] creditor to another. Whatever may be the scope of § 5242, an attachment sued out against the bank as garnishee is not an attachment against the bank or its property, nor a suit against it, within the meaning of that section. It is an attachment to reach the property or interests held by the bank for others. After the Chestnut Street National Bank had been served as garnishee with the attachment sued out in the Long suit, but before it went into the hands of a receiver, it admitted in its answers to special interrogations in the suit against Long that it was indebted to Long on a clearing-house due bill, and also that it held as collateral security for his debt to it certain shares of the stock of the National Gas Trust, as well as certain shares of the stock of the Eighth National Bank of Philadelphia. By the service of the attachment upon the bank, the plaintiff in the attachment acquired a right to have the money and property belonging to Long in the hands of the bank applied in satisfaction of its judgment against him, subject, of course, to the bank's lien for any debt due to it at that time from him. The bank therefore became bound to account to the plaintiff in the attachment for whatever property or money it held for the benefit or to the use of Long at the time the attachment was served upon it. And the right thus acquired by the service of the attachment was not lost by the suspension of the bank and the appointment of the receiver. The assets of the bank passed to the receiver burdened, as to the interest that Long had in them, with a lien in favor of the plaintiff in the attachment which could not be disregarded or displaced by the Comptroller of the Currency.

We must not, however, be understood as holding that the distribution of the bank's assets in the hands of the receiver could have been in any wise directly controlled by the state court or seized under an attachment or execution in the hands of any state officer.

On the contrary, the direction in the statute that the receiver pay over all moneys realized by him from the assets of the bank to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the Comptroller, furnished a rule of conduct for him which neither an order of nor any proceedings in the state court could affect, modify, or [455] change. The *scheme of the statute relating to suspended national banks is that from the time of a bank's suspension all its assets, of whatever kind, as they are at the time of suspension, pass, in the first instance, to the receiver, the proceeds thereof to be distributed by the Comptroller among those whose claims are proved to his satisfaction or are adjudicated by some court of competent jurisdiction. So, when the Chestnut Street National Bank suspended and went into the hands of a receiver the entire control and administration of its assets were committed to the receiver and the Comptroller, subject, however, to any rights or priority previously acquired by the plaintiff through the proceedings in the suit against Long.

It results that the state court did not err in overruling the motion of the receiver to vacate and dismiss the attachment issued in the suit brought against Long and served upon the bank as garnishee prior to its suspension. The proceedings in the state court prior to the appointment of a receiver were all in due course of law. We do not understand that to be controverted. But we are of opinion that the order of judgment of May 21, 1898, was erroneous in some particulars. As the bank did not cease to exist as a corporation upon its suspension and the appointment of a receiver, it was competent for the state court to determine, as between the plaintiff in the attachment and the bank, what rights were acquired by the former as against the latter by the service of the attachment; and its judgment, thus restricted, could have been brought to the attention of the Comptroller for his guidance in distributing the assets of the bank. To this extent the judgment below is affirmed. But, for the reasons already stated, we hold that the state court had no authority to order execution in favor of the plaintiff of any dividends upon the money on deposit in the bank to Long's credit at the time the bank was served with the attachment, and direct the sale of the shares of stock originally held by the bank as collateral security, but which passed upon the suspension of the bank to the custody of the receiver. This part of the judgment should be set aside. It is proper to say that the rights acquired by the defendant in error under the garnishee proceedings can be made effective upon application [456] *to the Comptroller, to whom Congress has intrusted the power to distribute the assets of a suspended bank among those entitled thereto.

The decree is reversed to the extent indicated, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

Reversed.

178 U. S.

GEORGE H. EARLE, Jr., Receiver of the Chestnut Street National Bank, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WILLIAM CONWAY.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 456-458.)

National banks—garnishment of receiver.

An attachment of a national bank and its receiver as garnishees can be maintained in a state court, although it cannot create any lien upon specific assets of the bank in the receiver's hands, or disturb his custody of those assets, or prevent him from paying to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, all moneys coming to his hands or realized by him as receiver from the sale of the property and assets of the bank.

[No. 219.]

Argued April 11, 1900. Decided May 14, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to review a decision affirming an order sustaining the jurisdiction of a state court in garnishment of a national bank and its receiver. Affirmed.

See same case below, 189 Pa. 610, 42 Atl. 303.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Asa W. Waters argued the cause and, with Mr. W. H. Addicks, filed a brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John G. Johnson argued the cause and filed a supplemental brief for plaintiff in error.

Mr. James C. Stillwell argued the cause and filed a brief for defendant in error.

Mr. Justice Harlan* delivered the opinion of the court: [456]

This case differs somewhat in its facts from those in Earle v. Pennsylvania, just decided, 178 U. S. 449, ante, 1146, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 915. It appears that on February 24, 1898, the appellee Conway, in an action of assumpsit in the court of common pleas of the county of Philadelphia, obtained *a judgment [457] against one John G. Schall for $1,012.43. Upon that judgment a writ of attachment was issued and served May 24 and 25, 1898, upon the Chestnut Street National Bank of Philadelphia and upon Earle, receiver, as garnishees,—the receiver having been appointed January 29, 1898,—commanding them to show cause on a day named why the judgment against Schall, with costs of writ, should not be levied of his effects in their hands.

The bank and the receiver entered their appearance as defendants and garnishees "for the purpose only of moving said court to set aside the writ of summons in attachment sur judgment against him and them, and to dismiss and vacate all proceedings in attachment therein against him or them." That motion was made upon the ground that the court of common pleas was without jurisdiction under § 5242 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. The motion was denied, and the order of the court of common pleas was affirmed by the supreme court of Pennsylvania.

NOTE.—As to conflict of jurisdiction between Federal and state courts—see Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 22 C. C. A. 334, and note.

As to garnishment of receivers—see note to J. I. Case Plow Works v. Finks, 26 C. C. A. 49.

We are of opinion that it was not error to deny the motion to set aside the service of the writ of attachment on the bank and the receiver. No sound reason can be given why the receiver of a national bank may not be notified by service upon him of an attachment issued from a state court of the nature and extent of the interest asserted or sought to be acquired by the plaintiff in the attachment in the assets in his custody. But for the reasons stated in Earle v. Pennsylvania, such an attachment cannot create any lien upon specific assets of the bank in the hands of the receiver, nor disturb his custody of those assets, nor prevent him from paying to the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, all moneys coming to his hands or realized by him as receiver from the sale of the property and assets of the bank. After the service of the attachment upon the receiver it became his duty to report the facts to the Comptroller, and it then became the duty of the latter to hold any funds coming to his hands through the Treasurer of the United States as the proceeds of the sale of the bank's assets subject to any interest which the plaintiff may have legally acquired therein as against *his debtor under the attachment issued on the judgment in his favor in the state court.

As the judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania goes no further than to sustain the right of the plaintiff to have the attachment served upon the receiver as garnishee, it is affirmed.

Mr. Justice White dissents.

COLUMBUS WINCHESTER MOTES, alias Chess Motes, et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.
UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 458-476.)

Criminal law—conspiracy accompanied by murder—sentence to imprisonment for life—failure of jury to fix punishment—error to circuit court—on constitutional question—constitutional right to meet witnesses—admission in evidence of statement on preliminary trial.

1. A sentence to imprisonment for life for conspiracy accompanied with murder, in violation of U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 5508, 5509, providing for such punishment as the laws of the state in which the offense is committed may impose, is not in excess of the authority of a circuit court of the United States, although the verdict of the jury has not indicated the punishment, as required by the state statutes in case of murder, since the act of Congress of January 15, 1897, chap. 29, abolishes the death penalty in such cases, and provides for a sentence to imprisonment for life.

NOTE.—As to right of accused to be confronted with witnesses—see note to Gore v. State (Ark.) 5 L. R. A. 833.

2. A criminal case may be taken directly from a circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), although it is not a case of conviction of a capital crime, where it involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States.
3. The right of an accused under U. S. Const. 6th Amend., to be confronted with witnesses against him, is violated by permitting a deposition or statement of an absent witness, taken at an examining trial, to be read at the final trial, when it does not appear that the witness was absent by the suggestion, connivance, or procurement of the accused, but it does appear that his absence was due to the negligence of the prosecution.
4. Error in the admission of evidence for the prosecution will not require a reversal of a conviction against one who has in fact said under oath that he is guilty of the charge preferred against him.

[No. 257.]

Submitted April 23, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Alabama to review a conviction for conspiracy accompanied by murder. Affirmed as to one defendant and reversed as to others. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Lee Cowart submitted the cause for plaintiff in error.

Assistant Attorney General Boyd submitted the cause for defendant in error.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

*Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion—[459] ion of the court:

Columbus Winchester Motes, alias Chess Motes, Walter W. Motes, William Robert Taylor, Jasper Robinson, John Littlejohn, *and Mark Grant Blankenship, were indicted [460] in the circuit court of the United States for the southern division of the northern district of Alabama under §§ 5508 and 5509 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Those sections are as follows:

"§ 5508. If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same; or if two or more persons go in disguise on the highway, or on the premises of another, with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege so secured, they shall be fined not more than five thousand dollars and imprisoned not more than ten years; and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

"§ 5509. If, in the act of violating any provision in either of the two preceding sections, any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the state in which the offense is committed."

The first count of the indictment charged in substance that on the 14th day of March, 1898, and within the jurisdiction of the court, the persons above named conspired to injure, oppress, threaten, and intimidate one W. A. Thompson, a citizen of the United States, in the free exercise and enjoyment of a right and privilege secured to him by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and because of his having exercised the same, in that he had about the 2d day of October, 1897, informed one Robert A. Moseley, United States commissioner for the northern district of Alabama, that Bob Taylor, Chess Motes, Ben Morris, Jasper Robinson, and Walter Motes had, about the months of July, August, September, October, November, and December 1895, violated the internal revenue laws of the United States by unlawfully carrying on the business of distillers without having given bond, as required by law, and having [461] their control *a still and distilling apparatus set up without having the same registered. It was also charged that in furtherance of the conspiracy so formed, and to effect the object thereof, the accused "did on, to wit, about the 14th day of March eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, go upon the highway and did then and there, in the county of Talladega, in the state of Alabama, in the southern division of the northern district of Alabama, and within the jurisdiction of said court, unlawfully, wilfully, premeditatedly, deliberately, and with malice aforethought kill and murder the said W. A. Thompson by shooting him with a gun or guns, because he, the said W. A. Thompson, had reported to the said Robert A. Moseley, United States commissioner as aforesaid, said violation of the internal revenue laws of the United States by the said Bob Taylor, Chess Motes, Ben Morris, Jasper Robinson, and Walter Motes, as aforesaid, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the United States of America."

The third count differed from the first one only in charging a conspiracy, formed by the same persons, to injure, oppress, threaten, and intimidate Thompson because of his having, about March 8th, 1898, informed a deputy collector of internal revenue that Mark Grant Blankenship had, about the abovedate, carried on the business of distiller in violation of law; also, that to effect the object of that conspiracy, and because of Thompson having given such information to the deputy collector of internal revenue, the accused had unlawfully, wilfully, premeditatedly, deliberately, and with malice aforethought, killed and murdered him.

There are seven counts in the indictment, but the first and third are sufficient to show the nature of the charges against the accused, and to bring out the questions disposed of by this opinion.

It is recited in the bill of exceptions that Taylor pleaded guilty, but the transcript does not contain any entry of record showing such to be the fact.

The jury found the "defendants Walter W. Motes, Columbus W. Motes, Jasper Robinson, John Littlejohn, and Mark Grant Blankenship guilty as charged in the indictment," and *in their verdict asked "the mercy of the [462] court for the four defendants, Walter W. Motes, Jasper Robinson, John Littlejohn, Mark Blankenship, and especially for John Littlejohn and Jasper Robinson."

Motions in arrest of judgment and for new trial were overruled, and judgment was entered upon the verdict, sentencing the defendants other than Taylor to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life.

We have seen that by § 5508 of the Revised Statutes it is made an offense against the United States for two or more persons to conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States,—the punishment prescribed being a fine of not more than $5,000, imprisonment not more than ten years, and ineligibility to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States. And by § 5509 it is provided that if in committing the above offense any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall suffer such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the state in which the offense is committed.

No question has been made—indeed none could successfully be made—as to the constitutionality of these statutory provisions. Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U. S. 651, 28 L. ed. 274, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; United States v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76, 28 L. ed. 673, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 35. Referring to those provisions and to the clause of the Constitution giving Congress authority to pass all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers specifically granted to it, and all other powers vested in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof, this court has said: "In the exercise of this general power of legislation, Congress may use any means appearing to it most eligible and appropriate, which are adapted to the end to be accomplished, and are consistent with the letter and the spirit of the Constitution." Logan v. United States, 144 U. S. 263, 283, 36 L. ed. 429, 435, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 617, and authorities there cited. It was the right and privilege of Thompson, in return for the protection he enjoyed under the Constitution and laws of the United States, to *aid in the execution of [463] the laws of his country by giving information to the proper authorities of violations of those laws. That right and privilege may properly be said to be secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States. And it was competent for Congress to declare a conspiracy to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate a citizen because of the exercise by him of such right or privilege to be an offense against the United States.

The reference in the above sections to the laws of the state in which the offense was committed makes it necessary to ascertain from the laws of Alabama what punishment could be inflicted for the crime that was committed while the conspiracy referred to in § 5508 was being carried into execution.

By the Code of Alabama it is provided: "§ 4854. Every homicide, perpetrated by poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing; or committed in the perpetration of, or the attempt to perpetrate, any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary; or perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being other than him who is killed; or perpetrated by any act greatly dangerous to the lives of others, and evidencing a depraved mind regardless of human life, although without any preconceived purpose to deprive any particular person of life,—is murder in the first degree; and every other homicide committed under such circumstances as would have constituted murder at common law is murder in the second degree." "§ 4857. When the jury find the defendant guilty under an indictment for murder, they must ascertain, by their verdict, whether it is murder in the first or second degree; but if the defendant on arraignment confesses his guilt, the court must proceed to determine the degree of the crime, by the verdict of a jury, upon an examination of the testimony, and pass sentence accordingly. § 4858. Any person who is guilty of murder in the first degree must, on conviction, suffer death or imprisonment in the penitentiary for life, at the discretion of the jury; and any person who is guilty of murder in the second degree must, on conviction, be imprisoned in the "penitentiary for not less than ten years, at the discretion of the jury." Ala. Code 1896, vol. 2, Criminal.

Taking these statutory provisions together, the question arises whether the court below had authority, in view of the verdict of the jury,—“guilty as charged in the indictment,”—to sentence the accused to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. The contention of the accused is that it was for the jury to indicate by their verdict the punishment to be imposed by the court, and that the court was without power to act until the jury indicated the degree of the crime committed.

It is true that the crime charged against the accused was what is made by the laws of Alabama murder in the first degree, such offense being punishable with death or imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. And in that state it is the duty of the jury to ascertain by their verdict whether the offense charged was murder in the first or second degree. As therefore, under the laws of Alabama, it was in the discretion of the jury, and not for the court, to say whether murder in the first degree should be punished by death or by imprisonment for life, and as the verdict of the jury did not indicate the mode of punishment, there would have been some difficulty in giving effect to that clause of § 5509 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, subjecting the accused to such punishment as is attached by the laws of the state in which the offense is committed, but for recent legislation by Congress.

The legislation to which we refer is found in §§ 1, 2, and 3 of the act of January 15th, 1897, chap. 29, which provides: “§ 1. That in all cases where the accused is found guilty of the crime of murder or of rape under § 5339 or § 5345, Revised Statutes, the jury may qualify their verdict by adding thereto ‘without capital punishment;’ and whenever the jury shall return a verdict qualified as aforesaid the person convicted shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for life. § 2. That except offenses mentioned in §§ 5332, 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes, when a person is *convicted of any[465] offense to which the punishment of death is now specifically affixed by the laws of the United States, he shall be sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor for life, and when any person is convicted of an offense to which the punishment of death, or a lesser punishment, in the discretion of the court, is affixed, the maximum punishment shall be imprisonment at hard labor for life. § 3. That the punishment of death prescribed for any offense specified by the statutes of the United States, except in §§ 5332, 1342, 1624, 5339, and 5345, Revised Statutes, is hereby abolished, and all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.” 29 Stat. at L. 487.

It will be observed that by § 3 of this act (which is the latest statute on the subject) the death penalty is abolished in all cases of offenses against the United States except those referred to in certain sections, which do not embrace the present case. It was not, therefore, in the power of the court below to have sentenced the plaintiffs in error to suffer death for the crime of murder committed in the prosecution of the conspiracy which is made by § 5508 an offense against the United States. But we are to determine the scope of § 5509 in connection with the act of 1897. Under that act the punishment of death could not be inflicted except in the cases specified. So that § 5509 is to be enforced as if it declared that the offense therein prescribed should be punished in such mode as was consistent with the laws of Alabama, provided—such is the effect of the act of Congress of January 15th, 1897—the accused should not for any offense covered by that section be subjected to the penalty of death. The provision in the Code of Alabama giving the jury discretion to affix the punishment of death or imprisonment for life in cases of murder in the first degree can have no application here, because the act of 1897 forbade the former mode of punishment in such a case as the present one. When, therefore, the jury found the defendants guilty as charged in the indictment, they found them guilty of what, under the laws of Alabama, was murder in the first degree, and they were sentenced by the circuit court of the United States to suffer imprisonment for life, which those laws authorized in cases of that character. This was a substantial compliance with the provisions of §§ 5508 and 5509 of the Revised Statutes.

[466] It results that the circuit court imposed the only punishment *authorized by the laws of the United States for the crime of which the defendants were found guilty.

To avoid misapprehension it should be said in this connection that the circuit court had no jurisdiction of this case simply as one of murder committed within the limits of the state, but only as one of conspiracy, under the act of Congress, accompanied by murder.

The Assistant Attorney General suggests as worthy of consideration whether, under this interpretation of the statutes, the present case can be brought here directly from the circuit court. This suggestion is based upon the provision in the act of January 20th, 1897, chap. 68, which withdraws from the consideration of this court, upon appeal or writ of error direct from the circuit court, cases of conviction of infamous crimes not capital, and gives jurisdiction in such cases, upon appeal or writ of error, only to the proper circuit court of appeals; and it is assumed that no criminal case can, upon any ground, be brought here directly from a circuit court of the United States, unless it be a case of conviction of a capital crime. 29 Stat. at L. 492. But such is not the law. Among other cases, this court, under the act of March 3d, 1891 (26 Stat. at L. 826, chap. 517), establishing circuit courts of appeals, can take cognizance of a criminal case upon writ of error to review the judgment of a circuit court, when the case really "involves the construction or application of the Constitution of the United States." That act does not make a distinction between civil and criminal causes, such as is implied by the above suggestion of the government. At the present term of this court we have taken cognizance of a criminal case involving a misdemeanor, brought here directly from a circuit court of the United States. Rider v. United States, 178 U. S. 251, ante, 1057, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 838. And we had previously in United States v. Rider, 163 U. S. 132, 139, 41 L. ed. 101, 103, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 983, 985, said: "By § 6 [of the circuit court of appeals act] the judgments or decrees of the circuit courts of appeals were made final 'in all cases arising under the criminal laws,' and in certain other classes of cases, unless questions were certified to this court or the whole case ordered up by writ of certiorari as therein provided. American Constr. Co. v. Jacksonville T. & K. W. R. Co. 148 U. S. 372, 380, 37 L. ed. 486, 489, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 758.

[467] *Thus appellate jurisdiction was given in all criminal cases by writ of error either from this court or from the circuit courts of appeals, and in all civil cases by appeal or error without regard to the amount in controversy, except as to appeals or writs of error to or from the circuit courts of appeals in cases not made final as specified in § 6." We further said in that case, that the object of the act of March 3d, 1891, chap. 517, was to distribute between this court and the circuit courts of appeals the entire appellate jurisdiction over the circuit courts of the United States.

The present case does involve the construction and application of the Constitution of the United States. It is necessary to determine whether the admission of certain testimony was not an infringement of rights secured to the accused by the 6th Amendment of the Constitution, declaring that "in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right . . . to be confronted with the witnesses against him."

It appears from the bill of exceptions that the government offered to read to the jury the written statement of William Robert Taylor, taken in a preliminary examination before United States Commissioner Wilson of the case of the United States against Columbus W. Motes, William Robert Taylor, John Littlejohn, and Dodge Blankenship. For the purpose of "laying a predicate" for offering that statement in evidence, Captain B. W. Bell was examined. He testified "that he was a special officer of the Department of Justice; that he had been engaged in working up the cases against these defendants and preparing them for trial; that in August, 1898, he caused the arrest of said William Robert Taylor and also Columbus W. Motes, John Littlejohn, and Dodge Blankenship on a charge of conspiracy and murder of W. A. Thompson, and that on the 19th day of August, 1898, during and on the second day of their preliminary trial, one of the defendants, William Robert Taylor, voluntarily became a witness for the prosecution, and made a statement implicating in said murder Columbus W. Motes, John Littlejohn, and Dodge Blankenship, who were at that time having their preliminary hearing before said commissioner, and also implicating in said murder Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson, *who had been brought to said preliminary trial as witnesses for the government, and that on the second day of said preliminary trial he (Bell) caused the arrest of the said Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson; that Taylor and the other three defendants on trial with him were held for trial by the commissioner and committed to jail without bail to await trial, and that since that time the said Taylor has been confined in the Jefferson County, Alabama, jail under commitment issued by said commissioner; that after the beginning of the present trial, on the 20th of September, 1898, he went to the jail, took said Taylor into his custody more than two days before said Taylor escaped, and that said Taylor had not been in jail since, but that he had placed him in charge of one Ed. May, a witness for the government in this case, and instructed May to let Taylor stay at the hotel at night with his family, and that in pursuance of said instruction Taylor remained at the hotel Tuesday night and Wednesday day night before he absconded on Thursday; that he saw Taylor in the corridors of the courtroom about 10 o'clock A. M. Thursday, before he was called as a witness, about 11 o'clock the same day, and that when Taylor failed to respond he made a search for him in the city of Birmingham, and telegraphed to several places, and could not find him or learn anything at all as to his whereabouts." Bell further testified on the preliminary trial before H. A. Wilson, United States commissioner: "Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson were arrested during the trial of the other defendants, Columbus W. Motes, John Littlejohn, and Dodge Blankenship, said Taylor having implicated them in his testimony upon said trial. The defendants were all represented upon said preliminary trial by Mr. Lee Cowart. Mr. Cowart cross-examined the witness, as shown in the testimony; that all of the defendants, including the said Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson, had an opportunity to cross-examine the said witness Taylor, and he, in fact, was cross-examined by Mr. Cowart, acting either as attorney for Columbus W. Motes, John Littlejohn, and Dodge Blankenship, or for all defendants; that said cross-examination was reduced to writing; that he (said Bell) had never made or offered the said Taylor any [469] inducements, promises, reward, or *hope to induce him to make said statement; that before said Taylor was examined as a witness on the said preliminary trial he was taken to the office of the United States attorney, who cautioned him to make no statement unless it was purely voluntary, and told him emphatically that he could make no promise and offer him no hope whatever, and that said Taylor stated that he made the statement voluntarily and to relieve his own mind."

The United States marshal testified on behalf of United States that he had instructed his deputies that Taylor had escaped; that he had offered a reward of $200 for his arrest; that he had made diligent search in the city of Birmingham for Taylor, and could not learn anything as to his whereabouts. The chief of police of the city of Birmingham testified that he had not been officially notified that Taylor had escaped, but that he had seen something concerning it in the newspapers, and that he had made no special effort to arrest him and had no information as to his whereabouts. The United States then offered as a witness a deputy sheriff, who testified that the sheriff of Jefferson county and his deputies had been on the lookout for Taylor ever since his absence was known; that they had had photographs taken of him and sent them to various places, and that the deputies had been on the lookout for him all over Birmingham and other parts of Jefferson county, and that they had been unable to find him anywhere.

The government introduced as a witness H. A. Wilson, who testified as follows: "I am a United States commissioner, and held the preliminary trial in the case against these defendants on the 18th and 19th days of August, 1898. The defendants Columbus W. Motes, William Robert Taylor, John Littlejohn, and Dodge Blankenship were brought before me upon a warrant issued on affidavit before United States Commissioner R. A. Moseley, Jr., by special officer Bell. Jasper Robinson and Walter W. Motes were present in court while the case was being heard. William Robert Taylor, one of the defendants, during the trial proposed to make a statement in the nature of a confession. I cautioned him, and told him that he could not be made to testify unless he chose to do so, and asked him if *any inducement or promise had been made or [470] offered to him. He said there had not; that the statement was voluntary, and he made it to relieve his mind. Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson were present in court as defendants at the time, as well as the other defendants who were on trial. I swore William Robert Taylor as a witness, administering to him the usual oath. He was then examined, and his testimony was committed to writing. I identify this statement (referring to the evidence of Taylor here handed to the witness) as the evidence taken before me. In his testimony, as is shown and as was the fact, he implicated the defendants Jasper Robinson and Walter W. Motes, who were arrested then and there. The defendants Columbus W. Motes, Blankenship, and Littlejohn were represented by Mr. Cowart, and so were the defendants Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson as soon as they were arrested, and the trial of the four defendants then on trial, to wit, Columbus W. Motes, William Robert Taylor, John Littlejohn, and Dodge Blankenship, was proceeded with and concluded in the presence of the defendants Jasper Robinson and Walter W. Motes. Mr. Cowart, as a matter of fact, did cross-examine the witnesses, as is shown by this testimony and as I recollect it, and all of the defendants, including Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson, were allowed by me an opportunity to cross-examine, although no separate trial was had, and all of these were examined without bail."

The testimony or statement given by Taylor at the preliminary trial of part of the defendants was then read in evidence by the government, the accused objecting on the ground that a sufficient predicate had not been made for its introduction; but the objection was overruled and an exception taken. The defendants Walter W. Motes and Jasper Robinson severally objected to the reading of Taylor's statement against them on the ground that they were not on preliminary trial at the time the testimony was taken, were not parties to the case then being tried, and had not legally been called upon to cross-examine the witness. Those objections were also overruled, and an exception was taken.

Taylor's statement was lengthy, and showed a cross-examination, *or an opportunity for [471] the cross-examination, of Taylor by the present defendants. It was quite sufficient, if accepted by the jury as true, to establish the guilt of some if not of all of the accused. It is important to observe that at the time Taylor's statement was offered in evidence there had been no proof whatever of the conspiracy charged. Conspiracy was the basis of the prosecution; for in the absence of a conspiracy, in the carrying out of which the alleged murder was committed, the prosecution must have failed; the crime of murder, apart from the conspiracy to deprive a citizen of a right or privilege secured by the Constitution and laws of the United States, being punishable only by the state.

We are of opinion that the admission in evidence of Taylor's statement or deposition taken at the examining trial was in violation of the constitutional right of the defendants to be confronted with the witnesses against them. It did not appear that Taylor was absent from the trial by the suggestion, procurement, or act of the accused. On the contrary, his absence was manifestly due to the negligence of the officers of the government. Taylor was a witness for the prosecution. He had been committed to jail without bail. We have seen that the official agent of the United States in violation of law took him from jail after the trial of this case commenced, and, strangely enough, placed him in charge, not of an officer, but of another witness for the government, with instructions to the latter to allow him to stay at a hotel at night with his family. And on the very day when Taylor was called as a witness, and within an hour of being called, he was in the corridor of the courthouse. When called to testify he did not appear.

In Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 158, 159, 25 L. ed. 244, 247, which was an indictment for bigamy committed in Utah,—the prosecution being under § 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States,—the trial court admitted proof of what a witness had stated on a former trial of the accused for the same offense, but under a different indictment. This court said: "The Constitution gives the accused the right to a trial at which he should be confronted with the witnesses against him; but if a witness is absent by his own wrongful procurement, he [472] cannot *complain if competent evidence is admitted to supply the place of that which he has kept away. The Constitution does not guarantee an accused person against the legitimate consequences of his own wrongful acts. It grants him the privilege of being confronted with the witnesses against him; but if he voluntarily keeps the witnesses away, he cannot insist on his privilege. If, therefore, when absent by his procurement, evidence is supplied in some lawful way, he is in no condition to assert that his constitutional rights have been violated." In that case reference was made to several authorities, American and English, and the court further said: "The rule has its foundation in the maxim that no one shall be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong; and consequently, if there has not been in legal contemplation a wrong committed, the way has not been opened for the introduction of the testimony."

In his Treatise on Constitutional Limitations, Cooley, after observing that the testimony for the People in criminal cases can only, as a general rule, be given by witnesses in court, at the trial, says: "If the witness was sworn before the examining magistrate, or before a coroner, and the accused had an opportunity then to cross-examine him, or if there were a former trial on which he was sworn, it seems allowable to make use of his deposition, or of the minutes of his examination, if the witness has since deceased, or is insane, or sick and unable to testify, or has been summoned but appears to have been kept away by the opposite party." Cooley, Const. Lim. (2d ed.) *318.
178 U. S.

In Reg. v. Scaife, 2 Den. C. C. 281, 285, 286, S. C. 17 Q. B. 238, 5 Cox, C. C. 243, which was an indictment against three persons for a felony, it appeared that a witness had been kept out of the way by the procurement of one of the accused, and the question was whether the prosecution could use the deposition of the absent witness taken before magistrates in the mode directed by 11 & 12 Vict. chap. 42, § 17. It was held by all the judges that the deposition was not admissible against a defendant who had not caused the absence of the witness. Lord Campbell, C. J., said: "I am of opinion that the rule for a new trial must be made absolute. Evidence having been given that the defendant Smith had resorted to a contrivance to keep the *witness out of the way, the deposition [473] was admissible against him; but it was not admissible against the other defendants, there being no evidence to connect them with the contrivance. The learned judge, Cresswell, J., in summing up to the jury, seems to have made no distinction as to the duty of the jury to consider the deposition of the absent witness as evidence against the defendant Smith alone, and not as against the others. The question then is whether such a deposition is admissible against a prisoner without proof that the deponent has been kept away by his contrivance or without proof of the death of the witness. No case has yet gone so far; and I should be afraid to lay down a rule which would deprive a prisoner of the advantage of having a witness for the prosecution against him examined and cross-examined before the jury, upon every matter that may be material to his defense. I therefore think that the deposition was improperly admitted against Scaife and Rooke; and that there should be a new trial." Patteson, J.—"The deposition of the absent witness, Sarah Ann Garnett, was admissible as against the defendant Smith, by whose contrivance she was kept out of the way, but it ought to have been applied to the case against him only, and not to the case against the other prisoners. No such distinction appears to have been made at the trial, but the evidence was allowed to go to the jury generally against all the prisoners, it being assumed, without any evidence whatever to support the assumption, that they were all connected with the contrivance to keep the witness out of the way." Coleridge, J.—"Before the enactment of 11 & 12 Vict. chap. 42, I always understood the law was that if a witness were absent, either by reason of the death of the witness or by the procurement of the prisoner, the deposition was receivable in evidence against him. But I believe these were the only two cases where the absence of a witness let in his depositions. Absences from every other cause were within the same category, and did not render them admissible. The 17th section of the recent statute took another case—where a witness was proved to be so ill as to be unable to travel—out of one category and put it into another.”
1155

[474] In the present case there was not the slightest ground in the evidence to suppose that Taylor had absented himself from the trial at the instance, by the procurement, or with the assent of either of the accused. Nor, if that were material, did his disappearance occur so long prior to his being called as a witness as to justify the conclusion that he had gone out of the state and was permanently beyond the jurisdiction of the court. His absence, as already said, was plainly to be attributed to the negligence of the prosecution. The case is not within any of the recognized exceptions to the general rule prescribed in the Constitution.

It is suggested that the action of the circuit court was in harmony with the decisions of the supreme court of Alabama. Lowe v. State, 86 Ala. 47, 5 So. 435; Pruitt v. State, 92 Ala. 41, 9 So. 406. We have examined the cases in that court to which attention has been called, and do not think they sustain the ruling of the court below under the circumstances disclosed by this record. But the question cannot be made to depend upon the rules of criminal evidence prevailing in the courts of the state in which the crime was committed. It must be determined with reference to the rights of the accused as secured by the Constitution of the United States. That instrument must control the action of the courts of the United States in all criminal prosecutions before them. We are unwilling to hold it to be consistent with the constitutional requirement that an accused shall be confronted with the witnesses against him, to permit the deposition or statement of an absent witness taken at an examining trial to be read at the final trial, when it does not appear that the witness was absent by the suggestion, connivance, or procurement of the accused, but does appear that his absence was due to the negligence of the prosecution. We need not decide more in the present case.

For the error referred to, the judgment of the circuit court must be reversed as to all the plaintiffs in error and a new trial awarded, except as to Columbus W. Motes. The case as to him rests upon peculiar grounds, because of his testimony on behalf of the accused at the final trial. He testified: “My name is Columbus W. Motes; I am about thirty years old. I know the defendants who are on trial for the murder of W. A. [475] Thompson; I knew Thompson, and know when and where he was killed; I also know who killed him. He was killed on March 14th last, near his home, by myself and William Robert Taylor. No other person had anything whatever to do with it. I went to Taylor’s house on March 13th, 1898, just after he had returned from Birmingham, where he had been attending the United States court as defendant. We were both under indictment in the United States court at Birmingham for illicit distilling. Taylor attended court and I did not. W. A. Thompson was a witness against both of us, but I did not know who reported us. Taylor told me on the 13th of March, the day he got home from the United States court at Birmingham, that he got our cases continued on March 12th, 1898, until the next term of the court. We then and there agreed to kill Thompson to keep him from appearing as a witness against us at the next term of the court. We agreed to kill him on the next day as he came from Sylacauga, so the neighbors would think he was killed by Dodge Blankenship and Ad. Smith, who only a few days before that time had been arrested and bound over for illicit distilling. We took my gun, a rifle, and went to the place where we knew Thompson would pass, and waited until he came along. Taylor shot him three times with the rifle. I was watching, according to the agreement between us, to see if any person saw us. The third shot is the one that killed him. The bullet entered his forehead. After we killed him, which was about the middle of the evening, we got his money out of his pockets, $18. all in $2 bills, and the next morning we hid it in a tree near Taylor’s house. Neither John Littlejohn, Dodge Blankenship, Walter Motes, or Jasper knew anything about our plans to kill Thompson, were not present when he was killed, and had nothing whatever to do with the murder.”

In this evidence the jury had conclusive proof of the guilt of Columbus W. Motes of the crime charged in the indictment. The admission of the statement of Taylor in evidence was therefore of no consequence as to him; for in his own testimony enough was stated to require a verdict of guilty as to him, even if the jury had disregarded Taylor’s statements *altogether. We can there-[476] fore say, upon the record before us, that the evidence furnished by Taylor’s statement was not so materially to the prejudice of Columbus W. Motes as to justify a reversal of the judgment as to him. It would be trifling with the administration of the criminal law to award him a new trial because of a particular error committed by the trial court, when in effect he has stated under oath that he was guilty of the charge preferred against him.

It is proper to say that there are other questions of a serious character raised by the assignment of errors. But as those questions may not arise upon another trial, we do not now consider them.

The judgment as to Columbus Winchester Motes is affirmed, but the judgment as to all the other plaintiffs in error is reversed, with directions to grant a new trial and for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

RAVAUD K. HAWLEY et al., Appts.,
v.
L. EDGAR DILLER.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 476-496.)

Public lands—cancellation of entry under timber and stone act—rights of bona fide purchaser—purchase before patent—power to cancel entry—cancellation by Secretary of the Interior without act of Attorney General—power of court to review act of Land Department.

1. Purchasers from an entryman before the issue of a patent are not bona fide purchasers who are protected against the cancellation, for fraud of the entryman, of an entry made under the timber and stone act of June 3, 1878, chap. 151 (20 Stat. at L. 89).
2. The Land Department has jurisdiction to cancel an original entry for public lands at any time before a patent is issued.
3. Failure to give notice to transferees of an entryman, of an order of the Secretary of the Interior to send to him the papers in proceedings for the cancellation of the entry, is immaterial if they had an opportunity to be heard before the Secretary while the case was in his hands.
4. An order of the Land Department canceling an entry, if based upon a misconstruction of the law, can be corrected by the courts.
5. A decision by the Secretary of the Interior reversing a decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and rejecting and canceling an entry under the timber and stone act for fraud, is not in excess of the jurisdiction conferred upon him by law because the Attorney General did not join in the consideration of the matter, since the requirement of U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 2450, 2451, of the approval of a commissioner's decision by the Secretary and the Attorney General acting as a board, applies only to decisions sustaining irregular entries, and thereby divesting the United States of its title, and does not extend to decisions rejecting or canceling entries.

[No. 116.]

Submitted February 2, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

A PPEAL from a decree of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversing a decree of the Circuit Court in a suit to quiet title to land. Affirmed.

See same case below, 48 U. S. App. 462, 81 Fed. Rep. 651, 26 C. C. A. 514.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Charles K. Jenner submitted the cause for appellants:

The tract of land described in the certificate became private property and private land, and was severed from the mass of the public domain, upon the delivery of the final certificate.

Carroll v. Safford, 3 How. 460, 11 L. ed.

NOTE.—As to decisions of Land Department, their conclusiveness and effect—see Hartman v. Warren, 22 C. C. A. 30, and note; Carson City Gold & Silver Min. Co. v. North Star Min. Co. 28 C. C. A. 344, and note.
178 U. S.

680; Simmons v. Wagner, 101 U. S. 260, 25 L. ed. 910; Pacific Coast Min. & Mill. Co. v. Spargo, 16 Fed. Rep. 349; People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 648; Gwynne v. Niswanger, 15 Ohio, 368; Smith v. Ewing, 23 Fed. Rep. 744; Astrom v. Hammond, 3 McLean, 108, Fed. Cas. No. 596; Carroll v. Perry, 4 McLean, 26, Fed. Cas. No. 2,456; Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall. 232, 18 L. ed. 303; Union Mill. & Min. Co. v. Dangberg, 2 Sawy. 454, Fed. Cas. No. 14,370; Witherspoon v. Duncan, 4 Wall. 210, 18 L. ed. 339.

The land could be conveyed by the entryman by deed of warranty, and the title thereto transferred, with the same effect as if the patent had issued.

Wirth v. Branson, 98 U. S. 118, 25 L. ed. 86; Benson Min. & Smelting Co. v. Alta Min. & Smelting Co. 145 U. S. 428, 36 L. ed. 762, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 877; Deffebach v. Hawke, 115 U. S. 392, 29 L. ed. 423, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 95; The Yosemite Valley Case, 15 Wall. 77, sub nom. Hutchings v. Low, 21 L. ed. 82; Johnson v. Townsley, 13 Wall. 72, 20 L. ed. 485; Frisbie v. Whitney, 9 Wall. 187, 19 L. ed. 668; Myers v. Croft, 13 Wall. 291, 20 L. ed. 562.

The Land Department of the United States is not endowed with any authority of law to institute an original proceeding before any of its officers, for the purpose of trying and determining whether or not fraud has been committed by any person in relation to any contract or any subject. The question as to the guilt or innocence of a party charged with fraud is a purely judicial question, and can be tried and determined only in the courts of the United States.

Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall. 232, 18 L. ed. 303; Moore v. Robbins, 96 U. S. 532, 24 L. ed. 849.

The language used in the 3d article of the Constitution, in the distribution of powers to the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of our government, is mandatory, and it is not within the province of Congress to confer powers of the one branch upon another.

Martin v. Hunter, 1 Wheat. 327, 4 L. ed. 103.

Private rights may be interfered with by either the legislative, executive, or judicial department of the government. The executive department must in every instance show authority of law for its action, and occasion does not often arise for an examination of the limits which circumscribe its powers.

Cooley, Const. Lim. § 436.

In order that the legal proceedings may be according to the rules and principles which have been established in our systems of jurisprudence for the protection and enforcement of private rights, the tribunal must have authority to issue compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses, and the further power to issue attachment and punish for contempt.

United States v. Williams, 4 Cranch, C. C. 385, Fed. Cas. No. 16,712.

The Land Department of the United States has no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, issue attachments, or punish for contempt.

See decisions by Secretary Noble, dated July 20th, 1889; 9 Public Land Dec. pp. 133, 134.

If the United States in any particular case has a just cause for calling upon the judiciary of the country, in any of its courts, for relief by setting aside or annulling any of its contracts, its obligations, or its most solemn instrument, the question of the appeal to the judicial tribunals of the country must primarily be decided by the Attorney General of the United States.

United States v. San Jacinto Tin Co. 125 U. S. 273, 31 L. ed. 747, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 850. No counsel for appellee.

[478] *Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves a claim to a tract of land, arising out of an entry made under the act of Congress of June 3d, 1878, chap. 151, entitled "An Act for the Sale of Timber Lands in the States of California, Oregon, Nevada, and in Washington Territory," known as the timber and stone act. 20 Stat. at L. 89, chap. 151.

The act in its 1st section provided for the sale, at a named price and in quantities not exceeding 160 acres, to any person or association of persons, of surveyed public lands in the states and territory named, not included within military, Indian, and other reservations, and which were "valuable chiefly for timber, but unfit for cultivation." It also provided for the sale of lands "valuable chiefly for stone" on the same terms as timber lands.

By the 2d section of the act it was provided: "§ 2. That any person desiring to avail himself of the provisions of this act shall file with the register of the proper district a written statement in duplicate, one of which is to be transmitted to the General Land Office, designating by legal subdivisions the particular tract of land he desires to purchase, setting forth that the same is unfit for cultivation, and valuable chiefly for its timber or stone; that it is uninhabited, contains no mining or other improvements, except for ditch or canal purposes, where any such do exist, save such as were made by or belonging to the applicant, nor, as deponent verily believes, any valuable deposit of gold, silver, cinnabar, copper, or coal; that deponent has made no other application under this act; that he does not apply to purchase the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use and benefit; and that he has not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract, in any way or manner, with any person or persons whatsoever, by which the title which he might acquire from the government of the United States should inure, in whole or in part, to the benefit of any person except himself; which statement must be verified by the oath of the applicant before the *reg-falsely in the premises he shall be subject to all the pains and penalties of perjury, and shall forfeit the money which he may have paid for said lands, and all right and title to the same; and any grant or conveyance which he may have made, except in the hands of bona fide purchasers, shall be null and void."

[479] ister or receiver of the land office within the district where the land is situated; and if any person taking such oath shall swear

The 3d section, after making provision for the publication of the application to purchase, provides: "And upon payment to the proper officer of the purchase money of said land, together with the fees of the register and the receiver, as provided for in case of mining claims in the 12th section of the act approved May 10th, 1872, the applicant may be permitted to enter said tract, and, on the transmission to the General Land Office of the papers and testimony in the case, a patent shall issue thereon: Provided, That any person having a valid claim to any portion of the land may object, in writing, to the issuance of a patent to lands so held by him, stating the nature of his claim thereto; and evidence shall be taken, and the merits of said objection shall be determined by the officers of the Land Office subject to appeal, as in other land cases. Effect shall be given to the foregoing provisions of this act by regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

The bill of complaint presents substantially the following case under the above legislation:

On the 30th day of April, 1883, after having complied with the requirements of the above act, one Henry C. Hackley paid to the receiver of the land office in Olympia, Washington territory, the purchase price of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ and the N. $\frac{1}{2}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 13, and the S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 12, all in township 36 north, of range 3 east, Willamette meridian, in the county of Skagit, territory (now state) of Washington,—taking from the receiver what is known as the final or duplicate receipt. On the same day Hackley conveyed the tract described to Stephen S. Bailey by a sufficient deed of warranty; and on December 29th, 1887, Bailey sold, transferred, and conveyed the land to the appellants.

*On August 9th, 1888, the Commissioner [480] of the General Land Office suspended and held for cancellation the entry made by Hackley, it having been reported to that office by a special agent that the land in question was not chiefly valuable for timber, but was valuable agricultural land, and also that the entry by Hackley was made in the interest of Bailey.

On or about August 23d, 1888, the register and receiver of the local land office at Seattle caused notice of the action of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to be served upon the transferees, the notice stating in detail the fact of the entry by Hackley, and that the special agent had reported that he had made a personal examination of the land and found that it was not chiefly valuable for timber, but was valuable agricultural land, and that the entry thereof was made in the interest of Bailey and others, and not for the benefit and use of the entryman.

Within sixty days after the above notice, the transferees made a special appearance by attorneys, and moved that the proceeding be dismissed and the entry reinstated and passed to patent, upon the ground that the action of the Commissioner was in excess of any authority possessed by him or by the Land Department. That motion was denied by the Commissioner. The bill alleges that such denial was not the result of the consideration of any fact or facts, but of an erroneous opinion of the law.

Thereupon the transferees applied for a hearing in accordance with the notice given, and they stipulated with the attorney for the government that the case be consolidated with eleven other entries owned by them, and which were suspended at or about the same time by the Commissioner.

That application was granted, and a hearing was had before the local land office.

The register and receiver being divided in opinion the matter went to the Commissioner, who decided that all the land embraced in the entries before him, including the land here in question entered by Hackley, was timber land that could be entered as such under the act of June 3d, 1878; that all of the proceedings in relation to Hackley's entry [481] were regular; that *the proof submitted on the entry was sufficient; and that the government had failed to prove that that entry was made in the interest of Bailey or of any other person than the entryman. It was therefore ordered by that officer that the entry in question be removed from suspension and remain intact upon the records of the Land Department, and that the patent of the United States issue therefor.

Subsequently, January 31st, 1891, no patent having been issued, Secretary Noble ordered the Commissioner of the General Land Office to certify and transmit all the papers and testimony in the cause to his office. "Said order," the bill alleged, "was made by the said Secretary of the Interior without any appeal being taken by the United States, and without notice to said transferees, or any of the defendants in said cause." The order was complied with, but the papers remained in the hands of Secretary Noble without any decision being made by him while in office. The case was taken up by his successor, Secretary Smith, and was decided October 19th, 1893, adversely to the transferees. United States v. Bailey, 17 U. S. Land Dec. 468. The bill further alleged: "Said decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, rendered in said cause as aforesaid, was at no time considered by the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General of the United States, acting as a board or otherwise; nor was the testimony and proceedings in said cause by them considered or acted upon, as a board, at all; nor did the Attorney General of the United States at any time consider or act upon said decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or the pretended testimony, or the papers and documents in relation to said entry, at all, either as a member of a board or in his individual capacity."

178 U. S.

Throughout all these proceedings appellants protested that the Land Office was without jurisdiction or authority to cancel the entries of the lands that had been transferred to them.

In the course of his opinion Secretary Smith said that there was no charge, nor was there any testimony affecting the transaction between Bailey and his transferees. He also said that his interpretation of the statute did not imply that a timber-land entryman was not authorized to sell his entry at any time *that he chose after he had made his [482] proof and received a certificate. 17 U. S. Land Dec. 468, 471, 476.

In accordance with the directions of the Secretary, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, on November 21st, 1893, ordered the cancelation of the timber-land entry of Hackley upon the records of the Land Department, and the land was held subject to entry as public land of the United States.

Thereafter Diller, the present appellee, made entry of and purchased the land in question under the above act of June 3d, 1878, and a patent therefor from the United States, bearing date October 15th, 1895, was issued to him.

On February 21st, 1896, the plaintiffs, now appellants and the transferees of Bailey, brought this suit against Diller in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Washington, northern division. The bill, after setting forth the above and other facts, alleged that the action of the Land Department in regard to the entry in question was without authority of law, and that the patent to Diller was wrongfully issued.

The relief asked was a decree holding the patent of the defendant to be a cloud upon the title of the plaintiffs, adjudging that the defendant held the title in trust for them, and requiring him to convey to them whatever title he might have obtained or acquired by virtue of such patent; that the title of the plaintiffs to the land be forever quieted against the defendant; and that such further relief be granted in the premises as might be equitable.

A demurrer to the bill having been overruled, the defendant filed both a plea and an answer. After referring to the hearing before the receiver and the register, resulting in a division of opinion between those officers, the plea recited as a defense the history of the proceedings as above stated, and the entry of the land and the issue of a patent to the defendant after the cancelation of Hackley's entry. The plea was overruled. In his answer the defendant questioned the good faith and sufficiency of the conveyances from Hackley to Bailey and from Bailey to the plaintiffs. A replication was filed by the plaintiffs, in which they asserted the truth and sufficiency in law of their bill, and *made [483] a countercharge of insufficiency, untruthfulness, and uncertainty as to the defendant's answer.

Upon final hearing in the circuit court Judge Hanford held that where land had been regularly entered under the act of June 3d, 1878, it was not subject to forfeiture after it had been conveyed to a bona fide purchaser; that the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior showed that the original entry in question was canceled solely because it was deemed fraudulent, and no consideration whatever was given to the rights of the plaintiffs as bona fide purchasers; and that the evidence clearly showed that the plaintiffs were bona fide purchasers within the meaning of the act of Congress referred to. The circuit court was also of opinion that "the case in the Land Department, after the entry had been suspended, should have been adjudicated by the board composed of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as provided by §§ 2450 and 2451, Revised Statutes, and the Secretary of the Interior, without a determination of the board, could not lawfully cancel the entry." A decree was therefore entered adjudging the plaintiffs to be the equitable owners in fee, and entitled to the lands described in the bill; that the patent issued to the defendant Diller for the land in question was issued improvidently and without authority of law, was a cloud upon the title of the plaintiffs, and should be removed; and that whatever title might have accrued under or through such patent was held by the defendant in trust for the use and benefit of the plaintiffs. It was further adjudged that the defendant should convey to the plaintiffs, by good and sufficient deed, whatever of title he might have acquired under and by virtue of the patent, free and clear of any and all encumbrance, within ten days from the filing of the decree, and the master was authorized to make the conveyance in the event of his failure or refusal so to do; and the title of the plaintiffs to the land was declared to be forever quieted as against the defendant. Hawley v. Diller, 75 Fed. Rep. 946.

The defendant appealed and the decree of the circuit court was reversed, with directions to dismiss the bill with costs to the defendant,—Judge Hawley delivering the [484] opinion of the *circuit court of appeals. Diller v. Hawley, 48 U. S. App. 462, 81 Fed. Rep. 651, 26 C. C. A. 514. From that decree the plaintiffs have appealed to this court.

As shown by the above statement of the provisions of the act of June 3d, 1878 (20 Stat. at L. 89, chap. 151), known as the timber and stone act, a purchaser of the surveyed public lands in California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington, valuable chiefly for timber, but unfit for cultivation, or valuable chiefly for stone, was required in his sworn application to state that he did not seek to purchase the same on speculation, but in good faith to appropriate it to his own exclusive use and benefit, and that he had not, directly or indirectly, made any agreement or contract with any person or persons by which the title he might acquire from the United States should inure in whole or in part to the benefit of any person except himself; and if the applicant swore falsely in the premises, he became liable to the penalties of perjury, and would forfeit the money he paid for the lands; and all right and title to the same and any grant or conveyance he may have made, "except in the hands of bona fide purchasers," would be null and void.

Who, within the meaning of the act, are to be deemed bona fide purchasers? Could the appellants, against whom, in respect of these lands, no charge of fraud was made, be deemed bona fide purchasers, if it appeared to the Land Department, before a patent issued, that the original entryman made the application to purchase "on speculation," and not in good faith to appropriate the lands to his own exclusive use and benefit?

The words "bona fide purchasers," as applied to purchasers of public lands, did not appear for the first time in the timber and stone act of 1878. The 1st section of the act of June 22d, 1838, granting pre-emption rights to settlers on the public lands, contains substantially the same provisions as to the effect of a false oath by the applicant and the same saving for the benefit of bona fide purchasers. 5 Stat. at L. 251, chap. 119. Like provisions were made in the act of September 4th, 1841, appropriating the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and granting pre-emption rights. 5 Stat. at L. 453, 456, chap. 16, § 13. And the provisions of the last act were preserved in § 2262 of the Revised Statutes.

*The contention of appellants is that as be-[485] tween themselves and the United States they must be deemed to have been bona fide purchasers from the moment they bought in good faith from Bailey, the vendee of Hackley (although no patent had been issued), and that, under the act, they could not be affected by the fraud of the original entryman or his assignee.

While the mere words of the act of Congress furnish some ground for this contention, the interpretation suggested cannot be approved. In Root v. Shields, 1 Woolw. 340, 348, 363, Fed. Cas. No. 12,038, Mr. Justice Miller had occasion to consider who were to be regarded as bona fide purchasers under the pre-emption laws when no patent had been issued by the United States. He said: "It is further insisted on behalf of the defendants that they are bona fide purchasers, and that they, as such, are entitled to the protection of the court. I think it pretty clear that some, at least, of these defendants purchased and paid their money without any knowledge in fact of any defect in the title. Yet they are not bona fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice, in the sense in which the terms are employed in courts of equity. And this for several reasons. They all purchased before the issue of the patent. The more meritorious purchased after the entry had been assailed and decided against by the Land Office. But that is a circumstance not material to this consideration. Until the issue of the patent the legal title remained in the United States. Had his entry been valid, Shields would have taken only an equity. His grantees took only an equity. They did not acquire the legal title. And in order to establish in himself the character of a bona fide purchaser, so as to be entitled to the protection of chancery, a party must show that, in his purchase and by the conveyance to him, he acquired the legal title. If he have but an equity, it is overreached by the better equity of his adversary."

[486] The rule thus laid down was followed by Secretary Teller in Cogswell's Case, 3 U. S. Land Dec. 23, 28. In Chrisinger's Case, 4 U. S. Land Dec. 347, 349, Secretary Lamar said: "It is insisted by counsel, and ably argued at length, that the assignees of Chrisinger, being bona fide purchasers after entry, are entitled to intervene and have their interests protected, as they took without notice of any defect in the final proof. This proposition is not tenable. It involves the principle that, although the claim for title while in the hands of the entryman is worthless on account of his failure to comply with the law, such claim may be strengthened and made a matter of absolute right by virtue of a transfer to an innocent purchaser. The converse of this, however, is true. Conceding the right of sale after the issuance of final certificate and prior to patent, the purchaser takes no better claim for title than the entryman has to confer, and whatever right is thus acquired is subject to the subsequent action of the Land Department. Myers v. Croft, 13 Wall. 291, 20 L. ed. 562; Margaret Kissack, 2 C. L. L. 421. Again, the Department must deal directly with its own vendees, with the persons with whom it contracts. It cannot undertake to follow the transfers of the grantees, and to settle questions that may arise upon such transfers, but must leave such matter for determination in the courts."

So, in Smith v. Custer, 8 U. S. Land Dec. 269, 278, Secretary Vilas said: "The pre-emption purchaser takes by his final proofs and payment and his certificate of purchase only a right to a patent for the public lands in case the facts shall be found by the General Land Office and the Interior Department upon appeal to warrant the issuance of it. Whatever claim to patent he possesses by virtue of his payment and certificate is dependent upon the action of the Department, and its future finding of the existence of the conditions, and his compliance in fact with the prerequisites prescribed by law to the rightful acquisition of the public land he claims. This being so, it is plain the purchaser can acquire from the entryman no greater estate or right than the entryman possesses. The purchaser is chargeable with knowledge of the law, which includes knowledge of this law, and is chargeable with knowledge of the state of the title which he buys, in so far at least, as that the legal title remains in the United States, subject to the necessary inquiry and determination by the Land Office and Department upon which a patent may issue. He is not, then, an 'innocent purchaser,' so far as there may exist reasons why that patent should not issue. He buys subject to the risk of the consequences of the inquiry depending in the Department. 178 U. S. U. S. Book 44.

He buys a title sub judice. At *the most, it is but an equitable title, the legal title being in the government. It is a familiar rule that the purchaser of an equitable title takes and holds it subject to all equities upon it in the hands of the vendor, and has no better standing than he. Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 177, 9 L. ed. 388; Root v. Shields, 1 Woolw. 340, Fed. Cas. No. 12,038."

These principles were applied by the Land Department in Travelers' Ins. Co. 9 U. S. Land Dec. 316, 320, 321.

Again, in United States v. Allard, 14 U. S. Land Dec. 392, 405, 406, the question was fully examined by Secretary Noble in the light of the authorities, and his conclusion was thus stated: "A bona fide purchaser of land is one who is the purchaser of the legal title or estate; and a purchaser of a mere equity is not embraced in the definition. Boone v. Chiles, 10 Pet. 177, 9 L. ed. 388; 3 Ops. Atty. Gen. 664. This was the well-defined meaning of the term long before the enactment of the statute under consideration, and, under a well-established rule of construction, unless it is apparent that Congress intended it to have a different meaning, it is to be presumed to have been used in its technical sense. There is nothing in the present statute to indicate that Congress used the term in other than its technical sense. Indeed, it may properly be considered as having attained a technical meaning as used by Congress in previous legislation relating to the disposal of the public lands. As long ago as 1841, Attorney General Legare (3 Ops. Atty. Gen. 664) in considering a case which arose under the pre-emption act of 1838 (1 Lester, 49), involving the use of the term in that act, and the right of an assignee of a pre-emption claimant thereunder, held: 'The assignee took only an equity, and he took it, of course, subject to all prior equities. The patent, it is needless to say, is the only complete legal title under our land laws. But to protect a purchaser under the plea of a purchase for a valuable consideration without notice, he must have a complete legal title.' After referring to Root v. Shields, above cited, the Secretary concluded: "It thus appears that prior to the passage of the act under consideration (June 3d, 1878) it had been determined, both by executive construction and judicial interpretation, that the term 'bona fide purchaser,' as used in the pre-emption law, was so used in its technical sense, or with reference to its previously *known and well-defined import. It is therefore to be presumed, nothing appearing to the contrary, that Congress, in making use of the term in the timber and stone act, did so in the light of such construction, and must have intended its use in the same sense as in the pre-emption law; namely, that to be a bona fide purchaser within the protection of the statute, a party must have acquired by his purchase and the conveyance to him a complete legal title." See also Whitaker v. Southern P. R. Co. 2 Copp's Public Lands (1882 ed.) 919, 923;

Stout v. Hyatt, 13 Kan. 243, 244; Taylor v. Weston, 77 Cal. 534, 540, 20 Pac. 62.

We are of opinion that the rule announced in Root v. Shields, above cited, and which has been steadily followed in the Land Department, is consistent with the words of the statute. If any doubt existed on the subject, the construction so long recognized by the Interior Department in its administration of the public lands should be not overthrown, unless a different one is plainly required—as it is not—by the words of the act. United States v. Philbrick, 120 U. S. 52, 59, 30 L. ed. 559, 561, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 413; United States v. Johnston, 124 U. S. 236, 253, 31 L. ed. 389, 396, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 446; United States v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. 142 U. S. 615, 621, 35 L. ed. 1134, 1136, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 306.

The contention of appellants that they could not be affected by the fraud, if any, committed by the original entryman or his vendee, being unsound, is there any other ground upon which the court can hold that the title to these lands is held by the appellee in trust for them?

It is contended that the Land Department was without jurisdiction to cancel the original entry. The exclusion of mere speculators from purchasing the public lands referred to in the timber and stone act would be of no practical value if it were true that one, having purchased in good faith from an entryman who is proved to have sworn falsely in his application, could demand, of right, that a patent be issued to him. The Land Department has authority, at any time before a patent is issued, to inquire whether the original entry was in conformity with the act of Congress. Knight v. United States Land Asso. 142 U. S. 161, 35 L. ed. 974, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 258, and Michigan Land & Lumber Co. v. Rust, 168 U. S. 589, 593, 42 L. ed. 591, 592, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 208, and authorities cited

[489] in each case. Of course, that *Department could not arbitrarily destroy the equitable title acquired by the entryman, and held by him or his assignee. Those who hold such title have a right to be notified of and heard in any proceeding instituted in the Land Department having for its object the cancellation of the entry upon which the equitable title depends. In the present case the appellants had full notice of the proceedings before the register and receiver and before the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which resulted in the cancellation of the original entry. And we infer from the record that they had notice of the order of the Secretary of the Interior directing the papers to be sent to him for examination. The plea, referring to the action of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and of the Secretary of the Interior, distinctly stated that Hackley “was given every opportunity to be heard before the said officers of the Land Department of the United States, likewise his said transferees, before said certificate was canceled.” The allegation in the bill on this point means only that the order of the Secretary of the Interior to send the papers to him was made without notice to Hackley and his transferees. But that is immaterial if they had an opportunity to be heard before the Secretary while the case was in his hands. In the summary of the points relied upon by appellants, it is not claimed that they had no such opportunity. The order of cancellation by the Secretary was based upon the fact, which he ascertained from the evidence, that the original entry of the land in dispute was not in good faith, for the exclusive benefit and use of the entryman, but for the speculative purposes of others with whom the entryman was in collusion.

It is suggested that the order of the Land Department canceling the entry was based upon a misconstruction of the law. If it had been, then the error committed could be corrected by the courts; for, as said in Sanford v. Sanford, 139 U. S. 642, 647, 35 L. ed. 290, 291, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 666, where the matters determined by the Land Office “are not properly before the Department, or its conclusions have been reached from a misconstruction by its officers of the law applicable to the cases before it, and it has thus denied to parties rights which, upon a correct construction, would have been conceded *to them, or where misrepresentations and fraud have been practised, necessarily affecting its judgment, then the courts can, in a proper proceeding, interfere and control its determination so as to secure the just rights of parties injuriously affected.” See also Quinby v. Conlan, 104 U. S. 420, 426, 26 L. ed. 800, 802; Baldwin v. Stark, 107 U. S. 463, 465, 27 L. ed. 526, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 473; Cornelius v. Kassel, 128 U. S. 456, 461, 32 L. ed. 482, 483, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 122. But there was no misconstruction of the law by the Land Department. Upon the facts found no other conclusion could properly be reached than the one indicated by the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior (United States v. Bailey, 17 U. S. Land Dec. 468), namely, that the original entry of the land was in violation of the act of Congress.

We are of opinion that the result of the decisions of this court was correctly stated by Judge Hawley, when, speaking for the United States circuit court of appeals, in American Mortg. Co. v. Hopper, 29 U. S. App. 12, 17, 64 Fed. Rep. 553, 555, 12 C. C. A. 293, 295, he said: “(1) That the Land Department of the government has the power and authority to cancel and annul an entry of public land when its officers are convinced, upon a proper showing, that the same was fraudulently made; (2) that an entryman upon the public lands only secures a vested interest in the land when he has lawfully entered upon and paid for the same, and in all respects complied with the requirements of the law; (3) that the Land Department has control over the disposition of the public lands until a patent has been issued therefor and accepted by the patentee; and (4) that redress can always be had in the courts when the officers of the Land Department have withheld from a pre-emptioner his rights, when they have misconstrued the law, or when any fraud or deception has been practised which affected their judgment and decision."

One other question remains to be considered. The appellants insist that the order of the Secretary of the Interior canceling the entry of these lands could be of no legal effect without being approved by the Attorney General. This question is one of no little importance in the administration of the public lands. It has never been directly determined by this court.

[491] The sections of the Revised Statutes upon the construction of which this question depends are the following: "§ 2450. The Commissioner of the General Land Office is authorized to decide upon principles of equity and justice as recognized in courts of equity, and in accordance with regulations to be settled by the Secretary of the [Treasury] [Interior] the Attorney General, and the Commissioner, conjointly, consistently with such principles, all cases of suspended entries of public lands and of suspended pre-emption land claims, and to adjudge in what cases patents shall issue upon the same. § 2451. Every such adjudication shall be approved by the Secretary of the [Treasury] [Interior] and the Attorney General, acting as a board; and shall operate only to divest the United States of the title of the lands embraced thereby, without prejudice to the rights of conflicting claimants. § 2452. The Commissioner is directed to report to Congress at the first session after any such adjudications have been made a list of the same under the classes prescribed by law, with a statement of the principles upon which each class was determined. § 2453. The Commissioner shall arrange his decisions into two classes, the first class to embrace all such cases of equity as may be finally confirmed by the board, and the second class to embrace all such cases as the board reject and decide to be invalid. § 2454. For all lands covered by claims which are placed in the first class, patents shall issue to the claimants; and all the lands embraced by claims placed in the second class shall, ipso facto, revert to, and become part of, the public domain. § 2455. It may be lawful for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to order into market, after due notice, without the formality and expense of a proclamation of the President, all lands of the second class, though heretofore unproclaimed and unoffered, and such other isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels of unoffered lands which, in his judgment, it would be proper to expose to sale in like manner. But public notice of at least thirty days shall be given by the land officers of the district in which such lands may be situated, pursuant to the directions of the Commissioner. § 2456. Where patents have been already issued on entries which are confirmed by the officers who are constituted the board of adjudication, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the canceling of the outstanding patent, [492] is authorized to issue a new patent, *on such confirmation, to the person who made the entry, his heirs or assigns. § 2457. The 178 U. S.

preceding provisions, from § 2450 to § 2456, inclusive, shall be applicable to all cases of suspended entries and locations, which have arisen in the General Land Office since the twenty-sixth day of June, 1856, as well as to all cases of a similar kind which may hereafter occur, embracing as well locations under bounty-land warrants as ordinary entries or sales, including homestead entries and pre-emption locations or cases; where the law has been substantially complied with, and the error or informality arose from ignorance, accident, or mistake which is satisfactorily explained; and where the rights of no other claimant or pre-emptor are prejudiced, or where there is no adverse claim."

Judge Hanford in the circuit court held, as we have seen, that the case in the Land Department after the entry had been suspended should have been adjudicated by the board composed of the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as provided by §§ 2450 and 2451, and that the Secretary of the Interior, without a determination of that board, could not lawfully cancel the entry,—citing Stimson Land Co. v. Hollister, 75 Fed. Rep. 941. The circuit court of appeals said upon this point: "In the numerous decisions of the Supreme Court sustaining the authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and of the Secretary of the Interior to affirm, modify, or annul the entries of public land made in the local land offices, no reference is made to the provisions of §§ 2450 and 2451. Notwithstanding this fact, we are asked to assume that that court must have overlooked these provisions of the statute. We decline to act upon any such presumption."

The legislation embraced in the above sections is the outgrowth of the acts of August 26th, 1842 (5 Stat. at L. 534, chap. 205), August 3d, 1846 (9 Stat. at L. 51, chap. 78), July 17th, 1848 (9 Stat. at L. 246, chap. 101), March 3d, 1853 (10 Stat. at L. 258, chap. 152), and June 26th, 1856 (11 Stat. at L. 22, chap. 47). Sections 2450 to 2455, both inclusive, were taken from the act of August 3d, 1846, which was confined to "cases of suspended entries now existing in said land office;" and the operation of the act was limited to a period of two *years,[493] but its operation was extended to August 3d, 1849, by the act of July 17th, 1848, and by the act of March 3d, 1853, was extended for a term of ten years from March 3d, 1853, and made applicable "as well to cases which were inadvertently omitted, to be acted on under said act, as to those of a like character and description which have arisen between the date of said act and the present time." And the act of June 26th, 1856, revived and continued in force the provisions of the acts of August 3d, 1846, and March 3d, 1853, as to all cases of suspended entries and locations "where the law has been substantially complied with and the error or informality has arisen from ignorance, accident, or mistake, and is satisfactorily explained, and where the rights of no other claimant or preemptor will be prejudiced, or where there is no adverse claim."

The act of June 26th, 1856, is reproduced in the Revised Statutes as § 2457.

Thus after June 26th, 1856, the statutes relating to the board were not applicable to every case of suspended entry, but to those specially mentioned in the act of that date. As carried into the Revised Statutes the purpose of this legislation is, where the law has been substantially complied with, to authorize the confirmation of entries which otherwise the land officers would be compelled to reject because of errors or informalities which, if satisfactorily explained as arising from ignorance, accident, or mistake, would, in the absence of an adverse claim, be excused by the courts in administering the principles of equity and justice. The purpose of the legislation was not to limit or restrict the general or ordinary jurisdiction of the land officers. It was rather to supplement that jurisdiction by authorizing them to apply the principles of equity, for the purpose of saving from rejection and cancellation a class of entries deemed meritorious by Congress, but which could not be sustained and carried to patent under existing land laws. There was no necessity for legislation authorizing the rejection or cancellation of irregular entries, but legislation was necessary to save such entries from rejection and cancellation when otherwise meritorious.

[494] Primarily the decision and adjudication of suspended entries *is, under §§ 2450 and 2451, as theretofore, left with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, except that he is to be guided by the principles of equity and justice and by the regulations settled by the Secretary of the Interior, the Attorney General, and the Commissioner, conjointly. The only question is whether all decisions of the Commissioner upon such suspended entries must be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General, acting as a board, for approval.

If the matter rested upon § 2450 and the first part of § 2451, it might well be contended that a decision rejecting or canceling a suspended entry should, equally with a decision sustaining such an entry, be submitted to the board for approval. But the latter part of § 2451 does not sustain that view. It is there declared that "every such adjudication," if approved by the board, "shall operate only to divest the United States of the title of the lands embraced thereby." A decision merely rejecting or canceling the entry could not, with or without the approval of the board, have the effect of divesting the United States of its title. That effect could only flow from a decision sustaining the entry, and since the effect of a decision by the Commissioner such as is required to be submitted to the board, and of an approval thereof by the board, is to divest the United States of its title, it follows that only decisions sustaining irregular entries are required to be submitted to the board for its approval. Decisions rejecting or canceling such entries have the force and effect otherwise accorded to them by the general land laws, and are subject to the appellate or supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior, as in other instances.

The reasons for requiring the approval by the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General of decisions of the Commissioner sustaining irregular entries, under this exceptional legislation, do not apply to decisions rejecting and canceling such entries. In the one instance claims to public lands are sustained, although acquired in an irregular manner, while in the other such claims are rejected and the public title preserved.

Hackley's entry of the lands in controversy was not suspended because of any error or informality therein arising from ignorance, *accident, or mistake susceptible of explanation, but because of the charge that the same was unlawfully and speculatively made for the benefit of others, and not for his own exclusive use and benefit. The suspension was ordered with a view to an investigation and hearing upon that charge. The decision of the Commissioner sustaining the entry, following this investigation and hearing, was not therefore, rendered in pursuance of the special authority conferred upon him by §§ 2450 to 2457 of the Revised Statutes, but under the general authority given to him, in respect of the public lands, by §§ 441, 453, and 2478 of the Revised Statutes and by the act of June 3d, 1878, under which Hackley's entry was made.

We are of opinion that the Commissioner's decision, having been made under his general authority, and not under the exceptional authority given by §§ 2450 to 2457, was not required to be submitted to the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney General, acting as a board, for approval, but was subject to the appellate or supervisory authority of the Secretary of the Interior under §§ 441, 453, and 2478 of the Revised Statutes. Knight v. United States Land Asso. 142 U. S. 161, 177, 35 L. ed. 974, 979, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 258. It follows that the Secretary of the Interior in reversing the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in rejecting and canceling Hackley's entry, did not exceed the jurisdiction conferred upon him by law.

The matter determined by the decision of the Secretary was whether Hackley's entry was made in good faith, for his own exclusive use and benefit. After notice, investigation, and hearing, the Secretary of the Interior determined that question against Hackley. In the absence of a charge that this decision was fraudulently given or obtained,—and no such charge is made,—the Secretary's determination of this question of fact is conclusive upon the courts. This is established by repeated decisions. And if the charge against Hackley's entry be considered as one of fraud, involving a mixed question of fact and law, still the decision of the Secretary of the Interior canceling that entry fully states the evidence or facts from which the fraud was held by him to be deducible as a matter of law. Upon an examination of that decision and of the evidence or facts therein *recited we are not prepared to hold that any error of law was committed by that officer.

This disposes of all the questions in the case that need be noticed, and the decree below is affirmed.

F. MAY & COMPANY, Plffs. in Err.,
v.
CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

Taxes—exemption of original imported packages.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 496-510.)

1. Original packages of imported goods, which cannot be assessed for local taxation, consist of the boxes, cases, or bales in which the goods were shipped, and not the smaller packages therein contained, although these are the packages in which the goods are put up by the manufacturer; and when the packages in which the goods are shipped reach their destination for use or trade, and are opened and the separate packages therein exposed or offered for sale, these become subject to local taxation like other property in the state.
2. An assessment for taxation, under state authority, of the original packages in which goods are imported, before they have, by the act of the importer, become incorporated into the mass of property of the state and are held for use or sale, is void as a violation of U. S. Const. art. 1, §§ 8, 10, prohibiting the states to lay imposts or duties on imports, and giving Congress power to regulate foreign commerce.

[No. 332.]

Argued March 6, 7, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana to review a decision reversing a judgment against the validity of a tax on imported goods. Affirmed.

See same case below, 51 La. Ann. 1064, 25 So. 959.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. D. C. Mellen argued the cause and, with Mr. J. Ward Gurley, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error:

When the importer has so acted upon the thing imported that it has become incorporated and mixed with the mass of property in the country, it has perhaps lost its distinctive character as an import, and has become subject to the taxing power of the state; but while remaining the property of the importer, in his warehouse, in the original form or package in which it was imported, a tax upon it is too plainly a duty

NOTE.—As to original packages—see State ex rel. Cochran v. Winters (Kan.) 10 L. R. A. 616, and note; Re Wilson (D. C.) 12 L. R. A. 624, and note. And see note to Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Adams, 39 L. ed. U. S. 311.

As to tax on imports—see note to American Fertilizer Co. v. North Carolina Bd. of Agri. (C. C. E. D. N. C.) 11 L. R. A. 179.

178 U. S.

on imports to escape the prohibition of the Constitution.

Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 442, 6 L. ed. 686.

The use of the expression "original package," was merely illustrative, the true test being whether the imported goods had been mixed up with the general property of the state. And this test has been applied ever since by this and other courts, although the words "original package" have been so generally used that the cases have become known as the "original package" cases.

License Cases, 5 How. 575, sub nom. Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 12 L. ed. 288; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 113, 34 L. ed. 133, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681; Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757; Collins v. New Hampshire, 171 U. S. 30, 43 L. ed. 60, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 768; Re Ware, 53 Fed. Rep. 783; Re Spain, 47 Fed. Rep. 208, 14 L. R. A. 97, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 738; State v. Goetze, 43 W. Va. 495, 27 S. E. 225.

The manufacturer's package is the trade package,—for that is the form in which the goods are intended for sale,—and is the original package of imports, the outer casing being used only as a protection against damage, and for the convenience of handling, and to lessen freight.

License Cases, 5 How. 575, sub nom. Thurlow v. Massachusetts, 12 L. ed. 288.

Mr. W. B. Sommerville argued the cause and, with Mr. Samuel L. Gilmore, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The original package is the package delivered by the importer to the carrier at the initial place of shipment, in the exact condition in which it was shipped.

Guckenheimer v. Sellers, 81 Fed. Rep. 997; State ex rel. Cochran v. Winters, 44 Kan. 723, 10 L. R. A. 616, 25 Pac. 235; McGregor v. Cone, 104 Iowa, 465, 39 L. R. A. 484, 73 N. W. 1041; Keith v. State, 91 Ala. 2, 10 L. R. A. 430, 8 So. 353.

Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion [497] of the court:

The plaintiffs in error, a commercial firm in New Orleans, brought this action in the civil district court, parish of Orleans, to prevent the enforcement of certain tax assessments made by the city of New Orleans in the year 1897.

The petition alleged that during the whole of the year 1897 the plaintiffs were engaged in importing for sale foreign goods, upon all of which they paid the duties and imposts levied by the United States;

That the board of assessors for the parish of Orleans assessed them for that year $2,500 on "merchandise and stock in trade," and $1,000 under the head of "money loaned on interest, all credits and all bills receivable, money loaned and advanced or for goods sold, all credits of any and every description;" and—

That such assessments were void for the following reasons: 1. All merchandise and stock in trade had and carried by the plaintiffs during 1897 consisted of dry goods imported by them from foreign countries upon which duties, imposts, and import taxes were levied by the United States and paid by them, and which were sold only in unbroken original packages as imported, and the assessment thereon was in violation of article 1, § 10, paragraph 2, of the Constitution of the United States. 2. All the credits and bills receivable of the firm during that year consisted wholly of sums due on the purchase price of the above merchandise sold in unbroken and original packages as imported, and the assessment thereon was in violation of the same constitutional provision. 3. The assessment of $1,000 upon "money loaned [498] on interest" was unconstitutional, *because the plaintiffs at no time during 1897 had any money loaned on interest.

A temporary injunction having been granted against any sale of the plaintiff's property for the taxes in question, the city answered, denying each allegation of the petition.

The only evidence in the case was the testimony of one of the plaintiffs as to the manner in which the company conducted its business. That testimony, using substantially the words of the witness, may be thus summarized:

Representatives of the firm went to Europe and obtained from different manufacturers samples of goods, which were sent to New Orleans and were used by plaintiffs in obtaining what were known as import orders. Besides that method, if any article was thought good they placed what were known as stock orders; that is, they ordered the goods on their own account. But in most cases the firm sold the goods, and did not keep a stock on hand. All their goods were imported, and customs duties were paid on them. They did not handle domestic goods.

They sold the goods in the packages in which they were received, because the bulk of their business was jobbing trade. Two, three, or five hundred packages might be ordered. If the order were for 500 dozen towels, they might come packed 2, 3, or 5 dozen in a package. Such a package was never broken. If a small customer came in they might sell him one package. It had often happened that customers desired only a sample, in which case a package might be broken to get it. Upon these samples the importers obtained orders. If an order was given for 500 dozen towels, put up in packages of 5 dozen each when shipped to the firm by the manufacturer in Europe, they would be enclosed in a wooden case. Cases containing such orders might not come to the firm's store at all, but would go directly to the customer unopened. But if there were two or three orders in a case it would be brought to the store, opened, and the different orders taken out. But they never opened any of the packages in the case.

An import order was one placed on samples to be manufactured, and about 65 per cent of [499] the firm's business was *done by import orders. They would submit to the buyer a line of samples, and he would give an import order, with the understanding that the goods ordered were to be manufactured, and the delivery of them not made for three or four months. If he placed a stock order it was for goods that were in the store ready for delivery.

Goods were always ordered on the firm's own account. They might receive an order for 200 dozen towels, but give an order on the manufacturer for 500 dozen, for 300 of which they had no order, but which they might sell while in process of manufacture. They were the owners of all goods that came to them upon those orders.

The lace handled by them was put up in cartons or pasteboard boxes, each box containing 12 pieces of lace, each piece 12 yards long. In filling orders a number of these cartons or boxes were put in another box or case by the manufacturer, and so received by the firm. If a case contained only one order it was sent directly to the customer. If the case happened to contain two or more orders it went to the store, where it was opened and the orders separated.

Bobbinet was received in cases containing 30, 40, or 50 packages of 2, 3, or 4 pieces each. If a customer wished to buy bobbinet, he was told that he would have to buy at least one package; that they did not sell one piece only, but in packages. The bulk of the business in bobbinet was directly on import orders. At times 6, 7, or 8 cases which did not come to the store were sold to one firm. Bobbinet was not sold by the case. If more than one order came in a case it was broken open and the orders separated.

The stock of the firm consisted mostly of bobbinet and household linens. They also kept a number of samples of dolls and toys, household linens, towels, sheets, embroideries, and laces.

We here give a part of the examination of the witness: "Q. Some of which goods were sold in these cartons as you describe, and not in the original packages? A. Some of which were sold out of stock and some on import orders. Q. Let us make that clear. I understand you to say,—let us take this case of cartons of laces. You may order such a quantity of *laces as would consist of, say [500] 50 cartons, and the factory ships them to you in a large wooden box? A. The packer does that. The manufacturer does not even put them in a case himself, but gets the packer to do that; and there are certain goods not in the lace line, but in the household linen line which do not come in cases; they come in bales. Q. I want to get a thorough explanation of the way you get at these goods. Say a dozen or more packages of goods are shipped by the manufacturer in a wooden box for convenience, as I understand many of those cases go direct to your customers? A. A great many. Q. And in other cases, where they contain more than one order, the cases are opened by you and the orders separated? A. Yes; but the order is generally sent in the case itself. The goods may be shipped in a wrapper by express. The case does not signify that this is the original package.

goods are put up at the factory. If a manufacturer puts up 5 dozen towels in a package, that package is the original package, and if I open that package I break the original package; but, whether he puts those packages in a case or not, it remains in the original package. The original package is the original wrapper put around the goods at the factory, and is known as such in the trade."

In reference to "money loaned on interest, all credits and all bills receivable, money loaned and advanced or for goods sold, all credits of any and every description," in the assessment, the witness said that the only property possessed by the firm in 1897 of the kind mentioned in those items were bills receivable. Those bills consisted of money due them on sales of imported goods by customers who had given orders which had been filled, but for which they had not paid. Some of these goods were sold out of stock and some on import orders. They had no money loaned on interest in 1897. The firm was continuing to do business in 1898 in the same way as in the previous year.

[501] Upon final hearing the civil district court adjudged that the assessment in question was unconstitutional and void, and the injunction against the city was made perpetual. That judgment having been reversed upon appeal, with directions to dissolve the injunction and dismiss the petition, the contention *here is that the plaintiffs in error have been denied rights and immunities secured to them by the Constitution of the United States.

The supreme court of Louisiana, speaking by Mr. Justice Blanchard, said, among other things: "The question, then, which the case really presents is, What is the 'original package'? Is it the package in which the goods are put up for convenience by the foreign manufacturer, or is it the case, the box, the covering in which the goods so put up by the manufacturer are packed for shipment? Is the manufacturer's package the original package in the legal interpretation, or must that be held to be the original package which is delivered to the carrier for transportation to the desired destination? If the package put up by the manufacturer be the original package, then plaintiffs' objection to the assessment complained of is well taken. If the case or box in which the goods are placed for shipment be the original package, then their case falls." After referring to some of the adjudged cases, the court said that the authorities supported the contention of the city that the "original package" in this case must be held to be that in which the goods were shipped to and received by the plaintiffs, and not the smaller packages put up by the manufacturer and packed in the box delivered to the carrier.

If the goods of the plaintiffs were assessed for taxation before they had ceased to be imports, that is, while in the original packages and before they had, by the act of the importer, become incorporated into the mass of property of the state and were held for use or sale, then the assessment was void under the provision of the Constitution of the United States declaring that no state shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports except those absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws, as well as under the provision giving Congress power to regulate commerce with foreign nations. Art. 1, §§ 8, 10. Of the correctness of this general proposition, as sustained by the adjudged cases, no doubt is entertained.

Two views of the general question are presented for our consideration.

*One is that the box, case, or bale in which [502] the plaintiffs' goods were brought from Europe was not the original package; that each separate parcel or bundle placed in such box, case, or bale was itself an original package; and that within the meaning of the Constitution no one of such separate parcels or bundles lost its distinctive character as an import and became part of the mass of property in the state, liable to local taxation, until after that separate parcel or bundle had been sold by the importers. This is substantially the proposition pressed upon our attention by the plaintiffs.

The other view is that the box, case, or bale in which the separate parcels or bundles were placed by the foreign seller, manufacturer, or packer was to be regarded as the original package, and that upon the opening of such box, bale, or case for the purpose of using or exposing to sale such separate parcels or bundles, each parcel or bundle lost its distinctive character as an import and became a part of the general mass of property in the state subject to local taxation. This is the proposition advanced on behalf of the defendant.

Let us first inquire as to the consequences that may follow from the interpretation of the clause of the Constitution relating to state taxation of imports, upon which the plaintiffs rest their case. In the view taken by them it would seem to be immaterial whether the separate parcels or packages brought from Europe were left in the shipping box, case, or bale after it was opened, or were taken out and placed on the shelves or counters in the store of the importer for delivery or sale along with goods manufactured or made in this country. In other words, they argue that the importer may sell each separate package either from the box in which it was transported, after it is opened, or from the shelves or counters in his store, without being subjected to local taxation in respect of any package so brought into the country, provided such separate package be sold or offered for sale in the form in which it was when placed in the box, case, or bale by the European manufacturer or packer. This means that the power of the state to tax goods, the product of other countries, depends upon the particular form in which the European manufacturer or packer, of his own accord *or by direction of the im- [503] porter, has put them up in order to be sent to this country. The necessary result of this position is that every merchant selling only goods of foreign manufacture, in separate packages, although enjoying the protection of the local government acting under its police powers, may conduct his business, however large, without any liability whatever to state or local taxation in respect of such goods, provided he takes care to have the articles imported separately wrapped and placed in that form in a box, case, or bale for transportation to and sale in this country. In this view, if a jeweller desires to buy fifty Geneva watches for the purpose of selling them here without paying taxes upon them as property, he need only direct them to be placed in separate cases, however small, and then put them all together in one box. After paying the import duties on all the watches in the box, and receiving the box at his store, he may open the box, and the watches, each one being in its own separate case, may then be exposed for sale. According to the contention of the plaintiffs, each watch, in its own separate case, would be an original package, and could not be regarded as part of the mass of property of the state and subject to local taxation, so long as it remained in that form and unsold in the hands of the importer. Other illustrations arising out of the business of American merchants will readily occur to everyone. The result would be that there might be upon the shelves of a merchant in this country, ready to be used and openly exposed for sale, commodities or merchandise consisting of articles separately wrapped and of enormous value that could not be reached for local taxation until after he had sold them, no matter how long they had been kept by the importer before selling them. It cannot be overlooked that the interpretation of the Constitution for which plaintiffs contend would encourage American merchants and traders seeking to avoid state and local taxation, to import from abroad all the merchandise and commodities which they would need in their business.

[504] There are other considerations that cannot be ignored in determining the time at which goods imported from foreign countries lose their character as imports and may be properly regarded as part of the general mass of property in the state, *subject to local taxation. If, as plaintiffs insist, each parcel separately wrapped and marked and put in the shipping box, case, or bale, is an original package which, until sold, no matter when, would retain its distinctive character as an import, although the box, case, or bale containing them had been opened and the separate parcels all exposed for sale, what stands in the way of European manufacturers opening branch houses in this country, and selling all their goods put up in the form of separate parcels and packages, without paying anything whatever by way of taxation on their goods as property protected by the laws of the state in which they do business? Indeed, under plaintiffs' view, the Constitution secures to the manufacturers of foreign goods imported into this country an immunity from taxation that is denied to manufacturers of domestic goods. An interpretation attended with such consequences ought not to be adopted if it can be avoided without doing violence to the words of the Constitution. Undoubtedly the payment of duties imposed by the United States on imports gives the importer the right to bring his goods into this country for sale, but he does not, simply by paying the duties, escape taxation upon such goods as property after they have reached their destination for use or trade, and the box, case, or bale containing them has been opened and the goods exposed to sale.

1168

Let us see what this court has said when it has had occasion to determine the meaning and scope of the constitutional provision relating to imports.

The leading case is Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat, 419, 436, 441-444. 6 L. ed. 678, 684, 686, 687. Brown was indicted under an act of the legislature of Maryland supplementary to an act relating to duties on licenses to retailers of dry goods and for other purposes. The 2d section of the supplementary act provided "that all importers of foreign articles or commodities of dry goods, wares, or merchandise, by bale or package, or of wine, rum, brandy, whisky, and other distilled spirituous liquors, etc., and other persons selling the same by wholesale, bale or package, hogshead, barrel, or tierce, shall, before they are authorized to sell, take out a license as by the original act is directed, for which they shall pay $50; and, in case of neglect or refusal to *take out such license, shall be sub-[505]ject to the same penalties and forfeitures as are prescribed by the original act to which this is a supplement." Laws Md. 1821-22, p. 168. The indictment having been sustained, the case was brought to this court and was argued with great ability.

It is important to observe that the question presented was not one of ordinary taxation upon property, but it was—to use the words of Chief Justice Marshall—"whether the legislature of a state can constitutionally require the importer of foreign articles to take out a license from the state before he shall be permitted to sell a bale or package so imported." That question was considered with reference to the clause forbidding the states from laying imposts or duties on imports or exports, except such as were absolutely necessary for executing their inspection laws, and also with reference to the commerce clause of the Constitution. Declining to lay down any rule as universal in its application, the court said: "It is sufficient for the present to say, generally, that when the importer has so acted upon the thing imported that it has become incorporated and mixed up with the mass of property in the country it has, perhaps, lost its distinctive character as an import, and has become subject to the taxing power of the state; but while remaining the property of the importer in his warehouse, in the original form or package in which it was imported, a tax upon it is too plainly a duty on imports to escape the prohibition in the Constitution." Again: "The object of importation is sale; it constitutes the motive for paying the duties; and if the United States possess the power of conferring the right to sell, as the consideration for which the duty is paid, every principle of fair dealing requires that they should be understood to confer it. . . . The whole course of legislation on the subject shows that, in the opinion of the legislature, the right to sell is connected with the payment of duties."

178 U. S.

[506] On behalf of the state of Maryland it was contended that if the importer acquired the right to sell by the payment of duties he might exert that right when, where, and as he pleased, and that the state could not regulate it; that he might sell by retail, by auction, or as an itinerant peddler; that he might introduce *articles, such as gunpowder, which would endanger the city, into the midst of its population, as well as articles which would endanger the public health, and thus the power of self-preservation would be denied; and that an importer might bring in goods, as plate, for his own use, and thus retain much valuable property exempt from taxation.

To these objections the court, speaking by the Chief Justice, responded: "These objections to the principle, if well founded, would certainly be entitled to serious consideration. But we think they will be found, on examination, not to belong necessarily to the principle, and consequently not to prove that it may not be resorted to with safety as a criterion by which to measure the extent of the prohibition. This indictment is against the importer for selling a package of dry goods in the form in which it was imported, without a license. This state of things is changed if he sells them, or otherwise mixes them with the general property of the state, by breaking up his packages and traveling with them as an itinerant peddler. In the first case the tax intercepts the import, as an import, in its way to become incorporated with the general mass of property, and denies it the privilege of becoming so incorporated until it shall have contributed to the revenue of the state. It denies to the importer the right of using the privilege which he has purchased from the United States, until he shall have also purchased it from the state. In the last cases the tax finds the article already incorporated with the mass of property by the act of the importer. He has used the privilege he had purchased, and has himself mixed them up with the common mass, and the law may treat them as it finds them. The same observations apply to plate or other furniture used by the importer. So, if he sells by auction. Auctioneers are persons licensed by the state, and if the importer chooses to employ them he can as little object to paying for this service as for any other for which he may apply to an officer of the state. The right of sale may very well be annexed to importation, without annexing to it, also, the privilege of using the officers licensed by the state to make sales in a peculiar way. The power to direct the removal of gunpowder is a branch of the police *power, which unquestionably remains, and ought to remain, with the states. If the possessor stores it himself out of town, the removal cannot be a duty on imports, because it contributes nothing to the revenue. If he prefers placing it in a public magazine, it is because he stores it there, in his own opinion, 178 U. S.

more advantageously than elsewhere. We are not sure that this may not be classed among inspection laws. The removal or destruction of infectious or unsound articles is, undoubtedly, an exercise of that power, and forms an express exception to the prohibition we are considering. Indeed, the laws of the United States expressly sanction the health laws of a state. The principle, then, for which the plaintiffs in error contend, that the importer acquires a right, not only to bring the articles into the country, but to mix them with the common mass of property, does not interfere with the necessary power of taxation which is acknowledged to reside in the states, to that dangerous extent which the counsel for the defendants in error seem to apprehend. It carries the prohibition in the Constitution no farther than to prevent the states from doing that which it was the great object of the Constitution to prevent."

These extracts from the opinion in Brown v. Maryland establish the following propositions:

1. That the payment of duties to the United States gives the right to sell the thing imported, and that such right to sell cannot be forbidden or impaired by a state.

2. That a tax upon the thing imported during the time it retains its character as an import and remains the property of the importer, "in his warehouse, in the original form or package in which it was imported," is a duty on imports within the meaning of the Constitution; and—

3. That a state cannot, in the form of a license or otherwise, tax the right of the importer to sell, but when the importer has so acted upon the goods imported that they have become incorporated or mixed with the general mass of property in the state, such goods have then lost their distinctive character as imports, and have become from that time subject to state taxation, not because they are the products of other countries, but because they are property within the state in like condition *with other property that [508] should contribute, in the way of taxation, to the support of the government which protects the owner in his person and estate.

So the question in the present case is whether the plaintiffs, prior to the assessment complained of, had so acted upon the goods imported by them as to incorporate them with the mass of the property in the state, and bring them, while in their possession, within the range of local taxation.

We have seen that the plaintiffs, in effect, contend that having paid the duties imposed by the United States they were entitled, without liability to taxation upon the goods as property, to open the boxes in which the separate parcels of goods were transported, and put such separate parcels in the hands of agents to be sold wherever, in the state or in the country, customers could be found. The separate parcels—such is the effect of the argument—are not to be deemed incorporated into the mass of the property of the state while thus being carried around the country by the importer's agents,—no separate parcel, so long as it remained in the particular form in which it was packed in a box or case with other parcels, ceasing to have the character of an import until after it was sold by such agents. This proposition cannot be sustained. We cannot doubt that the goods when placed in the hands of agents for sale, in separate parcels, have been so acted upon by the importer that they have ceased to be imports, and have become part of the mass of the property of the state, liable to local taxation. But what is the difference in principle between the case of sales by an importer through traveling agents, and the case of an importer who opens the box or case in which his goods, wrapped in separate parcels, were imported, and by employees sells or offers to sell the separate parcels, either from the opened box or case in his store, or from shelves or counters upon which such parcels have been placed for examination and sale?

In our judgment, the "original package" in the present case was the box or case in which the goods imported were shipped, and when the box or case was opened for the sale or delivery of the separate parcels contained in it, each parcel of the goods lost its distinctive character as an import and became property [509]*subject to taxation by the state as other like property situated within its limits. The tax here in question was not in any sense a tax on imports nor a tax for the privilege of bringing the things imported into the state. It was not a tax on the plaintiffs' goods because they were imported from another country, but because at the time of the assessment they were in the market for sale in separate parcels, and therefore subject to be taxed as like property, in the same condition, that had its origin in this country. We cannot impute to the framers of the Constitution a purpose to make such a discrimination in favor of property imported from other countries as would result if we approved the views pressed upon us by the plaintiffs. When their goods had been so acted upon as to become a part of the general mass of property in the state the plaintiffs stood, with respect to liability to state taxation, upon the same basis of equality as the owners of like property, the product of this country; the only difference being that the importers paid a duty to the United States for the privilege of importing their goods into this country, and of selling them in the original packages,—a duty imposed for the purpose of raising money to carry on the operations of the government, and, in many instances, with the intent to protect the industries of this country against foreign competition. A different view is not justified by anything said in Brown v. Maryland. It was there held that the importer by paying duties acquired the right to sell in the original packages the goods imported,—the Maryland statute requiring a license from the state before any one could sell "by wholesale, bale or package, hogshead, barrel, or tierce," goods imported from other countries. But it was not held that the right to sell was attended with an immunity from all taxation upon the goods as property, after they had ceased to be imports and had become by the act of the importer a part of the general mass of property in the state. The contrary was adjudged.

Without further reference to authorities we state our conclusion to be that within the decision in Brown v. Maryland the boxes, cases, or bales in which plaintiffs' goods were shipped were the original packages, and the goods imported by them *lost their distinctive character as imports and became a part of the general mass of the property of Louisiana, and subject to local taxation as other property in that state, the moment the boxes, cases, or bales in which they were shipped reached their destination for use or trade, and were opened and the separate packages therein exposed or offered for sale; consequently, the assessment in question was not in violation of the Constitution of the United States.

This disposes of the only Federal question arising on this appeal.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Louisiana is affirmed.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, Mr. Justice Brewer, Mr. Justice Shiras and Mr. Justice Peckham dissent.

GEORGE DEWEY, Appt.,

v.

UNITED STATES.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 510-524.)

Navy—bounty money—superior or inferior force of enemy's vessel.

In determining whether vessels of the enemy sunk or destroyed were of inferior or superior force to the American vessels engaged in the battle, for the purpose of fixing the amount of bounty to be awarded under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 4635, the land batteries, mines, and torpedoes not controlled by those in charge of the enemy's vessels, but which supported those vessels, are to be excluded altogether from consideration, and the size and armaments of the vessels sunk or destroyed, together with the number of men upon them, are alone to be regarded.

[No. 546.]

Argued April 10, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

APPEAL from a decision of the Court of Claims determining the amount of bounty recoverable by the commanding officer on a naval fleet for the sinking or destruction of the vessels of the enemy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William B. King, Benjamin Micou, and H. A. Herbert argued the cause and filed a brief for appellant.

Assistant Attorney General Pradt argued the cause and filed a brief for appellee.

Contentions of counsel sufficiently appear in the opinion.

[511] *Mr. Justice Harlan delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action in the court of claims to recover bounty money earned by the plaintiff in error as the commanding officer of the American fleet at the naval battle of Manila, on the 1st day of May, 1898.

The statute under which the action was brought is as follows: "§ 4635. A bounty shall be paid by the United States for each person on board any ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy at the commencement of an engagement, which is sunk or otherwise destroyed in such engagement by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States, or which it may be necessary to destroy in consequence of injuries sustained in action, of one hundred dollars if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and of two hundred dollars if of equal or superior force, to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money; and when the actual number of men on board any such vessel cannot be satisfactorily ascertained, it shall be estimated according to the complement allowed to vessels of its class in the navy of the United States; and there shall be paid as bounty to the captors of any vessel of war captured from an enemy, which is immediately destroyed for the public interest, but not in consequence of injuries received in action, fifty dollars for every person who shall be on board at the time of such capture." U. S. Rev. Stat. 902.

The mode in which bounty money earned under that section was to be divided is indicated by the following provisions relating to the distribution of prize money:

"§ 4631. All prize money adjudged to the captors shall be distributed in the following proportions:

"First. To the commanding officer of a fleet or squadron, one twentieth part of all prize money awarded to any vessel or vessels under his immediate command.

[512] *"Second. To the commanding officer of a division of a fleet or squadron, on duty under the orders of the commander in chief of such fleet or squadron, a sum equal to one fiftieth part of any prize money awarded to a vessel of such division for a capture made while under his command, such fiftieth part to be deducted from the moiety due to the United States, if there be any such moiety, otherwise from the amount awarded to the captors; but such fiftieth part shall not be in addition to any share which may be due to the commander of the division, and which he may elect to receive, as commander of a single ship making or assisting in the capture.

"Third. To the fleet captain, one hundredth part of all prize money awarded to any vessel or vessels of the fleet or squadron in which he is serving, except in a case where the capture is made by the vessel on board of which he is serving at the time of such capture; and in such case he shall share, in proportion to his pay, with the other officers and men on board such vessel.

"Fourth. To the commander of a single vessel, one tenth part of all the prize money awarded to the vessel under his command, if such vessel at the time of the capture was under the command of the commanding officer of a fleet or squadron, or a division, and three twentieths if his vessel was acting independently of such superior officer.

"Fifth. After the foregoing deductions the residue shall be distributed and proportioned among all others doing duty on board, including the fleet captain, and borne upon the books of the ship in proportion to their respective rates of pay in the service." U. S. Rev. Stat. 901.

It may be here stated that the provisions for prize money and bounty to the navy were repealed by an act of Congress approved March 3, 1899, which declares that "all provisions of law authorizing the distribution among captors of the whole or any portion of the proceeds of vessels, or any property hereafter captured, condemned as prize, or providing for the payment of bounty for the sinking or destruction of vessels of the enemy hereafter occurring in time of war, are hereby repealed." 30 Stat. at L. 1004, 1007, chap. 413, § 13.

*The American vessels taking part in the battle were the Olympia, Baltimore, Boston, Raleigh, Concord, Petrel, McCulloch, Nanshan, and Zafiro. [513]

The number of officers and men on those vessels during the battle was 1,836.

The Spanish vessels taking part in the battle were the Reina Cristina, Castilla, Don Juan de Austria, Don Antonio de Ulloa, General Lezo, Marquez del Duero, Argos, Velasco, Isla de Mindanao, Isla de Cuba, Isla de Luzon, Manila, and two torpedo boats. The Reina Cristina, Castilla, Don Juan de Ulloa, General Lezo, Marquez del Duero, Argos, Velasco, Isla de Mindanao, and the two torpedo boats were destroyed by the American vessels. The Don Juan de Austria, Isla de Cuba, and Isla de Luzon were disabled and put out of action in the battle, and were captured; but they were subsequently floated and repaired by the United States, and now constitute a part of the American navy. The Manila was captured in the same engagement.

No claim for bounty under § 4635 is made in the present action on account of the sinking of the Don Juan de Austria, Isla de Cuba, and the Isla de Luzon, because proceedings are to be begun in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to condemn those vessels as prize of war, the claimant reserving the right to make such claim hereafter, if it should be held that the vessels are not subject to condemnation in prize.

The total number of men on board the Spanish vessels during the battle of Manila was 2,973. The total number on board the Spanish vessels destroyed was, at the commencement of the action, 1,914.

The enemy's vessels were supported by land batteries and by mines and torpedoes in the entrance to Manila bay and in the bay itself, and some of those in the bay exploded during the action.

It was found as a fact by the court of claims—and this court must assume it to be true—that, taking into consideration the guns at Corregidor, El Fraile, and other forts at the entrance of the bay, and those at Manila and Cavite, and the torpedoes and mines in the bay and the entrance to it, the enemy's force was superior to the force of the vessels of the United States; but that, excluding shore batteries and submarine defenses, the American vessels and armaments were superior in force to the Spanish vessels.

The court below—all its members concurring—was of opinion that the land batteries, mines, and torpedoes that supported the Spanish vessels during the naval engagement in Manila bay should be excluded from consideration, and that the claim of the plaintiff came within the clause of the statute allowing the sum of $100 for each person on board of the vessels sunk or destroyed “if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force,” and not within the clause allowing the sum of $200, “if [the enemy's vessel was] of equal or superior force.” Judgment was accordingly entered against the United States for the sum of $9,570, upon the basis of $100 for each person on board at the commencement of the engagement, of the enemy's vessels sunk or destroyed.

The counsel have called our attention to several cases in this and other courts. Do any of those cases constitute a direct adjudication of the question now before us?

In The Ironclad Atlanta, 3 Wall. 425, 432, sub nom. Officers & Crew of the United States Ironclad Weehawken v. The Atlanta, 18 L. ed. 253, 255, the question was whether a certain American vessel, the Nahant, was to be regarded as one of the capturing vessels in a naval engagement in Wassau sound, Georgia, in 1863. The court said: “The importance of the point is this: the Weehawken was confessedly inferior in force to the Atlanta, and if she is alone to be regarded in the comparison of forces, the whole prize money goes to the captors. On the other hand, the combined force of the two monitors was superior to that of the Atlanta, and if both are to be regarded as capturing vessels, only one half of the prize money goes to the captors, and the decree must be affirmed. The mere fact that the only shot fired and the only damage done was by the Weehawken is not decisive. Other circumstances must be taken into account in determining the matter,—such as the force, position, conduct, and intention of the Nahant. The two vessels were known to be under the same command and of nearly equal force. The Atlanta descended the sound to attack both, and governed herself with reference to their combined action.

[515] It is not reasonable to suppose that her course would have been the one pursued, had she had only the Weehawken to encounter. Besides, the fire of the Atlanta was directed entirely to the Nahant, and of course diverted from her consort. It is possible that a different result might have followed had the fire been turned upon the Weehawken. This diversion must be considered, in every just sense of the terms, as giving aid to her. Again, the power of the shot of the Weehawken had evidently surprised the officers of the Atlanta, who found their vessel speedily disabled and their crew demoralized. The advance upon her, at full speed, of a second monitor, of equal force, ready to inflict similar injuries, may have hastened the surrender. It can hardly be supposed that the approach of the second monitor did not enter into the consideration of the captain and officers of the Atlanta. If the shot from the guns of one of the monitors could, in a few moments, penetrate the casement of the Atlanta, crush in the bars of her pilot-house, and prostrate between forty and fifty of her men, her captain might well conclude that the combined fire of both would speedily sink his vessel and destroy his entire crew. It cannot be affirmed, nor is it reasonable to suppose, that any of the incidents of the battle would have occurred as they did if the Nahant had not been present in the action.”

Another case referred to is that of The Siren, 13 Wall. 389, 395, sub nom. Officers & Crews of United States Ships of War v. United States, 20 L. ed. 505, 507. That was a case in prize arising out of certain captures near Charleston, South Carolina, in 1865, of rebel vessels during the late Civil War, as the result of the joint action of the land and naval forces of the United States. This court, affirming the judgment of the district court for the district of Massachusetts, held that Congress had made no provision in reference to joint captures by the army and navy, and that such captures inured exclusively to the benefit of the United States. The court said: “We have already adverted to the ingress of the navy into the harbor of Charleston on the morning of the 17th of February. At 9 o'clock that morning an officer of the land forces hoisted the national flag over the ruins of Fort Sumter. Flags were also raised over Forts Ripley and Pinckney. At 10 o'clock a military officer reached Charleston. The mayor surrendered the city to him. Four hundred and fifty pieces of artillery, military stores, and much other property were captured with it. Contemporaneously with these things was the seizure of the Siren by the Gladiolus, and the approach and arrival of the rest of the fleet. The two forces were acting under the orders of a common government, for a common object, and for none other. They were united in their labors and their perils, and in their triumph they were not divided. They were converging streams toiling against the same dike. When it gave way, both swept in without any further obstruction. The consummation of their work was the fall of the city. Either force, after the abandonment of their defenses by the rebels, could have seized all that was taken by both. The meritorious service of the Gladiolus was as a salvor, and not as a captor. Precedence in the time of the arrival of the respective forces is an element of no consequence. Upon principle, reason, and authority, we think the judgment of the district court was correctly given.”

The case chiefly relied upon by the plaintiff is United States v. Farragut, 22 Wall. 406, 22 L. ed. 879. The question now presented might perhaps have been determined under the pleadings in that case, if it had not been withdrawn from consideration before this court rendered its judgment. Admiral Farragut and others of the American navy filed a libel in admiralty in the supreme court of the District of Columbia on account of certain prizes taken below New Orleans in April, 1862. The plaintiff and the government referred the cause to the determination and award of certain persons, whose award was to be final upon all questions of law and facts involved,—the award to be entered as a rule and decree of court in the case, with the right also of either party to appeal to this court as from other decrees or judgments in prize cases. The arbitrators made an award, holding, among other things, that certain captures were not a conjoint operation of the army and navy of the United States. Exceptions were filed to the award as erroneous in point both of law and fact. The exceptions were overruled and a decree was entered for the claimants. After the case came to this court the Attorney General, according to the report of the case, dismissed the appeal as to certain property covering [517] $613,520 of the aggregate *sum allowed by the decree, and that sum was distributed among the captors. That part of the case, it is stated, raised the very question now presented, and it is contended that the action of the Attorney General should be regarded as indicating the interpretation placed upon the statute by the executive department. We cannot accept this view. It does not appear from the report of the case what reasons induced the Attorney General to dismiss the appeal of the government as to the matters referred to. It may have been because of the conviction that, under the facts disclosed by the record, the capture in question was not the result of the conjoint action of the army and navy, but of the action alone of the navy. It is sufficient to say that this court regarded the statement by the arbitrators that the capture was not the joint act of the army and navy as binding upon it, and what appears in the opinion about other points has no bearing upon the present case.

Another case referred to by counsel is Porter v. United States, 106 U. S. 607, 611, sub nom. United States, Porter, v. Steam Vessels of War, 27 L. ed. 286, 287, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 543. But the decision there did not go beyond the point that the act of June 30, 1864 (13 Stat. at L. 306, 311, chap. 174), did not allow bounty where the vessels of the enemy during the late Rebellion, were destroyed by the combined action of the land and naval forces of the United States. The court said: "Prize money, or bounty in lieu of it, is not allowed by the laws of Congress where vessels of the enemy are captured or destroyed by the navy with the co-operation of the army. To win either, the navy must achieve its success without the direct aid of the army, by maritime force only. No pecuniary reward is conferred for anything taken or destroyed by the navy when it acts in conjunction with the army in the capture of a fortified position of the enemy, though the meritorious services and gallant conduct of its officers and men may justly entitle them to honorable mention in the history of the country."

178 U. S.

Nor has The Selma, 1 Low. Dec. 30, Fed. Cas. No. 12,647, any bearing upon the present discussion. That case arose out of certain captures made in the action of August 5th, 1864, in the bay of Mobile. It was there decided—and nothing else was decided—that, in order to entitle a vessel to participate in the distribution of a *prize, its situa-[518] tion during the naval engagement must have been such that it could have rendered assistance in the actual conflict in which the prize was taken. The court said: "Suppose it had happened in the case now before me, as once occurred on the Mississippi under the same great captain, that only a small number of vessels had made good the passage of the forts, and that they had found themselves only equal or inferior in force to the enemy within, and had then succeeded by their skill and gallantry in making this capture. It would be impossible, I think, under the case of The Atlanta [2 Sprague, 251, Fed. Cas. No. 619] or on principle, to hold that the vessels outside were actual takers, and to reduce the credit and reward of the conquerors to the level of a capture by superior force. And it will not be easy under our law to define actual captors in such a way as not to require of them at least the qualifications of position and power to do service, which the statute peremptorily imposes on constructive takers."

We have referred quite fully to these cases because they were made the subject of comment by counsel. But we do not think that any of them meet the precise question now presented. They throw no light on the inquiry whether, in estimating the force of the enemy's vessel, the support furnished by land batteries, mines, and torpedoes is to be taken into consideration.

The words in the existing statute relating to the distribution of prize money are not entirely new. In the act of March 2, 1799 (1 Stat. at L. 709, 715, chap. 24, § 5), relating to the navy of the United States, it was provided "that all captured national ships or vessels of war shall be the property of the United States; all other ships or vessels, being of superior force to the vessel making the capture, in men or in guns, shall be the sole property of the captors; and all ships or vessels of inferior force shall be divided equally between the United States and the officers and men of the vessel making the capture."

In the act of April 2, 1800 (2 Stat. at L. 45, 53, chap. 33, § 7), for the better government of the navy, it was provided "that a bounty shall be paid by the United States of twenty dollars for each person on board any ship of an enemy at the commencement of an engagement, which shall be sunk or destroyed by *any ship or vessel belonging to the Unit-[519] ed States of equal or inferior force, the same to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money."

The 4th section of the act for the better government of the navy, approved July 17, 1862 (12 Stat. at L. 600, 606, chap. 204, § 4), contained this provision: "That a bounty shall be paid by the United States for each person on board any ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy at the commencement of an engagement, which shall be sunk or otherwise destroyed in such engagement by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States, or which it may be necessary to destroy in consequence of injuries sustained in action, of one hundred dollars if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force; and of two hundred dollars if of equal or superior force; to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money; and when the actual number of men on board any such vessel cannot be satisfactorily ascertained, it shall be estimated according to the complement allowed to vessels of their class in the navy of the United States; and there shall be paid as bounty to the captors of any vessel of war captured from an enemy, which they may be instructed to destroy, or which shall be immediately destroyed for the public interest, but not in consequence of injuries received in action, fifty dollars for every person who shall be on board at the time of such capture."

Then came the act of June 30, 1864 (18 Stat. at L. 306, 310, chap. 174, § 11), regulating prize proceedings and the distribution of prize money. The 11th section of that act is substantially the same as the 4th section of the act of 1862, and is reproduced in § 4635 of the Revised Statutes, on which the claimant bases his action against the United States.

It thus appears that Congress, in providing for bounty to be paid by the United States on account of enemy vessels sunk or otherwise destroyed by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States, has never prescribed any other rule than to give the smaller amount when the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and the larger amount when the enemy's vessel was of equal or superior force. We are asked to construe the words in the present statute "one hundred [520] dollars, if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and of two hundred dollars if of equal or superior force," to mean just what it would mean if the question of the inferiority or superiority of the enemy's vessel was made, by express words, to depend upon the inquiry whether it was or was not supported in the naval engagement by land batteries, mines, and torpedoes under the charge of others than those having the management of the enemy's vessel. We cannot do that without going far beyond the obvious import of the words employed by Congress. Of course, our duty is to give effect to the will of Congress touching this matter. But we must ascertain that will from the words Congress has chosen to employ, interpreting such words according to their ordinary meaning, as well as in the light of all the circumstances that may fairly be regarded as having been within the knowledge of the legislative branch of the government at the time it acted on the subject. There is undoubtedly force in the suggestion that in rewarding officers and sailors who have sunk or destroyed the enemy's vessels in a naval engagement it is not unreasonable that all the difficulties, of every kind, with which they were actually confronted when engaging the enemy, should be taken into consideration. But that was a matter which we cannot suppose was overlooked by Congress; and we are not at liberty to hold that it proceeded upon the broad basis suggested, when it expressly declared that the amount of its bounty shall depend upon the question whether "the enemy's vessel"—not the enemy's vessel and the land batteries, mines, and torpedoes by which it was supported—was of inferior or of equal or superior force.

In our examination of this case we have not forgotten the skill and heroism displayed by the distinguished commander of our fleet in the battle of Manila, as well as by officers and sailors acting under his orders. All genuine Americans recall with delight and pride the marvelous achievements of our navy in that memorable engagement. But this court cannot permit considerations of that character to control its determination of a judicial question, or induce it to depart from the established rules for the interpretation of statutes. Nor can we allow our judgment to be influenced by the circumstance that Congress *has recently repealed all statutes giving bounty to officers and soldiers of the navy for the sinking or destruction hereafter, in time of war, of an enemy's vessels,—thereby, it may be assumed, indicating that in the judgment of the legislative branch of the government the policy of giving bounties to the navy was not founded in wisdom, and should be abandoned. This court has nothing to do with questions of mere policy that may be supposed to underlie the action of Congress. What is termed the policy of the government in reference to any particular subject of legislation, this court has said, "is generally a very uncertain thing, upon which all sorts of opinions, each variant from the other, may be formed by different persons. It is a ground much too unstable upon which to rest the judgment of the court in the interpretation of statutes." Hadden v. The Collector, 5 Wall. 107, 111, sub nom. Hadden v. Barney, 18 L. ed. 518, 519. Our province is to declare what the law is, and not, under the guise of interpretation or under the influence of what may be surmised to be the policy of the government, so to depart from sound rules of construction as in effect to adjudge that to be law which Congress has not enacted as such. Here the language used by Congress is unambiguous. It is so clear that the mind at once recognizes the intent of Congress. Interpreted according to the natural import of the words used, the statute involves no absurdity or contradiction, and there is consequently no room for construction. Our duty is to give effect to the will of Congress as thus plainly expressed. United States v. Fisher, 2 Cranch, 358, 399, 2 L. ed. 304, 317; Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 670, 2 L. ed. 1060, 1063, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651.

In our opinion, the court of claims did not err in holding that, in determining whether the Spanish vessels sunk or destroyed at Manila were of inferior or superior force to the American vessels engaged in that battle, the land batteries, mines, and torpedoes not controlled by those in charge of the Spanish vessels, but which supported those vessels, were to be excluded altogether from consideration, and that the size and armaments of the vessels sunk or destroyed, together with the number of men upon them, were alone to be regarded in determining the amount of the bounty to be awarded. In that view the decree below was right, and it is affirmed.

[522] *Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, dissenting:

Claimant in prosecuting this case, in effect, represents the claims of all the officers and men engaged in the battle of Manila bay, May 1, 1898. The question is not whether there was a grant of bounty, for that is not disputed. It is simply as to the amount of bounty, and the correct result turns upon the construction of the statute. There being no controversy in respect of the existence of the grant, I am of opinion that the rule of strict construction does not apply, and that the statute, in view of its object, should be construed liberally in favor of the beneficiaries. If so construed the judgment ought to be reversed.

The applicable statutory provision is as follows:

"A bounty shall be paid by the United States for each person on board any ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy at the commencement of an engagement, which shall be sunk or otherwise destroyed in such engagement by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States, or which it may be necessary to destroy in consequence of injuries sustained in action, of one hundred dollars if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and of two hundred dollars if of equal or superior force, to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money." [12 Stat. at L. 600, 606, chap. 204, § 4.]

The obvious object of the law was to encourage personal gallantry and enterprise. If the hostile force was equal or superior, then the bounty was to be double what it would be if the enemy's force was inferior, because the hazards to be run were so much the greater. But the bounty was limited in total amount by the number of persons on board the vessels of the enemy, which appears to have been considered to be a practicable restriction.

[523] The chief distinction, as a military achievement, of the victory of Manila bay, is that the American fleet, unaided by an army, attacked a force composed of ships supported by powerful shore defenses, together with submarine mines and torpedoes, and, in defiance of these open and hidden dangers in addition *to the power of the enemy's fleet, sailed in, and not only destroyed or captured all the opposing vessels, but captured or silenced the shore batteries. To omit consideration of these circumstances in determining pecuniary reward under the statute seems to me to be altogether unreasonable, and yet it is held that, in comparing the opposing forces, the shore batteries and submarine mines and torpedoes which our fleet was compelled to encounter should not be taken into account, though the bounty could not rise above the number of persons on the enemy's ships.

It is my judgment that the intent plainly was that the entire opposing forces should be compared, and that the shore batteries, mines, and torpedoes protecting and defending the vessels of the enemy should be included in estimating the rate of bounty, although they were, of course, not armaments or means of attack or defense directly located on the enemy vessels themselves. Indeed, the words of the statute, if literally construed, might be limited to engagements of single vessels on each side, yet as to this the principal opinion correctly applies a liberal construction, and any other would be preposterous. But if a liberal construction be proper at all, why not altogether?

The action of the government in respect of the taking of vessels by Admiral Farragut in the capture of New Orleans has great significance. That case involved an award made by a distinguished board of arbitrators, Henry W. Paine, of Massachusetts; Thomas J. Durant, of the District of Columbia, and Gustavus V. Fox, then late Assistant Secretary of the Navy, one of whose findings was: "That in the engagement which resulted in the capture of those ships, the entire force of the enemy was superior to the force of the United States ships and vessels so engaged." This finding was conceded to have included the forts and batteries on shore, but that was not definitely stated. The executive department acquiesced in the award of the arbitrators on this branch of the case without demanding a more specific finding, and this court was not called upon to determine the precise question. [U. S. v. Farragut] 22 Wall. 406, 22 L. ed. 879. The Siren, 13 Wall. 389, sub nom. Officers & Crews of United States Ships of War v. United States, 20 L. ed. 505, is not to the contrary, inasmuch as that was a case of joint capture by the army and the navy, and *Con-[524]gress had made no grant in such circumstances. Here the victory was that of the navy alone, and the pecuniary fruits under this statute should not be diminished because the opposing force was partly on shore or under water.

Undoubtedly it is our duty to give effect to the will of Congress, but in ascertaining its will the object Congress manifestly sought to attain must be recognized, and should be controlling, unless positively defeated by the language used.

I am unable to concur in the opinion and judgment of the court, and am authorized to say that Mr. Justice White and Mr. Justice McKenna concur in this dissent.

FRED BARDES, Trustee of the Estate of Frank T. Walker, Bankrupt, Appt.,

v.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF HAWARDEN, IOWA, et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 524-539.)

Bankruptcy—jurisdiction of district court over suit to collect assets.

1. Jurisdiction of civil actions at law and plenary suits in equity to determine title to and reduce to possession alleged assets of a bankrupt is not included in the clauses of § 2 of the bankruptcy act of 1898, which confer upon district courts of the United States power to bring in and substitute additional parties in proceedings in bankruptcy, to make orders, issue process and enter judgments necessary for the enforcement of the "provisions of this act" and "to cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto, except as herein otherwise provided," since § 23 of the act is intended to define the jurisdiction of such courts over such suits.
2. United States district courts have no jurisdiction over independent suits brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to assert a title to money or property as assets of the bankrupt, against strangers to the bankruptcy proceedings, unless by consent of the proposed defendant, such jurisdiction being denied to them by § 23 of the bankruptcy act of 1898.

[No. 503.]

Submitted January 31, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Iowa dismissing suit brought to set aside an alleged fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt and to compel an accounting for the goods or their proceeds. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Clarence A. Brandenburg submitted the cause for appellant. Messrs. William F. Lohr, Henry C. Gardiner, Frederick W. Lohr, Deloss C. Shull, and William Farnsworth were with him on the brief.

The questions here presented have been considered by the district courts of the United States in the following cases, and, after a full discussion, the decision was there reached that the district court as a court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to hear and determine cases of this character:

Re Sievers, 91 Fed. Rep. 366; Davis v. Bohle, 92 Fed. Rep. 325, 34 C. C. A. 372; Re Brooks, 91 Fed. Rep. 508; Carter v. Hobbs, 92 Fed. Rep. 594; Re Newberry, 97 Fed. Rep. 24.

The court of bankruptcy has jurisdiction to enjoin the assignee of the bankrupt from disposing of or interfering with the property transferred to him under the assignment, pending the hearing on the petition in bankruptcy.

Re Gutwillig, 90 Fed. Rep. 481.

Property conveyed by a bankrupt in fraud of creditors, prior to the passage of the bankrupt law, is to be regarded as vested in the assignee in bankruptcy by force of that act and by virtue of proceedings thereunder.

Goodwin v. Sharkey, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 64.

Under the law of 1867 suits by an assignee in bankruptcy were excepted from the general rule that Federal courts have no jurisdiction of controversies between citizens of the same state, and this exception included a suit by such assignee against a person not a party to the proceedings in bankruptcy.

Atkinson v. Purdy, Crabbe, 551, Fed. Cas. No. 616.

A bill by an assignee in bankruptcy to set aside a fraudulent conveyance by the bankrupt is a case arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, of which the Federal courts have jurisdiction irrespective of the citizenship of the parties.

Woolbridge v. McKenna, 8 Fed. Rep. 650.

The Federal courts have jurisdiction over a plenary suit against an assignee in bankruptcy to assert a claim of superior title to property of the bankrupt fraudulently assigned.

Olney v. Tanner, 10 Fed. Rep. 101.

The Federal court of bankruptcy has exclusive jurisdiction to adjudicate between the assignee and any person having a claim against the estate.

Re Anderson, 23 Fed. Rep. 482.

The district courts of the United States have exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies between the assignee and the bankrupt, depending on his relation as such.

Carr v. Gale, 2 Ware, 330, Fed. Cas. No. 2,434.

The district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction of all cases and controversies between third persons and an assignee in bankruptcy as such.

Bachman v. Packard, 2 Sawy. 264, Fed. Cas. No. 709.

The district court of the United States has full power as a court of equity to settle all controversies between a bankrupt and his creditors.

Fowler v. Dillon, 1 Hughes, 232, Fed. Cas. No. 5,000.

The moment that an adjudication of bankruptcy has been made, the title to all the property of the bankrupt, as of that date, passes to the person who is subsequently chosen trustee. From the time of the adjudication the property of the bankrupt is in the custody and under the control of the bankruptcy court. From the time such property, by the adjudication of bankruptcy, comes into the custody of the bankruptcy court, it is in custodia legis.

Keegan v. King, 96 Fed. Rep. 758.

A suit to set aside a contract upon grounds created and established by the bankrupt law is a suit arising under the laws of the United States, and this court has jurisdiction.

Main v. Glen, 7 Biss. 86, Fed. Cas. No. 8,973.

Under the bankrupt law of 1841 the United States district courts had jurisdiction of all matters and proceedings arising under it, and of all suits at law or in equity to be brought by the assignee or any person claiming an adverse interest.

Chemung Canal Bank v. Judson, 8 N. Y. 254.

In suits under the bankrupt law the United States courts have exclusive jurisdiction.

Voorhies v. Frisbie, 25 Mich. 476, 12 Am. Rep. 291.

The United States district court has jurisdiction of a suit brought by a trustee in bankruptcy to obtain possession of the bankrupt's estate, to which he holds title by virtue of his selection, to which he takes title by being duly selected and qualified.

Olney v. Tanner, 19 Nat. Bankr. Rep. 178, Fed. Cas. No. 10,506.

Under the bankruptcy law of 1867 the assignee was held to be vested with the title to all property conveyed by the bankrupt in fraud of creditors, and it was held that he might recover the bankrupt's interest in the same, whether or not any creditor was in a position to attack the transfer.

Platt v. Matthews, 10 Fed. Rep. 280.

It was also held that, under the law of 1867, it was not necessary, to entitle such assignee to maintain a suit, that he have actual possession of the property.

Lehman v. La Forge, 42 Fed. Rep. 493.

And that an assignee in bankruptcy under the United States bankrupt law was not merely vested with the remedies of creditors as to property fraudulently transferred, but with the ownership of such property, and that he might bring an action as such owner to reduce the same to possession.

Mann v. Flower, 25 Minn. 500.

The assignee is an officer of the court, and his possession is the possession of the court. The rule is the same as in cases of receivers.

Re Litchfield, 13 Fed. Rep. 863.

Mr. William Milchrist submitted the cause for appellees. Mr. John Hutchinson was with him on the brief.

A suit brought by an assignee in bankruptcy to collect a debt due to the bankrupt is not a proceeding in bankruptcy within the meaning of the bankrupt act, so as to exclude the jurisdiction of the state courts.

Kidder v. Horrobin, 72 N. Y. 164.

The district court has no jurisdiction of an action between the trustee and a third party, involving the validity of a sale of property made by the bankrupt prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy.

Re Abraham, 93 Fed. Rep. 767, 35 C. C. A. 592; Mitchell v. McClure, 91 Fed. Rep. 621.

Controversies as to the validity of conveyances by a bankrupt must be determined in proceedings brought by the courts of the state, unless the case involves the requisite amount to give a Federal court jurisdiction, and is between citizens of different states.

Burnett v. Morris Mercantile Co. 91 Fed. Rep. 365; Hicks v. Knost, 94 Fed. Rep. 627; Goodier v. Barnes, 94 Fed. Rep. 798; Camp v. Zellars, 94 Fed. Rep. 799, 36 C. C. A. 501; Re Ogles, 93 Fed. Rep. 426; Re Prico, 92 Fed. Rep. 987.

[525] *Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a bill in equity, filed April 28, 1899, in the district court of the United States for the northern district of Iowa, sitting in bankruptcy, by Fred Bardes, a citizen of Iowa, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Frank T. Walker (who had by that court been adjudged a bankrupt upon his own petition), against the First National Bank of Hawarden, Iowa, a corporation created and existing under the acts of Congress relating to national banks, and against citizens of Iowa and of South Dakota, to set aside a conveyance of goods, of the value of $3,500, alleged to have been made by the bankrupt, within four months before the institution of the proceedings in bankruptcy to the defendants, and to compel them to account for the goods or their proceeds, on the ground that the conveyance was in fraud of the provisions of the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898, and in fraud of the creditors of the bankrupt. The defendants demurred to the bill upon the ground that the court could not take jurisdiction of the case. The court sustained the demurrer, and entered a final decree dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction, but without prejudice to the plaintiff's right to institute proceedings in a court having jurisdiction. The plaintiff took an appeal directly to this court; and the district judge certified that the bill was dismissed for want of jurisdiction only, and, to the end that this court might be fully advised in the premises, stated in his certificate the following questions as having arisen before him, namely:

178 U. S. U. S., BOOK 44.

"1st. Do the provisions of the 2d clause of § 23 of the act of Congress known as the bankrupt act of 1898 control and limit the jurisdiction of all courts, including the several district courts of the United States, over suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy to recover or collect debts due from third parties, or to set aside transfers of property to third parties, alleged to be fraudulent as against creditors, including payments in money or property to preferred creditors?"

"2d. Can the district court of the United States under any circumstances entertain jurisdiction over suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy to set aside fraudulent transfers of money *or property, made by the bankrupt to third parties before the institution of the proceedings in bankruptcy?"

"3d. Can this court, being the district court for the northern district of Iowa, take jurisdiction over the suit as it now stands on the record?"

The record clearly shows, with perhaps unnecessary fullness, that the case was decided upon questions of jurisdiction only, and what those questions were. Huntington v. Laidley, 176 U. S. 668, 676, ante, 630, 634, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 526, 528, and cases there cited.

At a former day of this term, a certificate made by the district judge of the same questions, on which he desired the instruction of this court for his guidance, was dismissed by this court because he was not authorized by the acts of Congress to make such a certificate before deciding the case. Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 175 U. S. 526, ante, 261, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 196.

By the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898, chap. 541, trustees in bankruptcy appointed by the creditors of the bankrupt or by the court of bankruptcy take the place and are vested with the powers of assignees in bankruptcy under former bankrupt acts. Among the duties imposed upon such trustees by § 47 are to "(2) collect and reduce to money the property of the estates for which they are trustees, under the direction of the court." By § 70 the trustees, upon their appointment and qualification, are vested by operation of law with the title of the bankrupt, as of the date when he was adjudged a bankrupt, in all his property, excepting that exempt by law from execution and liability for debts, and including property transferred by him in fraud of his creditors. And by the 5th clause of § 67 "all conveyances, transfers, assignments, or encumbrances of his property, or any part thereof, made or given by a person adjudged a bankrupt under the provisions of this act, subsequent to the passage of this act, and within four months prior to the filing of the petition, with the intent and purpose on his part to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors or any of them, shall be null and void as against the creditors of such debtor, except as to purchasers in good faith and for a present fair consideration; and all property of the debtor conveyed, transferred, assigned, or encumbered as aforesaid shall, if [527] he be adjudged a bankrupt, *and the same is not exempt from execution and liability for debts by the law of his domicile, be and remain a part of the assets and estate of the bankrupt, and shall pass to his said trustee, whose duty it shall be to recover and reclaim the same, by legal proceedings or otherwise, for the benefit of the creditors." 30 Stat. at L. 557, 564, 565.

1177

The present appeal from the final decree of the district court dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction distinctly presents for the decision of this court the question whether, under the act of 1898, a district court of the United States in which proceedings in bankruptcy have been commenced and are pending under the act has jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the trustee in bankruptcy against a person holding, and claiming as his own, property alleged to have been conveyed to him by the bankrupt in fraud of creditors. This is a question of general importance, upon which there has been much difference of opinion in the lower courts of the United States.

Its determination depends mainly on the true construction of two sections of the bankrupt act of 1898, which it may be convenient to set forth in full, as follows:

"Sec. 2. Creation of Courts of Bankruptcy and Their Jurisdiction.—That the courts of bankruptcy, as hereinbefore defined, viz., the district courts of the United States in the several states, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the district courts of the several territories, and the United States courts in the Indian territory and the district of Alaska, are hereby made courts of bankruptcy, and are hereby invested, within their respective territorial limits as now established, or as they may be hereafter changed, with such jurisdiction, at law and in equity, as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings, in vacation in chambers, and during their respective terms as they are now or may be hereafter held, to (1) adjudge persons bankrupt who have had their principal place of business, resided, or had their domicile within their respective territorial jurisdictions for the preceding six months, or the greater portion thereof, or who do not have their principal place of business, reside, or have their domicile within the United States, but have property within their jurisdictions, *or who have been adjudged bankrupts by courts of competent jurisdiction without the United States and have property within their jurisdictions; (2) allow claims, disallow claims, reconsider allowed or disallowed claims, and allow or disallow them against bankrupt estates; (3) appoint receivers or the marshals, upon application of parties in interest, in case the courts shall find it absolutely necessary for the preservation of estates, to take charge of the property of bankrupts after the filing of the petition and until it is dismissed or the trustee is qualified; (4) arraign, try, and punish bankrupts, officers, and other persons, and the agents, officers, members of the board of directors or trustees, or other similar controlling bodies of corporations, for violations of this act, in accordance with the laws of procedure of the United States now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted, regulating trials for the alleged violation of laws of the United States; (5) authorize the business of bankrupts to be conducted for limited periods by receivers, the marshals, or trustees, if necessary in the best interests of the estates; (6) bring in and substitute additional persons or parties in proceedings in bankruptcy when necessary for the complete determination of a matter in controversy; (7) cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto, except as herein otherwise provided; (8) close estates, whenever it appears that they have been fully administered, by approving the final accounts and discharging the trustees, and reopen them whenever it appears they were closed before being fully administered; (9) confirm or reject compositions between debtors and their creditors, and set aside compositions and reinstate the cases; (10) consider and confirm, modify or overrule, or return with instructions for further proceedings, records and findings certified to them by referees; (11) determine all claims of bankrupts to their exemptions; (12) discharge or refuse to discharge bankrupts, and set aside discharges and reinstate the cases; (13) enforce obedience by bankrupts, officers, and other persons to all lawful orders, by fine or imprisonment, or fine and imprisonment; (14) extradite bankrupts from their respective districts to other districts; (15) make such orders, issue *such [529] process, and enter such judgments, in addition to those specifically provided for, as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act; (16) punish persons for contempts committed before referees; (17) pursuant to the recommendation of creditors, or when they neglect to recommend the appointment of trustees, appoint trustees, and, upon complaints of creditors, remove trustees for cause, upon hearings and after notices to them; (18) tax costs, whenever they are allowed by law, and render judgments therefor against the unsuccessful party, or the successful party for cause, or in part against each of the parties, and against estates, in proceedings in bankruptcy; and (19) transfer cases to other courts of bankruptcy. Nothing in this section contained shall be construed to deprive a court of bankruptcy of any power it would possess were certain specific powers not herein enumerated." 30 Stat. at L. 545, chap. 541.

"Sec. 23. Jurisdiction of United States and State Courts.—a. The United States circuit courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy, between trustees, as such, and adverse claimants, concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees, in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants.

"b. Suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt whose estate is being administered by such trustee might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant..

"c. The United States circuit courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of bankruptcy, within their respective territorial limits, of the offenses enumerated in this act." 30 Stat. at L. 552, chap. 541.

[530] The question of the effect of these two sections, considering the language of each and their relation to one another, may be best approached by first referring to the terms and to the judicial construction of the bankrupt act of March 2, 1867, chap. 176, *which was substantially re-enacted in the Revised Statutes, and afterwards repealed; and by then comparing the provisions of that act, as so construed, with those of the existing act.

In the act of 1867 the provisions as to the jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy, and as to the original jurisdiction of actions at law and suits in equity, were as follows:

Sec. 1. "That the several district courts of the United States be, and they hereby are, constituted courts of bankruptcy, and they shall have original jurisdiction in their respective districts in all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy, and they are hereby authorized to hear and adjudicate upon the same according to the provisions of this act. The said courts shall be always open for the transaction of business under this act, and the powers and jurisdiction hereby granted and conferred shall be exercised as well in vacation as in term time, and a judge sitting at chambers shall have the same powers and jurisdiction, including the power of keeping order and of punishing any contempt of his authority, as when sitting in court. And the jurisdiction hereby conferred shall extend to all cases and controversies arising between the bankrupt and any creditor or creditors who shall claim any debt or demand under the bankruptcy; to the collection of all the assets of the bankrupt; to the ascertainment and liquidation of the liens and other specific claims thereon; to the adjustment of the various priorities and conflicting interests of all parties, and to the marshaling and disposition of the different funds and assets, so as to secure the rights of all parties and due distribution of the assets among all the creditors; and to all acts, matters, and things to be done under and in virtue of the bankruptcy, until the final distribution and settlement of the estate of the bankrupt, and the close of the proceedings in bankruptcy." 14 Stat. at L. 517; Rev. Stat. §§ 563, 711, 4972, 4973.

"Sec. 2. That the several circuit courts of the United States, within and for the districts where the proceedings in bankruptcy shall be pending, shall have a general superintendence and jurisdiction of all cases and questions arising under this act; and, except when special provision is otherwise made, may, upon bill, petition, or other proper process of any party aggrieved, *hear and [531] determine the case in a court of equity. The powers and jurisdiction hereby granted may be exercised either by said court or by any justice thereof in term time or vacation. Said circuit courts shall also have concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of the same district of all suits at law or in equity which may or shall be brought by the assignee in bankruptcy against any person claiming an adverse interest, or by such person against such assignee, touching any property or rights of property of said bankrupt transferable to or vested in such assignee." 14 Stat. at L. 518; Rev. Stat. §§ 4979, 4986.

In Lathrop v. Drake (1875) 91 U. S. 516, 23 L. ed. 414, the jurisdiction conferred on the district courts and the circuit courts of the United States by the bankrupt act of 1867 was defined by this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Bradley, as consisting of "two distinct classes: First, jurisdiction, as a court of bankruptcy, over the proceedings in bankruptcy initiated by the petition, and ending in the distribution of assets amongst the creditors, and the discharge or refusal of a discharge of the bankrupt; secondly, jurisdiction, as an ordinary court, of suits at law or in equity brought by or against the assignee in reference to alleged property of the bankrupt, or to claims alleged to be due from or to him." And the jurisdiction of the district and circuit courts over suits to recover assets of the bankrupt from a stranger to the proceedings in bankruptcy, brought by the assignee in a district other than that in which the decree in bankruptcy had been made, was upheld, not under the provisions of § 1 of that act, giving to the district court original jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy, and of § 2, giving to the circuit court supervisory jurisdiction over such proceedings; but wholly under the distinct clause of § 2, which gave to those two courts concurrent jurisdiction of all suits, at law or in equity, brought "by the assignee in bankruptcy against any person claiming an adverse interest, or by such person against such assignee, touching any property or rights of property of said bankrupt transferable to or vested in such assignee."

(532) In an earlier case it had been observed by Mr. Justice Clifford, delivering a judgment of this court dismissing an appeal from "a decree of the circuit court in the exercise of its supervisory jurisdiction in bankruptcy, that the jurisdiction conferred by the later clause was "other and different from the special jurisdiction and superintendence described in the first clause of the section;" was "of the same character as that conferred upon the circuit courts by the 11th section of the judiciary act" of 1789, and was "the regular jurisdiction between party and party, as described in the judiciary act and the third article of the Constitution." Morgan v. Thornhill (1870) 11 Wall. 65, 76, 80, 20 L. ed. 60, 63, 64.

It was also repeatedly held by this court that the right of an assignee in bankruptcy to assert a title in property transferred by the bankrupt before the bankruptcy to a third person who now claimed it adversely to the assignee could only be enforced by a plenary suit at law or in equity, under the 2d section of the act of 1867; and not by summary proceedings under the 1st section thereof, notwithstanding the declaration in that section that the jurisdiction in bankruptcy should extend "to the collection of all the assets of the bankrupt," and "to all acts, matters, and things to be done under and in virtue of the bankruptcy" until the close of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Smith v. Mason (1871) 14 Wall. 419, 20 L. ed. 748; Marshall v. Knox (1872) 16 Wall. 551, 557, 21 L. ed. 481, 484; Eyster v. Gaff (1875) 91 U. S. 521, 525, 23 L. ed. 403, 405.

The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States over all matters and proceedings in bankruptcy, as distinguished from independent suits at law or in equity, was of course exclusive. But it was well settled that the jurisdiction of such suits, conferred by the 2d section of the act of 1867 upon the circuit and district courts of the United States for the benefit of an assignee in bankruptcy, was concurrent with that of the state courts. In Eyster v. Gaff, just cited, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "The opinion seems to have been quite prevalent in many quarters at one time, that, the moment a man is declared bankrupt, the district court which has so adjudged draws to itself by that act not only all control of the bankrupt's property and credits, but that no one can litigate with the assignee contested rights in any other court, except in so far as the circuit courts have concurrent prevalent practice to bring any person who contested with the assignee any matter growing out of disputed rights of property or of contracts, into the bankrupt court by the service of a rule to show cause, and to dispose of their rights in a summary way. This court has steadily set its face against this view. The debtor of a bankrupt, or the man who contests the right to real or personal property with him, loses none of those rights by the bankruptcy of his adversary. The same courts remain open to him in such contests, and the statute has not divested those courts of jurisdiction in such actions. If it has for certain classes of actions conferred a jurisdiction for the benefit of the assignee in the circuit and district courts of the United States, it is concurrent with and does not divest that of the state courts."

(533) jurisdiction, and *that other courts can proceed no further in suits of which they had at that time full cognizance; and it was a

Under the act of 1867, then, the distinction between proceedings in bankruptcy, properly so called, and independent suits, at law or in equity, between the assignee in bankruptcy and an adverse claimant, was distinctly recognized and emphatically declared. Jurisdiction of such suits was conferred upon the district courts and circuit courts of the United States by the express provision to that effect in § 2 of that act, and was not derived from the other provisions of §§ 1 and 2, conferring jurisdiction of proceedings in bankruptcy. And the jurisdiction of suits between assignees and adverse claimants, so conferred on the circuit and district courts of the United States, did not divest or impair the jurisdiction of the state courts over like cases.

The decisions of this court under the earlier bankrupt act of August 19, 1841, chap. 9, are very few in number, and afford little aid in the decision of the present case. The one most often cited in favor of maintaining such a suit as this under the existing law is Ex parte City Bank (Ex parte Christy) (1845) 3 How. 292, 11 L. ed. 603. But § 8 of the act of 1841 contained the provision (afterwards embodied in § 2 of the act of 1867, and above quoted) conferring on the circuit courts concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of suits, at law or in equity, between assignees in bankruptcy and adverse claimants of property of the bankrupt. *5[534] Stat. at L. 446. And Mr. Justice Story in City Bank's Case (Christy's Case) considerably relied on that provision. 3 How. 314, 11 L. ed. 613. Moreover, the only point necessary to the decision of that case was that this court had no power to issue a writ of prohibition to the district court sitting in bankruptcy; much of Mr. Justice Story's opinion in favor of extending the jurisdiction of that court at the expense of the state courts is contrary to the subsequent adjudication of this court in Peck v. Jenness (1849) 7 How. 612, 12 L. ed. 841, and in a still later case this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Curtis, said that the two former cases "are an illustration of the rule that any opinion given here or elsewhere cannot be relied on as a binding authority, unless the case called for its expression." Carroll v. Car- roll (1853) 16 How. 275, 287, 14 L. ed. 936, 941.

We now recur to the provisions of the act of 1898. This act has the somewhat unusual feature of inserting at the head of each section a separate title indicating its subject-matter.

Section 2 of this act is entitled "Creation of Courts of Bankruptcy and their Jurisdiction," takes the place of § 1 of the act of 1867, and hardly differs from that section, except in the following particulars:

First. It begins by describing the jurisdiction conferred on "the courts of bankruptcy" as "such jurisdiction, at law and in equity, as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings;" and it ends by declaring that "nothing in this section contained shall be construed to deprive a court of bankruptcy of any power it would possess were certain specific powers not herein enumerated."

Second. It specifies in greater detail matters which are, in the strictest sense, proceedings in bankruptcy.

Third. It includes, among the powers specifically conferred on the courts of bankruptcy, those to "(4) arraign, try, and punish bankrupts, officers, and other persons, and the agents, officers, members of the board of directors or trustees, or other similar controlling bodies of corporations, for violations of this act, in accordance with the laws of procedure of the United States now in force, or such as may be hereafter enacted, regulating trials for the alleged violation of laws of the United States;" "(6) bring in and substitute additional persons or parties [535] in "proceedings in bankruptcy, when necessary for the complete determination of a matter in controversy; (7) cause the estates of bankrupts to be collected, reduced to money, and distributed, and determine controversies in relation thereto, except as herein otherwise provided;" and "(15) make such orders, issue such process, and enter such judgments, in addition to those specifically provided for, as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act."

The general provisions at the beginning and end of this section mention "courts of bankruptcy" and "bankruptcy proceedings."

Proceedings in bankruptcy generally are in the nature of proceedings in equity; and the words "at law," in the opening sentence conferring on the courts of bankruptcy "such jurisdiction, at law and in equity, as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings," may have been inserted to meet clause 4, authorizing the trial and punishment of offenses, the jurisdiction over which must necessarily be at law, and not in equity.

The section nowhere mentions civil actions at law, or plenary suits in equity. And no intention to vest the courts of bankruptcy with jurisdiction to entertain such actions and suits can reasonably be inferred from the grant of the incidental powers, in clause 6, to bring in and substitute additional parties "in proceedings in bankruptcy," and, in clause 15, to make orders, issue process, and enter judgments "necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act."

The chief reliance of the appellant is upon clause 7. But this clause, in so far as it speaks of the collection, conversion into money, and distribution of the bankrupt's estate, is no broader than the corresponding provisions of § 1 of the act of 1867; and in that respect, as well as in respect to the further provision authorizing the court of bankruptcy to "determine controversies in relation thereto," it is controlled and limited by the concluding words of the clause, "except as herein otherwise provided."

These words "herein otherwise provided" evidently refer to § 23 of the act, the general scope and object of which, as *indicated by [536] its title, are to define the "Jurisdiction of United States and State Courts" in the premises. The first and second clauses are the only ones relating to civil actions and suits at law or in equity.

The 1st clause provides that "the United States circuit courts shall have jurisdiction of all controversies at law and in equity, as distinguished from proceedings in bankruptcy" (thus clearly recognizing the essential difference between proceedings in bankruptcy, on the one hand, and suits at law or in equity, on the other), "between trustees as such and adverse claimants, concerning the property acquired or claimed by the trustees," restricting that jurisdiction, however, by the further words, "in the same manner and to the same extent only as though bankruptcy proceedings had not been instituted and such controversies had been between the bankrupts and such adverse claimants." This clause, while relating to the circuit courts only, and not to the district courts of the United States, indicates the intention of Congress that the ascertainment, as between the trustee in bankruptcy and a stranger to the bankruptcy proceedings, of the question whether certain property claimed by the trustee does or does not form part of the estate to be administered in bankruptcy, shall not be brought within the jurisdiction of the national courts solely because the rights of the bankrupt and of his creditors have been transferred to the trustee in bankruptcy.

But the 2d clause applies both to the district courts and to the circuit courts of the United States, as well as to the state courts. This appears, not only by the clear words of the title of the section, but also by the use, in this clause, of the general words, "the courts," as contrasted with the specific words, "the United States circuit courts," in the 1st and in the 3d clauses.

The 2d clause positively directs that "suits by the trustee shall only be brought or prosecuted in the courts where the bankrupt whose estate is being administered by such trustee might have brought or prosecuted them if proceedings in bankruptcy had not been instituted, unless by consent of the proposed defendant."

*Had there been no bankruptcy proceedings [537]

the bankrupt might have brought suit in any state court of competent jurisdiction; or, if there was a sufficient jurisdictional amount and the requisite diversity of citizenship existed, or the case arose under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, he could have brought suit in the circuit court of the United States. Act of August 13, 1888, chap. 866 (25 Stat. at L. 434). He could not have sued in a district court of the United States, because such a court has no jurisdiction of suits at law or in equity between private parties, except where, by special provision of an act of Congress, a district court has the powers of a circuit court, or is given jurisdiction of a particular class of civil suits.

It was argued for the appellant that the clause cannot apply to a case like the present one, because the bankrupt could not have brought a suit to set aside a conveyance made by himself in fraud of his creditors. But the clause concerns the jurisdiction only, and not the merits, of a case; the forum in which a case may be tried, and not the way in which it must be decided; the right to decide the case, and not the principles which must govern the decision. The bankrupt himself could have brought a suit to recover property which he claimed as his own, against one asserting an adverse title in it; and the incapacity of the bankrupt to set aside his own fraudulent conveyance is a matter affecting the merits of such an action, and not the jurisdiction of the court to entertain and determine it.

The bankrupt acts of 1867 and 1841, as has been seen, each contained a provision conferring in the clearest terms on the circuit and district courts of the United States concurrent jurisdiction of suits at law or in equity between the assignee in bankruptcy and an adverse claimant of property of the bankrupt. We find it impossible to infer that when Congress, in framing the act of 1898, entirely omitted any similar provision, and substituted the restricted provisions of § 23, it intended that either of those courts should retain the jurisdiction which it had under the obsolete provision of the earlier acts.

[538] On the contrary, Congress, by the 2d clause of § 23 *of the present bankrupt act, appears to this court to have clearly manifested its intention that controversies, not strictly or properly part of the proceedings in bankruptcy, but independent suits brought by the trustee in bankruptcy to assert a title to money or property as assets of the bankrupt against strangers to those proceedings, should not come within the jurisdiction of the district courts of the United States, "unless by consent of the proposed defendant," of which there is no pretense in this case.

One object in inserting this clause in the act may well have been to leave such controversies to be tried and determined, for the most part, in the local courts of the state, to the greater economy and convenience of litigants and witnesses. See Shoshone Min.

1182

Co. v. Rutter, 177 U. S. 505, 511, 513, ante, 865, 866, 867, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 726.

Two or three minor provisions of the bankrupt act of 1898, sometimes supposed to be inconsistent with this conclusion, may be briefly noticed.

Section 26 provides that the trustee may, pursuant to the direction of the court of bankruptcy, submit to arbitration any controversy arising in the settlement of the estate, and that the award of the arbitrators "may be filed in court," evidently meaning the court of bankruptcy. But no such arbitration could be had without the consent of the adverse party to the controversy in question.

The powers conferred on the courts of bankruptcy by clause 3 of § 2, and by § 69, after the filing of a petition in bankruptcy, and in case it is necessary for the preservation of property of the bankrupt, to authorize receivers or the marshals to take charge of it until a trustee is appointed, can hardly be considered as authorizing the forcible seizure of such property in the possession of an adverse claimant, and have no bearing upon the question in what courts the trustee may sue him.

The supervisory jurisdiction over proceedings in bankruptcy, conferred by the act of 1867 upon the circuit courts of the United States, and by the existing act upon the circuit courts of appeals, does not affect this case. 30 Stat. at L. 553, chap. 541.

For the reasons above stated, we are of opinion that the questions of jurisdiction certified by the district judge should be answered as follows:

*"1st. The provisions of the 2d clause of §[539] 23 of the bankrupt act of 1898 control and limit the jurisdiction of all courts, including the several district courts of the United States, over suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy to recover or collect debts due from third parties, or to set aside transfers of property to third parties, alleged to be fraudulent as against creditors, including payments in money or property to preferred creditors.

"2d. The district court of the United States can, by the proposed defendants' consent, but not otherwise, entertain jurisdiction over suits brought by trustees in bankruptcy to set aside fraudulent transfers of money or property, made by the bankrupt to third parties before the institution of the proceedings in bankruptcy.

"3d. The district court for the northern district of Iowa cannot take jurisdiction over this suit as it now stands on the record."

The result is that the decree of the District Court, dismissing the bill for want of jurisdiction, must be affirmed.

S. DUFFIELD MITCHELL, Plff. in Err.,

v.

JOHN C. McCLURE et al.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 539, 540.)

Bankruptcy—jurisdiction of district court over suit to recover assets.

178 U. S.

[No. 237.]

Submitted April 12, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

IN ERROR to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania to review a judgment in favor of defendants in a proceeding to recover property alleged to have been conveyed by the bankrupt in fraudulent preference of creditors. Affirmed.

See same case below, 91 Fed. Rep. 621.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

McSSRS. S. Duffield Mitchell and Thomas Patterson submitted the cause for plaintiff in error.

Mr. John S. Ferguson submitted the cause for defendants in error.

[540] Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of replevin in the district court of the United States for the western district of Pennsylvania by a trustee in bankruptcy, appointed by that court, a citizen of Pennsylvania, to recover a stock of goods, of the value of $2,500, in the possession of the defendants, citizens of Pennsylvania and residents of that district, and alleged to have been conveyed to them by the bankrupt, within four months before the institution of proceedings in bankruptcy, in fraud of the bankrupt act of 1898 and of the creditors of the bankrupt. The district court, on motion of the defendant, held that it had no jurisdiction to entertain such an action, and therefore ordered it to be abated. 91 Fed. Rep. 621. The plaintiff sued out a writ of error from this court, and the district judge certified that the question of jurisdiction was the sole question in issue.

For the reason stated in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, ante, 1175, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000, just decided, the judgment is affirmed.

[541] W. A. HICKS, Trustee in Bankruptcy, Appt.,
v.

Bertha KNOT.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 541, 542.)

Bankruptcy—jurisdiction of district court to collect assets.

[No. 512.]

Submitted May 14, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

QUESTIONS CERTIFIED by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit as to the jurisdiction of the District Court in proceedings to recover money alleged to have been paid by the bankrupt in fraudulent preference of the creditors. Answer returned that the court had no jurisdiction.

Mr. Charles M. Peck submitted the cause for appellant.

178 U. S.

Mr. Frederick Hertenstein submitted the cause for appellee.

Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of [541] the court:

This was a bill in equity in the district court of the United States for the southern district of Ohio by a trustee in bankruptcy appointed by that court, against a creditor of the bankrupts, to recover money to the amount of $2,780, paid by the bankrupts to the defendant, with intent to prefer the defendant and to defraud the creditors of the bankrupts, within four months before the institution of the proceedings in bankruptcy. Both parties were citizens of Ohio and residents of that district. The district court dismissed the bill for want of jurisdiction. 94 Fed. Rep. 625. The plaintiff appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the sixth circuit, which certified to this court the following question:

"Has a district court of the United States jurisdiction to entertain a bill in equity filed by a trustee in bankruptcy appointed by it, against a fraudulent grantee or transferee of the bankrupt resident in its district, to recover the property belonging *to the estate [542] of the bankrupt, and by him fraudulently conveyed to defendant?"

For the reasons stated in Bardes v. First Nat. Bank, 178 U. S. 524, ante, 1175, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1000, just decided, the answer to this question must be that the district court has such jurisdiction by the consent of the proposed defendant, but not otherwise.

Ordered accordingly.

CHARLES M. WHITE, John C. Thompson, and Henry Eckstein,
v.

AUGUST T. SCHLOERB, Eugene B. Schickel-dantz, and Henry Roewitz, Trustee.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 542-548.)

Bankruptcy—summary jurisdiction of district court to compel return of property taken under state law.

1. Goods in actual possession of a bankrupt at the time of his adjudication as such, and at the time of the reference of the case to a referee, who directs them to be locked in a store, are in custody of the United States court, from which they cannot be taken upon any process from a state court.
2. After an adjudication in bankruptcy an action of replevin in a state court cannot be commenced and maintained against the bankrupt to recover property in the possession of and claimed by the bankrupt at the time of that adjudication, and in the possession of a referee in bankruptcy at the time when the action of replevin is begun.

NOTE.—As to conflict of jurisdiction between Federal and state courts—see Louisville Trust Co. v. Cincinnati, 22 C. C. A. 356, and note. And see note to J. I. Case Plow Works v. Finks, 26 C. C. A. 50.

As to jurisdiction as affected by possession of the subject-matter—see Adams v. Mercantile Trust Co. 15 C. C. A. 6, and note.

8. A Judge of a United States bankruptcy court has authority to compel persons who have forcibly and unlawfully seized and taken out of the judicial custody of that court property which had lawfully come into its possession as part of the bankrupt's property, to restore that property to its custody by summary proceedings.

[No. 530.]

Submitted April 26, 1900. Decided May 28, 1900.

QUESTIONS CERTIFIED by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit for the opinion of the Supreme Court as to the jurisdiction of the District Court to compel return of property taken under state replevin laws. Answers returned upholding jurisdiction.

Statement by Mr. Justice Gray:

[542] *This was a petition in equity to the circuit court of appeals for the seventh circuit, under the jurisdiction conferred upon that court by the 2d clause of § 24 of the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898, chap. 541, to superintend and revise in matter of law the proceedings in bankruptcy of the district courts of the United States in that circuit. 30 Stat. at L. 553. The circuit court of appeals certified to this court the following statement of the case and questions of law:

"On September 13, 1899, August T. Schloerb and Eugene B. Schickedantz, who were respectively residents and inhabitants of the eastern district of Wisconsin, and who were copartners in trade in the said district, filed their voluntary petition in bankruptcy in the district court of the United States for that district. On the same day they were [543] duly adjudged *bankrupt by that court, and the matter referred to a referee in bankruptcy for further proceedings according to law. They had at that date a stock of goods contained in a store, the entrance to which was locked by the direction of the referee.

"Thereafter, on September 21, 1899, James Cogan and Bernard Cogan, who were copartners, commenced an action of replevin against the bankrupts in the circuit court of the state of Wisconsin for the county of Winnebago, in which county the store of the bankrupts was located, to recover the possession of certain specified goods then in the store of the bankrupts, and forming part of their stock of goods. On the same day the proper undertaking and requisition to the sheriff of the county of Winnebago, according to the law of the state of Wisconsin, were delivered to the petitioner Charles M. White, who was then the sheriff of the county, who delivered it for execution to the petitioner Henry Eckstein, who was the under-sheriff of said sheriff. In pursuance of said requisition, the under-sheriff, on the same day, and before the selection and appointment of a trustee in the bankrupt proceedings, forcibly entered the store of the bankrupts, and took possession of certain goods, part of the goods specified in the writ of replevin.

"On September 23, 1899, the bankrupts presented their petition to the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin, setting forth the facts above recited, and also alleging that the goods so taken under the writ of replevin were part of a bill of goods purchased by them of the plaintiffs in that writ, and were their lawful property. The petition alleges that the goods were in the possession of the petitioner, the sheriff and under-sheriff mentioned, and John C. Thompson, the attorney for the plaintiffs in the writ of replevin, and asked the court that they be compelled to redeliver the goods to the district court sitting in bankruptcy, from whose possession they were taken, and that they be enjoined from any disposition thereof. Upon the filing of the petition the district court issued its mandate requiring the petitioners here, the sheriff, the under-sheriff, and the attorney mentioned, to show cause before that court, at a time and place mentioned, why the seizure of the goods under the writ of replevin should not be vacated and set aside, *and the [544] goods returned to the bankrupts, or placed in the possession of the marshal of the court, or such other person as the court should direct, and why they should not be respectively enjoined from interference with the property so seized, and in the meantime restraining them from such interference. The petitioners specially appeared upon the return day mentioned in the mandate; and moved the district court to set aside and vacate its mandate or order to show cause, for want of jurisdiction in the court of bankruptcy over the subject-matter; and also presented proof by affidavit to the effect that the assertion of title to the goods in question by the plaintiffs in the writ of replevin was founded upon the claim that the bankrupts had purchased the goods of them upon false and fraudulent representations upon which reliance had been placed, and that before the writ of replevin they had elected to rescind the sale, and had demanded of the bankrupts the return of the goods. The court of bankruptcy at the hearing, and on October 26, 1899, made the following order: 'It is hereby ordered that said Charles M. White, Henry Eckstein, and John C. Thompson be, and they are hereby, restrained from sale or other disposition of the property mentioned in said petition herein; and they are hereby directed to turn over and deliver the said property, so taken by them from the estate of the bankrupts, to the trustee appointed herein, within twenty days from the date of this order; and it is further ordered that the trustee, on delivery of the said property, keep the same separate and apart from other property, to abide the further order of the court; and that, in case sale of said property is hereafter ordered, the proceeds of said sale be kept separate and apart to abide such further order of the court.' The opinion of the court upon that hearing is reported Re Schloerb, 97 Fed. Rep. 326.

"The petitioners here, by their original petition filed in this court, have presented the matters of law raised by the order so made by the district court sitting in bankruptcy.

"The questions of law upon which this court desires the advice and instruction of the Supreme Court are:

"First. Whether the district court sitting in bankruptcy had jurisdiction by summary proceedings to compel the return of the property seized.

[545] *"Second. Whether after adjudication in bankruptcy an action in a state court can be commenced and maintained against the bankrupt to recover property in the possession of and claimed by the bankrupt at the time of the adjudication.

"Third. Whether the property of a bankrupt, upon his adjudication in bankruptcy, is in custodia legis of the bankruptcy court, and can be taken possession of under process of a state court."

Mr. Charles W. Felker submitted the cause for White et al. Mr. John C. Thompson was with him on the brief.

The right of plaintiffs in the replevin suit to the property was as great, as full and complete, and as valid against the trustee in bankruptcy as it was against the bankrupts themselves. The proper tribunals to determine controversies between the trustee and adverse claimants as to the ownership and right of possession of property are the state courts, or the circuit courts of the United States when the amount and citizenship of the parties are such as to give them jurisdiction.

Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 521, 23 L. ed. 403; Smith v. Mason, 14 Wall. 433, 20 L. ed. 753; Burbank v. Bigelow, 92 U. S. 179, 23 L. ed. 542; Re Abraham, 93 Fed. Rep. 767, 35 C. A. 592; Hicks v. Knost, 94 Fed. Rep. 625; Re Franks, 95 Fed. Rep. 635; Goodier v. Barnes, 94 Fed. Rep. 798; Heath v. Shaffer, 93 Fed. Rep. 647; Re Price, 92 Fed. Rep. 987; Re Brodbine, 93 Fed. Rep. 643; Re Buntrock Clothing Co. 92 Fed. Rep. 886; Re Fowler, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 637; Re Carter, 1 Am. Bankr. Rep. 160; Mitchell v. McClure, 91 Fed. Rep. 621; Re Kelly, 91 Fed. Rep. 504; Re Rockwood, 91 Fed. Rep. 363; Burnett v. Morris Mercantile Co. 91 Fed. Rep. 365; Camp v. Zellars, 94 Fed. Rep. 799; Perkins v. McCauley, 98 Fed. Rep. 286.

The district court sitting in bankruptcy had no jurisdiction in a summary proceeding to retake the property seized; and such was the rule under the bankruptcy act of 1867.

Eyster v. Gaff, 91 U. S. 521, 23 L. ed. 403; Smith v. Mason, 14 Wall. 433, 20 L. ed. 752; Yeatman v. New Orleans Sav. Inst. 95 U. S. 764, 24 L. ed. 589; Marshall v. Knox, 16 Wall. 551, 21 L. ed. 481.

Under the old bankruptcy act this court permitted the bringing of such action against the bankrupt by a third person claiming the property, after the adjudication and before the assignment by the bankrupt to the assignee.

Burbank v. Bigelow, 92 U. S. 179, 23 L. ed. 542.

Property is not in custodia legis until it is in the actual possession of the officers of the court.

Freeman v. Howe, 24 How. 453, 16 L. ed. 750; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 599, 15 L. ed. 1033; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 28 L. ed. 390, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355.

Until the assignee is appointed and qualified, and a conveyance or assignment is made to him, the title to the property, whatever it be, remains in the bankrupt.

Hampton v. Rouse, 22 Wall. 275, 22 L. ed. 758.

This court, in a case somewhat similar to the case at bar, has settled that the doctrine of constructive possession can have no application.

Moran v. Sturges, 154 U. S. 256, 38 L. ed. 981, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1019.

A bankruptcy court through its trustee takes only the title of the bankrupt. It can sell only his title, and a sale of property by the trustee would in no way divest the real owner of his title.

Re Chetwood, 165 U. S. 443, 41 L. ed. 782, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385.

Mr. Charles Barber submitted the cause for Schloerb et al. Mr. Carl D. Jackson was with him on the brief.

The court which has jurisdiction of the res will retain jurisdiction thereof for all purposes, and make a final adjudication among all claimants thereto.

Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. 400, 9 L. ed. 470; Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 612, 12 L. ed. 841; Shawhan v. Wherritt, 7 How. 627, 12 L. ed. 847; Williams v. Benedict, 8 How. 107, 12 L. ed. 1007; Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. 52, 14 L. ed. 322; 2 Daniel, Ch. Pl. & Pr. pp. 1057-1059; Peale v. Phipps, 14 How. 369, 14 L. ed. 459; Taylor v. Carryl, 20 How. 583, 15 L. ed. 1028; Freeman v. Howe, 24 How. 450, 16 L. ed. 749; Slocum v. Mayberry, 2 Wheat. 2, 4 L. ed. 169; Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334, 18 L. ed. 257; Krippendorf v. Hyde, 110 U. S. 276, 28 L. ed. 145, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 27; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 28 L. ed. 390, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355; Chapman v. Brewer, 114 U. S. 158, 29 L. ed. 83, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 799; Heidritter v. Elizabeth Oil-Cloth Co. 112 U. S. 294, 28 L. ed. 729, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 135; Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 473, 37 L. ed. 815, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1008; Re Chetwood, 165 U. S. 443, 41 L. ed. 782, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385; Appleton Waterworks Co. v. Central Trust Co. 93 Fed. Rep. 286, 35 C. C. A. 302; Patterson v. Matter, 26 Fed. Rep. 31; Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 168, 39 L. ed. 660, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570.

All the property in the possession of the bankrupt at the time of the adjudication, and claimed by him to be his property, comes into the custody of the bankrupt court upon the adjudication of bankruptcy.

Re Hasbrouck, 1 Ben. 402, Fed. Cas. No. 6,189; Re Bogert, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 585, Fed. Cas. No. 1,599; Re Shafer, 2 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 586, Fed. Cas. No. 12,694; Re Brinkman, 7 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 421, Fed. Cas. No. 1,884; Re Steadman, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 13,330; Phelps v.

Sellick, 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 392, Fed. Cas. No. 11,079; Re Anderson, 2 Hughes, 378, Fed. Cas. No. 351; Hewett v. Norton, 1 Woods, 68 Fed. Cas. No. 6,441; Byrd v. Harrold, 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 436, Fed. Cas. No. 2,269; Hudson v. Schwab, 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 482 et seq., Fed. Cas. No. 6,835; Jones v. Leach, 1 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 595, Fed. Cas. No. 7,475.

Actual possession of the res is not necessary in order to put the thing in custodia legis.

Gaylord v. Fort Wayne, M. & C. R. Co. 6 Biss. 286, Fed. Cas. No. 5,284; Atlas Bank v. Nahant Bank, 23 Pick. 481; Bell v. Ohio Life & Trust Co. 1 Biss. 260, Fed. Cas. No. 1,260; Adams v. Mercantile Trust Co. 66 Fed. Rep. 621, 30 U. S. App. 204, 15 C. C. A. 1, and cases cited.

The court first acquiring jurisdiction, its power being adequate to the administration, should retain its jurisdiction and confine the litigation to that forum.

Conover v. New York, 25 Barb. 513; Ex parte Bushnell, 8 Ohio St. 601.

The assets of the bankrupt are brought by the bankruptcy proceedings, within the reach and control, and subject to the orders of, the court; and no one has any right to remove or meddle with them but for their preservation, without the leave of the court, except the trustee.

Re Smith, 92 Fed. Rep. 135; Re Etheridge Furniture Co. 92 Fed. Rep. 329; Re Brown, 91 Fed. Rep. 358; Re Francis-Valentine Co. 93 Fed. Rep. 953; Re Richard, 94 Fed. Rep. 633; Norcross v. Nathan, 99 Fed. Rep. 417; Re Cobb, 96 Fed. Rep. 821; Keegan v. King, 96 Fed. Rep. 758; Re Endl, 99 Fed. Rep. 915; Re Chambers, 98 Fed. Rep. 865.

The assertion of any right against, or to participate in, the res so in custodia legis, must be sought in the court in whose custody it is. Any attempt to assert such right elsewhere would be regarded as a contempt.

Carter v. Hobbs, 92 Fed. Rep. 594; Southern Loan & T. Co. v. Benbow, 96 Fed. Rep. 514.

[545] *Mr. Justice Gray delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts of this case may be briefly recapitulated. After the district court of the United States had adjudged Schloerb and Schickedantz bankrupts on their own petition, and had referred the case to a referee in bankruptcy, and the referee had taken possession of the bankrupts' stock of goods in their store, and had caused the entrance of the store to be locked up, and before the appointment of the trustee in bankruptcy, a writ of replevin of some of those goods was sued out by other persons against the bankrupts from an inferior court of the state of Wisconsin, and was executed by the sheriff of the county, by his deputy, by forcibly entering the store and taking possession of these goods. The bankrupts thereupon presented to the district court of the United States a petition setting forth the above facts, and alleging that the goods replevied were their lawful property, and had been purchased by them of the plaintiffs in replevin, and were now in the possession of the sheriff and his deputy and the attorney of those plaintiffs; and praying that they might be compelled to redeliver the goods to the district court sitting in bankruptcy, and be restrained from making any disposition thereof. Upon the filing of this petition the court ordered notice thereof *to said sheriff, [546] deputy, and attorney. In answer thereto they contended that the court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and offered evidence that the grounds of their action of replevin were that the bankrupts had purchased and obtained the goods from them by false and fraudulent representations on which they relied, and that, before suing out the writ of replevin, they had elected to rescind the sale, and had demanded of the bankrupts a return of the goods. The district court, upon a hearing, made an order restraining the respondents from selling or otherwise disposing of the goods replevied, and directing them to deliver the goods to the trustee in bankruptcy, and directing the trustee, on such delivery, to keep them apart from other property, to abide the further order of the court.

The questions certified concern, not the trial of the title to these goods, but only the judicial custody and lawful possession of them.

Under §§ 33-43 of the bankrupt act of 1898 and the Twelfth General Order in Bankruptcy, referees in bankruptcy are appointed by the courts of bankruptcy, and take the same oath of office as judges of United States courts, each case in bankruptcy is referred by the court of bankruptcy to a referee, and he exercises much of the judicial authority of that court. 30 Stat. at L. 555-557, chap. 541, 172 U. S. 657, 43 L. ed. 1190, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. VI.

At the date of this adjudication in bankruptcy by the district court of the United States, the goods were in the store of the bankrupts and in their actual possession, and were claimed by them as their property. On the same date that court referred the case to a referee in bankruptcy, and by his direction the entrance to the store was locked. The goods were then in the lawful possession and custody of the referee in bankruptcy, and of the bankruptcy court, whose representative and substitute he was. Being thus in the custody of a court of the United States, they could not be taken out of that custody upon any process from a state court.

So far as regards this point, the decision of this court in Freeman v. Howe, 24 How. 450, 16 L. ed. 749, more than covers the case. It was there adjudged that property taken and held by a marshal *on a writ of attach- [547] ment from a court of the United States, directing him to attach the property of one person, could not be taken from his possession on a writ of replevin from a state court in behalf of another person who claimed the attached property as his own. See also Peck v. Jenness, 7 How. 612, 625, 12 L. ed. 841, 846; Buck v. Colbath, 3 Wall. 334, 341, 18 L. ed. 257, 260; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 182, 28 L. ed. 390, 392, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 355.

The second question certified relates to this point, although it is not so clearly expressed as it might be, and omits to mention in whose possession the property was when the writ of replevin was sued out. To that question, as explained and restricted by the facts set forth in the statement which accompanies it, our answer is: "After an adjudication in bankruptcy an action of replevin in a state court cannot be commenced and maintained against the bankrupt to recover property in the possession of and claimed by the bankrupt at the time of that adjudication, and in the possession of a referee in bankruptcy at the time when the action of replevin is begun."

The first question remains: "Whether the district court sitting in bankruptcy had jurisdiction by summary proceedings to compel the return of the property seized."

By § 720 of the Revised Statutes, "The writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a state, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy." Among the powers specifically conferred upon the court of bankruptcy by § 2 of the bankrupt act of 1898 are to "(15) make such orders, issue such process, and enter such judgments in addition to those specifically provided for, as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act." 30 Stat. at L. 546, chap. 541. And by clause 3 of the Twelfth General Order in Bankruptcy, applications to the court of bankruptcy "for an injunction to stay proceedings of a court or officer of the United States, or of a state, shall be heard and decided by the judge; but he may refer such an application, or any specified issue arising thereon, to the referee to ascertain and report the facts." 172 U. S. 657, 43 L. ed. 1190, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. vi.

[548] Not going beyond what the decision of the case before us *requires, we are of opinion that the judge of the court of bankruptcy was authorized to compel persons who had forcibly and unlawfully seized and taken out of the judicial custody of that court property which had lawfully come into its possession as part of the bankrupt's property, to restore that property to its custody; and therefore our answer to the first question must be: "The district court sitting in bankruptcy had jurisdiction by summary proceedings to compel the return of the property seized."

These answers to the first and second questions render any further answer to the third question unnecessary.

Ordered accordingly.

178 U. S.

WILLIAM S. TAYLOR and John Marshall,
Plffs. in Err.,
v.

J. C. W. BECKHAM, Dft. in Err.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 548-609.)

Error to state court—constitutional questions—right to office—guaranty of republican form of government.

1. A decision by state tribunals against a claimant to the office of governor does not deprive him of any right to property within the meaning of U. S. Const. 14th Amend., so as to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error.
2. The guaranty of a Republican form of government to each state, in U. S. Const. art. 4, § 4, gives no jurisdiction to the Supreme Court of the United States on writ of error under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 709, to review a decision of the highest court of a state sustaining a determination of an election contest for the office of governor made by the general assembly under authority of the state Constitution on the ground that such decision denies the right of the people to choose their own officers, where the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the state are peacefully operating by the orderly and settled methods prescribed by its fundamental law notwithstanding there may be difficulties and disturbances arising from the pendency and determination of these contests.

[No. 603.]

Argued April 30 and May 1, 1900. Decided May 21, 1900.

IN ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky to review a decision affirming a judgment of ouster in an action in the nature of quo warranto to determine the right to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor. Dismissed.

See same case below, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1735, 56 S. W. 177.

Statement by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

*This was an action in the nature of quo warranto brought, under the statutes of Kentucky, by J. C. W. Beckham against William S. Taylor and John Marshall, for usurpation of the offices of governor and lieutenant governor of Kentucky, in the circuit court of Jefferson county, in that commonwealth.

The petition averred that at a general election held on the 7th of November, 1899, in NOTE.—As to jurisdiction of Federal over state courts—see notes to Hamblin v. Western Land Co. 37 L. ed. U. S. 267; Klpley v. Illinois ex rel. Akin, 42 L. ed. U. S. 998.

As to what constitutes Federal question; when considered—see note to Re Buchanan, 39 L. ed. U. S. 884.

As to what constitutes due process of law—see Kuntz v. Sumpton (Ind.) 2 L. R. A. 655, and note; Re Gannon (R. I.) 5 L. R. A. 359, and note; Ulman v. Baltimore (Md.) 11 L. R. A. 224, and note; Gilman v. Tucker (N. Y.) 13 L. R. A. 304, and note. And see notes to Pearson v. Yewdall, 24 L. ed. U. S. 436; Wilson v. North Carolina ex rel. Caldwell, 42 L. ed. U. S. 865.

the commonwealth of Kentucky, William Goebel was the Democratic candidate for governor and J. C. W. Beckham was the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor, and that at said election William S. Taylor and John Marshall were the Republican candidates for the said offices respectively; that after said election the state board of election commissioners, whose duty it was to canvass the returns thereof, canvassed the same, and determined on the face of the returns that said Taylor and said Marshall were elected governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, for the term commencing December 12, 1899, and accordingly awarded them certificates to that effect, whereupon they were inducted into those offices.

The petition further alleged that within the time allowed by law said William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham gave written notices to Taylor and Marshall that they would each contest the said election on numerous grounds set out at large in the respective notices; that said notices of contest were duly served on said Taylor and Marshall, filed before each house of the general assembly, and entered at large on the journals thereof; that thereafter boards of contests were duly selected by each house of the general assembly, and sworn to try said contests as required by law; that at the time appointed [550] for the hearing the said Taylor and Marshall appeared, and each filed defenses and counter notices, and the evidence of contestants and contestees was heard by the boards from January 15, 1900, until January 29, 1900, inclusive, and upon January 30, 1900, said contests were submitted without argument to the boards for decision.

That thereafter the boards, having considered the matters of law and fact involved in the contests, did each separately decide the contest submitted to it, and made out in writing its decision, and reported the same to each house of the general assembly for action thereon.

That in the contest for governor the board determined, and so reported to each house of the general assembly, that William Goebel had received the highest number of legal votes cast for governor at the election held on November 7, 1899, and that he was duly elected governor for the term beginning December 12, 1899; and that in the contest for lieutenant governor the board determined and so reported that the contestant Beckham had received the highest number of legal votes cast at said election, and was duly elected to the office of lieutenant governor for said term.

The petition also alleged that the reports and decisions of the contest boards were thereafter duly adopted and approved by both houses of the general assembly in separate and in joint sessions; that there were present in the house of representatives at said time 56 members and in the senate 19 members, which was a quorum of each house, and that there were present 75 members in joint session, and that the general assembly did then and there decide and declare that William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham had each received the highest number of legal votes cast at said election for the offices of, and were duly elected, governor and lieutenant governor as aforesaid. The journals of both houses of the general assembly, showing the proceedings and facts aforesaid, were referred to and made part of the petition, and attested copies thereof filed therewith.

It was further averred that, after the determination of said contest by the general assembly, the said William Goebel and *J. C. W. Beckham were duly sworn and inducted into the offices of governor and lieutenant governor of the commonwealth and at once entered upon the discharge of their respective duties. That thereafter, on the 3d of February, 1900, William Goebel died, and by law said Beckham was required to discharge the duties of the office of governor, and accordingly on that day he took the oath prescribed by law, and immediately entered on the discharge of the duties of said office.

It was further alleged that the powers of Taylor as governor and of Marshall as lieutenant governor immediately ceased on the determination of the contest by the general assembly, but that, notwithstanding the premises, the said Taylor and Marshall had usurped the said offices of governor and lieutenant governor, and had refused to surrender the records, archives, journals, and papers pertaining to the office of governor, and the possession of the executive offices in the capitol in the city of Frankfort.

The prayer of the petition was "that the defendant, William S. Taylor, be adjudged to have usurped the office of governor of this commonwealth, and that he be deprived thereof by the judgment of this court; that this plaintiff be adjudged entitled to the said office, and be placed in full possession of said office of governor, the executive offices provided by the commonwealth for the use of the governor, and that all the records, archives, books, papers, journals, and all other things pertaining to the said office be surrendered and delivered to this plaintiff by the said Taylor, and that the said Taylor be enjoined and restrained from further exercising or attempting to exercise the office of governor of this commonwealth; that the said John Marshall be adjudged to have usurped the office of lieutenant governor of the commonwealth, and that he be deprived thereof, and declared not entitled to the same by the judgment of this court, and enjoined from assuming to act as such lieutenant governor; that plaintiff, Beckham, be adjudged the lawful incumbent of said office; and, finally, the plaintiff prays for his costs in this behalf expended, and for all proper relief."

Defendants Taylor and Marshall filed answers and amended *answers and counter-claims, denying any valid proceedings in contest, and alleging in substance that the action of the boards of contests and of the general assembly in the contests was the result of a conspiracy entered into by the members of the boards and the members of the general assembly to wrongfully and unlawfully deprive contestees of their offices; that in the execution of this design the members of said boards were fraudulently selected, and not fairly drawn by lot, as required by law, and that a majority of those selected were persons whose political beliefs and feelings, inclinations, and desires on the subject of the contests were known in advance. That the entries on the journals of the general assembly were false and fraudulent and made in pursuance of said conspiracy, and that the pretended decisions were fraudulent and utterly void. That the senate lacked a quorum at the time of the pretended adoption of the contest boards' reports; and that defendant, Taylor, as governor, on January 31, 1900, refused to permit the members of the general assembly to meet as the general assembly at Frankfort, because he had previously adjourned the general assembly to meet on February 6 at London, in Laurel county.

The notices of contest were averred to have been exactly alike, mutatis mutandis, and the notice in respect of the office of governor was set out as given in the margin.†

†“The contestee, William S. Taylor, is hereby notified that the contestant, William Goebel, who was more than thirty years of age, and has been a citizen and resident of Kentucky for more than six years next preceding the 7th day of November, 1899, will contest the election of the said William S. Taylor to the office of governor of this commonwealth, before the next general assembly thereof, to be convened as provided by law, in the city of Frankfort, on the 2d day of January, 1900, and before the board of contest to be organized by the said general assembly for the purpose of determining the contest for governor; and will then and there contest the right of the said William S. Taylor to the office of governor of this commonwealth by virtue of the election held herein on the 7th day of November, 1899, and the certificate of election granted unto the said William S. Taylor by the state board of election commissioners on the 9th day of December, 1899; and will ask the general assembly and said board of contest to determine that the contestant, William Goebel, was legally and rightfully elected governor aforesaid at the said election, and that William S. Taylor was not rightfully or legally elected to said office; and said contestant will then and there ask the said board of contest and the general assembly to take such proceedings and orders in the matters of said contest as is required by law for his induction into said office.

“For grounds of such contest, the contestant says:

“First. In the election held in this commonwealth on the 7th day of November, 1899, for the office of governor, the contestant, William Goebel, was the Democratic candidate, and the contestee, William S. Taylor, was the Republican candidate, for said office of governor, and were then and there voted for as such candidates; and at said election held in the counties of Knox, Jackson, Magoffin, Pike, Martin, Johnson, Owsley, Lewis, Carter, Pulaski, Bell, Clinton, Russell, Adair, Harlan, Casey, Wayne, Whitley, Todd, Caldwell, Crittenden, Perry, Muhlenburg, Monroe, Metcalf, Butler, Letcher, Leslie, Lee, Laurel, Hart, Greenup, Grayson, Estill, Edmonson, Cumberland, Clay, Breckenridge, Boyd, and Allen, and in each precinct thereof, all of the official ballots used, in all of said counties were printed upon paper so thin and transparent that the printing and the stencil marks thereon made by the voters could be

*The following are paragraphs from the answers and amended answers:

“Further answering herein, defendants, W. S. Taylor and John Marshall, say, each of them is over forty years of age, *has been a citizen and resident of the state of Kentucky all his life, and likewise a citizen and resident of the United States all his life. They say further that, as hereinafter more specifically *stated, the said Taylor was, on November 7th, 1899, duly elected governor of the state of Kentucky, and the said Marshall duly elected lieutenant governor for the state of Kentucky, by the qualified voters thereof; that each of them afterwards received *in due form a certificate to that effect from the state board of election commissioners of the commonwealth of Kentucky, and each of them thereafter duly qualified as such officers by taking the oath of office prescribed by law therefor, and thereby each of them became charged with an express public trust for the benefit of the people of the state of Kentucky. They say that the proceedings referred to in the petition herein, distinguished from the back of said ballots; that none of the said ballots used in said counties were printed upon plain white paper sufficiently thick to prevent the printing from being distinguished from the back of the said ballots, whereby the secrecy of the said ballots were destroyed and the said election in all of the said counties rendered void, and the printed vote thereon should not be counted in ascertaining the result of the election in this commonwealth.

“Second. That the said alleged election held in the county of Jefferson and the city of Louisville on the 7th day of November, 1899, was and is void, because the contestant says that upon that day, before the said election, the governor of the commonwealth unlawfully called the military forces of the state into active service in said city, armed with rifles, bayonets, and gatling guns, for the purposes of overawing, intimidating, and keeping Democratic voters from the polls thereof, and did himself, in violation of the law of the land, go to the said city and county the day before said election, and assume direction and command of the said military forces, and ordered and directed them to go, and they did go in obedience to said order, to the polling places in said city, on the said day of said election, and thereby many thousands of voters, to wit, more than enough to have changed the result of the said election, were intimidated and alarmed, and failed and refused to go to the polls or to vote on said day; that for this cause the said election in the city of Louisville and county of Jefferson was not free and equal, but is void, and the said alleged votes cast thereat should not be counted.

“Third. The contestant says that on the day of the said election in the city of Louisville and county of Jefferson, Sterling B. Toney, one of the circuit judges of the county and city aforesaid, without authority of law, issued a mandatory injunction, by which he required the legally appointed officers of the election for the city and county aforesaid to admit in to the polling places during said election many persons who were not authorized or required by law to be in said polling places, and take part in said election and the pretended count of ballots, and were kept and maintained in the said places unlawfully and wrongfully by the said officers of said judge and the military power of the state, under the direct command of the governor, by reason of which the votes cast at said election by which it is alleged that the contests over the offices of governor and lieutenant governor were tried and determined, and by which it is alleged that the authority of these defendants to act respectively as governor and lieutenant governor was terminated, were and are utterly void and of no effect for the reasons hereinafter stated; and if effect be given to them, and these defendants be thereby deprived of their respective offices of governor and lieutenant governor of Kentucky, and plaintiff, Beekham, be thereby installed in the office of governor or lieutenant governor of Kentucky, these defendants will be thereby deprived by the state of Kentucky of their property without due process of law, and both they and the people of Kentucky and the qualified voters thereof will be deprived of their liberty without due process of law, and will be denied the benefit of a republican form of government, all of which is contrary to the provisions of the 4th section of the 4th article of the said Constitution and to the 14th Amendment to said Constitution, the benefits of which provisions are hereby specially set up and claimed by these defendants both for themselves and for the people of Kentucky and the qualified voters thereof whose representatives and trustees these defendants are."

were not fairly counted, but the result left in doubt and uncertainty, and for this cause the said election was void, and the alleged and pretended votes cast thereat in said city should not be counted.

"Fourth. The said contestant says that at the said election held as aforesaid, on the 7th day of November, 1899, in the county of Jefferson and city of Louisville, and Warren, Hopkins, Christian, Knox, Whitley, Pulaski, Bell, and divers other counties of this commonwealth, that many thousands of the legal voters thereof, to wit, more than enough thereof to have changed the result of said election, who were in the employment of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and other corporations, were intimidated by the officers and superior employees of said company and corporations by threats of less employment and discharge from the service of the said company and corporations, and were thereby forced and compelled to vote and did, for this cause, vote for the contestee for the office of governor, when in truth and in fact they desired to vote for the contestant, and would have done so but for such intimidation and duress. For this cause the said election held in said counties was and is void.

"Fifth. The contestant says that before the said election on November 7, 1899, the leaders of the Republican party in the commonwealth corruptly and fraudulently entered into an agreement and conspiracy with the said officers of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and the American Book Company and other corporations and trusts, by which the said companies, corporations, and trusts agreed to furnish large sums of money to be used in defeating the contestant at said election by bribing and corrupting the voters and election officers of this commonwealth and debauching the public press thereof; and that in pursuance to the said conspiracy the said companies, corporations, and trusts did furnish large sums of money, which were so corruptly and unlawfully used in the counties of Jefferson, Warren, Fayette, Breathitt, Hopkins, Daviess, Logan, Todd, Henderson, Pulaski, Whitley, Knox, Bell, Hard-

"Defendants further say that if the state, after having furnished to its citizens and electors in a number of its counties official ballots upon which it required them to vote, or not vote *at all, in the election of a governor and lieutenant governor, shall reject their votes, and thus refuse to allow them to participate in the election of such officers, merely because they used in voting the ballots which the state required them to use, and if the state shall, thereby and on that account, refuse to allow the persons respectively chosen for the office of governor and lieutenant governor by the majority of the qualified voters of the state, including those using the ballots aforesaid, to take their seats and perform the duties of governor and lieutenant governor, and shall in lieu of them seat other persons, then the state will thereby deprive the said citizens and electors, all of whom are both citizens of Kentucky and citizens of the United States, of their political liberty, without due process of law, in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and will thereby deny to them the benefits of a republican form of government in violation of the Constitution of the United States; and will thereby also deprive these defendants of their property without due process of law, all of which is in, and divers other counties of the commonwealth, and by which many thousands of the legal voters thereof were bribed and corrupted and thereby caused to vote for contestee. Newspapers were purchased and debauched and officers of said election bribed, and the contestant deprived of many thousand votes which he would have received but for the unlawful and corrupt conspiracy aforesaid, which votes were sufficient to have elected him.

"Sixth. The contestant further says that in the counties of Knox and Lewis, the county board of election officers, whose duty it was, by law, to correctly certify the result of the election held in their respective counties, were compelled by unlawful mandatory injunctions issued by circuit judges and clerks, to sign false returns and certificates of said election, giving to the contestee large majorities of the votes cast in said counties; and in the county of Knox the said board was compelled by duress and open threats of violence from a large body of armed citizens of said county, assembled at the county seat, to sign false and fraudulent certificates. In the county of Jefferson the officers who held said election at the voting places in the city of Louisville were compelled to sign like false and fraudulent certificates of said election, by duress and under threats of Sterling B. Toney, one of the circuit judges of the commonwealth, who announced his purpose to fine and imprison said officers if they did not sign said false certificates. By reason of the duress aforesaid and the said unlawful mandatory injunctions, the votes in the said counties and all the precincts thereof were not correctly counted or certified, and the said votes so certified should not now be counted in determining the result of said election. All of said certificates were signed and made under duress, and would not have been signed but for the facts aforesaid.

"Seventh. The contestant says that in pursuance to a conspiracy of the leaders of the Republican party in Kentucky, and the United States marshal for the district of Kentucky, to intimidate and deter the Democrats and friends of contestant from voting for him, said marshal contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States."

"And defendants further say that if any such pretended meeting of members of the general assembly was held either on January 31st or February 2d, at which any action was taken or attempted to be taken on the reports of said contest committees, the said meetings were held secretly, without any notice to any of the Republican members of the general assembly and without any notice to either of these defendants that such meeting was to be held, and without any opportunity either to the said Republican members or any of them to be present, or any opportunity for either of these defendants to be present at such meetings at which the said contests were to be heard and determined. And if any such meetings were held or attempted to be held on either of those days, and any determination of either of said contests was pretended to have been had, it was utterly void on account of lack of notice and opportunity to be present or to be heard as just herein stated, as well as for the other reasons heretofore given. And to deprive these defendants or either of them of their

[559] offices by such action would *be to deprive them of their property without due process of law, and would be to deprive defendants and the other people of the state of Kentucky, and especially the qualified voters thereof, of their political liberty without due process of law, and to deny to them the benefits of a republican form of government. All of which is contrary to the provisions and guaranties of the Constitution of the United States as well as that of Kentucky."

"Defendants further say that both the offices of governor and lieutenant governor are offices created by the Constitution of Kentucky, and therefore not subject to abolition by the general assembly of Kentucky. And, furthermore, it is provided by the Constitution of Kentucky that 'the salaries of public officers shall not be changed during the term for which they were elected,' and defendants say they were elected, as heretofore shown, to the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, of the state of Kentucky on November 7, 1899, for a period of four years each, and then and thereby became entitled to exercise the functions of said offices and to receive the salaries and emoluments appertaining thereto, which are large and valuable, and were such when they were and other officers and persons threatened to indict many of contestant's supporters in the United States court for the district of Kentucky for alleged violation of law in connection with said election, and, in pursuance to said conspiracy, caused their threats to be published in the daily press of the state, and in other forms, and upon the day of said election caused deputy United States marshals to be and remain at the polling places in the city of Louisville and in various other cities of the commonwealth, intermeddling with the said election, overawing, threatening, and intimidating Democratic voters and their friends and supporters of the contestant, whereby many voters, to wit, more than enough to have changed the result of said election, were prevented from voting for contestant, who otherwise would have done so.

"Eighth. The contestant says that after said election and before the meeting of the state board of election commissioners, in the city of Frankfort, a conspiracy was formed and entered into by the contestee, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, John Whallen, who was its paid agent, and other persons, whose names are unknown to contestant, to bring from various sections of this commonwealth large numbers of desperate armed men, for the purpose of alarming and intimidating the members of the said election board in the discharge of their duties, and the friends and supporters of said contestant; and that in pursuance to said conspiracy the corporations and persons aforesaid did transport to the city of Frankfort at said time a large number of the militia of the state, dressed in citizens' clothing, and many hundreds of desperate armed men, and unlawfully kept and maintained said militia and armed men in and about the chamber and capitol, where said election board held its sessions, for several days; for the unlawful purpose of alarming and intimidating the members of said board and the good citizens of the commonwealth; and the said corporation and persons also caused the military forces of the commonwealth to be armed and equipped and held in readiness and the state arsenal to be guarded by armed men for the unlawful purpose aforesaid, and Democratic members of the military companies of the state militia to be disarmed and discharged and their places to be filled with Republicans.

178 U. S.

"Ninth. The contestant for further grounds of contest herein says that in the county of Jefferson the county board of election officers, whose duty it was to ascertain and correctly certify the result of said election held in said county, were compelled by threats of violence and death to the two Democratic members of said board to accept, and said board by reason of the duress aforesaid did accept, false, fraudulent, and illegal returns from the various precincts in the city of Louisville, which returns were prepared by the attorneys and agents of the Republican party, and were signed by the precinct officers aforesaid under duress and threats of fine and imprisonment, and said board of election officers, by reason of the duress aforesaid, based, upon their certificate as to the result of said election in said county upon the said false, fraudulent, and illegal returns made by the said precinct officers as aforesaid, and for this cause the contestant was deprived of many thousand votes cast for him at said election, and the contestee was given many thousand illegal votes to which he was not entitled, to wit, more than enough to have changed the result of the said election, and for this cause the said election was and is void, and the alleged vote of Jefferson county as certified by said county board should not be counted in ascertaining the result of said election in this commonwealth.

"Tenth. The contestant further avers that many thousand of persons who were not entitled to vote at the said election on November 7th, 1899, were unlawfully brought into this commonwealth by the agents of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and others acting in contestee's behalf, and at said election were wrongfully and unlawfully voted for the contestee in said election; that the number of votes so cast were sufficient to have changed the result of said election.

"The contestant will, upon the grounds aforesaid, at the time and place and before the tribunals stated, contest the election of said William S. Taylor to the office of governor of this commonwealth."

1191

thus elected; the salary of the governor being then and now fixed by law at $6,500 per annum; and to take from them their said offices and their said salaries and emoluments by the aforesaid action of said contest tribunals would be to deprive them of their property without due process of law, contrary to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, and especially of the 14th Amendment thereof.

[560] "Defendants say that the power vested in the houses of the general assembly of Kentucky to try contests over elections of governor or lieutenant governor is judicial in its nature, and is subject to the same limitations and restrictions to which the exercise of judicial power is ordinarily subject; that by the Constitution of the state of Kentucky and also by the Constitution of the United States, especially the 5th and 14th Amendments thereof, the exercise of absolute and arbitrary power by the state or any department thereof, whereby any person shall be deprived of life, liberty, property, or the pursuit of happiness, including therein the enjoyment of honors and the occupation of positions of public trust and emolument, is forbidden. But defendants say that if effect be given to the alleged decisions by the said boards of contest or the said houses of the general assembly as to the said contested elections for governor or lieutenant governor, and these defendants be thereby deprived of the offices of governor or lieutenant governor, and the plaintiff Beckham be thereby vested with the power of governor of Kentucky, then, not only will the people of Kentucky be deprived of their political liberty without due process of law, but these defendants will also be deprived, without due process of law, of the right to hold the said offices of governor and lieutenant governor, which are both profitable and honorable, all of which is contrary to and forbidden by both the provisions of the state Constitution and of the Constitution of the United States above referred to, and defendants say that if, by a proper construction of the Constitution of Kentucky, the absolute and arbitrary power is given either to the boards of contest or the houses of the general assembly to take from these defendants the offices of honor, trust, and emolument to which they were elected by the people of the state as heretofore alleged, under the false guise of a trial of a contest over said offices, then the said Constitution of the state is itself contrary to the aforesaid provisions of the Constitution of the United States."

The prayer of the defendants was that the bill be dismissed, that J. C. W. Beckham be adjudged a usurper, and that William S. Taylor and John Marshall be, respectively, adjudged the governor and lieutenant governor of the commonwealth.

The answers were in large part disposed of on demurrer and motion to strike out, and the case was submitted to the circuit court for determination on the law and facts without the intervention of a jury, and defendants "moved the court to state in writing the conclusions of fact found separately from the conclusions of law;" but it was agreed that the court might adopt its opinion on demurrer as its statement of its conclusions of law. This the court did, and found [561] the facts in its judgment, which findings included, among others, these:

"Second. William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham inaugurated a contest for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor respectively before the general assembly of Kentucky on the 2d day of January, 1900, against William S. Taylor and John Marshall, and the said contest was finally determined by the general assembly on the 2d day of February, 1900, at which time it was adjudged and determined by each house of said general assembly, acting separately and also in joint session, that the said William Goebel was duly elected governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky for the term beginning December 13, 1899, and was entitled to said office of governor, and it was then and there in like manner determined by said general assembly and by each house, acting separately and in joint session, that the said J. C. W. Beckham was duly elected lieutenant governor of said commonwealth for the same term.

"Third. Immediately after the said determination the oath of office of governor as provided by law was administered to said Goebel, February 2, 1900, and the oath of office as lieutenant governor, as provided by law, was in like manner administered to J. C. W. Beckham.

"Fourth. Said William Goebel died on the 3d day of February, at 6.45 P. M., and shortly thereafter upon said day J. C. W. Beckham as lieutenant governor was sworn, as required by law, to discharge the duties of the office of governor of the commonwealth."

Judgment of ouster was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against defendants.

The case was then carried on appeal to the court of appeals of Kentucky and the judgment affirmed (21 Ky. L. Rep. 1735, 56 S. W. 177); whereupon a writ of error from this court was allowed by the chief justice of that court.

The journals of the two houses, attached to the petition as part thereof, showed that the general assembly convened on January 2, 1900, and that on the third day after its organization boards of contest were appointed pursuant to the statute; that on February 2, 1900, the board in each of the contests reported to the two houses that they had [562] heard all the evidence offered by the parties, and that William Goebel had received the highest number of legal votes cast for governor; that J. C. W. Beckham had received the highest number of legal votes cast for lieutenant governor; and that they were duly elected and entitled to those offices. The journals further showed that on the same day both houses, with a quorum present, approved and adopted, separately and in joint session, the reports of the contest boards, and declared that William Goebel and J. C.

W. Beckham were duly elected governor and lieutenant governor, respectively.

It appeared that thereupon said Goebel and Beckham on that day, February 2, took the oath of office; that on January 30 William Goebel was shot by an assassin, receiving a wound from which he afterward died on February 3; and that on January 31 defendant Taylor as governor issued a proclamation declaring that a state of insurrection existed at Frankfort, Kentucky, adjourning the general assembly until February 6, and ordering it then to assemble at the town of London, in Laurel county.

The sessions of the general assembly on February 2 were not held at the state house, for the reason, as recited in the journals, that it was occupied by a military force which would not allow the general assembly to meet there, and thereupon the general assembly met on that day in the Capitol Hotel, in the city of Frankfort. On February 19 the general assembly met at the state house, and the senate on that day adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, on the 31st day of January, 1900, the acting governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky, by the use of armed force, dispersed the general assembly, and has until recently prevented the senate and house from assembling at their regular rooms and places of meeting; and, [563] "Whereas, the general assembly and each house thereof, after public notice, met in joint and separate sessions in the city of Frankfort, a full quorum of such bodies being present, and adopted the majority reports and resolutions of the board of contest for governor and lieutenant governor of the commonwealth *of Kentucky, unseating the contestees, W. S. Taylor and John Marshall, as governor and lieutenant governor, and seating the contestants, William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham, as governor and lieutenant governor, respectively; all of which proceedings, reports, and resolutions are set out in the journals of the two houses of the general assembly; and,

"Whereas, this joint assembly is now enabled to meet in its regular place of meeting, and, whilst it adheres to the belief beyond doubt that the action of the general assembly therefore taken in reference to said contests is valid, final, and conclusive, to remove any doubt that may exist in the minds of any of the people of the commonwealth; now, be it

"Resolved, By the general assembly of the commonwealth of Kentucky, in joint session assembled, to the end that all doubt may be removed, if any exists, as to the validity and regularity of the action and proceedings at the times and places shown by the journals of the two houses, other than its regular rooms provided by law, that all the acts, proceedings, and resolutions of the senate and house and of the joint assembly of the two houses upon or touching the report of the majority of the boards of contest for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor, unseating the contestees and seating William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham, and declaring them to have been elected governor and lieutenant governor, respectively, on the 7th day of November, 1899, is hereby re-enacted, readopted, and reaffirmed and ratified at this, the regular place of meeting provided by law, at the seat of government in Frankfort, Ky."
178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

The same resolution was adopted by the house, and on February 20 by both houses in joint session.

The court of appeals regarded the disposal of the following contentions of Taylor and Marshall as decisive of the case, namely:

(1) That the proceedings of the legislature of February 2 were void, because the legislature had then been adjourned by the governor until February 6, and no legal session could be held in the meantime. (2) That William Goebel having died on February 3, the contest for the office of governor thereby abated, and the action of the legislature on February 19 and 20 was therefore void. (3) That the legislature *took no action on February 2, and that the journals of these meetings were fraudulently made by the clerk in pursuance of an alleged conspiracy between certain members of the assembly and contestants. (4) That the general assembly acted without evidence and arbitrarily.

The court of appeals held that the governor had no power to adjourn the legislature, and that his attempt to do so was wholly void, and did not interfere with the right of the legislature to proceed with its sessions at Frankfort. The only authority relied on to sustain his action was § 36 of the Constitution of Kentucky, as follows: "The first general assembly, the members of which shall be elected under this Constitution, shall meet on the 1st Tuesday after the 1st Monday in January, 1894, and thereafter the general assembly shall meet on the same day every second year, and its sessions shall be held at the seat of government, except in case of war, insurrection, or pestilence, when it may, by proclamation of the governor, assemble, for the time being, elsewhere."

This, the court held, did not provide for the adjournment of the general assembly by the governor after it had assembled, but for the designation of another place at which it might assemble for the time being and organize, when prevented by the causes named from doing so at the capital; and that it was not intended to authorize such action as was taken was clear from § 80, which provided, among other things: "In case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, he [the governor] may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper, not exceeding four months." This showed that the governor had no power over the time of adjournment of the two houses, except in cases of disagreement as to that matter between them, and no such disagreement existed here. And even then it did not confer upon him power to name any other place than that in which the legislature might be sitting.

Section 41 also provided: "Neither house, during the session of the general assembly, shall, without the consent of the other, ad-[565] journal for more than three days, nor to any other place *than that in which it may be sitting." By this section either house might, with the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, or to any other place than that in which it was sitting; but it could not have been intended that the governor should have like power. On the contrary, the powers of the state government were divided into three distinct and independent departments, and the state Constitution was intended to maintain the absolute independence of each.

The court further decided that the death of William Goebel on February 3d did not affect the right of Beckham. If Goebel was elected governor, and Beckham, lieutenant governor, Beckham on February 3d became entitled to the office of governor, and had the right to continue the contest to secure what the Constitution guaranteed him, so that, if the legislature had not acted until February 19, it had a right then to act on the contest, and its action would be none the less valid because not taken in Goebel's lifetime.

As to the validity of the entries in the journals and the effect to be given them, the court ruled, citing many authorities,† that evidence aliunde could not be received to impeach the validity of the record prescribed by the Constitution as evidence of the proceedings of the general assembly, and that the court was without jurisdiction to go behind the record thereby made. Among other things the court said:

"There is no conflict between the action of the state canvassing board and that of the legislature in these cases. The state canvassing board were without power to go behind the returns. They were not authorized to hear evidence and determine who was in truth elected, but were required to give a certificate of election to those who on the face of the returns had received the highest number of votes. For the state board to have received evidence to impeach the returns before them *would have been for them, in effect, to act as a board for trying a contested election, and if they had done this they would have usurped the power vested in the general assembly by the Constitution; for by its express terms only the general assembly can determine a contested election for governor and lieutenant governor.

[566] "But the certificate of the state board of canvassers is no evidence as to who was in truth elected. Their certificate entitles the recipient to exercise the office until the regular constitutional authority shall determine who is the de jure officer. The rights of the de jure officer attached when he was elected, although the result was unknown until it was declared by the proper constitutional authority. When it was so declared it was simply the ascertainment of a fact hitherto in doubt, or unsettled. The rights of the de facto officer, under his certificate from the canvassing board, were provisional or temporary until the determination of the result of the election as provided in the Constitution, and upon that determination, if adverse to him, they ceased altogether. Such a determination of the result of the election, by the proper tribunal, did not take from him any pre-existing right; for if not in fact elected he had only a right to act until the result of the election could be determined."

In respect of the allegation that the action of the general assembly was void because without evidence and arbitrary, the court held that it must be presumed that the legislature did its duty in the premises; and, further, that the objections that the notices of contest were insufficient and that the evidence was equally insufficient, that the contest boards were not fairly drawn by lot, and that certain members of the boards were liable to objection on the ground of partiality, were all in respect of matters confided to the general assembly to deal with as made by the Constitution the sole tribunal to determine such contests.

To the argument that, if all the specifications of contestants were true, the election was wholly void and no one elected, the court replied that it had no means of knowing the grounds on which the general assembly reached its conclusion; that the *presump-[567] tions were in favor of their judgment, and that "when they found as a fact that the contestants received the highest number of legal votes cast in the election in controversy, we are not at liberty to go behind their findings."

The court further held that the proceedings were not in violation of the 14th Amendment, and said:

"The office of governor being created by the Constitution of this state, the instrument creating it might properly provide how the officer was to be elected and how the result of this election should be determined. The provisions of the Constitution on this subject do not abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States. Such an office is not property, and in determining merely the result of the election, according to its own laws, the state deprives no one of life, liberty, or property. In creating this office the state had a right to provide such agencies as it saw fit to determine the result of the election, and it had a right to provide such a mode of procedure as it saw fit. It is wholly a matter of state policy. The people of the state might, by an amendment to their Constitution, abolish the office altogether. The determination of the result of an election is purely a political question, and if such suits as this may be maintained the greatest disorder will result in the public business. It has always been the policy of our law to provide a summary process for the settlement of such contests, to the end that public business shall not be interrupted; but if such a suit as this may be maintained, where will such a contest end?"

†Cooley, Const. Lim. (5th ed.) 222; Wright v. DeFreese, 8 Ind. 298; McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 424; State ex rel. Loomis v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio, 358; Wise v. Bligger, 79 Va. 269; Sunbury & E. R. Co. v. Cooper, 33 Pa. 283; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162; Ex parte McCordle, 7 Wall. 506, 19 L. ed. 264; United States v. Des Moines, Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 544, 35 L. ed. 1109, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 309; United States v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 466, 37 L. ed. 523, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650.

Of the seven members of the tribunal, Hazelrigg, C. J., Paynter, Hobson, and White, JJ., concurred in the principal opinion by Hobson, J.; and Burnam and Guffy, JJ., in the result, in a separate opinion by Burnam, J., on the ground "that there is no power in the courts of the state to review the finding of the general assembly in a contested election for the offices of governor and lieutenant governor as shown by its duly authenticated records." Du Relle, J., dissented, holding that the boards of contest had no jurisdiction in the matter which they undertook to try, and that the demurrer should have been carried back to the petition and sustained.

[568] *The present Constitution of the state of Kentucky of 1891 provides, § 90: "Contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly, according to such regulations as may be established by law." This was taken verbatim from the 24th section of article 3 of the Constitution of 1850.

Section 27 of article 3 of the Constitution of 1799 provided: "Contested elections for a governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by a committee, to be selected from both houses of the general assembly, and formed and regulated in such manner as shall be directed by law."

The statutes of Kentucky provide:

"Sec. 1535. No application to contest the election of an officer shall be heard, unless notice thereof, in writing, signed by the party contesting, is given.

"1. The notice shall state the grounds of the contest, and none other shall afterward be heard as coming from such party; but the contestee may make defense without giving counter notice.

"2. In the case of an officer elective by the voters of the whole state, or any judicial district, the notice must be given within thirty days after the final action of the board of canvassers."

"Sec. 1596 A, . . .

"8. CONTESTED ELECTION OF GOVERNOR AND LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR. When the election of a governor or lieutenant governor is contested, a board for determining the contest shall be formed in the manner following:

"First. On the third day after the organization of the general assembly which meets next after the election, the senate shall select by lot three of its members, and the house of representatives shall select by lot eight of its members, and the eleven so selected shall constitute a board, seven of whom shall have power to act.

"Second. In making the selection by lot, the name of each member present shall be written on a separate piece of paper, every such piece being as nearly similar to the [569] other as may be. *Each piece shall be rolled up so that the name thereon cannot be seen, 178 U. S.

nor any particular piece be ascertained or selected by feeling. The whole so prepared shall be placed by the clerk in a box on his table, and after it has been well shaken up and the papers therein well intermixed, the clerk shall draw out one paper, which shall be opened and read aloud by the presiding officer, and so on until the required number is obtained. The persons whose names are so drawn shall be members of the board.

"Third. The members of the board so chosen by the two houses shall be sworn by the speaker of the house of representatives to try the contested election, and give true judgment thereon, according to the evidence, unless dissolved before rendering judgment.

"Fourth. The board shall, within twenty-four hours after its election, meet, appoint its chairman, and assign a day for hearing the contest, and adjourn from day to day as its business may require.

"Fifth. If any person so selected shall swear that he cannot, without great personal inconvenience, serve on the board, or that he feels an undue bias for or against either of the parties, he may be excused by the house from which he was chosen from serving on the board, and if it appears that the person so selected is related to either party, or is liable to any other proper objection on the score of its partiality, he shall be excused.

"Sixth. Any deficiency in the proper number so created shall be supplied by another draw from the box.

"Seventh. The board shall have power to send for persons, papers, and records, to issue attachments therefor signed by its chairman or clerk, and issue commissions for taking proof.

"Eighth. Where it shall appear that the candidates receiving the highest number of votes given have received an equal number, the right to the office shall be determined by lot, under the direction of the board. Where the person returned is found not to have been legally qualified to receive the office at the time of his election a new election shall be ordered to fill the vacancy; Provided, the first two years of his term shall not have expired. Where another than the person returned shall be found to have received the highest number of legal votes given, *such [570] other shall be adjudged to be the person elected and entitled to the office.

"Ninth. No decision shall be made but by the vote of six members. The decision of the board shall not be final nor conclusive. Such decision shall be reported to the two houses of the general assembly, for the future action of the general assembly. And the general assembly shall then determine such contest.

"Tenth. If a new election is required it shall be immediately ordered by proclamation of the speaker of the house of representatives to take place within six weeks thereafter, and on a day not sooner than thirty days thereafter.

"Eleventh. When a new election is ordered or the incumbent adjudged not to be entitled, his powers shall immediately cease, 1195 and, if the office is not adjudged to another, it shall be deemed to be vacant.

"Twelfth. If any member of the board wilfully fails to attend its sessions, he shall be reported to the house to which he belongs, and thereupon such house shall, in its discretion, punish him by fine or imprisonment or both.

"Thirteenth. If no decision of the board is given during the then session of the general assembly, it shall be dissolved unless by joint resolution of the two houses it is empowered to continue longer."

Mr. Helm Bruce argued the cause and, with Messrs. James P. Helm and Kennedy Helm, filed a brief for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. W. O. Bradley, W. H. Yost, A. E. Willson, D. W. Fairleigh, W. C. P. Breckinridge, and John Shelby were with them on the brief.

Unless the court shall be of opinion that all the questions presented are frivolous and wholly without substance, the jurisdiction of this court in the case at bar is beyond question.

Boyd v. Nebraska ex rel. Thayer, 143 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 103, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375.

Whether or not the answer stated facts sufficient to show that the right claimed was one protected by the Federal Constitution, and whether the legislative proceedings relied on by plaintiff were not due process of law are Federal questions for this court to determine.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Covington & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 560, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198.

The right to such an office as is here involved is one which is protected by the Constitution of the United States.

Marbury v. Madison, 1 Craneh, 137, 2 L. ed. 60; Kennard v. Louisiana ex rel. Morgan, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478; Foster v. Kansas ex rel. Johnston, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, 97; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231.

The case of Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435, has no application to the case at bar. In that case the statute provided that if certain charges were made against a public official the government might, without a hearing or trial, suspend him until there could be a trial.

There is no suggestion in Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 219, 31 L. ed. 408, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482, that the right to an office is not protected by the Federal Constitution against arbitrary deprivation. It simply holds that a court of equity of the United States cannot interfere with the matter of the appointment or removal of public officers, as this is purely a matter of legal cognizance.

The right of the people to choose their officers who should represent them in state affairs was the essential right which was guaranteed by U. S. Const. art. 4, § 4, in exchange and as an equivalent for their surrender of the right of revolution.

Re Duncan, 139 U. S. 449, sub nom. Duncan v. McCall, 35 L. ed. 219, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573.

A guaranty is a promise to answer for the payment of some debt, or the performance of some duty, in the case of the failure of another person who is himself in the first instance liable to such payment or performance.

14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1128.

The constitutional provision that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law is a protection to the individual and every right he has, against arbitrary spoliation by a state.

Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 244, 4 L. ed. 561; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, sub nom. Butchers' Benev. Asso. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 21 L. ed. 394; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 386, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; Brown v. Hummel, 6 Pa. 86; People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103.

This court can enforce the provisions of the Federal Constitution by declaring null and void an alleged arbitrary action of the general assembly of Kentucky denying those rights, when such action is sought to be judicially enforced.

Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 232, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; Story, Miscellaneous Writings, 619, 621; The Federalist, Nos. 16, 80; Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 168, 26 L. ed. 377; United States v. Lee, 106 U. S. 196, 27 L. ed. 171, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Tindal v. Wesley, 167 U. S. 217, 42 L. ed. 141, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 770; Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. ed. 565.

The right to vote, if given by the state law, is protected by the 14th Amendment against arbitrary deprivation by the state.

Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627.

The prohibition of the 14th Amendment against any state depriving any person of life, liberty, or property applies equally to all the departments of state government.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 531; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 164 U. S. 403, 41 L. ed. 489, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 130; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 102, 24 L. ed. 618.

Mr. W. O. Bradley also argued the cause and, with Messrs. Helm, Bruce, & Helm, W. H. Yost, D. W. Fairleigh, Augustus E. Willson, Breckinridge & Shelby, T. L. Edelen and W. H. Sweeney filed a further brief for plaintiff in error:

An office is certainly both a right and a privilege of citizenship.

Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 672; Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush. 735; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 321, 18 L. ed. 362.

The legislative department is affected by the provisions of the 14th Amendment.

Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 45, 38 L. ed. 178 U. S.

901, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 234, 41 L. ed. 983, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581.

The legislature is not above judicial review.

Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 381, 5 L. ed. 285; Newcum v. Kirtley, 13 B. Mon. 524; Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533; Stine v. Berry, 96 Ky. 63, 27 S. W. 809; Anderson v. Likens, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1001, 47 S. W. 867; Booe v. Kenner, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1343, 49 S. W. 330; Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush, 743; Jones v. Jones, 12 Pa. 350, 51 Am. Dec. 611; Cronise v. Cronise, 54 Pa. 262; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 261, 262, 407; Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 627, 7 L. ed. 542; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 134 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 971, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 209, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 462, 702; Story, Const. §§ 531, 532; De Lome, Eng. Consts. chap. 3, book 2; Newcomb v. Newcomb, 13 Bush, 544.

To say that this unwarranted action of a legislative body is above and beyond control is to say that the citizen has no rights which it is bound to respect.

Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 627, 7 L. ed. 542.

Mr. Lewis McQuown argued the cause and, with Messrs. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., W. S. Pryor, Aaron Kohn, and Zack Phelps, filed a brief for defendant in error:

The provisions of the Constitution of Kentucky and the laws made in pursuance thereof, regulating the trial of contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor, afford due process of law within the meaning of the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Foster v. Kansas ex rel. Johnston, 112 U. S. 206, 28 L. ed. 697, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, 97; Walker v. Sawinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. ed. 678; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 392, 40 L. ed. 468, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 344.

Errors or mistakes of judgment by the officers charged with the administration of the law do not authorize this court to assume jurisdiction upon the ground of failure of due process.

Tucker, Const. § 390; Arrowsmith v. Harmoning, 118 U. S. 194, 30 L. ed. 243, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1023; Kennard v. Louisiana ex rel. Morgan, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478.

The deprivation of an office or property by the judgment of a tribunal created to determine a contest is not within the inhibition of the 14th Amendment.

Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 866, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435.

There is no property in an office: hence the deprivation of an office without due process does not fall within the inhibition of the Constitution.

Smith v. New York, 37 N. Y. 520; Standford v. Wingate, 2 Duv. 443. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 109, 5 N. E. 228; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Davis, 44 Mo. 129; Conner v. New York, 5 N. Y. 296; State v. Douglas, 26 Wis. 431, 7 Am. Rep. 87; Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 866, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435.

178 U. S.

The judgment of the general assembly is conclusive.

Batman v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533; Stine v. Berry, 96 Ky. 63, 27 S. W. 809; Newcum v. Kirtley, 13 B. Mon. 517; State ex rel. Grisell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114; Stearns v. Wyoming, 53 Ohio St. 352, 41 N. E. 578; Reynolds & H. Constr. Co. v. Police Jury, 44 La. Ann. 863, 11 So. 236; Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 19, 6 L. ed. 537.

The legislative journals import verity.

Tameling v. United States Freehold & Emigration Co. 93 U. S. 644, 23 L. ed. 998; United States v. Old Settlers, 148 U. S. 466, 37 L. ed. 523, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; United States v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 544, 35 L. ed. 1109, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; McCulloch v. State, 11 Ind. 425; Wright v. Defrees, 8 Ind. 298; State ex rel. Loomis v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio, 363; Sunbury & E. R. Co. v. Cooper, 33 Pa. 283; Wise v. Bigger, 79 Va. 269; Atty. Gen. v. Rice, 64 Mich. 385, 31 N. W. 203; State ex rel. Pangborn v. Young, 32 N. J. L. 40; Cohn v. Kingsley (Idaho) 38 L. R. A. 78, 49 Pac. 985; Carr v. Coke, 116 N. C. 223, 28 L. R. A. 737, 22 S. E. 16; Blaine County v. Heard (Idaho) 45 Pac. 890; State v. Cardozo, 5 S. C. N. S. 312; Humboldt County v. Churchill County Comrs. 6 Nev. 39; Speer v. Athens, 85 Ga. 49, 9 L. R. A. 402, 11 S. E. 802; State ex rel. Grisell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114.

For protection against abuses by legislatures the people must resort to the polls, not to the courts.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 134, 24 L. ed. 87.

Mr. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., also argued the cause and, with Messrs. W. S. Pryor and Lewis McQuown filed a brief for defendant in error:

Where a specific mode of contesting elections is provided by the constitution or laws of a state, that mode is exclusive; and where the power is lodged in the legislature its decision is final, and not subject to judicial revision or annulment on any ground whatever.

State ex rel. Grisell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 114; State v. Harmon, 31 Ohio St. 250; State v. Berry, 47 Ohio St. 232, 24 N. E. 266; Stearns v. Wyoming, 53 Ohio St. 352, 41 N. E. 578; State ex rel. Brooks v. Baxter, 28 Ark. 129; Corbitt v. McDaniel, 77 Ga. 544, 2 S. E. 692; People ex rel. Royce v. Goodwin, 22 Mich. 496; Hipp v. Charlevoix County Supers, 62 Mich. 456, 29 N. W. 77; Com. ex rel. McCurdy v. Leech, 44 Pa. 332; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Mason, 77 Mo. 189; State ex rel. Ewing v. Francis, 88 Mo. 557; Garrard v. Gallagher, 11 Nev. 382; Dennett, Petitioner, 32 Me. 508, 54 Am. Dec. 602; Selleck v. South Norwalk, 40 Conn. 359; Wright v. Fawcett, 42 Tex. 203; Rogers v. Johns, 42 Tex. 339; State ex rel. Bonner v. Lynch, 25 La. Ann. 267.

The Constitution of the United States does not guarantee that the parties to a suit in a state court, in which an act of the legislature of the state is in issue, shall have the right to impeach it for fraud by parol testimony.

Central Land Co. v. Laidley, 159 U. S. 103, 40 L. ed. 91, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 80.

The knowledge and good faith of a legislature are not open to question. It is conclusively presumed that a legislature acts with full knowledge and in good faith.

United States v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 142 U. S. 510, 35 L. ed. 1099, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 308; Cooley, Const. Lim. 220, 222; United States v. Old Settlers, 143 U. S. 427, 37 L. ed. 509, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650, and cases cited.

[570] *Mr. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion of the court:

It is obviously essential to the independence of the states, and to their peace and tranquillity, that their power to prescribe the qualifications of their own officers, the [571] tenure of their offices, *the manner of their election, and the grounds on which, the tribunals before which, and the mode in which, such elections may be contested, should be exclusive and free from external interference, except so far as plainly provided by the Constitution of the United States.

And where controversies over the election of state officers have reached the state courts in the manner provided by, and been there determined in accordance with, the state Constitutions and laws, the cases must necessarily be rare in which the interference of this court can properly be invoked.

In Boyd v. Nebraska ex rel. Thayer, 143 U. S. 155, 36 L. ed. 108, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375, which was a proceeding in quo warranto, in which the supreme court of Nebraska had held that James E. Boyd had not been for two years preceding his election a citizen of the United States, and hence that under the Constitution of the state he was not eligible to the office of governor, this court took jurisdiction because the conclusion of the state court involved the denial of a right or privilege under the Constitution and laws of the United States, upon which the determination of whether Boyd was a citizen of the United States or not depended, and therefore jurisdiction to review a decision against such right or privilege necessarily existed in this tribunal. Missouri v. Andriano, 138 U. S. 496, 34 L. ed. 1012, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 385. And we said: "Each state has the power to prescribe the qualifications of its officers and the manner in which they shall be chosen and the title to offices shall be tried, whether in the judicial courts or otherwise. But when the trial is in the courts, it is a 'case,' and if a defense is interposed under the Constitution or laws of the United States, and is overruled, then, as in any other case decided by the highest court of a state, this court has jurisdiction by writ of error."

So in Kennard v. Louisiana ex rel. Morgan, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478, concerning the right of Kennard to the office of associate justice of the supreme court of Louisiana, jurisdiction was taken on the ground that the constitutionality of the statute under which the disputed title to office was tried was drawn in question. The court, speaking by Mr. Chief Justice Waite, said: "The question before us is, not whether the courts below, having jurisdiction of the case and the parties, have followed the law, but whether *the law, if followed, would have furnished [572] Kennard the protection guaranteed by the Constitution. Irregularities and mere errors in the proceedings can only be corrected in the state courts. Our authority does not extend beyond an examination of the power of the courts below to proceed at all."

The writ in Foster v. Kansas ex rel. Johnston, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, 97, rested on the same ground.

In each of the foregoing cases the determination of the right to the offices in dispute was reposed in the judicial courts, and no question was expressly considered by this court as to whether the right to a public office of a state was or was not protected by the 14th Amendment.

In Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435, the governor of North Carolina had suspended plaintiff in error as railroad commissioner under a statute of that state, and the state supreme court had held the action of the governor a valid exercise of the power conferred upon him, and that it was due process of law within the meaning of the Constitution. A writ of error from this court to review that judgment was granted, and on hearing was dismissed. Mr. Justice Peckham, in delivering the opinion, said: "The controversy relates exclusively to the title to a state office, created by a statute of the state, and to the rights of one who was elected to the office so created. Those rights are to be measured by the statute and by the Constitution of the state, excepting in so far as they may be protected by any provision of the Federal Constitution. Authorities are not required to support the general proposition that in the consideration of the Constitution or laws of a state this court follows the construction given to those instruments by the highest court of the state. The exceptions to this rule do not embrace the case now before us. We are therefore concluded by the decision of the supreme court of North Carolina as to the proper construction of the statute itself, and that as construed it does not violate the Constitution of the state. The only question for us to review is whether the state, through the action of its governor and judiciary, has deprived the plaintiff in error of his property without due process of law, or denied to him the equal protection of the laws. We are of opinion *that the plaintiff [573] in error was not deprived of any right guaranteed to him by the Federal Constitution, by reason of the proceedings before the governor under the statute above mentioned, and resulting in his suspension from office. The procedure was in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the state. It was taken under a valid statute creating a state office in a constitutional manner, as the state court has held. What kind and how much of a hearing the officer should have before suspension by the governor was a matter for the state legislature to determine, having regard to the Constitution of the state. The procedure provided by a valid state law for the purpose of changing the incumbent of a state office will not, in general, involve any question for review by this court. A law of that kind does but provide for the carrying out and enforcement of the policy of the state with reference to its political and internal administration, and a decision of the state court in regard to its construction and validity will generally be conclusive here. The facts would have to be most rare and exceptional which would give rise, in a case of this nature, to a Federal question. . . . In its internal administration the state (so far as concerns the Federal government) has entire freedom of choice as to the creation of an office for purely state purposes, and of the terms upon which it shall be held by the persons filling the office. And in such matters the decision of the state court, that the procedure by which an officer has been suspended or removed from office was regular and was under a constitutional and valid statute, must generally be conclusive in this court. . . . Upon the case made by the plaintiff in error, the Federal question which he attempts to raise is so unfounded in substance that we are justified in saying that it does not really exist; that there is no fair color for claiming that his rights under the Federal Constitution have been violated, either by depriving him of his property without due process of law, or by denying him the equal protection of the laws."

The grounds on which our jurisdiction is sought to be maintained in the present case are set forth in the errors assigned, to the effect, in substance: (1) That the action of the general assembly in the matter of these [574] contests deprived plaintiffs in "error of their offices without due process of law. (2) That the action of the general assembly deprived the people of Kentucky of the right to choose their own representatives, secured by the guarantee of the Federal Constitution of a republican form of government to every state, and deprived them of their political liberty without due process of law.

For more than a hundred years the Constitution of Kentucky has provided that contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by the general assembly. In 1799, by a committee, "to be selected from both houses of the general assembly, and formed and regulated in such manner as shall be directed by law" [Const. art. 3, § 27]; since 1850, "by both houses of the general assembly, according to such regulations as may be established by law" [Const. art. 3, § 24].

The highest court of the state has often held, and, in the present case has again declared, that under these constitutional provisions the power of the general assembly to determine the result is exclusive, and that its decision is not open to judicial review. Bat-
178 U. S.

man v. Megowan, 1 Met. (Ky.) 533; Stine v. Berry, 96 Ky. 63, 27 S. W. 809.†

The statute enacted for the purpose of carrying the provisions of the Constitution into effect has been in existence in substance since 1799, 1 Morehead, and Brown, 593-4; Rev. Stat. Ky. 1852, chap. 32, art. 7, § 1, p. 294. Many of the states have similar constitutional provisions and similar statutes.

We do not understand this statute to be assailed as in any manner obnoxious to constitutional objection, but that plaintiffs in error complain of the action of the general assembly under the statute and of the judgment of the state courts declining to disturb that action.

It was earnestly pressed at the bar that all the proceedings were void for want of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the record; that under the Constitution and statute, as there was no question of an equal number of votes or of the legal qualifications *of the [575] candidates, the action of the general assembly could only be invoked by a contest as to which of the parties had received the highest number of legal votes; but that the notices put forward a case, not of the election of the contestants, but of no election at all, which the contest boards and the general assembly had no jurisdiction to deal with. The notices were, however, exceedingly broad, and set up a variety of grounds, and specifically stated that the contestants would ask the boards of contest and the general assembly to determine that they were legally and rightfully elected governor and lieutenant governor at the said election and that the contestees were not. And the determination of the boards and of the general assembly was that contestants had received the highest number of legal votes cast for any candidate for said offices at said election, and were duly and legally elected governor and lieutenant governor,—a determination which adjudged the notices to be sufficient, and which did not include any matter not within the jurisdiction of the tribunal.

We repeat, then, that the contention is that, although the statute furnished due process of law, the general assembly in administering the statute denied it; and that the court of appeals in holding to the rule that where a mode of contesting elections is specifically provided by the Constitution or laws of a state, that mode is exclusive, and in holding that, as the power to determine was vested in the general assembly of Kentucky, the decision of that body was not subject to judicial revision, denied a right claimed under the Federal Constitution. The court of appeals did, indeed, adjudge that the case did not come within the 14th Amendment, because the right to hold the office of governor or lieutenant governor of Kentucky was not property in itself, and, being created by the state Constitution, was conferred and held solely in accordance with the terms of that instrument and laws passed pursuant thereto, so that, in respect of an elective office, a determination of the result of an election, in the manner provided, adverse to a claimant, could not be regarded as a deprivation forbidden by that amendment.

†And see State ex rel. Grisell v. Marlow, 15 Ohio St. 115, 134; State v. Harmon, 31 Ohio St. 250; Com. ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Garrigues, 28 Pa. 9, 70 Am. Dec. 103; Com. ex rel. McCurdy v. Leech, 44 Pa. 332; People ex rel. Royce v. Goodwin, 22 Mich. 496; Baxter v. Brooks, 29 Ark. 173; State v. Lewis, 51 Conn. 113.

[576] *The view that public office is not property has been generally entertained in this country.

In Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 402, 416. 13 L. ed. 472, 478, Butler and others by virtue of a statute of the state of Pennsylvania had been appointed canal commissioners for a term of one year with a compensation of $4 per diem, but during their incumbency another statute was passed whereby the compensation was reduced to $3, and it was claimed that their contract rights were thereby infringed. The court drew a distinction between such a situation and that of a contract by which "perfect rights, certain definite, fixed private rights of property, are vested;" and said: "These are clearly distinguishable from measures or engagements adopted or undertaken by the body politic or state government for the benefit of all, and from the necessity of the case, and according to universal understanding, to be varied or discontinued as the public good shall require. The selection of officers, who are nothing more than agents for the effectuating of such public purposes, is matter of public convenience or necessity, and so, too, are the periods for the appointment of such agents; but neither the one nor the other of these arrangements can constitute any obligation to continue such agents, or to reappoint them, after the measures which brought them into being shall have been found useless, shall have been fulfilled, or shall have been abrogated as even detrimental to the well being of the public. . . . It follows, then, upon principle, that in every perfect or competent government there must exist a general power to enact and to repeal laws, and to create, and change or discontinue, the agents designated for the execution of those laws. Such a power is indispensable for the preservation of the body politic, and for the safety of the individuals of the community. It is true that this power, or the extent of its exercise, may be controlled by the higher organic law or Constitution of the state, as is the case in some instances in the state Constitutions."

In Crenshaw v. United States, 134 U. S. 99, 104, 33 L. ed. 825, 827, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431, 432, Mr. Justice Lamar stated the primary question in the case to be "whether an officer appointed for a definite time or during good behavior had any vested interest or [577] contract right in his office of *which Congress could not deprive him." And he said, speaking for the court: "The question is not novel. There seems to be but little difficulty in deciding that there was no such interest or right." Butler v. Pennsylvania, 10 How. 402, 13 L. ed. 472; Newton v. Mahoning County Comrs. 100 U. S. 548, 25 L. 1200

ed. 710; Blake v. United States, 103 U. S. 227, 26 L. ed. 462; and many other cases.

The decisions are numerous to the effect that public offices are mere agencies or trusts, and not property as such. Nor are the salary and emoluments property, secured by contract, but compensation for services actually rendered. Nor does the fact that a constitution may forbid the legislature from abolishing a public office or diminishing the salary thereof during the term of the incumbent change its character or make it property. True, the restrictions limit the power of the legislature to deal with the office, but even such restrictions may be removed by constitutional amendment. In short, generally speaking, the nature of the relation of a public officer to the public is inconsistent with either a property or a contract right.†

The court of appeals not only held that the office of governor or of lieutenant governor was not property under the Constitution of Kentucky; but, moreover, that court was of opinion that the decision of these contested elections did not deprive plaintiffs in error of any pre-existing right.

Our system of elections was unknown to the common law, and the whole subject is regulated by constitutions and statutes passed thereunder. In the view of the court of appeals the mode of contesting elections was part of the machinery for ascertaining the result of the election, and hence the rights of the officer who held the certificate of the state board of canvassers "were provisional or temporary until the determination of the result of the election as provided in the Constitution, *and upon that determi-[578] nation, if adverse to him, they ceased altogether." In fact, the statute provided that when the "incumbent is adjudged not to be entitled his powers shall immediately cease," and under the Constitution the holder of the certificate manifestly held it for the time being subject to the issue of a contest if initiated.

It is clear that the judgment of the court of appeals, in declining to go behind the decision of the tribunal vested by the state Constitution and laws with the ultimate determination of the right to these offices, denied no right secured by the 14th Amendment.

But it is said that the 14th Amendment must be read with § 4 of article 4 of the Constitution, providing that: "The United States shall guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature cannot be convened), against domestic violence." It is argued that when the state of Kentucky entered the Union, the people "surrendered their right of forcible revolution in state affairs," and received in lieu thereof a distinct pledge to the people of the state of the guaranty of a republican form of government, and of protection against invasion and against domestic violence; that the distinguishing feature of that form of government is the right of the people to choose their own officers for governmental administration; that this was denied by the action of the general assembly in this instance; and, in effect, that this court has jurisdiction to enforce that guaranty, albeit the judiciary of Kentucky was unable to do so because of the division of the powers of government. And yet the writ before us was granted under § 709 of the Revised Statutes to revise the judgment of the state court on the ground that a constitutional right was decided against by that court.

†Sweeny v. Foyntz, Clr. Ct. U. S. Dist. Ky. not yet reported, Taft, J.; Standeford v. Wingate, 2 Duv. 440, 443; Conner v. New York, 5 N. Y. 285; Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94; Atty. Gen. ex rel. Rieh v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358, 58 N. W. 611; Smith v. New York, 37 N. Y. 520; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 5 N. E. 228; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Davls, 44 Mo. 129; State v. Douglas, 26 Wis. 428; Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361; Douglas County v. Timme, 32 Neb. 272, 49 N. W. 268; Lynch v. Chase, 55 Kan. 367, 40 Pac. 666; Shelby v. Alcorn, 36 Miss. 273, 72 Am. Dec. 169.

[579] It was long ago settled that the enforcement of this guaranty belonged to the political department. Luther v. Borden, 7 How. 1, 12 L. ed. 581. In that case it was held that the question, which of the two opposing governments of Rhode Island, namely, the charter government or the government established by a voluntary *convention, was the legitimate one, was a question for the determination of the political department; and when that department had decided, the courts were bound to take notice of the decision and follow it; and also that as the supreme court of Rhode Island, holding constitutional authority not in dispute, had decided the point, the well-settled rule applied that the courts of the United States adopt and follow the decisions of the state courts on questions which concern merely the Constitution and laws of the state.

We had occasion to refer to Luther v. Borden in Re Duncan, 139 U. S. 449, 461, 35 L. ed. 219, 224, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573, and we there observed: "Mr. Webster's argument in that case took a wider sweep, and contained a masterly statement of the American system of government as recognizing that the people are the source of all political power, but that, as the exercise of governmental powers immediately by the people themselves is impracticable, they must be exercised by representatives of the people; that the basis of representation is suffrage; that the right of suffrage must be protected and its exercise prescribed by previous law, and the results ascertained by some certain rule; that through its regulated exercise each man's power tells in the Constitution of the government and in the enactment of laws; that the people limit themselves in regard to the qualifications of electors and the qualifications of the elected, and to certain forms for the conduct of elections; that our liberty is the liberty secured by the regular action of popular power, taking place and ascertained in accordance with legal and authentic modes; and that the Constitution and laws do not proceed on the ground of revolution or any right of revolution, but on the idea of results achieved by orderly action under the authority of existing governments, proceedings outside of which are not contemplated by our institutions. Webster's Works, vol. 6, p. 217. . . . The state of Texas is in full possession of its faculties as a member of the Union, and its legislative, executive, and judicial departments are peacefully operating by the orderly and settled methods prescribed by its fundamental law. Whether certain statutes have or have not binding force it is for the state to determine, and that determination *in itself involves no [580] infraction of the Constitution of the United States, and raises no Federal question giving the courts of the United States jurisdiction."

178 U. S.

These observations are applicable here. The commonwealth of Kentucky is in full possession of its faculties as a member of the Union, and no exigency has arisen requiring the interference of the general government to enforce the guaranties of the Constitution, or to repel invasion, or to put down domestic violence. In the eye of the Constitution, the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the state are peacefully operating by the orderly and settled methods prescribed by its fundamental law, notwithstanding there may be difficulties and disturbances arising from the pendency and determination of these contests. This very case shows that this is so, for those who assert that they were aggrieved by the action of the general assembly properly accepted the only appropriate remedy which, under the law, was within the reach of the parties. That this proved ineffectual as to them, even though their grounds of complaint may have been in fact well founded, was the result of the Constitution and laws under which they lived and by which they were bound. Any remedy beside that is to be found in the august tribunal of the people, which is continually sitting, and over whose judgments on the conduct of public functionaries the courts exercise no control.

We must decline to take jurisdiction on the ground of deprivation of rights embraced by the 14th Amendment, without due process of law, or of the violation of the guaranty of a republican form of government by reason of similar deprivation.

As remarked by Chief Justice Taney in Luther v. Borden: "The high power has been conferred on this court of passing judgment upon the acts of the state sovereignties, and of the legislative and executive branches of the Federal government, and of determining whether they are beyond the limits of power marked out for them respectively by the Constitution of the United States. This tribunal, therefore, should be the last to overstep the boundaries which limit its own jurisdiction. And while it should always be ready to meet any question confided *to it by the Constitution, it is [581] equally its duty not to pass beyond its appropriate sphere of action, and to take care not to involve itself in discussions which properly belong to other forums."

Writ of error dismissed.

Mr. Justice Brewer dissenting:

I am unable to concur in all that is said by the Chief Justice in the opinion just announced, and will state briefly wherein I dissent.

An office to which a salary is attached, in a case in which the controversy is only as to which of two parties is entitled thereto, has been adjudged by this court, and rightfully, to be property within the scope of that clause of the 14th Amendment, which forbids a state to "deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." In Kennard v. Louisiana ex rel. Morgan, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478, Kennard was appointed a justice of the supreme court of Louisiana. Morgan claimed to be entitled thereto, and brought suit to settle the title to the office. The supreme court of the state decided in favor of Morgan, and Kennard sued out a writ of error from this court on the ground that the judgment had deprived him of his office without due process of law, in violation of the foregoing provision of the 14th Amendment. Of course, neither life nor liberty were involved, and the jurisdiction of this court could be sustained only on the ground that the property of Kennard was taken from him, as alleged, without due process of law. This court unanimously sustained the jurisdiction, but, on examination of the proceedings, found that there had been due process of law, and therefore affirmed the judgment of the supreme court of Louisiana. In Foster v. Kansas ex rel. Johnston, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, 97, the supreme court of Kansas had, in quo warranto proceedings, ousted Foster from the office of county attorney of Saline county, and there was presented a motion to dismiss as well as one to affirm. This court unanimously held that the motion to dismiss must be overruled, saying (p. 206, L. ed. p. 697, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 98):

"As the question of the constitutionality of the statute was directly raised by the defendant, and decided against him by the court, we have jurisdiction, and the motion to dismiss must be overruled."

At the same time it affirmed the decision of the supreme court of the state on the ground that the proceedings showed due process of law. In Boyd v. Nebraska ex rel. Thayer, 143 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 103, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375, the supreme court of Nebraska had, in an appropriate action, rendered judgment ousting Boyd from the office of governor of the state, and placing Thayer in possession. On error to this court we took jurisdiction of the case, and reversed the judgment of the supreme court of Nebraska, thus restoring Boyd to the office from which he had been ousted by the judgment of that court. In that case there was a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Field on the ground of jurisdiction, he saying (p. 182, L. ed. p. 116, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 389):

"I dissent from the judgment just rendered. I do not think that this court has any jurisdiction to determine a disputed question as to the right to the governorship of a state, however that question may be decided by its authorities."

In the late case of Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435, in which the judgment of the supreme court of the state confirming the action of governor in suspending a railroad commissioner was sustained and the writ of error dismissed, the dismissal was not placed on the ground that the office, with its salary, was not property to be protected by the 14th Amendment, but, as said Mr. Justice Peckham, speaking for the court (p. 595, L. ed. p. 871, Sup. Ct. Rep. p. 439):

"Upon the case made by the plaintiff in error, the Federal question which he attempts to raise is so unfounded in substance that we are justified in saying that it does not really exist; that there is no fair color for claiming that his rights under the Federal Constitution have been violated, either by depriving him of his property without due process of law, or by denying him the equal protection of the laws."

We have thus, in four cases, coming at successive times through a period of twenty-five years, had before us the question of the validity of judgments of the highest courts of separate states taking office from one person and giving it to another, in three of which we unhesitatingly sustained our jurisdiction to review such judgments, two of which we affirmed on the ground that the proceedings in the state court disclosed due process of law, and that, therefore, the rights of the plaintiff in error were not infringed; in the third of which we held that the proceedings could not be sustained, and reversed the judgment of the state court ousting one person from the high office of governor of the state and giving it to another; and in the fourth of which, while we dismissed the writ of error, it was not on the ground that there was no property involved, but because the reasons assigned for a review were so frivolous as not to call for consideration. Such a series of decisions should not now be disturbed, except upon very cogent and satisfactory reasons. And this case, it must be borne in mind, is exactly like the others,—a proceeding in error to review the judgment of the highest court of a state in an action to remove an incumbent from his office.

Aside from these adjudications, I am clear, as a matter of principle, that an office to which a salary is attached is, as between two contestants for such office, to be considered a matter of property. I agree fully with those decisions which are referred to, and which hold that as between the state and the officeholder there is no contract right either to the term of office or the amount of salary, and that the legislature may, if not restrained by constitutional provisions, abolish the office or reduce the salary. But when the office is not disturbed, when the salary is not changed, and when under the Constitution of the state neither can be by the legislature, and the question is simply whether one shall be deprived of that office and its salary, and both given to another, a very different question is presented, and in such a case to hold that the incumbent has no property in the office, with its accompanying salary, does not commend itself to my judgment.

[584] While not concurring in the order of dismissal, I am of opinion that the judgment of the court of appeals of Kentucky should be affirmed. The state of Kentucky has provided that *contests in respect to the office of governor and lieutenant governor shall be decided by the general assembly. Such provision is not uncommon, is appropriate, and reasonable. The contestants, William Goebel and J. C. W. Beckham, filed with the general assembly within due time their notices of contest. Those notices were broad enough to justify action by the general assembly and a decision setting aside the award of the canvassing board and giving to the contestants their offices. The prescribed procedure was followed, the committee authorized by statute was selected, its report made, and upon that a decision awarding to the contestant the offices. It is true that the first decision of the general assembly was made at a secret session outside its ordinary place of meeting, and without notice except to those who were supposed to be willing to concur in the report of the committee. If that ended the proceedings I should be strongly inclined to hold that the decision thus rendered could not be sustained. For when a tribunal is constituted of several members I understand that all have a right to be present, and, if any session is held elsewhere than at the appointed time and place, each one must be notified in order that he may have the opportunity of being present and contributing by his advice and opinion to the final judgment. But the record does not stop with this award of a part of the assembly in secret session, for subsequently when the general assembly was in session at its regular place of meeting, in the discharge of its ordinary duties, and at a time prescribed for its meeting, the action taken on February 2 was ratified and confirmed, both in single and joint session. Now, I agree with those members of the court of appeals of Kentucky who hold that this final action of the general assembly is conclusive. I do not ignore the many allegations of wrong, such as that the selection of the committee was not by lot, as prescribed by the laws, but was a trick on the part of the clerks of the assembly, and it must be conceded that the outcome of that drawing lends support to this allegation. Curious results sometimes happen by chance, but when those results happen so largely along the lines of the purposes of those who have control of the supposed chance, it is not strange that outsiders are apt to feel that purpose, and [585] not *chance, determined the result. Be all these things as they may, the general assembly was constituted as the tribunal to conduct and supervise the contest. It approved what took place, and it is familiar law that no question can be raised in the courts as to the honesty or integrity of the members of the legislature in the discharge of their duties. Whatever of purity or honesty may be in fact lacking in the conduct of any one of them is a matter to be inquired into between his constituents and himself, and it is no part of the province of the judiciary to challenge or question the integrity of his action. So we have the case of a committee apparently selected by lot, the propriety of whose action was approved by the tribunal having charge of the controversy, the report of that committee in favor of the contestants, and the judgment of the assembly, not merely at the secret session, but later, when all were present, or were called upon to be present, approving such report. This, in my opinion, constitutes due process of law within the meaning of the 14th Amendment, and I agree with the court of appeals of Kentucky that upon that award thus made by the proper tribunal, no other judgment can be entered than that which sustains it. But because, as I understand the law, this court has jurisdiction to review a judgment of the highest court of a state ousting one from his office and giving it to another, and a right to inquire whether that judgment is right or wrong in respect to any Federal question, such as due process of law, I think the writ of error should not be dismissed, but that the judgment of the court of appeals of Kentucky should be affirmed.
178 U. S.

Mr. Justice Brown concurs.

Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting:

At the regular election held in Kentucky on the 7th day of November, 1899, William S. Taylor and William Goebel were, respectively, the Republican and Democratic candidates for governor of that commonwealth.

As required by law, the returns of the election were made to the secretary of state.

Upon examining and canvassing the returns, the officers charged with the duty of ascertaining the result of the election *certified, as to the office of governor, that Taylor [586] "received the highest number of votes given for that office, as certified to the secretary of state, and is therefore duly and regularly elected for the term prescribed by the Constitution." According to the returns upon which that certificate was based Taylor received 193,714 votes and Goebel 191,331.

It cannot be doubted that the certificate awarded to Taylor established at least his prima facie right to the governorship, and that he could not be deprived of that right except upon a contest in the mode prescribed by law, and upon proof showing that Goebel was legally entitled to the office. To deprive him of that right illegally was an injury both to him and to the people of the state. "The very essence of civil liberty," it was said in Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 2 L. ed. 60, "is the right of every individual to claim the protection of the laws, whenever he receives an injury."

The Constitution of Kentucky provides that the governor "shall be elected for the term of four years by the qualified voters of the state. The person having the highest number of votes shall be governor; but if two or more shall be equal and highest in votes, the election shall be determined by lot, in such manner as the general assembly may direct;" and that the governor "shall at stated times receive for his services a compensation to be fixed by law." Ky. Const. §§ 70, 74. That instrument further provides that "contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor shall be determined by both houses of the general assembly, according to such regulations as may be established by law." § 90.

Taylor, having received his certificate of election based upon the returns to the secretary of state, took the oath of office as governor on December 12th, 1899,—the oath being administered by the chief justice of the court of appeals of Kentucky,—and entered at once upon the discharge of his duties, taking possession of the public buildings provided for the governor, as well as of the books, archives, and papers committed by law to the custody of that officer. After that and until he was lawfully ousted, his acts, as governor, in conformity to law, were binding upon every branch of the state government and upon the people.

[587] *Within thirty days after the certificate of election was awarded to Taylor he was served by Goebel with notice of contest for the office of governor.

By the statutes of Kentucky relating to contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor it is provided:

"When the election of a governor or lieutenant governor is contested a board for determining the contest shall be formed in the manner following:

"First. On the third day after the organization of the general assembly which meets next after the election, the senate shall select by lot three of its members, and the house of representatives shall select by lot eight of its members, and the eleven so selected shall constitute a board, seven of whom shall have power to act.

"Second. In making the selection by lot the name of each member present shall be written on a separate piece of paper, every such piece being as nearly similar to the other as may be. Each piece shall be rolled up so that the name thereon cannot be seen, nor any particular piece be ascertained or selected by feeling. The whole so prepared shall be placed by the clerk in a box on his table, and, after it has been well shaken and the papers therein well intermixed, the clerk shall draw out one paper, which shall be opened and read aloud by the presiding officer, and so on until the required number is obtained. The persons whose names are so drawn shall be members of the board.

"Third. The members of the board so chosen by the two houses shall be sworn by the speaker of the house of representatives to try the contested election, and give true judgment thereon, according to the evidence, unless dissolved before rendering judgment.

"Fourth. The board shall, within twenty-four hours after its election, meet, appoint its chairman, and assign a day for hearing the contest, and adjourn from day to day as its business may require.

"Fifth. If any person so selected shall swear that he cannot, without great personal inconvenience, serve on the board, or that he feels an undue bias for or against either of the parties, *he may be excused by the house [588] from which he was chosen from serving on the board; and if it appears that the person so selected is related to either party, or is liable to any other proper objection on the score of his partiality, he shall be excused.

"Sixth. Any deficiency in the proper number so created shall be supplied by another draw from the box.

"Seventh. The board shall have power to send for persons, papers, and records, to issue attachments therefor, signed by its chairman or clerk, and issue commissions for taking proof.

"Eighth. Where it shall appear that the candidates receiving the highest number of votes given have received an equal number, the right to the office shall be determined by lot, under the direction of the board. Where the person returned is found not to have been legally qualified to receive the office at the time of his election, a new election shall be ordered to fill the vacancy: Provided, The first two years of his term shall not have expired. Where another than the person returned shall be found to have received the highest number of legal votes given, such other shall be adjudged to be the person elected and entitled to the office.

"Ninth. No decision shall be made but by the vote of six members. The decision of the board shall not be final nor conclusive. Such decision shall be reported to the two houses of the general assembly, for the future action of the general assembly. And the general assembly shall then determine such contest.

"Tenth. If a new election is required it shall be immediately ordered by proclamation of the speaker of the house of representatives, to take place within six weeks thereafter, and on a day not sooner than thirty days thereafter.

"Eleventh. When a new election is ordered or the incumbent adjudged not to be entitled, his power shall immediately cease, and, if the office is not adjudged to another, it shall be deemed to be vacant.

"Twelfth. If any member of the board wilfully fails to attend its sessions, he shall be reported to the house to which he belongs, and thereupon such house shall, in its discretion, punish him by fine and imprisonment, or both.

*"Thirteenth. If no decision of the board [589] is given during the then session of the general assembly, it shall be dissolved, unless by joint resolution of the two houses it is empowered to continue longer." Ky. Rev. Stat. § 1596 A.

It may be here observed that the jurisdiction conferred by the statute upon the board of contest appointed by the legislature is not without limit. The power given to determine contested elections for governor and lieutenant governor is attended by the condition that the determination of the contest shall be according to such regulations as may be established by law. In words too clear to require construction the powers of a board of contest are restricted so that (1) if the votes were not accurately summed up, the error might be corrected; (2) if illegal votes were cast they might be thrown out; (3) in the event "the candidates receiving the highest number of votes given have received an equal number, the right to the office shall be determined by lot;" (4) if the person returned as elected was not legally qualified to receive the office at the time of the election, a new election must be ordered to fill the vacancy; (5) if another than the person returned is found "to have received the highest number of legal votes given, such other shall be adjudged to be the person elected and entitled to the office." The statute has been so construed by the highest court of Kentucky in Leeman v. Hinton, 1 Duv. 38. That was a common-law action involving the title to an office. The defendant relied upon the decision of a board of contest to the effect that Leeman's claim to the office rested upon an election held in each precinct under the supervision of military officers who overawed the majority of the voters in the county. The court of appeals of Kentucky decided in favor of Leeman, saying: "But the authority to decide as to the freedom and equality of elections has not been conferred by the legislature upon the board for trying contested elections, but forms a part of the general jurisdiction of the circuit courts." In the previous case of Neueum v. Kirtley, 13 B. Mon. 522—which was a contested election case in which the board assumed to count votes not cast, but which would have been cast if the polls had not been closed too soon—the court said that

[590] "the necessary and certain import of *the provision is that the contestant shall not be adjudged to be entitled to the office unless the board find that he has received the highest number of legal votes given."

Let it also be observed that the board of contest in this case was not given jurisdiction to throw out all the votes cast in a particular city, county, or section of the state because, in its judgment, the freedom of the election in such city, county, or section was destroyed by military or other interference. In other words, the board was without jurisdiction to throw out legal votes actually given, and was bound to respect the mandate of the Constitution that "the person having the highest number of votes shall be governor," as well as the mandate of the statute that the person "found to have received the highest number of votes . . . shall be adjudged to be the person elected and entitled to the office."

I remark further that the members elected to try the contested election were required by the statute "to give true judgment according to the evidence."

As to the legislature, it was made its duty by express words to determine the contest, without regarding the decision of the board as final or conclusive. But, as already suggested, its jurisdiction to act was not without limit; for, in addition to the restriction above referred to, by the statute under which it proceeded no application to contest the election of an officer could be heard unless notice thereof in writing, signed by the party contesting, had been given; and "the notice shall state the grounds of the contest, and none other shall afterward be heard as coming from such party, but the contestee may make defense without giving counter notice." Ky. Rev. Stat. § 1535. The board of contest, as the court below has said, "was only a preliminary agent to take evidence and report the facts to the general assembly. The assembly itself finally determined the contest." As the general assembly could determine the contest only upon the grounds set forth in the contestant's notice, it had no authority or jurisdiction to oust the incumbent unless those grounds or some of them were sustained by proof laid before it. If no proof was laid before it, then the prima facie right of the incumbent, based upon the certificate awarded to him, must prevail.

*With these preliminary observations as to [591] the trial by a board of contest of a contested election for governor, and as to the powers of the legislature in determining such contest finally as between the parties, I come to the consideration of the grounds upon which the majority of the court have dismissed the present writ of error.

The board of contest in their report of January 30th, 1900, say: "In our opinion William Goebel was elected governor of the commonwealth of Kentucky on the 7th day of November, 1899, and that he then and there received the highest number of legal votes cast for anyone for the office of governor at said election, and we therefore respectfully suggest that this report be approved, and a resolution adopted by the general assembly declaring the said William Goebel governor elect of the commonwealth of Kentucky for the term commencing the 12th day of December, 1899. We decide that said William Goebel has received the highest number of legal votes, and is adjudged to be the person elected to said office of governor for the term prescribed by law."

The report was not accompanied either by any abstract of the evidence or any recital of the grounds upon which it based the statement that Goebel had received the highest number of legal votes. Nor was the evidence itself transmitted to the legislature,—not a line nor a word of it. According to the uncontradicted statement made by counsel at the argument, the proof made nearly two thousand pages of typewriting. The report simply followed the words of the statute and stated that Goebel had received "the highest number of legal votes," giving no basis, not the slightest, upon which the legislature could determine the correctness of that statement.

Immediately after the board's report reached the body claiming to be the lawful legislature of the state, that body—of course without reading the evidence, or causing it to be read, for it had no evidence before it—approved the report, and declared Goebel to have been legally elected governor. Upon that action alone the present suit was based, and by the judgment of the highest court of Kentucky such action was declared to be conclusive upon the judiciary.

[592] “The first question to be considered is whether Taylor has been denied by the judgment of the state court any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution of the United States. The appellant invokes the clause of the 14th Amendment declaring that “no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.” There ought not, at this day, to be any doubt as to the objects which were intended to be attained by the requirement of due process of law. “They were intended,” this court has said, “to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice.” Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 4 Wheat. 244, 4 L. ed. 561.

The majority of this court decide that an office held under the authority of a state cannot in any case be deemed property within the meaning of the 14th Amendment, and hence, it is now adjudged, the action of a state legislature or state tribunal depriving one of a state office—under whatever circumstances or by whatever mode that result is accomplished—cannot be regarded as inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States. Upon that ground the court declines to take jurisdiction of this writ of error. If the court had dismissed the writ or affirmed the judgment upon the ground that there had been no violation of the principles constituting due process of law, its action would not have been followed by the evil results which, I think, must inevitably follow from the decision now rendered.

Let us see whether, in dismissing the writ of error for want of jurisdiction, the majority have not departed from the rulings of this court in former cases. This question, it cannot be doubted, is one of serious moment. But what was said by Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for this court in Cohen v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 404, 5 L. ed. 291, may well be repeated: “It is most true that this court will not take jurisdiction if it should not; but it is equally true that it must take jurisdiction if it should. The judiciary cannot, as the legislature may, avoid a measure because it approaches the confines of the Constitution. We cannot pass it by because [593] it is doubtful. With whatever doubts, with whatever difficulties, a case may be attended, we must decide it if it be brought before us. We have no more right to decline the exercise of jurisdiction which is given than to usurp that which is not given. The one or the other would be treason to the Constitution. Questions may occur which we would gladly avoid, but we cannot avoid them.”

The first case in this court relating to this subject is Kennard v. Louisiana ex rel. Morgan, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478. That was a writ of error brought by Kennard to review the final judgment of the supreme court of Louisiana declaring that he was not a member of that court. “The case,” the report states, “was then brought here upon the ground that the state of Louisiana acting under this law, through her judiciary, had deprived Kennard of his office without due process of law, in violation of that provision of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States which prohibits any state from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property ‘without due process of law.’” Looking also into the printed arguments filed in that case, on behalf of the respective parties, I find that the attorney for the plaintiff in error, a lawyer of distinction, insisted that the sole question presented for determination by this court was whether the final judgment of the state court deprived Kennard of his office in violation of the above clause of the 14th Amendment. And this view was not controverted by the attorney for the defendant, also an able lawyer. The latter contended that the 14th Amendment had no application because in what was done no departure from the principles of due process of law had occurred. The opinion of Chief Justice Waite delivering the judgment of this court thus opens: “The sole question presented for our consideration in this case, as stated by the counsel for the plaintiff in error, is whether the state of Louisiana, acting under the statute of January 15th, 1873, through her judiciary, has deprived Kennard of his office without due process of law.” Of course, this court had no jurisdiction to inquire whether there had been due process of law in the proceedings in the state court, unless the office in dispute or the right to hold it was property within the meaning of the 14th Amendment, or unless *Kennard’s liberty was involved in his[594] holding and discharging the duties of the office to which, as he insisted, he had been lawfully elected. But this court took jurisdiction of the case and affirmed the judgment of the supreme court of Louisiana upon the ground that the requirement in the 14th Amendment of due process of law had not been violated. If, in the judgment of this court, as constituted when the Kennard Case was decided, an office held under the authority of a state was not “property” within the meaning of the 14th Amendment, the case would have been disposed of upon the ground that no Federal right had been or could have been violated, and the court would not have entered upon the inquiry as to what, under the 14th Amendment, constituted due process of law in a case of which—according to the principles this day announced—it had no jurisdiction.

In Foster v. Kansas ex rel. Johnston, 112 U. S. 201, 28 L. ed. 629, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, 97,—which was a writ of error to review the final judgment of the supreme court of Kansas,—the sole issue was as to the right of Foster to hold the office of county attorney. The defendant in error moved to dismiss the writ for want of jurisdiction in this court, and accompanied the motion with a motion to affirm. This court refused to dismiss the case, and, referring to Kennard v. Louisiana, affirmed the judgment upon the ground that there had been, in its opinion, no departure from due process of law in the proceedings to remove Foster. It never occurred to the court, nor to any attorney in the case, that the 14th Amendment did not embrace the case of a state office from which the incumbent was removed without due process of law. If such an office was not deemed property within the meaning of that Amendment, that was an end of the case here. But this court took jurisdiction and disposed of the case upon the ground that the requirement in the Federal Constitution of due process of law had been observed.

In Boyd v. Nebraska ex rel. Thayer, 143 U. S. 135, 36 L. ed. 103, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 375, which came here upon writ of error to review the final judgment of the supreme court of Nebraska ousting Boyd from the office of governor, and putting Thayer into that position, all the justices, except Mr. Justice Field, concurred in holding that this court [595] had jurisdiction of the case. In his dissenting opinion Mr. Justice Field observed: "I do not think that this court has any jurisdiction to determine a disputed question as to the right to the governorship of a state, however that question may be decided by its authorities." He continued, quoting the language of Mr. Justice Nelson in another case: "The former [general government] in its appropriate sphere is supreme; but the states within the limits of their powers not granted, or, in the language of the 10th Amendment, 'reserved,' are as independent of the general government as that government within its sphere is independent of the states. The Collector v. Day, 11 Wall. 113, 124, sub nom. Buffington v. Day, 20 L. ed. 122, 125." In no respect is this independence of the states more marked, or more essential to their peace and tranquillity, than in their absolute power to prescribe the qualifications of all their state officers, from their chief magistrate to the lowest official employed in the administration of their local government; to determine the manner of their election, whether by open or secret ballot, and whether by local bodies or by general suffrage; the tenure by which they shall hold their respective offices; the grounds on which their election may be contested, the tribunals before which such contest shall be made, the manner in which it shall be conducted, and the effect to be given to the decision rendered. With none of these things can the government of the United States interfere. In all these particulars the states, to use the language of Mr. Justice Nelson, are as independent of the general government as that government within its sphere is independent of the states. Its power of interference with the administration of the affairs of the state and the officers through whom they are conducted extends only so far as may be necessary to secure to it a republican form of government, and protect it against invasion, and also against domestic violence on the application of its legislature, or of its executive when that body cannot be convened.

178 U. S.

Const. art. 4, § 4. Except as required for these purposes, it can no more interfere with the qualifications, election, and installation of the state officers than a foreign government. And all attempts at interference with them in those respects by the executive, legislative, or judicial departments of the general government are in my judgment so [596] many invasions upon the reserved rights of the states and assaults upon their constitutional autonomy. No clause of the Constitution can be named which in any respect gives countenance to such invasion. The fact that one of the qualifications prescribed by the state for its officers can only be ascertained and established by considering the provisions of a law of the United States in no respect authorizes an interference by the general government with the state action."

This court has a different view of these questions, and, taking jurisdiction, considered the merits of the case, so far as it involved Federal questions, and rendered a judgment which, by its necessary operation, put into the office of governor of Nebraska one whom the highest court of that state had adjudged not to be the lawful incumbent.

The latest case involving the present question is Wilson v. North Carolina, 169 U. S. 586, 42 L. ed. 865, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 435. That was an action in the nature of quo warranto to test the title to a state office. Judgment was rendered for the plaintiff. The defendant claimed that the state statute and the action taken under it not only deprived him of his office without due process of law, but denied to him the equal protection of the laws, both in violation of the 14th Amendment. In this court a motion to dismiss the writ of error was sustained upon the ground that, looking at what occurred in the state court, there was "no fair color for claiming that his [the plaintiff's] rights under the Federal Constitution have been violated, either by depriving him of his property without due process of law or by denying him the equal protection of the laws." After observing that this court would be very reluctant to decide that we had jurisdiction in the case presented, and could supervise and review the political administration of a state government by its own officials and through its own courts, great care was taken to say: "The jurisdiction of this court would only exist in case there had been, by reason of the statute and the proceedings under it, such a plain and substantial departure from the fundamental principles upon which our government is based that it could with truth and propriety be said that if the judgment were suffered to remain, the party aggrieved would be deprived of his life, liberty, or [597] property in violation of the provisions of the Federal Constitution." Here, as I think, is a distinct declaration that this court has jurisdiction to review the final judgment of a state court, involving the title to a state office, where there has been a plain and substantial departure from the principles that underlie the requirement of due process of law. The opinion in Wilson v. North Carolina shows a deliberate consideration of the scope of the 14th Amendment, and a refusal to hold, as is now held, that a contest about a state office could not, under any circumstances, involve rights secured by that Amendment. We there substantially declared that the constitutional requirement of due process of law could be enforced by this court where, in depriving a party of a state office, there had been a plain and substantial departure from the fundamental principles upon which our government is based.

1207

It thus appears that in four cases, heretofore decided, this court has proceeded upon the ground that to deprive one without due process of law of an office created under the laws of a state, presented a case under the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of which we could take cognizance and inquire whether there had been due process of law.

Nothing to the contrary was decided in the Sawyer Case, 124 U. S. 220, 31 L. ed. 409, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482. That case contains no suggestion that an office is not property. The only point there in judgment was that a court of equity could not control the appointment or removal of public officers. The court said: "The reasons which preclude a court of equity from interfering with the appointment or removal of public officers of the government from which the court derives its authority apply with increased force when the court is a court of the United States and the officers in question are officers of a state." But care was taken further to say: "If a person claiming to be such an officer is, by the judgment of a court of the state, either in appellate proceedings, or upon a mandamus or quo warranto, denied any right secured to him by the Constitution of the United States, he can obtain relief by a writ of error from this court." So that the Sawyer Case directly supports [598] the proposition that the judgment *of the highest court of a state depriving one of a state office may be re-examined here, if the incumbent has specially claimed that he has been deprived of it without due process of law. That the point adjudged in Sawyer's Case was as I have stated is seen from the opinion in White v. Berry, 171 U. S. 366, 43 L. ed. 199, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 917, in which it was said: "But the court in its opinion in that case observed that under the Constitution and laws of the United States the distinction between common law and equity, as existing in England at the time of the separation of the two countries, had been maintained although both jurisdictions were vested in the same courts, and held that a court of equity had no jurisdiction over the appointment and removal of public officers, and that to sustain a bill in equity to restrain or relieve against proceedings for the removal of public officers would invade the domain of the courts of common law, or of the executive and administrative departments of the government."

Notwithstanding the above adjudications, the decision to-day is that this court has no jurisdiction, under any circumstances, to inquire whether a citizen has been deprived, without due process of law, of an office held by him under the Constitution and laws of his state. If the contest between the one holding the office and the person seeking to hold it is determinable by the legislature in a prescribed mode, this court, it appears, cannot inquire whether that mode was pursued nor interfere for the protection of the incumbent, even where the final action of the legislature was confessedly capricious and arbitrary, inconsistent with the fundamental doctrines upon which our government is based and the recognized principles that belong to due process of law, and not resting, in any degree, on evidence. If the Kentucky legislature had wholly disregarded the mode prescribed by the statutes of that commonwealth, and without appointing a board of contest composed of its own members, had, by joint resolution simply—without any evidence whatever or without notice to Taylor and without giving him an opportunity to be heard—declared Goebel to be governor, this court, as we are informed by the decision just rendered, would be without jurisdiction to protect the incumbent, *for the [599] reason, as is now adjudged, that the office in dispute is not "property" within the meaning of the 14th Amendment. So that while we may inquire whether a citizen's land, worth $100, or his mules, have been taken from him by the legislative or judicial authorities of his state without due process of law, we may not inquire whether the legislative or judicial authorities of a state have, without due process of law, ousted one lawfully elected and holding the office of governor for a fixed term, with a salary payable at stated times, and put into his place one whom the people had said should not exercise the authority appertaining to that high position. It was long ago adjudged by the court of appeals of Kentucky that an office was "a valuable right and interest." Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 672. In Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush, 735, the same court, referring to the provision in the Constitution of Kentucky depriving any person who fought a duel of the right to hold an office, said: It "is, in effect, to dispossess him of a right which the Supreme Court of the United States terms 'inalienable' ([Cummings v. Missouri], 4 Wall. 321, 18 L. ed. 362), to take from him 'rights, privileges, and immunities' to which he had been entitled, . . . and to strip him of one of the highest and most valued attributes of citizenship. . . . The word 'deprived' is used in this section in the same sense in which it is used in section 12 of the Bill of Rights and in the 5th Article of Amendment to the Federal Constitution."

When the 14th Amendment forbade any state from depriving any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, I had supposed that the intention of the people of the United States was to prevent the deprivation of any legal right in violation of the fundamental guarantees inhering in due process of law. The prohibitions of that Amendment, as we have often said, apply to all the instrumentalities of the state, to its legislative, executive, and judicial authorities; and therefore it has become a settled doctrine in the constitutional jurisprudence of this country that "whoever by virtue of public position under a state government deprives another of property, life, or liberty without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional *inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the state, and is clothed with the state's power, his act is that of the state. This must be so, or [as we have often said] the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the state has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it." Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. ed. 676; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108. Alluding to a contention that the party—a railroad company—which invoked the 14th Amendment for the protection of its property, had the benefit of due process of law in the proceedings against it, because it had due notice of those proceedings and was admitted to appear and make defense, this court has also said: "But a state may not, by any of its agencies, disregard the prohibitions of the 14th Amendment. Its judicial authorities may keep within the letter of the statute prescribing forms of procedure in the courts and give the parties interested the fullest opportunity to be heard, and yet it might be that its final action would be inconsistent with that Amendment. In determining what is due process of law regard must be had to substance, and not to form." Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581. Again, in another case: "Though the law itself be fair on its face and impartial in appearance, yet if it is applied and administered by public authority with an evil eye and an unequal hand . . . it is still within the prohibition of the Constitution." Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 373, 30 L. ed. 227, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064. See also Henderson v. New York, 92 U. S. 259, sub nom. Henderson v. Wickham, 23 L. ed. 543; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. ed. 567; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730.

It is said that the courts cannot, in any case, go behind the final action of the legislature to ascertain whether that which was done was consistent with rights claimed under the Federal Constitution. If this be true then it is in the power of the state legislature to override the supreme law of the land. As long ago as Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U. S. 97, 102, 24 L. ed. 616, 618, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Miller, said: "Can a state make anything due process of law which, by its own legislation, it chooses to declare such? To affirm this is to hold that the prohibition to the states is of no [601] avail, or has no application *where the invasion of private rights is effected under the forms of state legislation." More recently we have said: "The idea that any legislature, state or Federal, can conclusively determine for the people and for the courts that what it enacts in the form of law, or what it authorizes its agents to do, is consistent with the fundamental law, is in opposition to the theory of our institutions. The duty rests upon all courts, Federal and state, when their jurisdiction is properly invoked, to see to it that no right secured by the supreme law of the land is impaired or destroyed by legislation. The function and duty of the judiciary distinguishes the American system from all other systems of government. The perpetuity of our institutions and the liberty which is enjoyed under them depend, in no small degree, upon the power given the judiciary to declare null and void all legislation that is clearly repugnant to the supreme law of the land." Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 42 L. ed. 819, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 418.

178 U. S. U. S., Book 44.

I had supposed that the principles announced in the cases above cited were firmly established in the jurisprudence of this court, and that, if applied, they would serve to protect every right that could be brought within judicial cognizance against deprivation in violation of due process of law.

It seems, however,—if I do not misapprehend the scope of the decision now rendered,—that under our system of government the right of a person to exercise a state office to which he has been lawfully chosen by popular vote may, so far as the Constitution of the United States is concerned, be taken from him by the arbitrary action of a state legislature, in utter disregard of the principle that Anglo-Saxon freemen have for centuries deemed to be essential in the requirement of due process of law—a principle reaffirmed in the Kentucky Bill of Rights, which declares that "absolute and arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen exists nowhere in a Republic, not even in the largest majority." § 2. I cannot assent to the interpretation now given to the 14th Amendment.

Let us look at the question from another standpoint. The requirement of due process of law is applicable to the United States as well as to the states; for the 5th Amendment—which all agree is a limitation on the authority of Federal agencies—*declares that [602] "no person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." If Congress by some enactment should attempt, in violation of due process of law, to deprive one of an office held by him under the United States, will not the decision this day rendered compel this court to declare that such office is not property within the meaning of the 5th Amendment, and therefore the incumbent would be without remedy unless he could invoke the protection of some other clause of the Constitution than the one in the Amendment relating to due process of law? Or, would the court hold that while a Federal office is property within the meaning of the clause in the 5th Amendment declaring that "no person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," a state office is not property within the meaning of the clause in the 14th Amendment declaring, "nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law?" Can it be that Congress may not deprive one of a Federal office without due process of law, but that a state may deprive one of a state office without due process of law?

I stand by the former rulings of this court in the cases above cited. I am of opinion that, equally with tangible property that may be bought and sold in the market, an office—certainly one established by the Constitution of a state, to which office a salary is attached, and which cannot be abolished at the will of the legislature—is, in the highest sense, property of which the incumbent cannot be deprived arbitrarily in disregard of due process of law; that is, as this court said in Kennard v. Louisiana, in disregard of the "rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights." Apart from every other consideration, the right to receive and enjoy the salary attached to such an office is a right of property. And a right of property should be deemed property, unless we mean to play with words, and regard form rather than substance.

[603] I go farther. The liberty of which the 14th Amendment forbids a state from depriving anyone without due process of law is something more than freedom from the enslavement of the body or from physical restraint. In my judgment the *words "life, liberty, or property" in the 14th Amendment should be interpreted as embracing every right that may be brought within judicial cognizance, and therefore no right of that kind can be taken in violation of "due process of law."

In Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 41 L. ed. 832, 835, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427, this court unanimously held that the liberty mentioned in the 14th Amendment "means not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or avocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned."

Judge Cooley, speaking for the supreme court of Michigan in People ex rel. Le Roy v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103, after observing that some things were too plain to be written, said: "Mr. Justice Story has well shown that constitutional freedom means something more than liberty permitted; it consists in the civil and political rights which are absolutely guaranteed, assured, and guarded; in one's liberties, as a man and a citizen—his right to vote, his right to hold office, his right to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, his equality with all others who are his fellow citizens; all these guarded and protected and not held at the mercy and discretion of any one man or of any popular majority. Story, Miscellaneous Writings, 620. If these are not now the absolute rights of the people of Michigan, they may be allowed more liberty of action and more privileges, but they are little nearer to constitutional freedom than Europe was when an imperial city sent out consuls to govern it."

The doctrine that liberty means something more than freedom from physical restraint is well illustrated in Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627, in which it was said that although the right of suffrage comes from the state, yet when granted it will be protected, and he "who has it can only be deprived of it by due process of law."

What more directly involves the liberty of the citizen than *to be able to enter upon the [604] discharge of the duties of an office to which he has been lawfully elected by his fellow citizens? What more certainly infringes upon his liberty than for the legislature of the state, by merely arbitrary action, in violation of the rules and forms required by due process of law, to take from him the right to discharge the public duties imposed upon him by his fellow citizens in accordance with law? Can it be that the right to pursue a lawful calling is a part of one's liberty secured by the 14th Amendment against illegal deprivation; and yet the right to exercise an office to which one has been elected and into which he has been lawfully inducted is no part of the incumbent's liberty, and may be disregarded by the mere edict of a legislative body, sitting under a Constitution which declares that absolute arbitrary power exists nowhere in a Republic? Can it be that the right to vote, once given, cannot, under the 14th Amendment, be taken away except by due process of law,—and it was so decided in Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627,—and yet that the right of the person voted for to hold and exercise the functions of the office to which he was elected can, without violating that Amendment, be taken away without due process of law? Does the liberty of an American embrace his right to vote without discrimination against him on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and yet not embrace his right to serve in a position of public trust to which he has been lawfully called by his fellow citizens who voted for him? The liberty of which I am speaking is that which exists, and which can exist, only under a republican form of government. "The United States," the supreme law of the land declares, "shall guarantee to every state in this Union a republican form of government." And "the distinguishing feature of that form," this court has said, "is the right of the people to choose their own officers for governmental administration, and pass their own laws in virtue of the legislative power reposed in representative bodies, whose legitimate acts may be said to be those of the people themselves." Re Duncan, 139 U. S. 461, sub nom. Duncan v. McCall, 35 L. ed. 224, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573. But of what value is that right if the person selected by [605] the people at the polls for an office provided for by the Constitution, and holding a certificate *of election, may be deprived of that office by the arbitrary action of the legislature proceeding altogether without evidence?

I grant that it is competent for a state to provide for the determination of contested election cases by the legislature. All that I now seek to maintain is the proposition that when a state legislature deals with a matter within its jurisdiction, and which involves the life, liberty, or property of the citizen, it cannot ignore the requirement of due process of law. What due process of law may require in particular cases may not be applicable in other cases. The essential principle is that the state shall not by any of its agencies destroy or impair any right appertaining to life, liberty, or property in violation of the principles upon which the requirement of due process of law rests. That requirement is "a restraint on the legislative as well as on the executive and judicial powers of the government." Den ex dem. Murray v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co. 18 How. 272, 276, 15 L. ed. 372, 374; Scott v. McNeal, 154 U. S. 34, 38 L. ed. 896, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1108; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 41 L. ed. 979, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581. "That government can scarcely be deemed to be free," this court has said, "where the rights of property are left solely dependent upon the will of a legislative body without any restraint." Wilkinson v. Leland, 2 Pet. 627, 7 L. ed. 542.

It is to be regretted that it should be deemed necessary in a case like this to depart from the principles heretofore announced and acted upon by this court.

Looking into the record before us, I find such action taken by the body claiming to be organized as the lawful legislature of Kentucky as was discreditable in the last degree and unworthy of the free people whom it professed to represent. The statute required the board of contest to give "true judgment" on the case, "according to the evidence." And when the statute further declared that the decision of the board should be reported to the two houses "for the future action of the general assembly," that such decision should not be "final and conclusive," and that the general assembly should determine the contest, it meant, of course, that such determination should rest upon the issues made by the parties and upon the evidence adduced before the board of contest. If the evidence had been before the legislature it would have been physically im-[606] possible *to have examined it; for, as we have seen, its final action was taken immediately after the board of contest reported its decision. But, as heretofore stated, the evidence before the board was not transmitted to the legislature, nor were the grounds upon which the board proceeded disclosed. Yet the body which assumed to determine who had been elected governor, without having before it one particle of the proof taken upon the issues made by the notice of contest, "adjudged" that Goebel had been legally elected governor of Kentucky. No such farce under the guise of formal proceedings was ever enacted in the presence of a free people who take pride in the fact that our American governments are governments of laws and not of men. That which was done was not equivalent to a decision or judgment or determination by the legislature of a matter committed to it by law. It should be regarded merely as an exercise of arbitrary power by a given number of men who defied the law. It is not a pleasant thing to say—but after a thorough examination of the record a sense of duty constrains me to say—that the declaration by that body of men that Goebel was legally elected ought not to be respected in any court as a determination of the question in issue, but should be regarded only as action taken outside of law, in utter contempt of the constitutional right of freemen to select their rulers. They had no jurisdiction to determine the contest for governor except upon the evidence introduced before the board of contest, and in the absence of such evidence they were without authority to declare anything except that Taylor's right to the office of governor, based upon the certificate awarded him, had not been impaired. Their determination of the contest without having the evidence before them could have no greater effect in law than if the issue had been determined simply by a joint resolution, without taking proof or without notifying or hearing the parties interested.
178 U. S.

It is to be also said that a fair interpretation of the record leads irresistibly to the conclusion that the body of men referred to were wholly indifferent as to the nature of the evidence adduced before the board of contest, and that there was a fixed purpose on their part, whatever the facts might be, to *put Goebel into office and to oust Taylor. [607] Under the evidence in the case no result favorable to Goebel could have been reached on any ground upon which the board of contest or the legislature had jurisdiction to act. The Constitution of Kentucky, as we have seen, declares that "the person having the highest number of votes shall be governor." And the statute provides that the person returned having received the highest number of legal votes given "shall be adjudged to be the person elected and entitled to the office." With the Constitution and the statutes of the state before him when preparing his notice to Taylor of contest, Goebel, it is true, did claim in very general terms that he was legally and rightfully elected; but he took care not to say—there is reason to believe that he purposely avoided saying—that he had received the highest number of legal votes case for governor. The evidence renders it clear that the declaration that he had received the highest number of legal votes cast was in total disregard of the facts—a declaration as extravagant as one adjudging that white was black, or that black was white. But such a declaration made by the body to which the board of contest reported should not surprise anyone when it is remembered that it came from those who did not have before them any of the proof taken in the case and were willing to act without proof. Those who composed that body seemed to have shut their eyes against the proof for fear that it would compel them to respect the popular will as expressed at the polls. Indignant, as naturally they were and should have been, at the assassination of their leader, they proceeded in defiance of all the forms of law and in contempt of the principles upon which free governments rest, to avenge that terrible crime by committing another crime, namely, the destruction by arbitrary methods of the right of the people to choose their chief magistrate. The former crime, if the offender be discovered, can be punished as directed by law. The latter should not be rewarded by a declaration of the inability of the judiciary to protect public and private rights, and thereby the rights of voters, against the wilful, arbitrary action of a legislative tribunal which, we must assume from the record, deliberately acted upon a contested election case involving the [608] rights *of the people and of their chosen representative in the office of governor without looking into the evidence upon which alone any lawful determination of the case could be made. The assassination of an individual demands the severest punishment which it is competent for human laws in a free land to prescribe. But the overturning of the public will, as expressed at the ballot box, without evidence or against evidence, in order to accomplish partisan ends, is a crime against free government, and deserves the execration of all lovers of liberty. Judge Burnam, speaking for himself and Judge Guffy in the court of appeals of Kentucky, although compelled, in his view of the law, to hold the action of the legislature to be conclusive, said: "It is hard to imagine a more flagrant and partisan disregard of the modes of procedure which should govern a judicial tribunal in the determination of a great and important issue than is made manifest by the facts alleged and relied on by the contestees, and admitted by the demurrer filed in this action to be true, and I am firmly convinced, both from these admitted facts and from knowledge of the current history of these transactions, that the general assembly, in the heat of anger, engendered by the intense partisan excitement which was at the time prevailing, have done two faithful, conscientious, and able public servants an irreparable injury in depriving them of the offices to which they were elected by the people of this commonwealth, and a still greater wrong has been done a large majority of the electors of this commonwealth, who voted under difficult circumstances to elect these gentlemen to act as their servants in the discharge of the duties of these great offices." I cannot believe that the judiciary is helpless in the presence of such a crime. The person elected, as well as the people who elected him, have rights that the courts may protect. To say that in such an emergency the judiciary cannot interfere is to subordinate right to mere power, and to recognize the legislature of a state as above the supreme law of the land. The Constitution of Kentucky expressly forbids the exercise of absolute and arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, or property of freemen. And that principle is at the very foundation of the government of the Union. Indeed, to sustain that principle our *fathers waged the war for independence and established the Constitution of the United States. Yet by the decision this day rendered, no redress can be had in the courts when a legislative body, or one recognized as such by the courts, without due process of law, by the exercise of absolute, arbitrary power, and without evidence, takes an office having a fixed salary attached thereto from one who has been lawfully elected to such office by the voters of the state at a regular election. The doctrine of legislative absolutism is foreign to free government as it exists in this country. The cornerstone of our republican institutions is the principle that the powers of government shall, in all vital particulars, be distributed among three separate co-ordinate departments, legislative, executive, and judicial. And liberty regulated by law cannot be permanently secured against the assaults of power or the tyranny of a majority, if the judiciary must be silent when rights existing independently of human sanction, or acquired under the law, are at the mercy of legislative action taken in violation of due process of law.

Other grounds are disclosed by the record which support the general proposition that the declaration by the body referred to, that Goebel received the highest number of legal votes cast and was entitled to the office of governor, ought not to be regarded as valid, much less conclusive, upon the courts. But as those grounds have not been discussed by this court, and as it declines to determine the case upon the merits as disclosed by the evidence, I will not extend this opinion by commenting on them.

What has been said in this opinion as to the contest for governor applies to the contest for lieutenant governor.

I am of opinion that the writ of error should not have been dismissed, and that the court should have adjudged that the decree below took from Taylor and Marshall rights protected by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States.

*WILLIAM S. TAYLOR and John Marshall, [610]
Plffs. in Err.,
v.

J. C. W. BECKHAM.

(See S. C. Reporter's ed. 610.)

[No. 604.]

[N ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Kentucky.

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller: These were suits in equity brought by Taylor and Marshall against Beckham, and one Carter, asserting himself to be the president pro tempore of the senate of Kentucky, with the right to preside over that body though Marshall was present, in which complainants prayed for injunctions restraining defendants from interfering with complainants in their offices. These suits were heard with the case of Taylor v. Beckham, just decided. 178 U. S. 548, ante, 1187, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 890. When the circuit court of Jefferson county reached the conclusion that Beckham was entitled to the office of governor and entered judgment of ouster, it dismissed the suits. From the decrees appeals were taken to the court of appeals of Kentucky, where they were affirmed, and thereafter a writ of error from this court was allowed. It results from the conclusions announced in the preceding case that the writ of error must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

178 U. S.

Mr. Justice McKenna concurs in the result.

1213

MEMORANDA

OF

CASES DISPOSED OF WITHOUT OPINIONS.

[611]*WILLIAM BOYLE, Plaintiff in Error, v. BARTLETT SINCLAIR. [No. 402.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Idaho.

Mr. William A. Maury for plaintiff in error. Mr. Samuel H. Hays for defendant in error.

May 14, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on the authority of Wales v. Whitney, 114 U. S. 564, 29 L. ed. 277, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1050.

PIN KWAN, Petitioner, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 609.]

Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

April 30, 1900. Granted.

PING YIK, Petitioner, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 610.]

Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

April 30, 1900. Granted.

CENTRAL TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Petitioner, v. INDIANA & LAKE MICHIGAN RAILWAY COMPANY et al. [No. 594.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Messrs. A. L. Mason, A. H. Joline, and Henry Crawford for petitioner. Messrs. Lawrence Maxwell, Jr., and S. O. Pickens for respondents.

April 30, 1900. Denied.

MICHAEL O'BRIEN et al., Executors, etc., Petitioners, v. JOHN G. WHELOCK et al. [No. 588.]

Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

May 14, 1900. Granted.

NATIONAL BANK OF BALTIMORE, Petitioner, v. BRUNSWICK TERMINAL COMPANY et al. [No. 571.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Messrs. William A. Fisher and Allan M. Lane for petitioner. Mr. Henry W. Williams for respondents.

May 14, 1900. Denied.

178 U. S.

*GUARANTEE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA, [612] Petitioner, v. MECHANICS' SAVINGS BANK & TRUST COMPANY, ETC. [No. 617.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

May 14, 1900. Granted.

SUN PRINTING & PUBLISHING ASSOCIATION, Petitioner, v. WILLIAM L. MOORE. [No. 618.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

May 14, 1900. Granted.

MELLE S. T. WERNER, Petitioner, v. WILLIAM R. HEARST. [No. 619.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Mr. Roger M. Sherman for petitioner. Mr. Frederic D. McKenney for respondent.

May 14, 1900. Denied.

CITY OF LAMPASAS, Petitioner, v. JAMES TALCOTT. [No. 591.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Mr. Clarence H. Miller for petitioner. No opposition.

May 14, 1900. Denied.

MARY B. HOOK, Petitioner, v. MERCANTILE TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK et al. [No. 621.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Messrs. William Brown, S. P. Wheeler, and E. P. Kirby for petitioner. Messrs. Bluford Wilson and Philip Barton Warren for respondents.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

ISABELLA BENZ, Petitioner, v. ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY. [No. 622.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Messrs. Don M. Dickinson and T. B. Turley for petitioner. Mr. J. M. Dickinson for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

HOLZAPFELS COMPOSITIONS COMPANY, LIMITED, Petitioner, v. RAHTJENS AMERICAN COMPOSITIONS COMPANY. [No. 626.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

May 21, 1900. Granted.

CHARLES M. OWEN et al., Petitioners, v. EUGENE E. JONES, Receiver, etc. [No. 629.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

[613] *Messrs. J. J. Darlington and Charles A. Douglass for petitioners. Mr. Alex. C. King for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

JACOB P. SMITH, Petitioner, v. ANDREW J. PACKARD. [No. 630.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Messrs. A. B. Browne, and Frank F. Reed for petitioner. Mr. Leroy D. Thoman for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF THE COUNTY OF LAKE, COLO., Petitioner, v. JAMES R. SUTLIFF. [No. 632.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

May 21, 1900. Granted.

CITY OF NEW YORK et al., Petitioners, v. JAMES C. E. D'ESTERRE. [No. 637.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Mr. George L. Sterling for petitioners. Mr. Henry B. B. Stapler for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

NATIONAL BANK OF COMMERCE OF KANSAS CITY, MO., Petitioner, v. EDWARD A. HOBBS. [No. 638.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Messrs. Omar Powell and Elijah Robinson for petitioner. Messrs. Charles E. Patterson and Alpheus T. Bulkeley for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

NORTHERN ASSURANCE COMPANY, OF LONDON, ENGLAND, Petitioner, v. GRAND VIEW BUILDING ASSOCIATION. [No. 639.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

May 21, 1900. Granted.

FRANK M. DORSEY, Petitioner, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 640.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

Messrs. J. M. Wilson and A. A. Hoehling, Jr., for petitioner. Solicitor General Richards for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

THOMAS ROY, Master, etc., Petitioner, v. SHIPS WATERLOO AND GLENALVON. [No. 641.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Messrs. John F. Lewis and Horace L. Cheyney for petitioner. Mr. J. Rodman Paul for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

THOMAS ROY, Master, etc., Petitioner, v. GIRARD POINT STORAGE COMPANY. [No. 642.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Messrs. John F. Lewis and Horace L. Cheyney for petitioner. Mr. John Hampton Barnes for respondent.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

UNITED STATES REPAIR & GUARANTY COMPANY, Petitioner, v. ASSYRIAN ASPHALT COMPANY. [No. 643.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

May 21, 1900. Granted.

SARAH R. ANGLE, Administratrix, etc., et al., Petitioners, v. CHICAGO, ST. PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS, & OMAHA RAILWAY COMPANY et al. [No. 647.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Messrs. Milton I. Southard, F. J. Lamb, and Burr W. Jones for petitioners.

Messrs. Thomas Wilson and S. A. Lynde for respondents.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

LAKE STREET ELEVATED RAILROAD COMPANY, Petitioner, v. FARMERS' LOAN & TRUST COMPANY et al. [No. 648.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

Mr. Clarence Knight for petitioner. Messrs. Herbert B. Turner, William Burry, John J. Herrick, and Monroe L. Willard for respondents.

May 21, 1900. Denied.

UNITED STATES, Petitioner, v. AMERICAN STEAMSHIP LAURADA, ETC. [No. 650.]
Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

May 21, 1900. Granted. Mr. Justice McKenna took no part in the consideration or decision of this application.

CITY OF NEW ORLEANS, Petitioner, v. ANN WARNER et al. [No. 649.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

May 28, 1900. Granted.

[615]*LEWIS J. YEAGER, Petitioner, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 655.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Messrs. H. J. May and F. Edward Mitchell for petitioner. Solicitor General Richards for respondent.

May 28, 1900. Denied.

WALTER BIRD, Petitioner, v. STEPHEN P. HALSEY. [No. 656.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Mr. F. S. Kirkpatrick for petitioner. Mr. John W. Daniel for respondent.

May 28, 1900. Denied.

AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY, Petitioner, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 583.]

Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

May 28, 1900. Granted.

TENTH RULE.

TOWNSHIP OF GARFIELD et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. LEWIS A. RILEY. [No. 75.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas.

Mr. W. Littlefield for plaintiffs in error. No counsel for defendant in error.

October 24, 1899. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

GEORGE WEBSTER, Appellant, v. R. D. SPECK, Sheriff, etc. [No. 443.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Washington.

Mr. James Hamilton Lewis for appellant. No counsel opposed.

January 8, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

178 U. S.

TOWNSHIP OF GARFIELD, FINNEY COUNTY, KANSAS, et al., Plaintiffs in Error and Appellants, v. C. H. POTTER & Co. [No. 111.]

In Error to and Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Kansas.

Mr. W. Littlefield for plaintiffs in error and appellants. No counsel for defendants in error and appellees.

January 17, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

G. W. BOYD et al., Appellants, v. J. L. SWEET, County Treasurer, et al. [No. 133.]

Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. Horace Speed for appellants. Messrs. Harper S. Cunningham, Charles Dick, and F. C. Bryan for appellees.

January 29, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

BESSIE BARNETT, Appellant, v. JOSEPH BARNETT. [No. 144.]

Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico.

Messrs. F. W. Clancy and Thomas A. Finical for appellant. Mr. W. B. Childers for appellee.

January 31, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

JOHANNA QUIRK, Appellant, v. WILLIAM W. LIEBERT. [No. 146.]

Appeal from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Messrs. Robert Andrews and J. Miller Kenyon for appellant. Messrs. F. L. Williams, James S. Edwards, and Job Barnard for appellee.

February 1, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

BENJAMIN LOMBARD, JR., Plaintiff in Error, v. B. F. McMILLAN et al. [No. 147.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. Louis A. Pradt for plaintiff in error. Messrs. T. C. Ryan, M. A. Hurley, and W. H. Mylrea for defendants in error.

February 1, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

WAPLES PLATTER CO. et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. C. W. TURNER. [No. 151.]

In Error to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

Mr. Arthur G. Moseley for plaintiffs in error. Mr. Wm. T. Hutchings for defendant in error.

February 1, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

1217

D. L. BOYD et al., Appellants, v. United STATES. [No. 161.]

Appeal from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

Mr. R. R. McMahon for appellants. The Attorney General for appellee.

February 2, 1900. Dismissed, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

ANNIE R. KEAN, Plaintiff in Error, v. EDWARD ROBY et al. [No. 98.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana.

Mr. William P. Fennell for plaintiff in error. Messrs. Edward Roby, W. H. H. Miller, and J. B. Elam for defendants in error.

February 26, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

FRED MILLER BREWING COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. W. M. STEVENS et al. [No. 173.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa.

Mr. Henry J. Taylor for plaintiff in error. No counsel for defendants in error.

March 2, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

WILLIAM PELZER, Petitioner, v. HORN & BRANNEN MANUFACTURING COMPANY. [No. 196.]

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

Mr. Richard N. Dyer for petitioner. Mr. Hector T. Fenton for respondent.

March 14, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

J. H. HAMPSON, Appellant, v. FRANK DY-SART. [No. 205.]

Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Arizona.

Mr. W. H. Barnes for appellant. No counsel for appellee.

March 19, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

A. H. BISHOP, etc., Appellant, v. EXCELSIOR NEEDLE COMPANY et al. [No. 221.]

Appeal from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Mr. Joseph V. Graff for appellant. Messrs. J. M. Flower, F. J. Smith, and Harrison Musgrave for appellees.

March 21, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

J. W. GOODSON, Appellant, v. J. S. RALEY et al. [No. 224.]

Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Georgia.

Mr. Clifford Anderson for appellant. No counsel for appellees.

March 22, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

1218

JOSEPH B. GLENN et al., Appellants, v. CHOCTAW NATION. [No. 226.]

Appeal from the United States Court in the Indian Territory.

Messrs. Yancey Lewis, W. W. Dudley, and L. T. Michener for appellants. No counsel for appellee.

March 22, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

HAZEN S. PINGREE, Plaintiff in Error, v. MICHIGAN CENTRAL RAILROAD COMPANY. [No. 230.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Michigan.

Mr. Fred A. Maynard for plaintiff in error. No counsel for defendant in error.

March 23, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

GLENN TUCKER et al., Appellants, v. CHOCTAW NATION. [No. 231.]

Appeal from the United States Court in the Indian Territory.

Mr. J. C. Hodges for appellants. No counsel for appellee.

March 23, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

BLANCHE I. HARRISON et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. FRANKLIN J. MORTON. [No. 223.]

In Error to the Court of Appeals of the State of Maryland.

Mr. R. H. Spencer for plaintiffs in error. Mr. Edgar H. Gans for defendant in error.

April 16, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

JAMES C. BERRYHILL et al., Appellants, v. MUSKOGEE NATION. [No. 252.]

Appeal from the United States Court in the Indian Territory.

Mr. George P. M. Turner for appellants. No counsel for appellee.

April 17, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

MISSOURI, KANSAS, & TEXAS RAILWAY COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. IRA STEINBERGER. [No. 254.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Kansas.

Messrs. James Hagerman and T. N. Sedgwick for plaintiff in error. No counsel for defendant in error.

April 17, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

RACHEL GARDINER et al., Appellants, v. CREEK NATION. [No. 282.]

Appeal from the United States Court in the Indian Territory.

Mr. Napoleon B. Maxcey for appellants. No counsel for appellee.

April 27, 1900. Dismissed with costs, pursuant to the 10th Rule.

178 U. S.

NINETEENTH RULE.

JOHN A. GORDON, Appellant, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 25.]

Appeal from the Court of Claims.

Messrs. John Paul Jones and F. P. Dewees for appellant. The Attorney General for appellee.

October 11, 1899. Dismissed, pursuant to the 19th Rule.

TWENTY-EIGHTH RULE.

GEORGE DEER IN WATER, Appellant, v. LEO E. BENNETT, U. S. Marshal. [No. 159.]

Appeal from the United States Court in the Indian Territory.

Messrs. Wm. T. Hutchings, Wm. P. Thompson, and Yancey Lewis for appellant. Solicitor General Richards for appellee.

June 22, 1899. Dismissed, pursuant to the 28th Rule.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ST. LOUIS, ALTON, & SPRINGFIELD R. Co. et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. SETH F. CREWS et al. [No. 321.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois.

Mr. Eleneious Smith for plaintiffs in error. Mr. Frederic D. McKenney for defendants in error.

June 2, 1899. Docketed and dismissed.

BARK "LORENZO" AND CARGO v. UNITED STATES. [No. 323.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Florida.

No counsel for appellant. The Attorney General for appellee.

June 5, 1899. Docketed and dismissed.

UNITED STATES, Appellant, v. THOMAS B. CATRON et al. [No. 34.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

The Attorney General for appellant. Mr. T. B. Catron for appellees.

October 10, 1899. Dismissed, per stipulation, on motion of Assistant Attorney General Hoyt for the appellant.

ANDREW B. BAIRD et al., Appellants, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 418.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

No counsel for appellants. The Attorney General for appellee.

October 10, 1899. Docketed and dismissed, on motion of Assistant Attorney General Hoyt for the appellee.

HARPER S. CUNNINGHAM, Appellant, v. UNITED STATES NATIONAL BANK et al. [No. 154.]

Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. Harper S. Cunningham for appellant. Mr. Horace Speed for appellees.

October 11, 1899. Dismissed with costs, on motion of the appellant.

178 U. S.

SIMON F. MACKIE, Appellant, v. BRICKYARD GOLD MINING COMPANY et al. [No. 416.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Utah.

Mr. A. T. Schroeder for appellant. Mr. S. M. Stockslager for appellees.

October 30, 1899. Dismissed, each party to pay its own costs, on motion of Mr. S. M. Stockslager for the appellees.

ROBERT L. TAYLOR et al., Appellants, v. NASHVILLE, CHATTANOOGA, & ST. LOUIS RAILWAY. [No. 179.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Middle District of Tennessee.

Messrs. G. W. Pickle and Wm. L. Granbury for appellants. Mr. J. M. Dickinson for appellee.

October 30, 1899. Dismissed, per stipulation, on motion of Mr. J. M. Dickinson for the appellee.

DAYTON TRACTION COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. AMY R. CAMPBELL. [No. 129.]

In Error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Ohio.

Mr. E. W. Kittredge for plaintiff in error. Mr. Charles W. Baker for defendant in error.

November 1, 1899. Dismissed with costs, on motion of counsel for plaintiff in error.

THOMAS G. HARDIE et al., Appellants, v. EQUITABLE SECURITIES COMPANY. [No. 163.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Arkansas.

Mr. S. R. Cockrill for appellants. No counsel for appellee.

November 10, 1899. Dismissed with costs, on the authority of counsel for the appellants.

PATRICK CAHILL et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. C. H. BENSON et al. [No. 112.]

In Error to the Court of Civil Appeals of the Fifth Supreme Judicial District of the State of Texas.

Mr. F. M. Etheridge for plaintiffs in error. No counsel for defendants in error.

December 4, 1899. Dismissed with costs, on authority of counsel for plaintiffs in error.

JOHN A. POST et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY. [No. 358.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. Wm. H. Carroll for plaintiffs in error. No counsel for defendant in error.

December 4, 1899. Dismissed with costs, on authority of counsel for plaintiffs in error.

LOGANSPOUT & WABASH VALLEY GAS COMPANY, Appellant, v. CITY OF PERU. [No. 175.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana.

Mr. Ferd. Winter for appellant. Mr. W. H. H. Miller for appellee.

December 11, 1899. Decree reversed, at the cost of the appellant, and cause remanded for further proceedings, per stipulation of counsel, on motion of Mr. W. H. H. Miller for the appellee.

CHICAGO & EASTERN ILLINOIS RAILROAD COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. STATE OF INDIANA ex rel. WILLIAM A. KETCHAM, Attorney General. [No. 437.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Indiana.

Mr. W. H. Lyford for plaintiff in error. Mr. W. L. Taylor for defendant in error.

January 8, 1900. Dismissed, per stipulation of counsel.

HELEN DOUGLASS, Appellant, v. LEWIS H. DOUGLAS et al. [No. 99.]

Appeal from the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Messrs. B. F. Leighton, George Frances Williams, and W. H. H. Hart for appellant. Messrs. John Ridout, E. H. Thomas, and E. M. Hewlett for appellees.

January 8, 1900. Dismissed with costs, per stipulation of counsel, on motion of Mr. B. F. Leighton for the appellant.

NANCY B. HARGROVE et al., Appellants, v. CHEROKEE NATION. [No. 239.]

Appeal from the United States Court in the Indian Territory.

Mr. Heber J. May for appellants. No counsel for appellee.

January 15, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on motion of Mr. Heber J. May for the appellants.

THOMAS L. CLINKENBEARD et al., Appellants, v. CHEROKEE NATION. [No. 240.]

Appeal from the United States Court in the Indian Territory.

Mr. Heber J. May for appellants. No counsel for appellee.

January 15, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on motion of Mr. Heber J. May for the appellants.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF PRESQUE ISLE COUNTY, Plaintiff in Error, v. WILLIAM J. ASHLEY. [No. 197.]

In Error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Michigan.

Mr. Henry M. Duffield for plaintiff in error. Mr. C. E. Warner for defendant in error.

January 17, 1900. Dismissed, per stipulation.

1220

S. DUFFIELD MITCHELL, Trustee, etc., Plaintiff in Error, v. J. McD. SCOTT, Bankrupt. [No. 236.]

In Error to the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Thomas Patterson and S. D. Mitchell for plaintiff in error. No counsel for defendant in error.

January 22, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on authority of counsel for the plaintiff in error.

S. R. PHELPS et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. S. J. JOHNSON, as Administrator, etc., et al. [No. 162.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Arkansas.

Messrs. John P. Kellas and J. H. Ralston for plaintiffs in error. Messrs. U. M. Rose and G. B. Rose for defendants in error.

January 26, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on the authority of counsel for the plaintiffs in error.

ROBERT BERGER, Appellant, v. JAMES PEASE, Sheriff, etc. [No. 118.]

Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois.

Mr. Levy Mayer for appellant. Charles S. Dcneen for appellee.

January 29, 1900. Order affirmed with costs, on the authority of Markuson v. Boucher, 175 U. S. 184, ante, 124, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 76; Baker v. Grice, 169 U. S. 284, 42 L. ed. 748, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 323; Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 43 L. ed. 91, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 805, and cases cited.

JOSEPHINE BURNETT et al. Plaintiffs in Error, v. COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. [No. 140.]

In Error to the Superior Court of the State of Massachusetts.

Messrs. W. S. B. Hopkins and William Warren Vaughan for plaintiffs in error. Mr. Hosea M. Knowlton for defendant in error.

January 30, 1900. Dismissed, per stipulation.

CROWN CORK & SEAL COMPANY OF BALTIMORE CITY, Plaintiff in Error, v. JOHN F. PARLETT, City Collector. [No. 136.]

In Error to the Court of Appeals of the State of Maryland.

Mr. William A. Fisher for plaintiff in error. Mr. J. V. S. Findlay for defendant in error.

January 31, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on authority of counsel for plaintiff in error.

178 U. S.

CROWN CORK & SEAL COMPANY OF BALTIMORE CITY, Plaintiff in Error, v. STATE OF MARYLAND. [No. 137.]

In Error to the Court of Appeals of the State of Maryland.

Mr. William A. Fisher for plaintiff in error. Mr. J. Alexander Preston for defendant in error.

January 31, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on authority of counsel for the plaintiff in error.

KNOXVILLE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. JAMES A. HARRIS, Comptroller, etc. [No. 171.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. W. A. Henderson for plaintiff in error. Mr. G. W. Pickle for defendant in error.

February 1, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on the authority of counsel for the plaintiff in error.

UNION & PLANTERS' BANK, Plaintiff in Error, v. CITY OF MEMPHIS. [No. 125.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Tennessee.

Mr. William H. Carroll for plaintiff in error. Messrs. C. W. Metcalf and W. P. Metcalf for defendant in error.

February 2, 1900. Dismissed, per stipulation, on motion of Mr. William P. Metcalf for the defendant in error.

MANUELA VILLAESCUSA DE MARQUEZ et al., Appellants, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 521.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

No counsel for appellants. The Attorney General for appellee.

February 2, 1900. Docketed and dismissed, on motion of Solicitor General Richards for the appellee.

FRANCIS E. SPENCER et al., Appellants, v. UNITED STATES et al. [No. 520.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

No counsel for appellants. The Attorney General for appellees.

February 5, 1900. Docketed and dismissed, on motion of Solicitor General Richards for the appellees.

UNITED STATES, Appellant, v. BARTOLOME SANCHEZ et al. [No. 190.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

The Attorney General for appellant. No counsel for appellees.

March 5, 1900. Dismissed, on motion of Solicitor General Richards for the appellant.

178 U. S.

NEW LINCOLN HOTEL COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY. [No. 498.]

In Error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Nebraska.

Messrs. L. C. and C. L. Burr for plaintiff in error. Mr. C. S. Montgomery for defendant in error.

March 5, 1900. Dismissed with costs, per stipulation.

CANAL & CLAIBORNE RAILROAD COMPANY, ETC., et al., Plaintiffs in Error, v. STATE OF LOUISIANA et al. [No. 185.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Louisiana.

Mr. A. O. Bacon for plaintiffs in error. Mr. J. J. McLoughlin and S. L. Gilmore for defendants in error.

March 13, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on motion of Mr. A. O. Bacon for the plaintiffs in error.

ANTONIO GRIEGO et al., Appellants, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 563.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

The Attorney General for appellee. No counsel for appellants.

March 19, 1900. Docketed and dismissed on motion of Solicitor General Richards for the appellee.

JOSEPH H. GURULE et al., Appellants, v. UNITED STATES et al. [No. 564.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

The Attorney General for appellees. No counsel for appellants.

March 19, 1900. Docketed and dismissed, on motion of Solicitor General Richards for the appellees.

FLORENCIO SANDOVAL et al., Appellants, v. UNITED STATES. [No. 565.]

Appeal from the Court of Private Land Claims.

The Attorney General for appellee. No counsel for appellants.

March 19, 1900. Docketed and dismissed, on motion of Solicitor General Richards for the appellee.

TEXAS & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. MATTIE WAGLEY et al. [No. 255.]

In Error to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit.

Messrs. John F. Dillon, W. S. Pierce, and D. D. Duncan for plaintiff in error. No counsel for defendants in error.

March 19, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on motion of Mr. John F. Dillon for the plaintiff in error.

LIZZIE MANOQUE et al., Plaintiffs in Error,
v. J. E. HERRELL et al. [No. 228.]
In Error to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Messrs. H. E. Davis, J. E. Padgett, and
Edwin Forrest for plaintiffs in error. Mr.
O. B. Hallam for defendants in error.

April 9, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on authority of counsel for plaintiffs in error.

FRANK A. MAGOWAN, Plaintiff in Error, v.
MARY E. MAGOWAN. [No. 165.]

In Error to the Court of Errors and Appeals of the State of New Jersey.

Messrs. Henry W. Scott, Joseph S. Clark, and John B. Larner for plaintiff in error.
Mr. Francis C. Lowthorp for defendant in error.

April 16, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on motion of Mr. John B. Larner for the plaintiff in error.

JOHN W. SCHOFIELD, Receiver, etc., et al.,
Plaintiffs in Error, v. TERRITORY OF NEW MEXICO ex rel. AMERICAN VALLEY COM-PANY. [No. 315.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. William B. Childers for plaintiffs in error. Messrs. Neill B. Field and F. W.
Clancy for defendant in error.

April 26, 1900. Dismissed, on motion of
Mr. Neill B. Field for the defendant in error.

NEW YORK, PENNSYLVANIA, & OHIO RAIL-ROAD COMPANY, Plaintiff in Error, v. COM-MONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA. [No.
294.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Pennsylvania.

1222

Mr. Marlin E. Olmsted for plaintiff in error. No counsel for defendant in error.

May 21, 1900. Dismissed with costs, on motion of Mr. Marlin E. Olmsted for the plaintiff in error.

FRED A. MAYNARD, Attorney General of Michigan, Petitioner, v. GRANITE STATE
PROVIDENT ASSOCIATION et al. [No.
510.]

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit.

Mr. Fred. A. Maynard for petitioner. Mr.
Moses Taggart for respondents.

May 21, 1900. Dismissed with costs, per stipulation.

BURTON S. BARNES et al., Plaintiffs in Error and Appellants, v. J. W. LYNCH et al.
[No. 553.]

In Error to and Appeal from the Supreme Court of the Territory of Oklahoma.

Mr. John W. Shartel for plaintiffs in error and appellants. Messrs. John C. Pollock, Charles Dick, and F. C. Bryan for defendants in error and appellees.

May 21, 1900. Dismissed with costs, per stipulation.

FRANKLIN B. HAM, Plaintiff in Error, v.
BANQUE VILLE MARIE. [No. 666.]

In Error to the Supreme Court of the State of Rhode Island.

No counsel for plaintiff in error. Mr.
William Fitch for defendant in error.

May 28, 1900. Docketed and dismissed with costs, on motion of Mr. William Fitch for the defendant in error.

178 U. S.

APPENDIX I.

Supreme Court of the United States.

OCTOBER TERM, 1899.

ORDER.

Ordered, that an amendment be made of rule 31 of this court, to take effect at the commencement of the October term, 1900, so that the rule, as amended, shall read as follows:

31.

Form of printed records and briefs: All records, arguments, and briefs, printed for the use of the court, must be in such form and size that they can be conveniently bound together, so as to make an ordinary octavo volume; and, as well as all quotations contained therein and the covers thereof, must be printed in clear type (never smaller than small pica), and on unglazed paper.

Promulgated May 14, 1900.

APPENDIX II.

Supreme Court of the United States.

OCTOBER TERM, 1899.

ORDER.

The reporter having represented that, owing to the number of decisions at the term, it will be impracticable to put the reports in one volume, it is therefore now here ordered that he publish an additional volume in this year, pursuant to section 681 of the Revised Statutes.

February 26, 1900.

APPENDIX III.

Supreme Court of the United States.

OCTOBER TERM, 1899.

ORDER.

It is now here ordered by the court that all the cases on the docket not decided, and all the other business of the term not disposed of by the court, be, and the same are hereby, continued until the next term of the court.

May 28, 1900

1224

Ref 348.73 Un35
United States. Supreme Court.
Cases argued and decided in the Supreme Court of the

For Reference

Not to be taken from this room

PHILLIPS ACADEMY

3 1867 00061 9986

